ness, and display of his justice and holiness, for his own glory, and for the future instruction of his church in all ages. There was indeed no occasion for them to search out a land, which the Lord had searched out for them, and into which he had undertaken to lead them: but there was no evil in the thing itself; and had it not been for the prevailing iniquity of both the spies and the people, the report might have been as effectual to increase and encourage their faith and hope, as it proved eventually to the contrary.—(Joshua ii. 23, 24.) The number and rank of these spies had a directly contrary effect, to what it would have had, if they had all been of the spirit of Caleb and Joshua.

V. 16. Oshea—Jehoshua.] Oshea may signify, Save thou, being a prayer for salvation: Jehoshua may signify, He will save, being an assurance of salvation in answer to prayer. But very able critics seem very conclusively to support the opinion, that the former name denotes salvation, the latter (being an addition of part of the name Jehovah) signifies the Lord our salvation. The change of Joshua's name on this occasion seems to have been intended as an encouragement to him and to the other spies, confidently to expect protection and safety from the Lord. It is well known that Jesus is the same name formed to a Greek termination; and he, the Lord our salvation, of whom Joshua was an eminent type, was thus called, "because "he shall save his people from their sins."

V. 20. Be ye, &c.] The service, in which the spies were employed, would require courage; for they could expect no favour from the Canaanites, in case they were detected and apprehended, and must therefore go forth at the hazard of their lives. Courage would likewise be necessary for them, that by their example and report they might encourage the people. This in their circumstances could only spring from strong faith, which Caleb and Joshua possessed, but the rest lacked.

V. 21, 22.] Entering at the southern border the spies surveyed the whole land even to the northern extremities; and returned back by Hebron, which was then called Kirjath-Arba, and was one of the most ancient cities in the world; and in the possession of a family of gigantic stature, which especially attracted their attention.

V. 23. The, &c.] Eshcol signifies the cluster; the valley being called so from the extraordinary large cluster of grapes, which the spies cut down with the branch on brought of the pomegranates, and of the figs.

24 The place was called the brook Eſhcol, becauſe of the cluſter of grapes which the children of Iſrael cut down from thence.

25 And they returned from ſearching of the land after forty days.

26 And they went and came to Moſes, and to Aaron, and to all the congregation of the children of Iſrael, unto the wilderneſs of Paran, to Kadeſh; and brought back word unto them, and unto all the congregation, and ſhewed them the fruit of the land.

27 And they told him, and ſaid, We came unto the land whither thou ſenteſt us, and ſurely it floweth with milk and honey; and this is the fruit of it.

28 Nevertheleſs, the people be ſtrong that dwell in the land, and the cities are walled, and very great: and, moreover, we ſaw the children of Anak there.

29 The Amalekites dwell in the land of the ſouth; and the Hittites, and the Jebuſites, and the Amorites, dwell in the mountains; and the Canaanites dwell by the ſea, and by the coaſt of Jordan.

30 And Caleb ſtilled the people before Moſes, and ſaid, Let us go up at once, and poſſeſs it; for we are well able to overcome it.

31 But the men that went up with him ſaid, We be not able to go up againſt the people; for they are ſtronger than we.

32 And they brought up an evil report of the land which they had ſearched unto the children of Iſrael, ſaying, The land, through which we have gone to ſearch it, is a land that eateth up the inhabitants thereof: and all the people that we ſaw in it are men of a great ſtature.

33 And there we ſaw the giants, the ſons of Anak, which come of the giants: and we were in our own ſight as graſhoppers, and ſo we were in their ſight.

which it grew, and carried upon a ſtaff between two of them, as a ſpecimen of Canaan's fruits, into the wilderneſs to their brethren: an apt emblem of the earneſts and anticipations of heavenly joys, with which believers are favoured on earth in the conſolations of the Holy Spirit. Some ſuppoſe that Caleb and Joſhua alone brought this cluſter; the others being neither ſo favourably diſpoſed towards Canaan, nor ſo willing to labour in order to recommend it.

V. 30. Caleb ſtilled, &c.] Caleb ſignifies all heart; and he was evidently a man of true courage, ſtedfaſtly facing danger in the path of duty, in the exerciſe of a vigorous faith and entire dependence upon the Lord. When the report of the other ſpies, by a groſs miſrepreſentation, had excited a tumult amongſt the people, he ſtood forth to ſtill them, (doubtleſs with the concurrence of Joſhua:) and he did not ſay, 'let us go, and attack the Canaanites;' but "let "us go up at once, and poſſeſs their land:" as if he thought the forty days ſpent in ſearching it had been too long a delay, and was impatient to take poſſeſſion.

V. 31. We be, &c.] The Iſraelites ſeem to have been very deficient in courage, in thus fearing the Canaanites, when ſuch a multitude were all engaged to fight for themſelves and their families: but when we conſider the mighty works of the Lord which they had witneſſed in Egypt, at the Red Sea, and in the wilderneſs, even to that preſent day, we muſt be moſt ſurpriſed at their unbelief. Had the Canaanites been ſtronger than Iſrael, they were not ſtronger than Iſrael's God, as Pharaoh had found to his coſt.

V. 32. Eateth up, &c.] Some ſuppoſe that there was a great mortality in the land juſt at that time, by which the Lord was weakening the enemies of Iſrael, and fighting for them; but which the ſpies perverſely aſcribed to an unwholeſome climate. At the ſame time, that they repreſented the country fruitful and populous, and the people powerful and proſperous; they inconſiſtently ſpake of the land as eating up its inhabitants!

V. 33. As graſhoppers, &c.] That is, 'They deſpiſed us 'as puny creatures; and we, conſcious of our inſignificancy 'and feebleneſs, trembled before them.'

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.

The righteous Lord frequently gives up to their unbelieving devices ſuch perſons as confide in their own wiſdom, policy, and vain reaſonings, in preference, or oppoſition, to his expreſs word of promiſe; and even obedience to the commandments of God, if formal and hypocritical, may prove an occaſion of men's falling into deluſion, ſin, and miſery. We ought therefore to take heed both what we do, and in what manner and with what ſpirit we do it: as the ſame action may ſpring from contrary motives, and will certainly be productive of contrary effects to ourſelves, according to the intention and diſpoſition of our hearts.—Of thoſe numbers whoſe names crowd the page of hiſtory, nay even of thoſe whoſe names are written in the Scriptures, the greater part are only recorded to their perpetual diſgrace: happy they, and they only, whoſe names are written in the book of life, in the regiſters of eternity, as the people of the Lord our ſalvation.—In the exerciſe of faith and hope, and by careful inveſtigation of the ſacred word, we may profitably ſearch out the heavenly country, hear a good report concerning it, and take encouragement to go up in the ſtrength of the Lord and poſſeſs it at once. But carnal ſenſe, and carnal preachers and profeſſors, are not ſpies to be truſted in this buſineſs: and unbelief overlooks the promiſes and power of God, magnifies every danger and difficulty, and fills the heart with overwhelming diſcouragement.—May God help us to believe, and we

2 And all the children of Israel murmured against Moses, and against Aaron: and the whole congregation said unto them, Would God that we had died in the land of Egypt! or, would God we had died in this wilderness!

3 And wherefore hath the LORD brought us unto this land, to fall by the sword, that our wives and our children should be a prey? were it not better for us to return into Egypt?

4 And they said one to another, Let us make a captain, and let us return into Egypt.

we shall then find all things possible. Faith stills the tumult of our passions, and informs us far beyond the report of either sense or reason; whilst earnests of heavenly joys form a "witness within ourselves," that convicts of falsehood all those who deny the reality or the excellency of such spiritual blessings; and so animates us in seeking those things which are above, as to render us willing to depart and to be with Christ, which is far better than all things here below.

NOTES.

CHAP. XIV.] V. 1. Cried, &c.] The people vented their discontent and despondency, as children are apt to do, by clamorous lamentations.

V. 2—4.] Nothing can be conceived more absurd, as well as rebellious, than the whole conduct of Israel on this occasion. It had been at least as eligible to have fallen soldier-like, sword in hand, attempting to conquer Canaan; as to have died slaves in Egypt, or by famine and pestilence in the wilderness. Had it been possible for them to have reached Egypt, they might have expected much more severe treatment, than that which had formerly extorted their doleful groans. But this would have been absolutely impracticable; for they could not expect to be miraculously guided, victualled, and watered in their retrogade march. Yet without this such a company could never have traversed that waste howling wilderness, but, without any immediate judgment from God, must inevitably have perished. Their whole conduct was a combination of the most horrible ingratitude, blasphemy, and rebellion. The Lord was directly charged with an intention of bringing them out of Egypt, by alluring them with the most encouraging promises, on purpose to destroy them and their families: and the whole present government, of God's appointment, was intended to be set aside, and a new leader chosen, in opposition to him and defiance of him. Such is human nature! And such counsellors are discontent and passion!

V. 5. Fell on their faces, &c.] Probably Moses and Aaron, being shocked at the blasphemy and rebellion of the people, expected some terrible judgment upon them: and they prostrated themselves in this manner, perhaps intreating the people to desist from their fatal purpose, as well as deprecating the divine displeasure by their prayers. (Deut. i. 27—31.)

V. 6. Rent their clothes, &c.] This was a common expression of intense grief, or deep abhorrence: (Josh. vii. 6. 2 Sam. iii. 31. 2 Kings xviii. 37. xix. 1. Matth. xxvi. 65.)

V. 9. Bread for us, &c.] Caleb and Joshua meant, that all the wealth and prosperity of the Canaanites would afford Israel the more suitable present support, and future accommodation: for as the measure of their iniquities was now filled up and the protection of God's providence was removed from them, and as the Lord had engaged to fight for Israel; the victory must be certain, easy, and cheap, more like taking possession of an estate, than conflicting with a powerful enemy.

V. 10. All the, &c.] Perhaps the rulers of the tribes and families first gave the word, and it soon became the general

11 And the LORD said unto Moses, How long will this people provoke me? and how long will it be ere they believe me, for all the signs which I have shewed among them?

12 I will smite them with the pestilence, and disinherit them, and will make of thee a greater nation, and mightier than they.

13 And Moses said unto the LORD, Then the Egyptians shall hear it, (for thou broughtest up this people in thy might from among them,)

14 And they will tell it to the inhabitants of this land: for they have heard that thou, LORD, art among this people; that thou, LORD, art seen face to face; and that thy cloud standeth over them: and that thou goest before them, by day-time in a pillar of a cloud, and in a pillar of fire by night.

15 Now if thou shalt kill all this people as one man, then the nations, which have heard the fame of thee, will speak, saying, 16 Because the LORD was not able to bring this people into the land which he sware unto them, therefore he hath slain them in the wilderness.

17 And now, I beseech thee, let the power of my LORD be great, according as thou hast spoken, saying, 18 The LORD is long-suffering, and of great mercy, forgiving iniquity and transgression, and by no means clearing the guilty; visiting the iniquity of the fathers upon the children, unto the third and fourth generation.

19 Pardon, I beseech thee, the iniquity of this people, according unto the greatness of thy mercy, and as thou hast forgiven this people from Egypt even until now.

20 And the LORD said, I have pardoned, according to thy word:

21 But as truly as I live, all the earth shall be filled with the glory of the LORD.

22 Because all those men which have seen my glory, and my miracles which I did in Egypt, general outcry through the whole multitude, that they, who were nearest to them, should immediately stone them; that is not only Caleb and Joshua, but Moses and Aaron also, as it appears from the narration. And now dreadful deeds had been done, had not the Lord interposed to calm this tumult of the people, by a visible display of his glory which intimidated them for the present.

V. 11, 12.] This is the abrupt language of astonishment and indignation: the people had been tried and spared so long to no purpose, and still proceeded in their unbelief and provocations to such a degree, that it was in vain to bear with them any longer: (Mark ix. 19.) The Lord therefore declared their deservings, in this threatening to destroy them at once, and his faithfulness, in expressing his intention to fulfil his promises to the posterity of Moses, (Ex. xxxii. 10.)

V. 13—19.] In this supplication Moses did not in the least excuse the sin of Israel, object to the justice of the awful sentence, or argue that the immediate execution of it would not consist with the divine truth and goodness: but he pleaded the appearance which it would have, and the construction which the Egyptians and neighbouring nations would put upon it. They had witnessed or heard of the miracles which God had wrought for Israel, and the promises which he had made to them; and would never think of ascribing their destruction to the true cause, but would conclude that he was unable to fulfil his engagements. He therefore prayed that the Lord would shew his great power, not in their immediate destruction, but in sparing them and in performing his promises to them; (Ezek. xx. 14—22.) He further urged in his plea the name of the Lord, which had been proclaimed before him (Note, Exod. xxiv. 5—7.) and the examples of his former forgivenesses, from their leaving Egypt to the present time. Thus he argued that, consistently with his character, in his abundant mercies he could do it; and that former experience encouraged him still to expect it.

V. 18. Will by no means clear, &c.] As the word guilty is not in the original, many commentators put a different interpretation on this passage, both here and Exodus xxxiv. 7, than our translation doth; as if it only meant, that in executing judgment God would not proceed to extremities, but would soften the rigour of it with mercy. It doth not however appear, but that our translation is equally just: and the meaning of the passage thus translated is so important, so essential to the perfection of the divine character, so consistent with the general scope of Scripture, and so connected with the Lord's method of shewing mercy only to the penitent and believing, through the atonement of Christ; that there should be very cogent reasons to induce us to depart from it. (Notes, &c. Nah. i. 2—8.)—It comported very well with Moses' design to plead that the Lord could shew mercy in the largest measure, without acting inconsistently with his justice and holiness.

V. 21. But as truly, &c.] The Lord granted the prayer of Moses so far, as not immediately to destroy the whole congregation, as he declared himself otherwise prepared to do: but while he thus consented to glorify his power in shewing mercy, rather than in executing vengeance; he declared that he would spare them in such a manner, and attended with such circumstances of his indignation, as should make all ages and nations perceive the glory of his justice, and holiness, (18.)

V. 22. These ten times, &c.] The Israelites had many times put the Lord's power, faithfulness, and goodness to a needless trial; and even acted as if they would prove whether he could, or would, punish them for their crimes: a definite is put for an indefinite number, (Gen. xxxi. 41.)

V. 24.

Egypt, and in the wilderneſs, and have tempted me now theſe ten times, and have not hearkened unto my voice;

23 Surely they ſhall not ſee the land which I ſware unto their fathers, neither ſhall any of them that provoked me, ſee it;

24 But my ſervant Caleb, becauſe he had another ſpirit with him, and hath followed me fully; him will I bring into the land whereinto he went; and his ſeed ſhall poſſeſs it.

25 (Now the Amalekites, and the Canaanites dwelt in the valley.) To-morrow turn you, and get you into the wilderneſs, by the way of the Red ſea.

26 And the LORD ſpake unto Moſes, and unto Aaron, ſaying, 27 How long ſhall I bear with this evil congregation, which murmur againſt me? I have heard the murmurings of the children of Iſrael, which they murmur againſt me.

28 Say unto them, As truly as I live, ſaith the LORD, as ye have ſpoken in my ears, ſo will I do to you:

29 Your carcaſes ſhall fall in this wilderneſs; and all that were numbered of you, according to your whole number, from twenty years old, and upward, which have murmured againſt me,

30 Doubtleſs ye ſhall not come into the land concerning which I ſware to make you dwell therein, ſave Caleb the ſon of Jephunneh, and Joſhua the ſon of Nun.

31 But your little ones, which ye ſaid ſhould be a prey, them will I bring in, and they ſhall know the land which ye have deſpiſed.

32 But as for you, your carcaſes they ſhall fall in this wilderneſs.

33 And your children ſhall wander in the wilderneſs forty years, and bear your whoredoms, until your carcaſes be waſted in the wilderneſs.

34 After the number of the days in which ye ſearched the land, even forty days, (each day for a year,) ſhall ye bear your iniquities, even forty years; and ye ſhall know my breach of promiſe.

35 I the LORD have ſaid, I will ſurely do it

V. 24. Had, &c.] Caleb ſeems to have taken the more active part in this buſineſs: and as Joſhua was intended to be Moſes's ſucceſſor, the former is more frequently ſpoken of, though the latter was as evidently intended, and is alſo mentioned (30.) Caleb had another ſpirit with him, even the Spirit of God, as a Spirit of faith and holineſs; he therefore followed the Lord fully: that is, he ſimply believed the word of God, embraced his promiſes, obſerved his directions, obeyed his commandments, depended on his faithfulneſs, power, and goodneſs, and confidently expected that matters would eventually ſucceed exactly as he had ſpoken, notwithſtanding all difficulties, oppoſitions, or apparent improbabilities. This he did with perſeverance, patience, and courage; notwithſtanding influence, example, authority, terrors, and ſufferings, combined to divert him from his ſteady courſe: and he was willing to venture, endure, reject, or renounce whatever was neceſſary in ſo doing. In conſequence of thus fully following the Lord, he at firſt met with hatred, reproaches, threats, and dangers: but he ſurvived his enemies and their oppoſition, and at length had honour from God and man, much comfort, and a valuable recompence. (Joſhua, xiv. 6—14.) Such is the character, treatment, and cloſe of the true Chriſtian: whilſt the half-hearted profeſſor and the apoſtate eſcape the croſs, but loſe the crown. (Matt. vi. 24. x. 22. 37, 38. Luke, xiv. 26—33. Rev. ii. 10.)

V. 28, 29.] Thus the Lord ſware in his wrath, that "they ſhould not enter into his reſt," (Pſ. xcv. 11.) and irrevocably condemned all Iſrael to wander in the wilderneſs for the ſpace of forty years; till that generation was dead, and their children grown up to inherit the land, according to his promiſe to their fathers. Having ſworn by himſelf, and pledged the honour of all his perfections, the ſentence was made abſolute and irreverſible.—It is probable that the Levites, who were numbered from a month old, were not included: for it is evident, that Eleazar, the ſon of Aaron, aſſiſted Joſhua in dividing the land of Canaan after the conqueſt of it; (Joſh. xiv. 1.) though he was old enough to officiate in the prieſt's office before this time, (Levit. x. 6—16,) and was chief over the Levites, (Num. iii. 32.)

V. 32. Shall know, &c.] The children of the Iſraelites, by poſſeſſing Canaan, experimentally knew that it was a good land, though their fathers had deſpiſed it.

V. 34. Forty years, &c.] Forty years elapſed from the departure of Iſrael out of Egypt, to their entrance into Canaan.

My breach of promiſe, &c.] The original doth not convey the ſame preciſe idea to the mind, as this tranſlation. It may be rendered, ye ſhall know my diſannulling; which may either mean, that the people ſhould know whether the Lord, having uttered this ſentence againſt them, would diſannul it or not; that is, they ſhould experience the truth of it: or, they ſhould know, that whilſt his promiſes ſtand firm to the believing and obedient, hypocrites and apoſtates have no benefit from them: and whilſt they would interpret this excluſion into a breach of promiſe, he would ſhew, that it was only an interruption for wiſe and gracious purpoſes, and he would fulfil the promiſe to their deſcendents.

it unto all this evil congregation, that are gathered together against me: in this wilderness they shall be consumed, and there they shall die.

36 And the men which Moses sent to search the land, who returned, and made all the congregation to murmur against him by bringing up a slander upon the land;

37 Even those men that did bring up the evil report upon the land, died by the plague before the LORD.

38 But Joshua the son of Nun, and Caleb the son of Jephunneh, which were of the men that went to search the land, lived still.

39 And Moses told these sayings unto all the children of Israel: and the people mourned greatly.

40 And they rose up early in the morning, and gat them up into the top of the mountain, saying, Lo, we be here, and will go up unto the place which the LORD hath promised: for we have sinned.

41 And Moses said, Wherefore now do you transgress the commandment of the LORD? but it shall not prosper.

42 Go not up, for the LORD is not among you; that ye be not smitten before your enemies.

V. 40—45.] The Israelites, having so frequently escaped with a more gentle rebuke, concluded, that the Lord would not proceed to extremities; and being convinced that they had sinned, by the death of the spies, they vainly hoped that an alteration of conduct would produce at least a mitigation of the sentence. But the irreversible oath was sworn, and they only added one rebellion to another, to their own destruction.

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.

We shall not reap the benefit of the Scripture, unless we consider it as the history of human nature, written with an infallible and perfectly impartial pen; and are aware that we ourselves are disposed to act, in similar circumstances, exactly after the same manner as the Israelites did. If we are conscious of this, we shall see, in the chapter before us, a very humiliating picture of our own hearts and characters, which may be of great advantage to us. For we must perceive, that it is natural to sinful man to believe a lie in preference to the faithful word of God; which gives satan and his instruments their grand advantage in opposing true religion, and deceiving the souls of men. In this spirit of unbelief, we are prone to harbour hard thoughts of God, to rebel against him, to torment ourselves, and to rush headlong upon our own destruction: and we should be completely ruined, if our wishes were granted us, when discontent and unbelief influence our hearts: for we are capable of quarrelling even with our choicest mercies, and choosing, nay impatiently desiring those very evils, which at other times are most dreaded! But we should watch and pray against the very first beginnings of this ungrateful and abominable frame of mind; and keep a guard at the door of our lips, when these thoughts work in our hearts; for the Lord frequently takes such provoking rebels at their word, and sends them the judgment, or the death, for which they rashly wish.—The madness of a discontented heart is as manifest in its resolves, as in its desires. (Eccles. ix. 3.) Nor is there any thing so impracticable, or so desperate, which man dares not attempt, when raging in feeble rebellion against the will of God; as if he could overpower Omnipotence, and disannul the appointments of his Maker! Intreaties, counsels, encouragements, and warnings are all at such a time in vain, and only enrage the more: and thus Solomon's words are illustrated, "Let a "bear robbed of her whelps meet a man, rather than a "a fool in his folly." (Prov. xvii. 12.) How ought we then to watch our own hearts, lest this evil, which dwells within, should prevail, break forth, and produce such dire effects! But the grace of God's Spirit possessing the soul, produces a contrary disposition: the servants of the Lord will be inclined to stoop to venture, or to suffer any thing, in order to rescue infatuated sinners from impending ruin: and though they abhor their crimes, they will compassionate their persons, and both plead with them and pray for them, even when they see them full of enmity and rage against them. The Lord will afford peculiar protection, and singular marks of his regard, to those who venture to stem the torrent of prevailing iniquity, without being intimidated by the scorn and malice of their enemies, yet in a spirit of tender love to their persons: and the displays of his glory alone are sufficient to dismay the stoutest spirits of rebellious sinners, and to encourage the hearts of his servants in their extremest danger.—Though millions of the Lord's professed people perish in unbelief and disobedience, his covenant and promises stand sure: and whilst he glorifies his truth and mercy in his dealings with believers; he will take occasion from the perverseness of unbelievers more extensively and durably to glorify his whole name.—With the glory of God at heart, and the word of God dwelling within us, we cannot pray amiss, or plead in vain. Such intercessors are an invaluable blessing to any people, though seldom much esteemed, and often treated with the basest ingratitude: but, while they avert temporal judgments, and prevail for the conversion of many individuals; their prayers will not prevent the final destruction of obstinate and impenitent sinners.—In his hottest displeasure, the Lord knoweth how to distinguish betwixt the righteous and the wicked: and they, who manifest another spirit, than their unbelieving associates, and follow him fully, being valiant and patient in his cause, shall in due time have the distinguishing credit and comfort of their faithfulness. But dreadful is the case of those against whom the oath of God is gone forth; for as it is the irreversible security of the covenant of grace, for the "strong consolation of all, who have fled for refuge to lay "hold on the hope set before them;" so it seals irrevocably the doom of those who provoke him "to swear in his "wrath, that they shall never enter into his rest." And it 43 For the Amalekites and the Canaanites are there before you, and ye shall fall by the sword: because ye are turned away from the LORD, therefore the LORD will not be with you.

44 But they presumed to go up unto the hill-top: nevertheless, the ark of the covenant of the LORD, and Moses, departed not out of the camp.

45 Then the Amalekites came down, and the Canaanites which dwelt in that hill, and smote them, and discomfited them, even unto Hormah.

4 Then

it is in vain to oppose the execution of the sentence, as the Lord can fence around the waste howling wilderness and convert it into a prison, in which effectually to confine the most outrageous rebels, who can by no efforts escape it. Though these truths are so plain and so important; yet sinners will not take warning, but persist in their rebellion, only varying the mode of it: and they are often blind enough to think that one act of disobedience may atone for another; an hypocritical uncommanded form of devotion, for gross prophaneness or injustice! But evil pursueth them; many plagues remain for all who go on still in their wickedness; and they may read their own condemnation, when the Lord's people separate from them and protest against them.—But in this history of those who were excluded from Canaan, let us advert to a case of greater and more universal importance. (Ps. xcv. 5—11. Heb. iii. 7—19. iv. 1—10.) A heavenly rest is revealed, proposed, and recommended to us in the sacred Scriptures. The true ministers of Christ describe it, as an exceedingly "good land; flowing with richer blessings than milk and "honey; and freely given to all, in whom the Lord delighteth:" and the very proposal of such a blessing to us by his gospel is a token for good. They point out the way in which sinners must come, and the means they must use if they would enter this good land; they assure them in the name of the Lord, that notwithstanding all their guilt, depravity, and weakness; notwithstanding the power, malice, and number of their enemies, the Lord will bring them into it, and give it them, if they rebel not against him, by despising and neglecting so great salvation; that they need fear no opposition; for that even conflicts, temptations, and persecutions will eventually do them good. (Rom. viii. 31—39.) They exhort them to day to hearken to the voice of the Lord, and warn them not to harden their hearts, and provoke him by delay: and admonish them to "take "heed that there be not in them an evil heart of unbe-"lief, in departing from the living God." In such addresses and exhortations, and in fervent prayers for them, they must, and will, and do, persist with unceasing importunity, in the face of hatred, contempt, and persecution, whilst hope is left. But alas! most men "despise the "pleasant land, and believe not the word;" (Psalm cvi. 24, 25;) they place no dependence on his promises; are discouraged by the prospect of real or imaginary difficulties and dangers; do not think even heaven worth so much trouble and self-denial; prefer a portion in this world; and harden their hearts, till it be too late, till their exclusion be irreversibly determined, and then they unavailingly regret their folly. (Notes, &c. Prov. i. 24—32. Matt. xxv. 1—13. Luke, xiii. 24—28.) Alas! too many, who appear to set out, through unbelief grow weary, and in their hearts, perhaps in their conduct, return back to the world: and many, who profess to be spies, and to have searched out the good land, bring an evil report upon it; and either by their doctrine, or by their evident attachment to temporal interests, and carelessness about spiritual things, weaken the hands of believers, and strengthen those of unbelievers. These being ringleaders in wickedness, will have the first share, or the last portion, of divine vengeance.—"Let us then fear, lest a promise being left us of enter-"ing into the Lord's rest, any of us should seem to come "short of it:" let us take warning from the fate of Israel, lest we perish after the same example of unbelief: let us be afraid of nothing, but of "provoking the Lord to sware "in his wrath, that we shall never enter into his rest;" let us go forth depending on his mercy, power, promise, and truth; let us follow him fully, venture for him freely, and suffer for him patiently; and he will assuredly be with us, and bring our souls to everlasting rest in heaven.

NOTES.

CHAP. XV.] V. 2. When ye be come, &c.] Though that generation was doomed to fall in the wilderness, and the whole congregation to wander in it forty years; during which space many new provocations and judgments were likely to intervene, all which seemed to threaten the final exclusion of Israel from Canaan: yet, as the Lord actually intended in due time to put them into possession of it, he enacted these laws as a pledge and assurance of his purpose, and as a token of his being thus far reconciled to them.—In the wilderness, whilst they had neither corn-fields, vineyards, nor olive-yards, but lived upon manna, they could not easily bring meat- and drink-offerings; so that they seem not to have been then required; and indeed it

4 Then shall he that offereth his offering unto the LORD, bring a meat-offering of a tenth-deal of flour, mingled with the fourth part of an hin of oil.

5 And the fourth part of an hin of wine for a drink-offering shalt thou prepare, with the burnt-offering or sacrifice, for one lamb.

6 Or for a ram, thou shalt prepare for a meat-offering two tenth-deals of flour, mingled with the third part of an hin of oil.

7 And for a drink-offering thou shalt offer the third part of an hin of wine, for a sweet savour unto the LORD.

8 And when thou preparest a bullock for a burnt-offering, or for a sacrifice in performing a vow, or peace-offerings unto the LORD:

9 Then shall he bring with a bullock a meat-offering of three tenth-deals of flour, mingled with half an hin of oil.

10 And thou shalt bring for a drink-offering half an hin of wine, for an offering made by fire of a sweet savour unto the LORD.

11 Thus shall it be done for one bullock, or for one ram, or for a lamb, or a kid.

12 According to the number that ye shall prepare, so shall ye do to every one, according to their number.

13 All that are born of the country shall do these things after this manner, in offering an offering made by fire of a sweet savour unto the LORD.

14 And if a stranger sojourn with you, or whosoever be among you in your generations, and will offer an offering made by fire of a sweet savour unto the LORD; as ye do, so he shall do.

15 One ordinance shall be both for you of the congregation, and also for the stranger that sojourneth with you, an ordinance for ever in your generations: as ye are, so shall the stranger be before the LORD.

16 One law, and one manner, shall be for you, and for the stranger that sojourneth with you.

17 And the LORD spake unto Moses, saying,

18 Speak unto the children of Israel, and say unto them, When ye come into the land whither I bring you, 19 Then it shall be, that, when ye eat of the bread of the land, ye shall offer up an heave-offering unto the LORD.

20 Ye shall offer up a cake of the first of your dough for an heave-offering: as ye do the heave-offering of the threshing-floor, so shall ye heave it.

21 Of the first of your dough ye shall give unto the LORD an heave-offering in your generations.

22 And if ye have erred, and not observed all these commandments which the LORD hath spoken unto Moses,

23 Even all that the LORD hath commanded you is probable that a great part of their instituted worship was dispensed with.—The meat-offerings before prescribed were offered separately, but those, which are here appointed, accompanied all the sacrifices of animals, except of doves. Probably they were disposed of according to the method before appointed, and had the same significancy. (Notes, &c. Lev. ii.) A portion was burnt on the altar, and the remainder was eaten by the priests: and the drink-offering was disposed of in a similar manner. The sacrifices not only typified Christ, and all that fulness of spiritual blessings which is in him for our use, and those things which are well pleasing and honourable to the Father; but they likewise shadowed forth the pleasure which a reconciled God takes in the services of his redeemed people, and the delight which they take in communion with him. This is represented under the notion of their feasting together; and therefore all those things were directed to be brought, which were of general use at feasts; and in proper proportions, according to the kind or number of their sacrifices.

V. 4. A tenth deal, &c.] A tenth-deal was the same as an omer, or about five pints: a hin is computed by some to have been twice as much; others suppose that it contained rather less than two omers.

V. 16. The stranger, &c.] This law was intended to induce strangers to attend to the worship and ordinances of God; to intimate to the Israelites that if they were profligate and ungodly, they would be treated as strangers; and to teach them that in due time the Gentiles would be fully admitted into the church. It seems, that, though uncircumcised persons might not eat the Passover, they might offer other sacrifices in the appointed way, if they were so disposed.

V. 17—21.] Notes, &c. Lev. xxiii. 15—17.) The oblation prescribed in the passage referred to, seems to have been a general acknowledgment from the people at large: this here appointed was an oblation from every one that reaped a harvest; who was required, previously to tasting it himself, to offer a portion of dough, as a heave-offering to the Lord; which is supposed to have been given to the priests in their several cities, and not carried to the tabernacle. (Ezek. xliv. 30.)

V. 22—29.] This law concerning sins of ignorance, being diverse from one before considered, occasions some difficulty. But probably that was intended for those sins of ignorance which violated the precepts of the moral law;

you by the hand of Moſes, from the day that the LORD commanded Moſes, and henceforward among your generations;

24 Then it ſhall be, if ought be committed by ignorance, without the knowledge of the congregation, that all the congregation ſhall offer one young bullock for a burnt-offering, for a ſweet ſavour unto the LORD, with his meat-offering, and his drink-offering, according to the manner, and one kid of the goats for a ſin-offering.

25 And the prieſt ſhall make an atonement for all the congregation of the children of Iſrael, and it ſhall be forgiven them; for it is ignorance: and they ſhall bring their offering, a ſacrifice made by fire unto the LORD, and their ſin-offering before the LORD, for their ignorance.

26 And it ſhall be forgiven all the congregation of the children of Iſrael, and the ſtranger that ſojourneth among them; ſeeing all the people were in ignorance.

27 And if any ſoul ſin through ignorance, then he ſhall bring a ſhe-goat of the firſt year for a ſin-offering.

28 And the prieſt ſhall make an atonement for the ſoul that ſinneth ignorantly, when he ſinneth by ignorance before the LORD, to make an atonement for him; and it ſhall be forgiven him.

29 Ye ſhall have one law for him that ſinneth through ignorance, both for him that is born amongſt the children of Iſrael, and for the ſtranger that ſojourneth among them.

30 But the ſoul that doeth ought preſumptuouſly (whether he be born in the land, or a ſtranger,) the ſame reproacheth the LORD; and that ſoul ſhall be cut off from among his people.

31 Becauſe he hath deſpiſed the word of the LORD, and hath broken his commandment, that ſoul ſhall utterly be cut off; his iniquity ſhall be upon him.

32 And while the children of Iſrael were in the wilderneſs, they found a man that gathered ſticks upon the ſabbath-day.

33 And they that found him gathering ſticks brought him unto Moſes and Aaron, and unto all the congregation.

34 And they put him in ward, becauſe it was not declared what ſhould be done to him.

35 And the LORD ſaid unto Moſes, The man ſhall be ſurely put to death: all the congregation ſhall ſtone him with ſtones without the camp.

36 And all the congregation brought him without the camp, and ſtoned him with ſtones, and he died; as the LORD commanded Moſes.

37 And the LORD ſpake unto Moſes, ſaying,

38 Speak unto the children of Iſrael, and bid them that they make them fringes in the borders of their garments, throughout their generations, and that they put upon the fringe of the borders a ribband of blue.

39 And it ſhall be unto you for a fringe, that ye may look upon it, and remember all the commandments of the LORD, and do them;

law: this for thoſe errors, which took place in regard to ceremonial inſtitutions. However, though the law be different; the inſtruction contained in it is the ſame; (Notes, &c. Lev. iv.)

V. 30, 31.] To do ought preſumptuouſly is contraſted with ſins of ignorance: and it implies the tranſgreſſion of a known divine commandment, wilfully, deliberately, in contempt of the authority of God's word, in defiance of his juſtice, with an high hand, and in direct rebellion. Such a conduct "reproacheth the Lord," as if his commands were needleſs, unreaſonable, and inimical to man's happineſs; his authority only fit to be trampled under foot; his favour not deſirable, or his wrath not to be feared: in ſhort, as if it were more advantageous to rebel againſt him, than to ſerve him; (Malachi, iii, 13—15.) Many crimes will be found to be ſins of preſumption, which did not appear ſuch to the offender, at the time when he committed them; and this preſumption is not leſs heinous, when it does not ſpring, either from direct infidelity, or open profaneneſs; but is the effect of vain confidence in God, ſupported by an hopocritical profeſſion of religion, or an abuſe of the doctrine of Grace. (Notes, &c. Rom. vi. 1, 2. Heb. x. 26—31. 2 Sam. xii, 9, 10.) Whenever we ſet our own inclinations in oppoſition to the known command of God; and when God ſaith, "Thou ſhalt not," our conduct replies, 'But I will;' we are guilty of ſuch ſins of preſumption: eſpecially, if we are emboldened by a perſuaſion that God is ſo merciful, or has ſuch a ſpecial favour for us, that he will not puniſh us, and though the matter be in itſelf trivial, yet the daring rebellion is exceedingly atrocious; (Note, 1 Sam. xv. 22, 23.) For ſuch an offender no ſacrifice was offered: he was doomed to bear his own iniquity; and to be utterly cut off, in ſome caſes, by a public execution, in others by the immediate judgment of God, (Acts, xiii. 39.)

V. 32—36.] This example is introduced to illuſtrate the foregoing law. A certain perſon was obſerved gathering ſticks on the ſabbath-day in contempt of the commandment, and was condemned as a preſumptuous offender to be ſtoned, for a warning to the reſt.

V. 38—40.] This diſtinction in the garments of the Iſraelites was a continual profeſſion of their religion, and a con-them; and that ye seek not after your own heart, and your own eyes, after which ye use to go a whoring;

40 That ye may remember and do all my commandments, and be holy unto your God.

41 I am the LORD your God, which brought you out of the land of Egypt, to be your God: I am the LORD your God.

Contains, 1st. A circumstantial account of the rebellion of Korah, Dathan, and Abiram, 1—19. 2d. The destruction of the congregation averted by the intercession of Moses and Aaron; and sentence denounced and executed upon the rebels, 20—35. 3d. Orders given for the disposal of their censers, 36—40. 4th. The rebellion renewed; a plague breaking out, but stopped by Aaron burning incense; with the number of those who perished, 41—50.

a constant memorial to them to act consistently with it, in all places, companies, and transactions; preferring God's commandments to their own wayward inclinations, to gratify which they had shewn themselves so idolatrously prone: (Note, Exod. xx. 3:) and it would be a constant reproach to them, when they committed any kind of wickedness. Christ was obedient to this law: that, which is translated the hem or border, means the fringe, of his garment; and the Pharisees ostentatiously enlarged their fringes.—It is remarkable that the modern Jews generally neglect this precept, which they might obey; whilst they tenaciously adhere to their religion, though in most things it is become absolutely impracticable.—Some have argued that it would prevent much wickedness among the clergy, if they were always obliged to appear in their peculiar habits: but wretchedly abandoned must be that minister of religion, who needs such a restraint from open wickedness.

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.

1 The law written in our hearts, and obeyed in our conduct, forms the best evidence of pardoned sin.—We should study to proportion our obedience to the several commands of God, in such a manner as may best conduce to his glory, and be useful to those around us: and if repentance towards God, and faith towards our Lord Jesus Christ, produce godliness, righteousness, love, and temperance, harmonizing in our daily walk, we shall attain that end.—When our chief delight is in the ordinances of God, and in communion with him, we find access to him and acceptance with him: and gratitude, connected with beneficence and temperance, confers the comfortable enjoyment of temporal blessings.—We fallen creatures are always violating one or other of God's commandments, even when we are most circumspect: and those slips which we are apt to account small, and which spring from ignorance or inadvertency, are not pardonable but through the atoning blood of Christ.—But let presumptuous sinners tremble: for though that great sacrifice is available for all who humbly repent and depend upon it; it enhances the guilt of those, who contemptuously reject it, or hypocritically profess a dependence upon it, while they allow themselves in known iniquity.—They who, in bold contempt of God's authority, violate the holy rest of the sabbath-day, should tremble while they read this chapter: for though they at present escape punishment; yet, unless they repent, the Lord will at length "utterly cut off their souls," and leave them for ever "with their iniquity upon them:" and it must be far worse with us as a nation, than it was with Israel when they provoked God in the desert; for they generally regarded the sabbath, we almost universally break it!—As we sinners of the Gentiles are now fully admitted to share the benefit of the Saviour's atoning blood, we should be abundant in our spiritual sacrifices of praise and thanksgiving; we should boldly profess our faith in the sight of the world, and circumspectly walk according to it. We should use every means of refreshing our memories with the recollection of the truths and precepts of God's word; of animating and quickening our obedience; and of arming our minds against temptation. We should learn to mortify all our sinful inclinations: that we may not think our own thoughts, speak our own words, or find our own pleasure; but that we may seek the Lord's glory, and do his commandments, as his redeemed and holy people.

NOTES.

CHAP. XVI.] V. 1, 2.] We are not informed of the date of this rebellion: but it seems to have taken place soon after the congregation was sentenced to wander in the wilderness. The giving of laws, and the breaking out of rebellions succeed each other after a very remarkable manner in this history: for sin by the commandment takes occasion to shew itself, and it's exceeding sinfulness.—Korah was a near relation of Moses and Aaron; (Exod. vi. 18;) and being discontented, as an ordinary Levite subject to the priests, he became a competitor for the priesthood. Dathan and Abiram, the sons of Reuben, Jacob's first-born, aspired at the supreme authority, probably being displeased with the pre-eminence of the tribe of Judah, as well as at the authority exercised by Moses.—On is only once mentioned; either he repented, or was of small note in the transaction. The former rebellions had been popular tumults: but this was a regular conspiracy, headed by persons of consequence, abetted by many of the chief princes, and favoured by the congregation in general.

V. 3. Ye take, &c.] Korah and his associates by this language unto them, Ye take too much upon you, seeing all the congregation are holy, every one of them, and the LORD is among them: wherefore then lift ye up yourselves above the congregation of the LORD?

4 And when Moses heard it, he fell upon his face:

5 And he spake unto Korah, and unto all his company, saying, Even to-morrow the LORD will shew who are his, and who is holy; and will cause him to come near unto him: even him whom he hath chosen will he cause to come near unto him.

6 This do: Take you censers, Korah, and all his company;

7 And put fire therein, and put incense in them before the LORD to-morrow: and it shall be, that the man whom the LORD doth choose, he shall be holy: ye take too much upon you, ye sons of Levi.

8 And Moses said unto Korah, Hear, I pray you, ye sons of Levi;

9 Seemeth it but a small thing unto you, that the God of Israel hath separated you from the congregation of Israel, to bring you near to himself, to do the service of the tabernacle of the LORD, and to stand before the congregation to minister unto them?

10 And he hath brought thee near to him, and all thy brethren the sons of Levi with thee: and seek ye the priesthood also?

11 For which cause, both thou and all thy company are gathered together against the LORD: and what is Aaron, that ye murmur against him?

12 And Moses sent to call Dathan and Abiram, the sons of Eliab; which said, We will not come up.

13 Is it a small thing that thou hast brought us up out of a land that floweth with milk and honey, to kill us in the wilderness, except thou make thyself altogether a prince over us?

14 Moreover, thou hast not brought us into a land that floweth with milk and honey, or given us inheritance of fields and vineyards; wilt thou put out the eyes of these men? we will not come up.

15 And Moses was very wroth, and said unto the LORD, Respect not thou their offering: I have not taken one ass from them, neither have I hurt one of them.

16 And Moses said unto Korah, Be thou and all thy company before the LORD, thou, and they, and Aaron, to-morrow:

17 And take every man his censer, and put language intimated, that the civil government and priesthood had been usurped by Moses and Aaron, without any commandment from God. They would allow that the Lord was among them, and had shewn them special regard; provided they might serve their own purposes by this concession; and, by determining that all the people were alike holy, might overturn the whole system, civil and religious, which the Lord had established among them. (Heb. vii. 12.)—The two hundred and fifty princes, who joined in this rebellion, and perished in the presumptuous attempt to burn incense, do not appear to have been exclusively Levites, but heads of the families in the several tribes; who, under the idea that the people were all holy, thought they had as good a right to officiate in the priests' office, as Aaron and his sons.

V. 5—7.] Moses was divinely directed to challenge those, who aimed at the priesthood, to refer the matter in this way to the Lord's decision, if, after the fate of Nadab and Abihu, they would venture so perilous an appeal: and it was appointed for the morrow, that they might consider, and deliberate, and so be induced to decline the presumptuous attempt.

V. 11. For which cause, &c.] Korah charged Aaron and his sons with exercising an usurped authority in an improper manner: but he really meant, by the assistance of the Levites and people, to exclude them, and to seize upon the honour and emolument of the priesthood for himself and his family. So that whilst they all pretended to rise up against Aaron, they were in fact gathering together in rebellion against the Lord.

V. 12. Sent to call, &c.] Moses, as the ruler whom God had placed over Israel, summoned Dathan and Abiram to appear before him to give an account of their conduct, and to inform him of the cause of this insurrection: but they, aspiring to the government, would not own his authority, and insolently refused to appear before him.

V. 14. Wilt thou, &c.] The conspirators accused Moses of endeavouring to impose upon the people, by pretences of acting by divine authority, and for their advantage; whilst he was sacrificing all their interests to the establishment of an usurped authority over them. As the cloke of religion did not subserve the purposes of those who aspired to the civil government, they never mentioned the Lord at all; but ascribed all to Moses, as if they had not witnessed any miracles or divine interpositions in the whole transaction.

V. 15. Respect not thou, &c.] That is, the offering of incense by Korah and his company, and by those who were confederates with them: (Gen. iv. 5. Jude, 11.)

put incenſe in them, and bring ye before the LORD every man his cenſer, two hundred and fifty cenſers, thou alſo, and Aaron, each of you his cenſer.

18 And they took every man his cenſer, and put fire in them, and laid incenſe thereon, and ſtood in the door of the tabernacle of the congregation with Moſes and Aaron.

19 And Korah gathered all the congregation againſt them, unto the door of the tabernacle of the congregation: and the glory of the LORD appeared unto all the congregation.

20 And the LORD ſpake unto Moſes and unto Aaron, ſaying, 21 Separate yourſelves from among this congregation, that I may conſume them in a moment.

22 And they fell upon their faces, and ſaid, O God, the God of the ſpirits of all fleſh, ſhall one man ſin, and wilt thou be wroth with all the congregation?

23 And the LORD ſpake unto Moſes, ſaying,

24 Speak unto the congregation, ſaying, Get you up from about the tabernacle of Korah, Dathan, and Abiram.

25 And Moſes roſe up, and went unto Dathan and Abiram: and the elders of Iſrael followed him.

26 And he ſpake unto the congregation, ſaying, Depart, I pray you, from the tents of theſe wicked men, and touch nothing of their's, leſt ye be conſumed in all their ſins.

27 So they gat up from the tabernacle of Korah, Dathan, and Abiram, on every ſide: and Dathan and Abiram came out, and ſtood in the door of their tents, and their wives, and their ſons, and their little children.

28 And Moſes ſaid, Hereby ye ſhall know that the LORD hath ſent me to do all theſe works; for I have not done them of mine own mind.

29 If theſe men die the common death of all men, or if they be viſited after the viſitation of all men; then the LORD hath not ſent me:

30 But if the LORD make a new thing, and the earth open her mouth, and ſwallow them up, with all that appertain unto them, and they go down quick into the pit; then ye ſhall underſtand that theſe men have provoked the LORD.

31 And it came to paſs, as he had made an end of ſpeaking all theſe words, that the ground clave aſunder that was under them:

32 And the earth opened her mouth, and ſwallowed them up, and their houſes, and all the men that appertained unto Korah, and all their goods.

33 They, and all that appertained to them, went down alive into the pit, and the earth cloſed upon them: and they periſhed from among the congregation.

34 And all Iſrael that were round about them fled at the cry of them: for they ſaid, Leſt the earth ſwallow us up alſo.

35 And

V. 19. Korah gathered, &c.] Whilſt the Levites, and others of their party, were preſumptuouſly burning incenſe, and waiting the Lord's deciſion; Korah himſelf ſeems to have been employed with vaſt ſucceſs in inſtigating the whole congregation to rebellion: thus he gathered them together to witneſs the event of the conteſt, and probably to ſeize by force the diſputed prize, perhaps with the ſlaughter of all who attempted oppoſition; had not the appearance of the divine glory overawed and intimidated them.

V. 22. The God of, &c.] Man is a ſpirit embodied in fleſh, the creature and ſubject of God. This relation of God to the ſpirits of mortal man ſeems to be here pleaded as a reaſon why he ſhould not indiſcriminately deſtroy the whole congregation; for he was acquainted with the inmoſt ſpirits of men, and could not be impoſed upon, but could diſtinguiſh both the innocent from the guilty, and the tempters from the tempted: and Moſes charitably hoped that only Korah ſinned preſumptuouſly, and that the reſt were miſled and ſinned ignorantly: (Notes, &c. xv. 27—31. Luke, xxiii. 34. 1 Tim. i. 13.)

V. 24. Get you up, &c.] The Lord allowed of the plea of Moſes; and they, who teſtified their repentance by ſeparating from the ringleaders of the rebellion, were exempted from their puniſhment: thus the congregation eſcaped, though many rebels periſhed in their preſumption.

V. 26. Touch, &c.] The rebels and all belonging to them were, as an accurſed thing, devoted to utter deſtruction; (Lev. xxvii. 29.) the people were therefore forbidden to touch any thing belonging to them; that they might enter a ſolemn proteſt againſt their wickedneſs, acknowledge the juſtice of their puniſhment, and expreſs the fear of being involved in it; (Matt. xi. 14. Acts, xiii. 51.)

V. 27. The tabernacle of Korah, &c.] Though the inſurgents were of different tribes, they ſeem to have quitted their proper ſituations in the camp, and to have pitched their tents cloſe together. Probably Korah was ſwallowed up with the 35 And there came out a fire from the LORD, and consumed the two hundred and fifty men that offered incense.

36 And the LORD spake unto Moses, saying,

37 Speak unto Eleazar, the son of Aaron the priest, that he take up the censers out of the burning, and scatter thou the fire yonder; for they are hallowed.

38 The censers of these sinners against their own souls, let them make them broad plates for a covering of the altar; for they offered them before the LORD, therefore they are hallowed: and they shall be a sign unto the children of Israel.

39 And Eleazar the priest took the brazen censers, wherewith they that were burnt had offered; and they were made broad plates for a covering of the altar:

40 To be a memorial unto the children of Israel, that no stranger, which is not of the seed of Aaron, come near to offer incense before the LORD, that he be not as Korah and as his company: as the LORD said to him by the hand of Moses.

41 But on the morrow all the congregation of the children of Israel murmured against Moses and against Aaron, saying, Ye have killed the people of the LORD.

42 And it came to pass, when the congregation was gathered against Moses and against Aaron, that they looked toward the tabernacle of the congregation: and, behold, the cloud covered it, and the glory of the LORD appeared.

43 And Moses and Aaron came before the tabernacle of the congregation.

44 And the LORD spake unto Moses, saying,

45 Get you up from among this congregation, that I may consume them as in a moment. And they fell upon their faces.

46 And Moses said unto Aaron, Take a censer, and put fire therein from off the altar, and put on incense, and go quickly unto the congregation, and make an atonement for them: for there is wrath gone out from the LORD; the plague is begun.

47 And Aaron took as Moses commanded, and ran into the midst of the congregation; and, behold, the plague was begun among the people: and he put on incense, and made an atonement for the people.

48 And he stood between the dead and the living; and the plague was stayed.

the rest, though he is not here mentioned; and that all his family and relations who were in the tent shared his doom, (32;) for his sons died not. (xxvi. 10, 11.)

V. 35. Consumed, &c.] It seems these rebels were not only slain by the fire, as Nadab and Abihu had been: but they were entirely consumed; being themselves made awful sacrifices to the justice of God, whose priesthood and sacrifices they had despised. (Lev. ix. 24. 1 Kings, xviii. 38. 2 Chron. vii. 1.)

V. 37—40.] It was the intent of these insurgents to injure Moses and Aaron; but they brought destruction upon themselves: so that they "were sinners against their own "souls." Thus all, who break the law and neglect the gospel, choose and love death, and destroy themselves, though they do not mean so.—These censers, having been once employed in burning the sacred incense, though in an uncommanded manner, might never more be employed to ordinary uses: but to impress the greater veneration for that typical institution, they were consecrated to the Lord, in such a manner, as to remain a constant and useful memorial to the people, who brought the sacrifices, and to the Levites who assisted in offering them.—It was an awful employment for Eleazar, to gather the censers from the remains of that dreadful conflagration!

V. 41. Ye have killed, &c.] The Israelites most absurdly imputed the opening of the earth, and the consuming fire, to Moses and Aaron, as if they had caused them; and called the persons, thus perishing in rebellion, the people of the Lord!

V. 46. Altar, &c.] Aaron was particularly reminded to take the fire from off the altar, notwithstanding the haste and urgency of the case; that he might honour the typical institutions which the people had vilified.

V. 48. He stood, &c.] The faith, courage, and love to his ungrateful people, which Aaron manifested, in running, without regarding consequences, into the midst of this enraged multitude, and this devouring pestilence, were very illustrious: and the success was a decisive proof of the acceptableness and efficacy of his priesthood, and consequently of its divine appointment. Whilst the others, who presumed to burn incense, were themselves consumed; his burning of incense stayed the plague, which had so rapidly wasted the congregation!

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.

For what purpose, we may enquire, were these things permitted and recorded?—The house of Israel was "planted a noble vine, wholly a right seed;" (Jer. ii. 21) and we cannot suppose that they were of a more perverse and wicked disposition than other people.—But we have in their history an unflattering picture of human nature, a thorough dissection of the human heart. Were any other people circumstanced, proved, and left to themselves, as they were; and were their history written with as complete information and as impartial a pen, they would appear at least as black as Israel. Nay, the secret history of every individual, who lives and dies in sin, when it shall be published at the day of judgment, will be found just such another compound of infidelity, ingratitude, rebellion, and absurdity: Indeed these things were written, and this trial was made of human nature, in order to expose the deceitfulness and desperate wickedness of the heart of man, that we might, as in a glass, see the reflection of our own character; be led to examine and watch our own thoughts, affections, and conduct; be brought to judge and condemn ourselves, and become sensible of our need of pardoning mercy and sanctifying grace. Instead therefore of expressing our surprise and indignation at these ancient rebels, let us look to ourselves; and we shall soon become sensible that "the spirit which is in us lusteth to envy," to pride, ambition, and covetousness. These restless passions are continually called forth into exercise on one occasion or other: and whatever advantages men enjoy by their rank in life, or station in the church of God; though they be wealthy, famous in the congregation, and men of renown: yet so long as God withholds any imagined blessing, or advances any one above them, they will experience insatiable cravings, which can only be increased by indulgence. —Except these lusts are subdued by the grace of God, suitable occasions will induce them to despise the dominion God hath placed over them, (Jude, 8;) to treat every exercise of authority as usurpation and oppression; to aspire at a lawless independency; or to seize upon the authority for themselves, and to account all their mercies but a small thing.—Nor can any wisdom, equity, or excellency, in superiors, or competitors, abate their envy, and enmity; or stop their mouths from slanderous accusations. This ungrateful and injurious conduct, towards man, will be accompanied with infidel forgetfulness of God and daring rebellion against him; which no evidences, no judgments, no warnings, no mercies can repress; or if they give it's malignity a temporary check, it is capable afterwards of breaking out more desperately. If it should be thought more to the purpose, they are capable of cloaking their ambition and selfishness under a pretence to godliness, and an hypocritical profession of being the Lord's holy people. For though no miracles can induce man to believe those doctrines, which interfere with their favourite pursuits and indulged lusts: yet they will readily allow the truth of Christianity, if they can render it subservient to their avarice, malice, or ambition.—Such is human nature! Such are our hearts. Such they would appear to be if fully proved: Such they have in a measure appeared already, when put to the trial. And comparing God's kindness to us, with our conduct towards him, during our past lives, we may each of us exclaim "It is of the Lord's mercies, that we are not consumed," as Korah and his company were!—One dreadful effect of this depravity is the daring presumption, with which numbers intrude into the sacred ministry, out of the vile motives of covetousness, ambition, love of ease, and desire of worldly indulgence or splendour, without any suitable dispositions, without any love for the work, zeal for the honour of God, or deep compassion for the souls of perishing sinners. Yet will such men dare to say in the most solemn manner, before God and his congregation, 'that they judge themselves moved by the Holy Ghost to 'take this office upon them;' though they are not only conscious of hypocrisy in the declaration, but deride the very enquiry as enthusiastic! and the whole transaction is frequently marked with similar dissimulation and iniquity! Of such conduct the author hath been guilty: and to the end of his days he would be abased before God on account of it, and admire and adore the patience and loving kindness of the Lord, that, instead of being visited after the manner of Korah, it hath pleased God to give him repentance and forgiveness of this aggravated wickedness; and to employ him in the work of the ministry, with some degree of usefulness! "for where sin hath abounded, grace "hath much more abounded." And he mentions this humiliating subject, not only that the pious reader may bless God in his behalf; but that he may hope and pray for others wholly under the same guilt, that they may experience the same grace. "For our God hath mercy on whom "he will have mercy."—He will also, first or last, manifest "who are his," "whom he hath chosen," "and "who are holy:" for it is not enough that we have the Lord's word in our hand, or his name in our mouth, unless we really believe his truth, and keep his commandments. "Nor will doing the service of the sanctuary," and "standing before his congregation," though with acceptance and usefulness, prevent, (nay they will aggravate,) the doom of the hypocritical or rebellious: and woe be to them, who refuse to judge or condemn themselves, till the Judge detect and condemn their iniquity.—He is "the God of "the spirits of all flesh;" all creatures obey him, and frequently in this world he makes examples of the wicked to deter others from sin: but if in long-suffering he spare them here, and they still persist in rebellion; their doom will be more dreadful at last, they will be cast alive into the bottomless pit, and the fire of hell will continually torment, but will never consume, them.—Let sinners then take warning: let them separate from the wicked, and have no fellowship with their unfruitful works, but rather reprove and protest against them, if they would not be associated with them in their punishment.—And instead of disputing against the awful threatenings of God's word; let them flee to the greatest distance from the pit of destruction, lest it should swallow them up also.—The Lord knows how to distinguish betwixt the deluded and the presumptuous, the penitent and the impenitent; and to glorify his mercy towards the one, whilst he magnifies his justice upon the other, and records their doom for an useful lesson to succeeding generations.—Let us however turn from such awful and hateful objects, to contemplate, admire, and imitate the effects of divine grace in the conduct of Moses and Aaron, in their patience, fortitude, meekness, forgiveness of injuries, and unwearied labours and prayers for the welfare of their ungrateful brethren. May we thus hate

Then will the Lord protect, vindicate, and honour us in due time, in the preſence of our oppoſers, and we ſhall be bleſſed ourſelves, and bleſſings to others.—But we may in all this look unto Jeſus, dying for us when enemies; praying for his crucifiers; haſtening between the dead and the living, with the incenſe of his meritorious interceſſion, to ſtay the plague which ſin had occaſioned, and by which multitudes have periſhed, and we and all muſt have periſhed, had he not thus interpoſed. Through him we are ſpared and live: may his love "conſtrain us to live no longer to ourſelves, "but to him who died for us, and roſe again."

NOTES.

CHAP. XVII.] V. 2—11.] The Lord himſelf was at length pleaſed to bring the point in conteſt, between Moſes and Aaron and their rebellious oppoſers, to a final deciſion, by a ſafe and ſignificant method. The prince of each tribe was commanded to bring his rod, the badge of his authority, unto Moſes; who wrote in their preſence, every man's name upon his rod, without doubt in ſome manner which rendered it certainly diſtinguiſhable from the reſt. On the rod for the tribe of Levi, Aaron's name was written, as the head of that tribe. Then Moſes carried the rods into the tabernacle, and laid them before the ark, within the vail, into which he ſeems to have been allowed continual acceſs; and there he left them all night. Probably all the rods were of almond trees: but the others continued dry ſticks; while Aaron's budded, bloſſomed, and yielded almonds, within the ſpace of one day and night.—In this ſtate Aaron's rod was laid up "for a token "againſt the rebels," and probably continued ſo to future ages. Thus the Lord quite took away the murmurings of the people on this account, ſo that we hear no more of them in all their hiſtory.

V. 12, 13.] The language of theſe verſes is exceedingly deſcriptive of a forced ſubmiſſion, attended with terror and deſpondency, and an inward revolting againſt an appointment which the people dared no longer oppoſe: and it ſignificantly expreſſes their character, and the greatneſs of the ferment which prevailed among them.

Our Lord Jesus was most unanswerably demonstrated to be the "great High Priest over the house of God," when "the rod of his strength went forth out of Zion;" and multitudes were made willing in the day of his power, in the "beauties of holiness:" (Psal. cx. 2, 3;) and when, through him, "Israel shall blossom, and bud, and fill the "face of the world with fruit:" (Isaiah, xxvii. 6;) it will appear still more illustriously divine.—Those ministers, whom God chooses and sends, will not remain as dry rods before the Lord and his church; but more or less, sooner or later, they will bud, and blossom, and bear fruit; not only the fruits of holiness in their lives, but the fruits of usefulness in their ministery. May, when most opposed and persecuted, they may hope and pray for more evident fruitfulness, to encourage their hearts, to establish the Lord's people, and to silence and confound all their adversaries; and their usefulness will be "fruit which shall re-"main" before the Lord, to his everlasting glory, and their eternal recompence; and in the church for the good of many when they are fallen asleep. (John, xv. 16.)—But alas! when man's presumption is checked, and his self-sufficiency is abated, he naturally is prone to hard thoughts of God and unbelieving despondency; to neglect divine ordinances, lest he should be guilty of profaning them; to bury his talent in the earth, lest he should be condemned for wasting it; and to justify himself in neglecting good works, because he cannot merit heaven by them!—The Lord give us grace to avoid all extremes, into which an evil heart and a subtle enemy combine to betray us!

NOTES.

CHAP. XVIII.] V. 1. Shall bear, &c.] Aaron and his family were now confirmed in the priesthood against all competitors; and the people were exceedingly terrified lest the tabernacle should occasion their destruction. To counterbalance the honour conferred upon the former, and to allay the terrors of the latter, it was declared that the priests must bear the blame of every thing which was not properly conducted, in respect of the tabernacle and it's service; and that the people had nothing to fear, in this particular, but a presumptuous intrusion into the places and services, from which they were by the law excluded. The priests ought therefore to be very circumspect, active, and exemplary, both in their ministrations and conversation, else they would soon be burdened with guilt, which their legal sacrifices could not expiate; (1 Sam. iii. 14.)

V. 2—7.] The Levites were not allowed, on pain of death, even to look upon the sacred furniture which they carried, or to approach it, till it had been covered by the priests. They were not admitted within the sanctuary; whither the priests alone entered, to burn incense on the golden altar, to order the lamps of the golden candlestick, and to place the loaves on the table of shew-bread, or to remove them. The Levites might assist in preparing the sacrifices, but not in burning them on the altar. (Num. &c. iv. viii. Exod. xxvii. 20, 21. xxx. 8. Lev. xxiv. 3—9.)—The priests therefore stood accountable for "every thing of the altar and within the vail;" and the Levites were required to be their servants, and to minister to them: Yet the former, must confider their work and charge as a special gift and favour from God; and not as a disagreeable appendage to the emoluments and splendour of their office.

them by reason of the anointing, and to thy sons, by an ordinance for ever.

19 This shall be thine of the most holy things reserved from the fire: every oblation of their's, every meat-offering of their's, and every sin-offering of their's, and every trespass-offering of their's, which they shall render unto me, shall be most holy for thee, and for thy sons.

20 In the most holy place shalt thou eat it; every male shall eat it: it shall be holy unto thee.

21 And this is thine, the heave-offering of their gift, with all the wave-offerings of the children of Israel: I have given them unto thee, and to thy sons, and to thy daughters with thee, by a statute for ever; every one that is clean in thy house shall eat of it.

22 All the best of the oil, and all the best of the wine, and of the wheat, the first-fruits of them which they shall offer unto the LORD, them have I given thee.

23 And whatsoever is first ripe in the land, which they shall bring unto the LORD, shall be thine; every one that is clean in thine house shall eat of it.

24 Every thing devoted in Israel shall be thine.

25 Every thing that openeth the matrix in all flesh which they bring unto the LORD, whether it be of men or beasts, shall be thine: nevertheless, the first-born of man shalt thou surely redeem, and the firstling of unclean beasts shalt thou redeem.

26 And those that are to be redeemed from a month old shalt thou redeem, according to thine estimation, for the money of five shekels, after the shekel of the sanctuary, which is twenty gerahs.

27 But the firstling of a cow, or the firstling of a sheep, or the firstling of a goat, thou shalt not redeem, they are holy; thou shalt sprinkle their blood upon the altar, and shalt burn their fat for an offering made by fire, for a sweet savour unto the LORD.

28 And the flesh of them shall be thine, as the wave-breast and as the right shoulder are thine.

29 All the heave-offerings of the holy things, which the children of Israel offer unto the LORD, have I given thee, and thy sons and thy daughters with thee, by a statute for ever: it is a covenant of salt for ever before the LORD unto thee, and to thy seed with thee.

30 And the LORD spake unto Aaron, Thou shalt have no inheritance in their land, neither shalt thou have any part among them: I am thy part, and thine inheritance among the children of Israel.

31 And, behold, I have given the children of Levi all the tenth of Israel for an inheritance, for their service which they serve, even the service of the tabernacle of the congregation.

V. 15—18.] (Notes, &c. Lev. xxvii. 3—13.)

V. 19. A covenant of salt, &c.] (Note, Lev. ii. 13.) The Lord established it, as a perpetual and stable covenant with the family of Aaron, and an unalterable statute to Israel, all the time that they possessed the land of Canaan, that the priests should have these perquisites for themselves and their families, not as merited by them, but by reason of their anointing to that sacred office.

V. 20. No inheritance, &c.] The priests and Levites possessed houses and lands for gardens, and pasturage in the suburbs of their cities; or they might purchase estates to the year of jubilee: but they had no portion allotted them in the division of the land of Canaan: for it was the Lord's will, that they should receive, and be maintained by, that portion, which he reserved to himself as a rent out of the estates of the other Israelites. By this appointment they were exempted from many avocations and snares, which the cultivation and improvement of lands would have occasioned; and were plentifully supplied with every thing needful and comfortable. At the same time their interests were placed in an inseparable connection with the maintenance of the worship of God; for if the people became generally irreligious, or idolatrous, they would neither bring sacrifices nor pay tithes. And indeed the nature of man in general; that dispensation in particular in the nonage of the church; and the entail of the priesthood and of the sacred ministry upon one family and tribe; would render it proper to employ every tye and motive, to engage them to support the worship of God to the utmost of their ability.

V. 21. The tenth, &c.] The Lord by this statute gave the Levites a tenth of the whole increase of the land, of the labour and improvements, as well as of the estates, of all the other tribes. This was a large proportion for the smallest tribe, and, when joined to all the rest assigned them, was a very plentiful provision. But the other tribes would have also the advantages accruing from trade and manufactures, in which the Levites were not intended to be occupied.—This tenth seems to have been the common stock of the tribe, and divided among them accordingly: and this would obviate that common evil effect of tithes; namely the contentions that these arise betwixt ministers 22 Neither must the children of Israel henceforth come nigh the tabernacle of the congregation, lest they bear sin and die.

23 But the Levites shall do the service of the tabernacle of the congregation, and they shall bear their iniquity. It shall be a statute for ever throughout your generations, that among the children of Israel they have no inheritance.

24 But the tithes of the children of Israel, which they offer as an heave-offering unto the LORD, I have given to the Levites to inherit: therefore I have said unto them, Among the children of Israel they shall have no inheritance.

25 And the LORD spake unto Moses, saying,

26 Thus speak unto the Levites, and say unto them, When ye take of the children of Israel the tithes which I have given you from them for your inheritance, then ye shall offer up an heave-offering of it for the LORD, even a tenth part of the tithe.

27 And this your heave-offering shall be reckoned unto you as though it were the corn of the threshing-floor, and as the fulness of the wine-press.

28 Thus ye also shall offer an heave-offering unto the LORD of all your tithes which ye receive of the children of Israel; and ye shall give thereof the LORD's heave-offering to Aaron the priest.

29 Out of all your gifts ye shall offer every heave-offering of the LORD, of all the best thereof, even the hallowed part thereof, out of it.

30 Therefore thou shalt say unto them, When ye have heaved the best thereof from it, then it shall be counted unto the Levites as the increase of the threshing-floor, and as the increase of the wine-press.

31 And ye shall eat it in every place, ye and your households: for it is your reward for your service in the tabernacle of the congregation.

32 And ye shall bear no sin by reason of it, when ye have heaved from it the best of it: neither shall ye pollute the holy things of the children of Israel, lest ye die.

and the people of their peculiar charge; for the tithes were not paid to an individual, but to a collective body.

V. 27. As though, &c.] The Levites received tithes of the people, of which they gave a tithe to the priests; and some have conjectured that the tenth of this tithe was allotted for the High-priest's support, according to the pre-eminence to which he was advanced. This tithe of the tithes was the Levites' oblation to the Lord, and as acceptable as that which was paid out of the estates of the other Israelites; for every one should in some way honour God with his substance.

V. 32. Neither, &c.] The Levites would pollute the holy things, if they used the tithes, without separating the portion assigned to the priests.

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.

The office of a minister is "a good work," and an important charge; and to be employed and trusted in it, to be approved faithful and made useful, is the greatest honour and favour that God ever confers upon mortal man. But it is weighty and perilous; "the iniquity of the priest-"hood," and "of the sanctuary," form the most aggravated of all guilt, and will sink the mercenary, the careless, and the profligate minister into the deepest condemnation; besides occasioning wrath upon the people, and dragging them down with him into destruction. Ministers therefore ought to "rejoice with trembling;" to "take heed to "themselves, and to their doctrine;" to "avoid entangling "themselves in the affairs of this life;" to consider the Lord as their portion, the interests of godliness as their interests, and the glory of God in the salvation of souls as their grand, their sole object. They who desire this good work should look to it, that their motives, dispositions, and qualifications be such, as may give them a reasonable ground to hope, that they will "be approved of "God, workmen that need not be ashamed;" and that the maintenance which they receive, may be indeed "for their "service in the sanctuary."—On the other hand it is the Lord's pleasure, "that they who preach the gospel should "live of the gospel," and be preserved from the anxieties and temptations of pinching poverty; that they may have no occasion to entangle themselves in worldly business, nor inducement to flatter or to be silent out of pecuniary considerations. Nor is it only his will, that they should have enough to maintain their families, and punctually to discharge their debts; but that they should have a surplus for pious and charitable uses; and that they should thus employ it: not luxuriously spending, nor covetously hoarding it; but living themselves, and leaving their families to live, in dependence on God's providence. It is therefore criminal, not only to defraud, but to be niggardly to the ministers of God; and their maintenance must not be considered as an alms, or an imposition, but their just due; as God's portion out of men's estates; which being withheld will pollute the enjoyment of all the rest.—Whatsoever is offered to the Lord must be of the best; and they, who have the Lord for their inheritance, will be well provided for in this world and in the next, without the embarrassments and cares which perplex others.—Let us then endeavour to know, and do, our own work diligently, to be contented with and thankful for our daily bread; and as Christians indeed, to seek our inheritance and our treasure in CHAP. XIX.] V. 2. Red heifer, &c.] The red colour of this heifer may lead us to think of him, who "was "red in his apparel," both as stained with his own blood shed for our sins, and with the blood of his enemies. Christ never bare the yoke of sin, nor would have been made subject to the yoke of the law, except for our sakes and as our Surety.

V. 3. Eleazar, &c.] The High-priest must not on any account knowingly contract defilement, therefore the next priest to him officiated in this ceremony, not only at this time, but probably on future occasions of the same nature. —Christ suffered without Jerusalem, by the hands of others, but under the inspection, and by the sentence, of the chief priests, who were all grievously polluted by that enormous wickedness, though his death was according to the purpose and determinate counsel of God. (Acts ii. 23.)

V. 4. Directly before, &c.] Either towards the tabernacle when without the camp; or after the solemnity was finished, in the court of the tabernacle.

V. 6. And, &c.] (Note, Lev. xiv. 4.)

V. 9. Lay them up, &c.] After the Israelites were settled in Canaan, it is very probable that these ashes were conveniently placed in every neighbourhood. As a small quantity would serve, they would last a long time, and would aptly typify the abiding efficacy of the death of Christ.

V. 11. He that toucheth, &c.] It doth not appear that the touch of an unclean person, or any other thing, required this burdensome purification, except that of a dead human body. It is observable that no object is so offensive to our senses, as an human body in a state of putrefaction: for death in man alone is the wages of sin; the execution of the sentence of God's law upon a condemned criminal. The hatefulness of sin is therefore strongly marked in the circum-dead body, or a bone of a man, or a grave, shall be unclean seven days.

17 And for an unclean person they shall take of the ashes of the burnt heifer of purification for sin, and running water shall be put thereto in a vessel:

18 And a clean person shall take hyssop, and dip it in the water, and sprinkle it upon the tent, and upon all the vessels, and upon the persons that were there, and upon him that touched a bone, or one slain, or one dead, or a grave:

19 And the clean person shall sprinkle upon the unclean on the third day, and on the seventh day: and on the seventh day he shall purify himself, and wash his clothes, and bathe himself in water, and shall be clean at even.

20 But the man that shall be unclean, and shall not purify himself, that soul shall be cut off from among the congregation, because he hath defiled the sanctuary of the LORD: the water of separation hath not been sprinkled upon him; he is unclean.

21 And it shall be a perpetual statute unto them, that he that sprinkleth the water of separation shall wash his clothes, and he that toucheth the water of separation shall be unclean until even.

22 And whatsoever the unclean person toucheth shall be unclean; and the soul that toucheth it shall be unclean until even.

circumstances of this purification: but through Christ the very nature of death is changed to the true believer; and both the defilement and the sting of it are removed.

V. 21. Shall be unclean, &c.] The Jews say, that "even Solomon could not understand the mystery, how the "same water should pollute the clean person, and cleanse "the polluted." But the defiling nature of sin, and the insufficiency of these ceremonial observances, except in their reference to Christ, are denoted: and the mystery is revealed to him who "beholds the Lamb of God that," alone, "taketh away the sin of the world."

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.

Those great pretenders to reason, who allow the divine inspiration of the Scriptures, and will not say that God appoints any thing unreasonable, should consider what rational account can be given of these appointments, or what use can be made of them, if we do not refer them to those doctrines, which they object to, or perhaps deride.—But comparing them with the New Testament, and with the observable propensities of human nature, the propriety and instructive use of them become evident. Fallen man is actually sunk in many respects below the beasts that perish, and is in a most abject and debased condition, an object of the divine displeasure and abomination: yet he admires and flatters himself, loses sight of his filthiness, and accounts his very death as a matter of course, instead of an ignominious execution upon the body, and an introduction to a more dreadful condemnation and execution upon the immortal soul!—His true state was in these institutions presented before his eyes, and the humiliating consideration forced upon his attention. Here we learn the defiling nature of sin, which contaminates whatever it touches; and we are warned to avoid those "evil communications, "which corrupt good manners;" and not to associate with sinners, unless to benefit them, and then with great fear and care, lest instead of cleansing them we should be defiled by them. From the pollution of sin we must be cleansed, or we never can enter heaven; nor can it be removed, except in a method of God's own appointing. The atoning sacrifice of Christ is the only purchase of our purification, his Holy Spirit applying salvation to the soul is the only efficient cause; the living water and the ashes of the sacrifice, the pardoning efficacy and the sanctifying grace are never separated. By faith, like the bunch of hyssop, in the use of the instituted means, we are both justified and sanctified. (Eph. v. 25—28. Titus, ii. 14. 1 Peter, i. 2.) Thus the guilt and dominion of sin is removed, and its pollution by repeated applications gradually cleansed away, until at length its existence is finally destroyed. No degree of guilt or pollution can bar the salvation of that man who avails himself of this provision: but the least sin will for ever ruin such as presumptuously despise and neglect it. Though we cannot contrive, merit, or effect salvation for ourselves or others: yet we may use, or we may neglect, the means of application; and we may be instrumental either to the salvation or to the destruction of those connected with us. Even they, who are useful to their fellow sinners, must recollect continually that they also need cleansing; not only in respect to their other conduct, but even in respect to their most honest and strenuous endeavours to save the souls of their fellow sinners.

NOTES.

CHAP. XX.] V. 1. In the first month, &c.] For more than thirty-seven years Israel had now abode in the wilderness, confined as in a prison by the power of God; during all which abode in Kadesh; and Miriam died there, and was buried there.

2 And there was no water for the congregation: and they gathered themselves together against Moses and against Aaron.

3 And the people chode with Moses, and spake, saying, Would God that we had died when our brethren died before the LORD!

4 And why have ye brought up the congregation of the LORD into this wilderness, that we and our cattle should die there?

5 And wherefore have ye made us to come up out of Egypt, to bring us in unto this evil place? it is no place of seed, or of figs, or vines, or of pomegranates; neither is there any water to drink.

6 And Moses and Aaron went from the presence of the assembly, unto the door of the tabernacle of the congregation, and they fell upon their faces; and the glory of the LORD appeared unto them.

7 And the LORD spake unto Moses, saying,

8 Take the rod, and gather thou the assembly together, thou and Aaron thy brother, and speak ye unto the rock before their eyes, and it shall give forth his water, and thou shalt bring forth to them water out of the rock: so thou shalt give the congregation and their beasts drink.

9 And Moses took the rod from before the LORD, as he commanded him.

10 And Moses and Aaron gathered the congregation together before the rock, and he said unto them, Hear now, ye rebels; must we fetch you water out of this rock?

11 And Moses lifted up his hand, and with his rod he smote the rock twice: and the water came out abundantly: and the congregation drank, and their beasts also.

12 And the LORD spake unto Moses and Aaron, Because ye believed me not, to sanctify me in the eyes of the children of Israel, therefore ye shall not bring this congregation into the land which I have given them.

13 This is the water of Meribah; because the children of Israel strove with the LORD, and he was sanctified in them.

14 And Moses sent messengers from Kadesh unto the king of Edom, Thus saith thy brother Israel, Thou knowest all the travail that hath befallen us:

15 How our fathers went down into Egypt, and which time we scarcely learn any thing about them, but that the old generation had almost all died off, and a new generation was risen up in their stead.—In the first month in the fortieth year the history is resumed, and we find them at Kadesh in the wilderness of Zin, in the confines of Canaan, (not Sin, in the neighbourhood of the Red Sea, Exod. xvi. 1;) where Miriam, who must have been at least one hundred and thirty years of age, died and was buried.

V. 2—6.] How long the water from the rock in Horeb followed the Israelites, or whence they had been supplied, we know not. But being at this time in want, the old effect was produced, though they were mainly a new generation: they murmured, desponded, and wished themselves dead, and quarrelled with Moses and Aaron, as their fathers had done.

V. 8. Speak ye, &c.] The waters from the rock in Horeb typified the sanctifying comforting influences of the Holy Ghost, communicated to God's people, through the death of Christ, when smitten for our sins: (Notes, &c. Exod. xvii:) and though this could not be the same rock, the typical meaning seems to have been carried on. The rock once smitten needs but be spoken to, by the prayer of faith accompanying the preached word, and the waters will flow forth. The pretended sacrifice of the mass seems to be an imitation of Moses's error, in repeatedly smiting the rock, which he ought only to have spoken unto.

V. 10—12.] Though the people were rebels, and Moses called them so at other times without offence, yet he evidently spake at this time in an angry spirit. He also assumed honour to himself and to Aaron, instead of giving glory to God, whilst he enquired, "must we fetch you "water out of this rock?" (Gen. xl. 8. xli. 16. Dan. ii. 28—30. Acts, iii. 12—16.) He seems to have questioned whether the water would be given, and not to have deemed it sufficient to speak to the rock; and therefore, in haste and in heat, he twice smote it: though the sign of speaking to it was probably intended as a rebuke to the people, who were not so obedient to the Lord's command as the very rocks were. In all this we can see much to blame, but the Lord saw much more, and that Aaron also was involved in the guilt: though the water therefore was not withheld, yet the relief to Israel was followed by a severe rebuke to Moses and Aaron, and a sentence of exclusion from Canaan.—They were eminent characters; the eyes of all Israel were upon them; and their improper conduct, and want of confidence in the power and faithfulness of God were very dishonourable to him.

V. 13. Meribah, &c.] The other place, where water had been brought out of the rock was called Meribah, but it was called also Massah; this was Meribah-Kadesh, (Exod. xvii. 7. Deut. xxxii. 51.)

V. 14—21.] The descendents of Esau, now grown into a flourishing kingdom, were not unacquainted with the relation in which the Israelites stood to them, nor with their bondage and we have dwelt in Egypt a long time; and the Egyptians vexed us and our fathers:

16 And when we cried unto the LORD, he heard our voice, and sent an angel, and hath brought us forth out of Egypt: and, behold, we are in Kadesh, a city in the uttermost of thy border:

17 Let us pass, I pray thee, through thy country: we will not pass through the fields, or through the vineyards, neither will we drink of the water of the wells: we will go by the king's high-way, we will not turn to the right hand nor to the left, until we have passed thy borders.

18 And Edom said unto him, Thou shalt not pass by me, lest I come out against thee with the sword.

19 And the children of Israel said unto him, We will go by the high-way: and if I and my cattle drink of thy water, then I will pay for it: I will only, (without doing any thing else,) go through on my feet.

20 And he said, Thou shalt not go through. And Edom came out against him with much people, and with a strong hand.

21 Thus Edom refused to give Israel passage through his border: wherefore Israel turned away from him.

22 And the children of Israel, even the whole congregation, journeyed from Kadesh, and came unto mount Hor.

23 And the LORD spake unto Moses and Aaron in mount Hor, by the coast of the land of Edom, saying, 24 Aaron shall be gathered unto his people: for he shall not enter into the land which I have given unto the children of Israel, because ye rebelled against my word at the water of Meribah.

25 Take Aaron and Eleazar his son, and bring them up unto mount Hor:

26 And strip Aaron of his garments, and put them upon Eleazar his son: and Aaron shall be gathered unto his people, and shall die there.

27 And Moses did as the LORD commanded: and they went up into mount Hor in the sight of all the congregation.

28 And Moses stripped Aaron of his garments, and put them upon Eleazar his son; and bondage in Egypt and deliverance from it, their continuance in the wilderness, and their pretensions to Canaan. With them Moses pleaded the brotherly relation to move natural affection; the past distresses of the people to excite compassion; and the favour of the Lord to them, who by the Angel of his presence guided and protected them, to influence their hopes and fears: he engaged that the people should pass through with all convenient speed, on the king's high way, doing no harm, and paying even for the water which they drank. But the Edomites suspected their intentions, retained their old enmity, denied their request, and threatened them with war. Yet the Israelites were not allowed to molest them, but were required to set an example of forbearance and forgiveness, by taking a long circuit round their country.

V. 28. And Aaron died, &c.] Though Aaron left the world under a divine rebuke, yet he died as a pardoned sinner, with the hope and earnest of glory, and the comfort of seeing his son invested with his priesthood. Doubtless the command given to Moses, and the service assigned him in this matter, must have awakened many painful feelings in his breast, when he considered his own perhaps deeper guilt.

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.

Well might Moses say, (Psalm xc. 9—12,) "All our "days are passed in thy wrath; we spend our years, as a "tale that is told:" when during so long a period he witnessed nothing worthy to be recorded, but the death of many hundreds of thousands of his brethren!—Even so this day man's life passes away in much the same manner: for what is it but a tedious repetition of the same dull occurrences, with evident proofs of our folly and guilt, and of the Lord's anger tempered with mercy, "till our life "be cut off, and we flee away!"—Thus the longest life soon comes to a close; and the only advantage that the most eminent possess above the more obscure is, that they do not die quite so unnoticed. O Lord, "So teach us to "number our days, that we may apply our hearts unto "wisdom!"—The propensity to do so is evidently not the fault of this or that man or people, but of human nature: therefore one generation after another manifests the same disposition to unbelief, impatience, and rebellious murmurs.—We can easily descant on the aggravations of Israel's crime, in this instance, after all they had witnessed and experienced: but had we been in their place, cooped up in the wilderness, confined mainly to one kind of food, at a distance from all the delicacies and varieties, with which even the poorest in a fertile land, are comparatively feasted, during the revolutions of the seasons and their several productions: should not we too have been fretful, and impatient? not that we should have had either right or reason to complain, but because we are proud and sensual, and consequently hard to please.—But why question whether we should have rebelled? when Moses and Aaron stand condemned with Israel, though not of the same, yet of similar, unbelief, rebellion, and anger. Even Moses the meekest man on earth spake unadvisedly with his lips; (Psalm cvi. 32, 33.) and we are constrained and Aaron died there in the top of the mount: and Moses and Eleazar came down from the mount.

29 And when all the congregation saw that Aaron was dead, they mourned for Aaron thirty days, even all the house of Israel.

2 And Israel vowed a vow unto the LORD, and said, If thou wilt indeed deliver this people into my hand, then I will utterly destroy their cities.

3 And the LORD hearkened to the voice of Israel, and delivered up the Canaanites; and they utterly destroyed them and their cities: and he called the name of the place Hormah.

4 And they journeyed from mount Hor, by the way of the Red sea, to compass the land of Edom: and the soul of the people was much discouraged because of the way.

5 And strained repeatedly to notice the most eminent saints defective in their most distinguishing excellences.—Under long continued trials, the best of men prove not only the reality of their grace, but also that "sin still dwelleth in "them;" nay old age gives advantage to some evils, and to none more than a peevish spirit.—In proportion to the eminence of a man's character, and the notoriety of his offence, it will dishonour and displease God: (Eccles. x. 1. Matt. v. 13—16;) and by putting us to shame for our sins, he will distrain for that honour which we have neglected to render him. Whilst impenitent sinners escape punishment in this world, being reserved unto the day of judgment; the Lord marks the offences of his people with alarming severity! yet still it is all in mercy, and notwithstanding our unworthiness he will provide for our wants, and answer our prayers, when we speak for a supply of the waters of life which flow from the rock of salvation.—Let us learn also to imitate the impartiality of the historian; and the silent submission of him and of Aaron, in acquiescing in this humbling public rebuke for a public offence; and the example of Israel to insolent and injurious Edom. Thus upright and inoffensive, thus candid in our declarations, and open in our profession of religion; thus fair in our proposals, slow to anger, ready to forgive, and to give up our convenience, and even to recede from our right, rather than contend about it, should we be: and when we cannot overcome evil with good, we should leave the Lord to plead our cause in his own time and manner.—When one affliction has not produced a proper effect, another may be expected; and the Lord's word will surely, perhaps speedily, be fulfilled in his providence. Shortly death will strip the richest, wisest, and most honourable of all their distinctions, except true grace has made them to differ; in that case, when they leave all the rest to others, that will be their own for ever. Having served their generation, they need not wish to survive their usefulness; nor can that correction be justly complained of, which hastens a man's entrance into heaven.—When eminently good men die, rivalships, envy, resentment, and prejudice, which often render them uneasy whilst they live, die also; and survivors very commonly honour and mourn for those whom when living they opposed and reviled! It is indeed a tribute due to them: but it matters not what others think and say of them, when dead, except they will then receive their testimony and follow their example.—Blessed be God, our High Priest at death relinquished not his priesthood to another, but rose again to complete his design, and ever liveth to make intercession for us. Having the fulness of the Spirit, he raises up a succession of ministers and Christians to preach and profess his truth, from age to age, and he hath consigned the robe of his righteousness to all his spiritual posterity, for their accepted appearance before God.—If we be his indeed, though we be separated from our dearest friends, and must shortly be absent from the body, yet we shall never be separated from him; "for he that is joined to the Lord is one spirit."

NOTES.

CHAP. XXI.] V. 1—3.] Before the people set out to march round the country of Edom, Arad, king of those Canaanites, who inhabited the southern part of the country, knowing their intentions of invading the land, and that the spies had formerly searched it out, and now learning that they approached his borders, attacked them in the wilderness, and took some of their prisoners, which elated him and discouraged them. But this disadvantage induced the Israelites to place a more entire dependence on the Lord; and to devote the cities and property of these assailants to utter destruction, in case they were victorious; their persons having been already thus devoted by God himself. In this confidence they waged war with them, and pushed forward to their cities, which they took and utterly destroyed; and called the name Hormah, or utter destruction, that none might ever after build on the same ground.

V. 4, 5.] The people were not permitted to force their way through the land of Edom, but were called back into the wilderness, as if about to return to the Red Sea. The road perhaps proved heavy or rough, water was scarce, and they grew weary of living so long on manna, which probably they fancied was not hearty enough to support them under 5 And the people ſpake againſt God, and againſt Moſes, Wherefore have ye brought us up out of Egypt to die in the wilderneſs? for there is no bread, neither is there any water; and our ſoul loatheth this light bread.

6 And the LORD ſent fiery ſerpents among the people, and they bit the people; and much people of Iſrael died.

7 Therefore the people came to Moſes, and ſaid, We have ſinned; for we have ſpoken againſt the LORD, and againſt thee: pray unto the LORD that he take away the ſerpents from us. And Moſes prayed for the people.

8 And the LORD ſaid unto Moſes, Make thee a fiery ſerpent, and ſet it upon a pole: and it ſhall come to paſs, that every one that is bitten, when he looketh upon it, ſhall live.

9 And Moſes made a ſerpent of braſs, and put it upon a pole, and it came to paſs, that if a ſerpent had bitten any man, when he beheld the ſerpent of braſs, he lived.

10 And the children of Iſrael ſet forward, and pitched in Oboth.

11 And they journeyed from Oboth, and pitched in Ije-abarim, in the wilderneſs which is before Moab, toward the ſun-riſing.

12 From thence they removed, and pitched in the valley of Zared.

13 From thence they removed, and pitched on the other ſide of Arnon, which is in the wilderneſs that cometh out of the coaſts of the Amorites: for Arnon is the border of Moab, between Moab and the Amorites.

14 Wherefore it is ſaid in the book of the wars under ſuch fatigues. On theſe accounts they were diſcouraged, and relapſed into their old ſin of diſtruſtful murmuring.

V. 6—9.] Theſe ſerpents abounded in the wilderneſs, (Deut. viii. 15,) but had been reſtrained from hurting the people, till they provoked God to give them a commiſſion to aſſail the camp; in which they ſoon did dreadful execution, and cauſed ſtill greater conſternation. They were called fiery ſerpents, as ſome think from their colour, which reſembled poliſhed braſs; others, with greater probability, deduce the epithet from the inflammation, like the burning of fire, which immediately followed their bite. The people being thus made ſenſible of their fault, and brought to confeſs it, intreated Moſes to pray for the removal of the ſerpents, which he readily did. The ſerpents however, were not removed: but Moſes was commanded to form one of braſs exactly like them, to affix it to a long pole, and to place it in a conſpicuous part of the camp. To this brazen ſerpent, thoſe who had been bitten were directed to look. Nothing could in itſelf be leſs ſuited to give relief than ſuch an expedient: but it was the Lord's appointment, his wiſdom muſt be ſubmitted to, and by this token the ſufferers muſt expreſs their dependence on him, and expectation of a cure from him alone. Accordingly whoſoever looked, however deſperate his caſe, or feeble his ſight, or diſtant his ſituation, was infallibly and perfectly cured: but if any one would ſhut his eyes, or turn his back of the brazen ſerpent, he muſt die.—This forms a very ſignificant type of our ſalvation by Jeſus Chriſt: (Notes, &c. John, iii. 14, 15.) The Lord, provoked by man's firſt apoſtacy, hath been pleaſed to permit that old ſerpent, the tempter, the devil, to communicate his baleful venom to the whole human race, which operates to their deſtruction: and numbers in conſequence have periſhed, are periſhing, and will periſh. But, "God ſo loved "the world, as to give his only-begotten Son, that who-"ſoever believeth in him ſhould not periſh, but have ever-"laſting life."—The Saviour was indeed perfectly free from ſin, but he bare the likeneſs of ſinful fleſh; he was numbered with malefactors, and crucified with them; and it is obſervable that the ſuppoſed crime for which he ſuffered, namely, making himſelf equal with God, was conſidered by his enemies as the eſſence of diabolical ambition, uſurpation, and blaſphemy. Having thus been made ſin for us, he is now held forth in the preached goſpel publicly to all nations; ſo that when any poor ſinner is made ſenſible of his guilt, miſery, and danger; when he humbles himſelf before God, and cries for mercy and deliverance; he is commanded to look unto Jeſus as dying upon the croſs for the tranſgreſſions "of the law given by Moſes;" and looking in faith, with a deſire and expectation of ſalvation, and in obedience to God; and perſevering ſo to do from day to day, in the uſe of the appointed means, he ſhall obtain effectual relief, and at length a perfect deliverance; though ſatan's temptations as yet haraſs his ſoul, and infeſt the church of God. Nor ſhall they whoſe faith is weak and wavering, if it be ſincere, fail of ſalvation: and the future lives of believers will evince that they have looked and obtained help. It is not neceſſary that they ſhould be able to account for theſe effects; as faith in a crucified Saviour is God's appointment, by which he works: and though man's reaſoning pride conſiders it as fooliſhneſs; yet they, who ſeek and expect help from God alone in his appointed way, will experience it to be the power of God to ſalvation. But all, who refuſe to truſt in the Saviour, will find every effort to eſcape deſtruction unavailing: the bite of the old ſerpent is mortal, and there is but one remedy of ſimple eaſy application, and on that very account too frequently deſpiſed and neglected; (Notes 2 Kings, v. 9—15.)

V. 10. In Oboth, &c.] Oboth ſignifies bottles, and probably the place was ſo called from the people's carrying water thence in bottles for their uſe in the deſert.

V. 14. The book of, &c.] Probably this was ſome uninſpired poem, or hiſtory, not now extant. The Iſraelites had by this time marched round to the country, which lay eaſtward of Canaan, beyond Jordan.

wars of the LORD, What he did in the Red sea, and in the brooks of Arnon, 15 And at the stream of the brooks that goeth down to the dwelling of Ar, and lieth upon the border of Moab.

16 And from thence they went to Beer; that is the well whereof the LORD spake unto Moses, Gather the people together, and I will give them water.

17 Then Israel sang this song, Spring up, O well; sing ye unto it:

18 And the princes digged the well, the nobles of the people digged it, by the direction of the law-giver, with their staves. And from the wilderness they went to Mattanah:

19 And from Mattanah to Nahaliel: and from Nahaliel to Bamoth:

20 And from Bamoth in the valley, that is in the country of Moab, to the top of Pisgah, which looketh toward Jeshimon.

21 And Israel sent messengers unto Sihon king of the Amorites, saying, 22 Let me pass through thy land: we will not turn into the fields, or into the vineyards; we will not drink of the waters of the well; but we will go along by the king's high-way, until we be passed thy borders.

23 And Sihon would not suffer Israel to pass through his border; but Sihon gathered all his people together, and went out against Israel into the wilderness: and he came to Jahaz, and fought against Israel:

24 And Israel smote him with the edge of the sword, and possessed his land from Arnon unto Jabbok, even unto the children of Ammon: for the border of the children of Ammon was strong.

25 And Israel took all these cities: and Israel dwelt in all the cities of the Amorites, in Heshbon, and in all the villages thereof.

26 For Heshbon was the city of Sihon the king of the Amorites, who had fought against the former king of Moab, and taken all his land out of his hand, even unto Arnon.

27 Wherefore they that speak in proverbs say, Come into Heshbon, let the city of Sihon be built and prepared:

28 For there is a fire gone out of Heshbon, a flame from the city of Sihon: it hath consumed Ar of Moab, and the lords of the high places of Arnon.

29 Woe to thee, Moab! thou art undone, O people of Chemosh: he hath given his sons that escaped, and his daughters, into captivity unto Sihon king of the Amorites.

30 We have shot at them: Heshbon is perished even unto Dibon, and we have laid them waste even unto Nophah, which reacheth unto Medeba.

31 Thus Israel dwelt in the land of the Amorites.

32 And Moses sent to spy out Jaazer, and they took the villages thereof, and drove out the Amorites that were there.

33 And they turned, and went up by the way of Bashan: and Og the king of Bashan went out against them, he and all his people, to the battle at Edrei.

34 And the LORD said unto Moses, Fear him not; for I have delivered him into thy hand, and all his people, and his land; and thou shalt do to him as thou didst unto Sihon king of the Amorites, which dwelt at Heshbon.

V. 16—18.] The people wanting water, the princes by the Lord's direction, with their staves only, opened the dry surface of the earth, and the water flowed in such abundance, that the place was called Beer, or the well; and the people expressed their admiration and gratitude in a song of praise.

V. 21—24.] The country of the Amorites was contained in the grant made to Abraham, and indeed the whole region as far as the river Euphrates: (Gen. xv. 18.) Yet perhaps Israel did not expect to have taken immediate possession of it; but to have first invaded the country, situated betwixt the river Jordan and the Mediterranean sea. They therefore, by their ambassadors offered peace to Sihon; and as Moses approved that measure, we may suppose that it was done by divine direction. (Deut. ii. 26.) But as he would not accede to their proposals, they began their conquests with him and his country, and proceeded to add to them that of Og also. (Notes, &c. Deut. ii. iii.)

V. 26, In proverbs.] That is, songs composed, and communicated from one to another by oral tradition; but not committed to writing; which was unknown or uncommon among these nations.

V. 29. O people of Chemosh, &c.] Chemosh was the chief idol of the Moabites, of which we shall frequently read hereafter.

V. 34. Fear, &c.] Og was a giant and very formidable, the people therefore feared to attack him till they were thus encouraged, (Deut. iii. 11.)

35 So they smote him, and his sons, and all his people, until there was none left him alive: and they possessed his land.

AND

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.

The enemies of the Lord will always be the enemies of his people; and they may at first seem to prosper in their attempts against them, but they will at last be utterly destroyed. For though the servants of God are often wearied, to take them off from self-dependence; yet those very disadvantages conduce to their final victory; as they excite them to call upon God, and to give him all the glory of their success; and then they become invincible! "When I am weak, then am I strong." (2 Cor. xii. 9—10.)—But alas, how soon are God's judgments and mercies forgotten by us! and how prone are we to relapse into former sins, though we have smarted for them, and even repented of them! to complain of and magnify every difficulty, to despise our choicest mercies, to be impatient of delays, to distrust, to murmur, and to rebel! Nay, where the dominion of sin is broken, it dwells within, and will break out again; sometimes openly to the dishonour of God, and the grief of his faithful servants: and under some trials, and in some cases, even the true believer may be so discouraged and tempted, and so yield to temptation, as to undervalue the gospel manna, the Bread of life, and the benefit of divine ordinances, as if they were "light food," and almost to wish that he had never set out in the ways of God. (Psalm. lxxiii. 13, 14.) But he will soon be ashamed of such thoughts, if they have ever wrought in his mind: and the hypocrite alone will abide in such a disposition. We have need, however to "watch "and pray, that we enter not into temptation," and it is profitable for us to be aware of the enemy within, as well as of the enemies around us; especially in times of severe trial and tedious discouragement.—But "whom the Lord "loves, he chastens;" and by his judgments upon hypocrites, as well as by personal corrections, he excites a salutary terror in their minds, when they are out of the path of duty, which brings them back with weeping and supplication: and when they repent and acknowledge their offence, he removes the dreaded destruction, though perhaps the smart of the correcting rod may continue for a time. He knows how to over-rule, not only the bite of poisonous serpents, but the persecutions of wicked men, and the temptations of the devil, for the good of those whom he loves: and our prayers are often most desirably answered, when the letter of the request is not granted; (Num. &c. 2 Cor. xii. 7—9.)—The Lord can relieve us from our dangers and distresses by the means which we should deem most unpromising; of which he hath given proof in redeeming so many souls from hell, from Satan, and sin, and bringing them to holiness and eternal life, by the manifestation of his Son in the likeness of sinful flesh, by his agonizing and accursed death upon the tree, and by the preaching of the despised doctrine of a crucified Saviour. Oh! that the venom of the old serpent inflaming men's passions, and causing them to commit those sins, which must otherwise terminate in their eternal destruction, was but as sensibly felt, and the danger as plainly apprehended, as the Israelites felt the pain, and feared the death, which followed from the bite of the fiery serpents! Then none would shut their eyes to, or turn their backs of, Christ and his gospel: then would a crucified Saviour be so valued, that all things else would be accounted loss for him; (Phil. iii. 7—9;) then without delay, and with all earnestness and simplicity of dependence, they would apply to him in the appointed way, crying, "Lord save us, we perish:" Then from day to day would they look to him for pardon and healing, and their conduct would prove that they had received them: nor would any abuse the freeness of his salvation to them, whilst they estimated the price which it cost him; and their love to the Saviour would increase their dread and abhorrence of sin, and watchfulness against temptation.—But alas! this is not so: few feel their perishing need of Christ; and though it still be said, "Look "unto me, and be saved;" most men perish in their sins, even with the Bible in their hands, and the gospel preached in their hearing, and Christ in the gospel "evidently "set forth as crucified among them!" How then will they escape, who through pride of heart and love of sin reject this simple method of cure, or prefer their own inventions to this heaven-devised, purchased, and revealed salvation? Or who, abusing the doctrine, presume that their iniquities are pardoned, whilst their domineering passions, earthly affections, and unsanctified tempers, their prevailing covetousness, pride, anger, ambition, or lust, betray the venom of the old serpent to be in full force within?—But for those, whom the Lord hath healed, wells of salvation shall be opened through their whole journey: they need only use the appointed means with simplicity and diligence, and he will send supplies of heavenly consolations, and they shall rejoice in celebrating his praises. (Isaiah, xli. 17, 18.) Nor ought they to be unthankful to the instruments of their mercies, temporal or spiritual, whether they be princes, nobles, lawgivers, magistrates, ministers, or private persons.—Still however we must prepare for fresh conflicts and enemies: with sin and the powers of darkness we must make no peace or truce, nor even treat with them; nor may we expect any long cessation of hostilities. Even our neighbours, with whom we would, if possible, live peaceably, will often make themselves ready to battle. But trusting in the Lord's protection and obeying his commands, we shall be more than conquerors over every assailant, and profit by all their attempts to hurt us. For our inheritance is sure, and in the Lord's time and manner, every thing will concur in putting us in possession of it. But worldly inheritances are continually changing their masters: ill gotten gain never went well;

AND the children of Israel set forward, and pitched in the plains of Moab, on this side Jordan by Jericho.

2 And Balak the son of Zippor saw all that Israel had done to the Amorites.

3 And Moab was sore afraid of the people, because they were many: and Moab was distressed because of the children of Israel.

4 And Moab said unto the elders of Midian, Now shall this company lick up all that are round about us, as the ox licketh up the grass of the field. And Balak the son of Zippor was king of the Moabites at that time.

5 He sent messengers therefore unto Balaam the son of Beor, to Pethor, which is by the river of the land of the children of his people, to call him, saying, Behold, there is a people come out from Egypt: behold, they cover the face of the earth, and they abide over against me.

6 Come now therefore, I pray thee, curse me this people, for they are too mighty for me: peradventure I shall prevail, that we may smite them, and that I may drive them out of the land: for I wot that he whom thou blessest is blessed, and he whom thou cursest is cursed.

7 And the elders of Moab, and the elders of Midian, departed with the rewards of divination in their hand; and they came unto Balaam, and spake unto him the words of Balak.

8 And he said unto them, Lodge here this night, and I will bring you word again, as the LORD shall speak unto me. And the princes of Moab abode with Balaam.

9 And God came unto Balaam, and said, What men are these with thee?

10 And Balaam said unto God, Balak the son of Zippor, king of Moab, hath sent unto me, saying, 11 Behold, there is a people come out of Egypt, which covereth the face of the earth: come now, curse me them; peradventure I shall be able to overcome them, and drive them out.

12 And God said unto Balaam, Thou shalt not go with them; thou shalt not curse the people: for they are blessed.

13 And

well; idolatrous dependences fail in the crisis of need; and the destruction of the wicked, being appointed of God, will be certainly and speedily effected.

NOTES.

CHAP. XXII. V. 1. By Jericho, &c.] At length the Israelites terminated their wanderings, by encamping on the banks of Jordan over against Jericho, where they abode until their passage over into Canaan.

V. 4. Elders, &c.] The Moabites were descended from Lot; the Midianites from Abraham by Keturah; they lived near together, and were much united in interest, as were also the Ishmaelites, the Edomites, and the Ammonites: but they were all enemies to the children of Israel, though such near relations.—The simile here employed is extremely expressive, as referring to the complete destruction which Israel had made of Arad, Sihon, and Og, with the nations over which they reigned.

V. 5. Balaam, &c.] Balaam appears originally to have been a noted soothsayer, or diviner, who had acquired eminent reputation for his skill in those practices. But having obtained some knowledge of the true religion, without any change in the disposition of his heart; he endeavoured to render that knowledge subservient to his interested and ambitious ends; and professing himself a prophet, he uttered his divinations in the name of Jehovah. (Notes, &c. Acts, viii. 11—13. 18—24.) It is not certain, whether the Lord had ever spoken to him, or by him, before this event, though probably he had; but he certainly did afterwards; yet have we abundant proof, that he lived and died a wicked man, and an enemy to God and his people; (Matt., vii. 22, 23. 1 Cor. xiii. 1, 2.) Many expositors, however, think that he had at first been a prophet; and that his divinations were consequent to his evident departure from the Lord.—His abode was near the river Euphrates, at a very considerable distance; so far had his renown diffused itself!

V. 6, Come now, &c.] Balak had some general notion of the over-ruling influence of an invisible power; and at the same time had such an opinion of Balaam's interest with that invisible power, that he supposed he could do nothing so effectual to conciliate his favour, as to pay court to his prophet; nay he either actually thought, or he was willing to compliment Balaam, and to comfort himself, with the supposition, that his blessings or curses were infallibly ratified! If he could therefore have prevailed with him solemnly to curse Israel, and to bless Moab, he would then have defied the Israelites and their God, notwithstanding all the wonders of which he had heard. Such faith had he in this covetous and wicked man!

V. 8. Lodge here all night, &c.] Balaam seems to have been fully convinced that Jehovah was the true God, and the protector of Israel; if, therefore "his heart had not been "exercised with covetous practices," if he had not hankered after the "rewards of divination;" he would peremptorily have declared that he durst not, and would not, attempt any thing against the people of God. But though he could not but know that it was in vain to attempt anything in opposition to the almighty power of God: yet he had such unworthy notions of him as to think that, by one means or other, he would be induced to renounce the protection of Israel, and to come over to the side of Moab. This appears to have been the project which he had formed 13 And Balaam rose up in the morning, and said unto the princes of Balak, Get you into your land: for the LORD refuseth to give me leave to go with you.

14 And the princes of Moab rose up, and they went unto Balak, and said, Balaam refuseth to come with us.

15 And Balak sent yet again princes, more, and more honourable than they.

16 And they came to Balaam, and said to him, Thus saith Balak, the son of Zippor, Let nothing, I pray thee, hinder thee from coming unto me;

17 For I will promote thee unto very great honour, and I will do whatsoever thou sayest unto me: come therefore, I pray thee, curse me this people.

18 And Balaam answered and said unto the servants of Balak, if Balak would give me his house full of silver and gold, I cannot go beyond the word of the LORD my God, to do less or more.

19 Now therefore, I pray you, tarry ye also here this night, that I may know what the LORD will say unto me more.

20 And God came unto Balaam at night, and said unto him, If the men come to call thee, rise up, and go with them; but yet the word which I shall say unto thee, that shalt thou do.

21 And Balaam rose up in the morning, and saddled his ass, and went with the princes of Moab.

22 And God's anger was kindled, because he went: and the Angel of the LORD stood in the way for an adversary against him. Now he was riding upon his ass, and his two servants were with him.

formed, and which he prosecuted for a long time, until he was still further given up to infatuation! Under this idea he desired a night's time, in hopes to obtain the Lord's consent to his intended journey; and consequently he expected some immediate revelation, which for wise reasons the Lord was pleased to afford him.

V. 13. The Lord refuseth, &c.] Balaam did not "bring "the messengers word again, as the Lord spake to him:" for he mentioned merely his refusal, but neither the peremptory manner, nor the reason, of it, viz. 'That the 'people were blessed, and therefore Balaam should not 'curse them.' Had he properly regarded the words of God, he would for ever have dropt all thoughts of such an undertaking; and had he faithfully reported them, they would have conveyed an important warning to Balak, not to meddle to his hurt; but he spake as one inclinable to the project, and not without hope of obtaining leave in due time; and as the matter was reported to Balak, he naturally concluded that the prophet only expected more respect and larger promises.

V. 15. Balak sent, &c.] The court which Balak paid to this man, who was supposed to possess an interest with some superior power, and by whom he hoped to obtain his assistance, exposes the hypocrisy of those persons who profess the true religion, and yet treat the ordinances and ministers of it with neglect and contempt, and will be at no trouble or expence about it.

V. 16, 17.] Neither conscience, nor the fear of God are excepted in this message: but the king fancied that he might except such complaisance from the prophet, when he allowed him to fix his own price in return.

V. 18. I cannot, &c.] Balaam did not say, that he was determined not to come; nor did he express any abhorrence of the crime or the temptation; (Acts, viii. 20;) but he rather seemed to regret, that he might not avail himself of so liberal an offer. He cannot; so much the greater his misfortune!—These touches must be carefully noted, if we would understand this instructive history.

V. 19. Tarry ye also, &c.] After the peremptory answer which God had given Balaam, he should have spoken to this effect: 'Say no more to me on this subject, but re-'turn home, and make the best terms you can with Israel. 'They are the Lord's people whom he is determined to 'bless; and you can do nothing against them by strata-'gem, or by power, human or divine: for my part I can-'not, I dare not, and I would not for the world, venture 'to oppose them; so tempt me no more.' He was therefore perfectly inexcusable in parleying with the temptation. But he was the slave of covetousness, and entertained dishonourable thoughts of God, and supposed that he could be induced to change his determination; therefore God in anger gave him the permission, which he so wickedly and eagerly desired.

V. 20, 21.] Balaam was in such haste to go, that he does not seem to have waited the call of Balak's princes, but to have arisen early, and prepared for his journey.

V. 22. God's anger, &c.] The Lord is pleased to permit almost an infinity of actions, which he doth not approve; and he is very angry at those who avail themselves of such permission to gratify their lusts. "They think evil, "but God means it for good." Nay the motive even of obedience may be so corrupt, that whilst the action is approved, God may abhor the principle from which it sprang: (2 Kings, x. 30, Hosea, i. 4.)—Balaam was instigated in the whole transaction by covetousness and ambition; (2 Pet. ii. 15;) and in a very wicked manner he repeatedly sought permission to curse a people whom the Lord had blessed, for the sake of enriching and advancing himself: for he appears not to have had any favour to Moab, or any quarrel with Israel, except for filthy lucre's sake. The Lord, with evident tokens of disapprobation, gave him leave to follow his inclination, and to go with the princes of Moab. Of this permission he eagerly availed himself, and both the motive and conduct displeased the Lord, who therefore met him "as an "adversary" in the way. His avarice was the more inex-

THE REVP Mr SCOTT'S BIBLE.

23 And the aſs ſaw the Angel of the LORD ſtanding in the way, and his ſword drawn in his hand: and the aſs turned aſide out of the way, and went into the field; and Balaam ſmote the aſs, to turn her into the way.

24 But the Angel of the LORD ſtood in a path of the vineyards, a wall being on this ſide, and a wall on that ſide.

25 And when the aſs ſaw the Angel of the LORD, ſhe thruſt herſelf unto the wall, and cruſhed Balaam's foot againſt the wall; and he ſmote her again.

26 And the Angel of the LORD went further and ſtood in a narrow place, where was no way to turn, either to the right hand or to the left.

27 And when the aſs ſaw the Angel of the LORD, ſhe fell down under Balaam: and Balaam's anger was kindled, and he ſmote the aſs with a ſtaff.

28 And the LORD opened the mouth of the aſs, and ſhe ſaid unto Balaam, What have I done unto thee, that thou haſt ſmitten me theſe three times?

29 And Balaam ſaid unto the aſs, Becauſe thou haſt mocked me: I would there were a ſword in mine hand, for now would I kill thee.

30 And the aſs ſaid unto Balaam, Am not I thine aſs, upon which thou haſt ridden ever ſince I was thine, unto this day? was I ever wont to do ſo unto thee? And he ſaid, Nay.

31 Then the LORD opened the eyes of Balaam, and he ſaw the Angel of the LORD ſtanding in the way, and his ſword drawn in his hand: and he bowed down his head, and fell flat on his face.

32 And the Angel of the LORD ſaid unto him, Wherefore haſt thou ſmitten thine aſs theſe three times? Behold, I went out to withſtand thee, becauſe thy way is perverſe before me.

33 And the aſs ſaw me, and turned from me theſe three times: unleſs ſhe had turned from me, ſurely now alſo I had ſlain thee, and ſaved her alive.

34 And Balaam ſaid unto the Angel of the LORD, I have ſinned; for I knew not that thou ſtoodeſt in the way againſt me: now therefore, if it diſpleaſe thee, I will get me back again.

35 And the Angel of the LORD ſaid unto Balaam, Go with the men: but only the word that I ſhall ſpeak unto thee, that thou ſhalt ſpeak. So Balaam went with the princes of Balak.

inexcuſable, as he could already afford to travel with two ſervants attending him. Probably the princes of Moab were gone before to prepare matters for his reception.

V. 23—27.] Balaam's eyes being holden that he could not ſee the Angel, nor the danger which were made viſible to the aſs, was an emblem of the blindneſs of his mind to that imminent and evident peril, into which he was ruſhing by this preſumptuous undertaking. Surely all the circumſtances of this occurrence ſhould have induced him to have conſidered, whether he were in the right way or not!

V. 28. What, &c.] The faculty of ſpeech in man is the gift of God, and we cannot comprehend how we ourſelves articulate: we need not therefore be ſurpriſed that the Lord made uſe of the mouth of the "aſs to rebuke "the madneſs of the prophet," (1 Peter, ii. 16,) and to ſhame him by the reproof and by the example of the brute. Satan ſpake to Eve by a ſubtle ſerpent; but the Lord choſe to ſpeak to Balaam by a dull aſs: for he does not uſe the enticing words of man's wiſdom, but works by inſtruments and means which men deſpiſe.

V. 29. And, &c.] Balaam in his paſſion ſeems not to have noticed the miracle of the aſs's ſpeaking, or to have been the more enraged by that extraordinary event.

V. 30. Am not I, &c.] Thus the Lord reaſoned with Balaam by the mouth of the aſs; and, by reminding him of his property in the animal and benefit from her, and that ſhe had not been accuſtomed ſo to behave, he taught him that his conduct was very abſurd, and prepared the way for a more full diſcovery of his wickedneſs. It muſt have been peculiarly humiliating to this proud man, who boaſted "of his eyes being open, and of ſeeing the viſions of the "Almighty," to be reproved and ſilenced from the mouth of a brute! As the Lord both appeared to the aſs, and ſpake by her, before Balaam was enabled to ſee the viſion; he had little reaſon to plume himſelf, that the Lord appeared to and ſpake by him.

V. 32. Thy way is perverſe before me.] From this expreſſion; and from the language of the thirty-fifth verſe; "the word that I ſhall ſpeak unto thee," we may be fully ſatisfied that this was the Angel of the Lord's preſence, the Angel of the covenant, the ſecond perſon in the Trinity, viſibly appearing on this occaſion; (Note Exod. iii. 2.)

V. 34. If it, &c.] Though Balaam acknowledged that he had ſinned; yet he excuſed himſelf as ignorant that any oppoſition was made to him. He does not appear after all to have been convinced of his wickedneſs in this undertaking: and it was with heſitation that he propoſed to return; namely, if he might not proceed except at the hazard of his life. (Iſ. lvii. 17.)—So reluctant was he to 35 And when Balak heard that Balaam was come, he went out to meet him unto a city of Moab, which is in the border of Arnon, which is in the utmost coast.

37 And Balak said unto Balaam, Did I not earnestly send unto thee to call thee? wherefore camest thou not unto me? am I not able indeed to promote thee to honour?

38 And Balaam said unto Balak, Lo, I am come unto thee: have I now any power at all to say any thing? the word that God putteth in my mouth, that shall I speak.

39 And Balaam went with Balak, and they came unto Kirjath-huzoth.

40 and Balak offered oxen and sheep, and sent to Balaam, and to the princes that were with him.

41 And it came to pass on the morrow, that Balak give up the wages of unrighteousness! He was therefore again permitted to follow his own foolish devices.

V. 36. And, &c.] Balak went as far as the borders of his land to meet Balaam, that he might testify his respect to him, and welcome him into his kingdom.

V. 38. Have I, &c.?] Balaam's language plainly indicated his approbation of the project, and his readiness to concur in it; and betrayed his strong desire of succeeding; though he feared he should not be able.—In short he was determined to do all that he durst venture on, in order to perform the work and earn the wages; if he failed, it would be for want of power, not for want of a willing mind: accordingly we find that he at last perished in the attempt. He seems even made a merit of coming to Balak, through the midst of so much opposition.

V. 40. And Balak offered, &c.] It is probable that these sacrifices were offered to some of the gods of Moab, by whose aid Balak hoped to prevail over Israel through Balaam's incantations: for he was not yet aware of Balaam's project of drawing over the God of Israel to their side; and he therefore propitiated his idols, and invited Balaam, with the princes of Moab, to feast upon the sacrifice. (xxiii. 27.)

V. 41. On the morrow, &c.] Without loss of time the heathen king and the covetous prophet went to work; and Balak took Balaam to the high places where Baal was worshiped, that he might both take a view of the whole camp of Israel, and curse them by his gods. (1. Sam. xvii. 43.)

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.

Our life is a succession of wanderings which will shortly close upon the brink of the grave: happy they who have an inheritance in the Canaan beyond! with comfort may they sit down on the banks of that Jordan which rolls between, and with composure wait the Lord's call to pass over and possess the promised land.—But the ungodly "are "often consumed with terrors;" though more generally afraid of "them who can only kill the body, than of him "who is able to destroy both body and soul in hell."—The prosperity of the church, instead of inducing sinners to seek a share in it's privileges and felicity, generally excites their envy, hatred, and terror, and stirs up the spirit of opposition and persecution: but the crafty methods, which ungodly politicians take to secure themselves, generally involve them in more speedy ruin.—That propensity to religion, which results from reason and conscience, and the corrupted remains of tradition, is, through the depravity of our nature and the power of Satan, generally productive of absurd superstitions and abominable idolatries; by means of which that ambitious spirit is worshipped, consulted, and depended on for information and assistance; his ministers are caressed and honoured; and his ordinances attended on with immense degradation, trouble, and expence. Great knowledge of doctrinal truth may fill the mind, many convictions may disquiet the conscience, and excellent words may proceed from the lips, of very wicked men: but the smallest degree of sanctifying grace is infinitely preferable to the most shining talents, or the most splendid gifts of knowledge, utterance, and eloquence; yea to those of prophecy and miracles; by which wicked men have sometimes become more extensively mischievous, more illustriously infamous, more heinously criminal, and more exquisitely miserable.—Let us then covet earnestly and diligently that best gift of divine love, which springs from, and is connected with, faith and hope, which never faileth but shall endure for ever.—If we have learned to lay up our treasure in heaven, and to seek that honour which cometh from God only, and to be content with food and raiment; and if covetousness, ambition, and sensuality be deeply mortified within us, we shall have little to hope or fear from man, and shall be greatly removed out of the way of temptation.—But as there is so much remaining of these evils in the heart; we all have reason to dread and shun those connections which almost every one covets; I mean the connections of ungodly men, who are able to promote us to honour and affluence.—These are especially dangerous to such as are called to speak in the name of the Lord: for by their influence, by making fair promises, exciting large expectations, and shewing great kindness and flattering respect, they prevail with many to sacrifice conscience, judgment, character, and the fear of God, to their humour and inclination; and to flatter and countenance their sinful practices.—The attraction is almost irresistible, the heart is deceitful, and who, that values his soul and knows himself, would venture into such a perilous situation?—Therefore "avoid them, pass not near "them, turn from them, and pass away."—But there have always been many who loved the wages of unrighteousness, and paid their court to those who could bid the highest and reward the best. Some of this character act the hypocrite, and ostentatiously avow their knowledge of and intimacy with the Lord, to cloke their wicked intentions: nay, they in this manner deceive themselves; calling "the Lord their God," whilst they neither keep his commandments nor seek his salvation.—These men do not hate sin, and they love it's wages, they mistake gain for godliness, and covetousness for wisdom. Fear restrains them for a time from those outward crimes which inwardly they are desirous of committing; and this restraint they mistake for conscientiousness. Convictions struggle struggle against temptations, though overcome by them, and this they mistake for the conflict between flesh and spirit.—But they parley with the enemy, and nibble at the bait; they seek excuses, and watch for opportunities; they wrest the Scriptures, explain away the prohibition or threatening, or hunt out for some evasion; and even seem to crave leave to commit their darling sin.—Thus they provoke God to give them up to their own hearts' lusts; satan is permitted to increase the force of the temptation; some providence is misinterpreted into a favourable indication; and, by the ingenuity of a wicked heart, aided and prompted by the enemy, they at length find some method of expecting impunity in following their own wicked inclinations.—When persons are once judicially given over to a strong delusion to believe a lie, all their boasted knowledge and wisdom fail them; and they are left to form such dishonourable notions of God, such erroneous opinions in religion, and such absurd projects in practice, as evidence their folly and ignorance, as much as they expose their desperate wickedness. Nor does this appear more surprising in any thing, than in their strong confidence that the Lord favours them, and their presumptuous hope that he will side with them, notwithstanding the manifest iniquity of their conduct.—But the Lord knows how to restrain the most desperate, and over-rule all to his glory and the good of his church.—By the way, as well as at the end of their course, he will manifest himself to be their adversary: and though they are not convinced, but rush through every hindrance to the gratification of their ungoverned lusts, these obstructions will one day rise up in judgment against them to their confusion; and every check, which stopped the sinner's career for a time, but hindered not his return to sin and continuance in it, will increase his final condemnation.—Such is man's folly and madness, that, with all his boasted powers, he may be sent to school to the most stupid of the animals: for though God hath formed us wiser than the beasts of the field; sin hath made us more foolish; and the conduct of the ox and the ass towards their possessors, yea their inhuman abusers, forms a continued though silent reproach of our forgetfulness of God, of our ingratitude, and rebellion; and may lead us to conceive in what language they might address us, and how they might plead the cause of their Creator, and their own cause, against us, to our shame and confusion, if the Lord should open their mouths! How might they reproach multitudes with their abuse of God's gift, in the cruel tyranny exercised upon them! with their senseless anger vented in oaths and curses, revilings and unmerciful blows furiously bestowed upon a brute beast, even to their own loss! How might they expose man's cruelty to his own species, yea to his own soul and body; and his excessive animal indulgence, as if his understanding only served him to invent methods of being more exquisitely a brute, by refining in gratification!—Little cause then have we to be proud of our reason, which preserves us not from such absurd and destructive excesses; or of the faculty of speech which is so shamefully abused: and it may serve to abate our self-admiration to reflect, that if God pleases, he can make a dull ass see further, and speak better, than any of us. Let us then watch and pray against these dishonourable and unreasonable passions; and listen to the voice of God, as speaking to us by all the creatures with which we are surrounded.—The people of God are in general but little aware of the machinations which are forming against them; whilst all the policy and power on earth, and in hell are combined for their destruction. Yet they need not fear: "for he that keepeth Israel neither slumbereth "nor sleepeth."—The Lord sees through every plot, and holds every heart in his hand: "no weapon formed against "his church shall prosper." (Isaiah, liv. 17.) He restrains, intimidates, and infatuates, as he pleases.—He hath blessed true believers, and of him alone it can be said, "He, whom thou blessest is blessed, and he whom thou "cursest is cursed."—Let us then cast our lot among them, and then we shall be safe and happy; "for if God be for "us, who can be against us?" "O Lord God of hosts "blessed is the man, who trusteth in thee!" O give us true faith, and increase it more and more!

NOTES.

CHAP. XXIII.] V. 1, 2.] The last verse of the foregoing chapter should have formed the beginning of this. Upon the high places consecrated to Baal, with the camps of Israel full in view, Balaam ordered seven altars to be built, and a bullock and a ram to be offered upon each; for a sacrifice to the God of Israel; as it is evident from the whole history. He had heard that Israel had a single altar, on which they offered bullocks and rams, and were accepted in so doing: he therefore foolishly fancied, that by outdoing them in the number of altars and sacrifices, the Moabites might gain the ascendency in the favour of Jehovah, draw him over to their side, and obtain leave to curse and destroy Israel. (2 Kings xviii. 22. Psal. l. 9. 13—21.)—With great obsequiousness Balak complied with his expensive demands.

V. 3. Peradventure, &c.] The Lord had before met Balaam in anger: but having offered such costly sacrifices, the selfish prophet now hoped that he would countenance his design; thy burnt-offering, and I will go: peradventure the LORD will come to meet me: and whatsoever he sheweth me I will tell thee. And he went to an high place.

4 And God met Balaam: and he said unto him, I have prepared seven altars, and I have offered upon every altar a bullock and a ram.

5 And the LORD put a word in Balaam's mouth, and said, Return unto Balak, and thus thou shalt speak.

6 And he returned unto him: and, lo, he stood by his burnt-sacrifice, he, and all the princes of Moab.

7 And he took up his parable, and said, Balak the king of Moab hath brought me from Aram, out of the mountains of the east, saying, Come, curse me Jacob; and come, defy Israel.

8 How shall I curse, whom God hath not cursed? or how shall I defy, whom the LORD hath not defied?

9 For from the top of the rocks I see him, and from the hills I behold him: lo, the people shall dwell alone, and shall not be reckoned among the nations.

10 Who can count the dust of Jacob, and the number of the fourth part of Israel? Let me die the death of the righteous, and let my last end be like his!

design; yet conscious guilt rendered him doubtful, and caused him to insert a peradventure.—Probably Balaam used some incantations in his retirement to obtain a favourable meeting from the Lord, such as he had formerly employed in his soothsayings; (23. xxiv. 1.)—Formal converts very frequently interweave their superstitious, philosophical, or carnal notions, with the truths, ordinances, and precepts of God; and from this source almost all the corruptions of the Christian religion have been deduced.

V. 4. God met, &c.] The Lord had many important ends in view, in meeting and speaking to this wicked man, notwithstanding the unwarranted method in which he sought him; such as the encouragement and admonition of Israel, and of his church in all ages; the warning of their enemies; and the discovery of those depths of wickedness which are in man's heart.—And Balaam, instead of being humbled for his atrocious wickedness, boasted of his great services, and deemed it highly meritorious in him, that he had prevailed on Balak to offer so many and such costly sacrifices to the Lord; though they were not offered at his expence. But he was blind indeed, notwithstanding his boasts, (xxiv. 3, 4,) to suppose that the God of heaven would be pleased with sacrifices offered in hypocrisy, without any regard to the meaning of such services, or any repentance, faith, love, and obedience; but merely from covetousness and malice, with an intention of cursing and destroying his people! (Notes &c. 1 Sam. xv. 21—23. Prov. xv. 8, 9. John, xvi. 2.)

V. 7. He took, &c.] Balaam began his speech with some circumlocutory introduction, and in such a style as was used in prophecy, which approached to the language of poetry. But the Lord, probably by filling his heart with the dread of his power and wrath, constrained him reluctantly to pronounce blessings on his people. He that opened the mouth of the ass, guided the mouth of this wicked man to speak words as contrary to the habitual desires of his heart, as those of the ass were superior to the powers of the brute: and when we duly advert to the temper of the speaker; we shall perceive that the Lord spake by Balaam as entirely as by the ass; that the divine power was as really and effectually put forth in the former as in the latter case; and that Balaam had no more to glory in, than the animal, but much indeed to be ashamed of.

V. 8. Defy, &c.] Balaam was sent for from Aram, or Mesopotamia, to curse Israel, and thus disdainfully to set them at defiance: and he confessed that he came with that intention. Had he been allowed to do it, Balak also would have defied them, and have made war upon them. (Notes, &c. 2 Sam. xvii. 10 43—45.) But, as the Lord had not cursed and defied them; (that is, had not rejected them, or determined to treat them as enemies;) he would not allow Balaam to curse them; though the curse causeless could have done them no hurt, and would have deceived and hardened Balak. But he was pleased to guide Balaam's tongue to bear a most honourable testimony to his perfections and the felicity of his people.

V. 9. Shall dwell alone, &c.] Beholding the regular encampment of the Israelites in the wilderness, separate from other people, Balaam was led to speak language, not only suited to that situation, but to the peculiar favour shewn them, and their separation from other nations, by their laws, religion, and character as a holy people; in all which they were a type of true Christians.

10 Who can count the dust of Jacob, and the number of the fourth part of Israel? Let me die the death of the righteous, and let my last end be like his!

V. 10. The dust, &c.] The multitudes of the Israelites were innumerable as the particles of the dust, according to the promises made to their fathers; (Gen. xiii. 16. xxviii. 14.) Even the fourth part of them, or one of their four grand encampments, could not be numbered.

Let me die, &c.] Balaam spoke the words of God, yet not without some understanding of their meaning, and some conviction of their truth; and we may consider this as an important ancient testimony to the doctrines of the immortality of the soul, and of a future state of retributions. He not only bore testimony to the temporal felicity of Israel; but to their character also as a righteous people, accepted of God: and he was led to acknowledge that they, who are truly righteous, are happy in death and beyond it.—That calmness, with which the true believer expects and submits to the stroke of death; that hope full of immortality, which supports him at the solemn season; that prospect of eternal felicity in another world in which he rejoices, and which he recommends to others, 11 And Balak said unto Balaam, What hast thou done unto me? I took thee to curse mine enemies, and, behold, thou hast blessed them altogether!

12 And he answered and said, Must I not take heed to speak that which the LORD hath put in my mouth?

13 And Balak said unto him, Come, I pray thee, with me unto another place, from whence thou mayest see them: thou shalt see but the utmost part of them, and shalt not see them all: and curse me them from thence.

14 And he brought him into the field of Zophim, to the top of Pisgah, and built seven altars, and offered a bullock and a ram on every altar.

15 And he said unto Balak, Stand here by thy burnt-offering, while I meet the LORD yonder.

16 And the LORD met Balaam, and put a word in his mouth, and said, Go again unto Balak, and say thus.

17 And when he came to him, behold, he stood by his burnt-offering, and the princes of Moab with him. And Balak said unto him, What hath the LORD spoken?

18 And he took up his parable, and said, Rise up, Balak, and hear; hearken unto me; thou son of Zippor.

19 God is not a man, that he should lie; neither the son of man, that he should repent: hath he said, and shall he not do it? or hath he spoken, and shall he not make it good?

20 Behold, I have received commandment to bless; and he hath blessed, and I cannot reverse it.

21 He hath not beheld iniquity in Jacob, neither others, render his latter end desirable in the judgment even of those wicked people, who are not devoid of convictions respecting a future judgment, are checked in their sinful pursuits with fears of eternal misery, and would be glad of such a deliverance from the horror of dying in sin, and sinking into hell, if it could be obtained in a less humiliating and self denying way. They wish, they hope, and in some sense they intend, to die the death of the righteous: but the love of wealth, honour, or pleasure, in one form or other, prevents their acting according to their convictions, and living the life of the righteous. They therefore procrastinate, and quiet their consciences with the hope of future amendment: or they take up with some false confidence, some superficial reformation or external change; or, in the pride of their hearts, they neglect and despise that only way of salvation, by which a sinner can be righteous before God. Thus many, who have wished to die the death of the righteous, live impenitent and perish in sin, as Balaam did.

V. 11. Curse, &c.] The Israelites were not enemies to Balak or the Moabites, who without cause were enemies unto them: but, as it is common in such cases, they construed their own malice into enmity on the side of Israel. For they who are enslaved to pride and malice scarcely ever forgive those whom they have injured!

V. 12. Must I not, &c.] Balaam attempted to make a merit of necessity; and when he was constrained against his habitual inclination to bless Israel, he would be thought very obedient to the Lord in so doing.—Yet after he had declared that God had not cursed them, and he could not, he persisted in his endeavour, foolishly hoping that the Lord would be induced to change his mind! Probably he was encouraged in this expectation, by recollecting, that he had got leave to come at the second time, though it had been refused him at the first: for God's patience emboldens men's wickedness.

V. 13. Thou shalt, &c.] Balak seems to have thought that Balaam's mind was indisposed for cursing Israel, by seeing their numerous and orderly encampments all at once; he therefore hoped to prevail in cursing one division first, against which he probably intended to commence hostilities.

V. 19. God is, &c.] Men are deceitful in promising, changeable, and easily induced to revoke their engagements, or unable to fulfil them. On the contrary the Lord is perfectly sincere, faithful, unchangeable, almighty: and though, after the manner of man, he is said to repent of the kindness that he has shewn, when his creatures by ingratitude provoke him to withhold his bounty; and of his judgments denounced against sinners, when they repent, or when in answer to the prayers of his servants he delays the execution of them: yet in the grand event of things it will be found that every promise and engagement made to believers was exactly accomplished, and all his threatenings to unbelievers fully and finally executed.—This declaration by the mouth of Balaam had a peculiar reference to the state of Israel: God had absolutely determined to bless them as a nation, and as a type of true believers; he had plainly declared his purpose, and Balaam had with hesitation intimated it to Balak. Yet they were seeking to bribe or to tease him, (if I may so speak,) to alter his mind and revoke his word. But Balaam was at length constrained to bear testimony against himself, and to proclaim the madness, folly, and wickedness of his undertaking.

V. 20. I cannot, &c.] Balaam still continued to manifest his inclination to earn his wages if possible; but "he had received to bless," (the word commandment is not in the original;) for blessings on Israel were so put into his mouth, that he could not help pronouncing them, and he could not reverse them.

V. 21. He hath, &c.] The former national sins of Israel were atoned for and pardoned: the people were not at that time guilty of idolatry or rebellion; but were in a very neither hath he seen perverseness in Israel: the LORD his God is with him, and the shout of a king is among them.

22 God brought them out of Egypt: he hath as it were the strength of an unicorn.

23 Surely there is no inchantment against Jacob, neither is there any divination against Israel: according to this time it shall be said of Jacob and of Israel, What hath God wrought!

24 Behold, the people shall rise up as a great lion, and lift up himself as a young lion: he shall not lie down until he eat of the prey, and drink the blood of the slain.

25 And Balak said unto Balaam, Neither curse them at all, nor bless them at all.

26 But Balaam answered and said unto Balak, Told not I thee, saying, All that the LORD speaketh, that I must do?

27 And Balak said unto Balaam, Come, I pray thee, I will bring thee into another place; peradventure it will please God that thou mayest curse me them from thence.

28 And Balak brought Balaam unto the top of Peor, that looketh toward Jeshimon.

29 And Balaam said unto Balak, build me here seven altars, and prepare me here seven bullocks and seven rams.

30 And Balak did as Balaam had said, and offered a bullock and a ram on every altar.

very obedient disposition, had much true religion among them, and were comparatively righteous. Thus the true believer is fully pardoned and accepted, and really sanctified and obedient: in him the Lord beholds not iniquity, or perverseness; none allowed, none unsubdued, none unpardoned.

The shout, &c.] The Lord God, as reigning over his people, protecting them, and leading them forth to war, was among them; of whose power they had had such experience, (22,) that they were inspired with triumphant confidence in him; and at his word were ready to shout for the battle, and attack their enemies with assurance of success.

V. 23. Surely, &c.] It is taken for granted by this language, that satan was allowed to exercise some power in answer to the expectations of those who used inchantments. But Israel was so immediately under the divine protection, that nothing of this kind could injure them.—Balaam mentions their safety and his own impotency, with the same apparent regret, that satan mentioned the hedge which the Lord had made about Job. (Job i. 10.)—The favour at that time shewn to Israel was a specimen of the protection always afforded the people of God; the remembrance of which would encourage the faith and inspire the praises of future ages; whilst with admiration they would consider what God had wrought.

V. 24. Behold, &c.] At length Balaam not only pronounced blessings on Israel, but likewise denounced the doom of all their enemies; which might have been a warning to Balak, and to himself also, to desist from their vain and perilous attempt. (xxiv. 17.)

V. 29. And Balaam said, &c.] Not being yet willing to give up all hopes of succeeding.

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.

Proud and wicked men spare no pains, and grudge no expence, when they imagine that they can purchase God's favour, or induce him to concur in, or connive at, their mischievous designs. And such is the ignorance of God, of his law, and of true godliness, incident to human nature, that multitudes persist themselves, and find teachers to encourage them, in these vain attempts of obtaining the favour of God, without mortifying their lusts, or humbling themselves before him; who in return have their covetousness gratified by such pupils and for such instructions!—Mere Pharisees have frequently exceeded God's own people in the measure of external services, and in the degree of partial mortification; and not knowing of any thing more excellent in religion, they are thus confirmed in self-confidence and self-preference; they "trust in "themselves that they are righteous, and despise others"; and even boast of their doings, as if they had made God their debtor, at the very time when their hearts are full of malice and wickedness! (Isai. lviii. 2, 3. Luke xviii. 1, 2.) But God abhors pompous externals and self-imposed services, nay even the most zealous attendance on his own ordinances, whilst the heart remains destitute of humility, repentance, faith, and love to him and to his people; and still more, when the devotion is a mere cloke of hypocrisy to cover the most unjust and oppressive intentions.—The spiritual worship of his servants, though less shewy, is of a more excellent kind; a broken and contrite, a believing and thankful, a pure and upright heart, are more suitable to his nature, and more precious in his sight, than "thou-"sands of rams, and ten thousands of rivers of oil."—As they are a people peculiarly favoured, so are they peculiarly characterised: they "dwell alone," they are despised by, and they pity, the surrounding multitudes, who separate them from their company, and with whom they desire no fellowship: their maxims, customs, laws, and conduct are dissimilar from those of all other men: their inheritance, their home, their citizenship are in heaven; their affections, conversation, pursuits, and pleasures are heavenly: and whilst they are deemed the filth of the world, and the off-scouring of all things, and not fit to live; the Lord accounts them the excellent of the earth, of whom the world is not worthy. Though they are few in every place, when compared with the ungodly, they are very numerous in the whole; may the Lord multiply them an hundred fold, how many soever they be! Though despised by those who know them not, yet they attract the reverence even of such wicked men as are acquainted with them, but it is often accompanied with hatred and resentment. (Mark vi. 17—20.) Many of this description, while they espouse an opposite interest, and lead a contrary life life, through the power of domineering lusts, and prevailing temptations, secretly account the righteous happy; and wish to have their lot with them at death, and in the eternal world: but in vain; for can they, who in defiance of their own convictions choose to serve satan and their sins in this world, reasonably expect to be numbered with the saints in glory everlasting? There are indeed a mixt multitude, who attend the camp, whom satan and his servants do not honour with their hatred or opposition, but despise and only despise, as suspecting no harm to the cause from either their example, influence, or endeavours. But let not such mere professors deem themselves interested in those precious privileges, which belong to the true Israel of God.—Notwithstanding disappointments and convictions, the lusts of wicked men will revive and reign: for whilst some, who persecute the cause of God, are pushed forward by implacable malice and envy, others are induced to concur by insatiable avarice and restless ambition; and through mean unworthy thoughts of God, they flatter themselves, that, by altering their measures, they shall either prevail with him to change, or they shall frustrate his counsels. "But he is of one mind, who can turn him?" (Job, xxiii. 13, 14.) He will infallibly perform his kindest largest promises to his people; and execute his most terrible denunciations upon the multitude of his inveterate enemies. And whilst earth and hell combine their power and policy to prevent it, "the Lord sitteth in the heavens,—hath them in derision," and will soon "speak "to them in his wrath, and vex them in his sore displea-"sure." (Notes, Psalm ii. 1—6.) Nor will the most costly sacrifices prevail with him, any more than the most powerful armaments can force him, to renounce the protection of his people, or to retard the execution of vengeance upon his enemies. Let believers then rejoice in, and sinners tremble at, his unchangeableness, his truth, and power. Let none flatter themselves with the hope of impunity in sin; but let all take warning to flee from the wrath to come, to give diligence to make their calling and election sure, and to abide under the shadow of the Almighty.—If the Lord sees that we trust in his mercy and accept of his salvation; that we indulge no secret lust, and continue not in any presumptuous rebellion, but uprightly endeavour to serve and glorify him: we may be sure that he looks upon us as accepted in Christ; and that our sins are all pardoned and buried in the depths of the sea, no more to hurt us than if they had never been committed. If this be our case, the Lord hath blessed us, and hath given commandment to bless us; and he will never suffer it to be reversed: and if satan cannot prevail to deceive us, or defile us, he cannot have us by inchantments or constrain-ons, by inchantments or divinations. Having all hearts and tongues in his hand, the Lord can not only restrain the malice of our enemies, but constrain them to speak well of us, and do well to us; to confess their impotency, to condemn themselves, and to foretel their own misery with their own mouth; (even while they madly persist in their destructive opposition!) and to acknowledge with reluctant admiration the work of God for us and in us.—Well then may the believer triumph in his King the Lord of Hosts, and re-echo with grateful exultation, "What hath God wrought!" Oh the wonders of his providence and grace! The wonders of his redeeming love, of his pardoning mercy, of his new-creating Spirit! What a change in our state, our character, and our prospects!! Every former mercy now becomes an earnest of still further blessings; and from past deliverances, we may infer the certainty of final victory and eternal triumphs. Thus shall every true believer; thus shall the whole church of God, be unto him for a name, and for a praise; whilst with their eyes they shall behold the destruction of the wicked.—But is this the reader's character and felicity? Let us seriously examine ourselves, and earnestly pray the Lord to decide this infinitely important question. To this let us aspire; this let us pursue with unremitting diligence, and undiverted attention: let us watch and pray always, for our enemies are vigilant, indefatigable, and malicious: and surely we ought to be as unwearied in glorifying God, and doing good to his people, and to all men, as his enemies are in their mischievous endeavours. Even Balaam's retirement to meet the Lord; and Balak's assiduous attention to his burnt-sacrifices, and rising up to hear the message from God, may furnish us with profitable hints, if we apply them to ourselves, in our pursuits of nobler objects, from higher motives, and for other purposes.

NOTES.

CHAP. XXIV.] V. 1. When, &c.] Balaam had been constrained to return from his retirement and inchantments, with answers the very reverse of his wishes and intentions: he therefore deemed it to no purpose to repeat them. But it is not agreed among expositors, nor is it easy to decide, whether in desperate rebellion he determined to curse Israel without asking leave, and thus to satisfy Balak, and earn his reward, but was forcibly restrained by the Lord and constrained to pronounce further blessings: or whether under a pang of conviction he desisted from his purpose for the present, and freely yielded himself to the inward impulse of the Spirit of God in blessing Israel, though he afterwards returned to his wicked projects.

V. 3, 4.] The words in the third verse rendered,

"subsist-

God, which saw the vision of the Almighty, falling into a trance, but having his eyes open:

5 How goodly are thy tents, O Jacob! and thy tabernacles, O Israel!

6 As the valleys are they spread forth, as gardens by the river's side, as the trees of lign-aloes which the LORD hath planted, and as cedar-trees beside the waters.

7 He shall pour the water out of his buckets, and his seed shall be in many waters, and his king shall be higher than Agag, and his kingdom shall be exalted.

8 God brought him forth out of Egypt; he hath as it were the strength of an unicorn: he shall eat up the nations his enemies, and shall break their bones, and pierce them through with his arrows.

9 He couched, he lay down as a lion, and as a great lion: who shall stir him up? Blessed is he that blesseth thee, and cursed is he that curseth thee.

10 And Balak's anger was kindled against Balaam, and he smote his hands together: and Balak said unto Balaam, I called thee to curse mine enemies, and, behold, thou hast altogether blessed them these three times.

11 Therefore now flee thou to thy place: I thought to promote thee unto great honour, but, lo, the LORD hath kept thee back from honour.

12 And Balaam said unto Balak, Spake I not also to thy messengers, which thou sentest unto me, saying, 13 If Balak would give me his house full of silver and gold, I cannot go beyond the commandment of the LORD, to do either good or bad of mine own mind: but what the LORD saith, that will I speak?

14 And now, behold, I go unto my people: come, therefore, and I will advertise thee what this people shall do to thy people in the latter days.

"whose eyes were open," are generally allowed to mean, "whose eyes were shut," or closed: whilst those in the fourth verse mean, "whose eyes were opened." Balaam's eyes had been shut, but were at length opened: shut, when he thought of cursing Israel, but now opened to perceive that they were blessed: or his bodily eyes were shut, whilst those of his understanding were opened. He is supposed to have referred to the time, when his eyes were holden, that he saw not the angel, until the ass fell down with him; (xxiii. 27—31;) when his eyes were opened, and he fell flat on the earth. For the words into a trance are not in the original, and the passage runs thus: "he saw the vision of the Almighty, falling, but having "his eyes opened." But, whatever be the exact meaning of the words, they savour of ostentation; and the pure language of the Spirit of God seems to have been polluted, as it were, by the filthy vessel through which it passed.—Balaam's visions and revelation exalted him above measure; and he appears to have courted admiration, when he was not able to obtain the riches he coveted.

V. 6. As, &c.] As valleys verdant, fruitful, and widely extended; as luxuriant well cultured gardens on the banks of some fertilizing river; as aromatic trees diffusing a fragrant smell, or cedars most stately and comely to behold, planted as it were by God's own hand, in the most advantageous situation, and not needing or receiving any human culture: such did the camps of Israel appear, and such would be their fruitfulness and prosperity.

V. 7. He shall pour, &c.] That is, 'God shall water 'Israel abundantly with heavenly blessings; and as seed 'sown in a well watered place, their multitudes shall 'increase still more and more.'

And his king, &c.] Agag seems to have been the name of the several kings of Amalek in succession. That nation was at this time very powerful, and their king very renowned and prosperous: but it was here foretold, that Israel should in due time be governed by more prosperous princes, who should overcome the Amalekites. This was fulfilled in the time of Saul, who seems to have been especially predicted.

V. 8. He hath, &c.] That is, 'God hath given Israel 'that strength, which makes him as formidable to his ene-'mies, as the rhinoceros,' (for that animal is supposed to be meant,) 'is to the beasts of the forest.'

V. 9. He couched, &c.] (Note, Gen. xlix. 9.)—Israel is here represented as powerful yet disposed to peace, magnanimous but generous, not prompt to injure others yet fearless of them; but woe to him that should awake this sleeping lion

Blessed is he, &c.] (Gen. xii. 3. xxvii. 29.) Perhaps Balaam hoped at last to share the blessedness of Israel, by thus blessing them: but he did it reluctantly, not out of love but by constraint, and therefore he was not included. This however was a prophecy of Israel's successes under their most prosperous kings; and of the spiritual prosperity, and felicity of the church of Christ, and all it's cordial friends; and it implied a solemn warning to all their enemies, from Balak, and Balaam himself, down to their latest successors, to desist from such an unequal perilous contest.

V. 10, 11.] Balak was at length enraged to the greatest degree, and expressed his indignation in the most furious manner: and, not without a mixture of scorn and disdain of Balaam, for having missed so fair a prospect of advancing himself, out of regard to the God of Israel, he dismissed him from his presence.

V. 13. That will I, &c.] Balaam had repeatedly confessed his inability to go beyond the word of the Lord: but here he appears disposed not only to vindicate his conduct

15 And he took up his parable, and said, Balaam the son of Beor hath said, and the man whose eyes are open hath said;

16 He hath said, which heard the words of God, and knew the knowledge of the most High, which saw the vision of the Almighty, falling into a trance, but having his eyes open:

17 I shall see him, but not now; I shall behold him, but not nigh: there shall come a Star out of Jacob, and a Sceptre shall rise out of Israel, and shall smite the corners of Moab, and destroy all the children of Sheth.

18 And Edom shall be a possession: Seir also shall be a possession for his enemies; and Israel shall do valiantly.

19 Out of Jacob shall come he that shall have dominion, and shall destroy him that remaineth of the city.

20 And when he looked on Amalek, he took up his parable, and said, Amalek was the first of the nations, but his latter end shall be that he perish for ever.

21 And he looked on the Kenites; and took up his parable, and said, Strong is thy dwelling-place, and thou puttest thy nest in a rock;

22 Nevertheless, the Kenite shall be wasted, until Asshur shall carry thee away captive.

23 And he took up his parable, and said, Alas! who shall live when God doeth this?

24 And ships shall come from the coast of Chittim, and shall afflict Asshur, and shall afflict conduct to Balak, as having never engaged to curse Israel; but also to put a favourable construction upon the whole affair, as if from the first he had not had any great inclination to the attempt, but had only waited to know the Lord's will and obediently to perform it.

V. 6. Knew, &c.] Balaam spake with increasing confidence of the revelations with which he was favoured: and though similar words were used by the true prophets, (2 Sam. xxiii. 1—3.) yet from so wicked a man they have an air of ostentation. "The secret of the Lord is "with them that fear him;" but Balaam had little reason to boast of his knowledge of God and heavenly things.

V. 17, There, &c.] David himself, as swaying the sceptre over all Israel with great reputation, and as gaining considerable victories over the Moabites and others, (2 Sam. viii. Psal. lx.;) and the kings of his race as ruling over Judah, and still further subjugating the Moabites and neighbouring nations, may here be intended.—But the prophecy must have its full accomplishment in the kingdom and spiritual victories of Jesus Christ. Some suppose that by Sheth the ancestor of a Moabitish tribe is meant, and this opinion seems most natural: others however think that Seth the son of Adam, and the progenitor of the whole postdeluvian world, is intended. If this latter be the meaning, the sense must be, that Christ should establish his dominion over the whole human race, either as willing subjects, or as conquered enemies sentenced to destruction. This prophecy was uttered almost 1500 years before Christ; so that Balaam was enabled to penetrate into futurity, and to predict the coming of the Saviour: he saw, that though the Messiah was not at that time visible, he would at length be manifested; and though his Advent was not near, it would certainly arrive. Some suppose that he also dolefully foreboded his own doom in these words; and looked forward to the consummation of all things, when he should behold the Lord Jesus, as his offended Judge, and not as a loving Saviour. It is also thought that the tradition of this star predicted by Balaam, being disseminated through the East, prepared the way for the wise men following the star which appeared at the birth of Christ. Even the Jewish writers allow this prophecy to relate to the Messiah.

V. 18, 19.] The victories of the house of David are here foretold, as typical of the triumphs of David's Son, who shall destroy all, "that will not have him to reign over "them," however they may attempt to secure themselves.

V. 20. The first, &c.] The Amalekites were one of the most ancient and prosperous of the nations; and they were the first who attacked the Israelites. This prophecy was accomplished by Saul and David, after whose days, there appear but few vestiges of that once flourishing people.—(1 Chron. iv. 43.)

V. 21, 22.] As Jethro a Midianite is afterwards called a Kenite, (Judges, i. 16,) it is supposed that the Midianites are here meant; who, dwelling in a rocky country, deemed themselves safe from the assaults of their enemies. But notwithstanding this, they were wasted by the Israelites, till at length they were carried captive by the Assyrians, as it is supposed, about the time of the captivity of the ten tribes.

V. 23. Alas, &c.] Either Balaam meant that the predicted desolations would be so dreadful, that it would be miserable to live during such calamities; or that the time referred to was so distant, that all who then heard him would be dead long before it arrived.

V. 24. The, &c.] The coast or isles of Chittim in Scripture always mean the inhabitants of Europe, especially the Greeks or Romans. (Dan. xi. 30.) The passage is therefore an evident prediction of the victories of the Greeks, or Macedonians, under Alexander and his successors; and of those of the Romans after them. The latter especially, coming from far in ships, overturned the kingdoms which had long subsisted in that part of the world, and possessed them; causing great afflictions to the people, who inhabited the ancient Assyria, but still greater to the Hebrews, (especially in the last destruction of Jerusalem by the Romans.) And they have ever since been tyrannizing in one form or other, over the world and the church; but shall at length be destroyed as entirely, as the Amalekites were. This part of the prophecy is not yet fulfilled.—What a surprising series of prophecy have we here in few words, which in former accomplishments hath already evidenced to successive generations the divine authority of the Scriptures; and shall to future ages demon-affish Eber, and he also shall perish for ever.

25 And Balaam rose up, and went and returned to his place: and Balak also went his way.

strate the same truth with undeniable evidence! 'Thus,' says Dr. Lightfoot, 'Balaam, instead of cursing the church, 'curseth Amalek the first, and Rome the last, enemy of 'the church.'

V. 25. And Balaam rose, &c.] Though Balaam for the present desisted from his purpose of cursing Israel; yet he was not rendered more friendly to them; or cured of his avarice, which at length suggested to him a still more diabolical plan. The care of God over Israel, in defeating this malicious confederacy, is long after mentioned as an evidence of his kindness and of their ingratitude for it. (Micah, vi. 5.)

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.

The enemies of the church of God may renew their attacks as often, or vary them as much, as they please; yet they can by no means gain any real advantage: for it pleases the Lord to bless his people, and he will make all their opposers see, feel, and acknowledge it, though they be filled with rage and desperation; (Rev. iii. 9.) Nay they shall in some cases be constrained to allow the excellency, and to forebode the greater prosperity, of the righteous!—Under the protection of Judah's Lion they may securely rest; and whoever disturbs them, will stir him up to their own destruction: for their protector will suffer the malice of their enemies to proceed, only till it hath accomplished his purposes for their good, and he will then execute vengeance on the guilty instruments of their salutary chastisements; (Isaiah, x. 5—7. 12. 15—19.) But whilst he renders those most accursed and miserable, who wish evil or do evil to his servants; he will abundantly bless all who pray for them and seek their peace, out of love to their character and religion.—They, who are kept back from worldly honour and affluence by an upright heart and a good conscience, will be great gainers in the event: and the minister especially, who, faithful to his trust by word and deed, with meekness and firmness, reproves the wickedness of those who had thought to promote him to honour, will have "an hundred fold more in this present "time, and in the world to come everlasting life." But such persons as have just light enough in their minds, and restraint enough upon their consciences, to induce their hesitation at going the whole length which a wicked Patron may require, and thus lose his favour, and balk their own preferment, continuing still the slaves of sin, and the enemies of God, are very miserable in this world, and likely to be so in the world to come; as they sin with greater aggravation than the ignorant can do. Let us not then attempt to serve God and Mammon, or to halt between Jehovah and Baal; but let us follow the Lord fully, and he will make up every loss to us.—The consent of wicked men in sin will at length issue in bitter hatred and severe recriminations; and many foresee the miseries coming upon others, who suspect not greater and nearer miseries that await themselves. But what benefit would accrue to any of us! what cause should we have to glory or rejoice, if we understood all mysteries and all knowledge, if we could penetrate the secrets of the most remote futurity, and develope the book of the divine decrees; "if we saw the "visions of the Almighty, and knew the knowledge of the "Most High," and had our eyes opened to see things hidden from all others since the foundation of the world; whilst distant nations and successive ages were destined to celebrate our fame: if at the same time we remained the slaves of covetousness, ambition, lust, or malice; impenitent and unpardoned, under the wrath of God, doomed "to the fire that never shall be quenched, and the worm "that never dieth!"—All these endowments would but aggravate our guilt, and enhance our condemnation. Nor is there any indissoluble bond between extensive and exact knowledge, even in theological subjects, and "holiness "without which no man shall see the Lord." That light which discovers the glory of God, the beauty of holiness, the hatefulness of sin, the excellency of Christ, and the worthlessness of earthly things, will always produce a correspondent disposition and behaviour; and be attended with repentance, faith, love, gratitude, benevolence, and an heavenly walk and conversation. But let us "take heed "lest the light, which is in us be darkness; for if it be, "alas! how great will that darkness be!" (Matt. vi. 23.) Let us seriously examine, whether, or in what respects, our knowledge, attainments, experience, or profession, excel those of Balaam? No fluency or excellency of speech, even in preaching or in prayer; no gifts of knowledge or prophecy; no visions and revelations of the Lord, are intrinsically, and decidedly different from, or superior to, the boasted endowments of this wretched man, who "loved "the wages of unrighteousness," and died the enemy of God and his people. But a broken and contrite heart, which mourns for, hates, and flees from sin; a simple dependence on the Redeemer's atoning blood and sanctifying grace; a chearful subjection to the divine command, and submission to his will; an habitual aim to glorify God and benefit his people, are less splendid, but far more excellent, attainments, and invariably accompany salvation. No glorious hypocrite ever possessed these; yet the feeblest true believer is conscious of them in some degree, and is daily longing and praying for more of them: whilst, perhaps through an error in judgment and satan's subtlety, he overlooks all these infallible evidences of saving grace, and indulges desponding fears, because he cannot emulate some boasting Balaam's gifts!—But it is the duty and privilege of such persons to bless the Lord and rejoice in what he hath done for them. Here by faith they behold the Saviour, nigh unto them; shortly shall they see him nigh, as come to complete their redemption, and consummate their felicity: whilst the wicked, whether infidel, profligate, or hypocritical, shall be banished far from his bliss-giving presence; "for the first shall be last, and the "last shall be first!"—Yet the Lord will glorify himself and benefit his church by the gifts, and in the punishment, of such wicked men: and in these prophecies we may discern both the misery of the ungodly, the vanity of all worldly dependences and preeminence; the approaching destruction of every enemy who hath done evil in the sanctuary; the consequent triumphs of the church; and the universal spread of the gospel, notwithstanding afflictions, persecutions, and damnable heresies; whilst they assure our faith in the full accomplishment of all the promises, which respect our own eternal salvation.

AND Israel abode in Shittim, and the people began to commit whoredom with the daughters of Moab.

2 And they called the people unto the sacrifices of their gods: and the people did eat, and bowed down to their gods.

3 And Israel joined himself unto Baal-peor: and the anger of the LORD was kindled against Israel.

4 And the LORD said unto Moses, Take all the heads of the people, and hang them up before the LORD against the sun, that the fierce anger of the LORD may be turned away from Israel.

5 And Moses said unto the judges of Israel, Slay ye every one his men that were joined unto Baal-peor.

6 And, behold, one of the children of Israel came, and brought unto his brethren a Midianitish woman, in the sight of Moses, and in the sight of all the congregation of the children of Israel, who were weeping before the door of the tabernacle of the congregation.

7 And when Phinehas, the son of Eleazar, the son of Aaron the priest, saw it, he rose up from among the congregation, and took a javelin in his hand;

8 And he went after the man of Israel into the tent, and thrust both of them through, the man of Israel, and the woman through her belly. So the plague was stayed from the children of Israel.

NOTES.

CHAP. XXV.] V. 1—3.] The temptation, by which the Israelites were on this occasion seduced into sin, was the result of counsel which Balaam gave to Balak—(xxxi. 16. Rev. ii. 14.)—We have just read, that "Balaam went, and returned to his place;" yet we afterwards find that he was slain in the war to which his counsel gave rise: it seems therefore most natural to suppose, that he directly went home in sullen despondency; whence after a time satan suggested this counsel to him; (John, xiii. 2;) that he then returned back to propose it to Balak; and that waiting to observe its success, he was slain among the Midianites. Many commentators however suppose, that he gave Balak this counsel, before he went home; and they are consequently puzzled to find out what brought him back again; except it were to claim his recompence, when his project had succeeded, or to give further advice, (xxxi. 8.)—This wicked man could not obtain leave to denounce a solemn curse on Israel, but he instructed Balak how to seduce Israel to bring a curse upon themselves; or at least to deprive themselves of the Lord's immediate protection, and to provoke such judgments, as would both diminish their numbers and discourage their hearts.—Under the mask of friendship an intercourse was opened, and some of the Moabitish and Midianitish women, (who were it seems no ways backward to such an infamous undertaking,) were employed to allure the Israelites to an unreserved intercourse with them. This having taken place in many instances, an invitation was given them, to those idolatrous feasts, at which every species of licentiousness was practised: this was readily complied with, and they flocked in great numbers, and joined in this abominable worship; the inferiors being encouraged by the example of their superiors. (Notes, &c. 1 Kings, xi. 1—8.)

V. 4, 5.] The principal persons, in the several tribes and families, seem to have been the ringleaders in this complicated provocation: and it is probable that the anger of the Lord had already occasioned a plague among them, which was making dreadful ravages. If therefore the people at large would not have their idolatry interpreted into a national forfeiture of the covenant, and be all together destroyed by the pestilence; immediate vengeance must be executed on the chief transgressors, by putting them to death, and hanging them up ignominiously as a sacrifice to the justice of God.—From comparing the sum total of those who died by the plague, (9,) with that mentioned by Paul, (1 Cor. x. 8,) it is computed that no less than one thousand persons were thus put to death.

V. 6—8.] This action of Zimri and Cozbi was done in direct defiance of God, of Moses, and of the congregation who in great multitudes were penitently confessing their sins, and deprecating the divine displeasure. It was the greatest insult and outrage imaginable upon all authority, divine and human; upon all order, and even upon common decency; in such circumstances, whilst numbers were dying by the sword of the magistrate, and much greater multitudes by the hand of God, for a man thus to triumph in his wickedness, and to dare the whole government to touch him.—Phinehas was the second priest and successor to the High Priesthood, and doubtless as high in authority as in rank: as a magistrate he was commissioned, both by God and by Moses, to slay those who were joined to Baal-peor: Zimri was notoriously and avowedly guilty; but whilst others trembled to come near him, Phinehas in the courage of zeal and faith, executed vengeance upon him and his infamous paramour at once.

No.

9 And those that died in the plague were twenty and four thousand.

10 And the LORD spake unto Moses, saying,

11 Phinehas, the son of Eleazar, the son of Aaron, the priest, hath turned my wrath away from the children of Israel, (while he was zealous for my sake among them,) that I consumed not the children of Israel in my jealousy.

12 Wherefore say, Behold, I give unto him my covenant of peace.

13 And he shall have it, and his seed after him, even the covenant of an everlasting priesthood; because he was zealous for his God, and made an atonement for the children of Israel.

14 Now the name of the Israelite that was slain, even that was slain with the Midianitish woman, was Zimri, the son of Salu, a prince of a chief house among the Simeonites.

15 And the name of the Midianitish woman that was slain was Cozbi, the daughter of Zur; he was head over a people, and of a chief house in Midian.

16 And the LORD spake unto Moses, saying,

17 Vex the Midianites, and smite them:

No conduct could in every view be more unexceptionable; nor can it ever be drawn into a precedent, to countenance acts of private revenge, of religious persecution, or even of irregular public vengeance. The objections therefore of some infidels to this part of holy Scripture, expose their ignorance or disingenuity, as much as they do their hatred of this sacred book. For there is not one of them, if God and religion were out of the question, but, in such a crisis, when a daring rebel set the regular magistracy at defiance, and evidently meant to instigate the people to a revolt, would have allowed that the welfare of the community was the chief law, and that so extraordinary a case required an extraordinary remedy; and would have applauded a decisive measure, though irregular, which after all this does not in the least appear to have been.

V. 11—13.] This action of Phinehas, springing from zeal for the honour of God and of his law, and being productive of so much good to the people; (as in consequence "the plague was stayed," which would otherwise "have "consumed the children of Israel,") received the sanction of the divine approbation, and was "imputed to him for "righteousness;" (Psalm, cvi. 28—31.) Let who will censure it, the heart-searching God accepted and rewarded it as a righteous action; and confirmed the priesthood to his family for future generations in consequence of it.

An atonement, &c.] That is, "a sacrifice to divine justice, expiating guilt by inflicting deserved punishment."

V. 17, 18.] (xxxi.) Though Balaam's counsel was first given to Balak king of Moab; yet probably the Midianitish women, especially of the higher ranks, like Cozbi, were more generally the tempters, than the Moabitish; and the former nation came into the measure more generally than the latter: therefore the Midianites were selected to be made examples of, for the warning of the Moabites who were spared at this time.

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.

The friendship and caresses of the wicked are more dangerous than their enmity: for none can prevail against God's people, if they are not overcome by their inbred lusts; no inchantment can injure them, except the fascination of worldly interests and pleasures; nor would the enemy of souls be so much gratified by seeing a worshipper of God cast into a fiery furnace, as by alluring him to the indulgence of his sensual inclinations, in opposition to the law of God.—When once the fence of the divine command is broken through, the progress from one kind and degree of sin to another is natural, and almost unavoidable: and when the barrier of female modesty is removed, the transition to the most impudent licentiousness is frequently very sudden; nor are any persons more pestilential to the human species than beautiful abandoned women.—Numbers in every age are brought to an ignominious execution; and still greater multitudes are hurried to the grave by dreadful diseases, in consequence of listening to the allurements of such insinuating tempters: in short "their feet lead "down to death, and their steps take hold of hell:" (Notes, &c. Prov. ii. 16—19. v. 3—15. vi. 24—35. vii. 5—27.) Yet multitudes, increasing multitudes, throng the fatal path, regardless of God's law, in defiance of his vengeance, and in neglect of the dictates of common sense, universal observation, and their own painful experience of the fatal effects. But let him who would have health, credit, and comfort in this world, or escape the wrath to come, flee youthful lusts, and shun such fascinating tempters, as he would persons infected with a baleful pestilence.—The more advanced in rank or authority offenders are, the deeper is the aggravation of their guilt, and the more extensive the influence of their pernicious example: it is therefore of vast importance that judgment should impartially be administered, without respect of persons. Yet there have always been those, who would attempt to elude, outbrave, or bribe human justice. When this is the case, zeal for the honour of God and the welfare of society should excite all those who are invested with authority, to disregard every personal consideration, in stepping forwards, and bringing an over-grown offender to condign punishment. And they, who consistently with relative obligations, by any means, boldly attempt to check the progress of daring wickedness, shall be honoured and recompensed of God, though they be censured and hated by men for so doing.—In large collective bodies there will be a diversity of characters; we should not therefore censure and condemn whole multitudes for the crimes of some individuals, which the rest perhaps detest and mourn over.—None will be more surely and severely punished, than they, who, after Satan's example, as his agents, and with his subtlety, tempt others to wickedness: nor should we dread or shun any enemies so much as these.—The Lord will chastise his offending people, but their tempters he will utterly destroy.—How dreadful will the change be to those, who sink together, from the indulgence of sinful pleasure into the torments of hell-fire! And how mad are men, who wantonly provoke the vengeance of that God who can so easily thus destroy them!—But let us not close our reflections, without looking to Jesus, who in zeal for the Lord of Hosts and love to his people, made an atonement, not with the blood of others, but with his own blood, that we might not be consumed; and who is in consequence established in an everlasting priesthood after the order of Melchizedek, an High Priest upon the royal throne of universal and everlasting dominion.

NOTES.

CHAP. XXVI.] V. 1, 2.] The plague, recorded in the foregoing chapter, had, it seems, swept away the last remains of that devoted generation, which had provoked the Lord to "sware in his wrath that they should not enter" Canaan: another numbering therefore of the people was appointed, preparatory to the taking possession of the promised land. In this chapter, not only the tribes, but the families of Israel are registered; that is, the names of those sons, or grandsons, of the patriarchs, who were the progenitors of the grand subdivisions in the several tribes. We have more full genealogies of them in the first book of Chronicles, and there are some trifling variations betwixt the accounts: but these things have little to do with our edification. The sum total was decreased 1820 from the former numbering; but there are more considerable variation in the numbers of the several tribes: these the reader may easily ascertain for himself, by comparing this chapter with the first of this book. I shall only observe, that as the tribe of Simeon was decreased above 37,000; it hath been not improbably conjectured, that by Zimri's example and influence, they had been peculiarly guilty in the wickedness of Baal-peor; and that the 24,000 who died on that account were chiefly of this tribe.

V. 11. The children &c.] The children of Korah, not conforming to their father's crime, or speedily repenting of it when he was cut off, were preserved, and afterwards became eminent in the service of the sanctuary.

16 Of Ozni, the family of the Oznites: of Eri, the family of the Erites:

17 Of Arod, the family of the Arodites: of Areli, the family of the Arelites.

18 These are the families of the children of Gad, according to those that were numbered of them, forty thousand and five hundred.

19 The sons of Judah were Er and Onan: and Er and Onan died in the land of Canaan.

20 And the sons of Judah, after their families, were; of Shelah, the family of the Shelanites: of Pharez, the family of the Pharzites; of Zerah, the family of the Zarhites:

21 And the sons of Pharez were; of Hezron, the family of the Hezronites: of Hamul, the family of the Hamulites.

44 Of the children of Asher, after their families: of Jimna, the family of the Jimnites: of Jesui, the family of the Jesuites: of Beriah, the family of the Berites.

45 Of the sons of Beriah: of Heber, the family of the Heberites: of Malchiel, the family of the Malchielites.

46 And the name of the daughter of Asher was Sarah.

47 These are the families of the sons of Asher, according to those that were numbered of them, who were fifty and three thousand and four hundred.

48 Of the sons of Naphtali, after their families: of Jahzeel, the family of the Jahzeelites: of Guni, the family of the Gunites:

49 Of Jezer, the family of the Jezerites: of Shillem the family of the Shillemites.

50 These are the families of Naphtali, according to their families: and they that were numbered of them were forty and five thousand and four hundred.

51 These were the numbered of the children of Israel, six hundred thousand and a thousand seven hundred and thirty.

52 And the LORD spake unto Moses, saying,

53 Unto these the land shall be divided for an inheritance, according to the number of names.

54 To many thou shalt give the more inheritance, and to few thou shalt give the less inheritance: to every one shall his inheritance be given, according to those that were numbered of him.

55 Notwithstanding, the land shall be divided by lot: according to the names of the tribes of their fathers they shall inherit.

56 According to the lot shall the possession thereof be divided between many and few.

57 And these are they that were numbered of the Levites, after their families: of Gershon, the family of the Gershonites: of Kohath, the family of the Kohathites: of Merari, the family of the Merarites.

58 These are the families of the Levites: the family of the Libnites, the family of the Hebronites, the family of the Mahlites, the family of the Mushites, the family of the Korathites: and Kohath begat Amram.

59 And the name of Amram's wife was Jochebed, the daughter of Levi, whom her mother bare to Levi in Egypt: and she bare unto Amram Aaron, and Moses, and Miriam their sister.

60 And unto Aaron was born Nadab and Abihu, Eleazar and Ithamar.

61 And Nadab and Abihu died, when they offered strange fire before the LORD.

62 And those that were numbered of them were twenty and three thousand, all males from a month old and upward: for they were not numbered among the children of Israel, because there was no inheritance given them among the children of Israel.

63 These are they that were numbered by Moses and Eleazar the priest, who numbered the children of Israel in the plains of Moab, by Jordan near Jericho.

64 But among these there was not a man of them whom Moses and Aaron the priest numbered, when they numbered the children of Israel in the wilderness of Sinai.

V. 53—56.] The quantity of land was ordered to be proportioned to the numbers of each tribe: the situation was to be determined by lot. Thus the decreasing of any tribe before their settlement in Canaan, proved the decrease of their future political importance and affluence, in all succeeding ages.

V. 62—65.] As the Levites were not numbered from twenty years of age; or among the "children of Israel" as heirs of Canaan, it is not probable that they were included in what follows.—For upon each enquiry it was found that not one man of that number remained, concerning which "the Lord had sworn in his wrath that "they should not enter into his rest." Thus the word of the Lord was magnified, and an intimation was given, that a speedy entrance into Canaan might be expected, now that the rebellious generation was extirpated. We may entertain a pleasing hope, that the temporal punishment was sanctified to multitudes to bring them to repentance before they died; and so might become the means of their eternal salvation, as a blessed effect of the respite granted them. Among all this multitude there was not one man aged sixty, except Caleb, Joshua, and some of the Levites. Of the women we have no information, and no express proof that they were involved in the sentence.

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.

Death is continually making awful havock of the human species, and causing surprising revolutions in families and nations: yet all is appointed in perfect wisdom, justice, and truth. This should excite us to meditate upon the sinful nature and destructive tendency of sin, the procuring cause of all these devastations: we should thence take 3 Our father died in the wilderneſs, and he was not in the company of them that gathered themſelves together againſt the LORD in the company of Korah; but died in his own ſin, and had no ſons.

take occaſion to renew our repentance, to ſeek forgiveneſs; to value the ſalvation of Chriſt, to remember how frail we are, to prepare for the approaching ſummons, and to fill up our remaining days in "ſerving our generation according "to the will of God." Then will death be diſarmed of his ſting, become our friend, and convey us to heaven, when our appointed period on earth is finiſhed.—But unrepented unpardoned ſin arms death with unutterable horrors; and laſting infamy, perhaps in this world, and everlaſting ſhame, contempt and miſery, will be the doom of thoſe who are "driven away in their wickedneſs;" however famous, and renowned they were among their ill-judging fellow-ſinners. Though the Lord puniſh the iniquity of the fathers upon their unbelieving poſterity; yet he will preſerve thoſe who do not imitate their parents, ſin, from ſharing their puniſhment; and the infamy of the father ſhall only make the piety and uſefulneſs of the ſon more noticed. The word of God will be ſurely performed; and the eye of the Lord can diſcern, and his arm can reach, every ſinner, in the midſt of ſurrounding multitudes: and though reſpites are not pardons, yet they give ſpace and opportunity for repentance. The promiſes likewiſe are irrevocable, and they who follow the Lord fully, ſhall certainly at length have the comfort of it.—In all our different ſituations in life, let us ſubmit to the ſovereignty, admire the equity and wiſdom, and be thankful for the goodneſs, of the Lord: and above all things deſire, that, whatever elſe is denied us, we may have an inheritance in the heavenly Canaan.

CHAP. XXVII.] V. 1, 2:] In the orders for the diviſion of the land juſt given, no proviſion had been made for the females, in caſe of the failure of male-iſſue. (xxvi. 52—56.) The five daughters of Zelophehad, therefore, conſidered themſelves as left deſtitute, having neither father nor brother to inherit, and being themſelves entirely overlooked: and they agreed to refer the caſe to Moſes, and the other rulers, whether it was not equitable that they ſhould inherit their father's portion; and whether females in future might not inherit the father's eſtate, when there was no male iſſue, both of which the Lord himſelf determined in the affirmative.

V. 3, 4.] Zelophehad had not incurred a forfeiture any more than the other Iſraelites who were all involved in one common ſentence: why then, all

15 And Moses spake unto the LORD, saying,

16 Let the LORD, the God of the spirits of all flesh, set a man over the congregation, 17 Which may go out before them, and which may go in before them, and which may lead them out, and which may bring them in; that the congregation of the LORD be not as sheep which have no shepherd.

18 And the LORD said unto Moses, Take thee Joshua the son of Nun, a man in whom is the Spirit, and lay thine hand upon him;

19 And set him before Eleazar the priest, and before all the congregation; and give him a charge in their sight.

20 And thou shalt put some of thine honour upon him, that all the congregation of the children of Israel may be obedient.

21 And he shall stand before Eleazar the priest, who shall ask counsel for him, after the judgment of Urim before the LORD: at his word shall they go out, and at his word they shall come in, both he, and all the children of Israel with him, even all the congregation.

they, should his memory be disgraced, and he treated as if his line were extinct, when he hath left so many children? (xxxvi. Joshua, xvii. 3—6.)

V. 16. The God, &c.] (Note, xvi. 22.) Moses in thus addressing the Lord intimated that as he "knew what "was in man;" (John, ii. 25,) he alone could point out the proper person to rule over the congregation. We find he also prayed, that he might enter Canaan, but the Lord would not grant his request; and he consequently acquiesced. (Deut. iii. 23—27.) His chief concern, however, was about the congregation, that a proper person might succeed him in the arduous and important station which he filled.

V. 18. In whom, &c.] Joshua had long attended on Moses, and had been endowed with the Spirit of wisdom, and excellent gifts were conferred on him: but his succession had not been publicly recognized until this time. Moses never so much as intimated a desire that one of his sons might succeed him; as Eleazar had succeeded Aaron: nor do we find that they entertained any such expectations; on the contrary, they seem to have acquiesced in the Lord's determination, and to have obeyed and honoured Joshua, without envy or murmur!—Imposition of hands, by those whom the Lord employed to teach and rule his church, has in every age been the token of a man's designation to some particular office, and of his receiving authority to execute it.

V. 19. Give him a charge, &c.] That is 'Seriously 'instruct him in the important duties of his place, warn 'him to be upon his guard against its temptations, and in 'the most earnest manner charge it upon his conscience to 'be diligent and faithful in it.' (1 Tim. vi. 13, 14. 20. 2 Tim. iv. 1.)

V. 20. Put some of thine, &c.] Joshua was thus admitted to a present share in the authority, that the people might be accustomed to obey and honour him.—Moses lived, and was very busily employed, some time after this warning: and Joshua would be very useful to him, in easing him of the burden of the civil government, whilst he gave himself wholly to attend on the interests of religion.

V. 21. Who shall ask counsel, &c.] Moses asked counsel of the Lord himself immediately; but all the future rulers of Israel were directed to this method of consulting the Lord by the High Priest.

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.

The believing expectation that the word of the Lord would be performed in due season, and the desire of an interest in the promised inheritance, which these young women manifested; and the modest manner in which they preferred their petition, without indulging secret murmurs and discontent, are well worthy of imitation. The readiness, also of Moses to listen to their suit with candour, and to consider it with attention, and to seek counsel from the Lord about it, should carefully be observed, and copied by magistrates, ministers, and all entrusted with authority.—The earnestness, with which Moses, under the divine rebuke and on the verge of death, pleaded in behalf of the congregation; the anxiety that he expressed for their welfare after his decease; and his disinterestedness, with the peaceful submission of his sons to the undistinguished lot of ordinary Levites, are excellent models for our spirit and conduct.—Though we do not by impenitent and presumptuous wickedness exclude ourselves from the inheritance of heaven, yet our sins should be considered as the deserving causes of all our sufferings in this world, and of our final dissolution.—The word of God is our only and our sufficient standard of faith and and practice: but in applying general precepts to particular cases, sober sense and sound judgment will be requisite: and all those things which are not out of the reach and province of our reason, will be found upon careful investigation evidently reasonable.—When difficulties, relative to practice, are fairly proposed and solidly resolved, they become adjudged cases, extensively and durably useful.—None but Jesus ever liveth to rule and protect his church: others have their subordinate and temporary services allotted them, which having finished, they must be gathered to their fathers: and though their dismission should be with a rebuke for some miscarriages, of which they have been guilty; the prospect of heaven, and the grace of the Holy Spirit, will induce a peaceful and submissive acquiescence.—Advancing sanctification always evidences itself, by a proportionate regard to the interests of true religion; which will be encreaſed by the expectation or approach of death: and the more any one hath experienced the difficulty and burden of important ſtations of uſefulneſs, the more ſenſible will he be, that none but the Lord can furniſh a man for, or ſupport him in, ſuch ſervices. We ſhould therefore with all earneſtneſs apply to him "who "hath the fulneſs of the Spirit," to ſet ſuitable perſons over his congregations: even ſuch men as by their example, and inſtructions, and by the proper exerciſe of authority may go before the people, and take care of them, that they be not as ſheep, which have no ſhepherd. (Mark, vi. 34.) Nor is that man fully qualified for any ſervice in the church of God, who is deſtitute of the graces and gifts of the Holy Spirit, however learned, eloquent, ingenious, or ſagacious he may otherwiſe be.—They, who are appointed to ſuch offices, whether as magiſtrates or miniſters, ſhould be ſolemnly charged to attend to the duties of them: it is the duty of all the people of God, to honour them, to obey them, and to pray for them: and thus ſupported, they need not fear the hardeſt ſervices, to which the Lord may call them in his providence; for his grace ſhall be ſufficient for them.—But in Joſhua's ſucceſſion, we are reminded, "that the law was given by Moſes," which by reaſon of our tranſgreſſion could not bring any of us to heaven; "but grace and truth came by Jeſus Chriſt," to accompliſh the ſalvation of every believer.

NOTES.

CHAP. XXVIII.] V. 1, 2.] The ceremonial worſhip had been greatly interrupted during the continuance of the Iſraelites in the wilderneſs; (Amos, v. 25.;) but as they were about to enter upon the wars of Canaan, and to take poſſeſſion of the promiſed land, they were reminded not to neglect the ordinances of God, in the hurry and peril of the one, or in the ſatisfactions of the other.—We have in this and the following chapter ſome repetitions of former laws, with further explications; and ſome new appointments, eſpecially with reference to the number and kind of the ſacrifices to be offered on particular occaſions: but there is not much, which requires interpretation, or affords new ſubject of practical inſtruction. The reader muſt therefore be referred to the notes and practical obſervations already made, on the laws for the ſeveral kinds of ſacrifice, and for the ſolemn feaſts.

V. 7. Strong wine, &c.] (Ex. xxix. 38—42.) The wine to be poured on the ſacrifice muſt be the beſt of the kind. Wine is ſtill the memorial of the blood of Chriſt ſhed for the ranſom of many, by the remiſſion of ſins.

V. 9, 10.] This was a new injunction, aptly ſignificant both of the extraordinary devotions of the ſabbath, and of the need there is, that in thoſe devotions we ſhould "be-"hold the Lamb of God, who taketh away the ſin of the "world." (Ezek. xlvi. 4, 5.)

V. 11, And, &c.] The Apoſtle Paul intimates that the new moons were a ſhadow, of which Chriſt was the ſubſtance; (Col. ii. 16, 17;) but nothing typical appears in them, except the numerous ſacrifices offered upon them. The providence of God, "appointing the moon for certain "ſeaſons,"

14 And their drink-offerings shall be half an hin of wine unto a bullock, and the third part of an hin unto a ram, and a fourth part of an hin unto a lamb: this is the burnt-offering of every month throughout the months of the year.
15 And one kid of the goats for a sin-offering unto the LORD shall be offered, besides the continual burnt-offering, and his drink-offering.
16 And in the fourteenth day of the first month is the passover of the LORD.
17 And in the fifteenth day of this month is the feast: seven days shall unleavened bread be eaten.
18 In the first day shall be an holy convocation: ye shall do no manner of servile work therein.

21 A several tenth-deal shalt thou offer for every lamb, throughout the seven lambs:
22 And one goat for a sin-offering, to make an atonement for you.
23 Ye shall offer these beside the burnt-offering in the morning, which is for a continual burnt-offering.
24 After this manner ye shall offer daily, throughout the seven days, the meat of the sacrifice made by fire, of a sweet savour unto the LORD: it shall be offered beside the continual burnt-offering, and his drink-offering.
25 And on the seventh day ye shall have an holy convocation; ye shall do no servile work.
26 Also on the day of the first-fruits, when ye bring a new meat-offering unto the LORD, after your weeks be out, ye shall have an holy convocation; ye shall do no servile work.
27 But ye shall offer the burnt-offering for a sweet savour unto the LORD; two young bullocks, one ram, seven lambs of the first year;
28 And their meat-offering of flour mingled with oil, three tenth-deals unto one bullock, two tenth-deals unto one ram, 29 A several tenth-deal unto one lamb, throughout the seven lambs;

"seasons," was acknowledged by those who observed it; and the dedication of all their time to him who gave it, was inculcated on them.

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.

Two coincident subjects here demand our attention, which are by no means new to us, yet may stir up our minds by a salutary repetition: We are reminded of the continued efficacy of the one sacrifice of Christ, and of our need constantly to depend upon it: and we are taught the constancy, with which the Christian is required and disposed to wait upon God in his ordinances, both as means of deriving grace from the fulness of Christ into his own soul; and of rendering to God the glory, which is due unto him, as the Creator, the God of providence, and the God of our salvation.—No hurrying employments, or perilous situations, or prosperous circumstances, should induce slackness in our religious exercises: on the contrary we should on such occasions be excited to greater diligence in seeking help from the Lord, or giving thanks to him. And when young people are going to settle in life, and remove to habitations of their own, it is peculiarly the duty of ministers, parents, and godly friends, to admonish them to establish the worship of God in their families from the first; which will save them much trouble afterwards, and bring a blessing upon them, and all that they uprightly engage in. Every day should be at least begun and ended by seriously worshipping God with the best of our time and powers: sabbaths call for double measures of personal and family-religion: and seasons of peculiar humiliation for sin, of seeking any special blessing, of solemn self-examination and self-dedication previous to approaching the Lord's table; or of remembering signal mercies received, will require days still more entirely set apart for these purposes. But we must take care that one duty does not preclude another; that all be accompanied with the exercise of

NOTES.

CHAP. XXIX.] V. 1. And in the ſeventh month, &c.] There were more ſolemnities in the ſeventh month than in any of the reſt. It formed a kind of vacation between the harveſt, and the enſuing ſeed-time: and might intimate that the ordinances of God ſhould be the Chriſtian's recreation from the fatigue of neceſſary buſineſs; and that religion does not interfere with our true intereſt in any thing. All theſe ſolemnities had before been appointed, but the ſacrifices to be ſeverally offered upon them were at this time preſcribed. (Notes, xvi. xxv.)

V. 12—40.] The decreaſe of the number of the bullocks, which were ſacrificed on the ſeveral days of this feaſt, until on the laſt and great day, only one was offered, is the moſt obſervable circumſtance in this law. And the reaſon of this regulation is not evident; unleſs it be intimated that the Moſaic inſtitution would wax old, and vaniſh away when the promiſed Meſſiah came.

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.

26 And on the fifth day nine bullocks, two rams, and fourteen lambs of the first year without spot:

27 And their meat-offering, and their drink-offerings, for the bullocks, for the rams, and for the lambs, shall be according to their number, after the manner; seems purposely to have arranged them in this manner, to exercise our diligence in searching them; and to distinguish betwixt those who value the knowledge of the truth, and those that do not. (Prov. ii. 1—8.)—We are here again reminded that the trumpet of the gospel calls us to mourn for sin, to receive the atonement, to rejoice in the Lord, to be strangers and pilgrims upon earth, and to abound in our "spiritual sacrifices, which are through "Christ Jesus to the praise and glory of God." The more consolation we receive from him, the more abundant and unwearied should we be in serving him; and a spiritual mind will be refreshed and recreated by the ordinances of God, after the fatigue of worldly care and labour; more than any carnal person will be with festivity and dissipation. The spiritually minded therefore will value leisure and opportunity of attending upon God's solemn ser-privilege, and will not be casting about for an excuse: they will not suppose that public ordinances render secret devotion unnecessary, or that the prayers of the minister supersede the necessity of their own; much less will they imagine that the merits and sacrifice of Christ for them render their obedience and good works unnecessary. Every thing here reminds us of our sinfulness: our very repentance and application to Christ need forgiveness through him; and whether we mourn for sin, or rejoice in the Lord and praise him for his mercies, "the life that we "live in the flesh must be by the faith of the Son of God;" until at the close we go to be with him, behold his glory, and extol his mercy, "who hath loved us, and washed us "from our sins in his own blood;" "to whom be honour, "and glory for ever, Amen."

28 And one goat for a sin-offering, beside the continual burnt-offering, and his meat-offering, and his drink-offering.

CHAP. XXX.

Contains the law concerning religious vows; in what caſes they were valid, and when they were to be diſannulled, 1—16.

AND Moſes ſpake unto the heads of the tribes concerning the children of Iſrael, ſaying, This is the thing which the LORD hath commanded.

2 If a man vow a vow unto the LORD, or ſwear an oath to bind his ſoul with a bond; he ſhall not break his word, he ſhall do according to all that proceedeth out of his mouth.

3 If a woman alſo vow a vow unto the LORD, and bind herſelf by a bond, being in her father's houſe in her youth;

4 And her father hear her vow and her bond wherewith ſhe hath bound her ſoul, and her father ſhall hold his peace at her: then all her vows ſhall ſtand, and every bond wherewith ſhe hath bound her ſoul ſhall ſtand.

5 But if her father diſallow her in the day that he heareth; not any of her vows, or of her bonds, wherewith ſhe hath bound her ſoul, ſhall ſtand: and the LORD ſhall forgive her, becauſe her father diſallowed her.

6 And if ſhe had at all an huſband when ſhe vowed, or uttered ought out of her lips, wherewith ſhe bound her ſoul;

7 And her huſband heard it, and held his peace at her in the day that he heard it: then her vows ſhall ſtand, and her bonds wherewith ſhe bound her ſoul ſhall ſtand.

8 But if her huſband diſallow her on the day that he heard it; then he ſhall make her vow which ſhe vowed, and that which ſhe uttered with her lips, wherewith ſhe bound her ſoul, of none effect: and the LORD ſhall forgive her.

9 But every vow of a widow, and of her that is divorced, wherewith they have bound their ſouls, ſhall ſtand againſt her.

10 And if ſhe vowed in her huſband's houſe, or bound her ſoul by a bond with an oath;

11 And her huſband heard it, and held his peace at her, and diſallowed her not; then all her vows ſhall ſtand, and every bond wherewith ſhe bound her ſoul ſhall ſtand.

12 But if her huſband hath utterly made them void on the day he heard them; then whatſoever proceeded out of her lips concerning her vows, or concerning the bond of her ſoul, ſhall not ſtand: her huſband hath made them void; and the LORD ſhall forgive her.

13 Every vow, and every binding oath to afflict the ſoul, her huſband may eſtabliſh it, or her huſband may make it void.

14 But if her huſband altogether hold his peace at her from day to day; then he eſtabliſheth

NOTES.

CHAP. XXX.] V. 1. Unto the heads, &c.] The rulers and magiſtrates were required to make theſe laws known through their reſpective tribes.

V. 2 If a man, &c.] (Notes, Lev. xxvii.) If a man have vowed to do any thing that is ſinful in itſelf, he ſhould deeply repent of the ſin he hath committed; but no obligation can bind him to break any divine commandment. Some vows only engage for the performance of thoſe things which were previouſly our indiſpenſable duty: ſuch a vow is implied in our attendance on the Lord's table. But there are many things of a diſcretionary nature; as Jacob's vow concerning the proportion of his ſubſtance, which he would ſet apart for religious purpoſes; (Gen. xxviii. 22;) Paul's ſolemn determination to take nothing of the Corinthians; (2 Cor. xi. 9, 10;) the Nazarites vow; (vi.) the vows concerning undemanded fugitives; (xxix. 39;) and vows of abſtinence in any particular for a limited ſeaſon. Vows of this kind may on ſome occaſions be properly made: but being promiſſory oaths, they ſhould be formed with ſolemnity, and religiouſly obſerved; and the ſoul is even bound as ſurety for the performance of them.

V. 3—5.] Such things might be vowed, in the caſe here ſtated, as would both be very diſagreeable to the parent, and prejudicial to the intereſts of the family. An unmarried woman in her father's houſe was therefore commanded to notify her vows to her father: and if he did not in a little time refuſe his conſent, ſhe was bound by them; but if he did, they were diſannulled and the obligation ceaſed. If ſhe had vowed diſcreetly and properly, "ſhe had done "well that it was in her heart," and her willing mind would be accepted: if otherwiſe her fault would be forgiven.—It is queſtioned, whether minor ſons were in the ſame caſe: but it doth not appear by this law that they were; nor in any other Scripture, except it can be inferred from the fifth commandment. The males were certainly by the law allowed more liberty than the females: for the vows of the latter might be adjudged more prejudicial to families; as the ſons being more immediately under the father's tuition, would be leſs liable to be inveigled into raſh engagements of this kind.

V. 6—16.] The caſe of a married woman was the ſame; for an huſband as ſoon as he knew of his wife's vows at firſt, and afterwards ſuffered her to break them, the blisheth all her vows, or all her bonds, which are upon her: and confirmeth them, because he held his peace at her in the day that he heard them.

15 But if he shall any wise make them void after that he hath heard them; then he shall bear her iniquity.

16 These are the statutes which the LORD commanded Moses, between a man and his wife, between the father and his daughter, being yet in her youth in her father's house.

iniquity would be charged on him.—With this chapter before our eyes, we may form a proper judgment of the injustice and absurdity of the vows of celibacy and chastity, which children, and even wives, have been encouraged to take, and required to observe, in the Romish church, without or against the consent of parents and husbands.

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.

We cannot engage our souls with too many or too strict obligations to be the Lord's, and in all things to glorify him: but we may inconsiderately vow things impracticable, inexpedient, not within our own choice, or not consistent with our relative duties. The peace, comfort, and true interest of families, and the exercise of the parental and conjugal authority, are of such consequence to communities, and to religion; that the Lord will sooner dispense with a solemn vow made to himself, than authorize any thing which interferes with them. What regard therefore should all persons, especially the inferior relations, pay to these important obligations? and how willing should they be to give up every personal inclination for the preservation of them? Blind guides indeed in all ages, by one means or other, have attempted "to make "these commandments of God of none effect, through "their traditions;" and that they might finger the corban, (the money given to God, and to them as his receivers,) have authorized disobedience to parents, to husbands, and to magistrates. But the whole tendency of revelation, and of the grace of God, is to induce every individual, from the highest motives, and with the greatest encouragements, to act properly in the several relations of life for the Lord's sake. We should then attend carefully to those indispensable duties, which we have engaged solemnly to perform by our very profession of Christianity; depending on, and seeking, the grace of God to enable us so to do. From the performance of these vows, no authority of husbands, parents, or magistrates can release any one; for "we must obey God rather than man." And in respect of the rest we should be cautious and circumspect, and seek counsel of the Lord in prayer: "for it is better "not to vow, than to vow and not perform." But if we have engaged our souls, let us never think of going back, when no other duty interferes, though we should have altered our mind, or become averse to the thing engaged to: for our souls are bound for the performance, and God abhors our trifling with holy and solemn matters.

NOTES.

CHAP. XXXI.] V. 2. Avenge, &c.] Vengeance belongeth to God alone, and to those whom he deputes as his ministers of vengeance. Such are magistrates in the ordinary course of his providential government; and those persons, who without commission from him dare to execute private revenge, and they, who from ambition, avarice, or resentment, wage war and desolate kingdoms, must one day answer for it. God is righteous in the miseries, which they occasion, but they are most unrighteous. If however he, (out of the ordinary method of his providence, instead of commissioning an earthquake, a pestilence, or a famine to execute vengeance upon criminals,) be pleased expressly to authorize and command any person, or people, to avenge his cause; such a commission will justify, nay sanctify, any war, massacre, or devastation. No person can at present plead such a commission; but the Israelites might, and could shew the broad seal of heaven in ratification of it, and in vindication of all they did by virtue of it. It is therefore absurd to censure them for the dreadful slaughter made in those wars, which we are shortly to consider; the Lord passed sentence of condemnation, and employed them merely as executioners: and unless any one can prove that the criminals did not deserve their doom; or that the Lord had no right to punish his rebellious creatures, and dispose of them and their property as he pleased; such objectors only prove their enmity to God, by being the unsolicited advocates of his enemies. The knowledge of the malignity of sin, of which men make light but which God infinitely abhors, forms the key to the understanding of all the terrible executions upon these nations which had filled up the measure of their iniquities. The whole was conducted by the express command of God; and the executioners were more than once reproved for being too lenient, but never for being too severe: yet man's natural compassion recoils at the consideration of the slaughter which was made. Hence we may draw a very forcible argument, that the execution of vengence, "in the day of wrath, and re-"velation of the righteous judgment of God," will not accord with those rules which men, ignorant of the evil of sin, and proud of their own humanity, have presumptuously devised for him; and which they would wish the Scripture to contain, though evidently contrary to the

3 And Moſes ſpake unto the people, ſaying, Arm ſome of yourſelves unto the war, and let them go againſt the Midianites, and avenge the LORD of Midian.

4 Of every tribe a thouſand, throughout all the tribes of Iſrael, ſhall ye ſend to the war.

5 So there were delivered out of the thouſands of Iſrael, a thouſand of every tribe, twelve thouſand armed for war.

6 And Moſes ſent them to the war, a thouſand of every tribe, them, and Phinehas the ſon of Eleazar the prieſt, to the war, with the holy inſtruments, and the trumpets to blow in his hand.

7 And they warred againſt the Midianites, as the LORD commanded Moſes; and they ſlew all the males.

8 And they ſlew the kings of Midian, beſide the reſt of them that were ſlain; namely, Evi, and Rekem, and Zur, and Hur, and Reba, five kings of Midian: Balaam alſo, the ſon of Beor, they ſlew with the ſword.

9 And the children of Iſrael took all the women of Midian captives, and their little ones, and took the ſpoil of all their cattle, and all their flocks, and all their goods.

10 And they burnt all their cities wherein they dwelt, and all their goodly caſtles, with fire.

11 And they took all the ſpoil, and all the prey, both of men and of beaſts.

12 And they brought the captives, and the prey, and the ſpoil, unto Moſes, and Eleazar the prieſt, and unto the congregation of the children of Iſrael, unto the camp at the plains of Moab, which are by Jordan near Jericho.

13 And Moſes, and Eleazar the prieſt, and all the princes of the congregation, went forth to meet them without the camp.

14 And Moſes was wrath with the officers of the hoſt, with the captains over thouſands, and conſtant tenor of their aweful language. If they cannot reconcile with their own ideas of juſtice and goodneſs the ſeverities executed upon the Midianites and Canaanites, which were only the performance of the command of a juſt and good God; let them allow that ſuch things are too high for them, and that they are not competent to determine what conduct befits the righteous Judge of the world; and that it is more ſafe, wiſe, and humble, ſimply to believe his teſtimony, and "to flee from the wrath to come," leaving the government of the univerſe to him, than raſhly to diſpute againſt ſuch matters, as are evidently out of our latitude, and of which we know nothing further than the Lord is pleaſed to inform us.—Moſes had beheld, with grief and indignation, the temptation, the ſin, and the puniſhment of Iſrael: and in directing and witneſſing the ſucceſs of this war, before his death, he ſaw a ſpecimen of the Lord's vengeance on the enemies of Iſrael, and of his kindneſs to them.

V. 3. Avenge, &c.] The Lord determined to take vengeance on the Midianites, for the injury which they had brought upon his people: but they were reminded by this language, not to indulge private reſentment, but to be influenced by zeal for the glory of God; and to engage in this war, as the miniſters of his vengeance upon his enemies for their ſins.

V. 4—6.] Twelve thouſand was a ſmall number, in proportion to the whole multitude of Iſrael, or to the forces with which they were to engage: but the Lord would teach them, not to truſt in an arm of fleſh, but in his Almighty power and faithful promiſe. As they were under the conduct of the captains of thouſands, and of hundreds, they probably had no general, and therefore Joſhua is not mentioned. Phinehas, the zealous avenger of the inſulted honour of God and of Iſrael (xxv.) was ordered to accompany them; with the holy inſtruments, by which ſome underſtand the ſilver trumpets, but others ſuppoſe that the ſecond prieſt, the High Prieſt's deputy and ſucceſſor, conſulted the Lord on ſuch occaſions, with the breaſt-plate of judgment; and that this is here meant. (Notes, Exod. xxviii. 15—30. Num. x. 1—10.)

V. 7. They ſlew, &c.] The victorious Iſraelites did not extirpate the nation of Midian, which ſubſiſted and was powerful long after: but they ſlew all, without giving quarter, as far as they proceeded, which probably was as far as thoſe tribes reached, from which the tempters chiefly came.

V. 8. Balaam, &c.] Being blinded by covetouſneſs, and hardened by the deceitfulneſs of ſin, Balaam periſhed among the enemies of Iſrael; as ſome think he foreboded when he wiſhed, rather than prayed, "to die the death of "the righteous." (Note, xxv. 1. Jude 11.)—Whatever information Moſes might receive from human teſtimony concerning Balaam, and Balak, he doubtleſs received it more perfectly exact by inſpiration from God; and it was very proper that it ſhould be thus circumſtantially recorded, for the information, encouragement, and caution of God's people in all ages, concerning the ſecret machinations of their enemies; and on the other hand for the warning of thoſe, who unite in ſuch counſels againſt them. Thus Balaam went to his own place, as Judas did after him; and their characters in ſome reſpects greatly reſembled each other.

V. 10. They burnt, &c.] It ſeems that this was no part of the country which the Iſraelites were to inherit, and therefore they in this manner diſabled the Midianites from rallying their forces and renewing the war, while they executed the vengeance of the Lord upon them.

V. 14—18.]

and captains over hundreds, which came from the battle.

15 And Moſes ſaid unto them, Have ye ſaved all the women alive?

16 Behold, theſe cauſed the children of Iſrael, through the counſel of Balaam, to commit treſpaſs againſt the LORD in the matter of Peor, and there was a plague among the congregation of the LORD.

17 Now therefore, kill every male among the little ones, and kill every woman that hath known man by lying with him.

18 But all the women-children that have not known a man by lying with him, keep alive for yourſelves.

19 And do ye abide without the camp ſeven days: whoſoever hath killed any perſon, and whoſoever hath touched any ſlain, purify both yourſelves and your captives on the third day, and on the ſeventh day.

20 And purify all your raiment, and all that is made of ſkins, and all work of goats' hair, and all things made of wood.

21 And Eleazar the prieſt ſaid unto the men of war which went to the battle, This is the ordinance of the law which the LORD commanded Moſes;

22 Only the gold, and the ſilver, the braſs, the iron, the tin, and the lead, 23 Every thing that may abide the fire, ye ſhall make it go through the fire, and it ſhall be clean; nevertheleſs, it ſhall be purified with the water of ſeparation: and all that abideth not the fire ye ſhall make go through the water.

24 And ye ſhall waſh your clothes on the ſeventh day, and ye ſhall be clean, and afterward ye ſhall come into the camp.

25 And the LORD ſpake unto Moſes, ſaying,

26 Take the ſum of the prey that was taken, both of man and of beaſt, thou, and Eleazar the prieſt, and the chief fathers of the congregation;

27 And divide the prey into two parts, between them that took the war upon them, who went out to battle, and between all the congregation;

28 And levy a tribute unto the LORD of the men of war which went out to battle: one ſoul of five hundred, both of the perſons, and of the beeves, and of the aſſes, and of the ſheep.

29 Take it of their half, and give it unto Eleazar the prieſt, for an heave-offering of the LORD.

30 And of the children of Iſrael's half thou ſhalt take one portion of fifty, of the perſons, of the beeves, of the aſſes, and of the flocks, of

V. 14—18.] Probably the command of God had been very explicit in this particular. (1 Sam. xv. 3.) The ſword of war ſhould ſpare women and children, as incapable of making reſiſtance; but the ſword of juſtice ſhould know no diſtinction, except that of guilty or not guilty, and more or leſs guilty. This war was the execution of a righteous ſentence of condemnation upon a guilty nation, in which the women were the principal criminals, and the men only aiding and abetting with their counſel: and if any of the women concerned in the crime had been ſpared, they would have lived a perpetual temptation to thoſe who ſpared them. All were therefore ordered for immediate execution, but the female children, who could not be ſuppoſed to have been culpable; and who, being brought up among the Iſraelites, would never tempt them to idolatry. It has been groundleſsly aſſerted, that Moſes, by this determination, authorized the Iſraelites to make concubines of the whole number of female captives, or even promiſcuouſly to debauch them; and a formidable objection againſt his writings has been raiſed from this ſuppoſition. But the whole tenor of the law, and eſpecially a ſtatute, hereafter to be conſidered, prove the contrary. (Deut. xxi. 10—14.) They were merely permitted to poſſeſs them as female ſlaves; while all the laws concerning marriage, and concubinage, and againſt fornication and whore-dom, were in full force in this as well as all other caſes. But what ſhall we ſay of the execution of all the male infants, who could not be perſonally guilty in this matter? A ſovereign God would have it ſo: and ſhall not the Judge of all the earth do right? Had they lived, they might have conſpired together to avenge the death of their parents on Iſrael; and the example was thus rendered more tremendous, warning parents not to imitate the guilt of the Midianites, leſt they ſhould involve their beloved offſpring in deſtruction. Throughout the Scripture men's natural affection to their children is addreſſed, by promiſes and threatenings, in which they alſo are included: and a future ſtate renders it poſſible for the Lord to turn the temporal ſufferings of the infants into an infinite mercy to them.

V. 19—24.] Though the Iſraelites acted by the Lord's commiſſion; yet they had been ſo much employed about the dead and dying, that they had contracted pollution: and the ſpoil, having been uſed by idolaters, and probably in idolatry, muſt be purified alſo in the preſcribed manner, which would form a pattern for ſucceeding wars. The law was thus reduced to practice, under the inſpection of the lawgiver.

V. 25—47.] To prevent diſpute, and for a rule to after times, the Lord thus ordered the diſtribution of the cattle and the female captives, betwixt the ſoldiers and the congregation; with a portion from each reſerved for the prieſts of all manner of beasts, and give them unto the Levites, which keep the charge of the tabernacle of the LORD.

31 And Moses and Eleazar the priest did as the LORD commanded Moses.

32 And the booty, being the rest of the prey which the men of war had caught, was six hundred thousand and seventy thousand and five thousand sheep,

33 And threescore and twelve thousand beeves,

34 And threescore and one thousand asses,

35 And thirty and two thousand persons in all, of women that had not known man by lying with him.

36 And the half, which was the portion of them that went out to war, was in number three hundred thousand and seven and thirty thousand and five hundred sheep:

37 And the LORD's tribute of the sheep was six hundred and threescore and fifteen.

38 And the beeves were thirty and six thousand, of which the LORD's tribute was threescore and twelve.

39 And the asses were thirty thousand and five hundred, of which the LORD's tribute was threescore and one.

40 And the persons were sixteen thousand, of which the LORD's tribute was thirty and two persons.

41 And Moses gave the tribute which was the LORD's heave-offering unto Eleazar the priest; as the LORD commanded Moses.

42 And of the children of Israel's half, which Moses divided from the men that warred, 43 (Now the half that pertained unto the congregation, was three hundred thousand and thirty thousand and seven thousand and five hundred sheep,

44 And thirty and six thousand beeves,

45 And thirty thousand asses and five hundred,

46 And sixteen thousand persons,)

47 Even of the children of Israel's half, Moses took one portion of fifty, both of man and of beast, and gave them unto the Levites which kept the charge of the tabernacle of the LORD; as the LORD commanded Moses.

48 And the officers which were over thousands of the host, the captains of thousands, and captains of hundreds, came near unto Moses:

49 And they said unto Moses, Thy servants have taken the sum of the men of war which are under our charge, and there lacketh not one man of us.

50 We have therefore brought an oblation for the LORD, what every man hath gotten, of jewels of gold, chains, and bracelets, rings, ear-rings, and tablets, to make an atonement for our souls before the LORD.

51 And Moses and Eleazar the priest took the gold of them, even all wrought jewels.

52 And all the gold of the offering that they offered up to the LORD, of the captains of thousands, and of the captains of hundreds, was sixteen thousand seven hundred and fifty shekels.

53 (For the men of war had taken spoil, every man for himself.)

and Levites. The whole seems to have been very equitable, and to have given universal satisfaction. The number of the female captives, who were spared, suggests an awful idea of the terrible vengeance, which God took upon the enemies of him, and of his people! Amalek, who first warred with Israel, was long spared; but Midian, who first tempted them to idolatry, was speedily and severely punished!

V. 48—54.] The success of the warriors had been very extraordinary; so small a company overcoming, and cutting off such immense multitudes, and taking so large a spoil: but their preservation was still more remarkable; not one individual being slain, or missing, or even wounded, that we find! In acknowledgment of the Lord's special kindness in this encouraging instance, the officers, in the name of the soldiers also, presented the gold, (all of it probably,) which they had found amongst the spoil, as an oblation to the Lord, "to make an atonement for their souls;" (Exod. xxx. 12, 15, 16;) that is, to be employed in that service of God, by which atonement was typically made. And thus they confessed, that instead of claiming a reward for their service, they needed forgiveness of much that had been amiss; and desired to be thankful for the preservation of their lives, which might justly have been taken away.

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.

"The triumphing of the wicked is short." The pleasures and advantages of sin are bought at an enormous price, and the vengeance of the Lord is always sure, righteous, righteous, and terrible, and sometimes very speedy and sudden.—"It is a fearful thing to fall into the hands of "the living God;" and if his temporal judgments be so dreadful, what will be the case of sinners, "when the "Lord Jesus shall be revealed from heaven, with flaming "fire, taking vengeance on them that know not God, and "that obey not the gospel of our Lord Jesus Christ?" (2 Thess. i. 8, 9.) Let us then take warning, and "flee "from the wrath to come," to that Saviour who alone is able to deliver us: and, depending on his assistance, let us declare war against every sinful propensity, by which we have been induced to dishonour God, and bring guilt and misery upon ourselves.—This is the genuine holy war, in which we must utterly destroy every one of the enemies of the Lord, and of our souls, or they will certainly destroy us: to this the trumpet of the gospel excites and encourages us; and in it we may depend upon the Lord for counsel and assistance. Here we should indulge the deepest resentment; and, without thought of peace or truce, should prosecute the quarrel to the utter extermination of our enemies, root and branch, with unrelenting severity, neither sparing our strongest, nor overlooking our feeblest, lusts, which, if not crucified, will soon become formidable and produce fatal effects.—In this, and in all our undertakings, we must not only make the Lord our confidence, but adhere to his orders and instructions; and in so doing we may expect all desirable success, notwithstanding interposing difficulties.—Though we must forgive and pray for all our enemies; yet we should entertain the deepest abhorrence of the conduct, and most carefully shun the company of those who have once attempted to draw us into sin by any persuasion or allurement whatsoever. Nor will any persons be more severely punished by the Lord, than such tempters of others, especially of his people; except it be those, who, against the convictions of their own conscience, have counselled and encouraged them so to do.—There is no natural disposition of the human heart, in it's present fallen state, that is not capable of being perverted and running into excess; and our humanity and compassion, as well as our resentment, must be regulated and moderated according to the law of God; or we shall spare, connive at, and encourage those, whom the Lord would have reproved, corrected, or treated with severity, and thus bring anger from him upon ourselves. This is especially the case with magistrates, ministers, heads of families, and those who are intrusted with any authority.—They, who have been faithful in inferior stations, may expect to be employed in more important services: but even when we have acquitted ourselves suitably in those things which were our bounden duty, we shall need purifying, in the blood of Christ and by his sanctifying grace, from the guilt and pollution adhering to our best performances.—God so abhors, and would have us to abhor, the commission of murder; that he hath represented even that bloodshed, which he authorized and commanded, as in some degree contaminating those concerned in it; (1 Chron. xxii. 8.) He also approves and requires exact equity in all our transactions; nor should we dare to appropriate any gain, of which we cannot conscientiously devote a portion to that God who "hates robbery for burnt-offering," and for which we cannot thank Him as the giver. This rule, if well observed, would render us incapable of making gain by fraud, extortion, oppression, or any kind of iniquity or sinful compliances. But besides the exact rules of honesty, we should liberally give to the Lord, and dispose of in pious and charitable uses, a proportion of all our acquisitions; especially when commemorating special deliverances: and though the blood of Christ has made the effectual atonement for our souls, such oblations are proper evidences of our faith, and of the sincerity of our love; and are acknowledgments of our unworthiness of all our mercies; of our gratitude to the bountiful giver of them, of our zeal for his glory; and of love to our fellow-Christians.

NOTES.

CHAP. XXXII.] V. 1—5.] This proposal of the Reubenites and Gadites seemed to imply a disregard to the land of Canaan, a distrust of the Lord's promise, and a reluctancy to encounter the difficulties and face the dangers of conquering and expelling the inhabitants of that land. When we compare their petition, "not to be brought "over Jordan," with the earnestness with which Moses intreated to pass over, we cannot but suspect, that they did not behold in the rest of Canaan that type of heaven, which he and other believers seem to have done. They were not, however, so criminal as Moses thought them; and it was proper that this part of the country should be allotted

6 And Moſes ſaid unto the children of Gad, and to the children of Reuben, Shall your brethren go to war, and ſhall ye ſit here?

7 And wherefore diſcourage ye the heart of the children of Iſrael from going over into the land which the LORD hath given them?

8 Thus did your fathers, when I ſent them from Kadeſh-barnea to ſee the land.

9 For when they went up into the valley of Eſhcol, and ſaw the land, they diſcouraged the heart of the children of Iſrael, that they ſhould not go into the land which the LORD had given them.

10 And the LORD's anger was kindled the ſame time, and ſware, ſaying, 11 Surely none of the men that came up out of Egypt, from twenty years old and upward, ſhall ſee the land which I ſware unto Abraham, unto Iſaac, and unto Jacob; becauſe they have not wholly followed me;

12 Save Caleb the ſon of Jephunneh the Kenezite, and Joſhua the ſon of Nun: for they have wholly followed the LORD.

13 And the LORD's anger was kindled againſt Iſrael, and he made them wander in the wilderneſs forty years, until all the generation that had done evil in the ſight of the LORD was conſumed.

14 And, behold, ye are riſen up in your fathers' ſtead, an increaſe of ſinful men, to augment yet the fierce anger of the LORD toward Iſrael.

15 For if ye turn away from after him, he will yet again leave them in the wilderneſs, and ye ſhall deſtroy all this people.

16 And they came near unto him, and ſaid, We will build ſheep-folds here for our cattle, and cities for our little ones;

17 But we ourſelves will go ready armed before the children of Iſrael, until we have brought them unto their place: and our little ones ſhall dwell in the fenced cities, becauſe of the inhabitants of the land.

18 We will not return unto our houſes, until the children of Iſrael have inherited every man his inheritance:

19 For we will not inherit with them on yonder ſide Jordan, or forward; becauſe our inheritance is fallen to us on this ſide Jordan eaſtward.

20 And Moſes ſaid unto them, If ye will do this thing, if ye will go armed before the LORD to war,

21 And will go all of you armed over Jordan before the LORD, until he hath driven out his enemies from before him, 22 And the land be ſubdued before the LORD; then afterward ye ſhall return, and be guiltleſs before the LORD, and before Iſrael; and this land ſhall be your poſſeſſion before the LORD.

23 But if ye will not do ſo, behold, ye have ſinned againſt the LORD: and be ſure your ſin will find you out.

24 Build ye cities for your little ones, and folds for your ſheep; and do that which hath proceeded out of your mouth.

25 And the children of Gad and the children of Reuben ſpake unto Moſes, ſaying, Thy ſervants will do as my lord commandeth.

26 Our little ones, our wives, our flocks, and all our cattle, ſhall be there in the cities of Gilead.

27 But thy ſervants will paſs over, every man armed for war, before the LORD to battle, as my lord ſaith.

28 So concerning them Moſes commanded Eleazar the prieſt, and Joſhua the ſon of Nun, and the chief fathers of the tribes of the children of Iſrael;

29 And Moſes ſaid unto them, If the children of Gad and the children of Reuben will paſs with you over Jordan, every man armed to battle before the LORD, and the land ſhall be ſubdued before you; then ye ſhall give them the land of Gilead for a poſſeſſion:

30 But

allotted to ſome of the tribes. In their too great haſte for a ſettlement they petitioned for it, and obtained it: but it was a ſituation very diſtant from the ſanctuary; it greatly interrupted their intercourſe with their brethren: it was very much expoſed to their enemies, and uneaſy to themſelves; and they ſeem to have been diſpoſſeſſed ſooner than the other Iſraelites; (2 Kings, x. 32, 33, 1 Chron. v. 25, 26.)

V. 15. And ye, &c.] Moſes feared that this example of unbelief and timidity, (for ſo he thought it,) would lead the congregation into a general imitation of the ſin of their fathers, to their deſtruction likewiſe.

V. 33,

30 But if they will not pass over with you armed, they shall have possessions among you, in the land of Canaan.

31 And the children of Gad and the children of Reuben answered, saying, As the LORD hath said unto thy servants, so will we do.

32 We will pass over armed before the LORD into the land of Canaan, that the possession of our inheritance on this side Jordan may be our's.

33 And Moses gave unto them, even to the children of Gad, and to the children of Reuben, and unto half the tribe of Manasseh the son of Joseph, the kingdom of Sihon king of the Amorites, and the kingdom of Og king of Bashan, the land, with the cities thereof, in the coasts, even the cities of the country round about.

34 And the children of Gad built Dibon, and Ataroth, and Aroer, 35 And Atroth, Shophan, and Jaazer, and Jogbehah,

36 And Beth-nimrah, and Beth-haran, fenced cities; and folds for sheep.

37 And the children of Reuben built Heshbon, and Elealeh, and Kirjathaim, 38 And Nebo, and Baal-meon, (their names being changed,) and Shibmah: and gave other names unto the cities which they builded.

39 And the children of Machir the son of Manasseh went to Gilead, and took it, and dispossessed the Amorite which was in it.

40 And Moses gave Gilead unto Machir the son of Manasseh; and he dwelt therein.

41 And Jair the son of Manasseh went and took the small villages thereof, and called them Havoth-jair.

42 And Nobah went and took Kenath, and the villages thereof, and called it Nobah, after his own name.

CHAP.

V. 33. And, &c.] The country east-ward of Jordan was it seems deemed too large a proportion for those two tribes alone: in consequence therefore of the conquest of Gilead by the descendents of Machir, a division of the tribe of Manasseh had their inheritance there also; probably by their own consent.

V. 38. Their names being changed, &c.] When the people rebuilt the cities for their own habitations, they changed the names of such of them, as were called after the idols of the former inhabitants. (Note, Exod. xxiii. 13.)

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.

Covetousness, pride, conveniency, impatience, or other carnal inducements, principally influence most men in the choice of their worldly settlements: whereas they ought to consider in the first place, whether they are likely to be advantageous to their souls, convenient for attendance on God's ordinances, and favourable to communion with his people. But if any true Christians are betrayed into such an improper conduct, their iniquity will certainly correct them, and their continual uneasiness will make them smart for their folly. (Notes, &c. Gen. xiii. xiv.)—We need not wonder indeed that mankind in general act in this manner: they have not that faith which explores the unseen world, nor that spiritual mind which supremely values heavenly blessings; the attainment of which is supposed to be attended with present loss and trouble, the possession future if not uncertain. Earthly things suit their carnal minds, and form a present portion apprehended by the senses; and that they make choice of; but it proves unsatisfactory and vexatious: they are speedily driven out of it, and having no inheritance beyond the grave, they will have eternally to bewail their wretched choice, whilst believers eternally rejoice in their portion.—But leaving this obvious accommodation; let us observe that we are utterly inexcusable, if we do not profit by the examples of them, whose sins and punishments are recorded for our warning. Yet so depraved is human nature, that one generation rises up after another, "an increase of sinful men" walking in the steps of those who perished before them, and thus still more and more augmenting the fierce anger of the Lord. Nor does the wickedness of men, (especially under a profession of religion,) only destroy their own souls: it also murders the souls of others; whilst their examples, influence, and persuasions, encourage them in sin, or discourage them from seeking and serving the Lord; or whilst their crimes increase their prejudices or harden their heart against the gospel of salvation. Yet they, who are deeply acquainted with the wickedness of the human heart, and have been long conversant with perverse and rebellious people, are sometimes too suspicious. But if, out of zeal for the glory of God, and solicitude for the welfare of his people, such suspicions are entertained, it is generally best to disclose them, and to remonstrate with the suspected persons: this may either withdraw them from their purpose; or give them an opportunity of clearing up matters, by such explanations as place things in a more favourable light. These should be willingly listened unto: and though there be somewhat culpable, we should not make the worst of every thing; but be ready to accept of reasonable excuses, and to accede to equitable proposals: this however should always be done with such express conditions and limitations, as may supersede occasions of future contention. All men ought to consider the interests of others, as well as their own accommodation: and the law of love requires them reciprocally to labour, venture, and suffer for each other as occasion requires. But especially it is becoming in the professed people of God to be thus disinterested and public-spirited: and they cannot consistently account any thing too great to forego, to endure, or to attempt, in opposing Exod.* xii—xvii. xix. 1, 2. Numb. x. xi. 34, 35. xx. xxi.)—50—56.

THESE are the journeys of the children of Israel, which went forth out of the land of Egypt, with their armies, under the hand of Moses and Aaron.

2 And Moses wrote their goings out according to their journeys, by the commandment of the LORD: and these are their journeys according to their goings out.

3 And they departed from Rameses in the first month, on the fifteenth day of the first month: on the morrow after the passover, the children of Israel went out with an high hand in the sight of all the Egyptians.

4 (For the Egyptians buried all their firstborn, which the LORD had smitten among them: upon their gods also the LORD executed judgments.)

5 And the children of Israel removed from Rameses, and pitched in Succoth.

6 And they departed from Succoth, and pitched in Etham, which is in the edge of the wilderness.

7 And they removed from Etham, and turned again into Pi-hahiroth, which is before Baal-zephon; and they pitched before Migdol.

8 And they departed from before Pihahiroth, and passed through the midst of the sea into the wilderness, and went three days journey in the wilderness of Etham, and pitched in Marah.

9 And they removed from Marah and came unto Elim: and in Elim were twelve fountains of water, and threescore and ten palm-trees; and they pitched there.

10 And they removed from Elim, and encamped by the Red sea.

11 And they removed from the Red sea, and encamped in the wilderness of Sin.

12 And they took their journey out of the wilderness of Sin, and encamped in Dophkah.

13 And they departed from Dophkah, and encamped in Alush.

14 And they removed from Alush, and encamped at Rephidim, where was no water for the people to drink.

15 And they departed from Rephidim, and pitched in the wilderness of Sinai.

16 And they removed from the desert of Sinai, and pitched at Kibroth-hattaavah.

17 And they departed from Kibroth-hattaavah, and encamped at Hazeroth.

18 And they departed from Hazeroth, and pitched at Rithmah.

19 And they departed from Rithmah, and pitched at Rimmon-parez.

20 And they departed from Rimmon-parez, and pitched in Libnah.

21 And they removed from Libnah, and pitched at Rissah.

22 And they journeyed from Rissah, and pitched in Kehelathah.

23 And they went from Kehelathah, and pitched in mount Shapher.

24 And they removed from mount Shapher, and encamped in Haradah.

25 And they removed from Haradah, and pitched in Makheloth.

26 And they removed from Makheloth, and encamped at Tahath.

27 And they departed from Tahath, and pitched at Tarah.

28 And they removed from Tarah, and pitched at Mithcah.

posing the common enemies of the cause, in promoting the salvation of souls, and in securing to their brethren also the heavenly inheritance. If God hath formed us to this disposition, we shall endeavour to avoid all appearance of evil, shall do all in equity and love; shall have a sanctified and comfortable use of our worldly possessions, and shall so pass through things temporal, as not finally lose the good things which are eternal.

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.

CHAP. XXIII.] It is very useful to record at large the principal matters of our own experience, and of God's dealings with his church: and the frequent perusal of such records will be found very profitable, both to awaken our gratitude, to renew our repentance and humiliation, and to encourage our faith and hope in God.—Few of the periods of our lives can be reflected on, without remind-

ing

29 And they went from Mithcah, and pitched in Hashmonah.

30 And they departed from Hashmonah, and encamped at Moseroth.

31 And they departed from Moseroth, and pitched in Bene-jaaken.

32 And they removed from Bene-jaakan, and encamped at Hor-hagidgad.

33 And they went from Hor-hagidgad, and pitched in Jotbathah.

34 And they removed from Jotbathah, and encamped at Ebronah.

35 And they departed from Ebronah, and encamped at Ezion-gaber.

36 And they removed from Ezion-gaber, and pitched in the wilderness of Zin, which is Kadesh.

37 And they removed from Kadesh, and pitched in mount Hor, in the edge of the land of Edom.

38 And Aaron the priest went up into mount Hor, at the commandment of the LORD, and died there, in the fortieth year after the children of Israel were come out of the land of Egypt, in the first day of the fifth month.

39 And Aaron was an hundred and twenty and three years old when he died in mount Hor.

40 And king Arad the Canaanite, which dwelt in the south, in the land of Canaan, heard of the coming of the children of Israel.

41 And they departed from mount Hor, and pitched in Zalmonah.

42 And they departed from Zalmonah, and pitched in Punon.

43 And they departed from Punon, and pitched in Oboth.

44 And they departed from Oboth, and pitched in Ije-abarim, in the border of Moab.

45 And they departed from Iim, and pitched in Dibon-gad.

46 And they removed from Dibon-gad, and encamped in Almon-diblathaim.

47 And they removed from Almon-diblathaim, and pitched in the mountains of Abarim, before Nebo.

48 And they departed from the mountains of Abarim, and pitched in the plains of Moab, by Jordan near Jericho.

49 And they pitched by Jordan, from Beth-jesimoth even unto Abel-shittim, in the plains of Moab.

50 And the LORD spake unto Moses in the plains of Moab, by Jordan near Jericho, saying,

51 Speak unto the children of Israel, and say unto them, When ye are passed over Jordan into the land of Canaan;

52 Then ye shall drive out all the inhabitants of the land from before you, and destroy all their pictures, and destroy all their molten images, and quite pluck down all their high places.

53 And ye shall dispossess the inhabitants of the land, and dwell therein: for I have given you the land to possess it.

54 And ye shall divide the land by lot for an ing us of the Lord's goodness, and of our own ingratitude and disobedience: these, like a double thread, seem to run entwined together through the whole of our experience: and the contrast illustrates both; our unworthiness rendering the kindness of God the more admirable, his kindness rendering our sins more inexcuseable. We could not reasonably wish to travel over again any of the stages through which we have passed; except we could hope by the grace of God to shun the sins which we then committed, or to embrace those opportunities of glorifying God and doing good, which before we slipped. But if we are upright in such desires, they shall be graciously accepted; and we may be thankful, that we have travelled thus far on our pilgrimage to a better country: we may set up our Ebenezer, and praise him, who hath helped us hitherto, and trust in him to bring us safe to our journey's end.—But whatever be our character and state, every day, week, month, and year, whether prosperous or adverse, bears us forward to our long home; and conveys the unbeliever nearer to the gates of hell, the believer nearer to the joys of heaven: and not only those days, which are marked for some important transaction or event, but those which glide away unnoticed and are speedily forgotten.—Soon will our wanderings end, and our eternal state be irrevocably fixed: how important then is the present moment!—Happy are they whom the Lord now guides with his counsel, and will at length receive to his glory! To this felicity the gospel calls us: "Behold now is the accepted "time, behold now is the day of salvation!"—Let sinners seize the precious opportunity, and flee for refuge to the hope set before them. Let us all behold with trembling and keep at a distance from the graves of the lusters; let us fear the doom of the unbelievers, concerning whom the "Lord sware in his wrath, that they should not enter into "his rest:" let us shun the Meribahs and Massahs, at which so many have perished in their murmurings and rebellions. Let us rather prefer the bitter waters of Marah, sweetened with the consolations of the gospel. Let us not an inheritance among your families, and to the more ye shall give the more inheritance, and to the fewer ye shall give the less inheritance: every man's inheritance shall be in the place where his lot falleth: according to the tribes of your fathers ye shall inherit.

53 But if ye will not drive out the inhabitants of the land from before you; then it shall come to pass, that those which ye let remain of them shall be pricks in your eyes, and thorns in your sides, and shall vex you in the land wherein ye dwell.

56 Moreover, it shall come pass, that I shall do unto you as I thought to do unto them.

AND the LORD spake unto Moses, saying,
2 Command the children of Israel, and say unto them, When ye come into the land of Canaan, (this is the land that shall fall unto you for an inheritance, even the land of Canaan, with the coasts thereof,)

3 Then your south quarter shall be from the wilderness of Zin, along by the coast of Edom, and your south border shall be the outmost coast of the salt sea eastward.

4 And your border shall turn from the south to the ascent of Akrabbim, and pass on to Zin: and the going forth thereof shall be from the south to Kadesh-barnea, and shall go on to Hazar-addar, and pass on to Azmon.

5 And the border shall fetch a compass from Azmon unto the river of Egypt, and the goings out of it shall be at the sea.

6 And as for the western border, ye shall even have the great sea for a border: this shall be your west border.

7 And this shall be your north border; from the great sea ye shall point out for you mount Hor.

8 From mount Hor ye shall point out your border unto the entrance of Hamath: and the goings forth of the border shall be to Zedad.

9 And the border shall go on to Ziphron, and the goings out of it shall be at Hazar-enan: this shall be your north border.

10 And ye shall point out your east border from Hazar-enan to Shepham.

11 And the coast shall go down from Shepham to Riblah, on the east side of Ain; and the border shall descend, and shall reach unto the side of the sea of Chinnereth eastward.

12 And the border shall go down to Jordan, and the goings out of it shall be at the salt sea: this shall be your land, with the coasts thereof round about.

13 And Moses commanded the children of Israel, saying, This is the land which ye shall not loiter in our journey, nor think of returning to Egypt, nor fear interposing enemies, difficulties, or death itself. Let us but redeem our time, to glorify God, and serve our generation, and he will carry us safe through all to his eternal kingdom.—But except we separate from sinners, avoid occasions of evil, and crucify our lusts, we must perish: and if we shew any quarter to our sinful propensities, they will gather strength by indulgence, spoil the comfort of our lives, and perhaps "be pricks in our eyes, and "thorns in our sides," when we lie upon a death bed.

NOTES.

CHAP. XXXIV.] V. 3—12.] It was absolutely necessary that the boundaries of the land of Canaan should be exactly ascertained; as the Israelites were commissioned and commanded to dispossess and extirpate the inhabitants of that district: but they must not pretend to push their conquest any further, at that time, or in the same manner; though it was the divine purpose, by various concurrent circumstances, at length to put them in possession of much more extensive territories. (Gen. xv. 18. 2 Sam. viii. 3-8. 1 Kings, iv. 21. 24. 2 Chron. ix. 26.) Without aiming at exactness we may observe, that from the southern extremity of the Dead sea to the river near the entrance of Egypt; and thence by the banks of the Mediterranean sea, and across the country near mount Libanus; and so round by the lake of Tiberias, or sea of Chinnereth, the river Jordan, and the Dead sea, to the southern extremity before mentioned, formed a country not more than one hundred and sixty miles long, and about fifty broad. The mount Hor, here mentioned, was on the northern end of the land, far distant from mount Hor where Aaron died. Though in the days of David and Solomon their dominion extended much farther than the limits here assigned; yet the Israelites scarcely ever actually possessed the whole of this small country: for neglecting the warning given in the former chapter, the ancient inhabitants continued to be very troublesome inmates with them from age to age.—The Dead sea, on which this pleasant land bordered, having been once a still more fertile country, might be an useful lesson to them, to shun those sins which brought such a dreadful judgment upon Sodom and Gomorrah: the wilderness would call to their remembrance their wanderings, rebellions, and mercies there; and the border of [illegible] might remind them, that "they had been bondmen, but that the Lord their "God had redeemed them." Some consider Jordan, as reviving the recollection of the Lord's faithfulness in shall inherit by lot, which the LORD commanded to give unto the nine tribes, and to the half tribe.

14 For the tribe of the children of Reuben, according to the house of their fathers, and the tribe of the children of Gad, according to the house of their fathers, have received their inheritance, and half the tribe of Manasseh have received their inheritance.

15 The two tribes and the half tribe have received their inheritance on this side Jordan near Jericho, eastward, toward the sun-rising.

16 And the LORD spake unto Moses, saying,

17 These are the names of the men which shall divide the land unto you: Eleazar the priest, and Joshua the son of Nun.

18 And ye shall take one prince of every tribe, to divide the land by inheritance.

19 And the names of the men are these: Of the tribe of Judah; Caleb, the son of Jephunneh.

20 And of the tribe of the children of Simeon; Shemuel the son of Ammihud.

21 Of the tribe of Benjamin; Elidad the son of Chislon.

22 And the prince of the tribe of the children of Dan, Bukki the son Jogli.

23 The prince of the children of Joseph, for the tribe of the children of Manasseh; Hanniel the son of Ephod.

24 And the prince of the tribe of the children of Ephraim; Kemuel the son of Shiphtan.

25 And the prince of the tribe of the children of Zebulun; Elizaphan the son of Parnach.

26 And the prince of the tribe of the children of Issachar; Paltiel the son of Azzan.

27 And the prince of the tribe of the children of Asher; Ahihud the son of Shelomi.

28 And the prince of the tribe of the children of Naphtali; Pedahel the son of Ammihud.

29 These are they whom the LORD commanded to divide the inheritance unto the children of Israel in the land of Canaan.

Contains, 1st. The allotment of forty-eight cities with their suburbs to the tribe of Levi, 1—8. 2d. The cities of refuge appointed, with their use; and some laws respecting murder and man-slaughter, 9—34.

AND the LORD spake unto Moses in the plains of Moab by Jordan near Jericho, saying,

2 Command the children of Israel, that they give unto the Levites of the inheritance of in the end of their wanderings; and the great sea, and Lebanon, as emblems of eternity, into which they must shortly enter: but these are not equally obvious, and seem only devised to render the other mementos complete.

V. 29. These are they, &c.] This appointment was an assurance given of conquest to Israel; and to the persons nominated, of preservation from the sword, and from natural death, during the wars. The true Christian soldier fights, encouraged with the assurance given him of victory through the power of Christ. The tribes are here named in different order than before, and nearly in the same arrangement in which their inheritance was allotted them in Canaan: hence it has been supposed, that Moses was led by divine inspiration thus to arrange them, as referring to that event; seeing that was directed by lot, and not by the appointment of men.

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.

Though a comparatively small part of the earth falls to the share of the Lord's people, yet are they said to inherit the earth; because "a little, that the righteous hath, is "better than the riches of many wicked;" more comfortable, and more profitable. For the bounds of their habitation, and the measure of their provision, are so assigned them by the only wise God in tender love, as best tends to forward their salvation; and the increase of grace and peace in their souls. As their provision is generally small, so have their numbers been hitherto few in the comparison; and they have commonly been despised and neglected by the multitude of the turbulent and wicked of the world, being a quiet and peaceable people. But the eye of the Lord is upon them, "his name is their strong "tower;" he knoweth what things they have need of, and hath reserved for them a more enduring inheritance in heaven, and they are kept by his power through faith unto that salvation. May we have our inheritance among them, and not covet riches, or seek, in any improper way, to increase that temporal portion which the Lord allots us: may we be careful not to live beneath our privileges, through sloth, or indulgence of those lusts which mar our spiritual comforts: may we have our names written in the book of life, and have the earnest of the Spirit in our hearts, as an assurance of victory and eternal life; and when our warfare is ended, may we have an inheritance allotted us in heaven, by Jesus, the Prince of all the tribes of the redeemed, to our everlasting and complete satisfaction.

NOTES.

CHAP. XXXV.] V. 2—5.] These cities were designed, not only for the accommodation of the priests and Levites, but for their distribution as religious instructors in the several parts of the land; that they might have the be-of their poſſeſſions cities to dwell in; and ye ſhall give alſo unto the Levites ſuburbs for the cities round about them.

3 And the cities ſhall they have to dwell in, and the ſuburbs of them ſhall be for their cattle, and for their goods, and for all their beaſts.

4 And the ſuburbs of the cities which ye ſhall give unto the Levites, ſhall reach from the wall of the city and outward, a thouſand cubits round about.

5 And ye ſhall meaſure from without the city on the eaſt ſide two thouſand cubits, and on the ſouth ſide two thouſand cubits, and on the weſt ſide two thouſand cubits, and on the north ſide two thouſand cubits; and the city ſhall be in the midſt: this ſhall be to them the ſuburbs of the cities.

6 And among the cities which ye ſhall give unto the Levites there ſhall be ſix cities for refuge, which ye ſhall appoint for the manſlayer, that he may flee thither: and to them ye ſhall add forty and two cities.

7 So all the cities which ye ſhall give to the Levites ſhall be forty and eight cities: them ſhall ye give with their ſuburbs.

8 And the cities which ye ſhall give ſhall be of the poſſeſſion of the children of Iſrael: from them that have many ye ſhall give many; but from them that have few ye ſhall give few: every one ſhall give of his cities unto the Levites according to his inheritance which he inheriteth.

9 And the LORD ſpake unto Moſes, ſaying,

10 Speak unto the children of Iſrael, and ſay unto them, When ye be come over Jordan into the land of Canaan;

11 Then ye ſhall appoint you cities to be cities

nefit of much conference with each other, and conveniently go to the adjacent towns and villages, or receive thoſe who thence reſorted to them for inſtruction. For, though the typical temple-ſervice was limited to one place; the preaching of the word of God, with prayer and praiſe, was not thus confined, but might be attended to any where, with reference to the appointed ſacrifices and prieſthood, and to the ark of the covenant. Thus the curſe pronounced on Levi (Gen. xlix. 7,) was turned into a bleſſing, both to them, and to Iſrael in general. Theſe cities ſeem to have been like our market-towns, and very numerous in that populous and fruitful country. The ſuburb neareſt the city would ſerve for gardens and outhouſes; the larger ſuburb at a greater diſtance would yield paſture for the flocks. The whole reached to nearly a mile on every ſide of each city: and though this, with the tithes and other perquiſites, would be a very plentiful proviſion for this ſmall tribe, we never find that it was complained of by the people as exorbitant.

V. 11—15.] In order to expreſs the greater abhorrence of murder, and to provide the more effectually for the puniſhment of the murderer, the proſecution and execution of the criminal cuſtomarily devolved upon the neareſt relation, under the title of the avenger of blood; who in notorious caſes might purſue him any whither, and execute vengeance without the formalities of a trial. Yet we muſt ſuppoſe that this was only, when the manſlayer was certainly known; and if the avenger of blood raſhly ſlew the wrong perſon, he muſt doubtleſs anſwer for it: for we cannot ſuppoſe that an individual was allowed to put a man to death upon mere ſuſpicion, when the magiſtrates or congregation might not proceed without two poſitive witneſſes to the fact; (ſee Deut. xvii. 6.) This cuſtom however, under certain limitations, was ſanctioned by the divine law: but an equitable proviſion was made for the ſecurity of thoſe who unintentionally ſhed blood. Six cities were appointed in different parts of the land, to which they might flee for refuge, and be ſafe, until a fair trial, whether they had been guilty of murder or not. Some one of theſe cities would lie within half a day's journey of every part of the land. It would rarely occur that the avenger of blood would be on the ſpot, at the time when the accident happened; and none elſe had a right to aſſault or detain the man-ſlayer, at leaſt if no malicious intention was manifeſted. Theſe unhappy men would therefore generally get the ſtart of their adverſaries, and very few of them would be overtaken before they gained the place of refuge. But then they muſt leave their families, employments, and all their moſt important intereſts, and deareſt comforts behind: they muſt not loiter, nor yield to wearineſs, nor regard difficulties, nor at all ſlacken their pace, till they had got ſafe within the walls of the appointed city; which ſecured them in virtue of the divine inſtitution, not by its own natural ſtrength.—To forward thoſe who thus fled for their life, the Jewiſh writers inform us, that the road to thoſe cities was always preſerved in good repair, and way-poſts inſcribed REFUGE were placed wherever they were needful, that they might not ſo much as heſitate for a moment. In this refuge they had no occaſion to fear their accuſers, but might boldly meet them; they had the benefit of a trial, and if acquitted from the charge of murder, were protected from the avenger of blood: yet they muſt continue in the city, and not far from its borders; for if they did the avenger might ſlay them with impunity. Thus they were priſoners at large, but well provided for; and as all theſe cities of refuge were ſelected from among thoſe which belonged to the Levites, they would enjoy the benefit of their converſe, counſel, and inſtructions, whilſt debarred from going up to the temple. Their confinement continued until the death of the high prieſt, when the public loſs, and the grief occaſioned by it, were ſuppoſed to ſwallow up all their perſonal ſorrows; and they were then permitted to return to their former poſſeſſions. In this equitable and ſalutary law we have an eminent type cities of refuge for you; that the slayer may flee thither, which killeth any person at unawares.

12 And they shall be unto you cities for refuge from the avenger; that the manslayer die not, until he stand before the congregation in judgment.

13 And of these cities which ye shall give, six cities shall ye have for refuge.

14 Ye shall give three cities on this side Jordan, and three cities shall ye give in the land of Canaan, which shall be cities of refuge.

15 These six cities shall be a refuge, both for the children of Israel, and for the stranger, and for the sojourner among them; that every one that killeth any person unawares may flee thither.

16 And if he smite him with an instrument of

of the salvation of the gospel. Our sins have provoked the vengeance of our offended God, who by innumerable instruments is continually executing justice upon criminals, and by death conveying them away to everlasting punishment. But in infinite mercy he hath provided a Refuge to which we may flee and be safe; even Christ Jesus, in his glorious person, his mediatorial office, his merits, and grace. The holy law of God declaring his will, and denouncing his wrath against every transgressor, with salutary terror proclaims our danger, and "warns us to flee "from the wrath to come;" the gospel points out "Christ "as the end of the law for righteousness to every one that "believeth:" his ministers are appointed to declare them both, and by all needful instructions, exhortations, and encouragements, to make the way plain to every enquirer. The sinner, who is made really sensible of his urgent danger, and perceives by faith the distant Refuge, will make no more delay; will leave all behind, even his choicest comforts and most valued temporal interests; will disregard all intervening opposition; will not be bribed, amused, or persuaded to loiter, to turn back, or to stop short; but "will "count all but loss for the excellency of the knowledge of "Christ," "that he may win him, and be found in him." The cry of vengeance sounds in his affrighted ears; the sword of justice is behind him; and if death should seize him, ere his sins are washed away in the blood of Christ, his everlasting destruction is inevitable: his all is at stake, and he cannot but attend to this "one thing needful." Thus "he flees for refuge to lay hold on the hope set be-"fore him," and Christ takes him under his own protection: the law is magnified and justice satisfied by his obedience unto death; the offender is justified by God himself, and who shall lay any thing to his charge? "there is "no condemnation for him, he being in Christ Jesus:" in him he still abides, and is safe, until in virtue of the death of the anointed High Priest, he is in due time restored to his forfeited inheritance. (25.) This part of the type had a peculiar significance, before the coming of Christ, whose death is the purchase of our security, of our present comforts, and of our future inheritance. But though the most atrocious offender, whether Jew or Gentile, as well as those who have sinned most ignorantly, may come to Christ and find salvation; yet for him that cometh "he will in no wise cast out:" yet the presumptuous sinner neglects, the hypocrite abides, and the apostate renounces this safeguard, and their deeper condemnation, whilst multitudes, who are alarmed at the danger, are ashamed by mistimed delay, by cleaving to some earthly object, by preferring some self-invented refuge to this which Christ has provided for sinners.

[V. 16—25.] The distinction here made is not between sudden anger and malice prepense (which latter is indeed an aggravation of murder, but not essential to the crime;) but between intentionally striking a man with any weapon likely to cause death, and an unintentional blow. In the latter case alone the city of refuge afforded a man protection. And of this the congregation, by the appointed magistrates, were authorized to judge.

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.

The provision, that God hath appointed for his ministers, was not intended to pamper them in pride, luxury, sloth, or any kind of self-indulgence; by which they would be disqualified for, and led to dislike and despise, their work: but to free them from distracting care; and to leave them at leisure, that they might be wholly employed in the important duties of their station, and avail themselves of every opportunity of conciliating by acts of kindness the good-will of the people, and attention to their instructions. So that the grant and the effect of it when properly used, were intended ultimately and mainly for the advantage of those who bestowed, not of those who received it. But we need not wonder if the sinfulness of man's heart pervert the wisest constitutions, human and divine: and if the abuse made by some, afford others a plausible pretext for neglecting their duty. This however must not be thus dispensed with; though they who furnish the excuse have the deeper guilt.—It is very profitable for the ministers of the gospel to confer frequently together for their mutual encouragement, admonition, and instruction, to increase mutual love, and to give younger ministers the opportunity of profiting by the knowledge, experience, and observations of their seniors; but above all that they may pray much together, for each other personally, for a blessing on each other's labours, for the success of the word, and for the spread of the gospel in every place. And when, with this advantage, a convenient situation for access to a number of willing hearers can be obtained, a minister of Christ has abundant reason for content and thankfulness.—In the maintenance of the ministry, in the support of divine worship, in the provision for the poor, or in any other good work, equality and proportion should be considered, both by those who contribute, and those who receive: for that donation is liberality in some, which is shamefully scanty in those of superior affluence.—It is very important in the administration of justice, that the guilty should not escape, and that the innocent should not suffer: and though the prosecution and execution of criminals be painful, and in many cases an odious employment; yet it must be done, and becomes a necessary duty in some persons who should be guided, in it, by regard to public justice and the safety of society. This is especially the case of iron, (so that he die,) he is a murderer: the murderer shall surely be put to death.

17 And if he smite him with throwing a stone, (wherewith he may die,) and he die, he is a murderer: the murderer shall surely be put to death.

18 Or if he smite him with an hand-weapon of wood, (wherewith he may die,) and he die, he is a murderer: the murderer shall surely be put to death.

19 The revenger of blood himself shall slay the murderer: when he meeteth him he shall slay him.

20 But if he thrust him of hatred, or hurl at him by laying of wait that he die;

21 Or in enmity smite him with his hand, that he die: he that smote him shall surely be put to death; for he is a murderer: the revenger of blood shall slay the murderer when he meeteth him.

22 But if he thrust him suddenly without enmity, or have cast upon him any thing without laying of wait;

23 Or with any stone wherewith a man may die, seeing him not, and cast it upon him that he die, and was not his enemy, neither sought his harm:

24 Then the congregation shall judge between the slayer and the revenger of blood according to these judgments;

25 And the congregation shall deliver the slayer out of the hand of the revenger of blood, and the congregation shall restore him to the city of his refuge, whither he was fled: and he shall abide in it unto the death of the high priest, which was anointed with the holy oil.

26 But if the slayer shall at any time come without the border of the city of his refuge, whither he was fled;

27 And the revenger of blood find him without the borders of the city of his refuge, and the revenger of blood kill the slayer; he shall not be guilty of blood:

28 Because he should have remained in the city of his refuge until the death of the high priest: but after the death of the high priest, the slayer shall return into the land of his possession.

29 So these things shall be for a statute of judgment unto you, throughout your generations, in all your dwellings.

30 Whoso killeth any person, the murderer shall be put to death by the mouth of witnesses: but one witness shall not testify against any person to cause him to die.

31 Moreover ye shall take no satisfaction for the life of a murderer, which is guilty of death: but he shall be surely put to death.

32 And ye shall take no satisfaction for him that is fled to the city of his refuge, that he should come again to dwell in the land, until the death of the priest.

33 So ye shall not pollute the land wherein ye are; for blood it defileth the land: and the case with murder, in all its forms and under all disguises; which so pollutes the land, that nothing but the blood of the murderer, whatever be his rank or quality, can cleanse it. Alas! that such unscriptural and absurd distinctions, and concessions to the maxims of proud ungodly men, should cause so many atrocious murders to pass unpunished; the guilt of which, with incumbent and accumulating weight will, 'tis seriously to be apprehended, help to sink this nation into destruction: this nation, which hath so long been favoured in a peculiar manner in God's providence, and where he hath so long dwelt by his word and ordinances; but which a torrent of infidelity, profaneness, and licentiousness, deluging all before them, evidently marks to be ripening apace for ruin: except in answer to the prayers of his remnant of despised people, "the "Spirit of the Lord lift up a standard against them." Let us all then with one consent present our supplications in behalf of our beloved country, that reformation, and a general revival of pure religion, may avert the judgments of God.—The restrictions, dangers, and inconveniences, which [illegible] bloodshed occasioned, should impress us with horror of the thought of even rashly occasioning death; and increase our caution and circumspection, as well as watchfulness over our passions, and our earnestness in praying to be preserved from such a calamity. But above all let sinners take warning without delay to flee for refuge to Jesus Christ, whatever they renounce, venture, and suffer; let them not stop short, turn back, or loiter; let them not fear a repulse; for the refuge is appointed for the purpose of receiving all such, as are sensible of their danger, and flee to it, how vile soever they have been. Let them abide in the continued exercise of a believing dependence on, and a thankful obedience to, him who died for sinners and rose again: let them only be careful that they abuse not this refuge by encouraging themselves in presumptuous unrepented sin: and let them wait the appointed time, and they shall certainly at length be restored to liberty, and reinstated in their forfeited inheritance. May the Lord grant that neither the writer, nor any of the readers, may be "of those, who draw back "unto perdition!" but that we all may be "of those, who "believe to the saving of the soul!"

NOTES.

the land cannot be cleansed of the blood that is shed therein, but by the blood of him that shed it.

34 Defile not therefore the land which ye shall inhabit, wherein I dwell: for I the LORD dwell among the children of Israel.

CHAP. XXXVI.

Contains, 1st. A difficulty proposed and resolved, concerning the daughters of Zelophehad 1—9. 2d. Their consequent conduct, 10—13.

AND the chief fathers of the families of the children of Gilead, the son of Machir, the son of Manasseh, of the families of the sons of Joseph, came near, and spake before Moses, and before the princes, the chief fathers of the children of Israel;

2 And they said, The LORD commanded my lord to give the land for an inheritance by lot to the children of Israel: and my lord was commanded by the LORD to give the inheritance of Zelophehad our brother unto his daughters.

3 And if they be married to any of the sons of the other tribes of the children of Israel; then shall their inheritance be taken from the inheritance of our fathers, and shall be put to the inheritance of the tribe whereunto they are received: so shall it be taken from the lot of our inheritance.

4 And when the jubilee of the children of Israel shall be, then shall their inheritance be put unto the inheritance of the tribe whereunto they are received: so shall their inheritance be taken away from the inheritance of the tribe of our fathers.

5 And Moses commanded the children of Israel according to the word of the LORD, saying, The tribe of the sons of Joseph hath said well.

6 This is the thing which the LORD doth command concerning the daughters of Zelophehad, saying, Let them marry to whom they think best; only to the family of the tribe of their father shall they marry.

7 So shall not the inheritance of the children of Israel remove from tribe to tribe; for every one of the children of Israel shall keep himself to the inheritance of the tribe of his fathers.

8 And every daughter, that possesseth an inheritance in any tribe of the children of Israel, shall be wife unto one of the family of the tribe of her father, that the children of Israel may enjoy every man the inheritance of his fathers.

9 Neither shall the inheritance remove from one tribe to another tribe; but every one of the tribes of the children of Israel shall keep himself to his own inheritance.

10 Even as the LORD commanded Moses, so did the daughters of Zelophehad:

11 For Mahlah, Tirzah, and Hoglah, and Milcah, and Noah, the daughters of Zelophehad, were married unto their father's brothers' sons.

12 And

NOTES.

CHAP. XXXVI.] V. 1—12.] It does not appear that Manasseh left any son but Machir, or Machir any son but Gilead; from whose posterity, in different families, this whole numerous tribe had sprung. To one division of it a portion had been assigned east of Jordan; (xxvi. 28—34. xxxii. 40. Joshua xiii. 31. 1 Chron. ii. 21—23:) but the division Zelophehad had belonged to, is supposed to have been that, to which an inheritance was afterwards allotted west of Jordan; yet, in expectation of being put in possession according to promise, the elders of the Manassites here propose a difficulty, which had occurred to them upon the adjudged case of Zelophehad's daughters, (xxvii.) If the females should inherit, in default of male issue, those lands which were divided to the tribes by lot; by intermarrying with other tribes, they would diminish the interest and weaken the influence of their own tribes, and give occasion to much future confusion, and perhaps contention, among their posterity about their inheritances. The settling of this matter they referred to Moses, without giving any opinion of their own: and he, by the authority of God, annexed a clause, which would effectually keep the tribes and inheritances distinct, as long as it was observed. Heiresses were not allowed to marry out of their own tribe, though within those bounds they might consult their own inclinations. Probably there had been some prospect of Zelophehad's daughters marrying into another tribe; as both their character and expected inheritance would induce such overtures: but when the will of God was declared, all parties acquiesced, and they were married to their own cousins; not out of necessity, for there were many thousands within the assigned limits; but out of choice and preference, and perhaps because they were the next heirs of the family: and we may hence learn that there is nothing at all improper in such marriages, whatever has been groundlessly supposed.

12 And they were married into the families of the sons of Manasseh, the son of Joseph; and their inheritance remained in the tribe of the family of their father.

13 These are the commandments and the judgments, which the LORD commanded by the hand of Moses unto the children of Israel, in the plains of Moab by Jordan near Jericho.

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.

No laws, however excellent, express, or numerous, can reach in their application, to every particular case which may arise: but still room will be left for the exercise of sound judgment and common sense. When these are regulated according to the spirit of the word of God, and in submission to and dependence on divine teaching, they will guide us through the various perplexities that may occur, as far as our immediate duty is concerned. But the Lord frequently leaves us to feel our difficulties, that we may be habituated to reflect, and led to trust in him more entirely to guide us through and extricate us out of them, for his glory and for our good.—All our intentions and inclinations ought to be subjected to the will of God, when made known to us: and especially in contracting marriage, future consequences to posterity, as well to ourselves and our connections, ought to be taken into consideration.—Though the word of God supposes that esteem, affection, and preference are requisite in this important relation: yet it knows nothing of that irrational, ungovernable, and idolatrous passion, which regardless of all consequences, and in defiance of all authority, rushes headlong upon gratification; which is neither moderated by discretion, nor subornated to the will of God; which is not rational esteem, tender friendship, or congenial affection, but somewhat vastly more rapturous, unintelligible, and undefinable; and which, with all it's refinements, is inconsistent with common sense, the interests of society, the happiness of the marriage-relation, and the Christian religion.—Finally, though it be prudent to foresee and prevent disputes about temporal property; yet it would be better for us, if we were equally quick-sighted and attentive to our spiritual and eternal interests. But "the children of this world are "wiser in their generation than the children of light." (Luke, xvi. 8.)

THE FIFTH BOOK OF MOSES, CALLED DEUTERONOMY.

The name of this book, given it, as those of the former books, were, by the Greek translators, signifies a repetition of the law, and in some measure expresses the nature of it. For many of the former laws are here repeated, some of them with further explanations, and all of them with application to the heart and conscience, by pathetic exhortations, persuasions, and expostulations: and therefore the addresses are not generally prefaced with "The Lord "spake unto Moses, &c." but Moses is introduced preaching to the people from the former revelations of the Lord's will. The most important parts of the foregoing history are also rehearsed, with enlargements, illustrations, practical inferences, and observations. Many precepts, moral, judicial, and ceremonial, not before given, are subjoined, with other entirely new matter, historical, prophetical and poetical. The repetitions were very proper to a new generation of men; and the application of them, both by word of mouth and by writing, was of vast importance, and could not fail to make a deep and durable impression on the minds of the people: and it is an honourable circumstance respecting this book, that all those Scriptures, with which Jesus Christ repelled Satan's temptations, were taken from it. The beginning of the book may be dated rather more than a month before the death of Moses, and it contains the history of what he knew would be the conclusion of his life, and therefore it may be said to comprise his last dying words to Israel. The most remarkable circumstances are, the activity and fervency of Moses, in his zeal for the glory of God, and his affection for Israel, at the close of his life: and the variety of methods which he was inspired of God to employ, in order to leave an impression upon the minds of the people, when he should be taken from them. After having reminded them of the commandments of God, and enforced obedience with immense pathos and enlargement of heart, from every motive imaginable; he set before them the consequences of their conduct in a long catalogue of important blessings and awful curses; and orders were given that some of them should be afterwards ratified, and as it were subscribed to, in a singular manner from mount Ebal and Gerizzim; and which, as prophecies have been fulfilling to this present day, in a most extraordinary manner. He then formed the substance of all his warnings and exhortations into a sacred song, which he communicated to them: and finally, having pronounced prophetical blessings upon the tribes of Israel, and given encouragement to Joshua his successor, he ascended mount Pisgah, viewed the promised land, and died; being buried by God himself, and lamented by Israel for thirty days. Such are the general out-lines of this book; the whole of which shews Moses's entire forgiveness of, and disinterested love for, Israel; and marks him an eminent type of Jesus Christ: it also manifests the Lord's entire reconciliation to the people after all their rebellions. And as the whole of the transactions here recorded must have been exceedingly useful to the Israelites; so will the perusal of them at this distant period prove to us, if we accommodate the history to the Lord's providential and gracious dealings with us, and our conduct towards him; and apply the exhortations and persuasions to our own consciences, to excite our minds to a believing grateful obedience to his commandments.

CHAP. I.

Contains, 1st. The place and time at which the ensuing discourses were delivered, 1—5. 2d. A recapitulation of many passages of the foregoing history; illustrating the goodness of the Lord to the Israelites, and their rebellion against him, 6—46.

2 (There are eleven days journey from Horeb, by the way of mount Seir, unto Kadesh-barnea.)

3 And it came to pass in the fortieth year, in the eleventh month, on the first day of the month, that Moses spake unto the children of Israel, according unto all that the LORD had given him in commandment unto them;

4 After he had slain Sihon the king of the Amorites, which dwelt in Heshbon, and Og the king of Bashan, which dwelt at Astaroth in Edrei.

5 On this side Jordan, in the land of Moab, began Moses to declare this law, saying,

6 The LORD our God spake unto us in Horeb, saying, Ye have dwelt long enough in this mount:

7 Turn you, and take your journey, and go to the mount of the Amorites, and unto all the places nigh thereunto, in the plain, in the hills, and in the vale, and in the south,

NOTES.

CHAP. I.] V. 1. These, &c.] The several names here mentioned cannot be brought to mark out any one place: but the meaning seems to be, that on the banks of Jordan Moses called to the remembrance of the people, the instructions which in those several places had been given them, and the providences which they had there experienced.

V. 2. There are, &c.] This seems to have been mentioned to remind the Israelites, that nothing but their own misconduct had occasioned their tedious wanderings: otherwise they might long before have been in peaceable possession of Canaan, as in eleven days they might have marched from Horeb to the borders of the land. This recapitulation was evidently intended to convince the people of the folly, as well as wickedness, of their conduct. They might perceive upon the review, that nothing else had obstructed their prosperity; and thus the more readily understand the advantages of obedience, and more willingly receive the following exhortations.

V. 5. This law, &c.] The word law is often used with considerable latitude, and sometimes with more distinct precision, which is generally perceivable from the context. There is no reason to suppose that this book contains another law diverse from that given in the foregoing books; and it is evident that it comprises much more than a repetition of the law before given: by this law must therefore be meant, the commands of God, enforced by arguments deduced from their reasonableness and authority, from the consequences which would follow obedience or disobedience, and from the experience of former years. These discourses were doubtless delivered to as many of the people as could come within hearing; and reported to the rest by the priests, Levites, or elders of the several tribes.

V. 6. The, &c.] (Numb. x. 11, 12.) From the time here mentioned the history was resumed.

south, and by the sea-side, to the land of the Canaanites, and unto Lebanon, unto the great river, the river Euphrates.

8 Behold, I have set the land before you: go in and possess the land which the LORD sware unto your fathers, Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob, to give unto them, and to their seed after them.

9 And I spake unto you at that time, saying, I am not able to bear you myself alone:

10 The LORD your God hath multiplied you, and, behold, ye are this day as the stars of heaven for multitude.

11 (The LORD God of your fathers make you a thousand times so many more as ye are, and bless you, as he hath promised you!)

12 How can I myself alone bear your cumbrance, and your burden, and your strife?

13 Take ye wise men, and understanding, and known among your tribes, and I will make them rulers over you.

14 And ye answered me, and said, The thing which thou hast spoken is good for us to do.

15 So I took the chief of your tribes, wise men, and known, and made them heads over you, captains over thousands, and captains over hundreds, and captains over fifties, and captains over tens, and officers among your tribes.

16 And I charged your judges at that time, saying, Hear the causes between your brethren, and judge righteously between every man and his brother, and the stranger that is with him.

17 Ye shall not respect persons in judgment, but ye shall hear the small as well as the great; ye shall not be afraid of the face of man, for the judgment is God's: and the cause that is too hard for you, bring it unto me, and I will hear it.

18 And I commanded you at that time all the things which ye should do.

19 And when we departed from Horeb, we went through all that great and terrible wilderness, which ye saw by the way of the mountain of the Amorites, as the LORD our God commanded us; and we came to Kadesh-barnea.

20 And I said unto you, Ye are come unto the mountain of the Amorites, which the LORD our God doth give unto us.

21 Behold, the LORD thy God hath set the land before thee: go up and possess it, as the LORD God of thy fathers hath said unto thee: fear not, neither be discouraged.

22 And ye came near unto me every one of you, and said, We will send men before us, and they shall search us out the land, and bring us word again by what way we must go up, and into what cities we shall come.

23 And the saying pleased me well: and I took twelve men of you, one of a tribe.

24 And they turned and went up into the mountain, and came unto the valley of Eshcol, and searched it out.

25 And they took of the fruit of the land in their hands, and brought it down unto us, and brought us word again, and said, It is a good land which the LORD our God doth give us.

26 Notwithstanding ye would not go up, but rebelled against the commandment of the LORD your God.

27 And ye murmured in your tents, and said, Because

V. 11. The Lord God, &c.] In little more than two hundred years the people had been multiplied much above 10,000 times: the promise of God did not limit the number to which they should be increased, nor did the faith and prayer of Moses; for a large definite number is taken for an indefinite increase. Under Pharaoh their numbers excited jealousy and cruelty; but Moses delighted in, and prayed for their still greater, increase. This was therefore a tacit reproof of their murmurings and wishes to return into Egypt: and he evidently introduced this whole subject to remind them, that in his administration he sought not his own grandeur or advantage, but their good; and that in the most laborious, patient, and disinterested manner.

V. 12—16.] The counsel here referred to was suggested by Jethro before the giving of the law; (Notes, &c. Exod. xviii.) Moses in consequence proposed it to the Lord, who approved of it; and with the concurrence of the people it at length took place about the time when they departed from Horeb, and at no great distance from the appointment of the seventy elders; (Numb. xi.) though the former must have been distinct from the latter, and much more numerous, being according to the number of the thousands and hundreds, over whom they probably presided in a civil and military capacity, yet with subordination; and therefore the superiors of them might be called judges, (16:) or else these judges were the seventy elders, afterwards appointed.

V. 22—26.] (Notes, &c. Numb. xiii—xiv.) The people proposed this expedient in unbelief: Moses mistaking their intention, and the tendency of the measure, approved of it; and the Lord in just displeasure permitted them to follow their Becauſe the LORD hated us, he hath brought us forth out of the land of Egypt, to deliver us into the hand of the Amorites, to deſtroy us.

28 Whither ſhall we go up? our brethren have diſcouraged our heart, ſaying, The people is greater and taller than we; the cities are great and walled up to heaven; and, moreover, we have ſeen the ſons of the Anakims there.

29 Then I ſaid unto you, Dread not, neither be afraid of them.

30 The LORD your God which goeth before you, he ſhall fight for you, according to all that he did for you in Egypt, before your eyes;

31 And in the wilderneſs, where thou haſt ſeen how that the LORD thy God bare thee as a man doth bear his ſon, in all the way that ye went, until ye came into this place.

32 Yet in this thing ye did not believe the LORD your God, 33 Who went in the way before you, to ſearch you out a place to pitch your tents in, in fire by night, to ſhew you by what way ye ſhould go, and in a cloud by day.

34 And the LORD heard the voice of your words and was wroth, and ſware, ſaying, 35 Surely there ſhall not one of theſe men of this evil generation ſee that good land which I ſware to give unto your fathers;

36 Save Caleb the ſon of Jephunneh, he ſhall ſee it; and to him will I give the land that he hath trodden upon, and to his children, becauſe he hath wholly followed the LORD.

37 Alſo the LORD was angry with me for your ſakes, ſaying, Thou alſo ſhalt not go in thither.

38 But Joſhua the ſon of Nun, which ſtandeth before thee, he ſhall go in thither: encourage him; for he ſhall cauſe Iſrael to inherit it.

39 Moreover, your little ones, which ye ſaid ſhould be a prey, and your children, which in that day had no knowledge between good and evil, they ſhall go in thither, and unto them will I give it, and they ſhall poſſeſs it.

40 But as for you, turn ye, and take your journey into the wilderneſs, by the way of the Red ſea.

41 Then ye anſwered and ſaid unto me, We have ſinned againſt the LORD, we will go up and fight, according to all that the LORD our God commanded us. And when ye had girded on every man his weapons of war, ye were ready to go up into the hill.

42 And the LORD ſaid unto me, ſay unto them, Go not up, neither fight: for I am not among you; leſt you be ſmitten before your enemies.

43 So I ſpake unto you, and ye would not hear, but rebelled againſt the commandment of the LORD, and went preſumptuouſly up into the hill.

44 And the Amorites which dwelt in that mountain came out againſt you, and chaſed you as bees do, and deſtroyed you in Seir, even unto Hormah.

45 And ye returned, and wept before the LORD; but the LORD would not hearken to your voice, nor give ear unto you.

their own counſel; which proved injurious to them only through their ſin.

V. 31. The Lord, &c.] Moſes in the bitterneſs of his ſpirit, when ſorely tried, had haſtily ſpoken, as if he had been required to bear Iſrael as a man doth his ſon, (Num. xi. 12:) but he here retracted it, and allowed that the Lord himſelf had borne them.

V. 32. Ye did not believe, &c.] The perſons, whom Moſes addreſſed, were another generation than that which had been ſentenced for unbelief to fall in the wilderneſs: but many of them might be concerned, though not of age; they evidenced very ſtrongly a diſpoſition to imitate the ſin of their fathers; and they formed the ſame nation, the ſame body corporate, though not the ſame individuals.—All their diſobedience is here charged upon their unbelief, which was it's root and firſt principle; as all true obedience ſprings from faith, in it's varied and diſtinct exerciſes.

V. 37. Was angry, &c.] It was natural for Moſes here to introduce this ſubject, though the event took place long after that of which he was diſcourſing; for it would occur to his mind that he too was excluded, and thus involved in the general ſentence, and that in conſequence of his being overcome by a temptation, which the unbelief of the people had laid in his way. This he mentioned, not to excuſe himſelf, but to humble them: and he would moreover remind them, that they heard the words of a dying man, and of one to whoſe death they had been acceſſary.

V. 44. As bees do, &c.] Bees with their ſtings aſſault, and have been known to kill, both men and cattle that have come near their hives.

46 So ye abode in Kadesh many days, according unto the days that ye abode there.

Contains, 1st. A continuation of the discourse of Moses, reminding the people of the charge that they had received, not to disturb the Edomites, Moabites, and Ammonites; which is blended with some fragments of very ancient history, and with an account of the Israelites' wasting in the wilderness, till the condemned generation was destroyed, 1—23. 2d. The grant and conquest of the kingdom of Sihon, &c. 24—37.

THEN we turned, and took our journey into the wilderness by the way of the Red sea, as the LORD spake unto me: and we compassed mount Seir many days.

2 And the LORD spake unto me, saying,

3 Ye have compassed this mountain long enough: turn you northward.

4 And command thou the people, saying, Ye are to pass through the coast of your brethren the children of Esau, which dwell in Seir, and they shall be afraid of you: take ye good heed unto yourselves therefore.

5 Meddle not with them: for I will not give you of their land, no not so much as a foot-

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.

With advancing years and experience, the faithful servants of the Lord frequently acquire increasing reputation for wisdom, gravity, integrity, piety, and disinterested love to their fellow-creatures; as well as zeal for the glory of God. These add to their influence, and give weight to their instructions; and if their health permit, they may with vast advantage redouble their diligence in enforcing the truths which they have taught, in their practical tendency upon the consciences of the people, that they may have them in remembrance, and be influenced by them after their decease: (2 Pet. i. 12—15.) Whilst they draw nearer to the heavenly world, they often seem to breathe a purer air, and all their words have a heavenly savour; their motion accelerates as they approach their rest; their earnestness increases, when it can have no earthly motive to induce it; and their confidence and comfort are enlarged, in defiance of the approaching king of terrors: these concurring circumstances render their instructions doubly impressive, and they frequently have a durable effect upon the survivors.—The ministers of God should take every opportunity of putting the people in remembrance of his faithfulness, goodness, power, and wisdom, as manifested in his dealings towards them; and there may be seasons when it is proper, with modesty and humility, to call to their serious and dispassionate recollection, the evidences of their own love to souls, as displayed in their faithful labours, unwearied patience, and chearful self-denying sufferings for their eternal welfare; in order to obviate prejudice, and to obtain a more favourable attention to their further instructions and exhortations, referring all to the glory of God. But when this is deemed expedient, it is likewise necessary to shew the people their transgressions, that they may be duly humbled for them; the fatal effects of unbelief and disobedience, that they may watch against them; and the advantages of confidence in God and obedience to him, that they may follow after them: It will be proper also to unite with these instructions memorials of their own imperfection and sinfulness, both to abate the offence, to suggest encouragement, and for personal humiliation.—If it be highly useful for ministers thus to contrast the Lord's goodness and the people's misconduct, in tracing the outlines of their past experience: it is still more profitable for each of us frequently to meditate on such subjects, and to set apart time for that purpose; to divide our past lives into distinct periods; to review them separately; to give thanks for the mercies, which we can recollect to have received in each successive period; to confess and seek forgiveness of all the sins, which we can call to our remembrance; and thus having endeavoured to revive suitable affections; with earnest prayers and simple dependence on the Lord, to renew our acceptance of his salvation, and surrender of ourselves to his service.—Without repeating what has already been observed on the history here recapitulated; we may take notice in general that nothing but total unbelief, and the disobedience which results from it, can exclude any sinner from the promised rest; that unbelief, partially operating in disobedience, occasions manifold abatements and delays in our comforts; that our own expedients seldom avail to much good purpose; that courage, in the exercise of faith, and in the path of duty, enables the possessor to follow the Lord wholly, to disregard all obstructions, to triumph over all opposition, and to seize the promised blessings; that all the mercies we receive render our distrust more inexcusable; that the sins of some are the temptations of others, and involve both parties in guilt and punishment; that worldly sorrow is seldom better than impatience and rebellion, and thus worketh death; and that they, who do not exercise godly sorrow in due time, nor obey the call of mercy, must weep with bitter unavailing sorrow, when the sentence of condemnation is irrevocably past.—Finally we may observe, that every public and honourable trust implies a very heavy and laborious duty, and that frequently the duty is particularly described.—Happy is it for themselves, and for those around them, when men diligently search out, meditate upon, and pray over, such passages of the word of God, as describe their duties, and shew them what manner of persons they ought to be in that station of life, in which the providence of God has placed them: and then in the fear of God, as under his eye, and with reference to the day of judgment, endeavour to regulate their public and private conduct, according to these excellent practical admonitions.

NOTES.

CHAP. II.] V. 3. We have compassed, &c.] Here again an almost total silence is observed concerning more than thirty-seven years of the time, which the Israelites passed in foot-breadth; because I have given mount Seir unto Esau for a possession.

6 Ye shall buy meat of them for money, that ye may eat; and ye shall also buy water of them for money, that ye may drink.

7 For the LORD thy God hath blessed thee in all the works of thy hand; he knoweth thy walking through this great wilderness; these forty years the LORD thy God hath been with thee; thou hast lacked nothing.

8 And when we passed by from our brethren the children of Esau, which dwelt in Seir, through the way of the plain from Elath, and from Ezion-gaber, we turned, and passed by the way of the wilderness of Moab.

9 And the LORD said unto me, Distress not the Moabites, neither contend with them in battle; for I will not give thee of their land for a possession, because I have given Ar unto the children of Lot for a possession.

10 The Emims dwelt therein in times past, a people great and many, and tall as the Anakims;

11 Which also were accounted giants, as the Anakims, but the Moabites call them Emims.

12 The Horims also dwelt in Seir beforetime: but the children of Esau succeeded them, when they had destroyed them from before them, and dwelt in their stead, as Israel did unto the land of his possession which the LORD gave unto them.

13 Now rise up, said I, and get you over the brook Zered; and we went over the brook Zered.

14 And the space in which we came from Kadesh-barnea, until we were come over the brook Zered, was thirty and eight years; until all the generation of the men of war were wasted out from among the host, as the LORD sware unto them.

15 For indeed the hand of the LORD was against them, to destroy them from among the host, until they were consumed.

16 So it came to pass, when all the men of war were consumed and dead from among the people,

17 That the LORD spake unto me, saying,

18 Thou art to pass over through Ar, the coast of Moab, this day.

19 And when thou comest nigh over against the children of Ammon, distress them not, nor meddle with them: for I will not give thee of the land of the children of Ammon any possession, because I have given it unto the children of Lot for a possession.

20 (That also was accounted a land of giants: giants dwelt therein in old time, and the Ammonites call them Zamzummims; in the wilderness, from the sentence of condemnation being denounced, until the criminals were nearly all executed. We may however suppose that Moses, Aaron, and others of the priests and Levites were diligently employed in instructing the people; and that this dispensation was overruled for the preparing many for death and heaven, even "of them whose "carcases fell in the wilderness;" and also for humbling and proving the survivors, and preparing them for a suitable behaviour in the land of Canaan: and that there was no time really lost by this tedious delay, as it would appear to them. In the mean time the Canaanites, elated with their first success, and perceiving their dreaded invaders gone back and entangled in the wilderness, probably feared no more from that quarter, but grew more insolent and daring in wickedness, and were ripening apace for destruction.

21 A people great and many, and tall as the

V. 7. He knoweth, &c.] The Lord had noticed, guided, and guarded the people, in all their marches and counter marches in the wilderness; and for forty years had blessed them with an abundant supply of every needful good: they needed not therefore to covet the possessions of Edom, having such an all-sufficient and tried Friend to trust to. Moses called the Edomites, brethren, (3.) though they would not acknowledge or act according to that relation; for we must do our duty to our relatives, though they fail of theirs towards us. Thus Israel was taught to forgive their enemies, before they were employed to execute vengeance on the enemies of the Lord: and it is observable that no mention is here made of the opposition of the Edomites; for the Spirit, which spake by Moses, would not needlessly repeat such grievances, but bury them in oblivion: (Numb. xx. 14—21.)

V. 10. Emims.] This name is interpreted to mean the terrible ones; as the word Zamzummim may mean the crafty ones. (20.) All the nations here mentioned seem to have been of the posterity of Ham, that lay under the prophetical curse of Noah, which was thus executed upon them. (Gen. xiv. 5, 6.)

V. 12. As Israel did, &c.] Some render this, as Israell shall do, &c.; whilst others suppose that some few such additions were made by other inspired writers in later times.

V. 10. Brook Zered.] Or valley, (Numb. xxi. 20.)

V. 20—23.] All these ancient histories were introduced for the encouragement of the Israelites. If the Lord destroyed these gigantic people before the posterity of Lot, and of Esau; what cause had the posterity of Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob, his chosen servants and friends, to fear

the Anakims; but the LORD deſtroyed them before them, and they ſucceeded them, and dwelt in their ſtead:

22 As he did to the children of Eſau which dwelt in Seir, when he deſtroyed the Horims from before them; and they ſucceeded them, and dwelt in their ſtead, even unto this day:

23 And the Avims, which dwelt in Hazerim, even unto Azzah, the Caphtorims, which came forth out of Caphtor, deſtroyed them, and dwelt in their ſtead.)

24 Riſe ye up, take your journey, and paſs over the river Arnon: behold, I have given into thy hand Sihon the Amorite, king of Heſhbon, and his land: begin to poſſeſs it, and contend with him in battle.

25 This day will I begin to put the dread of thee, and the fear of thee, upon the nations that are under the whole heaven, who ſhall hear report of thee, and ſhall tremble and be in anguiſh becauſe of thee.

26 And I ſent meſſengers out of the wilderneſs of Kedemoth unto Sihon king of Heſhbon, with words of peace, ſaying, 27 Let me paſs through thy land: I will go along by the high-way, I will neither turn unto the right hand nor to the left.

28 Thou ſhalt ſell me meat for money, that I may eat; and give me water for money, that I may drink: only I will paſs through on my feet, 29 (As the children of Eſau which dwelt in Seir, and the Moabites which dwelt in Ar, did unto me;) until I ſhall paſs over Jordan, into the land which the LORD our God giveth us.

30 But Sihon king of Heſhbon would not let us paſs by him: for the LORD thy God hardened his ſpirit, and made his heart obſtinate, that he might deliver him into thy hand, as appeareth this day.

31 And the LORD ſaid unto me, Behold, I have begun to give Sihon and his land before thee: begin to poſſeſs, that thou mayeſt inherit his land.

32 Then Sihon came out againſt us, he and all his people, to fight at Jahaz.

33 And the LORD our God delivered him before us, and we ſmote him, and his ſons, and all his people.

34 And we took all his cities at that time, and utterly deſtroyed the men, and the women, and the little ones, of every city; we left none to remain:

35 Only the cattle we took for a prey unto ourſelves, and the ſpoil of the cities which we took.

36 From Aroer, which is by the brink of the the Anakims though ſtrong, or the Canaanites though numerous; when they acted by his ſpecial commiſſion, had the ſecurity of ſucceſs in his promiſe, and the pledge of future victory in his preſence amongſt them, and the wonders which he had already wrought for them; and when they were the only nation of worſhippers of the Lord, in the ordinances of his inſtitution, that were to be found on earth? Nothing could poſſibly hurt them but unbelief and diſobedience, which had brought down the wrath of the Lord upon their fathers.

V. 24. Begin to poſſeſs, &c.] Hitherto the Iſraelites had poſſeſſed neither lands nor cities, but had been ſupported by miracle as wanderers in the waſte deſert: but now they were to begin to have poſſeſſions of houſes and eſtates, and to ſubſiſt as other people did. The word it is not in the original, and might well have been ſpared out of the tranſlation.

V. 26. And I ſent, &c.] (Notes, &c. Numb. xxi. 21—35.) The Lord's ſecret purpoſes cannot poſſibly be either the rule or motive of our conduct: and therefore they can have no influence upon the innocence or criminality of our actions. Whatever the Lord's intentions or intimations to Iſrael were; Sihon knowing nothing of them, could not be induced by them, but by his own pride, obſtinacy, and preſumption, to refuſe the propoſal of peace which was made him; and ought therefore to have attributed all the conſequences to his own miſconduct. The propoſal was made in ſincerity, and had he acceded to it he had doubtleſs been ſpared: but the Lord, for wiſe and righteous reaſons, was pleaſed to leave him to himſelf, well knowing what the conſequence would be. Thus this meſſage tended to diſcover the wickedneſs of his diſpoſition, and to illuſtrate the juſtice of God in the deſtruction of ſo haughty and determined an enemy of himſelf and of his people. All this tends to elucidate the propoſals of the goſpel-ſalvation to ſinners, who yet are left to the pride and ungodlineſs of their own hearts, and refuſe ſuch great ſalvation to their own deeper condemnation.

V. 29. As the, &c.] Hence it appears that the Edomites and Moabites on ſome occaſions ſold the Iſraelites victuals, and other neceſſaries, though they conſented not to their paſſage through their country, and were otherwiſe inimical to them.

V. 30. Hardened, &c.] Moſes was accuſtomed to view things in this light, and to ſpeak of them in this language; for the proper meaning of which the reader muſt be referred to the notes and practical obſervations upon the hiſtory of Pharaoh, from the 1ſt to the 16th chapter of Exodus inclusive.

V. 34. And, &c.] (Note, Numb. xxxi. 2.)

THEN we turned, and went up the way to Bashan; and Og the king of Bashan came out against us, he and all his people, to battle at Edrei.

2 And the LORD said unto me, Fear him not: for I will deliver him, and all his people, and his land, into thy hand; and thou shalt do unto him as thou didst unto Sihon king of the Amorites, which dwelt at Heshbon.

3 So the LORD our God delivered into our hands Og also the king of Bashan, and all his people: and we smote him, until none was left to him remaining.

4 And we took all his cities at that time; there was not a city which we took not from them, threescore cities, all the region of Argob, the kingdom of Og in Bashan.

5 All these cities were fenced with high walls, gates, and bars, beside unwalled towns a great many.

6 And we utterly destroyed them, as we did unto Sihon king of Heshbon, utterly destroying the men, women, and children of every city.

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.

The servants of God, whilst they despise worldly possessions in comparison of a treasure in heaven, and often live and die poor, are the only persons who lay up and leave to their children durable riches, in those manifold blessings which the Lord bestows on their posterity for their sakes.—"The earth is the Lord's, and the fulness "thereof," and he dispossesses nations at pleasure, in perfect justice, absolute sovereignty, and irresistible power, and disposes of every country to whom he pleases: but, without an express commission, none can plead his grant in excuse for the excesses, which, in ambition, rapacity, or revenge, they commit, whilst unwittingly they fulfil his secret purposes. When nations or individuals are ripe for destruction, having filled up the measure of their iniquity, the Lord in awful judgment gives them up to final and total obduracy; and their desperate wickedness both occasions their ruin, and manifests his righteousness in it: and when this is the case, the wisest are miserably infatuated, and the boldest speedily intimidated; they tremble and are in anguish, and so perish as instructive examples to the survivors. But, calling our attention off from these enemies of the Lord, to reflect upon his dealings with his people Israel, we are led to meditate upon years spent in vanity, through our transgressions and the Lord's indignation: a succession of uninteresting events and changes, of unprofitable employments and pursuits, of disappointed expectations and unsatisfying enjoyments, wear out the life of man, and bring one generation after another to the grave. Indeed ever since the sentence was passed upon offending man, "Dust thou art, and unto dust shalt "thou return," "the hand of the Lord hath been against "us to destroy us until we are consumed:" nor can wisdom, learning, authority, wealth, courage, vigour of constitution, or eminence of reputation, procure any exemption or respite in this universal execution: nay, even faith and piety plead in vain for another passage to the heavenly felicity; (Notes, &c. 2 Cor. v. 2—4.) Thus in every thing, what the mouth of the Lord hath spoken, his hand is engaged to perform. Wretched therefore are they, who, through impenitency and unbelief, abide and die under the incumbent weight of that "wrath from heaven, "which is revealed against all ungodliness and unrighteousness of men," in a future state! But happy they, whom "Jesus hath delivered from the wrath to "come," and to whom he hath given "the earnest of "his Spirit in their hearts." "All things are their's:" all the promises of God belong to them, and are ratified by covenant and by oath. His arm is engaged on their behalf, to perform all his word: "he knows," guides, guards, and approves their path, whilst "walking "through this great wilderness:" for the twenty, thirty, forty, fifty, or even eighty years, of their past lives, they have lacked nothing, but have had all with a peculiar blessing. The Lord is their portion, nor need they envy the prosperity, or covet the possession of any worldling: he, who hath prepared for them an incorruptible inheritance, and taught them in the first place to seek it, will provide for them all that is needful and profitable by the way. They have only to submit to the Lord's disposal; to depend on and obey him; to abstain from what he forbids, and deny themselves when he requires it in his providence, or by his precept; to receive what he gives with thankfulness, and to use it with moderation; to endeavour to glorify him and adorn their profession, by an upright, generous, disinterested, forgiving and blameless deportment; not injurious to their enemies, nor needlessly burdensome to their friends; and "doing to all men, as they "would they should do unto them." Persevering in this course, the vanity of the world cannot prevent their comfort, nor can its opposition and tribulation interrupt the inward serenity of their minds: their inheritance cannot be affected by the revolutions of kingdoms, or the cities, we took for a prey to ourselves.

8 And we took at that time out of the hand of the two kings of the Amorites the land that was on this side Jordan, from the river of Arnon unto mount Hermon;

9 (Which Hermon the Sidonians call Sirion; and the Amorites call it Shenir;)

10 All the cities of the plain, and all Gilead, and all Bashan, unto Salchah and Edrei, cities of the kingdom of Og in Bashan.

11 For only Og king of Bashan remained of the remnant of giants; behold, his bedstead was a bedstead of iron: is it not in Rabbath of the children of Ammon? nine cubits was the length thereof, and four cubits the breadth of it, after the cubit of a man.

12 And this land, which we possessed at that time, from Aroer, which is by the river Arnon, and half mount Gilead, and the cities thereof, gave I unto the Reubenites and to the Gadites.

13 And the rest of Gilead, and all Bashan, being the kingdom of Og, gave I unto the half tribe of Manasseh; all the region of Argob, with all Bashan, which was called the land of giants.

14 Jair the son of Manasseh took all the country of Argob unto the coasts of Geshuri and Maachathi, and called them after his own name, Bashan-havoth-jair, unto this day.

15 And I gave Gilead unto Machir.

16 And unto the Reubenites, and unto the Gadites, I gave from Gilead even unto the river Arnon, half the valley, and the border, even unto the river Jabbok, which is the border of the children of Ammon;

17 The plain also, and Jordan, and the coast thereof, from Chinnereth even unto the sea of the plain, even the salt sea, under Ashdoth-pisgah eastward.

18 And I commanded you at that time, saying, The LORD your God hath given you this land to possess it: ye shall pass over armed before your brethren the children of Israel, all that are meet for the war.

19 But your wives, and your little ones, and your cattle, (for I know that ye have much cattle,) shall abide in your cities which I have given you;

20 Until the LORD have given rest unto your brethren, as well as unto you, and until they also possess the land which the LORD your God hath given them beyond Jordan: and then shall ye return every man unto his possession, which I have given you.

21 And I commanded Joshua at that time, saying, Thine eyes have seen all that the LORD your God hath done unto these two kings: so shall the LORD do unto all the kingdoms whither thou passest.

22 Ye shall not fear them: for the LORD your God he shall fight for you.

23 And I besought the LORD at that time, saying,

24 O Lord God, thou hast begun to shew thy servant thy greatness, and thy mighty hand: for what god is there in heaven or in earth, that can do according to thy works, and according to thy might?

25 I pray thee, let me go over and see the good land that is beyond Jordan, that goodly mountain, and Lebanon.

26 But the LORD was wroth with me for your mutability of earthly possessions; death, with all its terrors and agonies, cannot hurt, and need not alarm them: all will combine in preparing them for heaven, and giving them the anticipation, and introducing them to the enjoyment, of those pleasures, which never satiate, and will never end. May this salvation, O Lord, be ours!

NOTES.

CHAP. III.] V. 11. Og, Or, &c.] It appears from this, that Og was descended from a race of giants of larger stature than even the Anakims who so terrified the Israelites.—If his bedstead of iron was intended for use, and not for ostentation, his bulk must have been enormous; as it was at least five yards long, and above two broad. By some means or other this bedstead was carried to Rabbath, and there preserved as a monument of his stature, or of Israel's victory; for neither his vast strength, nor his numerous forces, could secure him against God, who fought for his people. This race of giants was soon extinct, but others remained within the land of Canaan, of whom we shall read in the history of David. (Calmet.)

V. 23. I besought, &c.] That is, I prayed, I addressed myself to the Lord. (Num. xxiii.)

Vs. 24—26. This prayer of Moses manifests a high valuation of the promised land, and an earnest desire of inheriting the privileges and felicities of it: but the Lord, in putting the Israelites in possession of it by the destruction of their enemies, had probably not yet irrevocably confirmed the sentence which he doth, and Moses had prevailed in behalf of Israel more than once in similar circumstances; other servants of the Lord have continued praying, after such declarations; (2 Sam. xii. 14—18. Isai. xxxviii.

your sakes, and would not hear me: and the LORD said unto me, Let it suffice thee; speak no more unto me of this matter.

27 Get thee up into the top of Pisgah, and lift up thine eyes westward, and northward, and southward, and eastward, and behold it with thine eyes: for thou shalt not go over this Jordan.

28 But charge Joshua, and encourage him, and strengthen him; for he shall go over before this people, and he shall cause them to inherit the land which thou shalt see.

29 So we abode in the valley over against Beth-peor.

xxxviii. 1—15:) and there appears not to have been any thing displeasing to the Lord in his request, though, for an example to Israel, he did not please to grant it: but doubtless he brought Moses to acquiesce in the refusal. Thus he prevailed for Israel, but for himself he could not prevail; which made him the more proper type of Christ, "who saved others, himself he could not save," that is, consistently with his design of saving others. Had the Jews remembered this circumstance concerning Moses, they could not well have made the other a matter of reviling to Christ.

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.

Nothing more hastens the destruction of sinners, than overlooking those examples of the Lord's justice which are set before them for their warning, and rushing forward in the same steps which have brought others to a miserable end.—All those advantages, with which men are naturally pleased, of which they are vain, and on which they depend, eventually conduce to their more speedy ruin and deeper condemnation, whenever they increase their pride, security, and boldness in transgression: so far are riches, power, worldly wisdom, and courage from profiting their ungodly possessors!—No arm can be strong when the Lord is against the Almighty; and he that assaults his church wages war against him. In this case especially "the battle "is not to the strong, nor the race to the swift:" his most insolent and presumptuous enemies will soon lie down in despair; and his feeblest and most timid friends have no cause to fear. His promise secures success in every undertaking, to which he commands them; and not only victory over, but abundant advantage from, every foe that assaults them; "the wealth of the sinner being laid up for the "just." Every experience of the Lord's faithfulness is a sure pledge of further mercies, and encouraging all his people shall be made heirs of the righteousness which is of faith." (Heb. xi. 7.)—But are we of that number? Do we seek redemption through Jesus Christ, and trust in his righteousness? Do we rejoice in his grace, when it has prevailed upon us to obey his commandments, and keep his statutes gloriously. Else the fairest professions from heaven are dead inactive faith deserves condemnation; and even the sins of believers are chastised with mercy, while the withholding of wonted manifestations, and the refusal of their prayers for such mercies, as are not immediately connected with salvation. If this should be the case, let us kiss the rod, and seek to profit by our chastening. And if we have the earnest and prospects of heaven; let that suffice us, let us acquiesce in the Lord's will, and speak no more to him of other matters, which he sees good to refuse us.—When we are about to leave the world, the same principle, which hath before induced us to contribute, as we were able, to promote the cause of God and the good of his church, will dispose us to rejoice in the prospect of the good work being carried on by other and more honoured instruments; and will make us wish to close our eyes exhorting and encouraging our survivors to be valiant for the truth, assured that the Lord will fight for them and make them successful.

NOTES.

CHAP. IV.] V. 1. Now, &c.] The power of God, and his love to Israel, as delineated in the foregoing recapitulation of their history, are in this chapter improved as the ground and reason of a variety of practical admonitions and exhortations. The abstract of the argument may be thus stated. 'As the Lord hath manifested himself so able and willing to deliver, protect, and bless you; take heed that you do not forfeit his favour by disobedience; but from gratitude for past mercies, and in order to secure the continuance of his favour, make it your constant study and care to worship him alone, to depend on his promises and providence, to submit to his authority; as a nation governed by his judgments, and as individuals walking in all his ordinances and commandments. This is your true wisdom, this will certainly advance you to greatness, prosperity, and reputation, and secure your felicity; whereas the contrary conduct will surely issue in misery and ruin.' The subsequent practical instructions seem to be thus inferred from the preceding historical memorials; and they are enforced by every argument, and every motive, imaginable. There is indeed a continual reference to the national covenant made with Israel: yet the whole may be evangelically accommodated to the case of those who live under the gospel dispensation, and to that of true Christians; whilst it directly suits the state of nations favoured with the light of revelation.

[illegible] many, &c.] The Israelites had witnessed many instances, in which disobedience was punished with immediate death. On that account their fathers had been doomed to die in the wilderness; nor could they expect to possess Canaan if they were not obedient.—Our obedience the LORD God of your fathers giveth you.

2 You shall not add unto the word which I command you, neither shall ye diminish ought from it, that ye may keep the commandments of the LORD your God, which I command you.

3 Your eyes have seen what the LORD did because of Baal-peor: for all the men that followed Baal-peor, the LORD thy God hath destroyed them from among you.

4 But ye that did cleave unto the LORD your God are alive every one of you this day.

5 Behold I have taught you statutes and judgments, even as the LORD my God commanded me, that ye should do so in the land whither ye go to possess it.

6 Keep therefore, and do them; for this is your wisdom and your understanding in the sight of the nations, which shall hear all these statutes, and say, Surely this great nation is a wise and understanding people.

7 For what nation is there so great, who hath God so nigh unto them, as the LORD our God is in all things that we call upon him for?

8 And what nation is there so great, that hath statutes and judgments so righteous, as all this law which I set before you this day?

9 Only take heed to thyself, and keep thy soul diligently, lest thou forget the things which thine eyes have seen, and lest they depart from thy heart all the days of thy life; but teach them thy sons, and thy son's sons:

10 Specially the day that thou stoodest before the LORD thy God in Horeb, when the LORD said unto me, Gather me the people together, and I will make them hear my words, that they may learn to fear me all the days that they shall live upon the earth, and that they may teach their children.

11 And ye came near, and stood under the mountain, and the mountain burned with fire unto the midst of heaven, with darkness, clouds, and thick darkness.

12 And the LORD spake unto you out of the midst of the fire: ye heard the voice of the words, but saw no similitude; only ye heard a voice.

13 And he declared unto you his covenant, which he commanded you to perform, even ten commandments; and he wrote them upon two tables of stone.

14 And the LORD commanded me at that time to teach you statutes and judgments, that ye might do them in the land whither ye go over to possess it.

15 Take ye therefore good heed unto yourselves, (for ye saw no manner of similitude on the day that the LORD spake unto you in Horeb out of the midst of the fire,)

16 Lest ye corrupt yourselves, and make you a graven image, the similitude of any figure, the likeness of male or female;

17 The likeness of any beast that is on the earth, the likeness of any winged fowl that flieth in the air;

18 The likeness of any thing that creepeth on the ground, the likeness of any fish that is in the waters beneath the earth:

19 And lest thou lift up thine eyes unto heaven, and when thou seest the sun, and the as individuals cannot merit salvation; but it is the only evidence that we are partakers of "the gift of God, "which is the eternal life through Jesus Christ." And disobedience both deserves and procures eternal destruction, to those who persevere in it.

V. 2. Ye shall not add, &c.] To add any thing to the commands of God, as obligatory upon the conscience, or an essential part of religion, seems to charge him with an oversight, and is as affronting to his wisdom, as to diminish any thing from it is to his authority and goodness. (Note, Rev. xxii. 18, 19.)

V. 3, 4.] (Num. xxv.) It appears from this appeal, that the pestilence, as well as the sword of the magistrate, singled out the guilty persons, and spared the rest: (Psalm xci. 6—8.)

V. 5. Behold I have, &c.] The people had been always ready to conclude that Moses had taught them by his own authority; but at the close of his life he solemnly assured them, that he had taught them exactly as the Lord had taught him, neither more nor less, nor otherwise.

V. 13. This covenant, &c.] (Notes, &c. Exod. xix. xx.) The ten commandments were the foundation of the national covenant made with Israel, as well as of the covenant of works, though not exactly in the same manner: and the writing of them in the heart, by creating a correspondent judgment and disposition of mind, forms the evidence, that the covenant of grace is ratified with us, through faith in Jesus Christ.

V. 14. To teach you, &c.] This relates to the judicial and ceremonial laws before commented upon, as the former verses referred to the ten commandments.

V. 19. Shouldest be driven, &c.] The propensity of human nature to idolatry, the artifice of satan, and the plausibility of the practice here forbidden, would concur to drive the people into it. All idolatry is extremely irrational; for it is most absurd to make the creatures of God his rivals, and that the the moon, and the ſtars, even all the hoſt of heaven, ſhouldeſt be driven to worſhip them, and ſerve them, which the LORD thy God hath divided unto all nations under the whole heaven.

20 But the LORD hath taken you, and brought you forth out of the iron furnace, even out of Egypt, to be unto him a people of inheritance, as ye are this day.

21 Furthermore the LORD was angry with me for your ſakes, and ſware that I ſhould not go over Jordan, and that I ſhould not go in unto that good land which the LORD thy God giveth thee for an inheritance.

22 But I muſt die in this land, I muſt not go over Jordan: but ye ſhall go over, and poſſeſs that good land.

23 Take heed unto yourſelves, leſt ye forget the covenant of the LORD your God, which he made with you, and make you a graven image, or the likeneſs of any thing which the LORD thy God hath forbidden thee.

24 For the LORD thy God is a conſuming fire, even a jealous God.

25 When thou ſhalt beget children, and children's children, and ſhall have remained long in the land, and ſhall corrupt yourſelves, and make a graven image, or the likeneſs of any thing, and ſhall do evil in the ſight of the LORD thy God, to provoke him to anger:

26 I call heaven and earth to witneſs againſt you this day, that ye ſhall ſoon utterly periſh from off the land whereunto ye go over Jordan to poſſeſs it; ye ſhall not prolong your days upon it, but ſhall utterly be deſtroyed.

27 And the LORD ſhall ſcatter you among the nations, and ye ſhall be left few in number among the heathen, whither the LORD ſhall lead you.

28 And there ye ſhall ſerve gods, the work of men's hands, wood and ſtone, which neither ſee, nor hear, nor eat, nor ſmell.

29 But if from thence thou ſhalt ſeek the LORD thy God, thou ſhalt find him, if thou ſeek him with all thy heart, and with all thy ſoul.

30 When thou art in tribulation, and all theſe things are come upon thee, even in the latter days, if thou turn to the Lord thy God, and ſhalt be obedient to his voice;

31 (For the LORD thy God is a merciful God,) he will not forſake thee, neither deſtroy thee, nor forget the covenant of thy fathers, which he ſware unto them.

32 For aſk now of the days that are paſt, which were before thee, ſince the day that God created man upon the earth, and aſk from the one ſide of heaven unto the other, whether there hath been any ſuch thing as this great thing is, or hath been heard like it?

33 Did ever people hear the voice of God ſpeaking out of the midſt of the fire, as thou haſt heard, and live?

34 Or hath God aſſayed to go and take him a nation from the midſt of another nation, by temptations, by ſigns, and by wonders, and by war, and by a mighty hand, and by a ſtretched-out arm, and by great terrors, according to all that the LORD your God did for you in Egypt before your eyes?

35 Unto thee it was ſhewed, that thou mighteſt know that the LORD he is God; there is none elſe beſides him.

36 Out of heaven he made thee to hear his voice, that he might inſtruct thee; and upon inſtruments of his bounty ſhould rob him of his glory: but the worſhip of thoſe ſplendid and uſeful luminaries is more plauſible, and eaſier to be accounted for, and therefore more carefully to be guarded againſt, than any other. Let any one ſeriouſly conſider the multiplied and varied expreſſions of theſe verſes, and then form his judgment, and bring in his verdict, reſpecting the uſe of images in the church of Rome.

V. 20. Iron furnace, &c.] This ſtrong expreſſion forcibly marks the miſery which the Iſraelites endured, and the danger to which they were expoſed, in the Egyptian bondage.—Hence they were brought forth to be "unto the Lord a people of inheritance;" for all the revenue of worſhip, obedience, and praiſe, which the Lord receives from this lower world, is paid him by his redeemed people; by whom alone he is loved, in whom alone he delights, and for whoſe ſake the frame of nature is preſerved.

V. 28. And, &c.] Though the Jews in their preſent diſperſion do not worſhip images, yet they are evidently ignorant of the God of the Bible; "for he that honoureth not the Son, honoureth not the Father that ſent him:" and many expreſſions lead us to conclude that this prophecy looks forward to preſent and even to future times.

V. 34. By temptations, &c.] The commands and the judgments and reſpites, with which Pharaoh was required upon earth he shewed thee his great fire, and thou heardest his words out of the midst of the fire.

37 And because he loved thy fathers, therefore he chose their seed after them, and brought thee out in his sight, with his mighty power out of Egypt;

38 To drive out nations from before thee, greater and mightier than thou art, to bring thee in, to give thee their land for an inheritance, as it is this day.

39 Know therefore this day, and consider it in thine heart, that the Lord he is God in heaven above, and upon the earth beneath: there is none else.

40 Thou shalt keep therefore his statutes and his commandments, which I command thee this day, that it may go well with thee, and with thy children after thee, and that thou mayest prolong thy days upon the earth, which the LORD thy God giveth thee, for ever.

41 Then Moses severed three cities on this side Jordan toward the sun-rising:

42 That the slayer might flee thither, which should kill his neighbour unawares, and hated him not in times past; and that, fleeing unto one of these cities, he might live:

43 Namely, Bezer in the wilderness, in the plain country of the Reubenites; and Ramoth in Gilead of the Gadites; and Golan in Bashan of the Manassites.

44 And this is the law which Moses set before the children of Israel:

45 These are the testimonies, and the statutes, and the judgments, which Moses spake unto the children of Israel, after they came forth out of Egypt;

46 On this side Jordan, in the valley over against Beth-peor, in the land of Sihon king of the Amorites, who dwelt at Heshbon, whom Moses and the children of Israel smote, after they were come forth out of Egypt:

to let Israel go, made trial of his temper, and discovered his unwillingness to obey and his inability to resist.

V. 40. Thou, &c.] Here the first discourse of this book is concluded; and the appointment of the cities of the refuge in the next verses has no visible connection with what goes before, or what follows: but probably Moses appointed them before he delivered his next discourse, that he might shew them how that matter ought to be regulated. Thus he lost no part of his short remaining time, but filled up the whole with speaking, or acting, for the good of the people.

V. 44. Law, &c.] (Note, i. 5.) This appears to be rather an introduction to the following discourse, than any thing annexed to the foregoing. Moses, having improved practically some portions of the foregoing history; proceeded to repeat and enforce the laws which he had before delivered, with some additions and explanations, beginning with the ten commandments.

V. 46. Beth-peor.] Or the house of Peor; probably a temple of Baal-peor was full in view, whilst Moses was pressing upon the people the worship of God alone; and perhaps that very temple, where so many had sinned to their own destruction.

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.

Every instance, general and particular, of the Lord's kindness to us, forms a conclusive argument for our obedience to his commandments; and will either have this effect upon us, or will testify against us and enhance our final condemnation. Indeed the commandments themselves are all so reasonable, equitable, and salutary, that if we were not blinded and infatuated by satan, a wise regard to our own interest would induce us to obedience: for they are only righteous and kind rules which the wise Creator hath affectionately prescribed to his rational creatures, by attending unto which they may secure their own felicity, and conduce to that of each other, whilst they render him the glory which belongs to him. None of them can be broken without injuring ourselves and others, as well as dishonouring God: and a peaceful conscience, a tranquil mind, well regulated passions and appetites, a sweet sense of the divine favour, an unspeakable pleasure in his ways, and complete peace, harmony, and love among each other; together with health of body and vigour of mind, must have been the consequence of perfect obedience. Even in that measure in which believers are now enabled to obey them; that obedience invariably produces the same effects, in proportion to the degree and constancy with which it is performed; and indeed the case is the same with nations, as with individuals. They therefore are, and will one day appear to be, the only wise and understanding people, (however now derided as fools,) who make the law of God the rule of their whole conduct, without adding to or diminishing from it: and the same light which discovers their wisdom, will detect the folly and madness of those boasted pretenders to superior understanding, who reject the divine testimony, and disregard the divine authority; namely, that of the day of judgment, and of eternity: then it will be undeniably evident that true religion is but another name for wisdom, greatness, honour, pleasure, and felicity. Even in this world experience decides that they, who forsake the Lord, plunge themselves into many miseries, which those escape who cleave unto him: and notwithstanding self-denial and persecutions, the temporal advantages of true religion, though not so shewy, are vastly more solid and satisfactory, than the most splendid acquisitions of prosperous wickedness; without without bringing into the account the comforts of the Holy Ghoſt and the hope of glory on the one hand; or the remorſe and terrors which are more ſenſibly felt, than honeſtly acknowledged, on the other hand: for "godli-"neſs hath both the promiſe of this life, and of that "which is to come." But if we would ſecure ſuch advantages, with ſuch hearts as ours are, in ſuch a world as this, and in the midſt of ſo many temptations and enemies as ſurround us; we muſt apply our minds ſeriouſly, both "to know and to conſider" the works and word of God: we muſt "take great heed unto ourſelves, and keep our "ſouls diligently," leſt the good impreſſions that are excited, depart out of our hearts, without producing any abiding effects; (Heb. ii. 1. xii. 15.) we muſt watch and pray always, that we may not be entangled by thoſe ſnares which are ſtrewed in every place: we muſt keep a ſtrict and conſtant guard upon our imagination, affections, ſenſes, and appetites; upon every one of them: our minds muſt be armed with every imaginable motive, which can encourage our hopes and excite our fears, or influence our love or hatred; that in patience, courage, and ſelf-denial, we may be prepared for labour, ſufferings, and the croſs in whatever form it is laid in our way.—All this and much more muſt be attended to, if we would walk ſafely and comfortably with God, through this world to glory. But building upon Chriſt as our foundation by faith in his blood; and drawing from his fulneſs, by daily earneſt prayer, wiſdom, ſtrength, and grace, all this will become practicable and pleaſant to our ſouls.—Nothing is more fundamentally neceſſary in this important concern, than juſt and proper apprehenſions of the perfections of God; and univerſal hiſtory reminds us of man's ſtrange propenſity to idolatry.—We muſt not therefore truſt to our vain reaſonings, nor indulge our groſs imaginations; but, by faith exerciſed upon the divine teſtimony, muſt obtain our knowledge of God from revelation alone; particularly attending to the diſplays which he hath made of his power, juſtice, vengeance, goodneſs, mercy, and truth, in the various diſpenſations there recorded.—We ought alſo carefully to ſtudy the relations and obligations in which we ſtand to him, and his law, and that worſhip which he requires: we ſhould endeavour to underſtand our own ſituation as ſinners under a diſpenſation of mercy; and the nature of that precious covenant to which we are invited to accede. Here greater things are ſhewn us, than ever Iſrael ſaw from mount Sinai; greater mercies are conferred on us, than they experienced in Egypt, in the wilderneſs, or in Canaan; one ſpeaks to us of infinitely greater dignity than Moſes, who, for our ſakes and for our ſins, bare the anger of the Lord in our ſtead upon the croſs, and pleads with us by his dying love, not with diſplays of fiery terror but with mild accents of mercy, not to neglect ſo great ſalvation.—Nay, our God is ſo merciful, that though we have long rebelled, yet if at laſt we ſeek him with all our heart, and with all our ſoul, and turn to him, and become obedient to his voice, (fleeing for refuge to the hope ſet before us,) he will yet pardon us, and ratify to us all the bleſſings of the everlaſting covenant.—But apoſtles, prophets, and miniſters will teſtify againſt us; yea heaven and earth alſo, if we refuſe him that ſpeaketh to us. Even our natural affection to our children may form an additional motive to obedience; for when the Lord loves the parent, he oft chooſes and bleſſes their children after them; eſpecially when they diligently inſtruct them in the ſame good way. (Gen. xviii. 19.) Thus may we ſeek an entail of heavenly bleſſings upon our lateſt poſterity; and both parents and miniſters may learn profitably from Moſes, to inſtruct their children and people, with fervour and faithfulneſs, even to the cloſe of their lives, all that the Lord had taught them, with a mixture of firmneſs, affection, and gravity, ſuited to ſuch important occaſions. And finally, as the preſent diſperſion of the Jews ſhews the chapter before us to be a prophecy, as well as a ſermon: let us not forget to pray for them, that in their tribulation, even now in theſe latter days, they may ſeek the Lord, and be reinſtated in the privileges of the covenant that was made with their fathers.

NOTES.

CHAP. V.] V. 3. But with us, &c.] The Sinai-covenant was different from that made with Abraham, Iſaac, and Jacob, the fathers of the people of Iſrael. (Gal. iii. 17.) That was chiefly ſpiritual, and related mainly to ſpiritual bleſſings: this was national, and related eſpecially to their poſſeſſion of the promiſed land.—But the expreſſion here uſed may alſo mean that the covenant made at Horeb was as obligatory upon the generation which Moſes then addreſſed, as it was upon thoſe who were immediately preſent when the law was delivered, and the covenant ratified. (Exod. xxiv.) For there were a collective 4 The LORD talked with you face to face in the mount, out of the midſt of the fire.

5 (I ſtood between the LORD and you at that time, to ſhew you the word of the LORD: for ye were afraid by reaſon of the fire, and went not up into the mount,) ſaying, 6 I am the LORD thy God, which brought thee out of the land of Egypt, from the houſe of bondage.

7 Thou ſhalt have none other gods before me.

8 Thou ſhalt not make thee any graven image, or any likeneſs of any thing that is in heaven above, or that is in the earth beneath, or that is in the waters beneath the earth:

9 Thou ſhalt not bow down thyſelf unto them, nor ſerve them: for I the LORD thy God am a jealous God, viſiting the iniquity of the fathers upon the children unto the third and fourth generation of them that hate me,

10 And ſhewing mercy unto thouſands of them that love me, and keep my commandments.

11 Thou ſhalt not take the name of the LORD thy God in vain: for the LORD will not hold him guiltleſs that taketh his name in vain.

12 Keep the ſabbath-day to ſanctify it, as the LORD thy God hath commanded thee.

13 Six days thou ſhalt labour, and do all thy work:

14 But the ſeventh day is the ſabbath of the LORD thy God: in it thou ſhalt not do any work, thou, nor thy ſon, nor thy daughter, nor thy man-ſervant, nor thy maid-ſervant, nor thine ox, nor thine aſs, nor any of thy cattle, nor thy ſtranger that is within thy gates, that thy man-ſervant and thy maid-ſervant may reſt as well as thou.

15 And remember that thou waſt a ſervant in the land of Egypt, and that the LORD thy God brought thee out thence, through a mighty hand, and by a ſtretched-out arm: therefore the LORD thy God commanded thee to keep the ſabbath-day.

16 Honour thy father and thy mother, as the LORD thy God hath commanded thee: that thy days may be prolonged, and that it may go well with thee, in the land which the LORD thy God giveth thee.

tive body, incorporated by charter, the obligations and advantages of which deſcended to the ſucceſſors of thoſe to whom it was at firſt conceded: (Note, Exod. xix. 5.) Thus all, favoured with the light of revelation, are bound to ſubmit to it, equally with thoſe to whom it was firſt given; though they behold not the miracles, with which it was authenticated: for there are other evidences, external and internal, of its divine authority, which gather force by revolving ages; as may be evidently perceived by ſuch as impartially and diligently conſider them. On the other hand, they who ſubmit, and are willing to be ſaved and ruled according to that revelation, have equal benefits with thoſe to whom it was firſt communicated: yea eſpecial bleſſings are pronounced upon thoſe, "who have not "ſeen, and yet have believed." Some indeed of theſe Iſraelites had been preſent at the giving of the law, though under age; but many of them were at that time unborn, and many more in their infancy and childhood: yet the covenant was made with their fathers in behalf of them, as well as of themſelves.

V. 14, 15.] The original reaſon for hallowing the ſabbath, taken from God's reſting from the work of creation on the ſeventh day, is not here mentioned: for though this muſt ever remain valid, yet it is not the only one. The Iſraelites were required to remember their oppreſſed and wretched ſtate in Egypt, and their wonderful deliverance: and, whilſt they worſhipped and were thankful to their great and gracious Deliverer, they were commanded humanely to allow reſpite from labour to their ſlaves; and piouſly to afford them an opportunity of becoming acquainted with Jehovah, and worſhipping him in his ordinances, from which advantages they themſelves had been cruelly and impiouſly reſtricted by their Egyptian oppreſſors. And this paſſage ſeems introduced as a parentheſis by Moſes, while repeating to the people the law as given from mount Sinai.—Whilſt the judicial law ſuppoſed the exiſtence of ſlavery amongſt the Jews; (Note, Exod. xxi. 2;) theſe and ſimilar regulations, when duly complied with, were calculated to convert the ſlavery of the heathen in Iſrael into a bleſſing to their ſouls, by bringing them under the means of grace, and putting them in the way of obtaining all the privileges of God's peculiar people. And amidſt the enormities of modern ſlavery, if it could truly be ſaid, that the ſlaves reſted from all labour on the Lord's day, and were allowed and required to keep it holy, and were on that day ſtatedly and properly inſtructed in the nature of genuine Chriſtianity, ſo as to afford them an adequate and general opportunity of being made partakers of its bleſſings; it would plead more powerfully for it's being ſuffered to exiſt, than all other reaſons, which have been urged in it's favour: though even that could never juſtify ſo flagrant a violation of the law of love.—The redemption of Chriſt forms now to us another additional reaſon of hallowing the ſabbath, and a ſpecial employment for that holy day, of which the foregoing was typical.—There are ſeveral other verbal variations in the commandments as here recited; but the thing ſignified is the ſame. (Notes, &c. Exod. xx.)

V. 28, 29.]

20 Neither ſhalt thou bear falſe witneſs againſt thy neighbour.

21 Neither ſhalt thou deſire thy neighbour's wife, neither ſhalt thou covet thy neighbour's houſe, his field, or his man-ſervant, or his maid-ſervant, or his ox, or his aſs, or any thing that is thy neighbour's.

22 These words the LORD ſpake unto all your aſſembly in the mount out of the midſt of the fire, of the cloud, and of the thick darkneſs, with a great voice; and he added no more: and he wrote them in two tables of ſtone, and delivered them unto me.

23 And it came to paſs, when ye heard the voice out of the midſt of the darkneſs, (for the mountain did burn with fire,) that ye came near unto me, even all the heads of your tribes, and your elders.

24 And ye ſaid, Behold, the LORD our God hath ſhewed us his glory, and his greatneſs, and we have heard his voice out of the midſt of the fire: we have ſeen this day that God doth talk with man, and he liveth.

25 Now therefore why ſhould we die? for this great fire will conſume us. If we hear the voice of the LORD our God any more, then we ſhall die.

26 For who is there of all fleſh, that hath heard the voice of the living God ſpeaking out of the midſt of the fire, as we have, and lived?

27 Go thou near, and hear all that the LORD our God ſhall ſay; and ſpeak thou unto us all that the LORD our God ſhall ſpeak unto thee, and we will hear it, and do it.

28 And the LORD heard the voice of your words, when ye ſpake unto me; and the LORD ſaid unto me, I have heard the voice of the words of this people, which they have ſpoken unto thee: they have well ſaid all that they have ſpoken.

29 O that there was ſuch an heart in them, that they would fear me, and keep all my commandments always, that it might be well with them, and with their children for ever!

30 Go ſay to them, Get you into your tents again.

31 But as for thee, ſtand thou here by me, and I will ſpeak unto thee all the commandments, and the ſtatutes, and the judgments, which thou ſhalt teach them, that they may do them in the land which I give them to poſſeſs it.

32 Ye ſhall obſerve to do therefore as the LORD

V. 28, 29.] When the people were alarmed with the terror of deſtruction from the voice of God, ſpeaking from mount Sinai, and were conſcious that they could not thus approach him, but deſired a mediator by whom God might ſpeak to them, and promiſed to hear and obey that mediator, "they ſaid well;" and had they properly underſtood their own requeſt, and been ſuitably and abidingly ſo diſpoſed, all would have gone on and terminated well. But in the following verſe the Lord in very affecting language ſuggeſts, that it was not ſo: for he ſaw, that though they were alarmed and convinced, they were not duly humbled, nor diſpoſed either to receive in faith the promiſed Mediator whom Moſes typified, or perſeveringly to walk in the ways of holy obedience. The language ſhews us what God approves, delights in, and accepts, as honourable to his name, ſuitable to his character, and profitable to his creatures. This way of ſpeaking, after the manner of men, is extremely encouraging to thoſe, who are humbly deſirous of the ſalvation of the goſpel, feel a willingneſs in their hearts to obey the commands of God, and are taught to pray for grace to enable them ſo to do: as it evinces the Lord's readineſs to aſſiſt and accept thoſe, who are brought to this diſpoſition; and ſhews that he doth not delight in puniſhment for it's own ſake, but only when the righteous purpoſes of his government render it neceſſary: as the merciful prince delights not in, yea weeps over, the death warrant, which a variety of important conſiderations render it indiſpenſably neceſſary he ſhould ſign. But we muſt not attempt to argue any thing from ſuch paſſages, reſpecting the conduct of God towards impenitent ſinners, or the method of his diſpenſing his ſpecial bleſſings: many reaſons may determine the divine conduct, which are too deep for us to diſcover, too myſterious for us to comprehend, and of which we muſt not preſume to judge. This is however evident and ſufficient, that he certainly will ſave, and delight in ſaving, every one who repents and believes the goſpel. Knowing this, we muſt learn our proper place and buſineſs, and leave the government of the world to the only wiſe God. (Notes, Pſalm. lxxxi. 13: Iſaiah, xlviii. 17—19. Jer. xliv. 4. Matt. xxiii. 37—39.)

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.

The word of God is ſpoken to us, that we may attentively liſten to it; and thus learn, retain, and practiſe it, in which all religion is ultimately centred, and without which the whole is but a dead carcaſe, not only worthleſs but abominable. Of this practice the law of God is the univerſal, immutable, and everlaſting rule: but we have no encouragement or ability to obey that law, in any meaſure, or in any ſenſe, but what is derived from the new covenant of mercy and grace, which is made with us through the mediation of Chriſt. He continually ſtands between LORD your God hath commanded you: ye shall not turn aside to the right hand or to the left.

33 Ye shall walk in all the ways which the LORD your God hath commanded you: that ye may live, and that it may be well with you, and that ye may prolong your days in the land which ye shall possess.

NOW these are the commandments, the statutes, and the judgments, which the LORD your God commanded to teach you, that ye might do them in the land whither ye go to possess it.

2 That thou mightest fear the LORD thy God, to keep all his statutes, and his commandments, which I command thee; thou, and thy son, and thy son's son, all the days of thy life, and that thy days may be prolonged.

3 Hear, therefore, O Israel, and observe to do it; that it may be well with thee, and that ye may increase mightily, as the LORD God of thy fathers hath promised thee, in the land that floweth with milk and honey.

4 Hear, O Israel; The LORD our God is one LORD.

5 Thou shalt love the LORD thy God with all thine heart, and with all thy soul, and with all thy might.

6 And the holy God, and the sinner who believes in his name, both to ensure his acceptance, and direct, encourage, and assist his obedience. The words he once spake on earth are written in the Scriptures for our instruction; and from age to age sinners are invited to accede to his covenant and share the promised blessings; which invitation cannot be refused without ensuring eternal destruction, and nothing except such refusal can ruin us. But we must remember that good words may be spoken, good resolutions formed, and transient convictions experienced; even when the invitation is finally refused, through prevailing pride of heart, and love of sin. Of such we may say "O that there were such an heart in them, &c.!" But we had better turn it into a prayer for ourselves, and for each other; and beg of the Lord that he would give us such an heart, "that we may fear him, and keep all his commandments "always:" and we may present such a petition in faith, assured that the Lord delighteth in bestowing spiritual blessings on those, who have been taught to value them, and to seek them in the name of Jesus Christ.—Let sinners then tremble at this fiery law, and flee for refuge to the Saviour's blood: let professors examine carefully, whether their faith in Christ be accompanied with a desire of having that law written in their hearts, and reduced to practice in their whole conduct: and let believers make it more and more their study and delight, that they may do as the Lord God hath commanded them, without turning aside to the right hand, or to the left. Thus by universal godliness, righteousness, temperance, patience, purity, and love, and an exact regard to every relative duty, they will best evince their faith, adorn the gospel, glorify the Lord, benefit their fellow creatures, entail a blessing on their children, and be ripening for glory. In attending to these important concerns we need repeated instructions and admonitions: let us then not deem it tedious to hear, read, and meditate frequently on the same truths and precepts. Let us learn ourselves to hallow the Lord's sabbaths, and set an example of attending on his ordinances: and, remembering that our servants are of the same nature with ourselves, let us ever allow them also suitable relaxation from labour, and opportunity for hallowing the sabbath, and learning the way of salvation.

NOTES.

CHAP. VI.] V. 1. These, &c.] In this and similar passages, the commandments seem to denote the moral law, the statutes the ceremonial law, and the judgments the judicial law.

V. 4. The Lord, &c.] The threefold mention of the divine names, and the plural number of the original word translated God, are supposed by many commentators to be no obscure intimations of a Trinity of persons, even in this express declaration of the unity of the God-head, to the exclusion of the many lords and gods of the heathens, and in opposition to them. (Note, Gen. i. 1.)

V. 5. And thou shalt, &c.] In the foregoing verse we have the first article of our creed; in this "the first and "great commandment," which briefly comprehends the whole of the first table of the law. (Matt. xxii. 36—38. Mark, xii. 28—34.) This love of God perfectly consists with the reverential fear of him before-mentioned, yea the more we love him, the more we shall regard his authority, reverence his majesty, fear to offend or dishonour him, and be disposed to render unto him that adoration and worship which he requires. Human laws can only take cognizance of the outward conduct; but the law of the heart-searching God requires LOVE, the seat of which is in the inmost soul: that love comprises a supreme valuation of his infinite excellency and amiableness; an entire desire of the knowledge, love, and enjoyment of Him as our felicity; a cordial delight in contemplating his manifested glories, and in worshipping and obeying him; a glowing gratitude for all his innumerable and invaluable mercies; zeal for his glory, and an ardent desire that all our fellow creatures, in conjunction with us, may know, love, worship, obey, and serve him. The dispositions and affections are required to be as large as the powers of the soul itself, and to engross and fill the whole, to the entire exclusion of all contrary affections, and to the absolute regulation and moderation of all other affections;

6 And these words, which I command thee this day, shall be in thine heart.

7 And thou shalt teach them diligently unto thy children, and shalt talk of them when thou sittest in thine house, and when thou walkest by the way, and when thou liest down, and when thou risest up.

8 And thou shalt bind them for a sign upon thine hand, and they shall be as frontlets between thine eyes.

9 And thou shalt write them upon the posts of thy house, and on thy gates.

10 And it shall be, when the LORD thy God shall have brought thee into the land which he sware unto thy fathers, to Abraham, to Isaac, and to Jacob, to give thee great and goodly cities which thou buildest not,

11 And houses full of all good things which thou filledst not, and wells digged which thou diggedst not, vineyards and olive-trees which thou plantedst not; when thou shalt have eaten and be full;

12 Then beware lest thou forget the LORD, which brought thee forth out of the land of Egypt, from the house of bondage.

13 Thou shalt fear the LORD thy God, and serve him, and shalt swear by his name.

14 Ye shall not go after other gods, of the gods of the people which are round about you;

15 (For the LORD thy God is a jealous God among you;) lest the anger of the LORD thy God be kindled against thee, and destroy thee from off the face of the earth.

16 Ye shall not tempt the LORD your God, as ye tempted him in Massah.

17 Ye shall diligently keep the commandments of the LORD your God, and his testimonies, and his statutes, which he hath commanded thee.

18 And thou shalt do that which is right and good in the sight of the LORD; that it may be well with thee, and that thou mayest go in and possess the good land which the LORD sware unto thy fathers; affections, in subordination and subserviency to this leading and governing principle: so that nothing should in any sense, or in any degree, be loved by us, but for the sake, and according to the commandment or allowance, of God. Thus are we reasonably required to love the Lord our God, both for what he is in himself, and what he hath done for us, and what he is and will be to us; and that uniformly, constantly, perfectly, and progressively.—Whatever our natural capacities may be, or to whatever improvements we may in this or in a future world attain, the Lord commands us to give him the whole: and were our love thus perfect, our worship, obedience, and submission would be perfect also; nor could it ever possibly vary, be interrupted, or fall short of our whole strength and power, without a failure, variation, or diminution of this inward principle of love. Yet even this would admit of degrees and increase, both in the principle and in it's effects, from the first dawning of reason in the infant, (such as was the child Jesus,) in progressive enlargement to the highest possible exaltation of the angelic nature. For no creature to all eternity can ever love God, in measure equal to his loveliness, and excellency, and worthiness to be loved, which are infinite as his incomprehensible being: but each might, and ought to love the Lord to the utmost extent of all the powers which the Creator had bestowed on him. This would at once secure to God the glory due to his name, and to his creatures that felicity of which he hath formed them capable. Thus it is with angels in heaven; thus it was with man in paradise; but alas! the carnal mind of fallen man is enmity against God: and as we all are by nature entirely destitute of the love of God, we all love ourselves, the world, and our favourite sinful indulgences and pursuits, with all our heart, our mind, our soul, and strength, and therefore sacrifice every thing to these idols. In regeneration an internal revolution takes place; the usurpers are dethroned, the Lord himself takes possession of the heart, and becomes the supreme object of our love: but so long as sin dwelleth in us, we never love God according to the perfection of this precept; but our love in all it's exercises, and all the effects of it, are variable, interrupted, and comparatively languid. All that, in our affections, dispositions, and conduct, which comes short of this perfect love, is sin, and needs forgiveness; and therefore our best obedience, though it evidence our faith and glorify God, can do nothing towards our justification. Yet this law is our standard of duty; in progressive sanctification we are renewed in conformity to it; and the spirits of just men made perfect are, in this respect, already made equal to the angels in heaven.

V. 6. Shall be, &c.] That is, 'Let these words be treasured up in the memory, rooted in the judgment, and reigning in the affections; that they may become habitually the subjects of converse and meditation, to the exclusion of all those, which are contrary or inferior to them.'

V. 7—9.] The Israelites were commanded to take every method of making the knowledge of the word of God familiar to them and to their families; that every object which they beheld, and every action which they performed, might serve as a memorial of it. Some of these external methods may be less necessary at present when copies of the Bible are so cheap and numerous: but the reason and general meaning of the command is still the same, and equally obligatory. The same should be our valuation of the word of God, our familiar acquaintance with it, and our open profession of faith in it and regard to it.

V. 13. And shalt swear &c.] As an act of religious worship, 19 To caſt out all thine enemies from before thee, as the LORD hath ſpoken.

20 And when thy ſon aſketh thee in time to come, ſaying, What mean the teſtimonies, and the ſtatutes, and the judgments, which the LORD our God hath commanded you?

21 Then thou ſhalt ſay unto thy ſon, We were Pharaoh's bondmen in Egypt, and the LORD brought us out of Egypt with a mighty hand.

22 And the LORD ſhewed ſigns and wonders, great and ſore, upon Egypt, upon Pharaoh, and upon all his houſehold, before our eyes;

23 And he brought us out from thence, that he might bring us in, to give us the land which he ſware unto our fathers.

24 And the LORD commanded us to do all theſe ſtatutes, to fear the LORD our God, for our good always, that he might preſerve us alive, as it is at this day.

25 And it ſhall be our righteouſneſs, if we obſerve to do all theſe commandments before the LORD our God, as he hath commanded us.

CHAP. VII.

Contains, 1ſt. A charge to the Iſraelites utterly to deſtroy the ſeven devoted nations of Canaan, making no leagues or marriages with them, 1—4. 2d. Repeated charges to deſtroy their idols, 5. 25, 26. 3d. Promiſes to the nation while obedient, and intimations of vengeance on the diſobedient, 6—24.

WHEN

ſhip, on important occaſions, the Iſraelites were commanded to appeal to Jehovah by a ſolemn oath; and not to the falſe and imaginary deities of the heathen nations around them. This fully proves the lawfulneſs of oaths in themſelves: for the unchangeable God could not expreſsly command any thing contrary to the requirements of his own moral law.

V. 25. It ſhall be &c.] The believing and penitent attendance of the Iſraelites on the typical ceremonies and ſacrifices, as productive of a ſincere obedience to the moral precepts, would, for the ſake of the promiſed Redeemer, though imperfect, be excepted as if it had been a perfect righteouſneſs.

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.

As the knowledge of the ſpirituality and excellency of the holy law of God is ſuited to ſhew ſinful man his need of a Saviour, and to prepare his heart to welcome a free ſalvation: ſo the goſpel is calculated to magnify and honour the law; not only in the perfect obedience of the incarnate Son of God to its holy precept, and in his willing ſubjection to its aweful curſe; but in that it is a plan formed, and continually accompliſhing, of bringing back apoſtate rebels and enemies, by repentance, faith, forgiveneſs, and renewing grace, to love God ſupremely even in this world, and as perfectly as the law requires, and as angels love him, in the world above; and accordingly to worſhip and obey him as their great buſineſs and felicity. Nor is any thing valuable in religion, any further than this end is anſwered; whatever creed is aſſented to, whatever forms are obſerved, or whatever tranſient emotions are excited: (Gal. v. 6.) In proportion as we poſſeſs that faith which produceth and worketh by love, we ſhall delight in the commands, the ordinances, and the people of God; we ſhall ſavour heavenly converſe and heavenly exerciſes; and "our meditation of him will be ſweet."—But alas that very conduct, which this chapter preſcribes to Iſrael, could ſcarcely be reduced to practice amongſt us who are called Chriſtians, without exciting almoſt univerſal contempt and diſguſt! To be continually ſpeaking of the truths and commands of God, upon our journeys, in our families, and in company; to make religion our firſt ſubject in the morning, and our laſt at night; and to be producing quotations from Scripture, on every occaſion, and in every way, without reſerve or apology, as thoſe, who glory and delight in it, would certainly bring upon us the charge of affectation, of enthuſiaſm, nay probably of hypocriſy. This lamentably diſcovers to how low an ebb religion has fallen among profeſſed Chriſtians: but without the truths and precepts of the ſacred volume are indeed in our hearts, and practiſed in our lives, all our profeſſion and talk will be but lip-labour, and juſtly to be condemned as hypocritical.—Though every condition in life expoſes us to peculiar ſnares; yet none are ſo dangerous, and ſo commonly ruinous, as thoſe of proſperity and affluence: for pride, love of the world, forgetfulneſs of God, and diſregard to eternal things, and ſuch like poiſonous weeds, naturally grow from our wicked hearts, when fattened (ſo to ſpeak) with the rank manure of wealth. So that the more God does for us in his providence, the more we are ungratefully prone to do againſt him! Let none of us then be deſirous, or in haſte to be rich: (Note 1 Tim. vi. 9, 10.) Let thoſe, who are rich, or growing rich, tremble, "and beware leſt they forget the Lord." Their danger is great, but "with God all things are poſſible," let them ſeek to him for grace ſufficient for them. (Mark, x. 23—27.) Let the poor learn to be content and thankful for their ſafer lot: and inſtead of being anxious to get wealth for our children, (which is like building a wall to keep them out of heaven,) let us be diligent in explaining the truths, precepts, ordinances, and hiſtory, of God's word to them, and to all committed to our care; in making edifying obſervations on the occurrences of Providence; and in encouraging their enquiries, by giving them plain, familiar, and full anſwers to them; endeavouring by every means to ſhew them the nature, reaſonableneſs, and advantage of true religion; confirming the whole with the example of ſerious godlineſs in every part, and in every occurrence of life; with an affectionate exerciſe of our authority, and fervent prayers for and with them. Thus will it be well with us and them; and we may hope for an incorruptible inheritance for them, and for ourſelves, when all the wealth of this world ſhall be no more.

NOTES.

WHEN the LORD thy God shall bring thee into the land whither thou goest to possess it, and hath cast out many nations before thee, the Hittites, and the Girgashites, and the Amorites, and the Canaanites, and the Perizzites, and the Hivites, and the Jebusites, seven nations greater and mightier than thou;

2 And when the LORD thy God shall deliver them before thee, thou shalt smite them, and utterly destroy them: thou shalt make no covenant with them, nor shew mercy unto them:

3 Neither shalt thou make marriages with them; thy daughter thou shalt not give unto his son, nor his daughter shalt thou take unto thy son.

4 For they will turn away thy son from following me, that they may serve other gods: so will the anger of the LORD be kindled against you, and destroy thee suddenly.

5 But thus shall ye deal with them; ye shall destroy their altars, and break down their images, and cut down their groves, and burn their graven images with fire.

6 For thou art an holy people unto the LORD thy God: the LORD thy God hath chosen thee to be a special people unto himself, above all people that are upon the face of the earth.

7 The LORD did not set his love upon you, nor choose you, because ye were more in number than any people; (for ye were the fewest of all people;)

8 But because the LORD loved you, and because he would keep the oath which he had sworn unto your fathers, hath the LORD brought you out with a mighty hand, and redeemed you out of the house of bondmen, from the hand of Pharaoh king of Egypt.

9 Know, therefore, that the LORD thy God he is God, the faithful God, which keepeth covenant and mercy with them that love him, and keep his commandments, to a thousand generations;

10 And repayeth them that hate him to their face, to destroy them: he will not be slack to him that hateth him, he will repay him to his face.

11 Thou shalt therefore keep the commandments, and the statutes, and the judgments, which I command thee this day to do them.

12 Wherefore it shall come to pass, if ye hearken to these judgments, and keep and do them, that the LORD thy God shall keep unto thee the covenant and the mercy which he sware unto thy fathers.

13 And he will love thee, and bless thee, and multiply thee: he will also bless the fruit of thy womb, and the fruit of thy land, thy corn, and thy wine, and thine oil, the increase of thy kine, and the flocks of thy sheep, in the land which he sware unto thy fathers to give thee.

14 Thou shalt be blessed above all people: there shall not be male or female barren among you, or among your cattle.

15 And

NOTES.

CHAP. VII.] V. 1—4.] The number and names of these nations are varied from those which were before mentioned; (Gen. xv. 19—21.) In so long a course of years many revolutions would take place; some tribes would be extinct or incorporated with others, and some would have changed their names. But they were the posterity of the same people, inhabiting the same land; and they had now filled up the measure of their iniquities. The Israelites were therefore appointed the executioners of divine vengeance; and were not only justified in all they did, but actually offended, and were themselves chastened, for not more entirely extirpating them, root and branch. They would not however have been justified, if they had, from love of conquest, and thirst of dominion, carried on such bloody wars against any nation, not expressly included in their commission: their conduct therefore can form no precedent to others, nor in the least excuse the murder and rapine, which mad ambition hath in all ages been committing. The Lord was pleased in this solemn transaction, not only to shew his abhorrence of sin; but, by such an example of executing vengeance upon guilty nations, to teach all that regard the Scriptures, the real cause of those more ordinary calamities, with which in the course of his providence he punishes one kingdom after another for their sins.

V. 7. Fewest of all, &c.] The Lord chose the people of Israel in the single person of Abraham; (Isaiah, li. 2:) from him they were multiplied to seventy persons, when they went down into Egypt; and though they were very numerous in proportion when he brought them forth thence, yet much less numerous than other more ancient nations; and probably less numerous than either the Egyptians from whom they were delivered, or the Canaanites whose land they inherited.

15 And the LORD will take away from thee all ſickneſs, and will put none of the evil diſeaſes of Egypt, which thou knoweſt, upon thee; but will lay them upon all them that hate thee.

16 And thou ſhalt conſume all the people which the LORD thy God ſhall deliver thee; thine eye ſhall have no pity upon them; neither ſhalt thou ſerve their gods; for that will be a ſnare unto thee.

17 If thou ſhalt ſay in thine heart, Theſe nations are more than I, how can I diſpoſſeſs them?

18 Thou ſhalt not be afraid of them; but ſhalt well remember what the LORD thy God did unto Pharaoh, and unto all Egypt:

19 The great temptations which thine eyes ſaw, and the ſigns and the wonders, and the mighty hand, and the ſtretched-out arm, whereby the LORD thy God brought thee out; ſo ſhall the LORD thy God do unto all the people of whom thou art afraid.

20 Moreover the LORD thy God will ſend the hornet among them, until they that are left, and hide themſelves from thee, be deſtroyed.

21 Thou ſhalt not be affrighted at them: for the LORD thy God is among you, a mighty God and terrible.

22 And the LORD thy God will put out thoſe nations before thee by little and little: thou mayeſt not conſume them at once, leſt the beaſts of the field increaſe upon thee.

23 But the LORD thy God ſhall deliver them unto thee, and ſhall deſtroy them with a mighty deſtruction, until they be deſtroyed.

24 And he ſhall deliver their kings into thine hand, and thou ſhalt deſtroy their name from under heaven; there ſhall no man be able to ſtand before thee, until thou have deſtroyed them.

25 The graven images of their gods ſhall ye burn with fire; thou ſhalt not deſire the ſilver or gold that is on them, nor take it unto thee, leſt thou be ſnared therein: for it is an abomination to the LORD thy God.

26 Neither ſhalt thou bring an abomination into thy houſe, leſt thou be a curſed thing like it: but thou ſhalt utterly deteſt it, and thou ſhalt utterly abhor it; for it is a curſed thing.

CHAP.

V. 15. All ſickneſs, &c.] That is, all peſtilential diſeaſes, which make ſuch dreadful havock at ſome times and in ſome places: ſo that the Iſraelites would, if obedient, have been only ſubject to the ordinary maladies of fallen man, and generally very healthy and long-lived. This muſt be referred to the national covenant: for though godlineſs commonly ſecures the moſt ſolid temporal advantages; yet neither among us, nor them, were temporal bleſſings uniformly diſpenſed to individuals according to their obedience. But they were to Iſrael as a nation, and with an exactneſs which is not obſerved towards other nations; for they were under a peculiar covenant.

V. 22. The Lord, &c.] The Iſraelites were required to attempt the immediate and entire extirpation of the devoted nations; as far as ſloth, cowardice, unbelief, or other corrupt motives, induced them to ſpare them, they ſinned; and to puniſh this and their other ſins, as well as to prove them, the Lord was pleaſed to permit many of theſe nations to remain among them (Judg. ii. 1—3. iii. 1—4.) His conduct was the reſult of a ſettled plan; but this plan, being ſecret from them, was neither the rule of their duty nor the motive of their actions. Thus he commands the entire mortification of every ſin, which is our rule of duty; and yet he gives intimations that ſin is never totally deſtroyed in this world even in the beſt of ſaints: but it actually prevails much more in moſt of us, than it would, were we watchful and diligent, as we ought to be. In all this, the Lord acts according to the counſel of his own will: but the counſel being ſecret from us, forms no excuſe; as it is in no degree the cauſe or reaſon of our ſloth and negligence, which he therefore rebukes and chaſtens.

V. 25. Nor take, &c.] In deteſtation of idolatry, as utterly ſpoiling the moſt precious things which had been thus abuſed, the Lord gave his worſhippers this ſelf-denying command, totally to deſtroy even the metals of the graven images.

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.

All the commandments of God are equally the reſult of infinite wiſdom, juſtice, and goodneſs, but not equally level to our comprehenſion and ſuited to our ideas. Aſſured therefore that the righteous Lord will not do unrighteouſly, but that he will exerciſe his abſolute ſovereignty with perfect equity, whether we can perceive it or no; when he commands, it is our buſineſs, not to object or diſpute, but to obey; and this is the never failing effect of true and ſtrong faith. (Notes, &c. Gen. xxii.)—As the rebellion, ingratitude, and wickedneſs of man are ſo atrocious, it is more admirable that ſo many are ſpared, than that others are puniſhed: and a proper underſtanding of the evil of ſin, and of the myſtery of a crucified Saviour, will enable us to perceive ſomewhat of the juſtice of God in all the puniſhments, temporal and eternal, which he inflicts. We ſhould however be thankful not to be employed as executioners of his vengeance, but rather as the meſſengers of his love and compaſſion. We are called to exerciſe

CHAP. VIII.

Contains exhortations and cautions, enforced by arguments drawn from the Lord's former dealings with the Israelites, and the good land intended for them; from the dangers they would be exposed to; and from the consequences of disobedience, 1—20.

ALL the commandments which I command thee this day shall ye observe to do, that ye may live, and multiply, and go in and possess the land which the LORD sware unto your fathers.

2 And thou shalt remember all the way which the LORD thy God led thee these forty years in the wilderness, to humble thee, and to prove thee, to know what was in thine heart, whether thou wouldest keep his commandments or no.

3 And exercise our severity against our own lusts: with these enemies of the Lord we must wage mortal war, and give them no quarter. Nor need we fear the strongest and most domineering of them, or of their allies the powers of darkness: he who first redeemed us from our original bondage, will, as a mighty and terrible one, fight for us until they are all destroyed. Yet it will be by little and little that we shall extirpate them; nor must we expect that the conflict will cease, till we drop our bodies in the grave. The more need therefore have we to live by faith; to watch and pray, and be diligent: and the more do we so, the less will our sins prevail, or interrupt our enjoyments in religion.—Not our merit, or loveliness, but the Lord's free love of us, (of which he hath shewn us no reason, but because he would love us and choose us for Christ's sake,) forms the source of our redemption, and of all our consequent blessings: that reason still continues, and "he will never leave us, nor "forsake us."—But if we belong to this chosen remnant, which hitherto hath been the fewest of all people, (the Lord increase their numbers an hundred fold!) we shall by this consideration be induced to render him the more unreserved, disinterested, and self-denying obedience, to the contempt of gold and every earthly good, when they come in competition with his precept, or his glory. And should we ever be tempted in covetousness to do otherwise, we shall soon find that we have brought an accursed thing, and an abomination, into our house, which must be cast out with abhorrence, if we would not be an accursed thing like unto it. For the Lord is no more slack in repaying them that hate him, than willing to shew mercy to them who love him and keep his commandments: nor will he be more severe with any, than with covetous, fraudulent, hypocritical professors.—We cannot be too compassionate to the persons of sinners, but we may easily be too complaisant to them: nor can we stand too much aloof from intimacies or alliances with unbelievers; for that hath ever been and ever must be a snare to the people of God.—All occasions of sin must be shunned; for our hearts are so inflammable, that we should fear every spark which may light upon them: nor can we be losers by renouncing such sources of gain as expose us to temptations which experience shews to be too strong for us. For if we are chosen to be a special and holy people unto the Lord our God, above all the people of the earth, we shall certainly be blessed above all people: (14:) and we shall experience the present sweetness of this blessedness, in proportion to the number and value of those things, which we renounce for Christ's sake; as he hath promised his suffering disciples "an hundred-fold more in this present world, and "in the world to come everlasting life."

NOTES.

CHAP. VIII.] V. 2. To humble, &c.] The Israelites were proved, in order that they might be humbled. They were not previously aware of the wickedness of their own hearts, and never suspected themselves to be capable of such crimes as they actually committed: but the Lord well knew all their latent evil propensities; and for their good, and that of multitudes in every age to the end of the world, he was pleased to put them to the proof; that upon a full and fair trial their real character might be ascertained. They were therefore led through a variety of difficult circumstances, and were favoured by manifold miraculous evidences of the Lord's special presence with them, and regard to them. They were sometimes crossed, at other times indulged: they were brought into dangers and straits, and miraculously delivered: they were disappointed in many of their expectations, and favoured in many things beyond expectation: they were sometimes severely punished for their sins, that they might take warning; and at other times mercifully pardoned, that they might take courage. But the result of the trial undeniably was, that they were ever prone to be unbelieving, to distrust, to murmur, and to be ungrateful: they were invariably disposed to depreciate their mercies, and to magnify their trials and difficulties as intolerable and insuperable; to limit the power and suspect the loving-kindness of the Lord, after all their experience of both; to lust, envy, and rebel; to mutiny, apostatize, and revert to idolatry. In short it appeared that they were so stiff-necked and hard-hearted, that no patience, but the infinite patience of God, could have borne with them: nor could they be restrained from the most desperate rebellions, but by the terrible examples of thousands struck dead by the avenging hand of divine justice. All this had a direct tendency upon recollection to convert their self-admiration into self-abhorrence: to abate their self-confidence; to render them sensible of their guilt, folly, and weakness; and to bring them to a suitable conviction of their entire dependence upon the mercy of the Lord for every thing, and their manifold obligations to him for his goodness to them in times past; and finally to produce, and preserve, that poverty of spirit, which is radically necessary to the life of faith and the walk with God.—They should likewise be considered as a fair specimen of human nature: any other people, any individual, proved as they were, would appear as vile as they do, were the result as impartially recorded. And every one's own experience will have the same effect upon him; except he view himself through a false medium, or be lulled asleep in carelessness, or intoxicated by pride: for we none of us live one week, without renewed evi-

3 And he humbled thee, and ſuffered thee to hunger, and fed thee with manna, which thou kneweſt not, neither did thy fathers know, that he might make thee know that man doth not live by bread only, but by every word that proceedeth out of the mouth of the LORD doth man live.

4 Thy raiment waxed not old upon thee, neither did thy foot ſwell, theſe forty years.

5 Thou ſhalt alſo conſider in thine heart, that, as a man chaſteneth his ſon, ſo the LORD thy God chaſteneth thee.

6 Therefore thou ſhalt keep the commandments of the LORD thy God, to walk in his ways, and to fear him.

7 For the LORD thy God bringeth thee into a good land; a land of brooks of water, of fountains, and depths that ſpring out of valleys and hills;

8 A land of wheat, and barley, and vines, and fig-trees, and pomegranates; a land of oil-olive and honey;

9 A land wherein thou ſhalt eat bread without ſcarceneſs, thou ſhalt not lack any thing in it; a land whoſe ſtones are iron, and out of whoſe hills thou mayeſt dig braſs.

10 When thou haſt eaten and art full, then thou ſhalt bleſs the LORD thy God, for the good land which he hath given thee.

11 Beware that thou forget not the LORD thy God, in not keeping his commandments, and his judgments, and his ſtatutes, which I command thee this day:

12 Leſt, when thou haſt eaten and art full, and haſt built goodly houſes, and dwelt therein;

13 And when thy herds and thy flocks multiply, and thy ſilver and thy gold is multiplied, and all that thou haſt is multiplied;

14 Then thine heart be lifted up, and thou forget the LORD thy God, which brought thee forth out of the land of Egypt, from the houſe of bondage;

15 Who led thee through that great and terrible wilderneſs, wherein were fiery ſerpents, and ſcorpions, and drought, where there was no water; who brought thee forth water out of the rock of flint;

16 Who fed thee in the wilderneſs with manna, which thy fathers knew not, that he might humble thee, and that he might prove thee, to do thee good at thy latter end;

17 And thou ſay in thine heart, My power, and the might of mine hand, hath gotten me this wealth.

18 But thou ſhalt remember the LORD thy God: for it is he that giveth thee power to get wealth, that he may eſtabliſh his covenant, which he ſware unto thy fathers, as it is this day.

19 And it ſhall be, if thou do at all forget the LORD thy God, and walk after other gods, and ſerve them, and worſhip them, I teſtify againſt you this day, that ye ſhall ſurely periſh.

dences of our own weakneſs, folly, and depravity.

V. 3. He ſuffered, &c.] When all ordinary means of ſuſtenance failed, and the people muſt have periſhed with hunger, at the word of the Lord the manna came, and afforded them a ſuitable, ſufficient, and conſtant ſupply. Their frequent murmurs and ingratitude, and their inability to help themſelves, would upon recollection humble them: and the unexpected method, in which they were provided for, would teach them that the Lord is not tied to ordinary means, and that they need not uſe ſinful methods of obtaining the neceſſaries of life; for when he ſpeaks the word, a ſupply will be ſent in one way or other; and that word alone ought to be depended on; (Matt. iv. 4.)

V. 4. Thy raiment, &c.] The Iſraelites probably brought out of Egypt more raiment than what they had upon them; they might manufacture the fleeces of their flocks in the wilderneſs, and they were remarkably favoured in God's providence with other ſupplies: yet when we conſider their immenſe numbers, their ſituation and long continuance in the wilderneſs, and the expreſſions here made uſe of, there ſeems no reaſon to queſtion the conſtant miraculous interpoſition of God in this reſpect, as well as in others. We may however ſafely reject the Jewiſh tradition, that the garments grew along with the bodies of the young people: not becauſe it is too difficult to be credited; but becauſe it wants the warrant of ſcriptural teſtimony, and does not appear to have been at all neceſſary.

V. 5. That as a man, &c.] The puniſhments inflicted upon the Iſraelites, though deſtructive to individuals, were intended for national bleſſings, ſalutary to the ſurvivors, and tending to their warning, preſervation, and proſperity: even as the father chaſtiſes his ſon, not for his hurt, but that he may be warned, eſcape ruin, and be wiſe and happy.

V. 9. Whoſe ſtones, &c.] We do not find that in this land of promiſe, the glory of all lands, there were any mines of gold or ſilver. Theſe, though more coveted, are much leſs uſeful, ſtroyeth before your face, ſo ſhall ye periſh; becauſe ye would not be obedient unto the voice of the LORD your God.

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.

Our obedience cannot be deemed ſincere, unleſs we "obſerve to do all the commandments of the Lord;" for whilſt any one is broken, with allowance and habitually, that ſingle diſobedience is a more concluſive proof of hypocriſy, than all the reſt can be of juſtifying faith. In order to ſinful man's rendering to God this kind of ſincere obedience, he muſt be humbled and proved, and made ſenſible of his weakneſs, folly, guilt, pollution, and miſery. And when the ſevereſt chaſtenings, the greateſt diſtreſſes, and the moſt painful experiences are made effectual to produce this conviction; they are evidences of ſpecial love, and of the Lord's merciful intention of doing us good at the latter end, which ſhould reconcile us to them, and make us thankful for them. Indeed it is impoſſible that we can truly repent, or exerciſe faith in Chriſt, and love to him; or become meek, patient, and forgiving; or attain to any part of the Chriſtian temper and character, without ſuch humiliation: for to broken-hearted ſouls alone is the Saviour precious indeed. Nor do any behave ſuitably in proſperity, without much previous humbling diſcipline of one kind or other: far more requiſite then are ſuch trials in training us up for that good land which Canaan typified. Nothing indeed can render even the moſt ſuitable outward diſpenſations and inward exerciſes, effectual for theſe ends, without the ſanctifying influences of the Spirit of God: but it is our duty to be much employed in remembering all the way in which the Lord hath led us; in recollecting the evidences which we have abundantly given of our own ingratitude and perverſeneſs, and of the deceitfulneſs and wickedneſs of our hearts; and in conſidering the proofs we have had of the Lord's power and love, in ſupplying our wants, extricating us out of difficulties, preventing the bad effects of our miſconduct, and over-ruling for our good, events which appeared fraught with ruin and deſtruction. Hence we may learn to ceaſe from ſelf-confidence, and to truſt in the mercy, grace, and providence of God for every thing: hence may we draw arguments againſt ſin, and motives to obedience: and hence may we learn to watch againſt pride, unbelief, and forgetfulneſs of God; with many other leſſons equally ſalutary.—The food, which the Lord brings for us out of the earth, the water from the clouds, and the raiment new from year to year which he provides, cannot call for leſs gratitude from us, than the miraculous proviſion did from Iſrael: though he do not ſuffer us previouſly to hunger, nor confine us to the ſame proviſion, but indulges us in a vaſt variety which he was pleaſed to deny them.—The word of the Lord firſt gave, and ſtill continues, to the earth its fertility: his bleſſing cauſes our food to nouriſh us; and did he command the air to ſuſtain us, it would be equally obedient: he appoints the meaſure of our ſupport, however it be ſent; and his promiſe, that they who truſt in him ſhall want no manner of thing that is good, is our only ſecurity for a future ſufficient ſupply, till we arrive at our journey's end.—But in this the believing poor have the advantage: they more eaſily perceive their proviſion coming from the Lord in anſwer to the prayer of faith, and find leſs difficulty in ſimply truſting him for daily bread: ſo that they taſte a ſweetneſs in it generally unknown to the affluent, whilſt they are exempt from many of their temptations. For when men poſſeſs large eſtates, or are engaged in extenſive and productive commerce; or when their herds and flocks, and gold and ſilver are multiplied, they find it very difficult to expect, and receive, their daily bread in a way of ſimple dependence, prayer, and thankfulneſs; to remember that the Lord alone gives them the power to get wealth, to give him all the praiſe, and to uſe it all to his glory. When "they have eaten and are full, and "have built goodly houſes, and dwelt therein," they will find the temptation to pride, to forgetfulneſs of God, and to carnal-mindedneſs, very ſtrong: they will be apt to fail in reducing to practice the humbling leſſons which they had before learned; and will be prone to grow careleſs, to ſpend their riches upon themſelves, to take them for their portion, and to neglect the one thing needful. This is a "ſlippery place," whence many are "caſt down into "deſtruction;" (Pſalm lxxiii. 18;) let thoſe who are placed on it "rejoice with trembling:" and let them watch and pray always, that they may eſcape the fate of thoſe multitudes, who have "utterly periſhed," through their proſperity. Let us all be ſober and vigilant, and perſevere in prayer, for we tread a dangerous path; let us rather chooſe, and beg of God, to be chaſtened with his children, than to be left to grow ſecure in ſin with his enemies: and may we be taught to hunger after, and feaſt upon the hidden manna, and to drink of the waters of life from the wells of ſalvation: and may we with alacrity be prompt to ſelf-denying obedience encouraged by the proſpect before our eyes, of the "inheritance incorruptible, undefiled, and that "fadeth not away, reſerved in heaven for all, who are here "kept by the power of God, through faith unto ſalvation."

NOTES.

CHAP. IX.] V. 1. Hear, &c.] It is generally ſuppoſed that Moſes here began a new diſcourſe; which he introduced, as he had done the firſt, with a recapitulation of the hiſtory of Iſrael, and afterwards in the following chapters practically applied it to their conſciences. But in the former diſcourſe he mainly expatiated on the wonderful works of God; in this he dwells chiefly upon the wicked works of Iſrael.—By this day, is meant, that the long expected time was juſt at hand.

the Anakims, whom thou knoweſt, and of whom thou haſt heard ſay, Who can ſtand before the children of Anak?

3 Underſtand therefore this day, that the LORD thy God is he which goeth over before thee as a conſuming fire; he ſhall deſtroy them, and he ſhall bring them down before thy face: ſo ſhalt thou drive them out, and deſtroy them quickly, as the LORD hath ſaid unto thee.

4 Speak not thou in thine heart, after that the LORD thy God hath caſt them out from before thee, ſaying, For my righteouſneſs the LORD hath brought me in to poſſeſs this land; but for the wickedneſs of theſe nations the LORD doth drive them out from before thee.

5 Not for thy righteouſneſs, or for the uprightneſs of thine heart, doſt thou go to poſſeſs their land; but for the wickedneſs of theſe nations the LORD thy God doth drive them out from before thee, and that he may perform the word which the LORD ſware unto thy fathers, Abraham, Iſaac, and Jacob.

6 Underſtand therefore that the LORD thy God giveth thee not this good land to poſſeſs it, for thy righteouſneſs; for thou art a ſtiff-necked people.

7 Remember, and forget not, how thou provokedſt the LORD thy God to wrath in the wilderneſs: from the day that thou didſt depart out of the land of Egypt, until ye came unto this place, ye have been rebellious againſt the LORD.

8 Alſo in Horeb ye provoked the LORD to wrath, ſo that the LORD was angry with you, to have deſtroyed you.

9 When I was gone up into the mount, to receive the tables of ſtone, even the tables of the covenant which the LORD made with you, then I abode in the mount forty days and forty nights; I neither did eat bread nor drink water:

10 And the LORD delivered unto me two tables of ſtone, written with the finger of God; and on them was written according to all the words which the LORD ſpake with you in the mount, out of the midſt of the fire, in the day of the aſſembly.

11 And it came to paſs at the end of forty days and forty nights, that the LORD gave me the two tables of ſtone, even the tables of the covenant.

12 And the LORD ſaid unto me, Ariſe, get thee down quickly from hence; for thy people which thou haſt brought forth out of Egypt have corrupted themſelves: they are quickly turned aſide out of the way which I commanded them; they have made them a molten image.

13 Furthermore, the LORD ſpake unto me ſaying, I have ſeen this people, and, behold, it is a ſtiff-necked people.

14 Let me alone, that I may deſtroy them, and blot out their name from under heaven: and I will make of thee a nation mightier and greater than they.

15 So I turned and came down from the mount, and the mount burned with fire: and the two tables of the covenant were in my two hands.

16 And I looked, and, behold, ye had ſinned againſt the LORD your God, and had made you a molten calf: ye had turned aſide quickly out of the way which the LORD had commanded you.

17 And I took the two tables, and caſt them out of my two hands, and brake them before your eyes.

18 And I fell down before the LORD, as at the firſt, forty days and forty nights: I did neither eat bread nor drink water, becauſe of all your ſins which ye ſinned, in doing wickedly in the ſight of the LORD, to provoke him to anger.

19 (For

V. 18. Becauſe, &c.] The tranſgreſſions of the people rendered this ſecond forty days faſting neceſſary. Though the pardon was ſolicited, and in ſome ſenſe obtained, before Moſes aſcended the mount; yet probably much of the time, which he ſpent there, was employed in ſupplication for them; and when he deſcended the ſecond time with the tables of the law in his hands, the pardon was as it were ratified and ſealed.—Some indeed ſuppoſe that he faſted three times, forty days each; but it is not probable, nor doth there appear any ſufficient reaſon from the narration to conclude that he did. The twenty-fifth verſe is a reſumption of the ſubject after a digreſſion, ſuch as are commonly found, where the heart is much engaged, and the ſpeaker is more ſolicitous to impreſs the hearers for their 19 (For I was afraid of the anger and hot displeasure wherewith the LORD was wroth against you to destroy you.) But the LORD hearkened unto me at that time also.

20 And the LORD was very angry with Aaron to have destroyed him: and I prayed for Aaron also the same time.

21 And I took your sin, the calf which ye had made, and burnt it with fire, and stamped it, and ground it very small, even until it was as small as dust: and I cast the dust thereof into the brook that descended out of the mount.

22 And at Taberah, and at Massah, and at Kibroth-hattaavah, ye provoked the LORD to wrath.

23 Likewise, when the LORD sent you from Kadesh-barnea, saying, Go up and possess the land which I have given you; then ye rebelled against the commandment of the LORD your God, and ye believed him not, nor hearkened to his voice.

24 Ye have been rebellious against the LORD from the day that I knew you.

25 Thus I fell down before the LORD forty days and forty nights, as I fell down at the first; because the LORD had said he would destroy you.

26 I prayed therefore unto the LORD, and said, O LORD God, destroy not thy people, and thine inheritance, which thou hast redeemed through thy greatness, which thou hast brought forth out of Egypt with a mighty hand.

27 Remember thy servants, Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob: look not unto the stubbornness of this people, nor to their wickedness, nor to their sin;

28 Lest the land whence thou broughtest us out say, Because the LORD was not able to bring them into the land which he promised them, and because he hated them, he hath brought them out to slay them in the wilderness.

their good, than to gain their applause. The apostle Paul's epistles abound in such digressions, which sometimes obscure the sense to the inattentive reader. As this chapter is mainly an abridgment of the foregoing history, the reader must be referred to the comment on those chapters which are here alluded to. (Notes, &c. Exod. xxiv. xxxii. xxxiii. xxxiv. Numb. xi. xiii. xiv.)

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.

They who enlist under the Lord's standard, must not despise their enemies, nor yet be intimidated on account of them. In themselves they are very formidable; but not at all to be dreaded by those who have the almighty arm engaged on their side. Yet we should count our cost, and consider what our vocation will certainly expose us to, lest we should turn back in the day of battle; (Notes, &c. Luke xiv. 25—33:) for unless we so value the salvation of the Lord, as to be willing to venture, suffer, and sacrifice every thing for the sake of it, our profession will begin with hypocrisy, and probably end in apostacy. Such soldiers the Captain of our salvation wants not, and he therefore plainly tells us what we are to expect, even in as strong language as we can use in our most desponding moments; (1, 2, compared with i. 27, 28.) But he proposes an all-sufficient remedy to our discouragements, when he engages to go before us as a consuming fire: in that case, hard things will become easy, and we may rejoice and triumph in our sharpest conflicts and severest trials.—But so strong is our propensity to pride, that it will creep in under one pretence or other: and if it be evident that the might of our arm hath not got us our wealth; we shall be ready to conceive that our righteousness hath merited the special favour of the Lord, and induced him to give us it; though in reality our wickedness be more evident than our weakness. To remove that ignorance, or forgetfulness, which occasions the increase of this absurd self-adulation, ministers must bestow pains and be willing to give offence, by declaring unto the people their transgressions; (Isaiah lviii. 1. Micah iii. 8;) and must not only lay the facts before their eyes, but call their attention to them, and assist them in drawing inferences from them, and in applying those inferences to their conviction.—When the secret history of every man's life shall be produced before him at the day of judgment, "every mouth will be stopped, and all the "world will be proved guilty before God." As we are spared in infinite mercy, we should anticipate that solemn season, and be glad of every assistance in reviewing the past experience of our lives; that judging and condemning ourselves in this world, we may not be then judged and condemned of the Lord. For at present One intercedeth for us before the mercy seat, who not only fasted, but died upon the cross, for our sins; through whom we may approach, though self-condemned sinners, and supplicate for unmerited mercy, and for eternal life as the gift of God in him. For his sake the Lord will grant these blessings, not for our righteousness, but for the praise of his glory, and according to the tenor of the covenant of grace: and notwithstanding that we have the verdict brought in against us by our own consciences, "that we have been rebellious" from the beginning of our lives, yea stubborn and stiff-necked; yet will he save us for his mercies' sake, write his law in our hearts, and not suffer our enemies to triumph in our destruction.—Alas! that even believers should have so many Massahs, and Taberahs, and Kibroth-hattaavahs to remember with shame! yet we ought not by any means to forget them; but thence to draw arguments for deeper humility, more lively gratitude, more ſimple dependence, and more earneſt prayers for the upholding grace of God; and for a more watchful walk, and a life more devoted to ſo merciful a God and Saviour. As this conſideration ſhould endear to us the compaſſionate Interceſſor for ſinners, and induce us to deſire and value a place in the prayers of God's people: ſo ſhould we learn to compaſſionate and pray for our fellow Chriſtians, and for all men; and in meekneſs to reſtore ſuch as have been overtaken in a fault, when there are hopeful tokens of repentance.

NOTES.

CHAP. X.] V. 3. And I made, &c.] It does not appear that Moſes took any ark into the mount with him: and it is evident that the ark of the covenant, and not a temporary ark, was intended, (5.) The words ſeem therefore to refer to orders given, previouſly to his ſecond going up into the mount, to Bezaleel to have it prepared, and in readineſs againſt he came down again: and Moſes may be ſaid to have made it, as having given orders to have it made.

V. 6, 7.] Theſe two verſes ſo break in upon the connection of Moſes's diſcourſe, and give ſuch an account of the names of places, as has greatly perplexed the commentators. Bleſſed be God neither our ſalvation, nor our peace, is concerned in the ſolution of ſuch difficulties. Several of the places mentioned might have more names than one: and thoſe things, which for want of further information we cannot reconcile to other accounts, might be perfectly intelligible to them whom Moſes addreſſed. It is evident, either that Moſes himſelf did not much regard exactneſs of method or connection in this diſcourſe; or, which is more probable, that by ſome means or other, a tranſpoſition hath taken place: for theſe two verſes would come in more regularly after verſe the eleventh.

V. 8. At that time, &c.] Not after Aaron's death, but at that time concerning which Moſes had before been ſpeaking, and of which he returned to ſpeak afterwards; namely, when the breach was made up which the golden calf had occaſioned.

21 He is thy praise, and he is thy God, that hath done for thee these great and terrible things which thine eyes have seen.

22 Thy fathers went down into Egypt with threescore and ten persons; and now the LORD thy God has made thee as the stars of heaven for multitude.

CHAP.

V. 16. Circumcise, &c.] This expression denotes the mortification of our corrupt nature; the removal of that blindness from the understanding, of that perverseness from the will, and of that depravity from the affections, which prevent our supreme love of God: (Notes, &c. Gen. xvii.) It is therefore the subject both of promises, and of precepts. (xxx. 6.) As it is our duty to love God with our whole heart, (for this the law commands;) it must be our duty to remove all that which hinders our love of God; and we are accordingly commanded to do so. (Ezek. xviii. 30, 31. Acts iii. 19.) But we are naturally of a contrary disposition: and this contrariety to God and his law is original sin, the source of all our actual transgressions, and the very essence of guilt and misery; "because the carnal mind is "enmity against God; for it is not subject to the law of "God, neither indeed can be; so then they that are in "the flesh cannot please God." (Rom viii. 5—9.) In this condition the gospel addresses us with invitations, promises, and precepts: when we are convinced of the reasonableness and necessity of the required change, and feel our own utter inability to effect it, we have recourse to the promises. From that time, pleading them in prayer, and attending on other appointed means of grace, we wait upon, and trust in, the Lord to work it in us: nor do we ever wait and trust in vain.

V. 18. He loveth, &c.] The universal care and kindness of God in his Providence to persons of all nations and characters, are intended by such expressions as these. He is represented as the universal patron of all those, who are peculiarly exposed to oppression or ill treatment; as strangers are in a foreign country, of which the Israelites had had painful experience in Egypt.—They were therefore required to imitate the example of the Lord who had been so kind to them, not that of the Egyptians who had been so cruel to them.—Notwithstanding these plain precepts, the Jews in after ages were remarkable for their contempt, hatred, and ill treatment of other nations: and they deemed themselves justifiable in this conduct; which tended very much to their own ruin after the coming of Christ, as it hardened them against the gospel when it was preached to the Gentiles also.

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.

The gospel of Christ, when truly believed, prepares the heart to receive, love, and uprightly to obey the holy law of God, in imitation of him, who said, "I delight to do

"thy will, yea thy law is within my heart!" (Psal. xl. 8.) and this forms the conclusive proof that our sins are pardoned, and that God is reconciled to us. And what doth the Lord require of us even by the strictest precept of the law, as given to his redeemed people through the hands of the Mediator, which should hinder us from delighting in his service? Having received so many mercies and favours, and having such gracious promises of assistance and acceptance, we cannot say that we want either motive, ability, or encouragement for that obedience which he requires, as the evidence of our faith and the expression of our gratitude. His majesty and purity, his amiableness and excellency, his loving-kindness and mercy render it equitable and reasonable, that we should fear and love him with all our soul; and from the united influence of filial fear and love, that we should obey his commandments, worship him in his ordinances, and walk in all his ways. His commandments are also for our good, and restrain us from nothing but what is destructive of our own happiness, and that of others; and require nothing but what conduces to inward tranquillity and present comfort.—The more we obey his precepts, the nearer will be our conformity to his image, and the more we shall reflect "the beauty of "the Lord our God," the beauty of his holiness, of his equity, truth, and love; of his compassion, and condescension (though he be so highly exalted!) to the mean, to the vile, to the miserable and oppressed. And what pleasure can be so divine, what honour so exalted, what privilege so desirable, what ornament, praise, or distinction so great, as to have the God of gods, and Lord of lords for our Father, and our Friend, to walk with him, and become like him? "This honour have all his saints!" to this they are chosen, this is the fruit of his special love, the effect of his converting grace, and the earnest of his eternal glory. Having had a delight in our fathers, whom he called by his grace, he hath favoured us their posterity with his gospel, above many of the nations of the earth; he hath established and continued the ministry of his word, and hath had a remnant of true believers amongst us hitherto, (which may he increase to an innumerable multitude!) Let us then fear coming short of this great salvation; for the Lord is terrible, as well as merciful. Let us use the means, and pray earnestly for that grace, which may circumcise our hearts, and wash them from every wickedness: let us, without delay or reserve, come to him and cleave to him as our reconciled God

12 A land which the LORD thy God careth for: the eyes of the LORD thy God are always upon it, from the beginning of the year even unto the end of the year.

13 And it shall come to pass, if ye shall hearken diligently unto my commandments which I command you this day, to love the LORD your God, and to serve him with all your heart, and with all your soul, 14 That I will give you the rain of your land in his due season, the first rain and the latter rain, that thou mayest gather in thy corn, and thy wine, and thine oil.

15 And I will send grass in thy fields for thy cattle, that thou mayest eat, and be full.

16 Take heed to yourselves, that your heart be not deceived, and ye turn aside, and serve other gods, and worship them;

17 And then the LORD's wrath be kindled against you, and he shut up the heaven that there in Jesus Christ, that we may love, serve, and obey him acceptably; and be daily "changed into his image from "glory to glory by the Spirit of the Lord."

NOTES.

CHAP. XI.] V. 1. Therefore, &c.] This verse properly belongs to the foregoing chapter, and is the practical inference from the concluding words of it; whilst the next verse proceeds to another view of the subject.

V. 2. Your children, &c.] We may suppose that Moses addressed these words, and the verses that follow, particularly to the elders who had in their youth witnessed the wonderful works which the Lord had wrought both for them and among them; and who were therefore bound to remember them for their own warning and instruction, and to testify of them to the rising generation who had not been eye witnesses of them.

V. 10. Watered it, &c.] Rain seldom is known to fall in Egypt; but it is mainly watered by the inundations of the river Nile; which indeed cause great fertility, but occasion the people much labour in digging trenches, and forming conveyances for the water into the different parts of the country, as if they were watering a garden; from all which the Israelites in Canaan would be exempted.

V. 12. A land, &c.] These expressions imply that the fruitfulness of that favoured land arose from an especial attention of the providence of God to it as the intended residence of his people. At this day the same country is remarkably barren, that special favour being withdrawn. But we may also consider Canaan as a type of heaven, and the language here used as especially relating to that typical meaning.

V. 14. In his due season, &c.] Neither in too great, nor in too small proportion, nor out of season; but especially to there be no rain, and that the land yield not her fruit, and lest ye perish quickly from off the good land which the LORD giveth you.

18 Therefore shall ye lay up these my words in your heart, and in your soul, and bind them for a sign upon your hand, that they may be as frontlets between your eyes.

19 And ye shall teach them your children, speaking of them when thou sittest in thine house, and when thou walkest by the way, when thou liest down, and when thou risest up.

20 And thou shalt write them upon the door-posts of thine house, and upon thy gates:

21 That your days may be multiplied, and the days of your children, in the land which the LORD sware unto your fathers to give them, as the days of heaven upon the earth.

22 For if ye shall diligently keep all these commandments which I command you to do them, to love the LORD your God, to walk in all his ways, and to cleave unto him;

23 Then will the LORD drive out all these nations from before you, and ye shall possess greater nations and mightier than yourselves.

24 Every place whereon the soles of your feet shall tread shall be yours: from the wilderness, and Lebanon, from the river, the river Euphrates, even unto the uttermost sea shall your coast be.

25 There shall no man be able to stand before you: for the LORD your God shall lay the fear of you, and the dread of you upon all the land that ye shall tread upon, as he hath said unto you.

26 Behold, I set before you this day a blessing and a curse;

27 A blessing, if ye obey the commandments of the LORD your God, which I command you this day;

28 And a curse, if ye will not obey the commandments of the LORD your God, but turn aside out of the way which I command you this day, to go after other gods which ye have not known.

29 And it shall come to pass, when the LORD thy God hath brought thee in unto the land whither thou goest to possess it, that thou shalt put the blessing upon mount Gerizim, and the curse upon mount Ebal.

30 Are they not on the other side Jordan, by the way where the sun goeth down in the land of the Canaanites, which dwell in the champaign over against Gilgal, beside the plains of Moreh?

31 For ye shall pass over Jordan, to go in to to prepare the ground for the seed, and to bring forward the harvest.

V. 18—21.] (Notes, &c. vi. 6—9.)

V. 29, 30.] This ceremony is afterwards more explicitly commanded, and likewise the observance of it recorded (xxvii. Joshua viii. 30—35.) The appointment of it at this time was a pledge of the passage of Israel over Jordan. In this world we believe, and in part experience, that the righteous are blessed and the wicked are accursed: but beyond the grave the reality and extent of the blessing, and of the curse, will be more perfectly apprehended.

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.

There are certain grand principles in true religion, which must be introduced upon every subject; and repetitions in this case are so necessary and becoming, that no learning, ingenuity, or eloquence can compensate for the omission of them. Such are repentance of sin; faith in Jesus Christ, with those things which relate to his person, love, atonement, and grace; regeneration; love to God and man; and the future state of punishment and eternal retributions. The more full the heart of the speaker, or of the writer, is of the good treasure (Matt. xii. 35. xiii. 52.) the more will he enlarge on these and similar subjects, to the edification of such as being under the influence of grace, and the operations of heavenly things. In one way or other these topics will be continually resumed, in connection with every doctrine that is explained, and every precept that is enforced; and as introducing the practical improvement of every mercy received, of every chastisement or judgment inflicted, of every threatening denounced, of every example, history, warning, caution, or exhortation. Such subjects must be used as the bread and salt are to all our meals, of whatever occasional topic we discourse; and they, who are duly aware of their vast importance, will watch for opportunities of introducing them, being unwilling to relinquish the hope of gaining attention from their hearers or readers to them, as to matters of indispensable necessity.—All the Lord's kindness to us, in providence, or by redemption, is intended to teach and induce our love and obedience to him; without which our faith and knowledge are vain, our hope delusion and presumption, and we must be miserable for ever. These are the sure effects of repentance and faith, the ornament of our profession, and the preparation for, and earnest of, heaven; where love, obedience, and felicity will be alike perfect.—Upon condition of such perfect love and obedience, the law of God sets before us a blessing; and in case of disobedience denounces a curse against us: but we have broken the law, and are under its curse, without remedy from ourselves. In infinite mercy the gospel

THESE are the statutes and judgments, which ye shall observe to do in the land which the LORD God of thy fathers giveth thee to possess it, all the days that ye live upon the earth.

2 Ye shall utterly destroy all the places wherein the nations which ye shall possess served their gods, upon the high mountains, and upon the hills, and under every green tree.

3 And ye shall overthrow their altars, and break their pillars, and burn their groves with fire; and ye shall hew down the graven images of their gods, and destroy the names of them out of that place.

4 Ye shall not do so unto the LORD your God.

5 But unto the place which the LORD your God shall choose out of all your tribes, to put his name there, even unto his habitation shall ye seek, and thither thou shalt come:

6 And thither ye shall bring your burnt-offerings, and your sacrifices, and your tithes, and heave-offerings of your hand, and your vows, and your free-will offerings, and the firstlings of your herds, and of your flocks.

7 And there ye shall eat before the LORD your God, and ye shall rejoice in all that ye put your hand unto, ye and your households, wherein the LORD thy God hath blessed thee.

8 Ye shall not do after all the things that we do here this day, every man whatsoever is right in his own eyes.

again sets before us a blessing and a curse; a blessing if we obey the call to repentance, to faith in Christ, and to newness of heart and life through him; an awful curse, if we neglect so great salvation. Let us then thankfully welcome these glad tidings of great joy; and "give the more earnest "heed to the things that we have heard, lest at any time we "should let them slip:" let us not harden our hearts, but hear this voice of God whilst it is called to day, and whilst he so kindly invites us to come to him upon a mercy-seat. Urged on by fear of coming short, animated by hope of obtaining the prize, drawn on by love, let us "give dili-"gence to make our calling and election sure." And recollecting all that we have heard, learned, and experienced of the Lord's power, faithfulness, righteousness, and mercy, from our very youth, let us bear testimony of them to the rising generation: let us make them the subject of our daily converse, and endeavour to bequeath them as a legacy to our children after us; that they, as well as we, may be "strong in the grace of our Lord Jesus Christ," encouraged in "fighting the good fight of faith," and made conquerors over every enemy; and may obtain an inheritance in that better land, which the eyes of the Lord watch over, and the glory of the Lord shineth upon, and beautifieth, to all eternity.

NOTES.

CHAP. XII.] V. 2, 3.] As among these monuments of idolatry no mention is made of temples, it is probable that the tabernacle in the wilderness was the first building ever formed as an habitation for the Deity; and that a misunderstanding of its meaning and intention gave rise to that custom in after ages. (Note, Exod. xxv. 8.) Before this they seem to have worshipped in high or in shady places, as favourable to contemplation, or as supposed peculiarly sacred to the Deity, which custom was in many countries retained long afterwards.

[V. 5—7.] The people had before been directed to bring all their sacrifices to the door of the tabernacle. (Lev. xvii. 1—9.) But at this time the general command was particularly explained with reference to their situation in the promised land, and was expatiated upon in a manner, which evinced that it was considered as a matter of the first importance. (1.) Idolatry and superstition would be prevented, and the true Object and prescribed method of worship adhered to, when all their sacrifices were offered at the same place, by the priests appointed for that purpose. (2.) Brotherly love, and harmony in religion would be promoted by these constant opportunities of meeting together from every part of the land, and joining in the sacred institutions. And (3.) The temple, sacrifices, priests, and especially the ark of the covenant, were typical of Christ, through whom alone God can be acceptably worshipped by sinners. Where the ark was situated, God would accept sacrifices but in ordinary cases no where else. Yet prayer and praise might be offered any where, with reference to the sacrifices at the altar, and the sprinkling of the blood before the ark. The place was not at this time appointed, that was left to be done after the people had got possession of the land: accordingly Shiloh was long the appointed place, and afterwards Jerusalem.

V. 8. Ye shall not do, &c.] The ceremonial observances were interrupted in the wilderness, by the want of many things requisite to the due performance of them, when the people had no corn-fields, vineyards, or olive-yards; or by their constant 9 For ye are not as yet come to the rest and to the inheritance, which the LORD your God giveth you.

10 But when ye go over Jordan, and dwell in the land which the LORD your God giveth you to inherit, and when he giveth you rest from all your enemies round about, so that ye dwell in safety;

11 Then there shall be a place which the LORD your God shall choose, to cause his name to dwell there, thither shall ye bring all that I command you; your burnt-offerings, and your sacrifices, your tithes, and the heave-offering of your hand, and all your choice vows which ye vow unto the LORD.

12 And ye shall rejoice before the LORD your God, ye, and your sons, and your daughters, and your men-servants, and your maid-servants, and the Levite that is within your gates; forasmuch as he hath no part nor inheritance with you.

13 Take heed to thyself, that thou offer not thy burnt-offerings in every place that thou seest:

14 But in the place which the LORD shall choose in one of thy tribes, there thou shalt offer thy burnt-offerings, and there thou shalt do all that I command thee.

15 Notwithstanding, thou mayest kill and eat flesh in all thy gates, whatsoever thy soul lusteth after, according to the blessing of the LORD thy God which he hath given thee: the unclean and the clean may eat thereof, as of the roe-buck, and as of the hart.

16 Only ye shall not eat the blood; ye shall pour it upon the earth as water.

17 Thou mayest not eat within thy gates the tithe of thy corn, or of thy wine, or of thy oil, or the firstlings of thy herds, or of thy flock; nor any of thy vows which thou vowest; nor thy free-will offerings, or heave-offering of thy hand:

18 But thou must eat them before the LORD thy God in the place which the LORD thy God shall choose, thou and thy son, and thy daughter, and thy man-servant, and thy maid-servant, and the Levite that is within thy gates: and thou shalt rejoice before the LORD thy God in all that thou puttest thine hands unto.

19 Take heed to thyself that thou forsake not the Levite, as long as thou livest upon the earth.

20 When the LORD thy God shall enlarge thy border, as he hath promised thee, and thou shalt say, I will eat flesh, (because thy soul longeth to eat flesh,) thou mayest eat flesh, whatsoever thy soul lusteth after.

21 If the place which the LORD thy God hath chosen to put his name there be too far from thee; then thou shalt kill of thy herd, and of thy flock, which the LORD hath given thee, as I have commanded thee, and thou shalt eat in thy gates whatsoever thy soul lusteth after.

22 Even as the roe-buck and the hart is eaten, so thou shalt eat them; the unclean and the clean shall eat of them alike.

23 Only be sure that thou eat not the blood: for the blood is the life; and thou mayest not eat the life with the flesh.

24 Thou shalt not eat it; thou shalt pour it upon the earth as water.

25 Thou shalt not eat it; that it may go well

stant removals from place to place.—But it is plain that in the best of times hitherto many things have been neglected, or defective in the church of God; and that the typical meaning of these institutions was the principal intention of them: for they never were very exactly observed in any age of the Jewish church, except it were in the days of Joshua, and for a short time after his death.

V. 17, 18.] This must mean the second tithe; (xiv. 23—29;) for the Levites were wholly to receive the other; (Num. xviii. 20—32.) Somewhat of the same kind seems to have been the case, in respect of the firstlings here mentioned; for every male firstling was to be eaten by the priests only. (Num. xviii. 17, 18.) Either the female firstlings, or some other of the young cattle, being presented as peace-offerings, might thus to be feasted on before the Lord.

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.

We cannot serve God and mammon, nor worship the true God and idols, nor depend upon Christ Jesus and superstitious or self-righteous confidences. No coalition ought so much as to be attempted in these cases.—True religion springs from the subversion of every false dependence, and the dethroning of every idol, and tends to the total extirpation of all rivals and opponents; that the Lord may be our only portion and salvation, and receive all our worship and obedience. Nor can we ever approach the Lord with acceptance, but in a way of his revealing, and well with thee, and with thy children after thee, when thou ſhalt do that which is right in the ſight of the LORD.

26 Only thy holy things, which thou haſt, and thy vows, thou ſhalt take, and go unto the place which the LORD ſhall chooſe.

27 And thou ſhalt offer thy burnt-offerings, the fleſh and the blood, upon the altar of the LORD thy God: and the blood of thy ſacrifices ſhall be poured out upon the altar of the LORD thy God, and thou ſhalt eat the fleſh.

28 Obſerve and hear all theſe words which I command thee, that it may go well with thee, and with thy children after thee for ever, when thou doeſt that which is good and right in the ſight of the LORD thy God.

29 When the LORD thy God ſhall cut off the nations from before thee, whither thou goeſt to poſſeſs them, and thou ſucceedeſt them, and dwelleſt in their land;

30 Take heed to thyſelf that thou be not ſnared by following them, after that they be deſtroyed from before thee; and that thou enquire not after their gods, ſaying, How did theſe nations ſerve their gods? even ſo will I do likewiſe.

31 Thou ſhalt not do ſo unto the LORD thy God: for every abomination to the LORD which he hateth, have they done unto their gods: for even their ſons and their daughters they have burnt in the fire to their gods.

32 What thing ſoever I command you, obſerve to do it: thou ſhalt not add thereto, nor diminiſh from it.

is ordinances of his appointing; for our wiſdom or imagination are not in the leaſt to be truſted in matters of this nature. In Chriſt Jeſus, as in the true temple, "all the ful-"neſs of the Godhead dwells bodily." To him we come by humble faith, and receive the pardon, the reconciliation, and the grace, which he beſtows from his mercy-ſeat: thus we learn to love him, to obey his commandments, and to preſent our ſpiritual ſacrifices of prayer and praiſe, and of every work of compaſſion and kindneſs performed for his ſake. There we find acceptance of our imperfect ſervices, and learn to take delight in obedience; for the ways of our reconciled Father are ways of pleaſantneſs, and all his paths are peace: and our inward ſatisfaction will be augmented in proportion as we abound in love and good works, which ſpring from faith and the in-dwelling Spirit of Chriſt. But we muſt not be ſatisfied with that meaſure of diligence which paſſes current even in the church of God itſelf; where too often many allow themſelves, and are connived at by others, in doing whatſoever is right in their own eyes: but we ſhould look to the law of God, and conſider what it requires; we ſhould remember thoſe primitive times, when great grace was upon all the company of Chriſtians, and reflect how they lived; and we ſhould by faith contemplate thoſe who have arrived at their reſt and inheritance, and endeavour to conceive how they love, rejoice in, and ſerve the Lord, and be preſſing forward after ſuch perfection.—If we would have a comfortable uſe of our poſſeſſions, and be happy in domeſtic life, we muſt honour God with our ſubſtance, worſhip him in our families, and train up our children and ſervants to attend upon all his ordinances. Nay, "whether we eat, "or drink, or whatever we do," we are commanded "to do "all to the glory of God:" this cannot be done without obſerving the rules of ſtrict temperance, and ſubmiſſion to God's providence, in our freeſt uſe of his good creatures; nor without having all ſanctified by the word of God and prayer; nor without ſeparating a portion for the poor, and for the proviſion of ſuch, who labour in the word and doctrine, ſeek not an inheritance of temporal things among their brethren, and may not be forgotten by them. We muſt likewiſe "do all in the name of Jeſus Chriſt, "giving thanks to the Father through him:" and exerciſe in every thing that dominion over our appetites, which becomes his diſciples, and thoſe who ſavour heavenly things. We ought alſo to watch with circumſpection, leſt we ſhould be enſnared by the examples, maxims, faſhions, and perſuaſions of the world; and we muſt not yield at all to them, or they will draw us into further abominations. But whatſoever the Lord commands, that muſt we obſerve and do, without adding to it, or diminiſhing from it, that it may be well with us, and with our children after us for ever.

NOTES.

CHAP. XIII.] V. 1—3.] That which is once demonſtrated to be true, can by no evidence be ſhewn to be falſe. The grand principles of religion may be demonſtrated to be true: the exiſtence of God, from the exiſtence of the creation; and the fundamentals of revealed religion from the external and internal evidences by which revelation is confirmed.

know whether ye love the LORD your God with all your heart and with all your ſoul.

4 Ye ſhall walk after the LORD your God, and fear him, and keep his commandments, and obey his voice, and ye ſhall ſerve him and cleave unto him.

5 And that prophet, or that dreamer of dreams ſhall be put to death, (becauſe he hath ſpoken to turn you away from the LORD your God, which brought you out of the land of Egypt, and redeemed you out of the houſe of bondage, to thruſt thee out of the way which the LORD thy God commanded thee to walk in,) ſo ſhalt thou put the evil away from the midſt of thee.

6 If thy brother, the ſon of thy mother, or thy ſon or thy daughter, or the wife of thy boſom, or thy friend, which is as thine own ſoul, entice thee ſecretly, ſaying, Let us go and ſerve other gods, which thou haſt not known, thou, nor thy fathers;

7 Namely, of the gods of the people which are round about you, nigh unto thee, or far off from thee, from the one end of the earth, even unto the other end of the earth;

8 Thou ſhalt not conſent unto him, nor hearken unto him; neither ſhall thine eye pity him, neither ſhalt thou ſpare, neither ſhalt thou conceal him;

9 But thou ſhalt ſurely kill him; thine hand ſhall be firſt upon him to put him to death, and afterwards the hand of all the people.

confirmed. Unleſs theſe evidences could be ſhewn inſufficient, all objections are futile or malicious: though (as in the caſe of an incendiary,) malevolence may more eaſily do miſchief, than benevolence can retard or counteract its effects. We ſhould be ſo far from liſtening to the ſophiſtical reaſonings of atheiſts or infidels, againſt the plain truths and precepts of Scripture; that even miracles ought not in this caſe to be noticed. The revelation given by Moſes to the Iſraelites had been ſufficiently authenticated: it eſpecially required them to truſt, love, and ſerve Jehovah alone, to the excluſion of all other objects of faith and worſhip.—Some parts of the revelation then given, being of another nature, might hereafter by the ſame authority be altered, to make way for a fuller diſcovery of divine truth, and a more enlarged diſpenſation: this alſo would be introduced and authenticated by miracles. But the firſt principles before mentioned were immutable in their nature and obligation; and no miracles might be admitted in oppoſition to them. We are too much in the dark to determine, in all caſes, how far created power can reach, and where the effect can only be produced by the power of God. It is I think undeniable that Satan, if permitted, could produce alterations in the ordinary courſe of nature, which would appear to us miraculous: and it is intimated in the New Teſtament, as well as in this place, that in ſome caſes he hath had ſuch a permiſſion granted him; (Matt. xxiv. 24. 2 Theſſ. ii. 9. Rev. xiii. 13—15:) though we may ſuppoſe, that there was always an obſervable difference between theſe ſatanical deluſions and true miracles, provided the perſons concerned were properly diſpoſed to note it. We may be ſure that this enemy of God and holineſs will never interpoſe to ſupport a doctrine, of which the evident tendency is to ſubvert his own kingdom of darkneſs and wickedneſs; (Matt. xii. 24—30:) and we may ſafely conclude, that in difficult caſes, in which an upright enquirer might be miſled, God will never permit him thus to intrude. But at the ſame time, we may allow, that the Lord, in order to prove his profeſſing people, whether they really love his truth, worſhip, and ſervice, and to diſtinguiſh betwixt thoſe who do and thoſe who do not, hath been, and ſtill may be, pleaſed to permit Satan to imitate his divine operations in different ways. (2 Theſſ. ii. 10—12.) In all caſes however, where the evident teſtimony of authenticated revelation is not contradicted, or evaded, miracles muſt be conſidered as the ſeal of heaven atteſting the doctrine in proof of which they are wrought: but when the doctrine militates againſt the evident principles of ſuch revelation, we are to recollect, that the Lord our God proves us, whether we love him or not. This ſtatement, which I truſt is ſcriptural, would guide the upright believer, who kept cloſe to the written word and the throne of grace, through every perplexity, even when true miracles might be expected, and falſe miracles were permitted. But the revelation of God's truth and will ſeems to be now completed, and the cloſing diſpenſation introduced: all miracles therefore, pretended to be wrought in favour of any alteration in it, or addition to it, or by any perſons in favour of their own ſenſe impoſed on it, in defect of other arguments, ſhould be rejected as impoſtures of men, or deluſions of Satan. Nor have we reaſon to expect any more miracles, except the Lord ſhould ſee them needful or ſuitable in the future deſtruction of Antichriſt, the converſion of the Jews, and the calling of the Gentiles; or on ſome ſuch extraordinary occaſion. The pretended miracles of the Roman church, wrought in favour of idolatry and ſuperſtition, are only ſo many proofs, that that church is the grand antichriſt foretold in Scripture: and all pretences to impreſſions, viſions, or dreams, as far as they are adduced in proof of any particular tenets, weaken the ſcriptural proof of them, if of ſuch they are capable, and diſgrace and oppoſe the cauſe which they are brought to ſupport. The more the true Chriſtian diſregards the charge of enthuſiaſm, beſtowed upon him for his profeſſed belief and experience of the teaching, ſanctifying, and comforting influences of the Holy Ghoſt, according to the word of God; the more carefully ſhould he ſhun, and proteſt againſt all appearances of real enthuſiaſm, which is pregnant with impoſture and deluſion, and gives ſuch cauſe brought thee out of the land of Egypt from the house of bondage.

11 And all Israel shall hear and fear, and shall do no more any such wickedness as this is among you.

12 If thou shalt hear say in one of thy cities which the LORD thy God hath given thee to dwell there, saying,

13 Certain men, the children of Belial, are gone out from among you, and have withdrawn the inhabitants of their city, saying, Let us go and serve other gods, (which ye have not known:)

14 Then shalt thou enquire and make search, and ask diligently: and, behold, if it be truth, and the thing certain, that such abomination is wrought among you:

15 Thou shalt surely smite the inhabitants of that city with the edge of the sword, destroying it utterly, and all that is therein, and the cattle thereof, with the edge of the sword.

16 And thou shalt gather all the spoil of it into the midst of the street thereof, and shalt burn with fire the city, and all the spoil thereof every whit, for the LORD thy God: and it shall be an heap for ever, it shall not be built again.

17 And there shall cleave nought of the cursed thing to thine hand: that the LORD may turn from the fierceness of his anger, and shew thee mercy, and have compassion upon thee, and multiply thee, as he hath sworn unto thy fathers; cause to the enemies of religion to stumble and to blaspheme.

18 When thou shalt hearken to the voice

V. 6—11.] By this law every Israelite was bound in conscience to prosecute, to inform against, and to assist at the execution of any one, though a near relation, who attempted to persuade him to idolatry. Yet it is observable that parents and husbands are not mentioned in the list of those who were to be thus accused: perhaps out of deference to the divine appointment of authority and subordination in families. This law would powerfully operate to fill the minds of the Israelites with abhorrence of idolatry; and render every one afraid of harbouring a thought which he could not disclose to his nearest relation without risking his life. Israel was under a peculiar covenant, of which idolatry was the grand forfeiture: this could not be prevented from becoming a national sin, unless individuals, or even cities, that were guilty of it, were punished by public authority. They were in a special manner under the government of God as a nation, and this crime was as it were high treason. They were also a single nation surrounded by idolaters, and prone themselves to idolatry in a surprising degree. These reasons for punishing this crime by death do not now exist; and there is no command, nor precedent in the New Testament, in support of magistrates using the sword of public justice, in punishing their subjects for matters merely of conscience towards God, nor does it seem at all to accord with the spirit of Christianity. Much less can this authorise persecution in its larger sense: the Israelites were not commanded, nor even allowed, to punish idolaters as such, but merely apostates from the worship of the true God to idolatry, within the limits of their own nation; nor were they required to propagate the worship of Jehovah and true religion by any such methods; which ought to be left untouched by the servants of God for the sole use of his enemies.

V. 12—18.] Children of Belial are those children of rebellion, who cast off the yoke of the Lord and of his law; and it is another name for the children of the wicked one, who first cast off the yoke of obedience to the Creator, and aspired to absolute independence. (2 Cor. vi. 15.) If such a case arose as is here described, the magistrates and people were required to investigate it fairly; that it might be fully proved before so terrible an execution took place: and if any person remained uninfected with the general contagion, they would doubtless be allowed to separate themselves, and probably some time would be allowed them for repentance. But afterwards the whole city, with all its inhabitants, and all its riches, were as an accursed thing to be utterly destroyed: and this would prove that the private accusation, and public execution were the effect of zeal for God, and not of covetousness, which might have been suspected, had the persons employed seized upon any of the spoil. We never read of this law having been carried into execution; and have reason to think that neglect of it was a national sin which hastened the Babylonish captivity. Had some mortified limbs been cut off, the life of the state might have been prolonged.

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.

It is of vast importance for us to be well acquainted with the truths and precepts of revelation, and firmly established in them: for we may expect to be proved, not ony with that trial of our faith, which requires us to suffer or to renounce our worldly interest for conscience-sake; but by being exposed to such plausible temptations, as "Satan, "transformed into an angel of light," can set before us, to impose upon us with evil in the guise of good, of error in the appearance of truth; nor can any thing be effectually opposed to such temptations, but a plain express testimony of God's word to the contrary. In order to render such temptations more dangerous, our crafty foe will send them to us by persons, whom we have been accustomed to look up to, as superiors, teachers, and men of God; or by those for whom we entertain the most tender affection: the former we can scarcely think capable of deceiving, or of being deceived; to the latter we can hardly find in our hearts to refuse any request. But we must remember, that in all this the Lord our God doth prove us. He is our Father and Teacher, and we must in this sense call no man Father upon earth; if the servant therefore contradicts the Lord, we must believe the latter, and not the former.—The love of God, and the duty which we owe to him, are so immensely of the LORD thy God, to keep all his commandments, which I command thee this day, to do that which is right in the eyes of the LORD thy God.

YE are the children of the LORD your God. Ye shall not cut yourselves, nor make any baldness between your eyes, for the dead:

mensely superior to all other obligations, that we must act even towards our dearest friends, as though we mortally hated them, when his command or his glory requires it; (Luke xiv. 26.) If then the offending relative might not be spared or pitied, but must be put to death by the law of God: surely we are called upon, not only to refuse compliance with such temptations as are enforced by our affections; but plainly to protest against such dangerous tempters, sharply to reprove them, and, if we cannot reclaim them, to renounce their friendship. Neither may we render any superior regard to the example of numbers, who establish fashions of ungodliness, and put piety out of countenance, as a singularity, a preciseness, an unnecessary scrupulosity. Still we must cleave to the Lord, and shew our love to him, by walking after him and not after the world; and by keeping his commandments, and attending on his worship, how much soever others desert or despise them, and revile us for our adherence to them.—The fear, love, and worship of God form the true interest of communities, as well as of individuals; and the progress of ungodliness precedes the approach of public calamities, both in the nature of things, and in the just judgment of God. The magistrate therefore, in good policy, as well as in duty, is bound to employ his authority to repress wickedness and promote religion; which may be done by various means, without wielding the persecutor's sword, or violating the rights of private judgment and liberty of conscience; especially by countenancing and encouraging the faithful preaching of God's word. But the end of all human punishments, yea of all the threatenings and judgments of God, is this; "that men should hear and fear," repent, and forsake their sins, "that the fierce wrath of God" may be averted, whether from individuals, or from nations. — However enormous any crime may be, and however necessary the punishment of it, none must be proceeded against, but upon diligent investigation, and full proof: and every one concerned in the prosecution of criminals should be careful to make it evident, that he is influenced, not by selfish motives, but by a regard to public justice. Such as connive at and conceal those enormous crimes, that ought to be punished by the magistrate, become partakers of the guilt: and the obstinate in wickedness are near to destruction; we must therefore separate from them, if we would escape their doom. Nor should we forget that we have no less reason, but indeed greater, to fear the wrath of this holy Lord God, under the Christian dispensation; because those spiritual judgments, which are now inflicted are infinitely more terrible, than the most solemn execution of criminals by the sword of justice: and the more entirely wicked people escape punishment in this world, the greater will be their misery in the world to come.—Let us then fear the spiritual idolatry of covetousness, and the love of worldly pleasure; and be careful not to countenance it in our families, by our example, or by the education of our children: and may the Lord write his law and truth in our hearts, there set up his throne and shed abroad his love, and thence expel all usurpers and rivals, that we may be his alone; as a full proof that our sins are forgiven, and as a gracious preparation for future chearful obedience.

21 Ye shall not eat of any thing that dieth of itself: thou shalt give it unto the stranger that is in thy gates, that he may eat it: or thou mayest sell it unto an alien: for thou art an holy people unto the LORD thy God. Thou shalt not seethe a kid in his mother's milk.

22 Thou shalt truly tithe all the increase of thy seed, that the field bringeth forth year by year.

23 And thou shalt eat before the LORD thy God, in the place which he shall choose to place his name there, the tithe of thy corn, of thy wine, and of thine oil, and the firstlings of thy herds, and of thy flocks; that thou mayest learn to fear the LORD thy God always.

26 And thou shalt bestow that money for whatsoever thy soul lusteth after, for oxen, or for sheep, or for wine, or for strong drink, or for whatsoever thy soul desireth: and thou shalt eat there before the LORD thy God, and thou shalt rejoice, thou and thine household.

27 And the Levite that is within thy gates, thou shalt not forsake him: for he hath no part nor inheritance with thee.

28 At the end of three years thou shalt bring forth all the tithe of thine increase the same year, and shalt lay it up within thy gates.

29 And the Levite, (because he hath no part nor inheritance with thee,) and the stranger, and the fatherless, and the widow, which are within thy gates, shall come, and shall eat and be satisfied; that the LORD thy God may bless thee in all the work of thine hand which thou doest.

CHAP.

V. 21. Thou shalt give it, &c] This allowance evinces, that the law restricting diet was entirely ceremonial, though it conveyed moral instruction, and answered at that time valuable religious purposes: for, had the violation of it been sinful in its own nature, it would have been sinful in the heathens as well as in the Israelites, and they must no more have been accessory to the commission of sin by others, than have committed it themselves. (Notes, &c. Lev. xi.)

V. 22—29.] These verses contain a requisition of a second tithe from the produce of the land, which, with that appropriated for the maintenance of the Levites, amounted to a fifth part of it. Two years together the Israelites were commanded to bring the second tithe to Jerusalem, either in kind or in money, and to feast upon it religiously before the Lord, that they might be drawn to spend the more time at the Temple, in the society of the priests, the ordinances of God, and the company of his people. The third year they were required to spend this tithe in hospitably entertaining and relieving the Levite, the stranger, the fatherless, and the widow; that is, in every kind of charity. This whole appointment was evidently intended to counteract the covetousness, distrust, and selfishness of the human heart; to promote friendliness, liberality, and chearfulness; to raise a perpetual fund for the use of the poor; and to teach the people that they would never so comfortably enjoy their worldly portion, as when they shared it with their necessitous brethren. They were taught to convert the common blessings of providence into a sacred ordinance, by accompanying their most free but temperate use of them, with the exercise of religion: and this was the way to learn to fear God always, and to obtain his blessing upon all the works of their hands.

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.

Those, whom God hath chosen to be his children, he will form to be an holy people, of a peculiarly heavenly disposition, and zealous of good works, (Tit. ii. 14.) As their character and privileges are so distinguished from those of other people, they must be careful to maintain that distinction in its utmost extent; to shew to the world an evident example of holy moderation in all their affections, and to avoid every thing which may disgrace their profession in the sight of all who watch for their halting. Having a Father in heaven, who ever liveth to supply all their wants, and to repair every breach, they need not mourn the loss of earthly friends disconsolately as others do.—Our heavenly Father prohibits us nothing, but in a wise and kind regard to our welfare; nothing, but what is debasing or hurtful, or which leads us into temptation. The language of his prohibitions, rightly interpreted, is, "Do thyself no harm;" 'do not wound thyself; do not Making that our rule of enjoyment, we ſhould uſe providential bleſſings in ſubſerviency to religious edification, to our own inward peace and ſatisfaction, to the promotion of brotherly-love, to our mutual uſefulneſs, and to the production of fruit which will at length abound to our own account. That "Wiſdom's ways are ways of pleaſantneſs," is a truth, of which every man will have experimental proof, in proportion to his devotedneſs to God. May we then chooſe and purſue this happineſs, and compaſſionate and pray for thoſe deluded millions who ſeek for pleaſure in ſin, which is the only cauſe of all the miſery in the univerſe: and let us learn to value every earthly advantage as enabling us to glorify God, by diſſeminating the knowledge of his truth, and by communicating to the relief of our diſtreſſed brethren and fellow-creatures.

NOTES.

CHAP. XV.] V. 2. He ſhall not exact it, &c.] The debtor was bound in conſcience to pay the debt, if he were able, at that or any future time: but the creditor was not allowed to ſue for it, nor the magiſtrate to enforce the payment of it; at leaſt if it appeared that the debtor could not with conveniency part with the money. Some ſuch limitation the word exact ſeems to admit of; and the law was evidently intended for the relief of the indigent, not for the ſecurity of the fraudulent. (4.)

V. 3. Of a foreigner, &c.] Though the Iſraelites were not allowed to oppreſs foreigners, or to do injuſtice to them, yet in thoſe laws of love a difference was made betwixt ſtrangers and their brethren. We muſt do exact juſtice to all; but in ſhewing kindneſs we muſt eſpecially regard the houſehold of faith.

V. 4—6.] Had the Iſraelites fully performed the terms of their national covenant, their great proſperity would have entirely baniſhed poverty from among them. But the Lord foreſaw that they would not be thus obedient, and foretold, that "the poor ſhould never ceaſe from "among them," but always remain as a trial of their diſpoſition to do good for his ſake, (11.) The words, "Save when there ſhall be no more poor among you," may alſo imply that they ought ſo liberally to relieve every poor brother, that all being comfortably provided for, no poverty might be viſible among them.

V. 9. That, &c.] The righteous demands of God's law rouſe the dormant enmity of man's wicked heart, and prove an occaſion of increaſing his guilt, (Rom. vii. 8—13;) for the ſame law condemns every riſing thought of ſin. The Iſraelites were therefore exhorted to beware leſt this ſhould be the caſe with them; leſt this equitable ſtatute ſhould occaſion their covetouſneſs to work; and leſt they ſhould evade it, by refuſing to lend the poor in their diſtreſs, or by only lending them in a niggardly and grudging manner, becauſe of this law. The caution forms a divinely inſpired comment on the law of "loving our neighbour as ourſelves," which is ſtill in full force, (Matth. vi. 12. xviii. 35. Luke vi. 35;) though the judicial 14 Thou shalt furnish him liberally out of thy flock, and out of thy floor, and out of thy wine-press: of that wherewith the LORD thy God hath blessed thee thou shalt give unto him.

15 And thou shalt remember that thou wast a bond-man in the land of Egypt, and the LORD thy God redeemed thee: therefore I command thee this thing to-day.

judicial law, upon which it was grafted, be no longer the magistrate's rule in administering justice, (Notes, &c. Ex. xxiii. 10, 11. Lev. xxv. 2—7.)

V. 14, 15.] This addition to the law before commented on, (Note, Exod. xxi. 6.) is likewise a divine interpretation of the law of love, which was enforced upon the Israelites by the consideration of their redemption from the Egyptian bondage, the manner in which the Egyptians were constrained to pay them their wages, and the prosperity to which the Lord had advanced them. And the spirit of the precept is obligatory upon the redeemed of the Lord, on higher obligations and from more powerful motives.

V. 17. And also, &c.] Hence it appears that female servants were purchased for their labour, without any purpose of espousing them, and that they were under the same law with the men-servants, (Exod. xxi. 7—11.)

V. 18. In serving thee, &c.] It seems that it was not customary for hired servants to serve longer than three years at one time, lest their condition should too much resemble that of those, who sold themselves through poverty, or were sold for their debts or crimes.

V. 19—23.] The firstling being a male was sacrificed, and those parts which were not burnt upon the altar were eaten by the priests. But if it was female, it was offered as a peace-offering, and feasted upon by the offerer and his friends; except it were blemished, and then it was slain when young, and eaten as ordinary food, but without the blood.

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.

We are here called upon to remember, that we are debtors to divine justice, have got nothing to pay, (Luke vii. 41, 42;) and are liable to be sent to the prison of hell on that account: that we are slaves, and poor, and perishing; but the Lord Jesus Christ, by becoming poor, and shedding his blood, hath made an infinite provision for the payment of our debts, the ransom of our souls, and the full and everlasting supply of all our wants. This provision is revealed and proposed in the gospel, and we are invited to partake of all these blessings, freely, without money, and without price. When this gospel is clearly preached, then and there is proclaimed the acceptable year of the Lord, the year of release of our debts, of the deliverance of our souls, and of obtaining rest in him. To every true believer the Lord frankly forgives the whole debt, and he becomes a partaker of Christ, of his freedom, and of all his unsearchable riches. These favoured persons he requires, with the mild accents of love, to perform those these very duties which the law required under awful penalties. Thus we are called to prove that our faith is not that dead faith, which as a worthless putrifying carcase must be carried out of the church of God; but that it works by love, and that our love is proved sincere by the fruits of kindness to our brethren. To favour this trial of our faith, the poor continue among us, as appointed to be the Lord's representatives and receivers: and to relieve their wants, and remit their debts, according to the measure of our ability, is one grand expression and test of our love to the Saviour. (Notes, Matt. xxv. 31—46. John, xii. 8.) Upon the most powerful motives, and with the most encouraging promises, the professed disciples of Christ are exhorted to abound in this grace also. In proportion as faith and love prevail, they will triumph over the selfishness of the heart, and over the ingratitude of the world; and exclude those numerous excuses, which result from unbelief, distrust, and covetousness.—The aim of every Christian should be daily "to do good to all men, especially to them that are "of the household of faith:" and to open his hand liberally in giving or in lending, according to his ability, and according to the necessity of his brethren, that distressing poverty may have no place amongst the followers of Christ; especially searching out such as are most modest, humble, and backward to complain, or to obtrude upon the notice of others.—Though this be no more than a proper acknowledgment of obligations already received, yet it shall be considered as lending to the Lord, and shall abundantly be recompensed.—Let all then beware of covetousness, and watch and pray against the workings of an envious, grudging, selfish heart. We need never fear being losers, when the Lord stands security for the debt; nor carrying matters to excess, whilst we fall so short of his measure of love to us; (1 John, iii. 16—18;) and that which the world calls prudence will be found the greatest folly. In the exercise of this loving kindness, those ought especially to be provided for, who have been useful to us and spent their strength in our service; nor should we think it hard but rather rejoice, in contributing, though at some expence, to the comfort of those who have so good a claim to our generosity: and Christians should be ambitious of rendering all, who live in their families, or are connected with them, so well satisfied, that they may love them and their houses, and count it their privilege to abide there. Such a Master is our God: all, who make trial of his service, will account it perfect freedom, and consider it their happiness to join themselves to him, to serve him with all they have and are, and to dwell in his house as his willing servants for ever and ever.

CHAP. XVI.] V. 1. By night.] Though the Israelites did not set off to go out of Egypt till the morning; yet, whilst they were eating the passover, and holding themselves in readiness during the night, the first-born of Egypt were destroyed, which made way for their release: and afterwards by night they passed the Red Sea, by which their deliverance was completed.—Moses repeated these laws, as with his dying lips, to this new generation, just upon their entrance into Canaan, to leave the deeper impression upon their minds. (Notes, Exod. xii. Lev. xxiii. Numb. xxviii. 16—30.)

V. 4—6.] The use of unleavened bread was general through the whole land, by which they, who were confined at home, testified their concurrence with those who ate the passover at the tabernacle: but that was appointed to be slain, and eaten only in the place where the tabernacle was situated. Thither the males were required to come both at the passover and the two other great feasts, unless unavoidably prevented: and the women, though not commended, frequently attended them. (1 Sam. i. 7. Luke, ii. 41. Note Deut. xii. 5.)

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.

The frequent repetition of the same laws forms an humiliating reproach of man's unteachableness in spiritual things; for God doeth nothing in vain.—From this manner

ple of Moses, ministers and parents may learn to renew their instructions and admonitions with their latest breath, that the survivors may have them associated with every remembrance of them.—A believer should not forget for one day, his original low state of guilt and misery, his gracious deliverance, and the price which it cost the Redeemer; that gratitude and joy in the Lord may, during the residue of his life, be mingled with godly sorrow, mortification of sin, and humble patience under the tribulations, which lie in the way to the kingdom of heaven.—Every one of our services must be performed in communion with the church of Christ; and independence on him, our Temple, Altar, Sacrifice, and Passover; and with the unleavened bread of sincerity and truth. We should indeed be thankful that our attendance on God's ordinances does not require such long and expensive journeys, as that of Israel did: but if our hearts be right with God, we shall so delight in his service, that the labour required in it will be our pleasure, or we shall be ashamed that it is not. And the expence incurred in making the heart of the poor and destitute rejoice with us, according to this

For the punishment of idolaters, 2—7. 3d, For appeal to the priests and magistrates residing near the sanctuary, and the punishment of such as refused to submit to their decision, 8—13. 4th. Concerning the appointment and duty of kings, 14—20.

THOU shalt not sacrifice unto the LORD thy God any bullock or sheep wherein is blemish, or any ill-favouredness: for that is an abomination unto the LORD thy God.

2 If there be found among you, within any of thy gates which the LORD thy God giveth thee, man or woman that hath wrought wickedness in the sight of the LORD thy God, in transgressing his covenant,

3 And hath gone and served other gods, and worshipped them, either the sun, or moon, or any of the host of heaven, which I have not commanded;

4 And it be told thee, and thou hast heard of it, and enquired diligently, and, behold, it be true, and the thing certain, that such abomination is wrought in Israel:

5 Then shalt thou bring forth that man, or that woman, (which have committed that wicked thing,) unto thy gates, even that man or that woman, and shalt stone them with stones till they die.

6 At the mouth of two witnesses, or three witnesses, shall he that is worthy of death be put to death; but at the mouth of one witness he shall not be put to death.

7 The hands of the witnesses shall be first upon him to put him to death, and afterward the hands of all the people: so thou shalt put the evil away from among you.

8 If there arise a matter too hard for thee in judgment, between blood and blood, between plea and plea, and between stroke and stroke, being matters of controversy, within thy gates; then shalt thou arise, and get thee up into the place which the LORD thy God shall choose;

9 And thou shalt come unto the priests the Levites, and unto the judge that shall be in those days, and enquire; and they shall shew thee the sentence of judgment:

10 And thou shalt do according to the sentence which they of that place which the LORD shall choose shall shew thee; and thou shalt observe to do according to all that they inform thee;

11 According to the sentence of the law which

Lord's blessing upon us, will be our own heartfelt satisfaction.—Let us also note that magistracy is the appointment of God; as such we are bound to submit to it, being thankful for its advantages, and patient under its inconveniences, and praying for those placed over us. But magistrates likewise should consider their accountableness to God for the use of their authority; and study to know and do their duty in uprightness, disinterestedness, and impartiality; that they may both be public blessings to others, and may inherit everlasting life themselves, as the true disciples of him, who "loveth righteousness, and "hateth iniquity."—Indeed none of us should fear any thing so much as doing that "which the Lord our God "hateth."

NOTES.

CHAP. XVII.] V. 2—7.] The expression within thy gates, denoted all those who resided in the cities, and all that went in and came out at the gates of any of them: so that it included all the inhabitants of the whole land.—This law enjoined that those who committed idolatry should be stoned, as well as those who seduced others to commit it: for that crime especially "trangressed the co-"venant," and would become a national forfeiture, if not thus punished.—Had men been commanded to worship creatures, however exalted, it might have been complained of as a degradation: much more if they had been required to worship beasts, inanimate figures, and flocks and bottles.

But God had not commanded; nay he had expressly forbidden such practices; and they were entirely man's own foolish inventions, and Satan's abominable suggestions.—This law was the magistrate's rule in administering justice to individuals: as that, which was before considered, (Notes, &c. xiii.) regulated informations of idolatry, and the punishment of cities, which were guilty of that crime. In both cases the witnesses were required to take the lead in the execution of the criminal, that they might, by that consideration, be rendered more cautious in their testimony; for though the false witness was the actual murderer of the person put to death unjustly, yet perhaps he would not be so much shocked by it, when another was the executioner of the sentence, as when he himself was required to perform that painful office.

V. 8—13.] This law is addressed to the inferior magistrates before mentioned. (xvi. 18.) In many cases of life and death, or of property, or concerning the law of retaliation, they might find perplexing difficulties. Such cases were therefore to be referred to the decision of the superior tribunals, which were held at the place where the tabernacle was fixed.—The priests and Levites, having the most leisure, and being especially appointed to the study of the law, which was not only the rule of conscience, but the law of the land, by their learning would be best qualified to act as judges; and probably the Sanhedrim and other superior courts of justice were composed of them chiefly, though not without some persons of the other tribes. The

which they shall teach thee, and according to the judgment which they shall tell thee, thou shalt do: thou shalt not decline from the sentence which they shall shew thee, to the right hand nor to the left.

12 And the man that will do presumptuously, and will not hearken unto the priest that standeth to minister there before the LORD thy God, or unto the judge, even that man shall die; and thou shalt put away the evil from Israel.

13 And all the people shall hear, and fear, and do no more presumptuously.

14 When thou art come unto the land which the LORD thy God giveth thee, and shalt possess it, and shalt dwell therein, and shalt say, I will set a king over me, like as all the nations that are about me:

15 Thou shalt in any wise set him king over thee, whom the LORD thy God shall choose: one from among thy brethren shalt thou set king over thee: thou mayest not set a stranger over thee, which is not thy brother.

16 But he shall not multiply horses to himself, nor cause the people to return to Egypt, to the end that he should multiply horses: forasmuch as the LORD hath said unto you, Ye shall henceforth return no more that way.

17 Neither shall he multiply wives to himself, that his heart turn not away; neither shall he greatly multiply to himself silver and gold.

18 And it shall be, when he sitteth upon the throne of his kingdom, that he shall write him a copy of this law in a book, out of that which is before the priests the Levites:

19 And it shall be with him, and he shall read therein all the days of his life; that he may learn to fear the LORD his God, to keep all the words of this law, and these statutes, to do them:

20 That

judge here mentioned may either mean the High Priest, or some other supreme magistrate, whom God from time to time should raise up among them. To these persons the appeal was directed to be made; and with all their advantages, they were not likely to give a false sentence, whilst they continued free from gross apostacy in religion and corruption in morals. As, however, this law related not to matters of faith and conscience, but merely to the administration of justice in the land; it would be better that an individual should sometimes be aggrieved, than that the advantages of magistracy should be abridged: therefore he, who presumptuously refused to submit, was ordered to be put to death as a rebel against the government. In every state there must be some final award, from which there lies no appeal, which must be submitted to even though in some cases it should be unjust; but this gives no countenance to the monstrous claim, which some have made of being absolute interpreters of doctrines and precepts, in matters of conscience, to which all must submit, however evidently their decisions contradict the word of God. In this argument it is enough to say, "we must "obey" and believe "God, rather than man;" as Peter replied to the successors of those very persons, to whom the authority in question was given, and on whom it had at that time devolved.

V. 14. A king, &c.] The appointment of a king is not here commanded, nor so much as counselled: nay it is implied that such a change in their government would originate from a desire of being like the nations, to whom God would have his people unlike: and we know that they sinned when they asked a king. (1 Sam. xii. 19.) Yet God foresaw that this event would actually take place, and he previously gave these rules respecting it.—We should argue therefore very inconclusively, if we should infer the lawfulness of slavery, polygamy, or divorces, from those judicial laws, which suppose their existence, and establish re- gulations concerning them: for all such questions must be determined by the plain precepts or general tenor of scripture, and not by these judicial regulations.

V. 15. A stranger, &c.] The Israelites were forbidden to set a stranger over them, not only lest he should oppress them, but lest he should lead them into idolatry. This refers to a king whom they should choose and appoint for themselves; not to a power which in the providence of God might be placed over them without their own concurrence: but the interpreters of the law, in the days of Christ, deduced from this clause the unlawfulness of submitting to a foreign yoke, and incited the people to continual rebellions, which at length terminated in their ruin.

V. 16. Multiply horses, &c.] The multiplying of horses for chariots of war and cavalry, or for luxury, would increase the pomp and splendour of the monarch, and form a ground of confidence distinct from, and inconsistent with a proper confidence in God, and with considering him as the glory of Israel. As Egypt abounded in horses, it would induce such a trade with that kingdom, from which they ought to be totally separated, as might end in their being again brought into bondage to that nation. (1 Kings, x. 26. 28, 29.)

V. 18. A copy of this law, &c.] Some interpret this command of the book of Deuteronomy alone: but it is most probable that the whole law was intended: and if Moses with his immense engagements found time for compiling and writing the whole; it could not be an intolerable task imposed upon any future prince, if he were required to transcribe it. This would have a great effect in rendering him well acquainted with the law; for writing not only assists the memory, but causes us to suppose every single word of what we transcribe. It is however probable, that this law was very seldom observed by the kings of Judah and Israel.

THE priests the Levites, and all the tribe of Levi, shall have no part nor inheritance with Israel: they shall eat the offerings of the LORD made by fire, and his inheritance.

2 Therefore shall they have no inheritance among their brethren: the LORD is their inheritance, as he hath said unto them.

3 And this shall be the priest's due from the people, from them that offer a sacrifice, whether it be ox or sheep: and they shall give unto the priest the shoulder, and the two cheeks, and the maw.

4 The first-fruit also of thy corn, of thy wine, and of thine oil, and the first of the fleece of thy sheep, shalt thou give him.

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.

We are continually called upon to remember the perfect, pure, and spotless sacrifice of Christ; and reminded, to serve God with the best of our abilities, time, and possessions; otherwise our supposed obedience will be an abomination. To him all worship and love belong, and all idolatry and irreligion of every kind are offensive in the greatest degree, and will assuredly be punished, in this world or in the next, as well as those crimes which disturb the peace of society; nay with greater severity, as being of deeper malignity.—We are also repeatedly cautioned against rashness in bearing testimony, or in punishing supposed criminals, that the innocent may not be involved in the same doom with the guilty.—The ministers of religion and civil magistrates should, in their several places, give diligence to obtain exact and extensive knowledge, as well as to act with integrity and impartiality, that they may not mislead or injure those who place confidence in their decisions. In both cases however, there lies an appeal to the infallible Teacher and Judge of the world, who, here or hereafter, will set all right, and do justice to those that trust in him.—The presumptuous offender, who refused to submit to the award of human justice, with all it's imperfections, was condemned to die: of what punishment then will the obstinate rebel against the righteous Governor of the universe be adjudged worthy? and with what vengeance will he, who despises or abuses the grace of the gospel be recompensed?—The Lord sees the hearts of his own people too much disposed to be like the world around them; and for their chastisement frequently permits them to obtain the objects of their foolish and sinful desires; still regulating the whole ultimately for their good. But the higher any person is exalted, the more strongly will he be tempted to pride, covetousness, luxury, and lust, those fatal enemies to true godliness, which tend exceedingly to rivet the chains of hell upon the soul. Against these things princes have especially need to watch and to be cautioned lest the pernicious influence of their example and authority should become subsidiary to infidelity, which leads up to all the practices and profanity. But alas! who does not ness, disinterestedness, and zeal sufficient to venture the loss of their favour, and the consequences of their displeasure, by reminding them of such salutary but distasteful truths? Almost all men will rather occupy the more pleasing and profitable place of flatterers; and the remaining few will either observe a timid silence, or soon be driven from the verge of courts! (Amos. vii. 12, 13.) Kings therefore have therefore the more need to be employed in the daily study of the Scriptures, that they may become well acquainted with the truth and will of God: that at the fountain-head they may learn the true wisdom which begins in the fear of God, in habitual regard to his authority, and to that great day of account, in which there will be no respect of persons; and that from these principles may result a conscientious worship of him and universal obedience to him. And seeing the welfare of kingdoms is so intimately connected with the character of their princes, we ought all to pray to the Lord to place such kings over us, or to give such wisdom and grace to those who are placed over us, and to increase unto them every good and perfect gift; and to be especially thankful when such prayers are answered, and the blessing of good governors is bestowed upon us. But alas! how much of God's word is overlooked by his professed people! One is tempted to think that this chapter was expunged from Solomon's Bible, and those of other Jewish kings. And might not an impartial and well-informed person suppose the same respecting some of our Bibles, with reference to those chapters which immediately instruct us in our duties? We have therefore all need more carefully and exactly to study the Scriptures, to examine ourselves, to watch our hearts, to avoid temptations to pride and the love of this present world; and to pray for faith and grace, by which we may be enabled to observe all the commandments of God, for "in keeping of them there is great reward."

8 They shall have like portions to eat, beside that which cometh of the sale of his patrimony.

9 When thou art come into the land which the LORD thy God giveth thee, thou shalt not learn to do after the abominations of those nations.

10 There shall not be found among you any one that maketh his son or his daughter to pass through the fire, or that useth divination, or an observer of times, or an enchanter, or a witch.

11 Or a charmer, or a consulter with familiar spirits, or a wizard, or a necromancer.

16 According to all that thou desiredst of the LORD thy God in Horeb, in the day of the assembly, saying, Let me not hear again the voice of the LORD my God, neither let me see this great fire any more, that I die not.

18 I will raise them up a Prophet from among their brethren like unto thee, and will put my words in his mouth; and he shall speak unto them all that I shall command him.

19 And it shall come to pass, that whosoever will not hearken unto my words, which he shall speak in my name, I will require it of him.

lotted the priests and Levites. They are not, however, mentioned in any of the preceding laws. (Lev. vii. 31—34.)

V. 6—8.] It seems that the Levites officiated by turns, or according to some rule, from their first establishment in Canaan: but if any one, out of his course, from cordial love of the ordinances and courts of the Lord, preferred officiating as a servant to the priests at the sanctuary, to living at home with his family, he was to be encouraged by an addition to his maintenance, above that share of the tithes which was regularly allotted him.

V. 9—12.] The several words here employed are supposed to include every species of that superstition or idolatry, which consists in seeking such information or help from other invisible beings, real or supposed, as cannot be obtained from God; from whom nothing can be expected, but either in the use of means which have a natural efficacy, or in ordinances of his own appointment; or in having other rules of conduct, than his precepts and the dictates of human prudence. The translation itself, without criticizing the original terms, indisputably proves that the venerable translators supposed all calculations of lucky or unlucky days, for undertaking any enterprize; all attempts to charm away agues or other diseases by unmeaning observances; all amulets or spells by way of preservative, as well as every kind of fortune-telling, to be here prohibited. Not only would such practices be abominable in the Israelites; but they were to consider even the Canaanites, as to form a chief cause of their dreadful extirpation; being all of them either human imposture, or diabolical delusion; and either way conducive to the gratification of that ambitious spirit, who appears in every form to be the god and prince of this world.

V. 13. Thou perfect, &c.] That is, by simply depending on him, and devoted to him.

V. 15—19.] Whether a succession of true prophets, to assist the priests and Levites when they did their duty, or to correct their errors and supply their omissions when they neglected it, be here implied, as some expositors think; or whether that opinion be groundless, we are sure that this promise especially related to Jesus Christ. (Acts iii. 22. vii. 37. Heb. iii. 1.) As the great Antitype of Moses, he resembled him in more particulars and with greater exactness than he did any of the prophets or typical persons mentioned in the Old Testament.—Born in the reign of a persecuting tyrant, his life was sought in his infancy, and wonderfully preserved whilst many other infants were destroyed.—At the entrance of his career he rejected the proposal of the kingdoms of the world, and the glory of them, as Moses did that prospect of honour and advancement in Egypt, and preferred a suffering, poor, and despised (Luke xi. 29—32.) He was rejected by his own countrymen, those more particularly for whom he was sent, the Jews; voluntarily impoverished himself, and preaching the gospel of the kingdom, and working miracles, with all the desire of our mind."

speak in the name of other gods, even that prophet shall die.

21 And if thou say in thine heart, How shall we know the word which the LORD hath not spoken?

22 When a prophet speaketh in the name of the LORD, if the thing follow not, nor come to pass, that is the thing which the LORD hath not spoken, but the prophet hath spoken it presumptuously: thou shalt not be afraid of him.

whole Israel of God. His character was remarkable for meekness and patience, and every excellency, in measure far exceeding that of the deliverer of Israel. For our benefit he united in one person the offices of Prophet, Priest, and King; all which concentre in his being the Mediator of the covenant, and the establisher of a new dispensation. He feeds his people with the true manna, and gives them the true living water to drink; and many of his miracles resembled, but far surpassed, those of Moses.—He was opposed by his brethren, as well as by the people, and was especially objected to for espousing the Gentiles as his church. All the prophets and apostles speak as his delegates; the whole scripture is his word; and all ministers obtain their authority, derive their commission, and receive their instructions, from him. His knowledge of and intimacy with the Father are unexampled, and appropriate: his life was spent, closed, and laid down for the people's benefit, and for their sins; and his resurrection precluded the exact knowledge of his sepulchre, and should have prevented the superstitious veneration for it. Finally, as he alone could approach God upon mount Sinai, according to the law of works; so it will most woefully be required of those, who reject his salvation, who will not hearken to his instructions, or who refuse to have him to reign over them.

V. 22. Nor, &c.] The failure of the prediction evinced the false prophet, except when repentance averted threatened judgments: the accomplishment of them approved the true prophet, unless attended with a temptation to idolatry. (Note, Jer. xxviii. 1—3.)

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.

The ministers of the gospel should, by a decent provision, be preserved from the grating temptation to entangle themselves with the affairs of this life, that they may be more at leisure for their proper work; and thus be absolutely free from secular cares and other avocations. Christ, engage them in any secular employment, or worldly projects, even with a view to their maintenance, much less for gain. It is a scandal to [illegible] with all the desire of our mind.

Before Christ 1451.

It is well when this carries us forward in leaving all for the sake of Christ and the gospel. He will not suffer such disciples to lose their reward; and it is his appointment, that those ministers, who labour most in the word and doctrine, should be best provided for. Yet they, who will do no more in God's service, than man will pay them for, are not worthy of being called the ministers of Christ at all. (Mat. x. 10.)—Christians are required simply to trust and submit to the Lord; and cannot want any information, security, or assistance, which he will not afford them: and the Lord their God not only doth not suffer them to do such things as he abhorred in Canaanites, and will much more abhor in them; but he calls upon them to bear testimony against every evil work. (Eph. v. 11—13.)

We have a Prophet like unto Moses, but far superior, to shew us the truth and will of God, the way of acceptance, and of holiness: nay to "shew us the Father" for, "he that hath seen him, hath seen the Father." (John, xiv. 9, 10.) "He dwelleth in the Father, and the Father in him." Yet is he raised up from among his brethren, and dwells likewise in human nature. That view of God which he gives will not terrify or overwhelm, but encourage, us: he speaks with fraternal affection and divine authority conjoined. Woe then be to those who refuse to hearken to his voice, to accept of his salvation, or yield obedience to his sway. But happy they, who trust in and obey him: he will lead them into the paths of safety and of peace; he will teach them to distinguish his ministers from those of satan, however disguised; and he will preserve them from every delusion, until he bring them to the land of perfect light, purity, and felicity.

NOTES.

CHAP. XIX. V. 2—7.] (Notes, Exod. xxi.) Three cities of refuge had already been allotted on the east of Jordan, (iv. 41—43.) and the other three were to be [illegible] possession of the country: the [illegible] boundaries should in after ages be enlarged, three more were to be added. In pitching upon them they were

5 As when a man goeth into the wood with his neighbour to hew wood, and his hand fetcheth a stroke with the axe to cut down the tree, and the head slippeth from the helve, and lighteth upon his neighbour, that he die; he shall flee unto one of those cities and live:

6 Lest the avenger of the blood pursue the slayer, while his heart is hot, and overtake him, because the way is long, and slay him; whereas he was not worthy of death, inasmuch as he hated him not in time past.

7 Wherefore I command thee, saying, Thou shalt separate three cities for thee.

8 And if the LORD thy God enlarge thy coast, as he hath sworn unto thy fathers, and give thee all the land which he promised to give unto thy fathers;

9 (If thou shalt keep all these commandments to do them, which I command thee this day, to love the LORD thy God, and to walk ever in his ways;) then shalt thou add three cities more for thee, beside these three:

10 That innocent blood be not shed in thy land, which the LORD thy God giveth thee for an inheritance, and so blood be upon thee.

11 But if any man hate his neighbour, and lie in wait for him, and rise up against him, and smite him mortally that he die, and fleeth into one of these cities;

12 Then the elders of his city shall send and fetch him thence, and deliver him into the hand of the avenger of blood, that he may die.

13 Thine eye shall not pity him; but thou shalt put away the guilt of innocent blood from Israel, that it may go well with thee.

14 Thou shalt not remove thy neighbour's land-mark, which they of old time have set in thine inheritance, which thou shalt inherit in the land that the LORD thy God giveth thee to possess it.

15 One witness shall not rise up against a man for any iniquity, or for any sin, in any sin that he sinneth: at the mouth of two witnesses, or at the mouth of three witnesses, shall the matter be established.

16 If a false witness rise up against any man, to testify against him that which is wrong;

17 Then both the men, between whom the controversy is, shall stand before the LORD, before the priests and the judges which shall be in those days.

18 And the judges shall make diligent inquisition: and, behold, if the witness be a false witness, and hath testified falsely against his brother;

19 Then shall ye do unto him, as he had thought to have done unto his brother: so shalt thou put away the evil from among you.

20 And those which remain shall hear, and fear commanded to be careful in proportioning the distances, "that the way might not be too long" to some one of them, from any part of the land; and the way was also to be prepared: "that innocent blood should not be shed in their land," by the avenger of blood overtaking the unfortunate man-slayer, before he arrived at a place of refuge. The promise of still further enlarging the possessions of Israel was conditional, and by their disobedience they so far forfeited it, that these additional cities of refuge were never appointed. The Jews flatter themselves with the expectation of a future accomplishment of these promises, when this addition will be made.

V. 14. Land-mark, &c.] As land-marks constituted the customary method of distinguishing landed property in those days, removing them would be a crime among the Israelites, similar to forging, altering, destroying, or concealing the title-deeds of estates at this day, and would occasion injustice, dispute, and law-suits.

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.

In conveying information, familiar examples and illustrations, though taken from the most ordinary occasions or scenes of life, are of very great use to give determinate ideas of the thing intended to be inculcated: and in laws especially precision should be chiefly studied, that the distinction betwixt the innocent and the guilty, and betwixt a man's crime and his calamity, may be as plainly specified as it is possible. For whether the criminal escape unpunished, or the innocent suffer, injustice is committed; and in case of bloodshed, guilt is brought upon the land where it takes place. On such occasions compassion for the offender may be sinful, and even become cruelty to others; it must therefore be moderated, or counteracted by the love of justice, general benevolence, and the fear of God. But to avoid the horrid crime of murder, we must watch and pray against the first emotions of hatred and anger: and to be preserved from injustice, we must beware of covetousness, which is wonderfully ingenious in devising such methods of defrauding, as may escape detection, censure, or human punishment. Also, what encouragement is it to the timid human spirit, that God himself forbids the oppression of any one, may be taken in a manner of argument similar to that in which he addresses all men in the gospel, absolutely and in all cases to be trusted; which is not only a caution fear, and shall henceforth commit no more any such evil among you.

21 And thine eye shall not pity; but life shall go for life, eye for eye, tooth for tooth, hand for hand, foot for foot.

a caution to judges and juries, but matter of watchfulness and humiliation to us all.—Few crimes are more atrocious in their nature, pernicious in their effects, or affronting to God, than bearing false witness in matters of great importance; and with us especially, where it is always connected with perjury. It is greatly to be wished, that it was more commonly and severely punished by man, according to this more excellent and equitable law: but it will assuredly meet with its due punishment from a righteous God. However, let all Christians not only be cautious in bearing public testimony, but be careful not to propagate private slanders; (Prov. xxvi. 18, 19,) and let him, whose conscience accuses them of these or other crimes, without delay flee for refuge to the hope set before us in Jesus Christ.

NOTES.

CHAP. XX. V. 1—4. In the wars in which Moses engaged according to the will of God, they might expect his especial assistance. This should have been their confidence; of this his former wonderful works were their assurance; and of these things the priests were to remind them for their encouragement. In all these respects they were types of the Christian with respect to his spiritual enemies.

V. 5—9. The Israelites were accustomed to build houses when settling, or planting a vineyard, or marrying a wife, soon after their return from Egypt. Moses, as a wise general, ordered that all these should be left to their friends, according to the law of divorce, by which their wives were put under the immediate protection of God, and the blessings of his grace and peace were supplicated, that they might prove houses of harmony and of true godliness. (Psalm cxxvii. Title.) These regulations probably were not intended to take place in the first wars of Canaan, in which all who were able were required to enlist; but in those in which they might afterwards engage; and they not only condescended to the allowable affections of human nature, and were calculated to compose armies constituted of persons whose minds were free from discomposure and delirium; but they also united the true character and frame of mind which befits the soldiers of Jesus Christ. Some suppose that the fearful were such as were intimidated by a guilty conscience; and thence infer, that atrocious sinners are an encouragement and a curse to armies, as well as churches (Num. 9:); but this is very different from the pretences of modern tactics, and the practice of modern gentlemen and commanders. However, until the cowards were dismissed, the subordinate officers were not appointed; for they, who preside either in armies or in churches, should be effectually valiant for the cause in which they are engaged.

V. 10—18. We must suppose in the cases here intended that the Canaanites had some warrantable cause of leaving their habitations, and the Israelites had been injured, or insulted by some foreign nation, before they proceeded in the manner here prescribed; for the Lord purposed by these means to enlarge their dominions, whilst they fight against it, then proclaim peace unto it.

11 And it shall be, if it make thee answer of peace, and open unto thee, then it shall be, that all the people that is found therein shall be tributaries unto thee, and they shall serve thee.

12 And if it will make no peace with thee, but will make war against thee, then thou shalt besiege it:

13 And when the LORD thy God hath delivered it into thine hands, thou shalt smite every male thereof with the edge of the sword:

14 But the women, and the little ones, and the cattle, and all that is in the city, even all the spoil thereof, shalt thou take unto thyself; and thou shalt eat the spoil of thine enemies, which the LORD thy God hath given thee.

15 Thus shalt thou do unto all the cities which are very far off from thee, which are not of the cities of these nations.

16 But of the cities of these people, which the LORD thy God doth give thee for an inheritance, thou shalt save alive nothing that breatheth:

17 But thou shalt utterly destroy them; namely, the Hittites, and the Amorites, the Canaanites, and the Perizzites, the Hivites, and the Jebusites, as the LORD thy God hath commanded thee:

18 That they teach you not to do after all their abominations, which they have done unto their gods; so should ye sin against the LORD your God.

19 When thou shalt besiege a city a long time, in making war against it to take it, thou shalt not destroy the trees thereof by forcing an axe against them: for thou mayest eat of them, and thou shalt not cut them down, (for the tree of the field is man's life,) to employ them in the siege:

20 Only the trees which thou knowest that they be not trees for meat thou shalt destroy and cut them down; and thou shalt build bulwarks against the city that maketh war with thee, until it be subdued.

CHAP.

wise reasons why they were not only allowed, but, as it seems, commanded, to put to death all the males who were capable of resistence. The lives and property of all men are the Lord's, forfeited to his justice, to be disposed of at his pleasure and for his glory. These regulations, however, are not by any means the rule of our conduct: but the general law of love, which prohibits unnecessary bloodshed and plunder, in war as well as in peace. One reason of these appointments might be, to shadow forth the fatal consequences of persisting in rebellion and enmity against God, in contempt of the gospel-proposal of peace and reconciliation.—Some are of opinion that no terms of peace might, in any case whatever, be offered or allowed to the devoted inhabitants of Canaan, because their measure of wickedness was filled up, and they would be a constant temptation to the Israelites: but we shall meet with some events in the course of this history, which will not easily comport with this absolute interpretation. Others therefore suppose the meaning to be, that in case the Canaanites rejected peace and servitude, this entire extirpation was to take place; whereas only the grown males were to be put to death, in other cities in similar circumstances; and the other inhabitants reduced to servitude.

V. 19, 20.] The original words rendered, "the tree of the field is man's life," have excessively puzzled the critics; and our translation gives us one opinion of their meaning, about as probable as any other. The intention evidently is, that the Israelites should not make unnecessary waste of things useful unto man's life, as the fruit-trees were; and therefore in their sieges should form their machines of timber-trees only.

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.

War is an appeal to the righteous Governor of the world, and should be undertaken and conducted upon such principles, and such only, as he approves. When the cause will warrant this awful appeal, the Lord himself may safely be trusted for the event, and confidence should be placed, not in chariots and horses, not in fleets and armies, not in experienced commanders and brave soldiers, but in the Lord of Hosts himself.—Though religion and its faithful ministers are generally slighted by those who "jeopardy their lives in the high places of the field;" yet in reality, no people so much want their instructions, counsels, and prayers, as they do, both individually, and with respect to the common cause which God himself will entirely decide. Nor is any valour rational, but that which springs from faith, a good conscience, a sense of duty, a confidence in God, and a hope of heaven: for he who neither fears those who kill the body, nor him who is able to destroy both body and soul in hell, is not valiant, but absolutely mad: whilst in the former case intrepidity is reason and wisdom, and rests on an immoveable basis.—In war itself, justice and the love of peace should dictate every measure; the voice of humanity should be heard distinctly even in the noise of the battle; and wanton cruelty or waste should never sully the soldiers reputation.—After all, the horrors of war must fill the feeling heart with anguish upon every recollection, and can only be considered as evidences of the depravity of man, the power of Satan, and the just vengeance of God who thus scourges a guilty world. May the happy time soon come when "swords shall be beaten into plough-shares,

3 And it ſhall be, that the city which is next unto the ſlain man, even the elders of that city ſhall take an heifer which hath not been wrought with, and which hath not drawn in the yoke;

4 And the elders of that city ſhall bring down the heifer into a rough valley, which is neither eared nor ſown, and ſhall ſtrike off the heifer's neck there in the valley:

5 And the prieſts the ſons of Levi ſhall come near; (for them the LORD thy God hath choſen to miniſter unto him, and to bleſs in the name of the LORD, and by their word ſhall every controverſy and every ſtroke be tried;)

6 And all the elders of that city, that are next unto the ſlain man, ſhall waſh their hands over the heifer that is beheaded in the valley:

8 Be merciful, O LORD, unto thy people Iſrael, whom thou haſt redeemed, and lay not innocent blood unto thy people of Iſrael's charge. And the blood ſhall be forgiven them.

9 So ſhalt thou put away the guilt of innocent blood from among you, when thou ſhalt do that which is right in the ſight of the LORD.

"ſhares, and men ſhall learn war no more!" But how dreadful is the caſe of thoſe who are engaged in unequal conteſt with their Maker, who refuſe his propoſals of peace, who will not ſubmit to be his ſervants, and render him the eaſy tribute of worſhip and praiſe! Inevitable ruin awaits them. May we be at peace with the Lord, and wage war with his enemies, our luſts and the powers of darkneſs, with undaunted courage and unrelenting ſeverity. Let neither the number or power of our enemies diſmay us; let not even our own weakneſs cauſe us to tremble or to faint: the Lord himſelf will fight for us, and ſave us; and all his wonders wrought for his church enſure our victory. In this war none ſhould pretend to engage, whoſe hearts are attached inordinately to worldly objects, or who are afraid of the croſs or the conflict; for they will themſelves deſert and diſcourage others. But above all others miniſters ſhould be valiant in this warfare, and by their example, as well as their exhortations, encourage the people to fight the good fight of faith. Finally, whilſt we ſhew no mercy to any ſin, and will have no friendſhip with any tempter, let us ſhew a ſpirit of peace, forgiveneſs, and benevolence towards all mankind.

NOTES.

CHAP. XXI.] V. 1—9.] This law was intended to increaſe the horror of the Iſraelites for the crime of murder, and to promote the detection of the criminal, by making the affair public and ſolemn, by putting numbers upon enquiry, by calling upon every one to clear himſelf, and by warning all men not to conceal the criminal.—The heifer, that had never drawn in the yoke, repreſented the murderer, the ſon of Belial, who refuſed to bear the yoke of God's law: the rough valley denoted the worthleſſneſs of the criminal's character, and the diſagreeableneſs of the buſineſs. The cutting off the neck of the heifer, not by the prieſt but by the elders, expreſſed the deſert of the criminal, and their readineſs thus to puniſh him if they could detect him. The waſhing of their hands was a proteſtation of innocence and ignorance concerning the murder and the murderer; and the prayers, which the prieſts offered for the people as the redeemed of the Lord, ſhewed how murder contaminates and leaves guilt upon every land, and every perſon, that does not endeavour by all proper means to bring the criminal to condign puniſhment; and the whole ſhadowed forth the atonement and interceſſion of Chriſt, through which iniquity is pardoned by a merciful God to his redeemed people. The inquiſition devolving upon that city, which was found by meaſuring, (if there were any doubt,) to be the neareſt to the murdered perſon, might alſo denote, that all the people ſhould keep at the utmoſt diſtance from ſuch crimes, and from every thing which could excite ſuſpicion of them.

V. 10—14. The caſe here regulated would inevitably take place on ſome occaſions; and this ſtatute does not imply any approbation of an Iſraelite's marrying an heathen captive, induced merely by her beauty; eſpecially as the regulation does not even exclude the caſe of thoſe who were previouſly married. If however ſuch an extravagant paſſion were conceived, a man was not allowed to uſe force or authority to gratify his inclination, or to proceed with 11 And seest among the captives a beautiful woman, and hast a desire unto her, that thou wouldest have her to thy wife;

12 Then thou shalt bring her home to thine house, and she shall shave her head and pare her nails;

13 And she shall put the raiment of her captivity from off her, and shall remain in thine house, and bewail her father and her mother a full month: and after that thou shalt go in unto her, and be her husband, and she shall be thy wife.

14 And it shall be, if thou have no delight in her, then thou shalt let her go whither she will; but thou shalt not sell her at all for money, thou shalt not make merchandize of her, because thou has humbled her.

15 If a man have two wives, one beloved, and another hated, and they have borne him children, both the beloved and the hated; and if the first-born son be her's that was hated:

16 Then it shall be, when he maketh his sons to inherit that which he hath, that he may not make the son of the beloved first-born, before the son of the hated, which is indeed the first-born:

17 But he shall acknowledge the son of the hated for the first-born, by giving him a double portion of all that he hath: for he is the beginning of his strength; the right of the first-born is his.

18 If a man have a stubborn and rebellious son, which will not obey the voice of his father, or the voice of his mother, and that, when they have chastened him, will not hearken unto them:

19 Then shall his father and his mother lay hold on him, and bring him out unto the elders of his city, and unto the gate of his place;

20 And they shall say unto the elders of his city, This our son is stubborn and rebellious, he will not obey our voice; he is a glutton and a drunkard.

21 And all the men of his city shall stone him with stones that he die: so shalt thou put evil away from among you; and all Israel shall hear, and fear.

22 And

precipitation; but, by delay, opportunity was given to the violent affection to subside, and for reason and religion to resume their influence. By taking the captive into the house, her disposition would better be discovered; and, if that proved disagreeable, the passion might be abated. The embellishments of her person being changed for the mean and unsightly habit of a mourner, might tend to diminish her attractions. In the mean time she would have an opportunity of learning the Jewish religion; and some think, that the change of her attire, the cutting off her hair, and the paring of her nails, were the external signs of her renouncing the Gentile worship, and becoming a proselyte to the Jewish religion, without which the marriage was not allowable. Her grief also for the death of her parents, if slain, or for her separation from them, would subside, and her mind be more reconciled to her condition; and if at last the Israelite continued in the same mind, he might marry her. But in case he humbled her, and afterwards did not choose to continue her as his wife, he must not keep her as a slave, or sell her, but give her her liberty, and act towards her, according to the regulations made concerning women when divorced by their husbands. (Notes, xxiv. 1—5.) All these circumstance would help to increase the caution of the Israelites, and tend to prevent them from rashly entering into such improper connections.

V. 15—17.] As this passage may with equal propriety be translated, If a man have had two wives, it does not exclusively apply to the case of polygamy, but equally to that of him who had two wives in succession. In either case the double portion, which according to custom was allotted to the heir, must be given to the eldest, though not the son of the best beloved wife; which would counteract the effect of such unjust and unreasonable partialities as are frequently entertained, and be a sort of compensation to her who had the misfortune to be comparatively slighted and hated.

V. 18—21.] This law, though its aspect is severe, has mercy couched under that severity: prevention of crimes was its manifest intention, and it could not fail of producing most salutary effects, as far as any regard was paid to it. The parents were the only prosecutors. Both father and mother must concur in the prosecution; and at the last the elders of the city would judge whether their son deserved death or not. All these circumstances would concur in preventing the frequent execution of the awful sentence; and, if that event ever took place, it must excite general attention and even terror: whilst being held in terrorem over the heads of the Israelitish youth, it must corroborate the parents authority, give weight to their commands, reproofs, and corrections, and create an additional fear of provoking their deep resentment. It would also fortify young men against the enticements of bad companions, and the force of strong temptations, and thus check the progress of wickedness. Moreover, it would be a constant admonition to parents to watch over their children very narrowly, and not improperly to indulge them, or withhold correction, but to establish their authority over them whilst young, to pray for them, and give them proper admonitions, and to check the first buddings of vice, and to set them a wholesome example. These effects the very existence of this law would have upon them, in proportion as they regarded the word of God; and the latest ought to have upon us.

22 And if a man have committed a sin worthy of death, and he be to be put to death, and thou hang him on a tree;
23 His body shall not remain all night upon the tree, but thou shalt in any wise bury him that day; (for he that is hanged is accursed of God;) that thy land be not defiled, which the LORD thy God giveth thee for an inheritance.

V. 22, 23.] The Israelites did not execute criminals by hanging, as among us, nor by crucifixion: yet after they were dead, in detestation of their crimes, their bodies were ignominiously suspended, or gibbeted on a tree. But in honour of human nature, which was at first formed after the image of God, was afterwards made the temple in which all the fulness of the Godhead dwells, and will hereafter, in innumerable instances, partake of a glorious resurrection, the body of an Israelite might not hang all night in this situation, whatever his crimes had been, as that would even defile the land. In the current opinion, they, who were thus suspended, were deemed accursed of God, and devoted to utter destruction: but the Spirit of God dictated this expression with reference to him who "was made a curse for us," (Gal. iii. 13.)

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.

Prevention of crimes is always preferable to punishment, and the wisdom of laws should be judged of by this tendency. Whatever can increase the horror which we naturally feel of enormous wickedness, or cause the conscience to recoil at the thought of it, must tend to counteract the violence of the passions, and the force of temptations, and to excite watchfulness against the occasions and inlets to vice. Such were the laws which God enacted for Israel; and it were well if the spirit of them were more infused into our modern statutes. The dread of murder should in an especial manner be deeply impressed on every heart: and in detecting and punishing all who in any form are guilty of it, magistrates, ministers, old and young, ought to concur; and that man should be adjudged a public enemy, not only who is accessary to the commission of this crime, but who assists the criminal in eluding or escaping justice, by which the guilt of innocent blood rests upon the land. But alas! all that most of us can do in preventing the increase of this national guilt, is by our secret earnest prayers!—Reason and religion, with combined force, forbid us to lay the reins upon the neck of our headstrong lusts, and command us to teach our strongest inclinations to brook denial or delay, and to view the objects of our inordinate affections, as stript of all their adventitious charms, and as they really are in themselves, with all their defects and deformities, in order to abate the vehemency of passion. Considered thus coolly, we may perhaps, before it be too late, have our admiration changed into disgust, and many fatal consequences may be prevented. But inhumanity, treachery, and injustice can in no case be palliated or excused, though called by soft names, and varnished over with plausible pretences. Irregular indulgences frequently end in dislike, and in ill-treatment of that very object who was inordinately loved! thus instead of compensation for an injury, (for which indeed no adequate compensation can be rendered,) more injuries are committed! but for all these things God will bring men into judgment. How much more reasonable and comfortable is it to observe the original appointment of marriage, than either to be involved in such circumstances, or to occasion domestic broils by deviating from it!—The Lord will plead the cause of the oppressed, and will not allow that injustice should be done to any one, either from partiality or covetousness. Such injustice is frequently committed by men in disposing of their substance by will; and it may form the last action of their lives, which all who fear God would carefully avoid.—Disobedience to parental authority must be extremely evil, when so severe a punishment was denounced by God himself; nor is it less provoking to him now, though it escapes punishment in this world.—But when young people become early slaves to their sensual appetites, the heart soon grows hard and the conscience callous, and we can expect no other but obstinate rebellion and utter destruction. They who would escape ruin must flee youthful lusts, listen to the instructions of their parents, and submit to reproof and correction; and if parents would not have their children their greatest sorrow, they should train them up in the nurture and admonition of the Lord. What then do we deserve for our rebellion against the Father of our Spirits? We were indeed under an aweful curse; but Christ hath purchased redemption by becoming a curse for us: yet whilst we continue in sin, we have no reason to suppose, that any benefit will thence accrue to us; rather our condemnation will thus be aggravated. Let us then fear adding obstinacy to our rebellion, and remember, that though the human body, after death, ought not to be treated with degradation by man; yet God will doom both the bodies and souls of the wicked, "to depart accursed "into everlasting fire, prepared for the devil and his angels;" whilst "the righteous shall shine forth as the "sun in the kingdom of their Father."

or if thou know him not, then thou shalt bring it unto thine own house, and it shall be with thee until thy brother seek after it, and thou shalt restore it to him again.

3 In likemanner shalt thou do with his ass, and so shalt thou do with his raiment; and with all lost things of thy brother's, which he hath lost, and thou hast found, shalt thou do likewise: thou mayest not hide thyself.

4 Thou shalt not see thy brother's ass or his ox fall down by the way, and hide thyself from them; thou shalt surely help him to lift them up again.

5 The woman shall not wear that which pertaineth unto a man, neither shall a man put on a woman's garment: for all that do so are abomination unto the LORD thy God.

6 If a bird's nest chance to be before thee in the way in any tree, or on the ground, whether they be young ones, or eggs, and the dam sitting upon the young, or upon the eggs, thou shalt not take the dam with the young:

7 But thou shalt in any wise, let the dam go, and take the young to thee; that it may be well with thee, and that thou mayest prolong thy days.

8 When thou buildest a new house, then thou shalt make a battlement for thy roof, that thou bring not blood upon thine house, if any man fall from thence.

9 Thou shalt not sow thy vineyard with divers seeds: lest the fruit of thy seed which thou hast sown, and the fruit of thy vineyard, be defiled.

10 Thou shalt not plow with an ox and an ass together.

11 Thou shalt not wear a garment of divers sorts, as of woollen and linen together.

12 Thou shalt make thee fringes upon the four quarters of thy vesture, wherewith thou coverest thyself.

13 If any man take a wife, and go in unto her, and hate her,

15 Then shall the father of the damsel and her mother take and bring forth the tokens of the damsel's virginity, unto the elders of the city in the gate:

16 And the damsel's father shall say unto the elders, I gave my daughter unto this man to wife, and he hateth her;

17 And, lo, he hath given occasions of speech

NOTES.

CHAP. XXII.] V. 5. The woman, &c.] This prohibition might have some respect to the customs of the heathen worshippers, who shamefully violated it for the worst of purposes: but the law is of moral tendency, and of general obligation, or it would not have been added, "for all that do so are an abomination unto the Lord," which is never annexed to a merely ceremonial institution. The practice prohibited is not only indecent and of bad appearance, but it hath in all ages been made subservient to lewdness, and to obtain opportunities of perpetrating the grossest crimes; to prevent which it is of vast importance, that the distinction of the sexes should be visibly marked in their garments without variation.—Let stage-players, and such sort of persons look to it, how they will answer to God for their continual violation of this express commandment. Nor will those be held guiltless who encourage and reward them for such disobedience: and let young people remember that this change of apparel is not to be considered as a frolic, but as an act of rebellion against God.—The spirit of the commandment also requires the distinction of the appearance, deportment, and occupations of the sexes. A man appearing effeminate, and affecting the appropriated employments of women: and a woman of a masculine appearance and behaviour, who engages in the exercises of men, are unnatural and offensive characters.

V. 6, 7.] This law might be intended to cultivate tenderness, and prevent the destruction of any species. But such minute requirements were probably intentional tests, by which it would be proved, whether the people would prefer God's will to their own inclination, when the reason of the commandment was not obvious: therefore a promise to the obedient is annexed.

V. 8. When, &c.] (Ex. xxi. 28—36.) They who are wanting in circumspection to preserve man's life, are adjudged accessaries to it's destruction.

V. 9—12.] (Notes, Lev. xix. 19. Numb. xv. 38, 39.)

V. 13—21.] This law, like many others, was intended to prevent wickedness, by the fear of detection and punishment. The dread of a future discovery, productive of such tremendous consequences, could not fail but much increase the natural barriers of chastity, and counteract the effects of sinful passions and strong temptations among the Hebrew young women. And it would also prevent a hard-hearted husband from robbing his injured wife of her reputation, when his affections were transferred to another object. The imposition, practised by a woman upon the man whom she married, was considered as equivalent to infidelity to his bed after marriage.

V. 25.

speech against her, saying, I found not thy daughter a maid; and yet these are the tokens of my daughter's virginity: and they shall spread the cloth before the elders of the city.

18 And the elders of that city shall take that man, and chastise him.

19 And they shall amerce him in an hundred shekels of silver, and give them unto the father of the damsel, because he hath brought up an evil name upon a virgin of Israel; and she shall be his wife: he may not put her away all his days.

20 But if this thing be true, and the tokens of virginity be not found for the damsel;

21 Then they shall bring out the damsel to the door of her father's house, and the men of her city shall stone her with stones that she die; because she hath wrought folly in Israel, to play the whore in her father's house: so shalt thou put evil away from among you.

22 If a man be found lying with a woman married to an husband, then they shall both of them die, both the man that lay with the woman, and the woman. So shalt thou put away evil from Israel.

23 If a damsel that is a virgin be betrothed unto a husband, and a man find her in the city, and lie with her;

24 Then ye shall bring them both out unto the gate of that city, and ye shall stone them with stones that they die; the damsel, because she cried not, being in the city; and the man, because he hath humbled his neighbour's wife: so thou shalt put away evil from among you.

25 But if a man find a betrothed damsel in the field, and the man force her, and lie with her; then the man only that lay with her shall die:

26 But unto the damsel thou shalt do nothing; there is in the damsel no sin worthy of death: for as when a man riseth against his neighbour, and slayeth him, even so is this matter:

27 For he found her in the field, and the betrothed damsel cried, and there was none to save her.

28 If a man find a damsel, that is a virgin, which is not betrothed, and lay hold on her, and lie with her, and they be found;

29 Then the man that lay with her shall give unto the damsel's father fifty shekels of silver, and she shall be his wife; because he hath humbled her, he may not put her away all his days.

30 A man shall not take his father's wife, nor discover his father's skirt.

CHAP.

V. 25. Betrothed, &c.] In all these laws the betrothed damsel was considered as the wife of the man to whom she was engaged, though they had not come together; and therefore the crime was adjudged adultery. But a charitable supposition is admitted in the damsel's favour, in case she was found in a solitary place.

V. 28—30.] (Ex. xxii. 16, 17. Lev. xvii.)

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.

If we duly regarded the golden rule of "doing to others, "as we would they should do unto us," many particular precepts of God's word might be omitted. Equity and benevolence would teach us not to regard trouble and expence in doing a kind action to our neighbour; and remind us that we can have no property in any thing that is found, so long as there is any probability of discovering the owner. If a merciful man would assist another's beast that was fallen down, much more should we hasten to the relief of a brother, who is fallen into distress or poverty: and most of all should we be ready to restore, in the spirit of meekness, him who hath been overcome by temptation and fallen into sin; as conscious that we may soon want the same gentleness and assistance. If we would approve ourselves to be God's peculiar people, we must have respect to the will and glory of God, and not to the vain fashions of the world. Even in putting on our garments, as well as in eating and drinking; all must be done with a serious regard to the preservation of our own and others purity, in heart and action, that our garb may testify whose servants we are, and remind us what our conduct ought to be. Our obedience should also be universal, not only to the weightier, but even to the minuter matters of the law, that it may be well with us. Yea our eye should be single, our heart simple, and our behaviour all of a piece.—The violation of chastity being so great a wickedness, and in females especially of such fatal consequences: how cautious should they be what company they keep, what places they frequent, to what language they listen, what books they read, and into what ensnaring situations they venture! Seriously should they daily meditate on God's abhorrence of such crimes, the certain detection and punishment of the wicked in a future state, and the fatal effects which will probably follow in this world; that their minds may be fortified against temptation, by a dread of sin and of its consequences. How carefully should parents keep out of their sight and way whatever can pollute their imaginations, or inflame their passions! and how should all join in execratexecrating those wretches, who wantonly bring such ruin upon their fellow creatures, for the sake of gratifying a mean sensual inclination: nor is the cruelty of those much less to be abhorred, who rob the innocent of their reputation by infamous slanders, to gratify their malice or any other vile passion. We should never forget the peculiar atrociousness of adultery in every form, and the punishment which awaits those who are guilty of it. We may also recollect that all deception in contracting marriage is both very wicked, and a source of future misery: that the nearer we stand related to God, the more inexcusable are our crimes, "folly in Israel" being worse than elsewhere: and that the most favourable construction should be put on doubtful actions; and a discrimination made betwixt different degrees of criminality. Finally our purity should be dearer to us than our life; and our cry to God for help in temptation should be no less earnest, than the cry of a person in danger of being murdered. When we thus call upon him, he is ever near and ready to assist us, and his grace will be always sufficient for us.

NOTES.

CHAP. XXIII.] V. 1—8.] We cannot suppose that this law excluded a mutilated Israelite from the benefits of civil society, or the advantages of divine ordinances for the salvation of their souls: nor that persons of the aforementioned nations were totally rejected from becoming proselytes to the true religion. But probably they were excluded from places of trust and authority, in church or state, and were not permitted to enter into the court of the tabernacle, or in some other respects restricted from full communion with the church. It was, however, a discriminating and graceful distinction intelligible enough to the Israelites, though, like several other of the injunctions in this part of the law, not so easily understood at present.—These statutes seem also to have been intended for the prevention of sin, as well as for preserving the church and ordinances of God in purity and honour. Parents would thus be kept from mutilating their children out of lucrative motives, a practice very common in those ages and countries; as well as from such crimes, as tended to mark their innocent offspring with disgrace. And the Lord was pleased to distinguish the descendents of those nations, who opposed or tempted his people, by similar tokens of his disapprobation.—Ammonites and Moabites were not permitted to enjoy the full benefits of Israelites till the tenth generation after they had been proselyted: and no amicable alliance might be made with those nations so long as they existed.—Edom, though unkind, being more nearly related was to be forgiven. As the Israelites had at first, in their extreme distress, been hospitably entertained in Egypt, they were required to forgive the consequent oppression which they had suffered, and to requite the preceding kindness; and an Egyptian in the third generation might become entitled to all the privileges of a native Israelite.

V. 9—14.] These precepts not only relate to the camp of Israel, whilst they continued together, previously to their conquest of and settlement in the land; but at all times when they went forth to fight with their enemies. They were first to be reminded to use vigorous measures for reformation; and to pay a strict attention to their ceremonial purifications: and then not to forget a due regard to natural cleanliness, not only from decency, and for health's sake, 11 But it shall be, when evening cometh on, he shall wash himself with water; and, when the sun is down, he shall come into the camp again.

12 Thou shalt have a place also without the camp, whither thou shalt go forth abroad.

13 And thou shalt have a paddle upon thy weapon: and it shall be when thou wilt ease thyself abroad, thou shalt dig therewith, and shalt turn back, and cover that which cometh from thee:

14 For the LORD thy God walketh in the midst of thy camp, to deliver thee, and to give up thine enemies before thee: therefore shall thy camp be holy, that he see no unclean thing in thee, and turn away from thee.

15 Thou shalt not deliver unto his master the servant which is escaped from his master unto thee:

16 He shall dwell with thee, even among you, in that place which he shall choose, in one of thy gates where it liketh him best: thou shalt not oppress him.

17 There shall be no whore of the daughters of Israel, nor a sodomite of the sons of Israel.

18 Thou shalt not bring the hire of a whore, or the price of a dog, into the house of the LORD thy God for any vow; for even both these are abomination unto the LORD thy God.

19 Thou shalt not lend upon usury to thy brother; usury of money, usury of victuals, usury of any thing that is lent upon usury.

20 Unto a stranger thou mayest lend upon usury, but unto thy brother thou shalt not lend upon usury; that the LORD thy God may bless thee in all that thou settest thine hand to, in the land whither thou goest to possess it.

21 When thou shalt vow a vow unto the LORD thy God, thou shalt not slack to pay it: for the LORD thy God will surely require it of thee; and it would be sin in thee.

22 But if thou shalt forbear to vow, it shall be no sin in thee.

23 That which is gone out of thy lips thou shalt keep and perform, even a free-will offering, according as thou hast vowed unto the LORD thy God, which thou hast promised with thy mouth.

24 When thou comest into thy neighbour's vineyard, then thou mayest eat grapes thy fill, at thine own pleasure; but thou shalt not put any in thy vessel.

25 When thou comest into the standing corn of thy neighbour, then thou mayest pluck the ears with thine hand; but thou shalt not move a sickle unto thy neighbour's standing corn.

sake, but from respect to that God of purity, who as it were, headed their armies and encamped among them; and as an emblem of their inward purity.

V. 15, 16.] We cannot suppose that this law required the Israelites to entertain slaves, who had robbed their masters or left their service without any cause; but such only as were cruelly treated and fled to them for protection, especially from the heathen nations. To them they were commanded to afford shelter and shew kindness, both in order to recommend their religion, and to give these strangers an opportunity of learning it.

V. 17, 18.] The magistrate was commanded not to connive at, much less to license, houses of prostitution and uncleanness; and not to allow any person to carry on the infamous trade of a pimp, prostitute, or sodomite, but to expel and extirpate them to the uttermost. The priests must not accept any oblations or sacrifices brought by persons of such vile characters: for God would not; though they should attempt to stifle their wickedness, or compensate for it, by making and performing religious vows. (Prov. vii. 14.) If the price of a dog be understood literally; not only the vileness of such animals, but their greediness, and their apt resemblance of shameless and perfidious persons, must be considered as the reason of the prohibition.

but many understand it of persons guilty for hire of unnatural crimes. (Phil. iii. 2. Rev. xxii. 15.)

V. 19, 20.] Notes, Exod. xxii. 25, 26.

V. 24, 25.] This law would be a kindness to the labourers, the poor, the widows, and the travellers: it was a pledge given the Israelites of the fruitfulness of the land, whilst they continued obedient: it inculcated liberality and instructed them not to encroach upon each each.

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.

We ought to value the participation of the privileges of God's people, both for ourselves and for our children, above all other advantages; and carefully avoid whatever may throw a bar in our way or in their's. No personal blemishes, no crimes of our progenitors, no difference of nation, can seclude us under the Christian dispensation, but an unsound heart will deprive us; and a bad example, an improper education, and even unsuitable marriages, may exclude our children from those blessings. The conduct of God, as the righteous governor of the universe, is not recorded for the imitation of private persons; but all men ought to follow the example of his patience, long-suffering, readiness to forgive, and kindness to his enemies. Nor should we ever forget how he turns the curses of [illegible] into blessings, in behalf of those whom he loves and teaches to love him.—The more imminent and evident danger we are exposed to, the greater should be our watchfulness, self-examination, and earnestness in prayer for forgiveness, peace with God and protection from him: and the scourge of war should remind the governors of kingdoms, and the commanders of armies, to exert themselves for reformation, and an attendence upon the ordinances of God. Nor can the help of the Lord be warrantably depended on by societies, or by individuals, whilst iniquity is indulged and connived at.—No natural filthiness is so loathsome to our senses, as the uncleanness of the heart is offensive to an holy God: in vain therefore do pompous forms of godliness, costly oblations, or multiplied acts of shewy beneficence, strive to compensate for, or cover the iniquity of those who indulge unlawful lusts. Such services are an attempt to bribe the judge of the earth to acquit the wicked, but he abhors the blasphemous endeavour. And whether magistrates can or cannot extirpate such recesses of licentiousness, as are here forbidden; God will exclude for ever from the holy city, and shut up for ever in the lake of fire, all who persist in, or encourage such abuses. The people of God must also keep at a distance from cruelty and oppression; and ever be ready to patronize the cause of the oppressed. Fidelity to all their engagements, and liberality without grudging to all around them should mark their characters; for God is able to make all sufficiency to abound towards them: and at the same time they should be the last persons to encroach upon others. In fine, temperance, chastity, purity, equity, mercy, and truth, are the never failing fruits of that Spirit which dwells in all the true disciples of Jesus Christ.

NOTES.

CHAP. XXIV.] V. 1—4.] Divorces were an abuse of marriage, consequent upon man's depravity, the inconstancy of his mind, and the impetuosity of his passions. This customary abuse God did not please, in the judicial law, the magistrate's rule, totally to prohibit; lest it should occasion the cruel treatment, or even the murder, of those women who were become disagreeable to their husbands. The uncleanness, on account of which Moses by God's authority, "suffered them, for the hardness of their "hearts, to put away their wives," was not adultery, or any suspicion of it; for both these cases were otherwise provided against; (Num. v. 11—31.) but probably some ceremonial uncleanness, which barred cohabitation, (Lev. xv. 25—28;) or some other natural or moral objection which formed a real grievance. In the days of Christ the Jewish teachers, having construed the permission into a commandment, interpreted it so largely as to extend it to the merest trifle; so that a licentious mind could not desire more allowance. Hence it prevailed to the disuse of polygamy, and to the still greater hardship of the women, who were divorced, one after another, under colour of this law, for the most trivial causes, to make way for a new object of the roving affections. This accounts for the discourses of Christ being more explicitly against divorces, though the reason of them equally determines against polygamy; "for from the beginning it was not so." (Matt. xix. 3—10. Mark, x. 2—12.)—But whilst divorces were allowed, they were also regulated. A bill of divorce was given, properly authenticated, and probably specifying the reason; and we may suppose some provision was also made the repudiated woman out of her husband's substance. Nor was it any part of God's law to prohibit either party from marrying again: which absurd human policy is often no better than authorizing fornication. The woman might marry again and again, if set at liberty; but must never more return to her former husband. This restriction, whilst it would operate as a check to inconstancy and rashness in the husband, would prevent the shameful practice of exchanging and lending wives, which was the custom in many places: and thus the Israelites would be preserved from that national guilt, which such practices contracted. And as far as these regulations were adhered to, some of the worst effects of divorces would in good measure be prevented.

V. 5. When, &c.] This considerate and condescending exemption would operate, in fixing the affections of married persons, and in preventing divorces; for early or long separa-shall not go out to war, neither shall he be charged with any business: but he shall be free at home one year, and shall chear up his wife which he hath taken.

6 No man shall take the nether or the upper millstone to pledge: for he taketh a man's life to pledge.

7 If a man be found stealing any of his brethren of the children of Israel, and maketh merchandise of him, or selleth him; then that thief shall die, and thou shalt put evil away from among you.

8 Take heed in the plague of leprosy, that thou observe diligently and do according to all that the priests the Levites shall teach you: as I commanded them, so ye shall observe to do.

9 Remember what the LORD thy God did unto Miriam by the way, after that ye were come forth out of Egypt.

10 When thou dost lend thy brother any thing, thou shalt not go into his house to fetch his pledge.

11 Thou shalt stand abroad, and the man to whom thou dost lend shall bring out the pledge abroad unto thee.

12 And if the man be poor, thou shalt not sleep with his pledge.

13 In any case thou shalt deliver him the pledge again when the sun goeth down, that he may sleep in his own raiment, and bless thee: and it shall be righteousness unto thee before the LORD thy God.

14 Thou shalt not oppress an hired servant that is poor and needy, whether he be of thy brethren, or of thy strangers that are in thy land within thy gates:

15 At his day thou shalt give him his hire, neither shall the sun go down upon it; for he is poor, and setteth his heart upon it: lest he cry against thee unto the LORD, and it be sin unto thee.

16 The fathers shall not be put to death for the children, neither shall the children be put to death for the fathers: every man shall be put to death for his own sin.

17 Thou shalt not pervert the judgment of the stranger, nor of the fatherless, nor take a widow's raiment to pledge:

18 But thou shalt remember that thou wast a bond-man in Egypt, and the LORD thy God redeemed thee thence: therefore I command thee to do this thing.

19 When thou cuttest down thine harvest in thy field, and hast forgot a sheaf in the field, thou shalt not go again to fetch it: it shall separations tend to alienate the affections, and form temptations to inconstancy.

V. 6. For he, &c.] Hand mills were then generally used in every family for grinding their own corn, and men would be deprived of the means of preparing their necessary food, if the millstones were taken from them. The same reason holds good against receiving in pledge, or distraining for debt, any of those instruments of labour by which men are accustomed to earn their livelihood.

V. 7. Stealing, &c.] Christianity has annihilated those distinctions of nations, which, for typical and political reasons, were during a time established; and in such matters every man is now our brother, whatever be his nation, complexion, or creed. How then can the merchandise of men and women be carried on, without transgressing this commandment, or abetting those who do? This plain question is worthy the consideration of such as grow rich by this disgraceful traffic. An inhabitant of England, if he stay at home and steal a horse, or sheep, is condemned to death: but if he take a voyage to Africa, he may steal, or purchase of those who do steal, hundreds of men and women, and not only escape with impunity, but grow great like a prince by the traffic! Contrast this with the law of God: Whoever stole cattle restored four or five fold: whoever stole one human being, though an infant, or an idiot, must die.—May we not call upon British legislators to rectify this flagrant abuse! We may and ought: and God grant we may not continue to call upon them in vain; but that a more generous spirit may diffuse itself among us.

V. 9. Unto Miriam, &c.] The leprosy of Miriam was a judgment inflicted by God; under this rebuke she humbled herself, notwithstanding her rank and character; and she was excluded from the camp, but was restored upon her submission, at the request of Moses. Hence the people might learn how to conduct themselves in similar circumstances. (Notes, &c. Numb. xii.)

V. 10—13.] Though the Israelites might not take interest of their brethren, they might take a pledge, provided it were something which the borrower could conveniently spare, and which he willingly proposed. But if, in his necessity, he brought what he could not well spare, they were commanded to restore it without delay: and this when done from a right motive, would be accepted as an act of righteousness by a merciful God, and rewarded accordingly, but he would also punish the neglect of it.

V. 16. The fathers, &c.] God himself, who can bring good to individuals out of public calamities, might justly involve the children in the parent's punishment: but he would not allow the magistrate to do it, especially in matters of life and death.

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.

The impetuous lusts and selfish hardness of men's hearts, if not restrained by a constant miracle, or subdued by divine grace, will inevitably occasion manifold abuses in every society, contrary to the moral law of God; nor can the best human laws prevent them.—But these abuses proportionably mar all our comforts, and neither conscience nor prudence will permit a true Christian to fall in with them.—Even where the providence of God, or an indiscreet choice in marriage hath alloted a Christian a trial instead of an help-meet; he will from his heart prefer bearing the cross, to such relief as tends ultimately to licentiousness, confusion, and misery: and divine grace will sanctify this cross, support him under it, and teach him so to behave as will gradually render it more tolerable.—But every method should be used to cement the affections of married persons, and to exclude every temptation to inconstancy.—Whilst we leave those, to the tribunal of God, who prosper by the most horrible oppression, or most infamous traffic: it suffices here to observe, that there are readers, who would be disgusted, were we to follow the inspired writer, in his repeated exhortations to humiliation before God, to purity, piety, justice, mercy, kindness, impartiality, and consideration of the poor and destitute, and to enlarged generosity of spirit.—It is not hard to prove these things to be pleasing unto God, and becoming his redeemed people; the difficulty is, to bring our minds to attend to them in our daily walk and conversation.

NOTES.

CHAP. XXV.] V. 2, 3.] Many crimes had been mentioned, for which no punishment was specified. In all these cases it is supposed that scourging was to be used at the discretion of the magistrate, according to the degree and aggravations of the crime. This punishment was inflicted in open court, under the inspection of the judge, and without respect to the rank of the criminal. But lest the malefactor should seem vile, as a slave or a beast, the number of forty stripes must not be exceeded. Lest they should miscount, the Jewish magistrates always confined themselves to thirty-nine, which Paul repeatedly endured. If petty crimes were more generally thus chastised, and capital punishments were less frequent among us; it would be much more advantageous to the community.

V. 4. Muzzle, &c.] The Israelites, and most of the ancients, were accustomed to beat out their grain by the feet of oxen, and instruments drawn by them.

V. 5—10.] The custom here regulated had long prevailed; (Gen. xxxviii. 8;) and was probably introduced to preserve some remembrance of those who died childless. It seems to have been adopted into the Mosaic law, mainly to preserve the distinction of inheritances, and to favour the regularity of the genealogies until the coming of Christ; as well as to provide for the destitute widow, when the estate devolved to the next heir. If a married man died without issue, his brother was required to marry the widow; and the eldest son of such a marriage inherited the estate of the deceased, and thus preserved his name in the genealogies.—If any one refused to comply with this custom, being averse to the person or character of the widow, he was publicly disgraced. By pulling off his shoe, he was rendered like the slaves, who generally went barefoot; and the widow even spit in, or before, his face, in contempt of the man who had thus disgraced ther's wife, then let his brother's wife go up to the gate unto the elders, and say, My husband's brother refuseth to raise up unto his brother a name in Israel, he will not perform the duty of my husband's brother.

8 Then the elders of the city shall call him, and speak unto him: and if he stand to it, and say, I like not to take her;

9 Then shall his brother's wife come unto him in the presence of the elders, and loose his shoe from off his foot, and spit in his face, and shall answer and say, So shall it be done unto that man that will not build up his brother's house.

10 And his name shall be called in Israel, The house of him that hath his shoe loosed.

11 When men strive together, one with another, and the wife of the one draweth near for to deliver her husband out of the hand of him that smiteth him, and putteth forth her hand, and taketh him by the secrets;

12 Then thou shalt cut off her hand, thine eye shall not pity her.

13 Thou shalt not have in thy bag divers weights, a great and a small.

14 Thou shalt not have in thine house divers measures, a great and a small.

15 But thou shalt have a perfect and just weight, a perfect and just measure shalt thou have; that thy days may be lengthened in the land which the LORD thy God giveth thee.

16 For all that do such things, and all that do unrighteously, are an abomination unto the LORD thy God.

17 Remember what Amalek did unto thee by the way, when ye were come forth out of Egypt;

18 How he met thee by the way, and smote the hindmost of thee, even all that were feeble behind thee, when thou wast faint and weary; and he feared not God.

19 Therefore it shall be, when the LORD thy graced her, and shewn such disrespect to the memory of the deceased.—It is not agreed amongst commentators, whether married men were concerned in this law, or not: and it is not material which way it is determined; as it had reference to a particular case which no longer exists, and therefore our duty is not in the least affected by the determination.

V. 13—16.] The Israelites were not only not allowed to use unjust weights and measures; but they might not even keep them in the house. It is observable that this too common practice is branded as "abomination to the Lord" equally with idolatry, adultery, sodomy, &c. (Notes &c. Prov. xi. 1. xvi. 11. xx. 10. Amos, viii. 4—6. Micah, vi. 10. 1 Cor. vi. 8, 9.)

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.

In administering justice, equity and impartiality are required to distinguish betwixt the innocent and the guilty, and to proportion punishments to crimes; still leaning to the side of lenity, rather than to that of severity, as aiming at the reformation, and not the destruction, of the criminal himself, as far as public security will admit. Every punishment should be inflicted with solemnity, that all the spectators may be impressed with dread, and be warned not to offend in like manner. And though criminals must be shamed, as well as put to pain, for their warning and humiliation: yet care should be taken, if possible, that they do not appear totally vile: lest, having no further reputation to lose, they should become desperate. Happy are they who are chastened of the Lord for their humiliation, that they should not be condemned with the world to utter destruction.—Kindness is due not only to man but even to the beasts, and whatever living creature contributes to our ease, pleasure, or advantage, should receive from us such reciprocal satisfactions as it is capable of, in proportion to the benefit conferred. How equitable then is it, that ministers, who are instrumental to men's salvation, should be maintained comfortably at their expence!—In all our actions we should seek the good of those around us, especially of the Lord's people, and the spread and continuance of true religion in the next generation: and in contracting marriage especially we should seek a godly seed who may preserve the name of deceased believers, and fill up their places in the church; in every way shewing respect to dead, and kindness to living relatives. For whatever disgrace, we without cause put upon others, will in the event rebound upon ourselves.—A solemn and testified ratification should distinguish the honourable relation of marriage from all illicit connections; and married persons should be known, to preserve them and others from temptation: and though affections cannot be forced, yet they should be subordinated to reason and religion.—The customs and manners of different ages may render that consistent with female delicacy at one time, which would not be deemed so at another: but there are certain outrages to modesty, which no age can tolerate, no provocation or extremity palliate, but which must ever be branded with infamy, and should be punished with unpitying severity.—Every degree of fraudulency is abhorred of God, and should be dreaded by us; for dishonest gain always brings a curse upon men's property, families, and souls: and the day of judgment will bring strange things to light in this respect. Happy they, who now judge themselves, repent, forsake their sins, and put away every evil thing, that they may not then be condemned of the Lord.—Let every persecutor and injurer of God's people hear, and take warning, from the example of the Amalekites: however they now cast off the fear of God, and behave with cruelty and despite to the meek and poor, the Lord will one day plead

5 And thou ſhalt ſpeak, and ſay before the LORD thy God, A Syrian ready to periſh was my father, and he went down into Egypt, and ſojourned there with a few, and became there a nation, great, mighty, and populous:

6 And the Egyptians evil entreated us, and afflicted us, and laid upon us hard bondage:

7 And when we cried unto the LORD God of our fathers, the LORD heard our voice, and looked on our affliction, and our labour, and our oppreſſion:

8 And the LORD brought us forth out of Egypt with a mighty hand, and with an outſtretched arm, and with great terribleneſs, and with ſigns and wonders.

9 And he hath brought us into this place, and hath given us this land, even a land that floweth with milk and honey.

10 And now, behold, I have brought the firſt-fruits of the land which thou, O LORD, haſt given me. And thou ſhalt ſet it before the LORD thy God, and worſhip before the LORD thy God.

11 And thou ſhalt rejoice in every good thing which the LORD thy God hath given unto thee, and unto thine houſe, thou, and the Levite, and the ſtranger that is among you.

their cauſe, avenge all the injuſtice done them, and blot out the name of every enemy from under heaven: and the longer judgment tarries, the more dreadful will be it's execution at laſt.

NOTES.

CHAP. XXVI.] V. 2. Thou ſhalt take, &c.] This ſtatute probably related to the offering of the firſt-fruits at the day of Pentecoſt, (Ex. xxiii. 16—19. Deut. xvi. 10.) The people were required to preſent ſome part of every kind of production of their lands, and the firſt ripe of each, of which the prieſts had the uſe: but the quantity was not preſcribed; for it was a free-will offering, a thankful acknowledgment, to the denial of their own appetite which would eſpecially crave the firſt ripe fruit; and therefore their liberality was put to the trial. But as every production would not be ripe at the ſame time, and ſome could not be preſerved till the reſt were ready: we muſt admit ſome limitation, and ſuppoſe that the beſt and choiceſt, and ſuch as could be beſt preſerved, were thus preſented; and the reſt, as occaſion required, offered to the prieſts in their ſeveral cities. Some ſuppoſe likewiſe, that in caſe of hindrance this baſket might be preſented at another time than at the feaſt of Pentecoſt; but that every Iſraelite, who poſſeſſed land, was required annually to make this preſentation.

V. 5—11.] Jacob is called a Syrian, becauſe he lived ſo long in Syria, or Meſopotamia which was one diſtrict of that country. He was diſtreſſed when he went to Laban; when he returned his life was endangered both from him, and from his brother Eſau: he was afterwards ready to periſh by famine in Canaan, which occaſioned his removal into Egypt, where his poſterity were miſerably enſlaved: yet notwithſtanding all theſe hindrances, the Lord's promiſes had been punctually performed. Theſe mercies the Iſraelites were directed to acknowledge annually in this ſolemn manner; to keep up among them a remembrance of them, and to remind them of their obligations to love and ſerve God; that he might receive from them the due tribute of praiſe and gratitude.

V. 12—15.] This related to the ſecond tithe before conſidered (Note, xiv. 22—29.) Once in three years this ſolemn proteſtation was required from every proprietor of land less, and the widow, that they may eat within thy gate, and be filled;

13 Then thou shalt say before the LORD thy God, I have brought away the hallowed things out of mine house, and also have given them unto the Levite, and unto the stranger, to the fatherless, and to the widow, according to all thy commandments which thou hast commanded me: I have not transgressed thy commandments, neither have I forgotten them;

14 I have not eaten thereof in my mourning, neither have I taken away ought thereof for any unclean use, nor given ought thereof for the dead; but I have hearkened to the voice of the LORD my God, and have done according to all that thou hast commanded me:

15 Look down from thy holy habitation, from heaven, and bless thy people Israel, and the land which thou hast given us, as thou swarest unto our fathers, a land that floweth with milk and honey.

16 This day the LORD thy God hath commanded thee to do these statutes, and judgments; thou shalt therefore keep and do them with all thine heart, and with all thy soul.

17 Thou hast avouched the LORD this day to be thy God, and to walk in his ways, and to keep his statutes, and his commandments, and his judgments, and to hearken unto his voice:

18 And the LORD hath avouched thee this day to be his peculiar people; as he hath promised thee, and that thou shouldest keep all his commandments; land in Canaan, probably in the presence of the priests at the court of the tabernacle. They declared that the whole of this second tithe had been employed to those purposes for which it was appropriated: and that no part had been used by them in mourning, or at funerals which rendered them unclean; nor in any superstitious ceremony. As the matter lay very much betwixt God and their conscience; this protestation was the more suitable, and would both tend to remind them of their duty, and render them afraid of neglecting it.

19 And to make thee high above all nations which he hath made, in praise, and in name, and in honour; and that thou mayest be an holy people unto the LORD thy God, as he hath spoken.

V. 17—19.] By acceding to the national covenant the Israelites openly professed themselves the servants and worshippers of Jehovah, and engaged to walk obediently in his commandments: and by admitting them into it, he avowed himself to be their God, their protector, and portion; and engaged that, whilst they were obedient, he would prosper and advance them, as well as continue to them their distinguishing religious advantages. All this was an external representation of that covenant-relation, which subsists betwixt a reconciled God and every true believer; and of the privileges and duties belonging to it, and resulting from it.

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.

Whatever God at any time hath promised will assuredly in due season be fulfilled to the persons specified, notwithstanding obstacles, improbabilities, and apparent delays: and in all our comforts we should observe the faithfulness, as well as of the goodness of God. It is advantageous to ourselves frequently to meditate on the Lord's dealings with us, and to consider from how low an estate, and through what impediments, he hath brought us to our present comforts and prospects: and it is so edifying to others, on proper occasions, to speak on such humiliating and enlivening subjects, that whatever leads us to them is well worthy of our regard. Nor can any thing be more reasonable, than that we should both by word and deed render our God the glory due unto his name. We should honour him with our first and best in every thing, to the denial of our own appetites and passions: on some occasions it is honourable to God, and edifying to his church, when it is done publicly: it is always a source of rejoicing to ourselves when it is done properly.—At the day of judgment we must render an account of our whole stewardship; and it is therefore our wisdom to be frequently calling ourselves to a previous account, how we employ our time, possessions, or endowments.—We must be watchful, not only to avoid dishonesty, but that our conversation may be without covetousness, that pious and charitable uses have their portion, and that temperance and beneficence have been duly regarded by us, according to the commandments of God. Thus shall we evince that, according to the covenant of grace in Jesus Christ, the Lord is our God, and we are his people; and that we are waiting in his appointed way, for the performance of his gracious and glorious promises.—It may at some times consist with humility and tend to edification, openly to protest our integrity: and at all times the consciousness of it is matter of rejoicing, (2 Cor. i. 12,) and of confidence at the throne of grace, (1 John, iii. v. 20—22;) and in all our supplications we should remember to plead for peculiar blessings on our fellow Christians, and the extending of our privileges to our fellow sinners even to the ends of the earth.

AND Moſes, with the elders of Iſrael, commanded the people, ſaying, Keep all the commandments which I command you this day.

2 And it ſhall be, on the day when ye ſhall paſs over Jordan, unto the land which the LORD thy God giveth thee, that thou ſhalt ſet thee up great ſtones, and plaiſter them with plaiſter:

3 And thou ſhalt write upon them all the words of this law, when thou art paſſed over; that thou mayeſt go in unto the land which the LORD thy God giveth thee, a land that floweth with milk and honey; as the LORD God of thy fathers hath promiſed thee.

4 Therefore it ſhall be, when ye be gone over Jordan, that ye ſhall ſet up theſe ſtones which I command you this day, in mount Ebal, and thou ſhalt plaiſter them with plaiſter.

5 And there ſhalt thou build an altar unto the LORD thy God, an altar of ſtones: thou ſhalt not lift up any iron tool upon them.

6 Thou ſhalt build the altar of the LORD thy God of whole ſtones; and thou ſhalt offer burnt-offerings thereon unto the LORD thy God.

7 And thou ſhalt offer peace-offerings, and ſhalt eat there, and rejoice before the LORD thy God.

8 And thou ſhalt write upon the ſtones all the words of this law very plainly.

9 And Moſes, and the prieſts the Levites, ſpake unto all Iſrael, ſaying, Take heed, and hearken, O Iſrael; this day thou art become the people of the LORD thy God.

10 Thou ſhalt therefore obey the voice of the LORD thy God, and do his commandments and his ſtatutes, which I command thee this day.

11 And Moſes charged the people the ſame day, ſaying.

12 Theſe ſhall ſtand upon mount Gerizzim to bleſs the people, when ye are come over Jordan; Simeon, and Levi, and Judah, and Iſſachar, and Joſeph, and Benjamin.

13 And theſe ſhall ſtand upon mount Ebal to curſe; Reuben, Gad, and Aſher, and Zebulun, Dan, and Naphtali.

14 And the Levites ſhall ſpeak, and ſay unto all the men of Iſrael with a loud voice,

NOTES.

CHAP. XXVII.] V. 1. Moſes &c.] In the foregoing chapter Moſes finiſhed his repetition and explanation of the law, with thoſe particular exhortations which he annexed. Here, in conjunction with the ſeventy elders, (Num. xi,) he proceeded to enjoin two ſolemn obſervances, which were to be attended to after the entrance of Iſrael into Canaan, the former to aſſiſt their memories, the latter to affect their hearts.

V. 3. All the, &c.] It is much diſputed what law was written upon theſe plaiſtered ſtones, nor is the ſolution very eaſy. Some ſuppoſe that it was the whole book of Deuteronomy; others the preceptive part of it; others the ten commandments only; and others reſtrict the writing to the latter part of this chapter. And indeed whatever elſe was intended, as the ſtones were placed upon mount Ebal, whence the curſes were denounced, it is probable that theſe were added: but we may conclude that at leaſt the ten commandments, and the great outlines of the whole law, were likewiſe inſcribed.

V. 5—7.] (Note, Exod. xx. 25.) In ordinary caſes no altar might be uſed except that at the door of the tabernacle, which was made of wood and braſs: but the Lord reſerved to himſelf the privilege of diſpenſing with his own laws; and on this occaſion, directed an altar of rough ſtones to be formed, in order to this renewed confirmation of the covenant, ſimilar to that uſed when it was firſt ratified at mount Sinai, (Notes &c. Exod. xxiv.) This altar built upon mount Ebal, and the ſacrifices of burnt-offerings on this occaſion offered, aptly taught the people that the curſe of the law could only be removed by him, who, by the ſacrifice of himſelf, was made a curſe for ſinners: and the peace-offerings, with the ſacred feaſt, implied that joyful communion with a reconciled God may be maintained through Jeſus Chriſt, notwithſtanding the moſt tremendous curſes of the law.

V. 12. To bleſs, &c,] By this ſolemnity the whole people of Iſrael deliberately approved of, and conſented to, their national covenant; declared that they expected the bleſſings ſtipulated to them only in a way of obedience; and confeſſed that, individually and nationally, they ſhould merit, and might expect, to be accurſed of God, if they were diſobedient to his commandments. No mention is made of the ſpecial acts of obedience on account of which the bleſſings were pronounced; as they do not belong to thoſe who obey ſome and neglect others of God's commandments; "for he that keepeth the whole law, and "offendeth in one point, is guilty of all." No man therefore can claim the recompence of his obedience as a debt, but all muſt receive it as an unmerited favour: and the ſilence of the Scriptures is to be conſidered in ſuch caſes as conveying important inſtruction.—It is obſervable, that the tribes, from whom the bleſſings were pronounced, were all deſcended from Leah and Rachel the free-women.

V. 14. And the Levites, &c.] Some of the Levites were appointed to ſpeak in the name of God on this occaſion; but the bulk of the tribe ſtood upon the oppoſite mountain.

V. 15.

15 Curſed be the man that maketh any graven or molten image, an abomination unto the LORD, the work of the hands of the craftſman, and putteth it in a ſecret place. And all the people ſhall anſwer, and ſay, Amen.

16 Curſed be he that ſetteth light by his father or his mother: and all the people ſhall ſay, Amen.

17 Curſed be he that removeth his neighbour's land-mark: and all the people ſhall ſay, Amen.

18 Curſed be he that maketh the blind to wander out of the way: and all the people ſhall ſay, Amen.

19 Curſed be he that perverteth the judgment of the ſtranger, fatherleſs, and widow: and all the people ſhall ſay, Amen.

20 Curſed be he that lieth with his father's wife; becauſe he uncovereth his father's ſkirt: and all the people ſhall ſay, Amen.

21 Curſed be he that lieth with any manner of beaſt: and all the people ſhall ſay, Amen.

22 Curſed be he that lieth with his ſiſter, the daughter of his father, or the daughter of his mother: and all the people ſhall ſay, Amen.

23 Curſed be he that lieth with his mother-in-law: and all the people ſhall ſay, Amen.

24 Curſed be he that ſmiteth his neighbour ſecretly: and all the people ſhall ſay, Amen.

25 Curſed be he that taketh reward to ſlay an innocent perſon: and all the people ſhall ſay, Amen.

26 Curſed be he that confirmeth not all the words of this law to do them: and all the people ſhall ſay, Amen.

CHAP.

V. 15. In a ſecret place, &c.] Open idolatry was capitally puniſhed by the magiſtrate: but if concealed from man's eye, God would puniſh it himſelf.

All the people, &c.] By this ſolemn aſſent to the words of theſe curſes, the Iſraelites did not wiſh or conſent that either themſelves or their neighbours ſhould be accurſed; but merely declared their belief that ſuch guilty perſons would be ſo, and their acknowledgment that they deſerved the curſe; and that they expected no other themſelves but to be accurſed, if they committed the crimes which were ſpecified. Were there no other objection to the ſolemnity preſcribed by the church of England on Aſh-Wedneſday, it would be very trifling to ſay, that people go to church to curſe their neighbours: for the Amen, now ſpoken by profeſſing chriſtians, means neither more or leſs, than that which God commanded the Iſraelites to annex to the ſame curſes; and under every diſpenſation, they who live in the practice of groſs wickedneſs are accurſed and ſhould be reminded of it.

V. 18. Maketh the blind, &c.] By parity of reaſon, it is equally criminal wittingly to give bad counſel to the ignorant, or to injure thoſe who cannot take care of themſelves.

V. 26. That confirmeth, &c.] This is rendered by Paul, "Curſed is every one that continueth not in all things "which are written in the book of the law to do them." (Gal. iii. 10.) Whence we learn, that conſtant obedience is the confirmation here ſpoken of: but we are more eſpecially taught, that theſe curſes were not only intended to deter the Iſraelites from ſin, but to ſhew them their need of mercy, and to eſtabliſh the diſtinction betwixt the righteouſneſs of faith, and the righteouſneſs of works. This eſpecially muſt be the meaning of this laſt verſe, by which all the Iſraelites were evidently called to condemn themſelves, as deſerving of the curſe denounced. And this truth, being properly perceived, forms the true preparation of heart for underſtanding and valuing the ſalvation of the goſpel, according to the new covenant of mercy in Chriſt alone.

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.

As there is ſuch an unaptneſs in our fallen nature to retain ſuitable impreſſions of the things pertaining to God, we have occaſion to uſe every proper means of aſſiſting our memories, awakening our conſciences, or affecting our hearts with them. But, bleſſed be God, the numerous printed copies of the ſcriptures amongſt us, if properly ſtudied, and thus familiarized to our minds, may ſuperſede the neceſſity of ſuch methods as were preſcribed to Iſrael: and the end of the goſpel miniſtry is, and the aim of all preachers ought to be, to make the word of God as plain as poſſible to the meaneſt capacities. Yet except the Spirit of God efficaciouſly ſucceed their labours, we ſhall not even by theſe means be made wiſe unto ſalvation; for this bleſſing we ſhould therefore daily and earneſtly pray. In like manner, without the interpoſition of the atoning blood of Chriſt, we ſinners can neither have communion with a holy God, nor perform any acceptable obedience to him: for his righteous law peremptorily requires an uninterrupted, ſpiritual, and perſevering obedience to every precept, and condemns every one who, at any time or in any inſtance, tranſgreſſes it. Under its aweful curſe therefore we tranſgreſſors remain, until the redemption of Chriſt be applied to our hearts: and under that curſe every unbeliever will periſh for ever, and be conſtrained to acknowledge the juſtice of his condemnation. Happy they, who here "ſubmit to the righteouſneſs of God," and, as ſelf-condemned ſinners, ſeek ſalvation from his mercy through Jeſus Chriſt, and according to that new covenant of which he is Surety: for them there is no condemnation, their "ſalvation is for ever, and their righteouſneſs ſhall "not be aboliſhed;" and every bleſſing is enſured to them by promiſe, by covenant, and by oath. But none, who live in the habitual practice of any known ſin, are partakers of theſe privileges; and however covertly they may conceal their wickedneſs from the cognizance of the magiſtrates, or the cenſures of miniſters and the church, the awful curſe of God will light upon them, with weight proportioned to their abuſed privileges and their hypocritical profeſſion.—Wherever the grace of God bringeth ſalvation, it teacheth the believer to deny ſuch ungodlineſs, and ſuch worldly luſts, as are here mentioned; and to live soberly, righteously, and godly in this present world, consenting to, confirming, and delighting in, all the words of God's law after the inward man, though he cannot render it a perfect and unfailing obedience. In this evangelical dependence and conscientious walk, true peace and solid joy are to be found. Thus God may be glorified, and mankind benefited; and in promoting this religion, magistrates, ministers, and persons of every rank, should concur; and improve their authority, influence, and example for that purpose.

NOTES.

CHAP. XXVIII.] V. 2, All these, &c.] This chapter has a near resemblance to the twenty-sixth chapter of Leviticus, which was addressed, almost forty years before, to their forefathers at mount Sinai; and the reader is referred to the notes, &c. made upon it. We have here a very copious and affecting exposition of the blessing and the curse mentioned in the foregoing chapter, in which there are evidently many things prophetical of the events which have befallen the Jewish nation to this day.

V. 3—14.] In a variety of expressions every kind of prosperity, personal, relative, and public; in their property and enjoyments; in their temporal advancement and spiritual privileges, are engaged to the Israelites, whilst they continued obedient; and their succeeding history furnishes full demonstration, that thus it was uniformly with them as a nation, whilst they adhered to the worship and service of God; and in great measure individually. Their remarkable prosperity in every thing convinced the surrounding nations, that they were immediately protected and assisted by the Lord, whose name they worshipped, and whose people they professed to be; insomuch that they were often afraid to meddle with them.

V. 15. All these curses shall, &c.] These terrible curses, which were denounced against the Israelites when disobedient, have, indeed, uniformly overtaken them, that is, have followed and pressed upon them in every situation, and in every country, from that day to this, as it must be evident to every person who is in the least acquainted with their history.

thy God, to observe to do all his commandments and his statutes which I command thee this day; that all these curses shall come upon thee, and overtake thee.

16 Cursed shalt thou be in the city, and cursed shalt thou be in the field.

17 Cursed shall be thy basket and thy store.

18 Cursed shall be the fruit of thy body, and the fruit of thy land, the increase of thy kine, and the flocks of thy sheep.

19 Cursed shalt thou be when thou comest in, and cursed shalt thou be when thou goest out.

20 The LORD shall send upon thee cursing, vexation, and rebuke, in all that thou settest thine hand unto for to do, until thou be destroyed, and until thou perish quickly; because of the wickedness of thy doings whereby thou hast forsaken me.

21 The LORD shall make the pestilence cleave unto thee, until he have consumed thee from off the land whither thou goest to possess it.

22 The LORD shall smite thee with a consumption, and with a fever, and with an inflammation, and with an extreme burning, and with the sword, and with blasting, and with mildew: and they shall pursue thee until thou perish.

23 And the heaven that is over thy head shall be brass, and the earth that is under thee shall be iron.

24 The LORD shall make the rain of thy land powder and dust: from heaven shall it come down upon thee, until thou be destroyed.

25 The LORD shall cause thee to be smitten before thine enemies: thou shalt go out one way against them, and flee seven ways before them; and shalt be removed into all the kingdoms of the earth.

26 And thy carcase shall be meat unto all fowls of the air, and unto the beasts of the earth, and no man shall fray them away.

27 The LORD will smite thee with the botch of Egypt, and with the emerods, and with the scab, and with the itch, whereof thou canst not be healed.

28 The LORD shall smite thee with madness, and blindness, and astonishment of heart:

29 And thou shalt grope at noon-day, as the blind gropeth in darkness, and thou shalt not prosper in thy ways; and thou shalt be only oppressed and spoiled evermore: and no man shall save thee.

30 Thou shalt betroth a wife, and another man shall lie with her; thou shalt build an house, and thou shalt not dwell therein: thou shalt plant a vineyard, and shalt not gather the grapes thereof.

31 Thine ox shall be slain before thine eyes, and thou shalt not eat thereof: thine ass shall be violently taken away from before thy face, and shall not be restored to thee: thy sheep shall be given unto thine enemies, and thou shalt have none to rescue them.

32 Thy sons and thy daughters shall be given unto another people, and thine eyes shall look and fail with longing for them all the day long: and there shall be no might in thine hand.

33 The fruit of thy land, and all thy labours, shall a nation which thou knowest not eat

V. 24. The rain of thy land, &c.] Instead of the rain in it's appointed seasons, the Lord declared that he would visit the people with such extreme drought, as should render their land dry dust and barren sand. Such was the famine in the days of Ahab. (1 Kings xvii. xviii.) Jeremiah also laments one that was very terrible. (Jer. xiv.) and it is remarkable that this formerly fertile land is at present noted for its sterility; and is so thinly inhabited, as not to contain an hundredth part of its ancient inhabitants, even according to the largest computation!

V. 25. And shalt be removed, &c.] This was fulfilled in the Assyrian and Babylonish captivity, but still more signally hath it been fulfilling for above seventeen hundred years, in the present dispersion of the Jews all over the earth.

V. 28. The Lord shall smite thee, &c.] In the siege of Jerusalem by the Chaldeans this was in some measure the case: but in that by Titus and the Romans, and in the subsequent conduct of the miserable reliques of the Jews, their infatuation was so evident, that every one who reads of their conduct must be convinced they were given up to judicial blindness and madness, or they never could have been so bent upon their own destruction: whilst, by their obstinate resistance to the Roman power without the least prospect of escaping, they ensured their own miseries; by their intestine rage, they became the executioners of the wrath of God upon themselves, almost saved their enemies the trouble of destroying them, and absolutely put it out of their power to preserve them. (34.)

V. 32. No might in thine hand, &c.] Neither power to resist the violence done them, nor money to redeem their enslaved offspring.

V. 36.

eat up; and thou shalt be only oppressed and crushed alway:

34 So that thou shalt be mad for the sight of thine eyes which thou shalt see.

35 The LORD shall smite thee in the knees, and in the legs with a sore botch that cannot be healed, from the sole of thy foot unto the top of thy head.

36 The LORD shall bring thee and thy king which thou shalt set over thee, unto a nation which neither thou nor thy fathers have known; and there shalt thou serve other gods, wood and stone.

37 And thou shalt become an astonishment, a proverb, and a by-word among all nations whither the LORD shall lead thee.

38 Thou shalt carry much seed out into the field, and shalt gather but little in; for the locust shall consume it.

39 Thou shalt plant vineyards and dress them; but shalt neither drink of the wine, nor gather the grapes: for the worms shall eat them.

40 Thou shalt have olive-trees throughout all thy coasts, but thou shalt not anoint thyself with the oil: for thine olive shall cast his fruit.

41 Thou shalt beget sons and daughters, but thou shalt not enjoy them: for they shall go into captivity.

42 All thy trees and fruit of thy land shall the locust consume.

43 The stranger that is within thee shall get up above thee very high; and thou shalt come down very low.

44 He shall lend to thee, and thou shalt not lend to him: he shall be the head, and thou shalt be the tail.

45 Moreover all these curses shall come upon thee, and shall pursue thee, and overtake thee, till thou be destroyed; because thou hearkenedst not unto the voice of the LORD thy God, to keep his commandments and his statutes which he commanded thee.

46 And they shall be upon thee for a sign and for a wonder, and upon thy seed for ever.

47 Because thou servedst not the LORD thy God with joyfulness and with gladness of heart, for the abundance of all things;

48 Therefore shalt thou serve thine enemies which the LORD shall send against thee, in hunger, and in thirst, and in nakedness, and in want of all things: and he shall put a yoke of iron upon thy neck, until he have destroyed thee.

49 The LORD shall bring a nation against thee from far, from the end of the earth, as swift as the eagle flieth; a nation whose tongue thou shalt not understand;

50 A nation of fierce countenance, which shall not regard the person of the old, nor shew favour to the young:

51 And he shall eat the fruit of thy cattle, and

V. 36. There shalt thou serve other gods, &c.] Without doubt multitudes of the Israelites who were carried captive by the Assyrians, and of the Jews who were carried to Babylon, were finally incorporated with the nations among whom they lived, and were drawn in and given up to their idolatry: and some think, that the violence frequently done the Jews in Popish countries; in that they are compelled by severe persecutions, to conceal their religion, and to worship the images of saints and angels, was here predicted.

V. 37. A proverb, and a by-word, &c.] The name of a Jew hath long been a proverbial mark of detestation and contempt, among all the nations whither they have been driven. I do not say, that this hath been or is equitable, but it is fact: for we had better look to ourselves, than reproach others who are under the divine rebuke, and who are living, though reluctant, witnesses of the truth of our holy religion, and of God's indignation against those who reject or oppose it.

V. 43, 44.] These verses had an early accomplishment in the time of the judges. The remains of the conquered nations were permitted to rise up against the Israelites, to gain the ascendency over them, and cruelly to oppress them, whenever their sins had provoked the Lord.

V. 46. For a sign, and for a wonder, &c.] The miseries by severe persecutions, which the Jews have endured, and which in some measure they still endure, without apparent prospect of redress, are unparalleled in the history of mankind, both for their weight, their number, and their duration: yet after all the oppressions and massacres with which they have been wasted, and the long-continued dispersion by which they have been scattered, they still remain a distinct and very numerous people. These events, compared with the favour of God in ancient times manifested towards them, and with the predictions concerning them, should not only excite our astonishment, but turn unto us for a testimony; and, instead of successive miracles, should assure us of the truth of the Scriptures. And when the predictions likewise concerning their conversion to Christ shall be accomplished, the whole taken together will indeed be a sign and a wonder to all the nations of the earth, and become the forerunner of a general spread of true christianity.

V. 49—58.] These verses [illegible] to describe the Romans, the fair and [illegible] enemies of the Jews, who came from a far [illegible] whose standard was an eagle; who spake a language of which the Jews were then utter strangers; whose victories were rapid, whose and the fruit of thy land, until thou be destroyed; which also shall not leave thee either corn, wine, or oil, or the increase of thy kine, or flocks of thy sheep, until he have destroyed thee.

52 And he shall besiege thee in all thy gates, until thy high and fenced walls come down, wherein thou trustedst, throughout all thy land: and he shall besiege thee in all thy gates, throughout all thy land which the LORD thy God hath given thee.

53 And thou shalt eat the fruit of thine own body, the flesh of thy sons and of thy daughters, which the LORD thy God hath given thee, in the siege and in the straitness wherewith thine enemies shall distress thee:

54 So that the man that is tender among you, and very delicate, his eye shall be evil toward his brother, and toward the wife of his bosom, and towards the remnant of his children which he shall leave:

55 So that he will not give to any of them of the flesh of his children, whom he shall eat; because he hath nothing left him in the siege and in the straitness, wherewith thine enemies shall distress thee in all thy gates.

56 The tender and delicate woman among you, which would not adventure to set the sole of her foot upon the ground for delicateness and tenderness, her eye shall be evil towards the husband of her bosom, and towards her son, and towards her daughter,

57 And towards her young one that cometh out from between her feet, and towards her children which she shall bear: for she shall eat them for want of all things secretly in the siege and straitness wherewith thine enemy shall distress thee in thy gates.

58 If thou wilt not observe to do all the words of this law, that are written in this book, that thou mayest fear this glorious and fearful name, THE LORD THY GOD;

59 Then the LORD will make thy plagues wonderful, and the plagues of thy seed, even great plagues and of long continuance, and sore sicknesses, and of long continuance.

60 Moreover, he will bring upon thee all the diseases of Egypt, which thou wast afraid of; and they shall cleave unto thee.

61 Also every sickness, and every plague, which is not written in the book of this law, them will the LORD bring upon thee, until thou be destroyed.

62 And ye shall be left few in number, whereas ye were as the stars of heaven for multitude; because thou wouldest not obey the voice of the LORD thy God.

63 And it shall come to pass, that as the LORD rejoiced over you to do you good, and to multiply you; so the Lord will rejoice over you to destroy you, and to bring you to nought; and ye shall be plucked from off the land whither thou goest to possess it.

64 And the LORD shall scatter thee among all people, from the one end of the earth even unto the other; and there thou shalt serve other gods, which neither thou nor thy fathers have known, even wood and stone.

65 And among these nations shalt thou find no ease, neither shall the sole of thy foot have whose appearance was terrible, whose yoke was an iron yoke; (48.) and the havock which they made among them was most tremendous. By their arms Jerusalem was besieged, facked, and barbarously defolated; while the siege continued the famine was so extreme, that women ate their own children, and concealed the horrible repast, left others should tear it from them: and after that event, the fame nation, continually provoked by their infurrections and daring crimes, received from Rome fresh fcenes of extirpation. So that [illegible] was [illegible] in the siege, (as [illegible] and the [illegible] were afterwards [illegible] are confidered, [illegible] remains of them [illegible] wonderful: and the Babylonish captivity, which was the punishment of their [illegible] for the misery or captivity [illegible] sufferings since they rejected and crucified their Messiah; that the superior malignity of that crime, above all which went before it, is legibly written in the punishment of it.

V. 61. Which is not written, &c.] After this tremendous catalogue of curses, lest there should be any possible temporal misery which had not been mentioned, the whole is comprised in one general denunciation; that every species, and every degree, of misery should come upon them, if they continued disobedient.

V. 63. The Lord will rejoice, &c.] The miseries of his creatures cannot be any ways pleasing in themselves unto the Lord: but he is pleased with the exercise and display of that justice, truth, wisdom, and power which become him as the Judge of all the earth.

V. 65. No ease, &c.] It is here predicted that the impenitent Jews should not be allowed any alleviation or [illegible] accordingly they have hitherto found have rest: but the LORD shall give thee there a trembling heart, and failing of eyes, and sorrow of mind:

66 And thy life shall hang in doubt before thee; and thou shalt fear day and night, and shalt have none assurance of thy life:

67 In the morning thou shalt say, Would God it were even! and at even thou shalt say, Would God it were morning! for the fear of thine heart wherewith thou shalt fear, and for the sight of thine eyes which thou shalt see.

68 And the LORD shall bring thee into Egypt again with ships, by the way whereof I spake unto thee, Thou shalt see it no more again: and there ye shall be sold unto your enemies for bond-men and bond-women, and no man shall buy you.

found no country in which they are treated as denizens; all suspect them as enemies, and behave to them as aliens, if they do not harass, oppress, and persecute them.—Nothing seems more fitted to confirm a sensible but hesitating enquirer concerning the truth of revelation, than a careful comparison of this chapter, and of the prophecies of the New Testament respecting that nation, with their actual history to the present day. This appears to be capable of affording every thing that any external evidence imaginable can effect: and the demonstration thence deduced, which may be continually re-examined, at leisure and with deliberation, seems more convincing than any miracles, which are transient, and can only be reviewed in the testimony by which they are authenticated.

V. 68. And, &c.] Many of the Jews rebelliously retired into Egypt after the Babylonish captivity, and there miserably perished (Jer. xli, xlii, xliii, xliv.) Multitudes went thither, and settled under the successors of Alexander. But this verse seems especially to point out an event which took place after the destruction of Jerusalem by Titus: Numbers of the captives were sent by Jews into Egypt, (as well as into other countries,) and sold for slaves, at a vile price and for the meanest offices. For their multitude was so great, that purchasers could not be found for them all at any rate. God had brought them out of Egypt, and had forbidden them to return; and had not their sin incurred his severest vengeance, he would never have permitted them to have been forced thither: but by their iniquities they provoked him to reduce them to as abject a condition, as that, from which he had redeemed them. Mr. Henry closes his comment upon this most awful chapter, with mentioning a wicked man, who was so enraged at the threatenings contained in it, that he tore the leaf out of his Bible: 'But, says this pious author, 'to what purpose is it to deface a copy, whilst the original 'stands upon record in the divine counsels, by which it is 'unalterably determined, that the wages of sin is death, 'whether men will hear, or whether they will forbear?'

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.

In vain doth human language exhaust it's powers in attempting to express the whole meaning of these important terms, THE BLESSING, and THE CURSE OF ALMIGHTY GOD: the import of each is infinite, inexplicable, and incomprehensible. All events are absolutely at his disposal, and all creatures are his servants; and he can make every one of us as happy, or as miserable, as he pleases. If he determine to bless the commodities influence of health, riches, and reputation, he gives [illegible] ful fields, flourishing families, and peaceful habitations: he advances men above their neighbours, and causes them to triumph over their enemies: he communicates every temporal good, and accompanies them with the ordinances of his house and the graces of his Spirit. He can even connect great honour with deep humility; and give success in every undertaking, comfort in every connection, and abundance of all things, along with a thankful, liberal, and spiritual mind: yea all this is very little, compared with that future, everlasting, and most complete felicity, in the contemplation of which our thoughts, and our language are absolutely swallowed up.—But if he purpose to inflict vengeance, what miseries can his curse bring upon mankind even in this present world! an assemblage of dire diseases, racking pains, pinching poverty, dreary famine, and armies of victorious enemies, exercising every cruelty, connected with galling insult and contempt, are all ready to obey his mandate. With these dreadful calamities, at his word, remorse shall seize the conscience, and anguish, dismay, and despair possess the heart; yea maddening rage, envy, and impotent revenge shall join with disappointed ambition, avarice, and lust, to rend the whole soul one wild tumult of conflicting passions, to obliterate every tender feeling, and to infatuate the devoted wretch, by depriving him of all power to extricate himself, and plunging him still deeper into utter ruin. His own personal misery shall be also augmented by witnessing the anguish and distress of friends, relatives, and children rendered miserable through his crimes: and all this, and much more, may with incumbent and accumulating weight press upon him, for wearisome weeks, and months, and years, without prospect of relief, but from death, the thought of which appals the soul with still deeper horrors. Yet this is but the beginning of sorrows to those who are under the curse of God: what will then be the unabating and everlasting misery of that world, where "their worm never dieth, "and the fire is not quenched!" To all this wretchedness is every one exposed, who lives in disobedience to God's commandments: and all this wrath of God is revealed from heaven for our warning, "that we may fear "this glorious and fearful name, THE LORD OUR "GOD."—None shall ever suffer any misery, who hath not deserved it: see any abuse his desserts: but indeed we are all exposed to this awful curse for breaking the law of God. Yet, blessed be his name, we are also by gracious and glorious [illegible] that nothing but obstinate impenitency and unbelief, exposes us to the more intolerable wrath of this misery. "Christ hath redeemed us from the curse of the "law, being made a curse for us:" and having [illegible] which

THESE are the words of the covenant which the LORD commanded Moses to make with the children of Israel in the land of Moab, beside the covenant which he made with them in Horeb.

2 And Moses called unto all Israel, and said unto them, Ye have seen all that the LORD did before your eyes in the land of Egypt, unto Pharaoh, and unto all his servants, and unto all his land;

3 The great temptations which thine eyes have seen, the signs, and those great miracles:

which our sins had merited, and which we must otherwise have endured for ever. To them, who believe in him, there is no condemnation; every temporal calamity is converted into a salutary chastisement; and whatever be their proportion of temporal blessings, every thing is given or withheld, as is most conducive to their final and eternal felicity; and even in this present world their comfort and happiness are superior to those of the most prosperous sinner. To this refuge and salvation let sinners flee: in these privileges let believers rejoice, and serve their reconciled God with gladness of heart, for the abundance of all spiritual blessings, with which he hath blessed them: whilst gratitude to the Saviour, meditation on his sufferings, and a consciousness of their own deserts, should reconcile them to every cross and self-denial. But let none call these blessings theirs, who do not endeavour to observe, and do all the commandments of God with uprightness of heart: for even the true believer can enjoy the present comfort of them no further, than he "exercises himself to keep a "conscience void of offence towards God and man." — As all things work together for good, to them who love God; so all things concur in ruining his enemies; and in enslaving those to the vilest of masters, that refuse to obey him, whose service is perfect freedom. Even their prosperity increases their pride and insolence, their table becomes their snare, or the curse of God embitters their blessings; and it will pursue, until it overtake them, and sink them into final destruction.—These wonderful predictions concerning the Israelites, compared with their accomplishment, do irrefragably demonstrate the divine inspiration of the Scriptures: how then should their example warn all that see and hear these things, not to provoke the Lord to anger by disobeying his commands, and defiling his gospel! the weight and tediousness of temporal sufferings, should remind every one to seek deliverance from eternal misery without delay! and should teach the redeemed of the Lord to value their Saviour, and to recommend him to all around them!—Let all, who love the truth and word of God, remember to pity, and pray for the conversion of the unbelieving Jews: and to beseech the Lord, in behalf of our highly favoured misled offending land, that reformation, and the revival of true religion may preserve us from being bereaved of our abused mercies, and from seeing more miseries, from which we have hitherto been graciously exempted.

NOTES.

CHAP. XXIX.] Ver. 1. Beside, &c.] The covenant ratified with this new generation, (like the law which was given them,) was substantially the same with that before ratified with their fathers at mount Sinai. In this chapter the covenant is proposed, and the consequences of violating it are declared; but the more explicit ratification of it was afterwards made from mount Gerizzim and mount Ebal. (Notes, &c. xxvii. Joshua iii. 30—35.)

Ver. 4. Yet the Lord, &c.] Sinful man never makes a proper use of his senses and faculties, or of the opportunities of instruction given him, without the special grace of God. This utter destitution of a disposition to that which is spiritually good, and its concomitant propensity to evil, the effects of our fall in Adam, are the sources of all actual wickedness, and render us the objects of God's holy abhorrence and righteous displeasure. The almighty power of God could overcome this indisposition to his service in every man, if he pleased: but his power is under the direction of infinite wisdom, and regulated as most conducive to his glory. This powerful energy of divine grace never can become due in justice to any man; nay, every man might righteously have been left under the dominion of his sinful propensities, which are never allowed to be pleaded as an excuse for sinful actions. And so far from meriting such a gracious communication from their offended Creator, men in general perceive no occasion for it, have no desire after it, and will use no means to obtain it. But though men can do nothing, either meritoriously or efficaciously, towards participating such a blessing, their voluntary and daring wickedness, by which they do violence even to their natural conscience and the common sense of mankind, may, and frequently does, provoke God judicially to withhold this gift, (Notes, &c. Isaiah vi. 9, 10. Matt. xiii. 13—15. John xii. 38—40. xv. 22. Acts xiii. 40, 41. 45, 46.) On the other hand, he hath appointed ministers to use certain means, by which men are from time to time made sensible that such a change is needful, and they then begin to desire it and enquire after it. He hath also appointed means in which such as feel their need of this blessing, and desire it, are commanded and encouraged to seek it. By this appointment the duty of both ministers and people becomes plain: they who attend to these things will receive this blessing from the upon you, and thy shoe is not waxen old upon thy foot.

6 Ye have not eaten bread, neither have ye drunk wine or strong drink: that ye might know that I am the LORD your God.

7 And when ye came unto this place, Sihon the king of Heshbon, and Og the king of Bashan, came out against us unto battle, and we smote them.

8 And we took their land, and gave it for an inheritance unto the Reubenites, and to the Gadites, and to the half-tribe of Manasseh.

9 Keep therefore the words of this covenant, and do them, that ye may prosper in all that ye do.

10 Ye stand this day all of you before the LORD your God; your captains of your tribes, your elders, and your officers, with all the men of Israel,

11 Your little ones, your wives, and thy stranger that is in thy camp, from the hewer of thy wood unto the drawer of thy water:

God of salvation: and others must be left to the righteous judgment of God; who claims the honour of every good and perfect gift, but will at last convince all his enemies that they alone were to blame for their sins. The minister must seek from God the blessing upon his labours; and must be thankful to him when any receive "eyes to see, and hearts to perceive:" but whilst so many remain blinded to their true state, interest, and duty, the zealous servant of God will wait with earnest expectation for a more extensive blessing, and will seem to think nothing done as so much remains undone. This appears to have been the feeling of Moses at this time: though there were doubtless many exceptions, yet the bulk of the people still remained insensible, or not duly sensible, of the import and tendency of all that the Lord had spoken to them, or done for them; and multitudes had provoked him to give them up to their own hearts' lusts. On this account he grieved, (Note, Rom. ix. 1—3,) and spake this language both by way of reproach of their hardness of heart, and inattention to the means of grace afforded them; and in order to warn and quicken them, and direct them to expect and seek that blessing, which they had not sought for, and God had not given. For if God had not given them it, the inference was undeniable, that they had wilfully hardened their hearts, and stupified their consciences against every thing that they had seen and heard.

V. 5, 6.] (Note viii. 4.) By the especial blessing of God upon the manna, which the Israelites despised as light bread, that vast multitude had been preserved as healthy and as fit for their various exercises, as any other people upon the productions of the corn-field and vineyard.

V. 11. Your little ones, &c.] The national covenant, made with Israel, not only typified the covenant of grace made with true believers; but also represented the outward dispensation of the gospel. The covenant is made with true Christians "for the good of them and of their children "after them," (Jer. xxxii. 39. Acts, ii. 39.) In their families, and in collective bodies composed of them, the outward dispensation of the gospel is especially continued, unless those families cast off their profession, or evince a total disregard to it: in this case it is frequently removed from them and given to others, and thus it passes from nation to nation, and descends from generation to generation. The infant-offspring therefore, of those persons who are favoured with and value this outward dispensation of the gospel, are greatly interested in such transactions, though not conscious of it; even as these little ones of the Israelites were in their covenant: and they who value the blessings of the new covenant as their own portion, and desire them as the portion of their beloved children, and intend to bring them up as the children of the covenant, seem equally authorized and required to act in their behalf, and to bring them under the external obligations, and to seek the external pledges of it for them, as these Israelitish parents were: for we argue very inconclusively, if we infer, that because means do not uniformly communicate grace, they are therefore of no use. This transaction might many ways, at the time, and afterwards, benefit both the parents and their offspring, though we can scarcely suppose, that it was a converting ordinance to these infants: but it might stir up the parents to pray for them, and to instruct them as they grew up; and when they came to years of understanding, and were reminded how solemnly they, as well as their parents, had entered into covenant with God, it might operate as a restraint upon their lusts, a check upon their consciences, and an incentive to them personally to seek the blessings thus covenanted to them, and which could only be forfeited by their own wilful sin. The same may be pleaded by those, who deem infant-baptism a divine ordinance, as one reason of their practice: whilst those conscientious persons, who judge otherwise, have a right to be treated with the utmost candour; and reciprocal moderation upon a subject, respecting which so many sensible, pious, and learned men, entertain contrary sentiments, and practise accordingly, can never be unseasonably inculcated.

V. 13. As he hath sworn, &c.] The oath which the Lord sware unto Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob, is here adduced as the security of the covenant made with the nation of Israel; and Paul quotes it as a security to all who "flee for refuge to lay hold on the hope "set before them" in the gospel, (Heb. vi. 13. 18;) for by it both temporal blessings, and the means of grace, were secured to the posterity of the patriarchs according to unto thee a God, as he hath said unto thee, and as he hath sworn unto thy fathers, to Abraham, to Isaac, and to Jacob.

14 Neither with you only do I make this covenant and this oath;

15 But with him that standeth here with us this day before the LORD our God, and also with him that is not here with us this day:

16 (For ye know how we have dwelt in the land of Egypt, and how we came through the nations which ye passed by;

17 And ye have seen their abominations, and their idols, wood and stone, silver and gold, which were among them:)

18 Lest there should be among you man, or woman, or family, or tribe, whose heart turneth away this day from the LORD our God, to go and serve the gods of these nations; lest there should be among you a root that beareth gall and wormwood;

19 And it come to pass, when he heareth the words of this curse, that he blesses himself in his heart, saying, I shall have peace, though I walk in the imagination of mine heart to add drunkenness to thirst.

20 The LORD will not spare him, but then the anger of the LORD and his jealousy shall smoke against that man, and all the curses that are written in this book shall lie upon him, and the LORD shall blot out his name from under heaven.

21 And the LORD shall separate him unto evil out of all the tribes of Israel, according to all the curses of the covenant that are written in this book of the law:

22 So that the generation to come of your children, that shall rise up after you, and the stranger that shall come from a far land, shall say, when they see the plagues of that land, and the sicknesses, which the LORD hath laid upon it;

23 And that the whole land thereof is brimstone, and salt, and burning, that it is not sown, nor beareth, nor any grass groweth therein, like the overthrow of Sodom and Gomorrah, Admah, and Zeboim, which the LORD overthrew in his anger, and in his wrath:

24 Even all nations shall say, Wherefore hath the LORD done thus unto this land? what meaneth the heat of this great anger?

25 Then men shall say, Because they have forsaken the covenant of the LORD God of their

to the flesh; and the especial blessings, which Abraham personally was interested in by the righteousness of faith, to all his spiritual seed of true believers, who are sealed with the true circumcision of the heart. (Notes, Gen. xvii.) The strangers and slaves (11,) were also allowed to enter into this covenant, and were not excluded except they excluded themselves. Those who were absent, and their children yet unborn to the latest posterity, were in some sense included: as nothing but apostacy, idolatry, or rejection of their promised Saviour, could cut off the entail of these national blessings; and nothing but personal unbelief and disobedience could prevent their personally sharing in the special blessings, which were bestowed on their believing progenitors.

V. 18. Lest, &c.] This and the following verses looked back to the curses of the foregoing chapter, and taught the people to dread the infliction of them upon individuals, as well as upon the nation at large, if they infringed the covenant now proposed to them: for as that covenant engaged to them blessings above other nations, if they availed themselves of their advantages; so would their guilt be more aggravated, and their distress more accumulated, than those of other nations, if they were rebellious. Idolatry, in an Israelite, must be preceded by willful apostacy and contempt of the covenant of God: it was in explicit renunciation of the covenant of grace, and of the God of Israel. The same things hold true in the case of those who have been baptized and brought up under the dispensation of the gospel; they more explicitly renounce God, and refuse the blessings of his covenant, if they turn aside to wickedness, than any other person can do.

A root that beareth, &c.] The word translated gall, may mean hemlock, or some other poisonous plant. The enmity of man's heart against God is that root which bears poisonous and bitter fruit, such as apostacy, idolatry, infidelity, profaneness, hypocrisy, and wickedness. Every such person in a religious society is also a root, which produces more and more of such pestiferous plants, by his persuasions, influence, and example, (Notes, &c. Heb. xii. 15, 16.)

V. 19, He blesses, &c.] Unbelief produces presumptuous expectations of impunity in sin, in direct contempt of God's word; and this is frequently the effect of a false and unscriptural religion, by which a vain confidence is generated, and the sinner's heart is the more emboldened in wickedness. (Jer. vii. 3—11. xliv. 15—27.)

To add drunkenness, &c.] This is a metaphorical expression, denoting the eager gratification of depraved inclinations. While sinners walk in the imagination of their own hearts, they greedily drink down iniquity, as the drunkard doth his liquor, without regard to consequences. It may also refer to the sensual excesses, which were employed as incentives to the worship of idols, and which tended greatly to promote idolatry. More terrible words can scarcely be conceived, than those which follow: and as they respected the people of Israel, their accomplish-their fathers, which he made with them when he brought them forth out of the land of Egypt.

26 For they went and served other gods, and worshipped them, gods whom they knew not, and whom he had not given unto them:

27 And the anger of the LORD was kindled against this land, to bring upon it all the curses that are written in this book:

28 And the LORD rooted them out of their land in anger, and in wrath, and in great indignation, and cast them into another land, as it is this day.

29 The secret things belong unto the LORD

ment hath been as remarkable. (Note, Jer. xxviii.) But they concern sinners of every nation, especially those who are favoured with the light of the gospel: they however require the reader's attentive consideration, and application to himself, as matter of serious enquiry, whether he be exposed to, or delivered from the danger of sinking under such aweful denunciations; rather than the commentator's skill or labour to expound them.

V. 26. Whom, &c.] The Lord gave no command nor sanction to Israel's worship of idols; but did every thing proper, in the most decided manner to set them against such a degrading abomination. The very heathen are here represented, both as noting the surprising miseries of the Jewish nation, and discerning the true cause of them. Doubtless this hath been verified in thousands of instances. (Jer. xl. 2, 3.)

V. 29. The, &c.] It is here intimated, that many things in the divine counsels and conduct would appear very dark and difficult to the Israelites. They would be ready to start enquiries about those future events, which were hinted to them in so general a manner; and to raise objections concerning the dispensations of God towards them. The aweful curses might appear to some of them needlessly severe, and they would want to know the reasons of them farther than it pleased God to reveal them. Of this disposition satan would avail himself, and pour in his temptations to unbelief; to hard thoughts of God, of his law and service; to exculpate themselves by throwing the blame elsewhere; or to amuse themselves with barren speculations, instead of attending to their duty. This is here obviated by a rule of easy and universal application. That which God hath not revealed, man should not enquire about; for who can penetrate into the secrets of his wisdom? his decrees and counsels, and the reasons of his conduct, and the mysteries of his nature, we cannot discover, except as he informs us of them; and it is the height of insolence and presumption to attempt it. (Rom. xi. 33—36.) Such enquiries were therefore prohibited; secret things belong to God. But he hath revealed every thing that can be truly beneficial; to his revealed truth and will man's enquiries in divine things should be confined; they should reach to the whole, and terminate with them. These belong to us; not to increase our stock of barren notions, but to direct, encourage, and regulate our obedience, "that we may do all the words of this law." They belong also to our children, and to them we should communicate the instruction which God hath afforded us.—Almost all the heresies and controversies, which have corrupted the purity, or disturbed the peace, of the church in every age; which have taken Christians off from their duty, and exposed them to the triumphant scorn of their enemies for their animosities and absurdities, have originated from disregard to the distinction established in this verse; from vain attempts, by human reasonings and authority, to fill up some supposed chasms in revelation, and to make it more apparently consistent and systematical, than it hath pleased God to make it; and deducing disputable consequences from revelation, or tracing back it's sacred mysteries to some unrevealed antecedent causes. But the silence is as instructive as the language of Scripture: it's truths must be apprehended by humble faith; and they disdain to be comprehended or modelled by our pround reason. They are intended to subserve practice; not to gratify curiosity, furnish materials of speculation, or foment angry controversies. These are satan's comments on them, which God abhors as much as avowed infidelity. To know the perfections of God, and our obligations to love and serve him; to know our relations to him, and to the eternal world; to know our state and character as sinners, and our duty as under a dispensation of mercy; to know the way of acceptance, and the source of grace and comfort in Jesus Christ; to know our duty as redeemed sinners, with respect to our several stations, endowments, and relations in life, with the motives, encouragements, and assistances to perform it, which revelation proposes; together with the enemies and dangers to which we are exposed, and the means of escape, and the consequences of our conduct: this forms the substance of divine knowledge, and when reduced to practice it constitutes heavenly wisdom. This the Bible plainly reveals, further than this man cannot profitably go: by this light he may live and die comfortable, and be happy eternally; after having on earth glorified God, served his generation, and left his dying exhortations and blessings as a bequest to his posterity: all else is but an ignis fatuus, which bewilders the benighted traveller; and whilst it amuses him with it's glimmering, misleads him into, and leaves him to sink in, the pit of destruction.

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.

They, who have been enabled to consent to the Lord's new covenant of mercy and grace in Jesus Christ, and to give up themselves to be his people, should embrace every opportunity of making and renewing their open profession of these their relations and obligations to the God of salvation, and of giving bond, as it were, to the world, to the church, and to their own consciences, for walking consistently. And it is pleasant to behold numbers of the rising generation, stepping forward to consent to the same covenant, to seek the same blessings, and acknowledge the same obligations, and purpose by divine grace, of walking by the same rule, and minding the same things. In order to this desirable effect being produced, the nature, security, and blessings of the covenant ought to be laid before and proposed to the people at large: they should be exhorted, and invited with all earnestness to accede to them: the encouragements of the word of God should be pointed out; and the aweful consequences of neglecting so great salvation declared

Lord our God, but those things which are revealed belong unto us, and to our children clared to them, with the greatest solemnity, the most pressing expostulations, and the most affectionate warnings. In these things all persons are alike concerned, kings and princes, captains and senators, rich and poor, even down to the meanest slave; nay, blessed be God, not only we strangers of the Gentiles, but the most abandoned sinners are invited, and should be even compelled to come in, and to participate the gospel feast, as far as energetic arguments and earnest persuasions can compel them. And even infants, though yet unconscious both of their wants, duties, and privileges, are concerned in these matters as much as others, and ought to be brought to, and brought up for, the Lord, as the children of the covenant, and the seed of the church. But though we are all under the outward dispensation, and means are to be used by every man with his neighbour, (Micah, iv. 2. Zech. viii. 20;) yet God alone can give men an heart to perceive, eyes to see, and ears to hear, for good and saving purposes. From him therefore must we seek the blessing, and to him give the praise when this desirable effect is produced: and when men become sensible of their state, danger, and wants, these intimations inform them whither to go for relief, and to whom they are to make application.—Whilst the true Christian, or the zealous minister, mourns that so few have received these blessings, in comparison of the multitudes who are blinded by the god of this world; the consideration should add fervency to his prayers for others, and to his grateful praises on his own account.—Every mercy which we receive should bind us more strictly to cheerful obedience; and every truth of God's word, if properly received, will have a practical effect upon us: nor can we expect to prosper, in the best sense, "unless we keep and "do the words of God's covenant." But the covenant made with Christians is established upon better promises than that with the nation of Israel; and not only confirms it's blessings conditionally to the obedient, with the interposition of the oath as well as promise of God; but also assures the true believer of that communication of grace, which shall infallibly preserve him from finally forfeiting it's blessings by apostacy or unrepented sin. (Jer. xxxi. 31—34, xxxii. 38—41;) yet many suppose, that they are interested in the blessings and security of this covenant, in whose hearts the law of God hath not been written, and to whom it proves an encouragement to sin. These are they, who draw back unto perdition; and their apostacy, or shameful wickedness, brings disgrace upon the gospel, and ruin upon themselves. The lusts of their hearts were never mortified by the power of converting grace, and therefore when occasion offers, they spring up into practices, as poisonous and as bitter, as the hemlock and the wormwood; and by them many are defiled, or hardened in prejudice, unbelief, and ungodliness; or bolstered up in vain confidence and presumption: and thus the direful evil eats as doth a canker, pervades great multitudes, and corrodes whole churches. Therefore the minister and Christian should watch against, and crush it's first feeble beginnings.—But however the curse of God may be disbelieved and despised, its accumulated effects will fearfully convince the most daring, of their folly and madness, without distinction of rank or sex, and without regard to multitudes, that "it is a for ever, that we may do all the words of this law.

"fearful thing to fall into the hands of the living God." And though the heart of man will at present rise in rage and enmity against the terrible threatenings of God's word; the period is approaching, when not only spectators, but the criminals themselves, whilst enduring their direful accomplishment, shall be constrained to admit the justice of the sentence of their condemnation.—But satan especially endeavours to persuade men to expect impunity in sin; and they are prone to flatter themselves, they love to be flattered by others, and find enough to flatter them, that they shall have peace, though they walk after the imagination of their hearts, and gratify their favourite lusts. They will persuade themselves, and find others concur with them in determining, that they need not be so strict, and that God will not be so severe as vulgar readers of the Bible may imagine: and so, by some ingenious sophistication, they evaporate the force of the scriptural declarations, till they fall fast asleep in the jaws of destruction. And should some faithful minister, out of love to their souls, address them in scriptural language, concerning the curse of God, and the wrath to come; he would be repaid with liberal reproaches, and branded as a bigot, an uncharitable wretch, a man of vulgar and narrow mind, if not as an enthusiast and a madman! The Lord will not spare such presumers, who treat his truth as a lie, blaspheme his justice as if it were cruelty, and set his awful vengeance at defiance: against such persons his anger and jealousy will smoke, and all the curses that are written in this book will rest upon them, their names shall be blotted out from under heaven, and they shall be separated unto evil far off from the tribes of the redeemed; where too late conviction shall be accompanied with weeping, wailing, and gnashing of teeth, in anguish and despair. But these things are not written in the book of God; nor are these observations made upon them, God is witness, in order that this misery should be endured by those who are thus addressed; but that all, who hear and read, may take warning and flee from the wrath to come; that they may profit by the judgments of God upon others; that they may flee for refuge to the hope of the gospel; that they may fear coming short of the grace of God; that they may refuse their sinful inclinations every indulgence, and watch against the beginnings of evil, and the inroads of negligence; and above all that they may shudder at the thought of venturing upon sin by any abuse of the grace of the gospel.—Many, who themselves are ungodly, can readily enough perceive the steps by which others descend to destruction, and will acknowledge the justice of their punishment, though they are blind to, or cavil at, the sentence of condemnation which hangs over themselves! But let every one of us look to our own case: let us avoid sloth, and dissipation; let us not shun reflection, or stifle convictions; but let us not amuse ourselves with empty speculations, or encourage ourselves by bold conjectures, or imagine objections to the truths and ways of God; let us not cautiously pry into unrevealed things; but thankfully use revelations, as the lantern of our paths, by which to [illegible] happy road through this dark and dangerous [illegible] we may walk in it ourselves, and point it out to our children also.—In that world above, whither

NOTES.

CHAP. XXX.] V. 1—10.] This passage evidently refers to the prophetical denunciations of the two preceding chapters, which have had their main accomplishment in the destruction of Jerusalem by the Romans, and in the consequent dispersion of the Jews to the present day: no doubt can therefore remain, but the prophetical promises contained in these verses are yet unaccomplished. The reliques of the Jewish nation shall, in some future and not very distant period, be converted to the faith of Christ; and probably be gathered from their present dispersed state, and reinstated in the land of Canaan. The language of these promises is in great measure absolute; not containing a mere conditional encouragement, but predicting an event which would assuredly take place; for the Lord himself engaged "to circumcise the hearts" of the people; and when regenerating grace hath removed the obstacles of corrupt nature, and divine love hath supplanted the love of sin, they certainly will be fixed, and repent, and return to God, and obey him: and he will rejoice over them to do them good. Yet the successive steps are described in which the prophecy will be accomplished, that at the appointed season they may be directed in what method to seek for the promised blessings; and that sinners of all ages and nations might thence receive instruction concerning the nature of true repentance and of real religion. (Notes, Jer. xxxi. 31—34. xxxii. 39—41. Ezek. xxxvi. 25—27.)

V. 11—14.] In these verses Moses spake concerning the commandment, and Paul long after applied his words to the method of a sinner's justification by faith in Jesus Christ, (Note, &c. Rom x. 6—9.) This has occasioned some perplexity to expositors; but there doth not appear to be much cause for it. The covenant, proposed to Israel in the form of commandments, did not consist of the moral law alone, obedience to which especially constitutes the righteousness of works; but of the ceremonial law also, in which Christ was signified, "as the end of "the law unto righteousness to every one that believ-"eth:" and though a vast proportion of the Israelites mistook the nature of these institutions, (as multitudes of professed Christians utterly misunderstand the sacraments of the New Testament;) yet in the legal ordinances was mainly contained their dispensation of the gospel. All that covenant was ratified with the nation of Israel: it was a type of the covenant of grace made with believers:

mand thee this day, it is not hidden from thee, neither is it far off.

12 It is not in heaven, that thou shouldest say, Who shall go up for us to heaven and bring it unto us, that we may hear it, and do it?

13 Neither is it beyond the sea, that thou shouldest say, Who shall go over the sea for us, and bring it unto us, that we may hear it, and do it?

14 But the word is very nigh unto thee, in thy mouth, and in thy heart, that thou mayest do it.

15 See, I have set before thee this day life and good, and death and evil;

16 In that I command thee this day to love the LORD thy God, to walk in his ways, and to keep his commandments, and his statutes, and his judgments, that thou mayest live and multiply: and the LORD thy God shall bless thee in the land whither thou goest to possess it.

17 But if thine heart turn away, so that thou wilt not hear, but shalt be drawn away, and worship other gods, and serve them;

18 I denounce unto you this day, that ye shall surely perish, and that ye shall not prolong your days upon the land whither thou passest over Jordan, to go to possess it.

19 I call heaven and earth to record this day against you, that I have set before you life and death, blessing and cursing: therefore choose life, that both thou and thy seed may live;

20 That thou mayest love the LORD thy God, and that thou mayest obey his voice, and that thou mayest cleave unto him; (for he is thy life, and the length of thy days:) that thou mayest dwell in the land which the LORD sware unto thy fathers, to Abraham, to Isaac, and to Jacob, to give them.

CHAP.

believers: the individuals among them, who were truly religious, were justified by the same righteousness, and in the same way, that true Christians are; and justifying faith, working by love, invariably produces obedience to the commandments of God under every dispensation. There never was, since the fall of man, more than one way to heaven; and this is marked out in both Testaments, though not with equal clearness and precision. When God circumcises the heart, repentance of sin, faith, and dependence on the appointed Saviour, with love and obedience, are produced. The sinner passes from death to life, receives forgiveness and the gift of righteousness by faith, becomes a new creature, and, by the grace of God, walks through this world to glory in the highway of holiness. The words of Moses assuredly had some respect to that same way of acceptance which Paul more explicitly described; and Paul's words implied the same conscientious obedience of which Moses more fully treated. And they both mean, that the word of God brings near unto us, and plainly reveals, the good and right way; that we need not travel for instruction, as ancient philosophers did, nor seek information from men at immense labour and expence: nor need we anxiously or curiously desire to be wise above what is written. For the word of God, and the preached gospel, will suffice for every useful purpose, if we make ourselves acquainted with them, if we believe, profess, and love them, and if we treasure them up in our hearts in order to reduce them to practice.

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.

In the word of God all things belonging to our eternal peace are brought nigh unto us; and the information there contained forces itself upon our attention, our judgment, our consciences, and our affections, by every endearing motive, warning, encouragement, or consideration which can conduce to [illegible] in vain doth a kind Providence vouchsafe us this invaluable light; in vain do ministers endeavour to convey the instructions of heavenly wisdom home to the heart and conscience, in the most convincing and efficacious manner; if men will thrust them away from themselves through unbelief and the love of sin: nor will hearing, remembering, understanding, professing, or disputing about, the truths and precepts of God's word avail us, if they do not sink into our hearts, and influence our conduct. But when the blessings of eternal salvation are thus fully proposed unto us, and the acceptance or refusal of them are so fairly referred to our choice, nothing can prevent our felicity, but the wickedness of our own proud and carnal hearts. And they who refuse the freely offered grace, eventually choose and love death and perdition, being cruel to their own souls, (Prov. viii. 36.)—The ministers of Christ ought plainly to declare to sinners of every description, that, except they repent, they will surely perish; as well as to set before them, in the most solemn and affecting manner, "life and death, the blessing and the curse;" that if they cannot prevent their destruction, they may deliver their own souls, (Notes, &c. Ezek. xxxiii. 7—9.) And in this case, not only will the faithful minister at last become a witness against them, but heaven and earth will bear record, that they deserve their doom, and have none to blame but themselves. But are we sensible of the reality and importance of the things thus proposed unto us? Would we "choose that good part which shall never be "taken from us?" Let us beg of God to circumcise our hearts, to subdue our lusts, and to implant his love: then shall we be prepared for serious reflection, for godly sorrow, and true repentance; then shall we value his before neglected salvation, and hoping in his mercy, shall return unto him, as our Portion and Felicity, shall worship and obey him as the Lord our God, and cleave unto him as our Leader and our Lawgiver. Then will every ordinance and and every act of obedience be pleasant; love and gratitude will enlarge our hearts; and justice, temperance, truth, and kindness will mark our paths; every good gift will be communicated from a reconciled God; every enemy will by degrees be brought under, and at length destroyed; and a blessing will be reserved for our posterity when we are gone to glory. And should the only wise God see good to withhold temporal benefits, and command affliction as our lot, he will support and comfort us, and the whole will have a salutary and happy event. In the mean time, tender compassion and expanded benevolence will dictate fervent prayers for our fellow sinners on every side, and excite assiduous endeavours to communicate the same blessings to them likewise: while the twofold hope of the triumphs of true religion upon earth over all opposition; and of the complete and speedy deliverance of our own souls from sin and all its consequences, will gild our most gloomy prospects and chear our darkest hours.

NOTES.

CHAP. XXXI.] V. 2. I can no more, &c.] The age to which Moses had arrived, as well as the declaration of the Lord, reminded him of his approaching death; though he had not experienced any decay of nature; (xxxiv. 7;)—In the former chapters he seems to have preached his concluding discourse to the people: but he had a variety of other methods to use, to impress their minds more forcibly and durably.

V. 9. Wrote this law, &c.] Some understand this expression of the book of Deuteronomy alone: but it seems more reasonable to suppose that the whole law was thus delivered unto the priests and elders; a copy perhaps to each of them, besides one to be deposited by the ark in the holy of holies; (26.) Doubtless there were several other copies of the books of Moses; but in that infancy both of writing and reading, it cannot be supposed that they were very much multiplied.

V. 10—13.] The duty of individuals, and that of the heads of families had before been specified; as they were all commanded by every means in their power to become acquainted themselves, and to make their children acquainted, with the truths and precepts which had been delivered to them; (Notes, &c. vi. 7—9. xi. 18—20.)—Whoever has read, in the history of the reformation in England, an account of the pains and devices employed by many persons to get scraps of the English translations of the Scriptures, when a whole copy could neither be obtained nor safely possessed, will see the cause which we have to be thankful for the multitudes of copies of the Bible, that are among us; and will understand the very different situation in which the Israelites were placed for many ages, and in some degree even to the coming of Christ. Nor were copies of the Bible ever so common and 14 And the Lord said unto Moses, Behold, thy days approach that thou must die: call Joshua, and present yourselves in the tabernacle of the congregation, that I may give him a charge. And Moses and Joshua went, and presented themselves in the tabernacle of the congregation.

15 And the LORD appeared in the tabernacle in a pillar of a cloud: and the pillar of the cloud stood over the door of the tabernacle.

16 And the LORD said unto Moses, Behold thou shalt sleep with thy fathers; and this people will rise up, and go a whoring after the gods of the strangers of the land whither they go to be amongst them, and will forsake me, and break my covenant which I have made with them.

17 Then my anger shall be kindled against them in that day, and I will forsake them, and I will hide my face from them, and they shall be devoured, and many evils and troubles shall befal them; so that they will say in that day, Are not these evils come upon us, because our God is not amongst us?

18 And I will surely hide my face in that day, for all the evils which they shall have wrought, in that they are turned unto other gods.

and cheap, before the art of printing was brought to some degree of perfection, as to enable poor people in general to possess them; which is an invaluable advantage towards the propagation of religious knowledge, though not being properly improved, it is far from having produced proportionably good effects.—To supply this deficiency, the means, prescribed in the texts above referred to, would be very useful. But in large bodies of people, the majority have always hitherto neglected even those means which they had in their power; and the appointment mentioned in these verses would, when observed, greatly tend to preserve in the minds of the people at large some general knowledge of the law, and to excite them to the study of it; and especially to bring the successive generations acquainted with it: and as God is not limited, but can bless feeble means to great usefulness, when they are of his own appointment and further advantages are not attainable; it is probable, that many were brought to fear the Lord and serve him by this ordinance.—At the period before alluded to, as soon as a copy of the English Bible was placed in every church, the avidity with which the people flocked to read the Scriptures, or hear them read, and the extensive usefulness of this measure, can hardly be conceived in these days of apathy and negligence. But the word of God was then precious, because scarce; (1 Sam. iii. 1;) It is grievous, that the plenty, with which we are favoured, should create indifference!—Every sabbatical year at the feast of tabernacles this public reading of the Scriptures was appointed, and all persons were required to attend. Doubtless it was not merely confined to one person, or place; but numbers were engaged in different situations, so that every one might have an opportunity of hearing, who was disposed so to do: and the Jewish tradition is, that the king, judge, or high priest was the chief reader, in the court of the tabernacle or temple. In later ages the Scriptures were read every sabbath-day at least in the synagogues all over the land; which had a vast effect in preventing idolatry after the Babylonish captivity.—The public reading of the Scriptures in worshipping assemblies is an honour, which should in all places be shewn them: it is likewise equivalent to the minister's producing his commission and instructions; it is the touchstone and warrant of his doctrine; and an important means of bringing the generality of the people acquainted with other parts of the word of God, besides those short texts or mottos which it is become customary to select as the subject of our public discourses: and there is every reason to believe, that the reading of the Scriptures, in all the parish churches in this kingdom, proves the means of salvation to many souls, who are left miserably destitute of other instruction. It were however to be wished, that the several clergymen employed in this service were more mindful to read the appointed portions of God's word, audibly, distinctly, and deliberately: this would give probable ground to expect much more extensively beneficial effects to result from this laudable institution.

V. 18. I will &c.] When God withholds his gracious influences, man's evil inclinations naturally lead him into sin; and when he withholds his providential protection and blessing, (which is implied by the figurative expression of hiding his face,) man necessarily sinks into misery. Our dependence on him is in every respect absolute; and it is proper we should know it, that we may fear to provoke him and seek to please him, that we may put our trust in him and give all the praise to him. From him we must expect preservation from sin, and exemption from misery, with the communication of knowledge, purity, and felicity: but we should shudder at the blasphemy of of charging our evil to his account, from whoſe unchangeable perfection good, and only good, can flow.

V. 19. Write ye &c.] There is ſomewhat in poetry, when well compoſed, and upon an intereſting ſubject, that is exceedingly attractive to the mind, as well as eaſily fixed and retained in the memory: and it is noted of almoſt every nation in the earlier ſtages of civilization or literature, that hardly any compoſitions attract general notice except ſuch as are poetical; but that theſe are ſought after, learned, recited, or ſung, with a ſort of enthuſiaſtic eagerneſs and ecſtacy.—To this propenſity of the human mind the Lord was pleaſed to adapt his inſtructions: a ſacred ſong, fraught with hiſtory, prophecy, promiſe, and warning, and containing the ſubſtance of the preceding addreſſes, was compoſed by Moſes, doubtleſs by divine inſpiration; (with whom it ſeems Joſhua, as his co-adjutor and ſucceſſor, was conjoined;) which the people would learn themſelves, and teach their children, from generation to generation; and would have frequently in their memories and mouths, when the other parts of the law were generally neglected: and indeed God himſelf engaged that it ſhould not be forgotten, which hath already been wonderfully verified during more than 3000 years.—This ſong in after ages, when the predictions contained in it had received their accompliſhment, would vouch the divine inſpiration of it's penman; would ſhew the Iſraelites the author, and the cauſe of their miſeries, and teſtify for the juſtice of God, and againſt their wickedneſs; and form a powerful call to them, to repent and return to God, as the only method in which they could be extricated from their ſufferings.

V. 21. I know, &c.] God knows what is in man, and whither his own inclinations will lead him if left to himſelf: and his reſtraining influences, as well as his ſanctifying grace, are communicated or withheld, according to the unfathomable counſels of his infinite wiſdom; but always conſiſtently with his juſtice, faithfulneſs, and goodneſs, and with the propoſals of them in the goſpel to all who ſeek for them. Nor doth the foreknowledge of God, or thoſe deep decrees which are connected with it, either occaſion, or excuſe, man's wickedneſs; or abate the Lord's anger, or diminiſh the puniſhment which ſinners will juſtly ſuffer.

V. 23 And &c.] (Note, Numb. xxvii. 19.)

V. 26. In the, &c.] This appears to have been a correct and authentic copy of the whole books of Moſes, probably written with his own hand, which would be reſerved, that in caſe of errors, diſputes, or defect of other copies, it might be referred to; and it would be a witneſs againſt the ſins of the people whenever it was found or examined. PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.

It is very profitable for us to conſider how our life paſſes, and how much of our day is ſpent, in proportion to the progreſs which hath been made in the work allotted us: that we may be the more earneſt in making ready for our cloſing ſcene, and our final account, and in rendering our remaining ſervices to the church and to the world. Even when old age is healthy and vigorous, it ſhould be remembered that the limits of human life are fixed, by him who hath denounced the ſentence of death againſt us. Nor need thoſe, who are made partakers of the grace of God, deſire to live in this world; for the longer they continue here, the more miſery they muſt feel, and the more wickedneſs they muſt witneſs, even where the ſight of it gives peculiar pain: and when our weariſome journey is ended, and our glorious victory completed, God will raiſe up other inſtruments, by which to carry on his great deſigns; and will himſelf be the ever-living guardian of thoſe about whom we are moſt affectionately anxious. We have only to do our day's work; and, if able, to be doubly active when the ſhadows of the evening approach; that with all our influence and zeal we may endeavour to make an awakening or encouraging impreſſion upon our ſurvivors, confirming our living proſelytes with our dying teſtimony.—Satan always aims to ſanctify ſtanding ſin, and to ſeparate them from the ſociety of God's people, and to ſhut themſelves and each other to obedience, and awe our minds from wickedneſs;

27 For I know thy rebellion, and thy ſtiff neck: behold, while I am yet alive with you this day ye have been rebellious againſt the LORD; and how much more after my death?

28 Gather unto me all the elders of your tribes, and your officers, that I may ſpeak theſe words in their ears, and call heaven and earth to record againſt them.

29 For I know that after my death ye will utterly corrupt yourſelves, and turn aſide from the way which I have commanded you: and evil will befall you in the latter days, becauſe ye will do evil in the ſight of the LORD, to provoke him to anger through the work of your hands.

30 And Moſes ſpake in the ears of all the congregation of Iſrael the words of this ſong, until they were ended.

Contains, 1ſt. The aforementioned ſong, contraſting the character of God with that of Iſrael; and his conduct towards them with their's towards him; together with predictions of their future crimes, miſeries, and final deliverance, v. 1—43. 2d. GIVE ear, O ye heavens, and I will ſpeak; and hear, O earth, the words of my mouth.

2 My doctrine ſhall drop as the rain, my neſs, by applying to our hopes and fears, the promiſes, and denunciations of God's word. But the heart of man is ſo careleſs, and inſenſible, that every method ſhould be tried, and all will be found too little, to keep up any proper acquaintance with, or attention to the truths, precepts, and worſhip of God amongſt them: every opportunity muſt be embraced, and every avenue to the heart ſeized, to intrude ſome uſeful conviction, and to ſtir up the remembrance of ſome forgotten doctrine, or neglected duty. Nay the beſt of men need repeated encouragements and charges to engage them ſteadily in the work of God, eſpecially in arduous, and perilous ſervices, in this evil world. But the Lord will never fail, nor forſake ſuch, as truſt in, and are employed by him: they may therefore be ſtrong, and of a good courage, however numerous, malicious, or potent their enemies are; for in ſuch a cauſe, and with ſuch a helper, they ſhall certainly triumph over all oppoſition; until every promiſe in the book of God has had it's accompliſhment unto them: and every former mercy to the church, or to themſelves, warrants the aſſurance of future ſucceſſes, and they are encompaſſed with a cloud of witneſſes, who unitedly teſtify the atchievements of faith. To the prieſts, the Lord's miniſters is the written word of God eſpecially committed, to be by them preſerved, and delivered uncorrupted unto the people; and men, women, children, and ſtrangers are to be diligently inſtructed from it, that they may learn to fear, and ſerve God in the obedience of faith. Every ordinance of God, every copy of the Scriptures, every faithful ſermon, every pious book, every pſalm or hymn, which is printed, read, repeated, or ſung, nay the very words of man's own mouths will riſe up in judgment, and bear witneſs for God againſt ſinners, who notwithſtanding all forſake him, and commit iniquity. To God's holy abhorrence of ſin we muſt aſcribe all the miſeries, which are endured on earth, as well as the torments, which are reſerved for the wicked in hell: and we are in a way to reap benefit from, and obtain deliverance out of our troubles, when we conſider them in this light, and ſubmit to his righteouſneſs therein. Alas, that the liberality of the Lord ſhould occaſion increaſing ungodlineſs amongſt men; and that proſperity ſhould generate ingratitude! hence it becomes neceſſary for the Lord to correct thoſe moſt, whom he loves beſt: and hence we have all need to fear proſperity more than the ſevereſt affliction, and to be doubly watchful, and inſtant in prayer under the ſmiles of Providence. The more accurately, wiſe and holy men have ſtudied, and the longer they have obſerved human nature, comparing ſuch obſervations with the word of God, the more they have perceived and lamented it's proneneſs to rebellion: and when the moſt powerful reſtraints fail to deter men from ſin, with what impetuoſity will they ruſh into it, when they are left to follow their own inclinations! But if we grieve to ſee the preſent prevalence of wickedneſs, and entertain gloomy apprehenſions of yet increaſing ungodlineſs; let us remember that thus it was with Moſes, with the apoſtles, and with moſt of thoſe, who have ſerved God, and their generation: and having uſed our influence, and poured out our prayers to prevent it, as much as we can, let us leave the matter with him, who will maintain his own cauſe, and who is able to keep us from falling, and to preſent us faultleſs before the preſence of his glory with exceeding joy.

NOTES.

CHAP. XXXII.] V. 1. O ye heavens, &c.] The prophet in this abrupt, and highly poetical exordium, addreſſes the heavens and the earth, and demands their attention to his ſublime, and important ſubject. Some ſuppoſe that the heavens are addreſſed as producing by the influences of the ſun and rain, and the revolutions of the ſeaſons, that fertility, which Iſrael would ungratefully abuſe: and the earth as yielding them it's increaſe; and that they are called upon by an animated figure, as if living perſons to bear teſtimony for God, and againſt Iſrael. But perhaps all the inhabitants of heaven and earth are intended, who are called upon to liſten to the Lord's appeal, and to teſtify in after ages, that the rebellions of the Iſraelites were cauſeleſs, and inexcuſable, and their miſeries juſtly merited.

V. 2. As the rain, &c.] As the rain, and the dew, gently diſtilling ſoften the earth, and produce a beautiful verdure, and fertility: ſo the tendency of this ſong, and the aim of it's inſpired penman were to ſoften the Iſraelites into repentſpeech ſhall diſtil as the dew; as the ſmall rain upon the tender herb, and as the ſhowers upon the graſs:

3 Becauſe I will publiſh the name of the LORD; aſcribe ye greatneſs unto our God.

4 He is the Rock, his work is perfect; for all his ways are judgment: a God of truth, and without iniquity, juſt and right is he.

5 They have corrupted themſelves; their ſpot is not the ſpot of his children: they are a perverſe and crooked generation.

6 Do ye thus requite the LORD, O fooliſh

ance, and to render them fruitful in faith and good works, and proſperous in the LORD's favour: ſuch alſo would be the effect, as to numbers of them. But ſome commentators interpret the former clauſe of the judgments of God, which like torrents of impetuous rain, ſweep all down before them: and conſider it as the effect of this ſong, to haſten, and aggravate the miſeries of obſtinate ſinners amongſt them, by rendering their conduct the more inexcuſable.

V. 3—4.] The penman opens this ſacred poem, "by "publiſhing the name of the LORD;" that is by delineating that character, and thoſe perfections, which Jehovah poſſeſſes, (ſee notes, &c. Exod. c. xxxiv. v. 5—7;) in order that all, who read this ſong, may know the glorious excellencies of that God, whom the Iſraelites forſook for their worthleſs idols. "Aſcribe ye greatneſs unto our God," that is, acknowledge his ſelf-exiſtence, eternity, omnipreſence, omniſcience, almighty power, and univerſal abſolute authority. "He is a rock:" this is the firſt time God is called a rock in Scripture: and the expreſſion ſeems to denote, that his unchangeable power, faithfulneſs, and love, (as revealed in Chriſt, and the goſpel) form an immoveable foundation, on which we may build our hopes of felicity; ſeeing nothing can alter or defeat his purpoſes, or annul his promiſes; and that under his protection we may find refuge from all our enemies, and in all our troubles: as the rocks in thoſe countries frequently ſheltered the inhabitants from the heat of the ſun, from impetuous tempeſts, and from hoſtile invaſions. Nor ſhould it be forgotten, that the water flowed from the rock for the uſe of Iſrael in the wilderneſs: and all ſpiritual conſolations in this wretched world come from God our rock, as in Chriſt the God of ſalvation. (See Pſalm xviii. v. 1. Iſaiah, c. xxxii. v. 2. Matt. c. vii. v. 24. c. xvi. v. 18. 1 Cor. c. iii. v. 11. c. x. v. 4.) "His "work is perfect." Abſolute perfection belongs only to God himſelf: relative perfection is all that belongs to creatures, and it belongs to them all, as he at firſt made them; to a worm as much as to an archangel. Every work of God is the reſult of perfect goodneſs, the contrivance of perfect wiſdom, and the effect of perfect power; and is complete in it's kind, and for it's uſe, and to fill it's appointed ſtation in the grand ſcale of exiſtence. Every providential diſpenſation is perfectly expreſſive of his divine juſtice, truth, goodneſs, and wiſdom. His law is perfectly holy, juſt, and good: and is perfectly ſuited to anſwer the ends, which he propoſed in giving it: his goſpel is perfect alſo, and ſuited to anſwer ſtill nobler, and more important ends. The Moſaic diſpenſation was perfectly ſuited to it's purpoſe for the appointed period. The New Teſtament diſpenſation hath a higher and more enlarged kind of perfection. Every part of the univerſal plan is perfectly fitted to the ſtation, which it occupies, and the whole is a perfect plan, and will at length be perfectly executed; as will every work, which God hath begun: nor could any alteration be made in any of his works, without proportionably deducting from their excellency. All real defect ariſes from another quarter, from apoſtacy and rebellion, and their conſequences. Much imagined defect is real excellency; and the objections made to it are the offſpring of ignorance, and pride. If that, which ſuits it's place, and anſwers the intention of it's Maker, were advanced to an higher rank of beauty, and dignity, it's relative excellence would be ſpoiled: and ſo long as the diſtinction betwixt the infinite and abſolute perfection of the Creator, and the finite capacities of the creature remained, there could be no end of ſuch vain attempts of increaſing created perfection by advancing it to ſuperior dignity: and the idea leads us to reflect on the perfection of a kingdom, where all were rulers, and no ſubjects. Theſe things ſhould not be overlooked by thoſe, on the one hand, who are continually diſcovering ſuppoſed defects in the works of God, without knowing the intention of the great contriver: and on the other hand by thoſe, who ſpeak of reaſon, and of the law of God, when diſtinguiſhing them from revelation, and from the goſpel, in ſuch degrading language, as would induce one to think, that either God were not the giver of them, or that things oppoſite to each other might proceed from the ſame immutable fountain of light, truth, and holineſs. Theſe things were intended, and are calculated for diſtinct purpoſes: and man's abuſe of them is alone to be found fault with. "All "his ways are judgment." That is, all his dealings, with his rational creatures are regulated by infallible wiſdom, and perfect juſtice. "A God of truth," of entire veracity, ſincerity, and fidelity; "and without iniquity:" never uſing his power, or authority to oppreſs, or injure any, never requiring more than his due, never puniſhing any of his innumerable ſubjects, who hath not deſerved it, or above their deſerts. "But juſt, and right is he;" and therefore none can have any cauſe to revolt againſt him, as the world in general, and as Iſrael in particular had done.

V. 5. They have corrupted themſelves, &c.] "God's work "is perfect," therefore ſin is not from him; and they muſt bear the blame of the perverſeneſs of their diſpoſition, and the wickedneſs of their behaviour, and of all the miſeries, which they endured in conſequence thereof.

Their ſpot, &c.] Though the profeſſing people of God are ſometimes in general called "his children:" yet Iſrael's preceding, and ſubſequent wickedneſs, notwithſtanding all the judgments, and mercies, the warnings, and perſuaſions, which united to deter them from ſin, and call them to repentance, manifeſted that they were none of God's children, and ſhewed by the deformed, and hateful likeneſs, whoſe children they indeed were: (John, c. viii. v. 44. 1 John, c. iii. v. 8—10.) God's children, in this world have indeed their ſpots, and blemiſhes: but habitual, notorious, unrepented ſin is not one of them. This is the infallible mark of the children of another father.

V. 6. Is not he thy father, &c.] God had acted as a people people and unwiſe? is not he thy father that hath bought thee? hath he not made thee, and eſtabliſhed thee?

7 Remember the days of old, conſider the years of many generations: aſk thy father, and he will ſhew thee; thy elders, and they will tell thee;

8 When the Moſt High divided to the nations their inheritance, when he ſeparated the ſons of Adam, he ſet the bounds of the people according to the number of the children of Iſrael.

9 For the LORD's portion is his people; Jacob is the lot of his inheritance.

10 He found him in a deſert land, and in the waſte howling wilderneſs: he led him about, he inſtructed him, he kept him as the apple of his eye.

11 As an eagle ſtirreth up her neſt, fluttereth over her young, ſpreadeth abroad her wings, taketh them, beareth them on her wings;

12 So the LORD alone did lead him, and there was no ſtrange god with him.

13 He made him ride on the high places of father to them, though they had renounced the relationſhip of children to him, by their apoſtacy, and idolatry, (Iſaiah, c. i. v. 2,) and were "not worthy to be called his ſons." As he had at firſt formed them men, ſo at the expence of multiplied miracles, and vaſt deſolations he had ranſomed them from Egypt, and eſtabliſhed them into a church, and nation, incorporated by charter with ſpecial privileges: and the madneſs and folly of their rebellions, and iniquities were equal to the black ingratitude of them; for they could not injure the Lord, but would ineſtimably ruin themſelves by them.

V. 7. Remember, &c.] This ſong would be in the mouth of great numbers, who were unacquainted with, and perhaps had not acceſs to the books of Moſes: they were therefore called upon in it, to make inquiries of their fathers, and elders, concerning their original, many ages before; who would inform them of the diſtinguiſhing kindneſs, which God had ſhewn to their progenitors, and to their children for their ſakes: ſuch inquiries might both ſtir them up to the ſtudy of their Scriptures, as far as they had opportunity, and diſcover to them in a general manner, the obligations both of gratitude and intereſt, under which they lay, to keep cloſe to the worſhip, and ſervice of Jehovah.

V. 8. When the Moſt High, &c.] When according to the purpoſe of "the Moſt High," who with uncontrolable authority diſpoſeth of every thing, as he pleaſeth, the earth was divided in the days of Peleg, (Gen. c. x,) amongſt the deſcendants of Adam, and Noah; he ſo overruled it, according to his ſecret deſigns of love to Iſrael, that the poſterity of accurſed Canaan, ſhould have that land, which he had ſelected, as their ſuitable, and ſufficient proportion: foreſeeing that by the time that the ſeed of Abraham would be multiplied into a nation, the Canaanites would have filled up the meaſure of their iniquities, and merit utter extirpation. By theſe means the Iſraelites received their aſſigned portion in a high ſtate of cultivation, and repleniſhed with cities, towns, and villages ready prepared for their reception.

V. 9. For the Lord's, &c.] That part of the human race, which he peculiarly values, and cultivates, as a man doth his own eſtate, and from which he receives his whole revenue of worſhip, and obedience, was typified by Iſrael, and was under that diſpenſation chiefly found amongſt them.

V. 10. He found him, &c.] Iſrael firſt aſſumed the form of a nation, and made their appearance as ſuch, in the barren wilderneſs, where nothing was heard before but the howling of the beaſts of prey. Here the Lord became their king, and under his government, guidance, and protection they were preſerved, and provided for: and though he led them about forty years in this waſte wilderneſs, the time was not loſt: there he inſtructed, and trained them up for the conqueſt and poſſeſſion of the promiſed land, (notes, c. viii.) There he found Iſrael as a nation, but he did not leave them there: and when the Amalekites, when Arad, Balak, &c, attempted to injure them; his power encloſed them about, and kept them ſafe; even as the apple, or ſight of the eye is preſerved, both by the wiſe contrivance of the Creator, and by the jealous care of the poſſeſſor, from external violence.

V. 11. As an eagle, &c.] The eagle is remarkable for the pains that ſhe uſes, and the methods that ſhe employs, to teach her young to fly: ſtirring them up out of the neſt, fluttering in the air over them, to ſhew them how to uſe their wings, and, when occaſion requires, carrying them upon her own wings, ſo that in order to deſtroy the young eagles, the body of the old one muſt firſt be pierced. Thus the Lord, by the meſſage of Moſes, and Aaron, excited and encouraged the enſlaved Iſraelites to leave Egypt, and effectually aſſiſted, and protected them in ſo doing: thus alſo by the preached goſpel, and the influences of the Holy Ghoſt, he excites, and prevails upon ſinners to leave ſatan's bondage, and inſtructs, defends, and effectually aſſiſts them therein: whilſt the laſt circumſtance of the eagle's tender care of her young is beautifully emblematical of his love, who interpoſed betwixt divine juſtice, and our guilty ſouls, and "bare our ſins in his own body on "the tree." In both Teſtaments young birds taken care of by the old one's are emblems of the church's ſafety under the Redeemer's protection: but in the Old Teſtament the eagle is ſelected as deſcriptive of his power; in the New, an hen is ſubſtituted, as moſt expreſſive of his condeſcenſion, and grace.

V. 12. No ſtrange god, &c.] None of the heathen gods had the leaſt pretence to ſhare in the honour of thoſe wonderful works of love, which Jehovah wrought in behalf of Iſrael: how abſurd, and baſe then was it for them to join theſe ſtrange Gods with, or prefer them to him, as the objects of their worſhip!

V. 13. He made him ride, &c.] The Lord cauſed Iſrael, as a triumphant conqueror riding in grand proceſſion, to poſſeſs the fortified cities, and inacceſſible mountains,

the

the earth, that he might eat the increaſe of the fields, and he made him to ſuck honey out of the rock, and oil out of the flinty rock;

14 Butter of kine, and milk of ſheep, with fat of lambs, and rams of the breed of Baſhan, and goats, with the fat of kidneys of wheat; and thou didſt drink the pure blood of the grape.

15 But Jeſhurun waxed fat, and kicked: thou art waxen fat, thou art grown thick, thou art covered with fatneſs: then he forſook God which made him, and lightly eſteemed the Rock of his ſalvation.

16 They provoked him to jealouſy with ſtrange gods, with abominations provoked they him to anger.

17 They ſacrificed unto devils, not to God; to gods whom they knew not, to new gods that came newly up, whom your fathers feared not.

18 Of the Rock that begat thee thou art which the Canaanites thought ſecure from their aſſaults. The former part of this ſacred ſong referred to events ſubſequent to the days of Moſes, but here evident prediction begins: which is expreſſed in the paſt tenſe, as denoting it's moſt certain accompliſhment.

Honey out of the rock, &c.] As this is connected with the conqueſt, and the abundance of Canaan, we cannot with the leaſt propriety look back to the wilderneſs for it's accompliſhment: but muſt interpret it to mean, that the rocky parts of the promiſed land, which were the leaſt valued, and which in other lands were generally unproductive, ſhould by the peculiar bleſſing of God afford them great quantities of honey, and oil olive.

V. 14. Kidneys of wheat, &c.] The language of this ſong, according to the genius of poetry, eſpecially of the Eaſtern poetry, abounds with bold metaphors, which ſometimes obſcure the meaning to the generality of readers: but this verſe ſerves as a ſpecimen, according to which others leſs perſpicuous muſt be interpreted. A wheat corn being ſhaped ſomewhat like the kidney, which is ſurrounded in cattle with the choiceſt fat: and their wheat being remarkable fine, the ſacred penman calls it "the fat of the kidneys of wheat." And the production of the red, or purple grape, reſembling the colour of blood, is called "the pure blood of the grape." Thus were they favoured with the beſt of every production; and all their temporal bleſſings ſhadowed forth the ſpiritual proviſions of true believers, who by faith "eat the fleſh, and drink the "blood of the ſon of man."

V. 15. Jeſhurun waxed fat, &c.] The word Jeſhurun probably means "the upright one," and Iſrael was by profeſſion, and comparatively ſo in reality for ſome time: but in the midſt of all their mercies, they degenerated, and grew untractable, and rebellious; like the cattle that "kick "againſt," inſtead of ſubmitting to the goad. They uſed their abundance intemperately, and grew fond of luxury, and the pride of life: this rendered them forgetful of, and ungrateful to the God of their ſalvation, and indiſpoſed them for his ſpiritual worſhip, and holy ſervice: and in proportion proved an incentive to the ſenſual worſhip of filthy idols; to which in conſequence they apoſtatized, forſaking, and lightly eſteeming their great Benefactor: and when they were reproved for it by the prophets, or corrected for it by the Lord, they were fired with indignation, and revolted more, and more, (Iſaiah, c. i. v. 5.)

V. 17. They ſacrificed unto devils, &c.] The whole ſyſtem of idolatry, and every ſpecies of irreligion, falſe religion, and wickedneſs, ultimately centre in the worſhip and ſervice of ſatan: who as a ſubtle enemy unto man, and a proud rival of God, ambitiouſly aſpires to be the God, and king of this world. Not only were the evil genii of the heathens, in reality devils, fallen apoſtate ſpirits; but their good genii alſo, and all their demons and gods, as far as they had any diſtinct exiſtence. Whether a mere phantom, or ſome peculiar demon under the name of Baal, or Jupiter, or ſome deceaſed hero, or the virtues, or vices, &c, were worſhipped in and through their images, the things which were ſacrificed unto them, "were ſacrificed "unto devils," and thoſe proud ſpirits were gratified thereby. In this ſyſtem of ſatan, old gods, "or new gods, "newly come up," (what a monſtrous abſurdity!) the deification of living, as well as of deceaſed men; the change from one ſyſtem to another, in ceaſeleſs variety, according to man's natural love of novelty, equally ſuited his purpoſe, and met with his approbation. This lets us into the true ſecret of that intercommunity of gods and religions, which the liberal and candid Heathens univerſally allowed of: but which the bigotted, and narrow minded Jews would not conform to; and were therefore hated, and deſpiſed for their uncharitable ſingularity, and affected ſtarchneſs, whereby they condemned all their neighbours. Though the Jews were faulty in their contempt, and hatred of the Gentiles, and were really chargeable with bigotry in ſome reſpects: yet the worſhippers of Jehovah could not poſſibly have any intercommunity, with the worſhippers of the devil: Satan himſelf would have tempted them to no more, and the whole law of God forbad it. (1 Cor. c. x. v. 19—21.) For the ſame reaſon different modes of irreligion, or of falſe religion may admit of this candid intercommunity; but true Chriſtianity cannot thus be warped: and therefore many, who pride themſelves upon their candour, and liberality of ſentiment, can ſcarce find methods ſufficiently to expreſs their contempt, or deteſtation of thoſe wretched bigots, who explicitly declare that there is but one way of a ſinner's acceptance, and ſanctification: and that no man, who is not intereſted in the merits, and atoning ſacrifice of the truly divine Saviour, and is not a partaker of his regenerating Spirit, can poſſibly obtain heaven, or eſcape everlaſting condemnation, whatever be his moral character amongſt men. Yet to this all true Chriſtians ſhould adhere: and then by ſhewing others, who are not favoured with this knowledge of Chriſt, all civil reſpect, and all tender kindneſs; by being always diſpoſed to ſympathiſe with, and ready to relieve them, they ſhould convince them, that not proud bigotry, and uncharitable ſeverity dictates ſuch a profeſſion; but regard to the truth of God's word, and a reluctancy to do any thing to bolſter up the groundleſs hopes of thoſe, who neglect ſuch great ſalvation. And unmindful,

unmindful, and haſt forgotten God that formed thee.

19 And when the LORD ſaw it, he abhorred them, becauſe of the provoking of his ſons and of his daughters.

20 And he ſaid, I will hide my face from them, I will ſee what their end ſhall be: for they are a very froward generation, children in whom is no faith.

21 They have moved me to jealouſy with that which is not God; they have provoked me to anger with their vanities: and I will move them to jealouſy with thoſe which are not a people, I will provoke them to anger with a fooliſh nation.

22 For a fire is kindled in mine anger, and ſhall burn unto the loweſt hell, and ſhall conſume the earth with her increaſe, and ſet on fire the foundations of the mountains.

23 I will heap miſchief upon them; I will ſpend mine arrows upon them.

24 They ſhall be burnt with hunger, and devoured with burning heat, and with bitter deſtruction: I will alſo ſend the teeth of beaſts upon them, with the poiſon of ſerpents of the duſt.

25 The ſword without, and terror within, ſhall deſtroy both the young man and the virgin, the ſuckling alſo, with the man of gray hairs.

26 I ſaid, I would ſcatter them into corners, I would make the remembrance of them to ceaſe from among men:

27 Were it not that I feared the wrath of the enemy, leſt their adverſaries ſhould behave themſelves ſtrangely, and leſt they ſhould ſay, Our hand is high, and the LORD hath not done all this.

whilſt they render unto God all the honour "of making "them to differ;" and pour out their fervent prayers for the converſion of their enemies and ſlanderers: and whilſt they cultivate meekneſs, and modeſty, and an unoſtentatious courteouſneſs, and gentleneſs of manners, and blameleſſneſs of life; they may ſoften, though they cannot utterly avoid the injurious charge of bigotry.

V. 19. Becauſe of the provoking, &c.] They are called his ſons, and his daughters, in reſpect of their privileges, with whom, in reſpect of their character that relation is renounced, (v. 5;) having received their natural and national exiſtence, and all their peculiar bleſſings from the Lord, they ſo provoked him by their idolatries, that he even abhorred them, and as it were turned them out of his houſe. But they, who being born of the Spirit, are made partakers of a divine nature, have his fear put into their hearts, that they ſhould not thus depart from, and provoke their heavenly Father.

V. 20. I will hide, &c.] The Lord here declares that he will withdraw his protection, and withhold his wonted interpoſition in their favour; and whilſt they groaned under the effects of their own folly, he would look on as an unconcerned ſpectator of their ſufferings, until they were brought to the utmoſt extremities: becauſe they were a froward, and perverſe generation, deſtitute both of their fathers faith in, and faithfulneſs to him.

V. 21. I will move, &c.] Though many of the judgments, which were inflicted on the offending Iſraelites by the Canaanites, Philiſtines, Midianites, &c, might form a partial accompliſhment of this prediction: yet St. Paul applies it to it's proper event, when he adduces it in proof of the calling of the Gentiles into the church; (Rom. c. x. v. 19.) The Jews had proudly treated the heathen as fooliſh, and worthleſs, and even as dogs compared with themſelves, to whom as children they ſuppoſed all ſpiritual privileges, excluſively, and indefeaſibly belonged: and it provoked their jealouſy to a degree of indignant rage, to ſee them enter into the church, and by the apoſtles of Chriſt admitted to equal privileges with themſelves: this eventually tended to their own entire excluſion, and hath even to this very day exceedingly exaſperated them againſt Chriſtianity and Chriſtians.

V. 22. A fire is kindled, &c.] (See note, v. 14.) The tremendous effects of the wrath of God are repreſented under the metaphor of a fire, which, being kindled upon the ſurface, ſhould burn, as we ſhould ſpeak, even the centre of the earth; and according to a very general notion of the ancients, quite through to the place of miſerable departed ſpirits: but in the expreſſion there is an evident intimation of the indignation of the Lord purſuing the wicked, after death, to that place, where "their worm "never dieth, and the fire is not quenched."

V. 24. Serpents of the duſt, &c.] Which crawl upon, and lick the duſt, (ſee note, Gen. c. iii. v. 14.) The miſery, which ſhould come upon the Jewiſh nation, is in theſe verſes deſcribed in a variety of highly poetical expreſſions, the particular elucidation of which, belongs rather to philology, than theology; and therefore falls not within the deſign of notes, intended merely for edification.

V. 26, 27.] The idolatry, and rebellions of Iſrael deſerved, and the juſtice of God ſeemed to demand, that they ſhould be baniſhed to the remoteſt corners of the earth, where they ſhould never more be heard of; or even that they ſhould be extirpated: but he knew that his enemies would attribute ſuch a cataſtrophe to a wrong cauſe, and that their hearts would in conſequence be elated with inſufferable inſolence, and emboldened to utter the moſt horrible blaſphemies, and hardened in infidelity, and the denial of all, that the Scripture hiſtory records of his wonderful works of old: therefore he determined to ſpare them, and he ſtill continues them to be living witneſſes of the truth of the Scriptures, and confutations of all infidelity. And by their exiſtence as a people at this day, they confront ſuch daring blaſphemers: and he, who knows the ſpirit of modern infidels, and deiſts, (ſo called,) will perceive that their triumphs would have been more inſolent, and their blaſphemies more abundant, had there been no traces of ſuch a people as the Jews any where upon the earth to be diſcovered. And what uſe may hereafter be made of them, may more eaſily be imagined, than exactly aſcertained: but we are ſure that they are preſerved for wiſe, and holy purpoſes, and the Scripture prophecies give us ſome general idea, what thoſe purpoſes are. By an adventurous figure, the ſacred poet aſcribes to the Almighty language taken from the conduct of men, who are deterred from ſuch things, as they have a ſtrong inclination to, through fear of diſagreeable conſequences: as God abhors infidelity, and blaſphemy, and is determined not to afford ſinners this occaſion for them, he is ſaid, "to fear the wrath of the "enemy;" becauſe he acted, as men do, when they are thus afraid.

31 For their rock is not as our Rock, even our enemies themſelves being judges.

32 For their vine is of the vine of Sodom, and of the fields of Gomorrah: their grapes are grapes of gall, their cluſters are bitter:

V. 29. O that they were wiſe, &c.] The wiſdom of Iſrael would have appeared in conſidering theſe things, in adverting to the conſequences of their conduct, and in avoiding all ſuch things, as led to national ruin, and in following all ſuch things, as conduced to national proſperity; keeping the promiſes, denunciations, and predictions, with which they were favoured, continually before their eyes. This would have been to conſider their latter end. The ſame applies to individuals, with reſpect to their future, and eternal ſtate of happineſs or miſery. The ſecrets of futurity belong not to us, but to the Lord: notwithſtanding all the predictions which were delivered concerning the people of Iſrael, it ſtill remained certain, that they would have proſpered, had they been obedient: and notwithſtanding the divine decrees, it is equally certain, that none will come ſhort of eternal life, but thoſe, who remain wilfully impenitent, and unbelievers. And it is ſo agreeable to the divine holineſs, and love, that his rational creatures ſhould be obedient and happy, and that ſinners ſhould repent, believe the goſpel, live holy lives, and be ſaved, that he is repreſented as deſiring, and even wiſhing for it; (Pſalm, lxxxi. v. 13. Luke, c. xix. v. 41, 42;) which muſt be underſtood in the ſame manner, as his "fearing the wrath of the "enemy:" With reference to the conduct, which he approves in his creatures: not with reſpect to his own conduct in the government of the world, which is always perfectly wiſe, righteous, faithful, and good; but often unfathomably deep, and awfully myſterious; and calls for our ſilent acquieſcence, and reverential adoration.

V. 30. Except their Rock, &c.] If they had not provoked God by their crimes, to ſell them as ſlaves, and deliver them as malefactors ſhut up in priſon, into the hands of their enemies, who unconſciouſly performed the office of executioners upon them; none could poſſibly have prevailed againſt them, but all muſt have fallen under them.

V. 31. Their rock, &c.] The idols of the enemies of Iſrael, on which they profeſſed to place their dependance, had never equalled the wondrous works of Jehovah for Iſrael, even by their own confeſſion: (1 Sam. c. iv. v. 7, 8;) they therefore could never have prevailed againſt them, had not their Rock, who formerly protected them, been turned away from, yea turned againſt them.

V. 32, 33.] The nation of Iſrael, though planted a generous vine of an excellent ſtock, in a rich ſoil, and with every advantage in the culture of it; (Iſaiah, c. v. ver. 1—9.) brought not forth the good fruits of righteouſneſs; nay even exceeded Sodom, and Gomorrah in wickedneſs: and as this conduct, in them, was more diſhonourable to God, and more poiſonous, (ſo to ſpeak,) to the minds of others, by prejudicing them againſt their God, and religion, it would therefore be eventually more bitter to themſelves.

V. 34, 35.] (Rom c. ii. v. 5.) All their wickedneſs was recorded, and remembered of God, until the appointed time of vengeance: and it would then appear, that it had been reſerved in ſtore, to be produced againſt them, in manifeſtation of the divine juſtice in their puniſhment; even as a man depoſits, and ſeals up his treaſures in a ſecure place, until he wants to make uſe of them.—For it belongeth to him to execute vengeance upon the wicked: but he waits the moſt proper ſeaſon; and though his judgments ſeem to linger, they in reality make haſte, and are at hand: (2 Pet. c. ii. v. 3. c. iii. v. 8, 9:) and when ſinners deem themſelves moſt ſecure, and ſuppoſe that their foot ſtands firm, he cauſes it to ſlide in due time, and down they ſuddenly fall into deſtruction. (Pſ. lxxiii. v. 17—19.)

V. 36. For the Lord, &c.] Theſe words not only mean, that the Lord would plead the cauſe of, and ſave the remnant that in every age were exceptions to the general rule: nor are they to be reſtricted to the reſcue of the Jews from the Babyloniſh captivity; or to the coming of the Meſſias, or to any of their paſt deliverances: but as 39 See now that I, even I, am he, and there is no god with me: I kill, and I make alive; I wound, and I heal: neither is there any that can deliver out of my hand.

40 For I lift up my hand to heaven, and ſay, I live for ever.

41 If I whet my glittering ſword, and mine hand take hold on judgment; I will render vengeance to mine enemies, and will reward them that hate me.

42 I will make mine arrows drunk with blood, and my ſword ſhall devour fleſh; and that with the blood of the ſlain, and of the captives, from the beginning of revenges upon the enemy.

this ſacred poem relates to the ſame events, which have already been repeatedly conſidered; (Lev. c. xxvi. Deut. c. xxvii, xxviii, xxix, xxx;) this cloſing part muſt refer to the ſame future mercies, with which thoſe prophecies concluded; even their future converſion, and reſtoration. When the appointed period arrives the Lord will plead their cauſe, and avenge them upon all their oppreſſors: he will change his conduct towards them, as a man doth, when he repents: but not till he hath brought them into utter diſtreſs, ſo that none of them ſhall be any where exempted from hoſtile depredations; or left, who ſhall not be carried captives, and at the mercy of their conquerors; and till they are brought to renounce all dependance on human help. This evidently refers to the final conqueſt and deſtruction of Jeruſalem by the Romans, and the conſequent entire deſolation of their whole land, and their long-continued diſperſion, which enſued.

V. 37, 38.] The rejection of the Meſſiah by the Jewiſh nation was evidently conſidered as the continuation of their ancient idolatry, apoſtacy, and rebellion: for which the Lord hath reproved them, and he will convince them of the guilt, and folly of it, before he delivers them. Thus he will make them ſenſible that he alone, who for their ſins hath reduced them to ſo abject a ſtate of miſery, can recover them from it; and they ſhall be brought to humble themſelves before him, to repent of their ſins, and to truſt in, and call upon the Lord, through their long-rejected Mediator, for ſalvation; and then he will appear for their deliverance, and make their proſperity as eminent, as ever their miſeries have been extraordinary.

V. 40. For I lift, &c.] This is ſpoken after the manner of men, and according to their method of taking a ſolemn oath.

And ſay I live for ever.] That is, if Jehovah ſwear by his own ſelf-exiſtence, and eternity, the ſentence whether of mercy, or of judgment, becomes irrevocable, and irreverſible.

V. 41.] If the Lord prepare for vengeance, as a man for battle, and put his hand to the dreadful work of deſtruction, he will do it effectually; nor ſhall any of thoſe, who have provoked his indignation, be able either to reſiſt, or eſcape. And eſpecially he will revenge himſelf upon all thoſe, who at any time have injured his people, out of enmity to them, and him. For this concluſion ſeems to relate to the final deliverance of Iſrael, and the deſtruction of all who oppoſe that deliverance, and of every enemy of God, and his people. Future events may hereafter illuſtrate this part of the prophecy, as hiſtory hath done the foregoing parts of it.

V. 43. Rejoice ye, &c.] (Rom. c. xv. v. 10.) When the Gentiles were called into the church, upon the Jews rejection of the goſpel, this prophecy began to be accompliſhed: but when upon their future converſion, the fulneſs of the Gentiles ſhall be brought in, and all oppoſers be deſtroyed, it will be completely fulfilled. (Romans, c. xi. v. 23—32.

V. 49—52.] Moſes having received this ſummons, gave the tribes of Iſrael his parting bleſſing, and then rendered a prompt obedience unto it.

thy brother died in mount Hor, and was gathered unto his people:

51 Becauſe ye treſpaſſed againſt me among the children of Iſrael, at the waters of Meribah-Kadeſh, in the wilderneſs of Zin; becauſe ye ſanctified me not in the midſt of the children of Iſrael.

52 Yet thou ſhalt ſee the land before thee; but thou ſhalt not go thither unto the land which I give the children of Iſrael.

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.

Divine truth, when propoſed with ſerioufneſs, ſolemnity, and affection, and accompanied with fervent prayers for a bleſſing upon it, is like the diſtilling ſhowers, which water, and fructify the earth: and though numbers neither ſeek, nor ſhare this bleſſing; yet ſome will at all times wait upon God for that preparation of heart, which ſecures it's ſucceſs. (Iſaiah, c. lv. ver. 10. 2 Cor. c. ii. v. 15—17.)—When the glorious character, and gracious dealings of the Lord with men; and the whole character, and conduct of every one towards him ſhall be completely publiſhed before all the inhabitants of heaven and earth; either his juſtice in their deſtruction, or his free mercy in their ſalvation will be univerſally acknowledged, and glorified: and it will then appear that none had any thing, of which to boaſt, and that all had cauſe to confeſs, "that it "was of the Lord's mercy, they had not been long before "conſumed." In every controverſy of the Lord with his creatures, the whole creation will be as his witneſſes for the conviction, and confuſion of thoſe who ſin againſt him: for his creating, and providential goodneſs hath laid every rational agent under ſuch obligations entirely to love, and ſerve him, that their ingratitude, and neglect of him, will admit of no excuſe. (Rom. c. i. v. 18—20.) And every diſtinguiſhing bleſſing, which we enjoy, enhances our obligation, and aggravates the criminality of ungodlineſs. The land of our nativity, the place of our abode, and all that profuſion of temporal advantages, which many of us ſo richly poſſeſs, are as much his eſpecial appointment, as Canaan was intended for, and given to Iſrael: nor can we complain of a country leſs favoured of heaven than even the land of promiſe itſelf. But alas! like Jeſhurun, we have too generally grown luxurious, and ſenſual, untractable, and ungodly: the irreligion, infidelity, and profligacy, which have ſprung from our national wealth, and proſperity, and have almoſt inundated our land, are no leſs aggravated than Iſrael's idolatry, and equally provoke the Lord's jealouſy, and anger. And whatever may be the conſequence to us, as a nation; the fire of divine vengeance burns even to the loweſt hell againſt unnumbered multitudes, who live, and die, and periſh in their ſins. We alſo, like Iſrael of old, are ſingularly favoured with the light of revelation, and the ordinances of true religion, and are profeſſedly the Lord's people: but our ſpots are not the ſpots of his children; our dark and ſteep ſtains of every atrocious iniquity too evidently prove, that in general we are Chriſtians no more than in name. We hear indeed of a redemption far more precious, than that of Iſrael out of Egypt, but unleſs "we are redeemed "from all iniquity, and purified unto the Redeemer, as "his peculiar people zealous of good works," our privileges will but enhance our condemnation. And whilſt multitudes ſeem to deem themſelves branches of the true vine, "their grapes are the grapes of Sodom, and the "wine thereof the poiſon of dragons, and the cruel venom "of aſps." Suitable to ſuch a conduct will be their doom, for they are day by day "treaſuring up wrath againſt the "day of wrath;" and the whole maſs of iniquity, which they have committed will ere long be produced againſt them, and proportionable vengeance executed upon them. "O that men were wiſe, that they underſtood "theſe things!" For our wiſdom conſiſts not in ſagaciouſly laying, and executing plans of worldly advancement, but "in conſidering our latter end;" and with the revelation of a future ſtate, and judgment before our eyes, in preparing for that awful period, when we muſt finally leave all earthly things, and enter into the eternal world, and have our portion allotted us either in heavenly joys, or in the torments of hell, and that for ever. But ſo merciful is our holy God, and ſo doth he delight in the converſion, and ſalvation of ſinners: ſo well ordered are all things in the covenant of grace, and ſo freely are all the bleſſings of that covenant propoſed, through our loving, able, faithful Saviour, to the chief of ſinners, than none need be diſcouraged: nay except we "lightly eſteem the Rock of "our ſalvation," and wilfully prefer other dependances, or the ſervice of the devil, in the gratification of our ſinful luſts, to him, and his ſervice, and all his bleſſings; we cannot be excluded from them. And neither the ſenſual, the ambitious, or the covetous, nor yet the phariſaical, and ſuperſtitious, nor thoſe who invoke ſaints, and angels, can think, or pretend to ſay, "that their rock is as our Rock." O that they would therefore be perſuaded to build their hopes on this Rock of ages, to ſhelter their ſouls in him, and to ſeek thoſe waters of life, which flow from him! But his own preventing grace muſt accompany the invitations of his word; or the pride, and wickedneſs of the human heart will render them all abortive. All the appointments of his Providence ſubſerve the purpoſes of his love to his church, and to every true member of it: and "known unto him are all his works from before the "foundation of the world." He finds his people dead in ſin, and ſlaves of ſatan, yea baſely in love with their chains. And even when his meſſage, "warning them to flee from "wrath to come," has alarmed their fears, they are ſtill diſpoſed to cleave to earthly objects, and averſe to the ſuppoſed difficulties, and perils of a godly life. But his Spirit quickens their ſouls, ſtirs them from the duſt, and creates the willing mind: then doth he convincingly, and ſweetly teach them their danger, and the way of eſcape, and ſalvation; and yields them effectual aſſiſtance in treading thoſe hitherto unknown paths. (Iſaiah, c. xlii. v. 16.) Thus are they numbered amongſt the redeemed of the Lord, become his worſhippers, are repleniſhed with the richeſt ſpiritual bleſſings from the rock of ſalvation, rank amongſt the ſons of God, and heirs of glory, begin their victories, and triumphs, and taſte the earneſt of heavenly joys. But alas! how frequently do even true Chriſtians merit the reproach of folly and ingratitude, in requiting the Lord, who

AND this is the bleſſing, wherewith Moſes the man of God bleſſed the children of Iſrael before his death.

2 And he ſaid, The LORD came from Sinai, and roſe up from Seir unto them; he ſhined forth from mount Paran, and he came with ten thouſands of ſaints: from his right hand went a fiery law for them.

hath bought them with his blood, and formed and eſtabliſhed them by his grace to be his people, with ſuch unſuitable returns! Oft do they grieve his Spirit, ſometimes they even diſhonour his name, through inordinate attachment to ſome earthly object, or by ſome diſobedience, negligence, or perverſeneſs. Then is he moved to jealouſy, hides his face from them, and makes uſe of his chaſtening rod; and with repeated, and ſtill heavier ſtrokes, proceeds to correct them, until they are convinced of, and humbled for their ſin, and renouncing all other help, ſeek deliverance from him alone, and learn to kiſs the very rod, which occaſioned the ſmart. For this humiliation he waits, nor will he ſhew his reconciled face, until it take place: but when this effect hath been produced, he, who wounded will heal, and he who afflicted, will relieve and comfort them; nor can any but he do it.—For his own glory, and to ſilence the blaſphemies of his enemies, he will not proceed to thoſe extremities, which he might righteouſly inflict; but he will bring all his true people to repentance; and though they oft offend, and are often chaſtiſed, the whole ſhall iſſue in their final ſalvation; and in the execution of condign puniſhment upon all their perſecutors and oppreſſors; who could have had no power over them; except as the Lord had been pleaſed to uſe them as inſtruments of correction: howbeit they meant not ſo, but expreſſed their enmity againſt him by their injuries of his people.—A long conflict there hath alſo been on earth betwixt the cauſe of truth, and holineſs, and that of error, and ungodlineſs; but the whole ſhall iſſue in the final and univerſal triumph of true religion, and the ruin of all it's opponents: which will be the prelude to the eternal ſeparation, and difference betwixt the friends and enemies of God, in the unſeen world. Ere long that ſeparation, and difference will take place with every one of us; we "ſhall ſoon be bid to put off this our "tabernacle." Then they, who wallowing in ſin, rioting in luxury, or glorying in their wealth, have lightly eſteemed the Rock of ſalvation, will though too late perceive their folly. Happy they who are called to meet death from being faithfully employed in the work of the Lord! and who die with the promiſed inheritance full in view, and with a clear aſſurance of eternal life. Yet let the redeemed of the Lord walk circumſpectly, leſt ſome falſe ſtep, which they have taken, ſhould be remembered againſt them upon a death bed, and render that cloſing ſcene leſs comfortable. Let us all be contented in obſcurity, and poverty, if allotted us, being more favourable to godlineſs: let the rich and proſperous rejoice with trembling, leſt they ſhould have their portion in this world; and watch and pray, leſt they ſhould be lifted up to their hurt. Let us all recommend religion to our children, and thoſe around us, as no vain thing, but our eternal life: and let us pray that the bleſſings of it may be extended to the remoteſt nation of the earth.

NOTES.

CHAP. XXXIII.] V. 1. This is the bleſſing, &c.] To all his precepts, exhortations, warnings, and prophecies, in proſe and in poetry, Moſes added, before his final parting, a ſolemn benediction; which may be conſidered as the expreſſion of his cordial good will to, and his fervent prayers for them, notwithſtanding the ſevere rebukes, and awful curſes, which he uttered; or as a prophecy which he was inſpired to deliver unto them, that related to the ſituation and circumſtances of their ſeveral tribes. In this reſpect it exceedingly reſembled the bleſſings, which Jacob pronounced upon his ſons, (Gen. xxix;) and intimated, that notwithſtanding their rebellions, and the preceding alarming predictions, the Lord had bleſſings in reſerve for them. Probably the heads of the ſeveral tribes were gathered around Moſes, after he received the ſummons recorded in the cloſe of the former chapter, and juſt before he aſcended the mount, where he ended his life. This chapter therefore contains the laſt dying words of this eminent ſervant of God; and calls to our remembrance "the "prophet like unto him," who both diſcourſed with his diſciples the evening before his crucifixion for their conſolation, and bleſſed them juſt when he was parted from them, and went up into heaven. And doubtleſs this parting interview was very pathetic, and would leave a durable impreſſion upon the minds of the people. Moſes introduced theſe bleſſings alſo with a brief retroſpect to former mercies, which they had received from God, through his inſtrumentality; for on theſe ſubjects we cannot reflect too frequently.

V. 2. The Lord came from, &c.] Theſe expreſſions are poetical, and likewiſe refer to ſcenes, which would be much better conceived by the Iſraelites, than they can be by us. When Jehovah came down to manifeſt his glory, and promulgate his law from mount Sinai, either the ſplendour of his majeſty illumined the diſtant mountains of Seir and Paran; or his approach was preceded by ſome glorious appearances from thoſe mountains, as the riſing ſun is uſhered in by the light of the dawning day, (Hab. c. iii. v. 3.)

Ten thouſands of ſaints] "Of holy ones," that is, of holy angels, who were miniſtering ſpirits, in that grand diſplay of the divine Majeſty.

From his right hand, &c.] The Lord thence gave them his law, not only by ſpeaking it with a loud voice from the midſt of the fire, but by writing it upon tables of ſtone, which he delivered to Iſrael to keep, as a ſacred depoſit, and the obedience unto which he enforced with his whole power and authority. It is called a fiery law, not only as delivered from the fire, but becauſe of the fiery indignation, to which tranſgreſſors thereof are doomed, by reaſon of which no fleſh can be juſtified by it. Its ſanctifying effect alſo, when written in the hearts of believers by the finger of the Spirit, where, as fire, it conſumes the luſts, purifies the affections, and aſſimilates the ſoul to its own holy nature, may alſo be referred to.

V. 3. Yea, he loved, &c.] This fiery law was not promulgated againſt, but for them, as a proof of his love, and becauſe he had choſen them for his peculiar people, a holy nation: for in ſubſeryiency to the goſpel, it much conduced to render them holy, as well as to evidence them to be ſo. And as all who were thus ſanctified, were under his ſpecial protection: ſo they all would ſit at his feet, and receive theſe his words, that they might believe and obey them, (Luke, c. x. v. 39.)

V. 4. Moſes commanded, &c.] The law was given from God, and by Moſes, who was alſo the mediator of that covenant, by which the congregation of Jacob's poſterity was incorporated, and which guaranteed unto them their inheritance, whilſt they retained their national fidelity.

V. 5. And he was a king, &c.] Moſes not only acted as a prophet, to deliver the law in God's name unto the people, but as a king, in ſeeing it put in force during his life: he poſſeſſed all the authority, and performed all the functions of a king, though he neither took upon him the the name nor the ſtate of royalty; and though he joined with him the heads of the people, and of the tribes, both as his council, and as ſubordinate magiſtrates over thouſands and hundreds, in their ſeveral tribes. Some ſuppoſe, that Jehovah himſelf is here meant; and doubtleſs he was king over Iſrael in all ages, and in an eſpecial manner, whoſoever was his deputy.

V. 6. Let Reuben, &c.] The order in which the tribes are here bleſſed, is not the ſame in which Jacob had bleſſed them; nor does it accord to any other order that is elſewhere obſerved. However Reuben, the firſt born, though degraded by Jacob, (ſee notes, &c. Gen. c. xlix. v. 4;) and ſuperſeded by Judah, as to the precedency in their encampments, is here firſt mentioned. Notwithſtanding that diſgrace, and the rebellion in the wilderneſs, of this tribe, under Dathan, Abiram, and On, about the government, in which many of them periſhed, Moſes here predicted, that it ſhould not be deſtroyed, but ſhould be multiplied to a great number; by which he alſo expreſſed his cordial forgiveneſs of, and good will to them, notwithſtanding their perſonal inſults of him. As the Reubenites, having received their inheritance eaſt of Jordan, were preparing to croſs that river, and fight for their brethren, we may alſo ſuppoſe, that ſome reference is had to that circumſtance, and that the bleſſing implies a prayer for their protection.

V. 7.] Judah was appointed to be the governing and the conquering tribe: Moſes therefore prayed for, and predicted to them, deliverance and victory, when they went forth to battle, and a ſafe and triumphant return to their people: the aſſiſtance of a ſufficient number from the other tribes, and eſpecially the help of the Lord of Hoſts himſelf. All this was evidently fulfilled to this tribe until the days of Chriſt. And ſome commentators interpret the clauſe, "bring him to his people," as predicting the coming of the Meſſias, who ſprang from Judah. (See notes, Gen. c. xlix. v. 8—12.)

V. 8. And of Levi, &c.] Levi, as well as Simeon, had been left under a ſevere rebuke by Jacob, (Gen. c. xlix. v. 7.) Simeon, having nowiſe diſtinguiſhed himſelf, was entirely omitted by Moſes. This tribe had probably been notoriouſly guilty in the tranſgreſſion of Baal Peor, and had been greatly reduced in the wilderneſs, (Num. c. i. v. 23. c. xxvi. v. 14.) It had it's portion aſſigned within the lot of Judah, (Joſhua, c. xix. v. 1;) and was much incorporated with them, or diſperſed through the other tribes: and perhaps for theſe reaſons, was not ſeparately mentioned in this prophecy. But in the caſe of Levi, the curſe had been turned into a bleſſing, with reference to the tranſactions here mentioned. This tribe was the dying prophet's own tribe, but he more regarded it as the Lord's tribe; and as the welfare of Iſrael was ſo immediately connected with that of Levi, he expatiated the more in his benediction of, and prediction concerning it. The Urim and Thummim, or illuminations, and perfections, (note, Exod. c. xxviii. v. 30;) whereby the High Prieſt inquired of the Lord, formed one diſtinguiſhing token of his favour to the Levitical prieſthood, which Moſes prayed for, and predicted the continuance of, to Aaron's ſucceſſors to future ages: and in ſo doing, implied alſo the continuance of all needful gifts and graces, to every order of that tribe, that they might fill up their ſeveral places, to the glory of God, and the maintenance of true religion in Iſrael. Yet it is confeſſed by the Jews, that the Urim and Thummim were loſt in the Babyloniſh captivity, and nothing ſubſtituted in their room. But in our "Holy One," our Great High Prieſt, whom Aaron and his ſons feebly ſhadowed forth, the things ſignified thereby remain, and from him are communicated to all his true miniſters and people, according to their meaſures.

Whom thou didſt prove, &c.] There were two Meribahs, one of which is alſo called Maſſah, (Exod. c. xvii.

9 Who ſaid unto his father and to his mother, I have not ſeen him; neither did he acknowledge his brethren, nor knew his own children: for they have obſerved thy word, and kept thy covenant.

10 They ſhall teach Jacob thy judgments, and Iſrael thy law: they ſhall put incenſe before thee, and whole burnt-ſacrifice upon thine altar.

11 Bleſs, LORD, his ſubſtance, and accept the work of his hands: ſmite through the loins of them that riſe againſt him, and of them that hate him, that they riſe not again.

12 And of Benjamin he ſaid, The beloved of the LORD ſhall dwell in ſafety by him; and the LORD ſhall cover him all the day long, and he ſhall dwell between his ſhoulders.

13 And of Joſeph he ſaid, Bleſſed of the LORD be his land, for the precious things of heaven, for the dew, and for the deep that coucheth beneath,

v. 7.) where probably Aaron and the Levites remarkably diſtinguiſhed themſelves in oppoſing the murmurs of the people. At the other Meribah, (Num. c. xx. v. 13.) Aaron was found faulty; yet it is a tradition, that the tribe of Levi approved themſelves faithful. However it refers to ſome remarkable inſtance, in which they were proved, and honourably diſtinguiſhed themſelves in the Lord's behalf.

V. 9. Who ſaid, &c.] In the provocation of the golden calf, the Levites, at God's command, inflicted puniſhment upon the ringleaders, without reſpect to rank or relation, and in a very zealous and impartial manner, (Exod c. xxxii. v. 26—29;) in which guilt perhaps ſome of their own tribe and near relations were deeply involved, whom they no more ſpared than other criminals, (Luke, c. xiv. v. 26. 2 Cor. c. v. v. 16;) and though men might cenſure ſuch ſeverity, God highly approved of it, and honoured thoſe who ſo honoured him. This may be alluded to; but probably it particularly means that diſintereſtedneſs and deadneſs to all carnal affections, that indifference about the preferment or affluence of themſelves or families, and that impartiality and ſuperiority to perſonal reſpects, and the fear of man; when the command, the covenant, and the glory of God are concerned, which were required of, and found in theſe firſt prieſts of the Lord; and which are requiſite to fit all miniſters for, and incline them to chooſe that work, in preference to more lucrative employments, (Mal. c. ii. v. 7.)

V. 10. They ſhall teach, &c.] Beſides the offering of ſacrifices, and officiating at the ſanctuary, the prieſts and Levites were the authoriſed public teachers, through the cities and villages in the ſeveral tribes of Iſrael. Too many of them were in after ages more attentive to their perquiſites than to their duty, (as is generally the caſe in ſimilar collective bodies;) and the ignorance and wickedneſs of the people were frequently chargeable upon their neglect and ſcandalous lives; and the prophets were extraordinary meſſengers ſent from God, eſpecially to reprove and ſtir them up to do their duty. However their office continued, and many pious and excellent men were found amongſt them, and much good redounded to Iſrael from them, until the coming of Chriſt, and the abolition of the Moſaic inſtitution.

V. 11. Bleſs, Lord, his ſubſtance, &c.] The Levites had no landed inheritance, but they had their maintenance out of the Lord's dues, ſo to ſpeak, by which means their intereſts were connected with the ſupport of the worſhip of the Lord. On this their portion Moſes prays for, and predicts a ſpecial bleſſing from God: though ſome interpret this clauſe of their abilities for their ſacred miniſtry, that the Lord would both enable them to, and proſper them in their work. Their faithful diſcharge of their office would excite many enemies againſt them; many would grudge and ſtrive to defraud them of their dues; and many would be ready to vote their abolition as uſeleſs, that they might ſeize upon their revenues: but vengeance was here prophetically denounced againſt all who ſhould hate, or riſe up againſt them, in any manner, or any account, or for any purpoſe.

V. 12. Of Benjamin, &c.] The tribe of Benjamin had their inheritance cloſe to mount Zion: a great part of Jeruſalem, and ſome ſuppoſe that the temple itſelf, was ſituated within it. This was a diſtinguiſhing token of the Lord's love to them. This ſanctuary was their ſecurity, whilſt they kept cloſe to it: they were covered by the protection of the Lord continually, and had his power engaged in their behalf. Accordingly this tribe adhered to Judah, and to the family of David, and the worſhip of God, when the ten tribes revolted and apoſtatized, and they became inſeparably united to, and incorporated with the tribe of Judah.

V. 13, 14. And of Joſeph, &c.] It is here predicted, that the inheritance of thoſe tribes which deſcended from Joſeph, ſhould be peculiarly productive, through the bleſſing of God upon it. By means of the ſeaſonable rains, and refreſhing dews, thoſe "precious things," which come down from above, and make the earth fruitful; and by means of the ſprings which iſſued from beneath, and the benign influences of the ſun, all kinds of valuable productions, peculiar to each revolving moon in ſucceſſion, would be abundantly afforded them.

V. 15.] The mountains and hills alſo would grow for their uſe, vines, and olives, and timber trees; and from beneath would be dug metals, and minerals, and ſtone for building, &c.

16 And for the precious things of the earth and fulneſs thereof; and for the good will of him that dwelt in the buſh; let the bleſſing come upon the head of Joſeph, and upon the top of the head of him that was ſeparated from his brethren.

17 His glory is like the firſtling of his bullock, and his horns are like the horns of unicorns; with them he ſhall puſh the people together to the ends of the earth: and they are the ten thouſands of Ephraim, and they are the thouſands of Manaſſeh.

18 And of Zebulun he ſaid, Rejoice, Zebulun, in thy going out; and Iſſachar, in thy tents.

19 They ſhall call the people unto the mountain; there they ſhall offer ſacrifices of righteouſneſs: for they ſhall ſuck of the abundance of the ſeas, and of treaſures hid in the ſand.

20 And of Gad he ſaid, Bleſſed be he that enlargeth Gad: he dwelleth as a lion, and teareth the arm with the crown of the head.

21 And he provided the firſt part for himſelf, becauſe there, in a portion of the lawgiver, was he ſeated; and he came with the heads of the people, he executed the juſtice of the LORD, and his judgments with Iſrael.

V. 16.] In brief, their land ſhould abound in every precious production, which the earth, and it's fulneſs can afford: all which, with a variety of ſpiritual privileges, would deſcend upon theſe tribes from the good will, and peculiar kindneſs of Jehovah. The firſt appearance of the Lord to Moſes, in the burning buſh, and the promiſes, which he had thence given, and ſince ſo faithfully, and powerfully performed, were recollected with grateful pleaſure by the dying prophet; and he characterized him, who was thus to bleſs the ſons of Joſeph, from this circumſtance, that he condeſcended once, as the God of Abraham, and his ſeed, to take up his reſidence for a ſeaſon in the mean unſightly buſh; and had now taken up his more abiding reſidence in the midſt of Iſrael, who was equally unmeet for, and unworthy of ſuch an honour; but would in like manner be preſerved, and not conſumed by his gracious preſence: (ſee notes, Exod. c. iii. v. 2—4.)

Upon the head, &c.] Jacob's peculiar love to Joſeph, and his eminent wiſdom, piety, and uſefulneſs, inſpired the dying patriarch with copiouſneſs in bleſſing him, and his children: his memory was alſo dear to Iſrael, and to Moſes, who enlarged in his prophetical prayer for his deſcendants, with evident reference to Jacob's bleſſing, and under the ſame title of him, who "was ſeparated from his brethren:" (notes, Gen. c. xlviii. v. 15—22. c. xlix. v. 22—26.)

V. 17. As the firſtling, &c.] This implies that the deſcendants of Joſeph ſhould have the glory of being powerful in Iſrael, and victorious over their enemies. Joſeph, as if he had been the firſt-born, had the birth-right, and the double portion, inſtead of Reuben; Joſhua, under whom Canaan was conquered, in thoſe firſt wars of Iſrael, was of the tribe of Ephraim. Many proofs were given by theſe tribes of their courage, and they were ſignalized with much ſucceſs, (which is the meaning of his horns being like the horns of unicorns, with which they puſhed the people together, to the ends of the earth, or to extremities of the land.) They were alſo remarkable for their numbers, but in both reſpects Ephraim exceeded, as Jacob had foretold.

V. 18, 19, Zebulun, and Iſſachar, both ſons of Leah, were united in this bleſſing, and their inheritances lay together in the land. It was predicted that Zebulun would proſper, and conſequently "rejoice in his going out;" that is, ſay ſome, as a merchant, "for he was a haven of ſhips." (Gen. c. xlix. v. 13.) And thus he ſucked the abundance "of the ſeas, and of the treaſures hid in the land;" that is, reaped as it were it's harveſt, or worked it's mines: and it might be ſo: and upon that ſuppoſition we may underſtand his "calling the people to the mountain," of the endeavours, which thoſe of this tribe would uſe in bringing thoſe foreigners, with whom they traded, acquainted with their religion: which forms an example worthy the imitation of merchants. But as the Zebulunites were ſituated, as is ſuppoſed, at ſome diſtance from the Mediterranean ſea, and upon the ſea of Tiberias, perhaps their fiſhery is more intended, than their foreign trade: and in this way the ſea yields a revenue more valuable, than the productions of mines of gold, and almoſt equal to the harveſt of the plain. Of Iſſachar it is foretold, that he ſhould proſper, and rejoice in his tents, as a ſhepherd tending his flock: (and we ought to rejoice, and be thankful to God, when we can live, and maintain our families by any honeſt employment however mean.) And probably of both Zebulun, and Iſſachar, that they would be remarkably zealous or the ordinances of God, in offering the ſacrifices of righteouſneſs, out of their juſt gains, at the temple of Jeruſalem, though they lived ſo far diſtant; and that they would uſe their influence, in inviting, perſuading, and prevailing upon others to accompany them to the mountain, on which Moſes foreſaw that the temple would be built. The firſt preaching of the goſpel by Chriſt and his apoſtles began in the lot of theſe tribes.

V. 20, 21. And of Gad, &c.] The increaſe of Gad is here predicted, as the immediate work of God, which was to be acknowledged with gratitude. When this tribe, in conjunction with Reuben, petitioned for a poſſeſſion eaſtward of Jordan, of the firſt fruits of Iſrael's conqueſts, and obtained it, "he provided the firſt part for himſelf, and "was ſeated in a portion of the lawgiver," that is, which Moſes, the lawgiver had allotted him. In this he afterwards dwelt as a lion; and when any of the ſurrounding nations attacked him, he not only tare their arm, enfeebling their power, but their head too, in bringing them under ſubjection, (Gen. c. xlix. v. 19. 1 Chron. c. v. ver. 18—22. c. xii. v. 8.) After the Gadites were eſtabliſhed in their own ſettlements, they marched boldly with the other tribes

22 And of Dan he ſaid, Dan is a lion's whelp: he ſhall leap from Baſhan.

23 And of Naphtali he ſaid, O Naphtali, ſatisfied with favour, and full with the bleſſing of the LORD; poſſeſs thou the weſt and the ſouth.

24 And of Aſher he ſaid, Let Aſher be bleſſed with children; let him be acceptable to his brethren, and let him dip his foot in oil.

25 Thy ſhoes ſhall be iron and braſs; and as thy days, ſo ſhall thy ſtrength be.

26 There is none like unto the God of Jeſhurun, who rideth upon the heaven in thy help, and in his excellency on the ſky.

27 The eternal God is thy refuge, and underneath are the everlaſting arms: and he ſhall thruſt out the enemy from before thee, and ſhall ſay, Deſtroy them.

28 Iſrael then ſhall dwell in ſafety alone: the fountain of Jacob ſhall be upon a land of corn and wine; alſo his heavens ſhall drop down dew.

29 Happy art thou, O Iſrael: who is like unto thee, O people ſaved by the LORD, the croſs Jordan, along with the reſt of Iſrael, to execute the juſtice of God upon the Canaanites.

V. 22.] Jacob had compared Dan to a ſerpent, (note, Gen. c. xlix. v. 16, 17.) Moſes makes the lion his emblem, when leaping from Baſhan he irreſiſtibly ſeized, and devoured his prey. In Sampſon, who was of this tribe, both theſe emblems were realized.

V. 23.] To Naphtali was here predicted much peace, and proſperity from the ſpecial favour of the Lord: and we are told, that though the lot of this tribe lay in the north part of the land, it was ſo remarkably fruitful, that they generally brought their firſt fruits, before the other tribes. The words "poſſeſs thou the weſt, and the ſouth," may be tranſlated, "poſſeſs thou the ſea on the ſouth," that is the ſea of Tiberias, which lay to the ſouth of the lot of this tribe, and would contribute much to their proſperity.

V. 24.] Aſher ſignifies bleſſed; and to him was predicted a numerous increaſe; with much love, and friendſhip from his brethren, and with moſt fruitful olive yards.

V. 25.] Some ſuppoſe that the former part of this verſe means only, that there ſhould be under his feet, or in his portion, productive mines of iron, and braſs. But it hath long been interpreted as a proverbial expreſſion: if a man were about to travel in rough roads, or to climb craggy precipices, or to be ſtationed upon a ſlippery eminence, it would be uſeful to him to have plates of iron, or braſs fixed to his ſhoes: in like manner the Lord would prepare Aſher for every difficulty, which he would meet with; and in this ſenſe, the latter clauſe is an explanation of the former, and ſignifies, that as the day of trial requires, ſtrength ſhould be communicated. A moſt precious bleſſing, or promiſe! (2 Cor. c. xii. v. 9, 10.)

V. 26. Upon the heaven, &c.] Moſes added to his prophetical prayer for each tribe in particular, a declaration of the glory of God, and the happineſs of Iſrael in general; theſe were the laſt words, which are recorded that he ſpake. The God of Jeſhurun rides upon the heavens; that is he comes in glorious majeſty, and with irreſiſtible force, to defend his people, and deſtroy their enemies; and in ſo doing manifeſts all his excellencies, his wiſdom, juſtice, truth, and love in the moſt conſpicuous manner.

V. 27.] The eternity, immutability, and almighty power of God form the ſecure refuge, and the firm ſupport of his people, in all their dangers, and difficulties. Theſe would ſecure to Iſrael the conqueſt of Canaan, and enable them to execute the divine command in the deſtruction of it's inhabitants: and they would ſecure their peaceable, and proſperous poſſeſſion, ſo long as they continued obedient, and did not forfeit their national covenant.

V. 29. Thine enemies, &c.] Their enemies ſhould be conſtrained to diſſemble their enmity, and yield a feigned reluctant ſubmiſſion, being terrified by Iſrael's power, and ſucceſs. Thus were they a moſt happy nation, and had moſt extraordinary privileges: but by their ſin they forfeited all, and became moſt wretched. The true Iſrael of God poſſeſs all theſe bleſſings in their nobleſt ſenſe, and have them ſecured to them by ſtill better promiſes, and a better covenant.

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.

The real miniſters of the Lord dare not flatter men in their ſins, or ſhun to declare the whole counſel of God, as far as they are able, even when that renders it neceſſary to denounce the moſt tremendous curſes againſt apoſtates, hypocrites, and other impenitent ſinners: but at the ſame time their hearts are full of the moſt compaſſionate, and tender love of them: and could they, whom their faithfulneſs exaſperates, witneſs their melting deſires, and fervent prayers in ſecret for them, it muſt abate ſomewhat of their reſentment: (Jer. c. xiii. v. 13—17:) nay their moſt awful warnings, which are pointed with painful, and irritating conviction to the conſciences of their hearers, are the effect of their tender concern for their eternal welfare: and they live, and die, praying earneſtly that all the bleſſings of the new covenant may be communicated even to thoſe, who have deſpitefully uſed, and perſecuted them. (Acts, c. vii. v. 51, 52. 54. 57—60.) The holy law of God, when fully opened in it's extent, ſpirituality, excellency, and awful ſanction; and when applied by the Holy Spirit to the ſinner's awakened conſcience, is ſtill a "fiery law;" and ſometimes occaſions alarms, no leſs diſmaying, and equally well grounded with thoſe which appalled Iſrael, when they heard it from the midſt of the fire upon mount Sinai: and how intolerable to every humbled ſoul would be the thought of being compelled to meet the Judge, at the conſummation of all things, to receive the eternal ſentence, according thereunto!—Yet in ſubſerviency to the goſpel, it is moſt uſeful to us, to ſhew us our need of a Saviour, and the nature, glory, and precioufneſs of that ſalvation: and when delivered unto us by our reconciled Father in Jeſus Chriſt, as our rule, and written in our hearts by his Spirit, as our principle of evangelical obedience, it is a peculiar shield of thy help, and who is the sword of thy excellency! and thine enemies shall be found liars unto thee, and thou shalt tread upon their high places.

effect, and evidence of the Lord's love to us, and directs us in evidencing, and expressing our love to him. These are the saints of the Lord, who, being justified by faith, have peace with God, through our Lord Jesus Christ, and being secure under his fatherly protection, sit down at his feet daily to receive further instruction from his words, and with the whole congregation of Jacob, acknowledge him their king, and yield him prompt, and willing obedience; grieved only "that they cannot do the things which they "would," and are not able to serve him perfectly.—The blessings, with which the Lord blessed these tribes of the redeemed, are suited to each person's case, and are sufficient for them in every situation: and whilst every one properly feels, and is blessed of God in his appointed place in the church, every one becomes a blessing to, and receives benefit from all the rest: whether appointed to the magistracy, or ministry, or in a more private situation; or whether entrusted with wealth, or called upon to labour for his bread. They, who are employed in the sacred ministry, should be tried persons, approved of God, possessed of enlightened understandings, sound judgments, and upright hearts: who, filled with zeal for the glory of God, and love to the souls of men, in the execution of their office, respect not the persons of men, nor fear their frowns: who are superior to the allurements of covetousness, and ambition, and to every undue bias of natural affection; who desire not the advancement, or affluence of their brethren, or children; but "observing the word and keeping the "covenant of God," teach the people his truths, precepts, and ordinances with all faithfulness, and diligence, pour out their fervent prayers to the Lord, to increase their ability for the ministry, and to prosper the work of their hands; (Psal. xc. v. 17;) and leave it to him to provide for them, and their families after them, as well as to defend them from, and plead their cause with all that rise up against them. Such ministers should always be assisted with the daily prayers of all the Lord's people; for they greatly need, and highly value them: nor should we ever forget to unite our supplications to God, that he would by his grace render all, who are ordained to this important service, like-minded to those, whom Moses here described; and that he would send forth increasing numbers of such "labourers into his harvest; for the harvest is great, but "the labourers are very few;" and that he would continue such a ministry through successive generations, long after we are dead and gone, even to the latest period of time. To be situated near the lively ordinances, is a precious gift from the Lord upon his beloved; and they, who value, and improve such a privilege, will find their situation so secure, and comfortable, that they will not consent to exchange it from any inducements of temporal convenience, emolument, or indulgence. We should thankfully receive, as from the blessing of the Lord, those valuable productions, which the fruitful earth yields, through the successive seasons of the year, by the genial influences of the heavens above: but those good gifts, which come down from the Father of lights, through the rising of the sun of righteousness, and the pouring out of his Spirit like fructifying rain, as the tokens of his special love, who as the covenant God of Israel, deigned to dwell in the burning bush, are infinitely more precious; and they all belong to those, who are separated and distinguished from others, by their faith, and holiness: nor shall their memory fail of being honoured, or their posterity remain unnoticed, who have been remarkably pious, and useful in their generation. Happy are they, who through the blessing of God on any honest occupation, are not only enabled to maintain themselves, but have a heart to consecrate their gain unto the Lord; who shrink not from labour, and freely incur expence, in offering the spiritual sacrifices of righteousness, which are acceptable to God through Jesus Christ: and who zealously improve every opportunity, and advantage to bring others to join with them in such a reasonable service. Having chosen, and secured, through the grace of God, "the first part "for themselves," even "that good part, which shall "never be taken from them," what can they do so becoming, and profitable, as to assist others in seeking, and obtaining the same inheritance? But in thus decidedly taking the Lord's part against his enemies, they must expect, that opposition will be made against them, and they will need to unite the boldness of the lion, the wisdom of the serpent, and the harmlessness of the dove in their character, and conduct. However being "satisfied "with the favour, and filled with the blessing of the Lord," and "being acceptable to their brethren," and made useful to their fellow-sinners; they may well bear this reproach, and it's effects: for all shall be sanctified unto the true believer, and if their way be rough, their feet shall be shod with the preparation of the gospel of peace, and their strength in every case proportioned to the emergency. But indeed no words can express the glorious excellencies of the God of Jeshurun, or the privileges, and felicity of his believing people. The righteousness, whereby they are justified, is an everlasting righteousness, and their salvation shall be for ever: being united unto Jesus Christ by a living faith, and the communication of his Holy Spirit, they are already "saved in the Lord:" they are his own children, and the eternal God is their present refuge; his everlasting arms form their unfailing support; all his perfections are engaged in their behalf; he will hasten to their assistance with invincible force, whenever their enemies assault them, and silence all the accusations of their malicious slanderers; he will guard their peace, and character, as well as the life of their souls; he will choose their inheritance for them, and put them in possession of it: there shall they dwell alone, when their inward foes shall all be slain; and the devil, and his angels, and servants driven away into everlasting punishment. There shall they be filled with the love of their God and Saviour towards them, and be perfected in their love to him, and to each other, and all their employment shall be praise, and grateful adoration: there will the felicity of every happy inhabitant reciprocally enhance that of all the rest; nor shall any emulation remain, but which shall most love, and glorify the supreme object of their united affections, and adoration, and the source of all their joys. God help us to seek, and set our affections on these things, which are above, and to detach our souls from earthly, polluted, perishing objects. That we may not

AND Moſes went up from the plains of Moab unto the mountain of Nebo, to the top of Piſgah, that is over againſt Jericho: and the LORD ſhewed him all the land of Gilead, unto Dan,

2 And all Naphtali, and the land of Ephraim, and Manaſſeh, and all the land of Judah, unto the utmoſt ſea,

3 And the ſouth, and the plain of the valley of Jericho, the city of palm trees, unto Zoar.

4 And the LORD ſaid unto him, This is the land which I ſware unto Abraham, unto Iſaac, and unto Jacob, ſaying, I will give it unto thy ſeed: I have cauſed thee to ſee it with thine eyes, but thou ſhalt not go over thither.

5 So Moſes the ſervant of the LORD died there in the land of Moab, according to the word of the LORD.

6 And he buried him in a valley in the land of Moab, over againſt Beth-peor: but no man knoweth of his ſepulchre unto this day.

7 And Moſes was an hundred and twenty years old when he died: his eye was not dim, nor his natural force abated.

8 And the children of Iſrael wept for Moſes in the plains of Moab thirty days: ſo the days of weeping and mourning for Moſes were ended.

NOTES.

CHAP. XXXIV.] V. 1. And Moſes, &c.] The laſt chapter cloſed the words, and writings of Moſes, and this chapter muſt have been added by ſome other hand; but whether by Joſhua, or by Samuel, or ſome later prophet, is not agreed: perhaps the laſt verſes were added as late as the days of Ezra, after the captivity: but it is not material, the author is the ſame, though he was pleaſed to change his amanuenſis. Moſes appeared reluctant to leave his work, but that being finiſhed, he manifeſted no unwillingneſs to die. He was now brought to acquieſce in the Lord's refuſal to him of an entrance into Canaan, and appears to have been animated with the immediate proſpect of glory, looſening all earthly attachments, and adding to his ſtrength, and ſpirits in aſcending the mountain, where he was to put off the tabernacle of his body: and it ſeems probable that he aſcended, and died without a witneſs of, or companion to cloſe his eyes in death. His mounting upward to die might intimate that the believer's dropping the body is the ſoul's enlargement, and aſcenſion to glory. Abarim (ch. xxxii. v. 49,) is ſuppoſed to be a ridge of mountains, Nebo the higheſt mountain in that ridge, and Piſgah the ſummit of that mountain.

And the Lord ſhewed him, &c.] His ſight was miraculouſly aſſiſted in taking a diſtinct, and deliberate view of the promiſed land, as it was afterwards divided amongſt the tribes of Iſrael: this view would not only gratify Moſes, in his endeared affection for the people; but was a type of thoſe views of glory, which reconcile the believer to diſſolution.

V. 5. According to, &c.] As a true ſervant of the Lord he was obedient unto death, and as willingly obeyed this as any foregoing command of God, though it ſeemed harder. In this he reſembled Jeſus Chriſt: but he died in honour, in peace, and in the moſt eaſy manner; the Saviour upon the ignominious, and torturing croſs!

V. 6. He buried him, &c.] Perhaps by the miniſtration of angels, but not by any human help, the Lord buried the body of Moſes, and concealed it from the Iſraelites, that it might not be an occaſion to them of ſuperſtition, and idolatry: and as they were not able to venerate the reliques of their law giver, they never were guilty, that we find, of that ſpecies of ſuperſtition, which hath ſo long diſgraced the profeſſion of Chriſtianity: (Jude, v. 9.) When Moſes died the Lord buried him; but when Chriſt died, he was raiſed from the dead; for the Moſaic diſpenſation was to be ſuperſeded by the Chriſtian, which is to endure to the end of time.

V. 7. And Moſes, &c.] The life of Moſes was remarkably divided into three forty years, the firſt in the rank of a courtier, the ſecond as a ſhepherd in the wilderneſs, and the third as a law giver, and king in Jeſhurun But though he lived ſo much longer than the moſt of his cotemporaries, (Pſalm, xc. v. 10,) he had experienced no failure in his faculties, or ſenſes; but died, not by the courſe of nature, but according to the will of God, when his work was finiſhed. Thus alſo Chriſt died in the vigour of life. Some ſuppoſe that the ſhining of Moſes' face alſo continued to his death.

V. 8. Wept for Moſes, &c.] They not only paid him the cuſtomary honour: but after his death became ſenſible of their loſs; and perhaps even thoſe ſincerely lamented him, who had ſpoken of ſtoning him, when he had oppoſed their luſts.

10 And there aroſe not a prophet ſince in Iſrael like unto Moſes, whom the LORD knew face to face;

11 In all the ſigns and the wonders which the LORD ſent him to do in the land of Egypt, to Pharaoh, and to all his ſervants, and to all his land, 12 And in all that mighty hand, and in all the great terror which Moſes ſhewed in the ſight of all Iſrael.

V. 10. There aroſe not, &c.] To the time of the perſon who inſerted theſe verſes, no prophet had ariſen in all reſpects qualified and honoured of God, as Moſes had been; nor did any one ariſe until the coming of Chriſt; who exceeded him, as the Son doth the ſervant; and not only was known of the Father face to face, but came forth from the boſom of the Father, to reveal him, and his truth, and ſalvation to ſinful men.

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.

We muſt ere long be called into the eternal world; our wiſdom and happineſs therefore conſiſt in habitual readineſs for, and expectation of that ſolemn event: and if our hearts have experienced the ſalvation of God, we are prepared, and ſhould be willing to depart in peace, whenever it pleaſes him. To ſtand with our loins girded, diligently doing our proper work, and waiting the ſummons of the Lord, will beſt enſure thoſe views of heavenly reſt, and thoſe foretaſtes of joy which gild the proſpect, and chear the heart of believers in paſſing that laſt gloomy vale. Nor need we be anxious about the preſence of beloved relatives, or the ſolace of the Lord's people, or miniſters, in our dying moments; even ſhould our departure be ſudden, alone, or amongſt ſtrangers, the love and preſence of the Lord will ſupply all that we need deſire. Nor ought we to be anxious where our bones ſhall be diſpoſed of in God's providence: the burial of Chriſt hath conſecrated every ſpot where a believer is interred, and his omnipotent voice will at length raiſe us incorruptible. But we ſhould fear leaving any occaſion of ſin to the ſurvivors, after our deceaſe; for the enmity and envy that follow the Lord's ſervants whilſt they live, are frequently changed into ſuperſtitious regard for them after their death; and even their miſtakes will then be eſpouſed, and their failings imitated: and many eminent ſaints, now in glory, could they again reviſit this lower world, would embrace that opportunity of burying, or burning, or expunging ſome paſſages out of writings which they have left behind, perhaps without intention of being made public, which ſatan hath afterwards made uſe of as an handle againſt ſome part of divine truth, far beſide the intention of the writer, yet under the venerable ſanction of his eſtabliſhed reputation. It behoves them therefore to be as cautious in this reſpect, as the Lord was in concealing the body of Moſes. Whilſt reſpect is paid to the memory of the deceaſed, the living ſervants of God ſhould not be undervalued: for though in ſome reſpects inferior to their predeceſſors, God will qualify them for their work; and his authority ſhould be honoured in them; and the meaſure of wiſdom and holineſs which he has given them, ſhould be eſteemed and regarded. And as Jeſus ever liveth to take care of his own cauſe, we need not mourn for the moſt eminent men, as thoſe who have no hope, that the loſs ſhould be made up to the church of God.

Thus have we been carried through this diviſion of the ſacred Scripture: may the Lord pardon all that hath been faulty, and prevent every i'l effect, if any thing erroneous hath been advanced! and if uſefulneſs hath been conferred on any part thereof, may he have all the praiſe. With truth and gratitude the writer can ſay, that his labour hath been pleaſant, and profitable to his own ſoul; and he would continue to beg the reader's inceſſant prayers, for further aſſiſtance in the remaining part of the arduous and important undertaking: that freſh light may ſhine into his mind, and upon the ſubject, as the work proceeds; and that ere it come to a cloſe, ſomewhat leſs unworthy of the public notice, and more fitted for real uſefulneſs, may through him be communicated to the church of God.

JOSHUA.

It is not certain who was the penman of this Book; but it is moſt probable, that the ſubſtance of it was written by him, whoſe name it bears, though ſeveral paſſages appear to have been added after Joſhua's deceaſe; perhaps by Phinehas, or ſome other perſon, who was employed in connecting the memorials, which he left behind him. Therein is contained the hiſtory of Iſrael's paſſing over into the land of Canaan, and conquering, and dividing it, under the command of Joſhua; and their conſequent hiſtory until his death: but how long that event was poſterior to the death of Moſes is not eaſily aſcertained; perhaps not more than ſixteen or ſeventeen years. The power, and truth of God in fulfilling his promiſes to Iſrael, and in executing his threatened vengeance upon the Canaanites, are therein wonderfully diſplayed: which ſhould teach every reader to expect the accompliſhment of the moſt tremendous curſes in the word of God upon impenitent ſinners, and to ſeek refuge in Chriſt Jeſus; and every believer to wait patiently in the path of duty, for the performance of his largeſt and kindeſt promiſes; and confidently to expect it, notwithſtanding difficulties, and delays. We ſhall alſo meet in this hiſtory with many things worthy of our imitation; and ſome things, which we muſt cenſure and ſhun. Inſtructive proofs of the power, and triumphs of faith will throughout attract our attention; and many typical references to Chriſt, and the goſpel, eſpecially in the character, and public ſervices of Joſhua, will excite a grateful recollection in the believer's mind: whilſt the cloſing admonitions, and exhortations are as applicable to us, as ever they were to Iſrael.

Before Chriſt 1451.

CHAP. I.

Contains, 1ſt. Joſhua confirmed, and encouraged of the Lord, in his ſucceſſion to Moſes, v. 1—9. 2d. Entering upon his charge, and giving orders relative to the paſſage of Iſrael over Jordan, v. 10—15. 3d. Recognized as their commander by the people, with promiſes of ſubjection, and obedience, v. 16—18.

NOW after the death of Moſes the ſervant of the LORD, it came to paſs, that the LORD ſpake unto Joſhua the ſon of Nun, Moſes' miniſter, ſaying,

Before Chriſt 1451.

2 Moſes my ſervant is dead; now therefore ariſe, go over this Jordan, thou, and all this people, unto the land which I do give to them, even to the children of Iſrael.

3 Every place that the ſole of your foot ſhall tread upon, that have I given unto you, as I ſaid unto Moſes.

4 From the wilderneſs and this Lebanon even unto the great river, the river Euphrates, all the land of the Hittites, and unto the great ſea toward the going down of the ſun, ſhall be your coaſt.

NOTES.

CHAP. I.] V. 2. Ariſe, go over, &c.] It is not likely that the Iſraelites paſſed over Jordan, before the thirty days of mourning were expired: but this encouraging viſit of the Lord to Joſhua might be previous thereto, as alſo the ſending out of the ſpies. (c. ii. v. 1.) The Moſaic diſpenſation was in roductory to that of the goſpel, and muſt expire, before that could appear in it's full glory: the moral law is exceedingly uſeful to the church of God, and to every believer; but only the goſpel can conduct him to the heavenly inheritance; and until we are dead to the law, as to any dependance on it, or expectation from it, in the concern of juſtification, we cannot be eſtabliſhed in our privileges as believers in Chriſt. Theſe things are ſhadowed forth in this typical tranſaction of Moſes' death, ere Joſhua (that is Jeſus) could lead the tribes of Iſrael to Canaan's reſt.

V. 4. The river Euphrates, &c.] In the times of David, and Solomon, the nation of Iſrael poſſeſſed, or ruled

5 There ſhall not any man be able to ſtand before thee all the days of thy life. As I was with Moſes, ſo I will be with thee: I will not fail thee, nor forſake thee.

6 Be ſtrong and of a good courage; for unto this people ſhalt thou divide for an inheritance the land which I ſware unto their fathers to give them.

7 Only be thou ſtrong, and very courageous, that thou mayeſt obſerve to do according to all the law which Moſes my ſervant commanded thee: turn not from it to the right hand or to the left, that thou mayeſt proſper whitherſoever thou goeſt.

8 This book of the law ſhall not depart out of thy mouth; but thou ſhalt meditate therein day and night, that thou mayeſt obſerve to do according to all that is written therein: for then thou ſhalt make thy way proſperous, and then thou ſhalt have good ſucceſs.

9 Have not I commanded thee? Be ſtrong and of a good courage; be not afraid, neither be thou diſmayed: for the LORD thy God is with thee whitherſoever thou goeſt.

10 Then Joſhua commanded the officers of the people, ſaying, 11 Paſs through the hoſt, and command the people, ſaying, Prepare you victuals; for within three days ye ſhall paſs over this Jordan, to go in to poſſeſs the land which the LORD your God giveth you to poſſeſs it.

12 And to the Reubenites, and to the Gadites, and to half the tribe of Manaſſeh, ſpake Joſhua, ſaying, 13 Remember the word which Moſes the ſervant of the LORD commanded you, ſaying, The LORD your God hath given you reſt, and hath given you this land.

14 Your wives, your little ones, and your cattle, ſhall remain in the land which Moſes gave you on this ſide Jordan; but ye ſhall paſs before your brethren armed, all the mighty men of valour, and help them, 15 Until the LORD hath given your brethren reſt, as he hath given you, and they alſo have poſſeſſed the land which the LORD your God giveth them; then ye ſhall return unto the land of your poſſeſſion, and enjoy it, which Moſes the LORD's ſervant gave you on this ſide Jordan, toward the ſun-riſing.

16 And they anſwered Joſhua, ſaying, All that thou commandeſt us we will do, and whitherſoever thou ſendeſt us we will go.

17 According as we hearkened unto Moſes in all things, ſo will we hearken unto thee: only the LORD thy God be with thee, as he was with Moſes.

18 Whoſoever he be that doth rebel againſt over all thoſe countries, which are mentioned in this grant, or nearly. But in general, by reaſon of their ſin, they attained not to the enjoyment of all the proſperity, which was engaged to them conditionally in their national covenant. And though Chriſtians are under a better covenant, ſecured by better promiſes, yet very few, if any of them, live in this world in the actual enjoyment of all that peace, and conſolation, that is contained in the promiſe; and this is the effect of their remaining unbelief, ſloth, and attachment to the world.

V. 5. I will not fail, &c.] The application of this promiſe by the apoſtle, (Heb. c. xiii. v. 5, 6,) encourages us to expect the performance of every promiſe in the Scripture to ourſelves; if we are real Chriſtians, and walking in the Lord's ways, and if they ſuit our caſe, and if their accompliſhment would conduce to our real advantage.

V. 7. That thou mayeſt, &c.] As the ſucceſſor of ſo eminent a ſervant of God, as Moſes, as ruler over ſo numerous, and untractable a people, as Iſrael; and as employed in ſo perilous an undertaking, as the conqueſt of Canaan, much of the ſtrength of grace, and courage of faith would be needful to Joſhua; that he might perſevere in the path of duty, unmoved by terrors, difficulties, or perſuaſions, and neither turn to the right hand, or to the left.

V. 8. This book, &c.] By conſtant meditation the good treaſure of God's word was to be depoſited in his heart; that from that abundance his mouth might ſpeak, as occaſion required, for the people's conviction, direction, or encouragement.

V. 11. Prepare you victuals, &c.] The manna had not yet ceaſed to fall; but they probably had uſed more of other proviſion, after they had taken poſſeſſion of the kingdoms of Sihon, and Og. And the words in general may mean, prepare all things neceſſary for the expedition. This ſeems to have been commanded after the return of the ſpies, as recorded in the ſubſequent chapter, who were abſent from them more than three days.

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.

The removal of thoſe, who have been faithful, and uſeful in their generation, ſhould quicken their ſurvivors to double earneſtneſs, and activity; both to make up, as much as in them lieth, the public loſs, and to prepare for their own diſſolution. (Eccleſ. c. ix. v. 10.) Every one of the Lord's ſervants having performed the work aſſigned them, retire to reſt, and others are raiſed up to ſucceed thy thy commandment, and will not hearken unto thy words in all that thou commandeſt him, he ſhall be put to death: only be ſtrong, and of a good courage.

CHAP. II.

Contains, 1ſt. Two ſpies ſent by Joſhua, entering Jericho, protected by Rahab, and informed of the terror which had ſeized the Canaanites, v. 1—11. 2d. Her agreement with them for her own ſafety, and that of her friends, v. 12—21. 3d. Their preſervation, return, and report to Joſhua, v. 22—24.

AND Joſhua the ſon of Nun ſent out of Shittim two men, to ſpy ſecretly, ſaying, Go view the land, even Jericho. And they went, and came into an harlot's houſe named Rahab, and lodged there.

2 And it was told the king of Jericho, ſaying, Behold, there came men in hither to-night of the children of Iſrael, to ſearch out the country.

3 And the king of Jericho ſent unto Rahab, ſaying, Bring forth the men that are come to thee, which are entered into thine houſe: for they be come to ſearch out all the country.

4 And the woman took the two men, and them, until their ſervices alſo are finiſhed: and generally, they who have in the cloſe of life been moſt honoured, have been previouſly ſubmiſſive, and diligent in a more obſcure ſituation. No conſciouſneſs of inferiority, of inſufficiency, or even of unworthineſs, ſhould induce us to decline the ſervice, which is allotted to us; for the ſame fulneſs, whence prophets, and apoſtles received all their ſufficiency, is open for us alſo; and in our more limited ſpheres, and for our leſſer ſervices, we have a warrant to expect, that the Lord will be with us, as he was with Moſes, or Paul; tho' we muſt not imagine that he will ſpeak to us face to face, or give us a viſion of the third heavens, and thoſe unutterable things, which are there diſplayed. Nor ought we to fear any oppoſition, or difficulty, whilſt the promiſes of God are in our hands, and we have received faith to embrace them, and a heart to plead them in prayer. That man has need to be ſtrong in faith, and very courageous, who in this evil world would do his whole duty, and not turn aſide to the right hand, or to the left, on account of any temptation, or through fear of any conſequence whatſoever: but when the Lord commands us to be ſtrong, and courageous, we ſhould conſider the precept, as a memento, to cry earneſtly to him that he may give us all neceſſary ſtrength and courage; and in this dependance we may go forth aſſured that nothing can ſtand before, or impede our courſe; for the Lord will not fail us, nor forſake us.—But warranted confidence is always connected with proportionable humility, and conſcientiouſneſs: and genuine courage chiefly appears in daring to do our duty, though cenſured by miſjudging friends, or threatened by malicious enemies. And that we may be ſecured from deception, and be aſſured that we are reproached or perſecuted, not for following our own fancies, but for obeying God's commands, we muſt endeavour by daily meditation, and prayer, to obtain that digeſted acquaintance with the precepts, as well as the promiſes of God's word, which may render our path of duty evident to our own minds, and enable us to explain our reaſons, and motives ſatisfactorily to the candid, and pious, when occaſion requires. Then will our hearts be encouraged in every circumſtance; and he, whoſe commands we are attempting to obey, will effectually ſupport us, and perhaps will influence the hearts of thoſe to favour us, who once were our enemies. However when we act by his commiſſion, and according to his inſtructions, he will find us all needful aſſiſtance: and when perſons of different ranks, and in due ſubordination, harmoniouſly concur in endeavours to promote the welfare of the church, and with one accord ſeek the preſence, and bleſſing of the Lord therein, the proſpect of ſucceſs is very pleaſing; and they who oppoſe ſuch efforts merit the ſevereſt puniſhment. May the Lord help us then to truſt in him; to ſubmit to thoſe, whom he hath placed over us, and to aſſiſt them with our prayers, and in every way that we are able; and to be helpful to one another in the moſt diſintereſted manner, and with the moſt exact punctuality to our engagements! And eſpecially may he enable us to ſubmit to the authority, and enliſt under the banner of the Captain of our ſalvation; and to be obedient to his commands, and to fight the good fight of faith, in concurrence with all that truſt in and love his name, and in oppoſition to all within and without, which oppoſe his authority. For whoever refuſes to obey him muſt inevitably be deſtroyed from amongſt his people.

NOTES.

CHAP. II. v. 1.] We have no reaſon to charge Joſhua with timidity or diſtruſt in this tranſaction. It might be very uſeful to him, as commander, to learn many things reſpecting the ſituation of Jericho, and the diſpoſition of its inhabitants, which might be known by ordinary means, as well as by immediate revelation. The ſpies were only two, not men of eminent rank, but of approved intrepidity and faith, ſent by Joſhua to ſearch out Jericho and its confines, and to bring their report to him, and not to the congregation. Probably it was done by divine intimation, as they were evidently guided and protected in a remarkaable manner, and many important good conſequences reſulted from their enterprize.

An harlot's houſe, &c.] There can be no doubt but this woman had been an harlot; but probably ſhe had before this altered her courſe of life: and as ſhe was afterwards married to a prince in Iſrael, and ſo brought into the line of the Meſſiah, ſhe could not have been very old at this time. Though it is probable that ſhe kept an houſe of entertainment for travellers, from her alledging, that two men had indeed come to her, of whom ſhe knew nothing; yet it is evident, from the whole narrative, that the ſpies were led thither by the ſpecial providence of God, and that ſhe entertained them out of regard to Iſrael and Iſrael's God, and neither for lucre, or for any evil purpoſe.

V. 4. And hid them, &c.] Theſe words might be ren-

hid them, and ſaid thus, There came men unto me, but I wiſt not whence they were.

5 And it came to paſs about the time of ſhutting of the gate, when it was dark, that the men went out; whither the men went I wot not: purſue after them quickly; for ye ſhall overtake them.

6 But ſhe had brought them up to the roof of the houſe, and hid them with the ſtalks of flax which ſhe had laid in order upon the roof.

7 And the men purſued after them the way to Jordan, unto the fords: and as ſoon as they which purſued after them were gone out, they ſhut the gate.

8 And before they were laid down, ſhe came up unto them upon the roof;

9 And ſhe ſaid unto the men, I know that the LORD hath given you the land, and that your terror is fallen upon us, and that all the inhabitants of the land faint becauſe of you.

10 For we have heard how the LORD dried up the water of the Red ſea for you, when ye came out of Egypt; and what ye did unto the two kings of the Amorites that were on the other ſide Jordan, Sihon and Og, whom ye utterly deſtroyed.

11 And as ſoon as we had heard theſe things, our hearts did melt, neither did there remain any more courage in any man, becauſe of you: for the LORD your God, he is God in heaven above, and in earth beneath.

12 Now therefore I pray you, ſwear unto me by the LORD, ſince I have ſhewed you kindneſs, that ye will alſo ſhew kindneſs unto my father's houſe; and give me a true token:

13 And that ye will ſave alive my father, and my mother, and my brethren, and my ſiſters, and all that they have, and deliver our lives from death.

dered, "had hid them." It is evident, that Rahab was acquainted with their buſineſs, before ſhe received the meſſage from the king; and ſenſible of the danger to which they would be expoſed, when every one was upon the watch, being acquainted with the ſituation and purpoſes of Iſrael, ſhe had previouſly concealed them. It has been much conteſted, whether Rahab ſinned in the anſwer which ſhe returned to the meſſengers, and in her manner of conducting this buſineſs. Some think her treachery to her king and country cannot be vindicated: but as ſhe was influenced "by faith" in the whole tranſaction, (Heb. c. xi. v. 31,) and firmly believed, that the God of heaven had devoted the Canaanites to be utterly deſtroyed by the Iſraelites, ſhe muſt either have ſided with Iſrael, and Iſrael's God, againſt her country, or have periſhed with it, in a hopeleſs conteſt with the Almighty: in this caſe ſhe would have proved, that her faith was dead and uſeleſs; therefore in her circumſtances ſhe could not act otherwiſe, if ſhe poſſeſſed true and living faith, (James, c. ii. v. 26.) Every one, who is truly converted, equally renounces the alliance of the Lord's enemies, however nearly connected, and muſt refuſe to join with them in their rebellion againſt God, and their perſecution of his ſervants. But as no nation can poſſibly produce ſuch an authenticated commiſſion from God to deſtroy another nation, as Iſrael had to deſtroy the Canaanites: ſo Rahab's conduct in uniting intereſts with the enemies and invaders of her country, though it was her abſolute duty, cannot now be drawn into precedent. In reſpect of the falſehood which ſhe uttered, were not a general queſtion of ſome importance, and of great difficulty, involved in it, it were moſt obvious to reſolve it into her ignorance of the divine law; and to ſay, that the principle and ſubſtance of her conduct, being good, were accepted, and that the ſin which incidentally mixed with it, was pardoned. But if it were her indiſpenſable duty to protect the ſpies, and there were no other conceivable way of doing it, it ſeems not abſolutely neceſſary to condemn her conduct in toto. (2 Sam. c. xvi. v. 18, 19. c. xvii. v. 20. 2 Kings, c. vi. v. 19.) Stratagems of war, and other impoſitions upon determined enemies and perſecutors, are not abſolutely condemned in Scripture, though not conſiſtent with exact veracity. And if deception could in any caſe be juſtifiable, we can ſcarce imagine one in which it would be more ſo, than this was. This however is certain, that in no caſe, except one equally extraordinary, ought this example to be imitated. Her acknowledgment, that two men had come to her, gave credit to her latter aſſertion: and her apparent earneſtneſs to have them apprehended, prevented ſuſpicion, and tended to ſend the purſuers out of the way.

V. 7. Unto the fords, &c.] By theſe fords the ſpies had probably paſſed the river, and afterwards returned the ſame way, though they were not proper for the paſſage of the whole multitude of the Iſraelites, eſpecially when Jordan overflowed its banks, (chap. iii. v. 15.)

V. 8—13.] We have here Rahab's faith, and its fruits, which are highly celebrated in the New Teſtament, and muſt be briefly conſidered. She had heard of the miracles that God had wrought for, and the promiſes that he had made to Iſrael; and whilſt the ſame report exaſperated or intimidated the other inhabitants of the land, ſhe was led to believe, that Jehovah was the only true God, in heaven, and earth; and that the Iſraelites were his only accepted worſhippers; that his promiſes would certainly be fulfilled, and his threatenings take effect; and that there was no way of eſcape, but by reconciliation to him, and uniting intereſts with his people. Of all theſe truths, Balaam ſeems to have been convinced in his judgment, as well as to have profeſſed them with his lips; tho' his ambitious, and covetous heart abhorred them, and he perſiſted in his enmity to God, and Iſrael unto his death. But the conduct of Rahab proved, that ſhe had the genuine principle of divine faith, which would diſpoſe her to receive further information concerning the Meſſias, and the way of acceptance through thoſe ſacrifices, which typified his atonement, when proper inſtruction was afforded her. By that faith, which ſhe had already received, ſhe renounced all her intereſts amongſt, and connexion with the devoted Canaanites; and ſhe ventured her life, and expoſed herſelf to the imminent danger of the moſt cruel tortures, in expreſſing her love for the people of God; without aſking any other recompenſe, than preſervation for herſelf and her near relations, when the word of God received it's expected accompliſhment. That very regard to her relatives, who were not ſenſible of their own danger, was a genuine effect of true grace: ſhe gave the ſpies alſo all the information, which ſhe could, and all, that they wanted; and ſhe deemed the ſolemn oath of Jehovah a ſufficient ſecurity for the performance of their engagements. When with great attention, hazard, and trouble ſhe had diſmiſſed them with proper counſel, ſhe performed her promiſe of ſecrecy; and at the appointed time collected her relatives into her houſe, as had been agreed: and thus without reſerve joined intereſts with the people of God: (Ruth, c. i. v. 15—18.) The whole of her conduct manifeſted a reverential fear of the Lord, an entire belief of his word, a deſire, and hope of his favour, an affection for his people, and a diſpoſition to forſake, venture, and ſuffer any thing for his ſake. Multitudes, who had ſeen all the Lord's miracles, and had had every advantage of inſtruction in the camp of Iſrael, continued unbelievers; very few indeed manifeſted ſuch ſtrong faith, ſuch holy fear, ſuch confidence in God, and ſuch a diſpoſition to labour, and ſuffer for his ſake, as the inhabitant of accurſed Jericho, who had only heard a vague report of the wonderful works of the Lord for Iſrael. With theſe things in our minds we ca not doubt, but her faith had before this been accompanied with repentance, and the forſaking of thoſe ſinful practices, from which ſhe derived the name of "the harlot;" which yet is given her, where her faith, and works are moſt celebrated, as illuſtrating the great evangelical truth, "that where ſin "hath abounded, grace much more aboundeth."

17. We will be blameleſs, &c.] As men, who reverenced an oath, and dreaded the guilt of perjury, they deſired to have the terms of the agreement, to which they acceded in the name of Iſrael, preciſely ſtated, and exactly explained.

V. 18, 19.] That houſe, which had protected the ſpies of Iſrael, was ſelected as the refuge of thoſe, who were found in it, when others were utterly deſtroyed. Though the Iſraelites were forbidden to form any alliance with the nations of Canaan; yet individuals, who came cordially into their intereſts, might be ſpared, eſpecially in requital of ſpecial favours ſhewn them. This paſſage reminds us of the blood-beſprinkled door, which was the ſecurity, when the deſtroying angel was ſlaying the firſt-born of Egypt. And both of them call to our remembrance the ſinner's ſecurity under the protection of the atoning blood; having fled thereto for refuge, from the wrath, and curſe of an offended God.

V. 23. So the two men, &c.] Having been thus wonderfully protected, and reſtored in ſafety, the ſpies make no mention of the ſtrict watch, which was kept by the inhabitants of Jericho, nor of their narrow eſcape: But reported the diſmay of their enemies; not only as an encouraging circumſtance, but as a token that the Lord had delivered them into their hands, having thus begun

20 And if thou utter this our business, then we will be quit of thine oath which thou hast made us to swear.

21 And she said, According unto your words so be it. And she sent them away, and they departed: and she bound the scarlet line in the window.

22 And they went, and came unto the mountain, and abode there three days, until the pursuers were returned. And the pursuers sought them throughout all the way, but found them not.

which would dispose her to receive further information concerning the Messias, and the way of acceptance through those sacrifices, which typified his atonement, when proper instruction was afforded her. By that faith, which she had already received, she renounced all her interests amongst, and connexion with the devoted Canaanites; and she ventured her life, and exposed herself to the imminent danger of the most cruel tortures, in expressing her love for the people of God; without asking any other recompense, than preservation for herself and her near relations, when the word of God received it's expected accomplishment. That very regard to her relatives, who were not sensible of their own danger, was a genuine effect of true grace: she gave the spies also all the information, which she could, and all, that they wanted; and she deemed the solemn oath of Jehovah a sufficient security for the performance of their engagements. When with great attention, hazard, and trouble she had dismissed them with proper counsel, she performed her promise of secrecy; and at the appointed time collected her relatives into her house, as had been agreed: and thus without reserve joined interests with the people of God: (Ruth, c. i. v. 15—18.) The whole of her conduct manifested a reverential fear of the Lord, an entire belief of his word, a desire, and hope of his favour, an affection for his people, and a disposition to forsake, venture, and suffer any thing for his sake. Multitudes, who had seen all the Lord's miracles, and had had every advantage of instruction in the camp of Israel, continued unbelievers; very few indeed manifested such strong faith, such holy fear, such confidence in God, and such a disposition to labour, and suffer for his sake, as the inhabitant of accursed Jericho, who had only heard a vague report of the wonderful works of the Lord for Israel. With these things in our minds we ca not doubt, but her faith had before this been accompanied with repentance, and the forsaking of those sinful practices, from which she derived the name of "the harlot;" which yet is given her, where her faith, and works are most celebrated, as illustrating the great evangelical truth, "that where sin "hath abounded, grace much more aboundeth."

17. We will be blameless, &c.] As men, who reverenced an oath, and dreaded the guilt of perjury, they desired to have the terms of the agreement, to which they acceded in the name of Israel, precisely stated, and exactly explained.

V. 18, 19.] That house, which had protected the spies of Israel, was selected as the refuge of those, who were found in it, when others were utterly destroyed. Though the Israelites were forbidden to form any alliance with the nations of Canaan; yet individuals, who came cordially into their interests, might be spared, especially in requital of special favours shewn them. This passage reminds us of the blood-besprinkled door, which was the security, when the destroying angel was slaying the first-born of Egypt. And both of them call to our remembrance the sinner's security under the protection of the atoning blood; having fled thereto for refuge, from the wrath, and curse of an offended God.

V. 23. So the two men, &c.] Having been thus wonderfully protected, and restored in safety, the spies make no mention of the strict watch, which was kept by the inhabitants of Jericho, nor of their narrow escape: But reported the dismay of their enemies; not only as an encouraging circumstance, but as a token that the Lord had delivered them into their hands, having thus begun

LORD hath delivered into our hands all the land: for even all the inhabitants of the country do faint becauſe of us.

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.

As the greateſt, wiſeſt, and beſt of men muſt on many occaſions make uſe, as it were, of the eyes, and ears of others, it is of vaſt importance, that thoſe ſhould be ſelected, whoſe veracity, and fidelity may be depended on. The Lord hath "a remnant according to the election of grace," in many unlikely ſituations, and of ſuch, who have previouſly born very bad characters; for he will glorify his mercy, and grace, in ſaving ſome ſinners of every kind. The reproach of former ſins, which reſts upon the reputation of atrocious offenders, after they are pardoned, ought to be patiently ſubmitted to, and they ſhould thence take occaſion to renew their repentance; and to pour out their earneſt prayers, that their future conduct may both demonſtrate the reality, and illuſtrate the nature of that grace, which they have received: that thoſe may be aſhamed, who perſiſt in reviling them; and that many may glorify God on their account, be edified by their example, and encouraged by witneſſing their good converſation in Chriſt. The feebleſt means, when accompanied by the divine bleſſing, will produce moſt glorious effects: whilſt the carnal heart will be hardened in infidelity under the moſt concluſive evidence, and the moſt convincing miniſtry of the word. When the worſt of ſinners are brought to believe the word of God, a change will infallibly take place; and that faith will produce a fear of wrath, a deſire of eſcape, a hope of mercy, a reverence of the name and authority of the Lord, and a love to him and his people, manifeſted by ſuch means, as they have opportunity, and ability to perform. They will be ſure to repent of, and forſake known ſin; to renounce worldly intereſts, and connexions, when the neceſſity of ſo doing is perceived; and to unite intereſts with the people of God: they will be induced to ſelf denial, and to take up their croſs, and to venture perſecution, and even death itſelf, rather than to give up their hope, and purſuit of ſalvation. Such perſons may at firſt have ſmall explicit knowledge of divine truth; and much infirmity, and many miſtakes may mix with their endeavours to obey God, and ſerve his people; but their conduct will be conſcientious, and their diſpoſition teachable, and their light will increaſe continually: and no faith, which produces not ſuch fruits of obedience, and good works, will juſtify the ſinner's perſon before God, or his profeſſion before his fellow creatures. When we really diſcover the danger, to which our ſouls are expoſed, from the wrath of an offended God, and are earneſtly ſeeking the aſſurance of ſalvation from it; we ſhall feel for thoſe, who are not ſenſible of their own miſery: and this deſire will induce us to attempt doing good to our beloved friends, and relations: and thus ſuch perſons, as have been the grief, and diſgrace of their families, may, by the mercy of God, become their protection, as well as ornament. We ſinners, having a proſpect of eſcaping deſtruction, ſhould not ſeek great things for ourſelves, either in the world, or in the church; yet ſuch diſtinctions are often conferred on thoſe, who aſpire the leaſt unto them. Whilſt we are ſerving God, and employed for the good of his people, we may ſecurely confide in his protection, and need not fear what man can do unto us; as the dangers to which we may be expoſed, will eventually iſſue in admiration of the Lord's truth, love, and power, in our preſervation; yet we ſhould uſe every prudent, and lawful means of ſafety; and be thankful to, and recompenſe the inſtruments of it. But even in the exerciſe of gratitude, we muſt not oblige our benefactors in any thing, that is contrary to the will of God, or the intereſts of his people; nor flatter them with the hope of deliverance from future puniſhment, except in the method of the goſpel: and if any of our engagements are ratified with an oath, the utmoſt reverence and caution ſhould be uſed in taking, and the greateſt exactneſs in fulfilling that ſolemn obligation. Whilſt the accompliſhment of ſome of God's promiſes, is a pledge for the performance of the whole to the true believer: thoſe terrors of conſcience, and that ſenſe of divine wrath, which diſmay the ungodly, but bring them not to repentance, are fearful preſages of approaching deſtruction. But grace yet abounds to the chief of ſinners; let them without delay flee to Chriſt, and all ſhall be well.

NOTES.

CHAP. III.] V. 1. And Joſhua, &c.] Early in the morning, Joſhua took meaſures for the people's march from the place of their encampment, to the very borders of the river Jordan; where they arrived in the evening, and lodged there that night, that they might be ready to paſs over the next morning.

V. 2. After three days, &c.] That is from the orders before mentioned, (c. i. v. 11,) and perhaps from the return of the ſpies, during which time they had made all requiſite preparations. It does not appear whether the people expected a miraculous interpoſition to facilitate their paſſage, or whether they had thoughts of any other method of getting over; but they were very obedient, and tractable, and ſeem to have harboured no diſtruſt about the event. At any time the paſſage of ſuch a multitude of men, women, and children, and flocks and herds, and all their ſubſtance, by fords, or other ordinary means, muſt have been attended with much difficulty, and delay; and with great danger

3 And they commanded the people, ſaying, When ye ſee the ark of the covenant of the LORD your God, and the prieſts the Levites bearing it, then ye ſhall remove from your place, and go after it.

4 Yet there ſhall be a ſpace between you and it, about two thouſand cubits by meaſure; come not near unto it, that ye may know the way by which ye muſt go; for ye have not paſſed this way heretofore.

5 And Joſhua ſaid unto the people, Sanctify yourſelves: for to-morrow the LORD will do wonders among you.

6 And Joſhua ſpake unto the prieſts, ſaying, Take up the ark of the covenant, and paſs over before the people. And they took up the ark of the covenant, and went before the people.

7 And the LORD ſaid unto Joſhua, This day will I begin to magnify thee in the ſight of all Iſrael, that they may know that as I was with Moſes, ſo I will be with thee.

8 And thou ſhalt command the prieſts that bear the ark of the covenant, ſaying, When ye are come to the brink of the water of Jordan, ye ſhall ſtand ſtill in Jordan.

9 And Joſhua ſaid unto the children of Iſrael, Come hither, and hear the words of the LORD your God.

10 And Joſhua ſaid, Hereby ye ſhall know that the living God is among you, and that he will without fail drive out from before you the Canaanites, and the Hittites, and the Hivites, and the Perizzites, and the Girgaſhites, and the Amorites, and the Jebuſites.

11 Behold, the ark of the covenant of the LORD of all the earth paſſeth over before you into Jordan.

12 Now therefore take ye twelve men out of the tribes of Iſrael, out of every tribe a man.

13 And it ſhall come to paſs, as ſoon as the ſoles of the feet of the prieſts that bear the ark of the LORD, the Lord of all the earth, ſhall reſt in the waters of Jordan, that the waters of Jordan ſhall be cut off from the waters that come down from above; and they ſhall ſtand upon an heap.

14 And it came to paſs, when the people removed from their tents to paſs over Jordan, and the prieſts bearing the ark of the covenant before the people,

alſo, if the enemies had oppoſed them: but when Jordan overflowed all his banks, it would probably have been impracticable; for whatever appearance this river may make to modern travellers, the whole hiſtory repreſents it as being at that time a conſiderable, and rapid ſtream. However the paſſage of Jordan recorded in this chapter was peculiarly ſuited to attend all the other wonders, which the Lord had wrought for Iſrael: by a repetition of the miracles of drying up the floods, their entrance into Canaan correſponded with their departure out of Egypt; the diſmay of the Canaanites would be increaſed, the faith of the Iſraelites ſtrengthened, their expectations raiſed, and their conqueſts facilitated; and in all theſe things God would be glorified. It can only be attributed to a ſupernatural power intimidating or infatuating the minds of the Canaanites, that they never attempted to defend this barrier of their country, or to obſtruct the paſſage of the Iſraelites.

V. 3, 4.] The prieſts (who were Levites of the family of Kohath) bearing the ark, were commanded to march near three quarters of a mile before the people, until they arrived at their deſtined ſtation; by which it appeared that this ſymbol of the divine preſence protected them, not they it. A noble defiance of the enemies of Iſrael was thus given; who were, in ſome ſenſe, challenged to attack the unarmed prieſts, or to attempt to ſeize the unattended ark: the faith, and courage of the prieſts were alſo tried, and diſplayed for an example to the people: a reverence for the ſymbol of the divine preſence, ſuited to that diſpenſation of darkneſs and diſtance, was expreſſed: The whole congregation would alſo have a fairer opportunity of viewing the ark, the diviſion of Jordan, and "the "way, by which they were to go," than if it had been nearer; and as they witneſſed the obedience of the inanimate creation to their covenant God, they might alſo be inſtructed to obey likewiſe.

V. 5. Sanctify, &c.] (See note, Exod. c. xix. v. 10.)

V. 7. This day, &c.] The people wanted ſome proof that the Lord was with Joſhua, as he had been with Moſes, (c. i. v. 17,) but by this event, that was rendered unqueſtionable. At the river Jordan, and probably at Bethabara, or the houſe of paſſage, that is, in the very ſame place, where Iſrael paſſed over that river, the Lord Jeſus began to be magnified, by a voice from heaven, &c.

V. 8. When ye are come to the brink, &c.] At the brink of the river the prieſts were commanded to ſtop, until the channel was dried; and then to take their ſtation in the midſt of it, till all the people were paſſed over, (v. 17.)

V. 15. For Jordan, &c.] This aroſe from the melting of the ſnows upon mount Libanus; and this circumſtance ſeems to have been purpoſely choſen, to render the miracle more inconteſtible, and ſtupendous.

the

the water, (for Jordan overfloweth all his banks all the time of harveſt,)

16 That the waters which came down from above ſtood, and roſe up upon an heap, very far from the city Adam, that is beſide Zaretan: and thoſe that came down toward the ſea of the plain, even the ſalt ſea, failed, and were cut off; and the people paſſed over right againſt Jericho.

17 And the prieſts that bare the ark of the covenant of the LORD ſtood firm on dry ground in the midſt of Jordan, and all the Iſraelites paſſed over on dry ground, until all the people were paſſed clean over Jordan.

V. 16, 17.] The waters below ran off towards the Dead Sea, and left the channel dry for the ſpace of ſeveral miles; whilſt thoſe above accumulated by the miraculous power of God, and ſtood like mountains very far back towards the ſea of Tiberias; without inundating the adjacent country. With an illuſtrious example of faith, and obedience, the prieſts bearing the ark, marched into the midſt of the dry channel, and there took their ſtand, with the waters piled up over their heads, and nothing to prevent their being overwhelmed by them, but the inviſible power of God. In this ſtation they abode all the day long, until the people, encouraged by their example, had in ſucceſſion marched over, with all that appertained to them, and were all ſafe landed on the further ſhore. The paſſage through the Red Sea was in the night, when fleeing from the Egyptians, and with trepidation: but they paſſed Jordan in the day time, with previous warning, leiſurely, directly oppoſite to Jericho, and with a triumphant defiance of the Canaanites. This paſſage over Jordan after their weary wanderings in the wilderneſs, as an entrance into Canaan, ſhadowed out the believer's paſſage through death to heaven, after he hath finiſhed his wanderings in this ſinful world. From his firſt deliverance from the yoke of ſin, he hath been in a wilderneſs, and though fed with the bread of heaven, and drinking of the waters of life and ſalvation; though guided, guarded, and encouraged by the Providence, the Word, and the Spirit of God, he hath long been weary with his toilſome march, and hath wiſhed for reſt. To others death may well be terrific, for the conſequence is tremendous: but to the believer the river is, as it were divided, the terror is removed, the paſſage is ſafe, and ſometimes joyful, and the event glorious; for the waters are cut off; the ſecond death beyond the grave hath no power over them: Chriſt the true ark hath paſſed before them in the ſame way to glory; yea he comes and meets them, and by his animating preſence, and ſure protection, maintains their faith and hope, until they iſſue in viſion and enjoyment, being ſafe landed on Canaan's ſhore.

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.

They who are attentive to the duties of their ſtation, and enemies to ſloth, and ſelf-indulgence in every form, are likely to be eminent, and uſeful; nor can any others expect to be ſo.—We muſt not heſitate in our courſe, becauſe of diſtant difficulties, which we perceive not how we ſhall be able to ſurmount: but ſhould ſtill proceed as far as we can, and truſt in the Lord to remove the obſtacles, when the critical moment arrives; for his interpoſitions are intended to excite, not to ſuperſede our activity. But, in depending upon the Lord's aſſiſtance, we muſt look well to the path of our feet, eſpecially when "we "have not paſſed that way heretofore:" the precepts of the word of God, the diſpenſations of his Providence, the counſel, and example of his miniſters, and people, together with the inward teaching of his Holy Spirit, when properly attended to, and humbly ſought for, will make our way plain to us, though perplexed in itſelf: and we cannot in general go out of our way, in keeping cloſe to the ordinances of God, and thus following the ark in all it's removals. In the path of duty, in this manner aſcertained, we need not fear rivers of trouble, mountains of difficulty, or hoſts of oppoſing foes; but confiding in the faithful promiſe, the Almighty power, and covenant love of our God, who "is the God of the whole earth," we may proceed with all boldneſs, and alacrity. Whether we be called to endure poverty, pain, labour, perſecution, reproach, or death, we are following the author and finiſher of our faith; nor can we ſet our foot in any perilous, or arduous ſpot, through our whole journey, but faith will there deſcry the print of the Redeemer's foot, who trod that very path to glory above, and bids us follow him, "that "where he is, there we may be alſo." His miniſters are called to ſet the people an example of conſtancy, patience, and unſhaken confidence in him, by abiding in thoſe perilous, and difficult ſtations, which he hath aſſigned them, when others fear to paſs that way; and in ſo doing they may expect peculiar ſupport and protection: (Acts, c. viii. v. 1:) but if they heſitate to take the lead in facing danger, and enduring hardſhip; and ſhew an undue attention to their own eaſe, ſecurity, and indulgence, their exhortations will be very lightly regarded by the people. The more adventurous we are in the path of duty, the greater evidence we ſhall have of the Lord's love to us, and care of us; for he will not diſappoint the expectation of faith, but rather exceed, in due ſeaſon, our moſt enlarged hopes. But would we experience the more ſignal effects of his love and power, we muſt ſtudy to put away from us the pollutions of ſin, and be peculiarly careful not "to grieve the Holy "Spirit of God;" we muſt diligently obey his commandments, follow his directions, expect help from him, and give him all the glory.—The Chriſtian's courſe originates from "the working of the mighty power of God," in his converſion, and proceeds in a daily experience of that ſame power maintaining, and carrying on the work of "renew-"ing in the Spirit of his mind," in the midſt of innumerable ſnares, temptations, and counteracting obſtacles: but in the laſt conflict eſpecially the believer will find that the Lord "is able to do exceeding abundantly above all "that he aſks, or thinks, according to that power, which "now worketh in him." And ſhould the King of terrors aſſume his moſt horrid form, (like Jordan overflowing all his banks,) yet the true Chriſtian may be aſſured of a ſpeedy victory, and a glorious triumph over this laſt enemy. Yea the feeble Chriſtian, as well as he who has the ſtrongeſt faith, ſhall conquer in this conflict; ſhall paſs ſafe through 4 Then Joſhua called the twelve men whom he had prepared of the children of Iſrael, out of every tribe a man;

5 And Joſhua ſaid unto them, Paſs over before the ark of the LORD your God into the midſt of Jordan, and take ye up every man of you a ſtone upon his ſhoulder, according unto the number of the tribes of the children of Iſrael;

6 That this may be a ſign among you, that when your children aſk their fathers in time to come, ſaying, What mean ye by theſe ſtones?

7 Then ye ſhall anſwer them, That the waters of Jordan were cut off before the ark of the covenant of the LORD; when it paſſed over Jordan, the waters of Jordan were cut off: and theſe ſtones ſhall be for a memorial unto the children of Iſrael for ever.

8 And the children of Iſrael did ſo as Joſhua commanded, and took up twelve ſtones out of the midſt of Jordan, as the LORD ſpake unto Joſhua, according to the number of the tribes of the children of Iſrael, and carried them over with them unto the place where they lodged, and laid them down there.

this path, beſet with terrors, until all the company of the redeemed "are clean paſſed over," and landed ſafe on Canaan's ſhore.—For though they have none of them paſſed this way heretofore; yet Jeſus their brother, and friend hath gone before, and croſſed the river, when it's floods were ſwelled to a tremendous height: and by paſſing through he hath divided the floods before them; and he ſafely reached the heavenly ſhore, when he roſe from the dead as the firſt-fruits of his people, and aſcended into heaven as their forerunner: and he began to be magnified in the ſight of all Iſrael; when thus riſen and aſcended he ſent down his Holy Spirit, to give aſſiſtance to his apoſtles, and ſucceſs to his preached goſpel. Now therefore they may march through this dreaded river without danger, or terror, if they are but able to keep the eye of faith fixed upon his perſon, his complete ſalvation, his word of promiſe, and the inheritance, which he hath provided for them on the other ſide. Let us then treaſure up our experiences of his faithful and tender care in the whole courſe of our lives, that they may come in aid to our faith, and hope in this laſt conflict: let us carefully conſider the examples of others, whoſe deaths we witneſs, or of which we read and hear, to allay our fears, and encourage our hearts: let us prepare daily for death, by the habitual exerciſe of faith and repentance, and a conſcientious, and diligent attention to the duties of our ſtation; and let us watch and pray againſt the anxious, or diſtreſſing fear of it. The Lord will provide for our paſſage of this Jordan, when the time comes; and we ſhall ſoon join the innumerable multitude, that in the Canaan above are ſinging the praiſes of their great Deliverer, who hath both redeemed them from Egyptian bondage, and brought them ſafe to the promiſed land, through his precious blood, and by his all-conquering arm.

NOTES.

CHAP. IV.] V. 2. Take you, &c.] Theſe twelve men had before been ſelected to hold themſelves in readineſs. One was choſen to repreſent every tribe; for though ſome had received their inheritance on the other ſide of Jordan, they were all brethren united in one intereſt, and of one religion; and, to cement their union, they were all to join in ſecuring the remembrance of this ſignal miracle.

V. 3—9.] After the people were all paſſed over Jordan, and before they marched to the place of their encampment, or had opportunity of refreſhing themſelves, or taking care for their families, they were required, without delay, to take theſe meaſures of perpetuating the remembrance of this important event. The prieſts patiently and courageouſly kept their ſtation, not only until the people were all paſſed over; but until theſe men had returned into the midſt of the river, and taken each a large ſtone, probably as great as they could carry, and brought it on ſhore; and until twelve ſtones had been in the midſt of the river formed into a monument of the event, which doubtleſs was at ſome times viſible long afterwards.

V. 10. That Moſes, &c.] We read not that Moſes gave any inſtructions about their paſſage over Jordan: but he finiſhed that the LORD commanded Joſhua to ſpeak unto the people, according to all that Moſes commanded Joſhua: and the people haſted and paſſed over.

11 And it came to paſs, when all the people were clean paſſed over, that the ark of the LORD paſſed over, and the prieſts, in the preſence of the people.

12 And the children of Reuben, and the children of Gad, and half the tribe of Manaſſeh, paſſed over armed before the children of Iſrael, as Moſes ſpake unto them.

13 About forty thouſand, prepared for war, paſſed over before the LORD unto battle, to the plains of Jericho.

14 On that day the LORD magnified Joſhua in the ſight of all Iſrael; and they feared him, as they feared Moſes, all the days of his life.

15 And the LORD ſpake unto Joſhua, ſaying,

16 Command the prieſts that bear the ark of the teſtimony, that they come up out of Jordan.

17 Joſhua therefore commanded the prieſts, ſaying, Come ye up out of Jordan,

18 And it came to paſs, when the prieſts that bare the ark of the covenant of the LORD were come up out of the midſt of Jordan, and the ſoles of the prieſts feet were lifted up unto the dry land, that the waters of Jordan returned unto their place, and flowed over all his banks, as they did before.

19 And the people came up out of Jordan on the tenth day of the firſt month, and encamped in Gilgal, in the eaſt border of Jericho.

20 And thoſe twelve ſtones, which they took out of Jordan, did Joſhua pitch in Gilgal.

21 And he ſpake unto the children of Iſrael, ſaying, When your children ſhall aſk their fathers in time to come, ſaying, What mean theſe ſtones?

22 Then ye ſhall let your children know, ſaying, Iſrael came over this Jordan on dry land.

23 For the LORD your God dried up the waters of Jordan from before you, until ye were paſſed over, as the LORD your God did to the Red ſea, which he dried up from before us, until we were gone over;

24 That all the people of the earth might know the hand of the LORD, that it is mighty; that ye might fear the LORD your God for ever.

charged Joſhua to obey the Lord, and the people to be obſervant of Joſhua; to which they peculiarly attended on this occaſion. It is ſaid, "that the people haſted;" they none of them waſted any time; and ſome of them were timorous through unbelief: but there was no undue haſte or confuſion.

V. 12, 13.] This armed body of men, unincumbered with families or flocks, and prepared to repel the enemy, if they attacked them, would leave thoſe of the other tribes more at liberty to attend upon their perſonal, and domeſtic concerns.

V. 14. They feared, &c.] They honoured his perſon, and ſubmitted to his authority ever after, as they had to thoſe of Moſes, perceiving that the Lord was with him, as he had been with Moſes.

V. 16—18.] The prieſts moved not from their ſtation, till Joſhua, who had commanded them thither, had ordered them thence; nor did he give them their diſmiſſion, till he had inſtructions for the Lord ſo to do: ſo obedient were all parties, in proper ſubordination, to the word of God, and ſo entirely confident of his protection. Probably Eleazar the high prieſt inquired of, and received anſwers from the Lord for Joſhua on theſe occaſions, having a ſpecial injunction ſo to do, (Num. c. xxvii. v. 21.) As ſoon as the prieſts had reached the ſhore, and the ark, the ſymbol of the Lord's preſence, had left the river, the waters gradually reverted to their natural courſe, and flowed over all the banks as before; ſhewing that the power of him, who enacted the laws of nature, had, for the ſake of his people, for a time ſuſpended them.

V. 19. On the tenth day, &c.] This is computed to have been exactly five days ſhort of forty years after they ſet out from Egypt, and juſt in time to prepare for the celebration of the paſſover, upon their entrance into Canaan, as they had done previous to their departure from Egypt.

V. 20—24.] Some ſuppoſe that theſe ſtones were to be ſeen until the time of Chriſt, or even later: they would be an abiding memorial of this extraordinary miracle; from age to age inquiries would be excited reſpecting them; the tradition of the event would be thus perpetuated, and circulated; many both of the Iſraelites, and of the inhabitants of diſtant nations, might have their curioſity excited to look into the Scriptures, and to inquire after the wonderful works of the Lord for Iſrael; and parents would have an opportunity of diverting the inquiſitiveneſs of their children into a profitable channel, by encouraging them to aſk, and by reſolving their queſtions concerning them: and in all theſe ways they might ſubſerve the intereſts of godlineſs. Some conſider theſe twelve ſtones as types of the twelve apoſtles, who were choſen witneſſes of the Saviour's reſurrection.

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.

The works of the Lord are ſo worthy of remembrance, and the heart of man is ſo prone to forget them, that vari-

AND it came to paſs, when all the kings of the Amorites, which were on the ſide of Jordan weſtward, and all the kings of the Canaanites, which were by the ſea, heard that the LORD had dried up the waters of Jordan from before the children of Iſrael, until we were paſſed over, that their heart melted; neither was there ſpirit in them any more, becauſe of the children of Iſrael.

2 At that time the LORD ſaid unto Joſhua, Make thee ſharp knives, and circumciſe again the children of Iſrael the ſecond time.

3 And Joſhua made him ſharp knives, and circumciſed the children of Iſrael at the hill of the foreſkins.

4 And this is the cauſe why Joſhua did circumciſe: All the people that came out of Egypt that were males, even all the men of war, died in the wilderneſs by the way, after they came out of Egypt.

ous methods have been adopted to refreſh our memories, for the glory of God, and for our advantage, and that of our children. In order to concur in ſo reaſonable a ſervice, our eaſe muſt be diſregarded, and our ordinary employments and refreſhments poſtponed, that we may loſe no time in rendering the tribute of praiſe for mercies received, whilſt the ſenſe of gratitude glows in the heart, and before the lively impreſſion hath time to wear off. There is a ſtyle in the works, and in the word of God: majeſtic in ſimplicity, expreſſive and emphatic; but with genuine dignity, diſdaining the incumbrance of uſeleſs ornament, and affected ſplendour. Never did triumphal column, or arch, with all the magnificence of architecture, ſo aptly record a memorable victory, as theſe twelve rude ſtones from Jordan's channel, recorded the miraculous paſſage of Iſrael into Canaan, under the conduct of the ark of the Lord. Such is the inſtituted memorial of the Redeemer's dying love: ſimple, expreſſive, and deſcriptive both of the purchaſe, and of the appropriation of his ſalvation, of our repentance, faith, love, and gratitude; of our profeſſion, of our dependance upon him, devotedneſs to him, and fellowſhip with him, and with his people, and of our future harmonious felicity in the realms above. Yet is all this inſtruction clothed with ſuch external meanneſs, that the carnal eye can ſee no comelineſs or excellency therein, more than in him, whoſe love is therein commemorated. To make it ſuit the groveling minds, and ſelfiſh purpoſes of ambitious men, it hath been dreſſed up with pomp, and parade, of meaning, and of ceremony, which have ſo diſguiſed and perplexed the divine appointment, that many of the true diſciples of Chriſt have been ſtrangely frighted from it, as if ſome formidable miſchief lay concealed within, to the diſhonour of the Lord, and the detriment of their own ſouls. But we ſhould take every proper occaſion of attending on that ſacred ordinance, and learning from the word of God it's ſimple meaning and intention; and, ſhould gladly ſpeak of them, when opportunity is afforded, to our children, our neighbours, and to every inquirer, who ſeeks information upon the important ſubject. In this, and every thing elſe, the curioſity of our children ſhould be improved as an opening to their inſtruction: and they who take pleaſure in ſearching out the works of the Lord, and in diffuſing their knowledge amongſt ſtrangers, or perpetuating it to poſterity, ſhall more and more underſtand his loving kindneſs and mercy. Gladly ſhould we all render every ſervice we can to the church of God, and conſider ourſelves as having one common intereſt with all the families of the redeemed, however ſeparated by rivers, ſeas, or mountains; or the more unnatural partition walls of ſects and parties; and in ſo doing, we may ſafely commit our families, and intereſts to the protection of Iſrael's God. When, with careful attention to the commands and providence of God, we have taken the place, and engaged in the ſervice aſſigned us; we ought patiently to abide in it, and not to attempt to remove, till he evidently commands us thence. Nothing can hurt us in, and nothing ſhould intimidate us from ſo doing. In like manner alſo, we ought patiently to wait our diſmiſſion from this ſinful world, ready to depart, but willing to bear the croſs, and maintain the conflict, till the Lord's purpoſes for his own glory, and his people's good, be accompliſhed in us. But the removal of the righteous is freqently like the opening of the flood-gates of divine judgments upon guilty nations, which have been reſtrained by their preſence, example, and prayers: much more when the miniſters, and ordinances of God are removed, may national calamities be expected: but let us bleſs God that this is not, and let us unite in prayer that it may not be the caſe with our favoured land; and let us remember, that we are benefited by, and are bound to bleſs God for all the mercy ſhewn to his church in all ages, and nations; and every recent favour ſhould excite us to repeat his praiſes for former bleſſings.

NOTES.

CHAP. V.] V. 1. Their heart melted, &c.] Though great terror had before pervaded the minds of the inhabitants of Canaan; yet their kings ſeem to have kept up their courage: until they heard that the barrier of the land was broken through, by a miracle ſimilar to the dividing of the Red ſea, and that the vaſt multitudes of Iſrael were actually encamped in their country, with the expreſs purpoſe of poſſeſſing it, and extirpating the former inhabitants: on hearing this their hearts melted with terror, as wax before the fire, which both anticipated, and facilitated their deſtruction.

V. 2—8. Circumciſe again—the ſecond time, &c.] It appears probable from this paſſage, that there was a general circumciſion of all the Iſraelites, who had been left uncircumciſed in their bondage, previous to their departure out of Egypt: In reference to which, this is called "the ſe-"cond time." It is evident, that the Iſraelites, who had

5 Now all the people that came out were circumciſed; but all the people that were born in the wilderneſs by the way, as they came forth out of Egypt, them they had not circumciſed.

6 For the children of Iſrael walked forty years in the wilderneſs, till all the people, that were men of war, which came out of Egypt were conſumed, becauſe they obeyed not the voice of the LORD: unto whom the LORD ſware, that he would not ſhew them the land which the LORD ſware unto their fathers that he would give us, a land that floweth with milk and honey.

7 And their children whom he raiſed up in their ſtead, them Joſhua circumciſed: for they were uncircumciſed, becauſe they had not circumciſed them by the way.

8 And it came to paſs, when they had done circumciſing all the people, that they abode in their places in the camp till they were whole.

9 And the LORD ſaid unto Joſhua, This day have I rolled away the reproach of Egypt from off you: wherefore the name of the place is called Gilgal unto this day.

10 And the children of Iſrael encamped in Gilgal, and kept the paſſover on the fourteenth day of the month at even, in the plains of Jericho.

11 And they did eat of the old corn of the land on the morrow after the paſſover, unleavened cakes, and parched corn in the ſelf-ſame day.

12 And the manna ceaſed on the morrow after they had eaten of the old corn of the land; neither had the children of Iſrael manna any more; but they did eat of the fruit of the land of Canaan that year.

13 And it came to paſs, when Joſhua was by Jericho, that he lifted up his eyes and looked, and behold, there ſtood a man over againſt him, with his ſword drawn in his hand: and Joſhua went unto him, and ſaid unto him, Art thou for us, or for our adverſaries?

been born in the wilderneſs, were generally left uncircumciſed: but the cauſe of this intermiſſion is very much controverted; whether it aroſe from their ſinful negligence; or whether the Lord diſpenſed with it, during their wanderings; or whether they were laid under a kind of interdict, when the rebellious generation was doomed to die in the wilderneſs. However the command given to Joſhua, and by him to the people, to perform ſo painful an operation upon ſo great a multitude, immediately upon entering the enemy's country, when it was well known that they would thereby for ſome days be utterly diſabled, (Gen. c. xxxiv. v. 25, 26;) formed a very great trial of their faith: and their prompt and univerſal obedience in ſuch critical circumſtances manifeſted a confidence in the Lord's protection, and a ſubmiſſion to his will, which confirm the ſentiment, that this was the beſt of all the generations of Iſrael. As circumciſion was performed by any perſon, though the number to be circumciſed was great, it would ſoon be completed, probably on the very firſt day, after their paſſage over Jordan.

V. 9. Have I rolled away, &c.] When the Iſraelites were thus brought into the promiſed land, and the covenant of the Lord was thus ſolemnly ratified with them, by the appointed ſeal, the reproach of their Egyptian bondage, and idolatrous cuſtoms was rolled away; and it was plain, that the Lord had not brought them forth into the wilderneſs to deſtroy them. The word Gilgal ſignifies to roll away: the ſame place being alſo called "the Hill of "Foreſkins;" becauſe of the numbers, whoſe foreſkins were left buried there.

V. 10. Kept the paſſover, &c.] This general circumciſion was ordered as preparatory to the ſolemn obſervance of the paſſover in it's ſeaſon, for no uncircumciſed perſon might eat thereof. This was a proper entrance upon the promiſed land, as a holy land: the celebration of the paſſover immediately preceded their departure out of Egypt; and the ſame was their firſt employment upon their entrance into Canaan: for they were both brought out of Egypt, and into the land of their inheritance, "that they might "keep the Lord's ſtatutes, and obſerve his laws:" (Pſalm cv. v. 43—45.) The circumciſion being performed on the 11th day of the month, they would be enabled to eat the paſſover on the evening of the 14th; and by the time that the days of unleavened bread were ended, they would be perfectly healed, and fit for action. In the mean time, the Canaanites were intimidated, and reſtrained of God from aſſaulting them; (Exod. c. xxxiv. v. 24.) Nay, their very confidence in thus ſetting their enemies at defiance, whilſt they attended to the ordinances of their religion, and engaged Jehovah to fight their battles, if it were known amongſt the inhabitants of the land, would tend to increaſe their conſternation.

V. 11. The old corn, &c.] This they would find plentifully in the deſerted granaries of the affrighted inhabitants: and thus the manna, being no longer neceſſary, ceaſed, after having been ſent them regularly for almoſt forty years!

V. 13—15. By Jericho, &c.] Joſhua was either taking a view of the city, in order to attack it, or employed in ſerious meditation, or both alternately; when he was ſurpriſed with the appearance of one, in form as a man, with a drawn ſword in his hand: but not at all intimidated, he accoſted him, and demanded of him, whether he were an ally or an enemy; (for there were to be no neuters in that war;) and received for anſwer "that he was come, not only as an

14 And he ſaid, Nay; but as captain of the hoſt of the LORD am I now come. And Joſhua fell on his face to the earth, and did worſhip, and ſaid unto him, What ſaith my LORD unto his ſervant?

15 And the captain of the LORD's hoſt ſaid unto Joſhua, Looſe thy ſhoe from off thy foot; for the place whereon thou ſtandeſt is holy. And Joſhua did ſo.

NOW Jericho was ſtraitly ſhut up, becauſe of the children of Iſrael: none went out, and none came in.

2 And the LORD ſaid into Joſhua, See I have given into thine hand Jericho, and the king thereof, and the mighty men of valour.

" ally but as commander in chief over the Lord's hoſt, and " over Joſhua himſelf:" upon which Joſhua recognized, and worſhipped him as his Lord; and reverently proſtrating himſelf upon the earth, waited and aſked to know his will. This worſhip was not only received, but he was further commanded to ſhew the ſame token of reſpect to the heavenly viſion, which had been required, when the Lord appeared to Moſes in the buſh: this being done, he received from him the orders, contained in the enſuing chapter, which is a continuation of the ſubject. All theſe circumſtances eſtabliſh, beyond a doubt, the concluſion, that this armed man, was no other than the Son of God, Jehovah, the ſecond perſon in the ſacred Trinity, the Captain of our ſalvation, anticipating his incarnation, and aſſuring Joſhua of ſucceſs in this war; which in all reſpects was typical of the good fight of faith, that every true Chriſtian muſt fight under his banner, and in which he will conquer by his preſence and aſſiſtance.

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.

How dreadful is their caſe, whoſe condemnation is irreverſible, for whom no mercy is reſerved, and who ſee the wrath of God, and his deſerved vengeance advancing towards them with ſteady pace, without any poſſibility of averting or eſcaping them! Such will be the horrible ſituation of the wicked, when ſummoned to appear before the tribunal of an offended God; nor can words expreſs the anguiſh of their feelings, or the greatneſs of their terror, when they ſhall in vain call upon the rocks and mountains to fall upon them and hide them from the intolerable frown of their angry Judge, and the dire ſentence which they will perceive him prepared to utter againſt, and execute upon them! As their hearts cannot endure, nor their hands be ſtrong in ſuch circumſtances, O! that they would now take warning, and before it be too late, would flee for refuge to lay hold on that hope, which is ſet before them in the ſalvation of the goſpel. The maxims, and conduct of the church of God are not conformed to thoſe of the world: what general ever opened a campaign in an enemy's country in the manner that Joſhua did? On ſuch occaſions all attention paid to the exerciſes of religion, is too generally conſidered, as a needleſs waſte of time. Yet, if the help of God be the beſt ſecurity of ſucceſs, and if his anger be more to be feared than the ſword of any enemy, it will be found true policy to begin every expedition, with repentance of ſin, and attendance on his ſolemn worſhip, and with uſing every method of ſecuring his protection; though to a carnal eye the tendency may appear unfavourable to ſucceſs. However, the Chriſtian ſoldier muſt thus begin his ſpiritual warfare; nor can he face any of his enemies, without the true circumciſion of the heart, as the internal ſeal of the righteouſneſs of faith, and the ratification of the new covenant betwixt a reconciled God and his ſoul: then feeding on Chriſt, the true Paſchal Lamb, who was ſacrificed for ſinners, and keeping the feaſt with the unleavened bread of ſincerity and truth, he will be prepared for the conflict. Yet he will not proſper ſo long, as he neglects any of the ordinances, or commandments of God; or lays under the reproach of being in bondage to any ſin, of living in conformity to the world, or of acting in any thing inconſiſtent with his holy profeſſion. But duly attending to the worſhip of God, and the means of grace, and daily girding on his divine armour, (Eph. c. vi. v. 11—18;) he may boldly defy all his enemies, and reſt aſſured of the preſence and protection of the great Captain of our ſalvation; whoſe perſon he will reverently worſhip, whoſe orders he will diligently obſerve, on whoſe aſſiſtance he will entirely depend, and by whom he will at length be made more than conqueror. Many things are amiſs in the beſt ſtate of the church on earth: but when young perſons have not ſo much as the appearance of religion, it will redound to the parent's reproach, being generally the conſequence of the parent's miſconduct. When the upright believer is convinced of his neglect or ſin, he will readily ſet about amendment; and when he is in a proper frame of mind, he will account the moſt ſelf-denying commands, or myſterious diſpenſations of the Lord, reaſonable, wiſe, and kind. Finally, what the Lord requires of his people, he will ſupply them with the means of performing; when one ſource of proviſion fails, he will open another: nor ſhall the manna for their ſouls ever fail them, till they arrive at the Canaan above, and banquet on it's rich and inexhauſtible proviſions.

NOTES.

CHAP. VI.] V. 1. Straitly ſhut up, &c.] The king, and people of Jericho did not poſſeſs courage enough to attack the invaders; but ſhut themſelves up in the city, where doubtleſs they expected to defend themſelves under the protection of their walls, till ſuccours ſhould arrive from other quarters. We do not find that they made any advances towards an accommodation.

V. 2. And the Lord, &c.] The ſame perſon, who in 3 And ye ſhall compaſs the city, all ye men of war, and go round about the city once. Thus ſhalt thou do ſix days.

4 And ſeven prieſts ſhall bear before the ark ſeven trumpets of rams horns: and the ſeventh day ye ſhall compaſs the city ſeven times, and the prieſts ſhall blow with the trumpets.

5 And it ſhall come to paſs that when they make a long blaſt with the ram's horn, and when ye hear the ſound of the trumpet, all the people ſhall ſhout with a great ſhout; and the wall of the city ſhall fall down flat, and the people ſhall aſcend up every man ſtraight before him.

6 And Joſhua the ſon of Nun called the prieſts, and ſaid unto them, Take up the ark of the covenant, and let ſeven prieſts bear ſeven trumpets of rams horns before the ark of the LORD.

7 And he ſaid unto the people, Paſs on, and compaſs the city, and let him that is armed paſs on before the ark of the LORD.

8 And it came to paſs, when Joſhua had ſpoken unto the people, that the ſeven prieſts bearing the ſeven trumpets of rams horns paſſed on before the LORD, and blew with the trumpets: and the ark of the covenant of the LORD followed them.

9 And the armed men went before the prieſts that blew with the trumpets, and the rere-ward came after the ark, the prieſts going on, and blowing with the trumpets.

10 And Joſhua had commanded the people, ſaying, Ye ſhall not ſhout, nor make any noiſe with your voice, neither ſhall any word proceed out of your mouth until the day I bid you ſhout; then ſhall ye ſhout.

11 So the ark of the LORD compaſſed the city, going about it once: and they came into the camp, and lodged in the camp.

12 And Joſhua roſe early in the morning, and the prieſts took up the ark of the LORD.

13 And ſeven prieſts bearing ſeven trumpets of rams horns before the ark of the LORD, went on continually, and blew with the trumpets: and the armed men went before them; but the rere-ward came after the ark of the LORD, the prieſts going on and blowing with the trumpets.

the preceding chapter, called himſelf "the captain of the "hoſt of the Lord," is here called Jehovah: by commiſſion from him, and according to his inſtructions Joſhua was to commence, and conduct his hoſtilities againſt the Canaanites: and his authority ſanctioned, and even ſanctified all the terrible executions, with which it was attended; the ſword in his hand being the ſword of juſtice drawn againſt condemned criminals.

V. 3—5.] By this extraordinary method of beſieging the city, the Lord was pleaſed to put honour upon the ark, as the ſymbol of his preſence, and to manifeſt that all their victories were from him; for this was a ſpecimen, and key, for the explanation of thoſe that followed, by what means ſoever they were obtained. The faith, and patience of the people were thereby proved, and increaſed. The nature, and the utility of divinely appointed means were alſo illuſtrated, which muſt not be neglected, though utterly ineffectual in themſelves. The people's regard to the prieſthood would be augmented, and they would more readily give them their dues, when the Lord had thus employed them in the conqueſt of the land: and the preached goſpel, and it's effects, were typified thereby.—The word tranſlated "of rams horns," may be rendered "trumpets "of jubile," that is ſuch as were to be blown in the year of jubile: for their entrance upon the promiſed land was indeed a jubile unto them: inſtead of the dreadful trumpet of war, they were to ſound the trumpet of joy, as already conquerors, in the anticipation of aſſured faith. Probably they were the ſame trumpets, whoſe uſe was preſcribed before. (Numb. c. x. v. 1—10.) But as the number of the prieſts increaſed, more trumpets were formed either of ſilver, or of ſome other materials. The repeated preſcription of the number ſeven on this occaſion muſt not paſs unnoticed: "Seven prieſts," "ſeven trumpets," "ſeven "days," and "ſeven times on the ſeventh day." This attention to the number ſeven in Scripture probably had reference to the creation of the world in ſix days, and the Lord's reſting on the ſeventh, which completed the firſt week; and was the firſt reaſon aſſigned for the ſanctification of the ſabbath; and occaſioned the meaſuring of time, by the periodical return of the ſeventh day, in almoſt all ages and nations ever ſince. One of theſe ſeven days muſt have been a ſabbath-day; the Jews ſay, that it was the laſt, on which the city was taken: and as the labour employed was in the work of God, and immediately for his glory; and as it alſo typified the preached goſpel, which abounds moſt on the Lord's day, no objection ariſes againſt it from the fourth commandment; any more, than againſt the man's carrying his bed on the ſabbath day, in honour of Chriſt, who had healed him.

V. 7. Paſs on, &c.] This would be needful in order to level the fences, and remove all obſtructions out of the way, in paſſing round the city. This unprecedented proceſſion would create much ſurpriſe, and ſome conſternation at firſt among the inhabitants: but when one day paſſed after another, and the Iſraelites did not aſſault the city, and no effect followed from their marching about it; they would probably become ſecure, and treat the whole buſineſs with deriſion, as a mere ſenſeleſs parade.

14 And the ſecond day they compaſſed the city once, and returned into the camp: ſo they did ſix days.

15 And it came to paſs on the ſeventh day, that they roſe early, about the dawning of the day, and compaſſed the city after the ſame manner ſeven times: only on that day they compaſſed the city ſeven times.

16 And it came to paſs at the ſeventh time, when the prieſts blew with the trumpets, Joſhua ſaid unto the people, Shout; for the LORD hath given you the city.

17 And the city ſhall be accurſed, even it, and all that are therein, to the LORD: only Rahab the harlot ſhall live, ſhe and all that are with her in the houſe, becauſe ſhe hid the meſſengers that we ſent.

18 And you in any wiſe keep yourſelves from the accurſed thing, leſt ye make yourſelves accurſed when ye take of the accurſed thing, and make the camp of Iſrael a curſe, and trouble it.

19 But all the ſilver, and gold, and veſſels of braſs and iron, are conſecrated unto the LORD: they ſhall come into the treaſury of the LORD.

20 So the people ſhouted when the prieſts blew with the trumpets: and it came to paſs, when the people heard the ſound of the trumpet, and the people ſhouted with a great ſhout, that the wall fell down flat, ſo that the people went up into the city, every man ſtraight before him, and they took the city.

21 And they utterly deſtroyed all that was in the city, both men and women, young and old, and ox, and ſheep, and aſs, with the edge of the ſword.

22 But Joſhua had ſaid unto the two men that had ſpied out the country, Go into the harlot's houſe, and bring out thence the woman, and all that ſhe hath, as ye ſware unto her.

23 And the young men that were ſpies went in, and brought out Rahab, and her father, and her mother, and her brethren, and all that ſhe had; and they brought out all her kindred, and left them without the camp of Iſrael.

24 And they burnt the city with fire, and all that was therein: only the ſilver, and the gold, and the veſſels of braſs, and of iron, they put into the treaſury of the houſe of the LORD.

25 And Joſhua ſaved Rahab the harlot alive, and her father's houſehold, and all that ſhe had; and ſhe dwelleth in Iſrael even unto this day: becauſe ſhe hid the meſſengers which Joſhua ſent to ſpy out Jericho.

26 And Joſhua adjured them at that time, ſaying, Curſed be the man before the LORD, that riſeth up and buildeth this city Jericho: he ſhall lay the foundation thereof in his firſt-

V. 17—19.] (Note, Lev. c. xxvii. v. 28.) This city was, as it were, the firſt-fruits of Canaan, and was as ſuch to be wholly devoted to the Lord: the only advantages, which the people derived from this miraculous victory, were the deſtruction of their enemies, the dominion of the land, and the enriching of the ſanctuary. Every living creature was commanded to be ſlain, except Rahab, and thoſe, who had taken refuge in her houſe; and whatever was not conſumed with fire was to be brought into the treaſury of the Lord. And if any Iſraelite dared to appropriate any part to himſelf, the curſe of Jericho would reſt upon him, and upon the camp of Iſrael, until he alſo, and all that appertained to him, were utterly deſtroyed. The whole was to be a ſolemn, and awful ſacrifice to the juſtice of God upon them, who had filled up the meaſure of their iniquities.

V. 22. Go into the harlot's houſe, &c.] As Rahab's houſe ſtood upon the wall of the city, the preſervation of it muſt be the effect of the Lord's ſpecial care of her: for had he ſo pleaſed, ſhe might have periſhed with the other inhabitants, without any violation of the ſpies engagement in behalf of Iſrael. But her faith ſaved her: the temporal deliverance was the pledge of eternal felicity; ſhe was firſt honoured as an inſtrument for the preſervation of her relations; then ſhe became a wife, and mother in Iſrael, and an anceſtor of David, and of Chriſt.

V. 26. Curſed be the man, &c.] Jericho, as devoted to utter deſtruction, was to continue a perpetual deſolation, and if any man ventured to rebuild it, he would do it at his peril, (1 Kings, c. xvi. v. 34,) for it was to be an emblem of the "everlaſting puniſhment," into which they ſhall go away, who are ſentenced to depart accurſed from God at the day of judgment.

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.

When ſinners are not only repeatedly warned to flee from the wrath to come, but are alarmed, and diſquieted in their conſciences with the apprehenſions of impending vengeance; yet harden their hearts in impenitency, and diſdain to ſue for peace, or to aſk forgiveneſs of God; they may be conſidered as "devoted to utter deſtruction:" nor can any counſel, courage, ſtrength, or numbers afford them the leaſt ſecurity, in their infatuated conteſt with the Almighty.

born, and in his youngeſt ſon ſhall he ſet up the gates of it.

27 So the LORD was with Joſhua; and his fame was noiſed throughout all the country.

When the Lord effects his purpoſes by ſuch means, and inſtruments, as we deem adequate; our views are apt to terminate upon them, and to overlook him, "who worketh "all things according to the counſel of his own will." To obviate this propenſity of the human mind, the Lord ſometimes deviates from the common track, and works by methods, or inſtruments, which in themſelves have no real, or apparent ſuitableneſs to, or connexion with the effect to be produced by them. (1 Cor. c. i. v. 27, 28.) But our duty is to uſe only thoſe means, which the Lord appoints, or allows; to ſubmit to his will, and depend upon his bleſſing in ſo doing; and with patient waiting, and ſelf-denying diligence to expect the event; and we ſhall thus ſucceed, as far as it is conducive to our real good. The Lord takes peculiar pleaſure in leading men's attention to, and increaſing their regard for his own truths, and ordinances; in exerciſing their faith, and patience, in inuring them to ſubmit their underſtandings implicitly to his teaching, and their will to his authority; and in ſecuring to himſelf their praiſes, and thankful acknowledgments.—In promoting true religion eſpecially he works by means, and inſtruments, which the proud, the learned, the wiſe, and the wealthy of this world generally deſpiſe. The doctrine of a crucified Saviour, who is "GOD MANIFESTED "IN THE FLESH," as the only foundation of a ſinner's hope of pardon and acceptance, and the only ſource of ſanctifying grace, and true holineſs; preached by miniſters generally of obſcure original, and moderate abilities, and deſtitute of the advantages of eminent learning, or eloquence; ſometimes even homely, and uncouth in their appearance, and addreſs; and who are themſelves conſcious of much unworthineſ, infirmity, and inſufficiency for ſo arduous, and important an employ: this, I ſay, from generation to generation, in every country of the world, hath been the Lord's ordinary methods of accompliſhing thoſe purpoſes, which philoſophers, moraliſts, and lawgivers have attempted in vain; namely, "of teaching numbers to do "good, who have been accuſtomed to do evil." The diſregarded trumpet, blown by the deſpiſed miniſter; "the "preaching of the croſs," which is fooliſhneſs to them "that periſh," is only the token; the operation is from God. When that ſignal is given, in ſimple dependance upon "the exceeding greatneſs of his mighty power," it becomes indeed mighty through God, and ſatan's ſtrong holds fall before it; (2 Cor. c. x. v. 4, 5.) Thus, at different periods have heathen idolatry, and Popiſh ſuperſtition fallen before this trumpet's feeble blaſt, attended with the ſhout, the fervent united prayers of the true Iſrael of God.—At ſome future period, (perhaps commencing early in the ſeventh thouſand years,) this goſpel ſhall be preached more earneſtly, more generally, and more ſucceſsfully than ever, and ſatan's remaining bulwarks ſhall all fall down to the ground; "and the kingdoms of the earth ſhall become "the kingdoms of the Lord, and of his Chriſt."—In the mean time this goſpel is never preached in vain, in any nation, city, town, village, or houſe, by miniſters of any name, or ſect, who ſimply ſeek the glory of God, and the ſalvation of ſouls thereby. Let experience decide, whether in our age and nation, this ſame "fooliſhneſs of preach-"ing," notwithſtanding all the imperfection of the inſtruments, hath not done more towards checking the enormous progreſs of profligacy, and open ungodlineſs, and producing a regard to the ordinances, and commandments of God, in every part of the land, than all other means combined: and whether a greater number of undeniable inſtances of open, hardened, atrocious ſinners being transformed into new creatures, and leading new lives, and becoming excellent relations, and members of ſociety, cannot be produced amongſt thoſe who profeſs, and preach, "Chriſt "Jeſus and him crucified!" than amongſt thoſe, who patroniſe a ſyſtem profeſſedly more rational, wiſe, and liberal. The latter is man's contrivance, and is left to it's own efficacy; the former is God's ordinance, and like the trumpets ſounding round the walls of Jericho, is rendered effectual by the power of God.—But would we witneſs more of theſe bleſſed effects of a preached goſpel, the miniſters muſt ſtrictly adhere to the Lord's directions, and ſimply depend on, expect, pray, and wait for his bleſſing; and not yield to wearineſs, though they long ſeem to labour in vain: they muſt be inſtant in ſeaſon, and out of ſeaſon; embracing every opportunity of preaching the word to few, or to many, every day, but abounding therein on the Lord's day; and they muſt diſregard the cauſeleſs reproaches, ſcoffs, and ſlanders of oppoſers; but ſhould be careful that they give no occaſion to thoſe, who ſeek occaſion of ſpeaking reproachfully. The people alſo, who know the joyful ſound ſhould ſhew their concurrence by a diligent attendance upon the word preached; they ſhould endeavour to ſtrengthen the hands, and encourage the hearts of the miniſters, by their holy examples, and concurring endeavours, in their families, and amongſt their connexions; and they ſhould eſpecially unite in earneſt, and conſtant prayers for the bleſſing of God upon their labours. But it ſhould be peculiarly noticed that the ſame goſpel, which proclaims ſalvation to the chief of ſinners, who believe, becomes the occaſion of increaſing, and accelerating condemnation to the obſtinate, and impenitent, who are never more in danger of immediate deſtruction, than when moſt careleſs, and ſecure; (1 Theſ. c. v. ver. 3.) Where the Lord hath given faith, he will in due time complete ſalvation: and when his grace is beſtowed upon one in a family, that one is often made the honoured inſtrument of bringing others of them to partake of the ſame bleſſings. The ſevereſt judgments of God, however they are at preſent objected to, will at the day, when the ſecrets of all hearts ſhall be diſcloſed, appear moſt perfectly righteous. Whoſoever is honoured as an inſtrument in the Lord's work, ſhould count the glory of God his firſt object, and patiently wait his time, and manner of being graciouſly recompenſed; for a covetous ſelfiſh profeſſor, or miniſter, who is more attentive to his own gain, than the glory of God, is not only accurſed himſelf, but a curſe to the ſociety, or congregation, to which he belongs. That can never be loſt, which is devoted to God, nor waſted, that is ſpent in his ſervice; nor will the leaſt kindneſs ſhewn to any of his people, for his ſake, go unrewarded. But how deep are the counſels of God! Grace abounds to ſome of the chief of ſinners; whilſt vengeance is poured out upon others of

2 And Joſhua ſent men from Jericho to Ai, which is beſide Beth-aven, on the eaſt ſide of Beth-el, and ſpake unto them, ſaying, Go up and view the country. And the men went up and viewed Ai.

3 And they returned to Joſhua, and ſaid unto him, Let not all the people go up; but let about two or three thouſand men go up and ſmite Ai, and make not all the people to labour thither: for they are but few.

4 So there went up thither of the people about three thouſand men; and they fled before the men of Ai.

6 And Joſhua rent his clothes, and fell to the earth upon his face before the ark of the LORD until the even-tide, he and the elders of Iſrael, and put duſt upon their heads.

NOTES.

CHAP. VII.] V. 1. But the children, &c.] We have repeatedly read of the moſt promiſing appearances being blaſted by the ſins of the people: but here we read of wrath coming upon the whole congregation, through the ſin of one man. Contrary to the expreſs command, and in contempt of the awful curſe of God, Achan had ventured to appropriate part of the ſpoil of Jericho. The temptation was ſtrong, and he was overcome by it; we have rather cauſe to admire, that none elſe were guilty, than that one was. At the opening of the tabernacle worſhip we met with one ſtriking inſtance of the ſeverity of divine juſtice: here, upon the commencement of the wars of Canaan, we read of another: and the infancy of the Chriſtian church preſents to our view a ſimilar example. All were doubtleſs intended to increaſe reverence, and godly fear, to promote circumſpection, and to prevent wickedneſs in general, and hypocriſy in particular, from diſgracing the camp of Iſrael, or the church of God. And that the inſtance before us might excite the more general vigilance in Joſhua, in the elders, and in every Iſraelite; they were made to underſtand, that the guilt of an individual in theſe atrocious crimes, would be accounted the ſin of them all; until detected, and puniſhed; for they were all one body, nor could any part be infected with ſo dire a diſeaſe, without the detriment, and danger of the whole.

V. 3—5.] Their eaſy conqueſt of Jericho had not only encouraged them to hope for great ſucceſs, through the power of the Lord fighting for them; but had alſo excited a contempt of the enemy, a diſpoſition to ſpare themſelves, and one another's labour, and to expect the Lord to do all for them, without their uſing the proper means. Thus do men abuſe the doctrines of divine grace, and the promiſes of God, into an excuſe for their own ſloth, and ſelf-indulgence! Nor can we entirely exculpate Joſhua, as he ſeems to have formed his meaſures, without aſking counſel of the Lord; who left them to follow their own devices, in order to bring to light, and puniſh Achan's ſin.

V. 5. About thirty, and ſix men, &c.] Whether theſe men were peculiarly guilty of ſecret ſin, or not, (Gen. c. xxxviii. v. 7,) the Lord had righteous, and wiſe reaſons for his conduct; and the conſideration of man's ſinfulneſs, and of a future ſtate of retributions, will ſolve the difficulties in all ſuch providential diſpenſations.

V. 6—9.] Joſhua, and the elders very juſtly conſidered this ill ſucceſs as a divine rebuke, and properly thus expreſſed their ſorrow and humiliation before the ark of the Lord, in the moſt ſelf abaſing poſture: Joſhua's plea in prayer alſo was excellent; and his concern for the honour of God, more than even for the fate of Iſrael, if their enemies ſhould prevail over, and deſtroy them, was the genuine language of the Spirit of adoption. But all this was

10 And the LORD ſaid unto Joſhua, Get thee up; wherefore lieſt thou thus upon thy face?

11 Iſrael hath ſinned, and they have alſo tranſgreſſed my covenant which I commanded them: for they have even taken of the accurſed thing, and have alſo ſtolen, and diſſembled alſo, and they have put it even amongſt their own ſtuff.

12 Therefore the children of Iſrael could not ſtand before their enemies, but turned their backs before their enemies, becauſe they were accurſed: neither will I be with you any more, except ye deſtroy the accurſed from amongſt you.

13 Up, ſanctify the people, and ſay, Sanctify yourſelves againſt to-morrow; for thus ſaith the LORD God of Iſrael, There is an accurſed thing in the midſt of thee, O Iſrael: thou canſt not ſtand before thine enemies, until ye take away the accurſed thing from among you.

14 In the morning therefore ye ſhall be brought according to your tribes: and it ſhall be, that the tribe which the LORD taketh ſhall come according to the families thereof; and the family which the LORD ſhall take ſhall come by houſholds; and the houſhold which the LORD ſhall take ſhall come man by man.

15 And it ſhall be, that he that is taken with the accurſed thing ſhall be burnt with fire, he and all that he hath; becauſe he hath tranſgreſſed the covenant of the LORD, and becauſe he hath wrought folly in Iſrael.

16 So Joſhua roſe up early in the morning, and brought Iſrael by their tribes; and the tribe of Judah was taken:

17 And he brought the family of Judah; and he took the family of the Zarhites: and he brought the family of the Zarhites man by man; and Zabdi was taken:

18 And he brought his houſhold man by man; and Achan, the ſon of Carmi, the ſon of Zabdi, the ſon of Zerah, of the tribe of Judah, was taken.

19 And Joſhua ſaid unto Achan, My ſon, give, I pray thee, glory to the LORD God of Iſrael, and make confeſſion unto him: and tell me now what thou haſt done; hide it not from me.

20 And Achan anſwered Joſhua, and ſaid, Indeed I have ſinned againſt the LORD God of Iſrael, and thus and thus have I done:

evidently mixed with much infirmity: his conſidering this trivial check, as a forerunner of total ruin; his inquiring wherefore the Lord had brought them over Jordan; and above all his implied ſuſpicion, that it was in order to deliver them into the hands of the Amorites, may eaſily be accounted for, but cannot be excuſed.

V. 10. Get thee up, &c.] The Lord rebukes his deſpondency, and unbelieving fears, and intimates, that as chief magiſtrate, he hath other work to attend to, and had ſpent a full proportion of time in thus proſtrating himſelf before the ark; and that his prayers would be anſwered, when he had performed his duty, in removing the accurſed thing from amongſt them.

V. 11. Iſrael hath ſinned, &c.] The Lord had not broke his word, nor was his arm ſhortened, but Iſrael had ſinned, (Iſaiah, c. lix. v. 1—4;) and the crime was ſo great, that unleſs the offender were made a public example of, it would be interpreted as a breach of covenant, and the Lord would be with them no more.

V. 16—18.] The Lord was not pleaſed to point out the criminal immediately, but left the matter in ambiguity for ſome time, and at laſt brought it to light gradually; not only that both magiſtrates, and people might learn to do their duty, and to keep a vigilant eye over one another: but that the delay, and the proceſs might make the tranſaction more ſolemn, and excite the more ſelf examination, and earneſt ſanctification of themſelves, as they were commanded, by every method, which was appointed in their law. Then the matter ſeems to have been decided by lot, as an appeal to the heart-ſearching God. The feelings of Achan muſt have been very poignant, when he was thus ſingled out as the accurſed perſon, for whoſe ſake wrath was come upon Iſrael; (Jon. c. i. v. 7—12.) The tribe, family, and parentage of the offender are thus ſpecified, that the infamy of ſuch a crime might not reſt on the reputation of any other perſon, of the ſame name.

V. 19. My ſon give, &c.] Without any reproach, or inſult, with much calmneſs, and meekneſs Joſhua gave Achan the beſt counſel, of which his circumſtances could poſſibly admit: he addreſſed him even with the tender appellation of "my ſon," and exhorted him "to give glory unto "God, by confeſſing his ſin." This would imply an acknowledgment that the commandment was reaſonable, and the penalty equitable, that he himſelf was indeed the tranſgreſſor, and merited the puniſhment. It would give the Lord the glory of his omniſcience, of his juſtice, of his holineſs, of his authority, of his truth, and indeed of all his perfections; and by taking ſhame to himſelf, and accepting the puniſhment of his ſin in this world, he might beſt ſeek for mercy to his ſoul in the world to come. In all this Joſhua's conduct is worthy of the imitation of all Chriſtian magiſtrates, when under the painful neceſſity of pronouncing the ſentence of death upon criminals.

V. 20. Indeed I have ſinned, &c.] Had not Achan's confeſſion been extorted by the preceding proceſs, and delayed till he could no longer conceal his guilt, one would 21 When I ſaw among the ſpoils a goodly Babyloniſh garment, and two hundred ſhekels of ſilver, and a wedge of gold of fifty ſhekels weight, then I coveted them, and took them; and, behold, they are hid in the earth in the midſt of my tent, and the ſilver under it.

22 So Joſhua ſent meſſengers, and they ran unto the tent; and, behold, it was hid in his tent, and the ſilver under it.

23 And they took them out of the midſt of the tent, and brought them unto Joſhua, and unto all the children of Iſrael, and laid them out before the LORD.

24 And Joſhua, and all Iſrael with him, took Achan the ſon of Zerah, and the ſilver, and the garment, and the wedge of gold, and his ſons, and his daughters, and his oxen, and his aſſes, and his ſheep, and his tent, and all that he had; and they brought them into the valley of Achor.

25 And Joſhua ſaid, Why haſt thou troubled us? the LORD ſhall trouble thee this day. And all Iſrael ſtoned him with ſtones, and burned them with fire, after they had ſtoned them with ſtones.

26 And they raiſed over him a great heap have deemed him a true penitent. However, though late, it was frank, and ingenuous: he not only allowed the fact, and the offence againſt Iſrael, but confeſſed "that he had "ſinned againſt the Lord God of Iſrael;" (Pſalm li. v. 4;) he deſcended to particulars, attempted no excuſe, or extenuation, complained not of the ſeverity of the ſentence, and made no attempts to prevent it's execution. As Joſhua ſays, (v. 25,) "the Lord ſhall trouble thee this day," ſome have thence argued the ſalvation of his ſoul; but we have nothing to do with deciding ſuch queſtions.

V. 21. I ſaw, &c.] The temptation entered by the carnal ſenſe, and excited the concupiſcence of the carnal heart; thus luſt was conceived, and ſin was brought forth. The goodly Babyloniſh garment, ſome coſtly robe, far fetched, and dear bought, was reſcued from the flames: and gold, and ſilver to the amount of eighty, or ninety pounds, were ſacrilegiouſly kept back from the treaſury of the Lord. For ſuch a goodly price, did Achan render himſelf accurſed, forfeited the fair proſpect of a rich inheritance in Canaan, became the troubler of Iſrael, and ruined his whole family; beſides the imminent danger, to which he expoſed his immortal ſoul! Such folly, as well as wickedneſs did he work in Iſrael, where true wiſdom might readily have been learned. No ſooner had he got poſſeſſion of his plunder, than it became his burden; and had he not been miraculouſly detected, he would have been conſumed with terrors, and would not have dared to uſe his ill-gotten treaſure: and when the other Iſraelites had been enriched, and enjoyed their abundance with credit, and a bleſſing, he would have loſt all the comfort of his portion, through this accurſed thing. So differently do the objects of temptation appear at a diſtance, to what they do, when apprehended, and when the infatuation ceaſes!

V. 23. Laid them out before, &c.] Being thus ſeparated from Iſrael's ſubſtance, and laid before the Lord, they both evidenced Achan's guilt, and the innocence of the others, that the wrath of the Lord might reſt on him, and be turned away from them.

V. 24. His ſons, &c.] This was forbidden to magiſtrates upon their own authority: but all lives are the Lord's, and he can ſet all right in a future ſtate; the ungodly deſerve worſe puniſhment than temporal death, and the righteous are only the ſooner taken to heaven. This circumſtance would be a vehement expreſſion of the exceeding enormity of the offence; and render the example more affecting, and alarming.

V. 25, 26.] It ſeems that they were firſt ſtoned, and then burned; which might denote the anger of God, that beyond death will purſue, and puniſh the impenitent. The heap of ſtones would perpetuate the memory of his ſin, and puniſhment, for the inſtruction of future generations: as would alſo the name given to the place, which ſignifies "trouble." (Hoſea, c. ii. v. 15.)

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.

When men by their crimes provoke the Lord to anger, he commonly leaves them to their own miſtaken counſels, and thus their own iniquity corrects them. The people of God can never expect to proſper in any undertaking, concerning which they have not inquired of the Lord to know his will, and crave his aſſiſtance; or in which they have indulged ſloth, or vain confidence, or tempted the Lord by expecting his aſſiſtance in the neglect of proper means. But human nature is prone to extremes: like children, we are eaſily elated by a little ſucceſs, and fancy that we ſhall now carry all before us: and when, in order to humble us, and to check the growth of ſelf-confidence, the Lord is pleaſed to throw ſome diſcouragement in our way; we are as eaſily thrown into deſpondency, and induced to forebode the moſt fatal conſequences. Every failure of ſucceſs in ſuch undertakings, as are evidently according to the will of God, and the duty of our place, and ſtation, ſhould cauſe us to humble ourſelves before God, and to flee to his mercy ſeat, to pour out our hearts before him, and inquire wherefore he contendeth with us? to plead his promiſes, and the glory of his great name, as engaged to ſupport that cauſe, which we are endeavouring to promote, whatever becomes of us, and our worthleſs names. But in the very prayers of the beſt of men there is much evil, which the Lord might juſtly condemn, and for which he will frequently rebuke, and chaſten them: eſpecially when they appear ungrateful for former mercies, murmuring, or deſponding on account of preſent trials, diſtruſtful of his faithfulneſs, or ſuſpicious of his future intentions reſpecting them. But what ſhall we then ſay, "when Iſrael turneth their backs "before their enemies?" It is not enough that the forces be recruited, that the paſſes be ſtrengthened, that the cowards be puniſhed, that the valiant be rewarded, that the ſoldiers be animated by word, and deed, and that the enſuing aſſault be conducted with more ſkill, and circumſpection. The matter is not thus: Iſrael hath ſinned, and God is provoked; and nothing can enſure ſucceſs, until his indignation be turned away, and the accurſed thing be removed out of the camp. Times therefore of public danger, and calamity with nations profeſſing Chriſtianity, and the proteſtant religion, ſhould be times of peculiar reformation; notorious criminals ought then to be ſearched out, and brought to condign puniſhment, eſpecially ſuch as have enriched themſelves by ſacrilege, by perjury, by murder, oppreſſion, and iniquitous traffic. And whilſt ſuch criminals are connived at, and ſuffered to eſcape with impunity: yea, until ſomewhat effectual hath been done towards expiating national guilt, by the execution of public juſtice, on thoſe whoſe daring crimes, have brought the wrath of God on a guilty land, there is no cauſe to wonder, that they turn their backs upon their enemies, and little hope that God will be with them any more, notwithſtanding all their faſtings and prayers. And ſince theſe things have been ſo much difregarded in proteſtant countries, they have been left to quarrel with one another; and to become the inſtruments of each other's correction, inſtead of being united, and proſpering in repelling the aſſaults of their common enemies. But may it not alſo be ſeriouſly queſtioned whether the caſe be not the ſame with reſpect of the ſucceſs of the preached goſpel, and the ſtate of religion amongſt us? It is to be feared that there hath been ſometimes more zeal ſhewn in ſupporting the intereſts of one party, againſt thoſe of other parties, than the intereſts of vital Godlineſs, againſt thoſe of infidelity, profligacy, and formal profeſſion: and that the favour, and concurrence of many a covetous Achan, has not only been accepted of, but aſſiduouſly ſought after, and with competition. Still more evidently doth it appear that there hath not always been due care taken to cenſure, and proteſt againſt, or exclude ſuch profeſſors, who are evidently the ſlaves of avarice, worldly luſts, and the pride of life; and to direct the ſearching word of God to their conſciences, in ſuch a manner, as effectually to make them underſtand, that their profeſſion of the doctrines of the goſpel, their attendance on the ordinances, and ſupport of the miniſters of God, will never ſave their ſouls, unleſs their idols be dethroned, and their hearts and lives renewed, by the converting grace of God. It is to be apprehended that there are ſome Achans in our congregations, whoſe lives prejudice men's minds againſt the truth, and bring a ſecret blaſt upon our miniſtry; nor will the Lord be with us any more, as he hath been with others before us, unleſs we do our beſt endeavours, without any partial, or perſonal regards, to ſeparate from amongſt us. And it is propoſed as a matter of ſerious inquiry, whether the preſent lamentable diviſions amongſt the profeſſors of ſerious Godlineſs; the confeſſedly ſmall ſucceſs of the preached goſpel, compared with that of former times; and the moſt alarming progreſs of open infidelity, be not in great meaſure to be aſcribed to the ſame cauſe, as Iſrael's defeat before Ai. But firſt of all we ſhould look at home, into our own hearts, and into our own houſes; and make diligent ſearch, whether there be not ſome accurſed thing there, which God ſees, and abhors; ſome unmortified luſt, ſome iniquitous gain, "put amongſt "our own ſtuff;" ſome withholding from God, and the poor their dues, in order to gratify avarice, or ſupport the expence of luxury, and the pride of life. If this be the caſe, no wonder we do not proſper in our ſouls, or in our miniſtry; no wonder if we get no benefit from our attendance upon ordinances, nor ſee any conſiderable effects from our unremitted, and moſt earneſt preaching from year to year. Nor can we expect to proſper any better, until the accurſed thing be deſtroyed out of our hearts, and removed out of our habitations, and forſaken in our lives. Nor muſt we only be careful that we ourſelves do not diſſemble any ſecret iniquity; but muſt remember that we are accountable for our families alſo, if we do not uſe all our circumſpection, and exert our authority to preſerve them free from every accurſed thing. In this way will Iſrael proſper, our ſouls will be like a watered garden, (Iſaiah, c. lviii. v. 11.) and the word of God will have free courſe, and be glorified, our God will be with us, and fight for us, and Iſrael ſhall no more turn their backs upon their enemies. Would we avoid the commiſſion of groſs iniquity, we muſt make a covenant with our eyes, and with all our ſenſes; we muſt learn to behold every ſurrounding object by faith, through the medium of God's word, not by ſenſe, through the medium of a worldly judgment, and a carnal mind: we muſt repreſs the firſt movings of concupiſcence in our hearts, and pray earneſtly, not to be led into temptation; we muſt habituate ourſelves to meditate upon the future conſequences of ſinful gratifications, to our characters, families, connexions, and temporal intereſts; to our conſcience, peace, and eternal concerns; to the church of God, and to the world around us; and to place ourſelves, by an effort of the imagination, in thoſe very circumſtances, in which we ſhall be, when the ſin is committed, and the infatuation is vaniſhed; and to conſider what our judgments, and feelings in that caſe would be. We ſhould alſo treat all expectations of ſecrecy, and impunity, as the deluſions of ſatan, and ſhould beware of hypocriſy: from our judge we can conceal nothing; and ſecreting our offences from our fellow criminals will avail us very little, and we may be ſure our iniquity will at length find us out. We ſhould alſo accuſtom ourſelves to ſelf-denial, and patient waiting; for the bleſſings, which God reſerves for his people, are like fruit, which will be wholeſome, when it hath had time to ripen, but will certainly be noxious, if greedily ſeized before the proper ſeaſon. When we are conſcious, that we have ſinned, we ſhould without delay confeſs our guilt fully, and ingenuouſly; and if the matter requires it, we ſhould glorify God and take ſhame to ourſelves, by an open acknowledgment of our crimes, and juſtify him, in all the temporal puniſhments, which we endure: for, bleſſed be his name, through him, who was made a curſe for us, all manner of ſins, and blaſphemies ſhall be forgiven to the true believer. But even, when final condemnation is eſcaped, what terrible effects doth ſin produce! What fatal conſequences often enſue in this world to the ſinner himſelf, and to all belonging to, or connected with him! How one ſinner deſtroyeth much good! What

AND the LORD ſaid unto Joſhua, Fear not, neither be thou diſmayed; take all the people of war with thee, and ariſe, go up to Ai: ſee, I have given into thy hand the king of Ai, and his people, and his city, and his land.

2 And thou ſhalt do to Ai and her king, as thou didſt unto Jericho and her king: only the ſpoil thereof, and the cattle thereof, ſhall ye take for a prey unto yourſelves. Lay thee an ambuſh for the city behind it.

3 So Joſhua aroſe, and all the people of war, to go up againſt Ai: and Joſhua choſe out thirty thouſand mighty men of valour, and ſent them away by night.

4 And he commanded them, ſaying, Behold, ye ſhall lie in wait againſt the city, even behind the city; go not very far from the city, but be ye all ready:

5 And I, and all the people that are with me, will approach unto the city: and it ſhall come to paſs, when they come out againſt us as at the firſt, that we will flee before them,

9 Joſhua therefore ſent them forth; and they went to lie in ambuſh, and abode between Beth-el and Ai, on the weſt ſide of Ai: but Joſhua lodged that night among the people.

will then be the wrath to come? let us take warning, and without delay flee from it to Jeſus Chriſt, the ſinner's friend. Finally, though atrocious criminals ſhould be puniſhed with unrelenting firmneſs, and all ſhould unite in their proteſt againſt their crimes; yet their miſery ſhould not be inſulted, nor their immortal ſouls forgotten: but calm expoſtulations, ſerious inſtructions, and compaſſionate exhortations ſhould unite to bring them to repentance, that they may obtain mercy from God in a future world: and every method ſhould be adopted, which can render the example of public juſtice productive of as deep, and durable an impreſſion upon the minds of the ſurvivors, as poſſible.

NOTES.

CHAP. VIII.] V. 2. Lay thee an ambuſh, &c.] This ſtratagem of war was of God's own appointment: the war was not only lawful but holy; and it was equally lawful to outwit, as to overpower their enemies. No treaties were hereby violated, no oaths broken, no falſehoods uttered; and it cannot be requiſite to inform our enemies of our intentions, and purpoſes, however they may be deceived by appearances. But infractions of treaties, lies, perjuries, &c, cannot in any war, or in any caſe be allowable, or excuſable. Jericho had been taken by miracle, without the people's danger or fatigue, in order to teach them to depend on, and to give God the glory of all their ſucceſs. But they were diſpoſed to infer that they might deſpiſe their enemies, and indulge themſelves; and that the Lord would fight for them, without their interference. They were therefore in the next inſtance to be inſtructed, that diligence, ſelf-denial, and the exertion of all their powers both of body and mind was required of them, in order to attain ſucceſs. The whole force of Iſrael was therefore commanded to march againſt this ſmall city, and an ambuſhment was alſo to be formed: yet when all was done, they were taught to depend upon the Lord to deliver it into their hands, and to acknowledge him in it, as much, as in the caſe of Jericho.

V. 7—12. Five thouſand, &c.] There is much difficulty in determining from this narrative, whether the thirty thouſand men before mentioned aſſaulted the city openly, whilſt only theſe five thouſand lay in ambuſh: or whether the whole force of Iſrael appeared in arms againſt Ai, and the thirty thouſand formed an ambuſhment, and the five thouſand formed a ſecond ambuſhment, or were ſent to join them. But the matter is not important, and hath nothing to do with our edification.

and their liers in wait on the weſt of the city, Joſhua went that night into the midſt of the valley.

14 And it came to paſs, when the king of Ai ſaw it, that they haſted and roſe up early, and the men of the city went out againſt Iſrael to battle, he and all his people, at a time appointed, before the plain; but he wiſt not that there were liers in ambuſh againſt him behind the city.

15 And Joſhua and all Iſrael made as if they were beaten before them, and fled by the way of the wilderneſs.

16 And all the people that were in Ai were called together to purſue after them: and they purſued after Joſhua, and were drawn away from the city.

17 And there was not a man left in Ai, or Beth-el, that went not out after Iſrael: and they left the city open, and purſued after Iſrael.

18 And the LORD ſaid unto Joſhua, Stretch out the ſpear that is in thy hand toward Ai: for I will give it into thine hand. And Joſhua ſtretched out the ſpear that he had in his hand toward the city.

19 And the ambuſh aroſe quickly out of their place, and they ran as ſoon as he had ſtretched out his hand: and they entered into the city, and took it, and haſted, and ſet the city on fire.

20 And when the men of Ai looked behind them, they ſaw, and behold, the ſmoke of the city aſcended up to heaven; and they had no power to flee this way or that way: and the people that fled to the wilderneſs turned back upon the purſuers.

21 And when Joſhua and all Iſrael ſaw that the ambuſh had taken the city, and that the ſmoke of the city aſcended, then they turned again, and ſlew the men of Ai.

22 And the other iſſued out of the city againſt them; ſo they were in the midſt of Iſrael, ſome on this ſide, and ſome on that ſide: and they ſmote them, ſo that they let none of them remain or eſcape.

23 And the king of Ai they took alive, and brought him to Joſhua.

24 And it came to paſs, when Iſrael had made an end of ſlaying all the inhabitants of Ai in the field, in the wilderneſs wherein they chaſed them, and when they were all fallen on the edge of the ſword until they were conſumed, that all the Iſraelites returned unto Ai, and ſmote it with the edge of the ſword.

25 And ſo it was, that all that fell that day, both of men and women, were twelve thouſand, even all the men of Ai.

26 For Joſhua drew not his hand back, wherewith he ſtretched out the ſpear, until he had utterly deſtroyed all the inhabitants of Ai.

27 Only the cattle, and the ſpoil of that city, Iſrael took for a prey unto themſelves, according unto the word of the LORD, which he commanded Joſhua.

28 And Joſhua burnt Ai, and made it an heap for ever, even a deſolation unto this day.

29 And the king of Ai he hanged on a tree until even tide: and as ſoon as the ſun was

V. 17. There was not a man, &c.] Greater infatuation cannot be imagined than this was: upon ſuch a trifling advantage, as the former, and upon ſo ſlight an appearance of further ſucceſs, to leave the city defenceleſs, that they might purſue ſuch a numerous army! But they were left to be blinded by pride, obſtinacy, and rage againſt Iſrael, to their more ſpeedy deſtruction. The king, and people of Beth-el appear to have been confederate with thoſe of Ai, and to have been ſubdued and deſtroyed at the ſame time.

V. 26. Wherewith he, &c.] Joſhua ſtretched forth his hand with the ſpear, at God's command, as a ſignal to thoſe, who lay in ambuſh, and as a token of the divine aſſiſtance: and he appears to have remained upon ſome eminence in the ſight of the Iſraelites, and to have perſevered in the ſame ſignal, till all the enemies were deſtroyed. Thus Joſhua conquered by ſeeming to yield: which hath been accommodated to Chriſt, when by yielding to death he overcame him, who had the power of death, deprived the king of terrors of his power to hurt his people, and prepared the way for the utter deſtruction of this laſt enemy.

V. 27. Only the cattle, &c.] We may ſuppoſe that this was divided according to the example before given, (Num. c. xxxi. v. 27, 28—47;) or by ſome other equitable and regular method of proceeding. Thus the people began to receive a gracious recompenſe for their ſelf-denial in refraining from the devoted ſpoil of Jericho: whilſt Achan received the juſt puniſhment of his ſacrilege.

V. 29. He hanged on a tree, &c.] The kings of Canaan were under the ſame curſe, as their ſubjects, and probably more deeply criminal: and the reſerving of the king of Ai for a more ſolemn execution, would tend to ſtrike down, down, Joshua commanded that they should take his carcase down from the tree, and cast it at the entering of the gate of the city, and raise thereon a great heap of stones, that remaineth unto this day.

30 Then Joshua built an altar unto the LORD God of Israel in mount Ebal;

31 As Moses the servant of the LORD commanded the children of Israel, as it is written in the book of the law of Moses, An altar of whole stones, over which no man hath lifted up any iron: and they offered thereon burnt-offerings unto the LORD, and sacrificed peace-offerings.

32 And he wrote there upon the stones a copy of the law of Moses, which he wrote in the presence of the children of Israel.

33 And all Israel, and their elders, and officers, and their judges, stood on this side the ark, and on that side, before the priests the Levites, which bare the ark of the covenant of the LORD, as well the stranger as he that was born among them; half of them over against mount Gerizzim, and half of them over against mount Ebal; as Moses the servant of the LORD had commanded before, that they should bless the people of Israel.

34 And afterward he read all the words of the law, the blessings and cursings, according to all that is written in the book of the law.

35 There was not a word of all that Moses commanded, which Joshua read not before all the congregation of Israel, with the women, and the little ones, and the strangers that were conversant among them.

terror into the rest of them, would contribute to the success of the Israelites, and give the whole the greater appearance of a judicial process, and of the executing of the Lord's vengeance upon his enemies. As Israel acted by a peculiar commission, none of their conduct can be drawn into precedent.

V. 30—35.] (See Notes, &c. Deut. c. xxvii.) As soon as ever Joshua had access to the mountains, which the Lord by Moses had appointed, without delay, and without regarding the unsettled state of Israel, or the machinations of their enemies, he proceeded to ratify the covenant of the Lord with his people: by building the occasional altar, and offering the instituted sacrifices; writing the abstracts of the law on the plastered stones; proclaiming the blessings and curses from the two mountains according to the prescribed form; and reading over himself the whole law to the people. Thus by the precepts of the law sin is detected; by its curses, the desert, and danger of the sinner are discovered; in the sacrifice of Christ the self-condemned transgressor finds pardon, and peace; and enjoying the comfort of communion with God, manifests his faith, and love by walking in the ways of chearful obedience; and in this manner obtains, and enjoys the blessings of the new covenant of mercy and grace.

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.

When sin is repented of, and put away as an accursed thing with abhorrence, we may expect encouragement, assistance, and a blessing from our reconciled God and Father: and the more we fear God with filial reverence, and are afraid of offending him, the less need we fear what man can do unto us; and with the greater confidence may we expect success in our spiritual warfare, and in our zealous endeavours to serve God, and to promote the prosperity of his people. When we truly believe, and rightly understand that "without the Lord we can do nothing," and that our sufficiency and success must come from him, and all the glory be rendered unto him, we shall be far from lying down in supineness, and self-indulgent sloth: on the contrary, we shall be excited to use every commanded, and allowable means, which we can devise, with all our might; and to seek the help, and blessing from the Lord, to render them effectual. The former inference is satan's comment, approved by the carnal heart, and suited to it's disposition: the latter is according to the general tenor of the word of God, which every where calls upon us to strive, labour, and give diligence; and is approved of by every heaven-born soul, as the proper practical deduction from the important, but humbling truth. For this is the language of common sense, in all other concerns, that the less we can do to help ourselves, in a matter of importance, the more occasion have we to seek the help, and to observe the directions of those, who are able, and disposed to assist us. Thus also the Lord applies his salvation to our souls, by stirring us up, through his preventing grace, to be diligent in the use of appointed means, and through those means communicating all sufficiency for every good work, (Phil. c. ii. v. 12, 13.) In this way to be diligent, and earnest with all our heart, and soul in seeking salvation, resisting temptation, and striving against sin, is true Christian wisdom, and the due medium, betwixt the extremes to which human nature is propense. In every undertaking prudent counsel is as conducive to success, as vigorous exertion; and on some occasions well-timed yielding secures the advantage better than pertinacious opposition. They, who honour the Lord with their substance, and are not in haste to be rich, will eventually be no losers by their liberal obedience, and patient waiting; though Christians must tarry until they arrive at the heavenly Canaan, before they receive their full reward: there will they enjoy their everlasting portion, when that of worldlings will be all spent, and their souls in utter misery: (Luke c. xvi. v. 19—31.) And indeed the prosperity of fools destroys them, and their short-lived presumptuous rejoicing will speedily issue in lamentations and mourning and woe: and as the Lord gives wisdom to those, whom he loves, and will prosper; so he infatuates those, who have filled up the measure of their iniquity. Our duty is to reverence the aged, to honour thoſe, who are placed in authority over us, and to compaſſionate the weak and the helpleſs, the feebler ſex, and the tender age: but the Judge of all the earth will involve all impenitent ſinners in one common condemnation, without any other diſtinction, than that of their different degrees of guilt: by which rule, they, who have abuſed the greateſt abilities, riches, or authority, will be only diſtinguiſhed by the larger meaſure of divine vengeance. However buſy, unſettled, or expoſed we are, our God, and our religion muſt have our firſt attention; ſeeking firſt the kingdom of God, and his righteouſneſs, all things elſe ſhall be added unto us. In doing this we muſt reſt our hope upon the atonement of the great Redeemer, according to the goſpel of our ſalvation; and keep the holy law of God continually before our eyes, as the rule of our evangelical obedience: we muſt remember the awful curſes of the old covenant, to quicken our pace in fleeing to the refuge, which is appointed us; and to keep alive the ſalutary fears of coming ſhort of it; (Heb. c. iv. v. 1;) and to reſtrain us from ſin in an hour of temptation: (Luke c. xii. v. 4, 5:) and we muſt embrace and plead in prayer the precious promiſes of the new covenant for our encouragement, in denying ourſelves, and bearing the croſs. In the ſame important ſubjects we muſt inſtruct our families, and train up our children; and ſpeak of them freely even to ſtrangers, who are converſant amongſt us. And it is happy for them, who begin early in life to attend to theſe needful concerns; that in their declining age, (ſhould they live ſo long,) they may look back with comfort to their early engagements, and the unnumbered benefits, which have reſulted from them.

NOTES.

CHAP. IX.] V. 1. Heard thereof, &c.] In general they had heard, that the Iſraelites had paſſed over Jordan, and commenced hoſtilities; in particular they had heard of the deſtruction of Jericho, and Ai, and of their ſolemn covenanting with the Lord, as if already in poſſeſſion of the land. Had they not been intimidated, and infatuated, they would with combined force have oppoſed their paſſage over Jordan: but after all the miracles, which had been wrought, an accommodation, if poſſible, was the only thing, which they could reaſonably attempt: from this they were withheld by a deſperate obſtinacy, and rage; being ripe for deſtruction they were left to be hardened, and blinded to ruſh upon it of their own accord.

V. 3. The inhabitants of Gibeon, &c.] The Gibeonites had heard of the deſtruction of Jericho, and Ai, with the ſlaughter of all the inhabitants, as well as the former miracles, wrought in Egypt, and more recently in the deſtruction of Og and Bathan, with their ſubjects. They had alſo learned that the Iſraelites were commanded to deſtroy all the inhabitants of the land, without entering into any league with, or giving any quarter to them; and that the Lord had promiſed to give them the victory over them all. The other inhabitants of the land had heard the ſame; but they were only exaſperated, and rendered the more determined in their oppoſition by theſe reports: but the Gibeonites, or at leaſt ſome of their leading men, (for we read not that they were governed by a king,) were induced to believe that the word of the Lord would certainly be accompliſhed, and that all oppoſition to the Iſraelites would be unavailing: moved therefore with the fear of impending deſtruction, they conſidered, that the only proſpect of ſafety lay in an accommodation with Iſrael upon any terms. Had they caſt themſelves without reſerve upon the mercy of Iſrael, and of Iſrael's God, there is no doubt but they would have been ſpared, as Rahab, and her relations were: for though the Lord would not allow the people to make exceptions to his general rule of deſtroying the Canaanites, for their own eaſe, and emolument, by forming alliances with them continuing idolaters: yet in this, and in all other caſes, he was ready to make exceptions to his threatenings, in favour of thoſe who repented, and truſted in his mercy. But not being acquainted with this limitation, and interpreting the general command in it's utmoſt rigour, they deſpaired of being preſerved, if they were detected; yet they conceived an idea, that if they could bring the rulers of Iſrael under the bond of an oath, though the effect of a deception, that oath would ſecure them from being put to death. Accordingly they formed a ſtratagem, which cannot be vindicated, but may admit of ſome excuſe from their imminent danger, and from their ignorance of God, and of his law; in which they ſucceeded according to their expectation.

V. 4. Ambaſſadors, &c.] It is likely that theſe were the chief perſons amongſt them, but they profeſſed themſelves the ambaſſadors of ſome foreign princes: and, according to the cuſtoms of thoſe days, when inns at regular ſtages were not known, and conſequently men took with them all their proviſions for their journey, as we do for a voyage, they fitted themſelves out in ſuch a manner, that they appeared to have come from a very diſtant country, took old ſacks upon their aſſes, and wine-bottles, old, and rent, and bound up;

5 And old ſhoes and clouted upon their feet, and old garments upon them; and all the bread of their proviſion was dry and mouldy.

6 And they went to Joſhua unto the camp at Gilgal, and ſaid unto him, and to the men of Iſrael, We be come from a far country; now therefore make ye a league with us.

7 And the men of Iſrael ſaid unto the Hivites, Peradventure ye dwell among us; and how ſhall we make a league with you?

8 And they ſaid unto Joſhua, We are thy ſervants. And Joſhua ſaid unto them, Who are ye? and from whence come ye?

9 And they ſaid unto him, From a very far country thy ſervants are come, becauſe of the name of the LORD thy God: for we have heard the fame of him, and all that he did in Egypt.

10 And all that he did to the two kings of the Amorites that were beyond Jordan, to Sihon king of Heſhbon, and to Og king of Baſhan, which was at Aſhtaroth.

11 Wherefore our elders, and all the inhabitants of our country, ſpake to us, ſaying, Take victuals with you for the journey, and go to meet them, and ſay unto them, We are your ſervants: therefore now make ye a league with us.

12 This our bread we took hot for our proviſion out of our houſes on the day we came forth to go unto you; but now, behold, it is dry, and it is mouldy:

13 And theſe bottles of wine which we filled, were new; and behold they be rent; and theſe our garments and our ſhoes are become old, by reaſon of the very long journey.

14 And the men took of their victuals, and aſked not counſel at the mouth of the LORD.

15 And Joſhua made peace with them, and made a league with them to let them live: and the princes of the congregation ſware unto them.

16 And it came to paſs at the end of three days, after they had made a league with them, that they heard that they were their neighbours, and that they dwelt among them.

17 And the children of Iſrael journeyed, and came unto their cities on the third day. Now their cities were Gibeon, and Chephirah, and Beeroth, and Kirjath-jearim.

18 And the children of Iſrael ſmote them not, becauſe the princes of the congregation had ſworn unto them by the LORD God of Iſrael. And all the congregation murmured againſt the princes.

19 But

and they pretended that their proviſions were either exhauſted or ſpoiled by the length of their journey, and even their clothes and veſſels worn out.—We may be ſure the ſeveral circumſtances were artfully deviſed, and appeared very plauſible to Joſhua and Iſrael, though we cannot well judge of them by modern manners and cuſtoms.

V. 9, 10.] The ambaſſadors meant to induce the Iſraelites to believe, that they had never heard the name of their country, becauſe of its great diſtance: but that their countrymen had ſo far off heard the report of the works which God had wrought for his people, in deſolating Egypt and bringing them forth thence, and in deſtroying before them the kings of the Amorites: that theſe reports had ſo impreſſed their minds, that they were deſirous of amity with them upon any terms: that for this purpoſe they themſelves had undertaken ſo very fatiguing a journey: and that the nation was willing to become their ſervants and tributaries, if they might in return have ſecurity, that they ſhould not be deſtroyed at any future period by the increaſing power and ſpreading dominion of Iſrael. At the ſame time they artfully avoided any mention of the paſſage of the Iſraelites over Jordan, and the deſtruction of Jericho and Ai; as willing it ſhould be underſtood, that they had not yet heard of theſe more recent miracles and ſucceſſes. The addreſs was well calculated to inſinuate itſelf into the minds of the Iſraelites, who would be exceedingly gratified with the thought of being a people of ſuch renown, that their power was dreaded, and their friendſhip courted by diſtant nations: and the favour of Joſhua, and of the more pious among them would be conciliated by the reſpectful mention which they made of the name and works of the Lord; eſpecially as it had been foretold that theſe miracles ſhould have this effect. (Exod. ix. 16.)

V. 14, 15.] Joſhua and the elders, having examined the proviſions of the pretended ambaſſadors, haſtily concluded, that the ſtate of them corroborated the account which they had given, and without any further heſitation entered into league with them, as repreſentatives of their people, and by oath engaged not to deſtroy them. This precipitated treaty, entered into with ſtrangers, to which they had little inducement except flattering words and fair ſpeeches, was the effect of great credulity and impolicy: but the chief fault of Joſhua and of the princes was, that they did not aſk counſel of the Lord, in a matter of ſuch importance, when the means of ſo doing was always preſent with them. But the Lord over-ruled it for good, though not without rendering them aſhamed of ſuffering themſelves to be thus impoſed on.

V. 18. Murmured, &c.] The people murmured be-

19 But all the princes ſaid unto all the congregation, We have ſworn unto them by the LORD God of Iſrael: now therefore, we may not touch them.

20 This we will do to them; we will even let them live, leſt wrath be upon us, becauſe of the oath which we ſware unto them.

21 And the princes ſaid unto them, Let them live; but let them be hewers of wood and drawers of water unto all the congregation; as the princes had promiſed them.

22 And Joſhua called for them, and he ſpake unto them ſaying, Wherefore have ye beguiled us, ſaying, We are very far from you; when ye dwell among us?

23 Now therefore ye are curſed; and there ſhall none of you be freed from being bondmen, and hewers of wood and drawers of water for the houſe of my God.

24 And they anſwered Joſhua, and ſaid, Becauſe it was certainly told thy ſervants, how that the LORD thy God commanded his ſervant Moſes to give you all the land, and to deſtroy all the inhabitants of the land from before you, therefore we were ſore afraid of our lives becauſe of you, and have done this thing.

25 And now, behold, we are in thine hand: as it ſeemeth good and right unto thee to do unto us, do.

26 And ſo did he unto them, and delivered them out of the hand of the children of Iſrael, that they ſlew them not.

27 And Joſhua made them that day hewers cauſe they were reſtrained from taking immediate poſſeſſion of theſe cities, and from plundering them; yet we have reaſon to conclude that they poſſeſſed them afterwards; for we find them mentioned in the diviſion of the land; (xv. 60. xviii. 25, 26.)

V. 20. Becauſe of the oath, &c.] Had the oath been in itſelf unlawful, it would not have been binding; for no obligation can render it our duty to commit a ſin. But it was not in itſelf unlawful to ſpare the lives of thoſe Canaanites, who, without having attempted to aſſault the Iſraelites, or ever intending to do it, entirely ſubmitted to them and renounced their idolatry, deſiring only that their lives might be ſpared on any terms. The princes of Iſrael had indeed been impoſed upon by a falſe pretext; but they had ſolemnly engaged by oath to the deputies of Gibeon, that they would let the people live from whom they came; they were themſelves faulty in engaging ſo raſhly in this matter, and were not allowed to violate the oath, though it was to their own hurt; (Pſalm, xv. 4.) It is evident that God approved of their conduct in keeping this oath; and was diſpleaſed with Saul when he long afterward infringed it; (Note, &c. 2 Sam. xxi. 1—3.) So that even in the war, which by ſpecial commiſſion Iſrael waged againſt the accurſed Canaanites, the infraction of ſolemn treaties and the violation of ſolemn oaths were not allowed. This deſerves the ſerious conſideration of thoſe, who are concerned in the government of ſtates and kingdoms; where politicians are ſeldom found ſo ſcrupulous, as theſe princes of Iſrael were, when intereſt, and popular prejudice or clamour unite to tempt them to break through ſuch obligations. And if there were any heretics more certainly devoted to deſtruction than the accurſed Canaanites; none but antichriſt would conclude that no faith was to be obſerved with them, or that the moſt ſolemn oaths ſworn to them might be diſpenſed with! But if the deception, that the Gibeonites practiſed, did not diſſolve the obligation under which the princes of Iſrael had brought themſelves; the ſimplicity, ſincerity, and honeſty of thoſe with whom we are connected, ſhould be conſidered as an additional bond on our conſcience, to be ſcrupulouſly exact and punctual in all our dealings with them.

V. 23. Ye are curſed, &c.] The original curſe pronounced upon the deſcendents of Canaan was, that they ſhoud be the ſervants of ſervants: if the Gibeonites therefore have their lives ſpared, in regard to the oath of God, (which was all that was engaged for;) they muſt conſent to become not only tributaries, but the meaneſt ſlaves to Iſrael; eſpecially as they had beguiled them, and therefore could not expect to have a treaty fraudulently obtained, interpreted in any other than the ſtricteſt ſenſe. If then they would conſent to become hewers of wood and drawers of water to the congregation, and eſpecially to the prieſts and Levites, without excepting even the chief men among them, their lives ſhould indeed be ſpared. Theſe muſt have appeared very humiliating and rigorous terms, when we conſider, "that Gibeon was as one of the "royal cities, and all the men thereof were mighty." But they readily acquieſced; which ſhewed how much in earneſt they were, and how deſirous upon any terms to eſcape the doom of the Canaanites, and to make an accommodation with Iſrael: and it forms a conſiderable proof, that the managing men at leaſt in the whole tranſaction were actuated by faith and the fear of God, notwithſtanding all the intermixture of evil they were betrayed into: and it very aptly repreſented many things, which take place in the converſion of ſinners to Jeſus Chriſt.—Accordingly, their cities and lands ſeem to have been afterwards ceded to the Iſraelites, nor was any of them freed from being bondmen: and as the Iſraelites were not allowed to keep any perpetual ſlaves, but of other nations; ſo the Gibeonites were made the ſlaves of the prieſts and Levites, to do the meaneſt and hardeſt work belonging to the ſanctuary ſervice, under the name of Nethinims. Thus was the matter ſettled to the ſatisfaction of all parties: the people were ſatisfied with having their eſtates, and the benefit of their ſervices in the ſanctuary; and whilſt they continued together, for themſelves alſo. The prieſts and Levites had a valuable acquiſition, and would not only be exempted from much hard labour, but ſet at liberty to attend more devotedly

ers of wood and drawers of water for the congregation, and for the altar of the LORD, even unto this day, in the place which he ſhould chooſe.

to their proper work: (Note, Acts, vi. 2—4:) The Gibeonites preſerved their lives; and though laid under a preſent rebuke for their prevarication, the appointment was over-ruled for their great advantage, by their being brought into the courts of the Lord, and ſo favourably employed for the good of their ſouls; and inſtead of being deſtroyed as accurſed from God, they were admitted into his ſervice as wholly devoted to him. The tranſaction had a very favourable aſpect upon the Gentile nations, and pre-intimated their admiſſion into the church.

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.

Whilſt the people of God are moſt zealouſly engaged in their devotions, their enemies are peculiarly inſtigated by Satan to confederate againſt them: but they, who aſſociate themſelves againſt thoſe that are devoted to the ſervice of God, will only the more ſpeedily be broken in pieces: (Iſai. viii. 9.) And though the conduct of the enemies of true religion is both hateful and infatuated: yet frequently their unanimity may ſuggeſt a profitable hint to the people of God; to ſhame them out of their inteſtine contentions and diſputes, and inſtruct them to unite in oppoſing the incurſions of their common enemies.—It is a great bleſſing for a people to be under the government of thoſe who in any degree fear God, and are anxious to avert his impending wrath from a guilty land, and to adopt ſincere and deciſive meaſures for that purpoſe: ſuch will eſcape, when others are hurried on into deſtruction, by hardened, obſtinate, and atheiſtical rulers. For the ſame warnings and promiſes of God's word, and the ſame reports of his mercy to his people and the judgments upon his enemies, which move ſome to flee from the wrath to come, and to ſeek ſhelter from the threatening ſtorm; only irritate the enmity and increaſe the deſperation of others: and every thing good, or tending to good, cometh from God, to whom belongeth all the praiſe. But when the conſciences of ſinners are firſt alarmed with the dread of wrath, and filled with the anguiſh of bitter remorſe, they are generally actuated by a ſpirit of bondage; and being greatly ignorant of God, of his law, and of his goſpel of rich grace abounding to the chief of ſinners; they frequently ſeek relief by ſuch methods, as only ſerve to increaſe their guilt and involve them the more: and their carnal contrivances and falſe dependences are ſeldom free from aſſumed appearances and hypocritical pretences, by which they attempt to impoſe upon others and actually impoſe upon themſelves. But when men are really in earneſt to eſcape the wrath of God, they will not long be left to reſt in forms and falſe refuges, but will appear in the midſt of all, willing to venture, ſuffer, and ſtoop to any thing in order to obtain ſalvation: and though the Lord Jeſus (the true Joſhua) ſees through every diſguiſe, and abhors all iniquity, he will not reject even ſuch ſinners as theſe, either on account of their former crimes, or of the manifeſt evil which pollutes their endeavours for ſalvation: but he will reprove them, and convince them of their guilt; he will bring them to repentance, and gradually purify them from thoſe evils; he will take them off from all their falſe dependences, and ſhame them out of their ſecret hypocriſy; he will teach them to truſt in, and make them partakers of, his mercy; he will ſave their ſouls and make them his ſervants: and though he correct them for their ſins, or allot them a low ſtation and hard ſervice in his church; yet he will teach them to acquieſce, and be thankful, and readily to ſay, "behold we are in thy hand: "as it ſeemeth good and right unto thee to do unto us do." Thus that which is begun with a very large portion of evil, may end well; and ſinners who were under an awful curſe, may by grace be made a bleſſing. And to exchange the higheſt ſtation in the world, for the meaneſt place amongſt the ſervants and in the courts of the Lord, though it appear a degradation, and a trial, is indeed a very great preferment; and will appear ſo in due ſeaſon.—Flattering words and plauſible pretences to religion are apt to induce even wiſe and good men too eaſily to lay aſide ſuſpicion, and to give countenance to impoſture: nor do any act prudently, who proceed with ſuch precipitation as not to take time to conſult the Lord. But he over-rules many things for his own glory, and the advantage of his church, which are not done according to his commandments, and conſequently are not examples for us to imitate.—Though we have been impoſed upon, we muſt not think ourſelves at liberty to retaliate: ſolemn engagements entered into, even to our hurt, muſt be conſcientiouſly adhered to: and much allowance ſhould be made for thoſe, whoſe minds are diſquieted with the fear of impending ruin, and who have not enjoyed the advantage of good inſtruction. But if men, in order to ſave their lives, are conſidered as acting reaſonably, when they renounce all their intereſts, ſtoop to any conceſſions, accept of any terms, and become willing to endure any hardſhips: how reaſonable muſt it be for us to be influenced by the fear of eternal puniſhment, and the hope of everlaſting life; to renounce the world, to mortify our luſts, to deny ourſelves, to ſubmit to the croſs; to humble and abaſe ourſelves in the very duſt before God; to "count all but dung, that we may "win Chriſt and be found in him:" to be in haſte to have the covenant of peace ratified to our ſouls; to cut off the offending limb, and to pluck out the offending eye; and in ſhort to yield up ourſelves to the Lord without reſerve, craving only that our ſouls may be ſaved, and that he would make us his ſervants, though in the loweſt place, and though called to endure the greateſt hardſhips? In coming thus unto the Saviour we do not proceed upon a peraduenture: we are invited to draw nigh, and we are aſſured that "him, that cometh to him, he will in no wiſe "caſt out." And even thoſe things, which ſound harſh, and are humiliating, and form very ſharp trials of our ſincerity, will in the event prove the ſources both of real advantage and of ſtrong conſolation. But let us look to it, that we come and cleave to the Lord with an upright heart. We hope indeed that many of the Gibeonites were true believers, though not native Iſraelites: but we are ſure, that many, who preach, and write, and labour very diligently, and even uſefully to others, are only hewers of wood and drawers of water to the congregation of the Lord, and have no inheritance in Iſrael, but are themſelves caſtaways.

Contains, 1st. Five kings confederating againſt Gibeon, 1—5. 2d. Joſhua, at Gibeon's requeſt, attacking, overcoming, and deſtroying their armies; whilſt the Lord ſlew ſtill greater numbers by hailſtones, and cauſed the ſun and moon to ſtay their courſe till the victory was completed: their kings taken priſoners, and put to death, 6—27. 3d. The conqueſt of ſeveral cities and countries, and the return of Iſrael to Gilgal, 28—43.

NOW it came to paſs, when Adoni-zedec king of Jeruſalem had heard how Joſhua had taken Ai, and had utterly deſtroyed it; (as he had done to Jericho and her king, ſo he had done to Ai and her king;) and how the inhabitants of Gibeon had made peace with Iſrael, and were among them;

2 That they feared greatly, becauſe Gibeon was a great city, as one of the royal cities, and becauſe it was greater than Ai, and all the men thereof were mighty.

3 Wherefore Adoni-zedec king of Jeruſalem ſent unto Hoham king of Hebron, and unto Piram king of Jarmuth, and unto Japhia king of Lachiſh, and unto Debir king of Eglon, ſaying, 4 Come up unto me, and help me, that we may ſmite Gibeon: for it hath made peace with Joſhua, and with the children of Iſrael.

5 Therefore the five kings of the Amorites, the king of Jeruſalem, the king of Hebron, the king of Jarmuth, the king of Lachiſh, the king of Eglon, gathered themſelves together, and went up, they and all their hoſts, and encamped before Gibeon, and made war againſt it.

6 And the men of Gibeon ſent unto Joſhua to the camp to Gilgal, ſaying, Slack not thy hand from thy ſervants; come up to us quickly, and ſave us, and help us: for all the kings of the Amorites that dwell in the mountains are gathered together againſt us.

7 So Joſhua aſcended from Gilgal, he, and all the people of war with him, and all the mighty men of valour.

8 And the LORD ſaid unto Joſhua, Fear them not; for I have delivered them into thine hand: there ſhall not a man of them ſtand before thee.

9 Joſhua therefore came unto them ſuddenly, and went up from Gilgal all night.

10 And the LORD diſcomfited them before Iſrael, and ſlew them with a great ſlaughter at Gibeon, and chaſed them along the way that goeth up to Beth-horon, and ſmote them to Azekah, and unto Makkedah.

11 And it came to paſs, as they fled from before Iſrael, and were in the going down to Beth-horon, that the LORD caſt down great ſtones from heaven upon them unto Azekah, and they died: they were more which died with

NOTES.

CHAP. X.] V. 3. Wherefore Adoni-zedec, &c.] The name of this king ſignifies the lord of righteouſneſs, and he probably was a deſcendent, as well as ſucceſſor, of Melchizedek, (the king of righteouſneſs), who retained nothing of his progenitor's piety, but the mere name, which his conduct belied.—Whilſt thoſe kings, whoſe dominions lay further north, had confederated againſt Iſrael, and probably were collecting their forces for a general aſſault; the report of Gibeon's alliance with Iſrael prevailed upon theſe five kings, both from fear of the conſequences of ſuch an example, and out of a deſire of revenge, to attack the Gibeonites ſeparately, that they might firſt cruſh them, and intimidate others from imitating them, and ſo might be afterwards the more at liberty to attack the Iſraelites: but they only accelerated and facilitated their own deſtruction.

V. 6. Sent unto Joſhua, &c.] The Gibeonites had that confidence in Joſhua and Iſrael, that they did not fear, but they would come to the defence of thoſe whom they had admitted to be their ſervants; for ſubjection entitles to protection: and they had that confidence in the God of Iſrael, that they did doubt of their ſucceſs in the expedition. But they informed Joſhua that no time was to be loſt.—"Come up to us quickly," ſay they, "and ſave us," &c.

V. 7. From Gilgal, &c.] The head-quarters of Iſrael were ſtill at Gilgal; there Joſhua left the bulk of the people, doubtleſs with a ſufficient guard; and marched with the men of moſt approved valour to defend the Gibeonites againſt the kings of Canaan.

V. 10. The Lord diſcomfited, &c.] Joſhua was an able commander, and headed a numerous army of "mighty "men of valour;" his meaſures were concerted with prudence, and executed with vigour and diſpatch; he marched all night, attacked the enemy at unawares, and doubtleſs his troops behaved well: yet the Lord's promiſe (8.) was his encouragement, and the whole victory is here aſcribed to him.—Their prudence, courage, and ſtrength were from the Lord; he intimidated, and confounded their enemies, and he ſucceeded their meaſures. The ſame holds good in all our undertakings and ſucceſſes, whether in temporal or in ſpiritual things.

V. 11. Great ſtones, &c.] Hailſtones of ſuch enormous ſize were ſhowered down from above, and directed in with hail-stones, than they whom the children of Israel slew with the sword.

12 Then spake Joshua to the LORD, in the day when the LORD delivered up the Amorites, before the children of Israel, and he said in the sight of Israel, Sun, stand thou still upon Gibeon; and thou, Moon, in the valley of Ajalon.

13 And the sun stood still, and the moon stayed, until the people had avenged themselves upon their enemies. Is not this written in the book of Jasher? So the sun stood still in the midst of heaven, and hasted not to go down about a whole day.

14 And there was no day like that, before it, or after it, that the LORD hearkened unto the voice of a man: for the LORD fought for Israel.

15 And Joshua returned, and all Israel with him, unto the camp to Gilgal.

16 But these five kings fled, and hid themselves in a cave at Makkedah.

17 And it was told Joshua, saying, The five kings are found hid in a cave at Makkedah.

18 And Joshua said, Roll great stones upon the mouth of the cave, and set men by it for to keep them:

19 And stay ye not, but pursue after your enemies, and smite the hindmost of them; suffer them not to enter into their cities: for the LORD your God hath delivered them into your hand.

20 And it came to pass, when Joshua and the children of Israel had made an end of slaying them with a very great slaughter, till they were consumed, that the rest which remained of them entered into fenced cities.

21 And all the people returned to the camp to Joshua at Makkedah in peace: none moved his tongue against any of the children of Israel.

22 Then

in so extraordinary a manner by the Lord, that they smote and slew the fugitive Canaanites in vast multitudes, but fell not upon any of their pursuers! (Notes, &c. Exod. ix. 23—26. 29—33.)

V. 12. Sun, stand, &c.] Joshua doubtless acted by an immediate impulse upon his mind, from the Spirit of God, on this occasion. First he spake to the Lord in earnest prayer; and then to the sun and moon as by authority from God, commanding those luminaries to stay their course: this was done publicly before all Israel, that they might hear the charge he gave and observe the obedience of these heavenly bodies. It would have been improper for Joshua to have spoken, or the miracle to have been recorded, according to the terms of modern astronomy. The sun appeared to the Israelites over Gibeon, and the moon over the valley of Ajalon: and there they appeared to be stopped on their course for one whole day; either for the space of about twelve or fourteen hours, or for the time of one diurnal revolution. Many enquiries have been made concerning of the way in which this miracle was wrought, and many difficulties and objections have been urged against understanding it literally. But the fact, as far as we are concerned about it, is authenticated by the divine testimony; the manner in which it was accomplished lies entirely out of our province, because beyond our discovery and comprehension. "Is any thing too hard for "the Lord?" This question forms a sufficient answer to ten thousand difficulties, which puny objectors, under the assumed title of philosophers, have in every age been starting against the truth of God in his written word.—The same power, which produced the effect, could prevent all those supposed consequences which are objected: and as we have no records of profane history so ancient as this event, we need not wonder that Pagan authors have not mentioned it.—Though some intimation of it seems given in the fable of Phaeton driving the chariot of the Sun, and throwing all things into disorder; and in some other circumstances stated in a confused and obscure manner in ancient history.—This extraordinary miracle not only gave Israel an opportunity of completing their victory, but rendered Joshua honourable in the eyes of all the people; and both him and them terrible to the surrounding nations. It was moreover a public proclamation that the God of Israel was the God of the whole earth, and of the heavens also, and a protestation against idolatry; whilst the sun and moon, the worship of which formed the most ancient and plausible kind of idolatry, were obedient to the commands of the servants of Jehovah the God of Israel.

V. 13. Is the, &c.] The book of Jasher seems to have been a collection of records or poems, concerning the chief events of the wars of Israel. In this collection, it is probable that there were further particulars, concerning this miracle; or a poem upon the occasion, to which the sacred writer referred, as being well known among the Israelites. (Notes, &c. Num. xxi. 14. 2 Sam. i. 18.)

V. 16. And, &c.] It is not at all likely that Joshua and all his army should march thirty miles, in the midst of the victory, previously to the pursuit of their vanquished foes, and just after the above-mentioned miracle had been wrought to give them time to complete their destruction. (19.) This verse therefore forms an evident interruption of the narrative; it is not found in some versions; it is verbatim the same with the last verse of the chapter, and most probably was misplaced here by the error of some ancient transcribers.

V. 20. The rest, &c.] A few stragglers, who escaped the general carnage, got refuge in the fenced cities, but were soon met with there and destroyed.

V. 21. The camp, &c.] Probably a camp was prepared at Makkedah for the reception and accommodation 22 Then said Joshua, Open the mouth of the cave, and bring out those five kings unto me out of the cave.

23 And they did so, and brought forth those five kings unto him out of the cave, the king of Jerusalem, the king of Hebron, the king of Jarmuth, the king of Lachish, and the king of Eglon.

24 And it came to pass, when they brought out those kings unto Joshua, that Joshua called for all the men of Israel, and said unto the captains of the men of war which went with him, Come near, put your feet upon the necks of these kings. And they came near, and put their feet upon the necks of them.

25 And Joshua said unto them, Fear not, nor be dismayed, be strong, and of good courage: for thus shall the LORD do to all your enemies against whom ye fight.

26 And afterward Joshua smote them, and slew them, and hanged them on five trees: and they were hanging upon the trees until the evening.

27 And it came to pass, at the time of the going down of the sun, that Joshua commanded, and they took them down off the trees, and cast them into the cave wherein they had been hid, and laid great stones in the cave's mouth, which remain until this very day.

28 And that day Joshua took Makkedah, and smote it with the edge of the sword, and the king thereof he utterly destroyed, them, and all the souls that were therein; he let none remain: and he did to the king of Makkedah as he did unto the king of Jericho.

29 Then Joshua passed from Makkedah, and all Israel with him, unto Libnah, and fought against Libnah:

30 And the LORD delivered it also, and the king thereof, into the hand of Israel; and he smote it with the edge of the sword, and all the souls that were therein: he let none remain in it; but did unto the king thereof as he did unto the king of Jericho.

31 And Joshua passed from Libnah, and all Israel with him, unto Lachish, and encamped against it, and fought against it:

32 And the LORD delivered Lachish into the hand of Israel, which took it on the second day, and smote it with the edge of the sword, and all the souls that were therein, according to all that he had done to Libnah.

33 Then Horam king of Gezer came up to help Lachish: and Joshua smote him and his people, until he had left him none remaining.

34 And from Lachish Joshua passed unto Eglon, and all Israel with him, and they encamped against it, and fought against it:

35 And they took it on that day, and smote it with the edge of the sword; and all the souls that were therein he utterly destroyed that day, according to all that he had done to Lachish.

36 And Joshua went up from Eglon, and all Israel with him, unto Hebron, and they fought against it:

37 And they took it, and smote it with the edge of the sword, and the king thereof, and all the cities thereof, and all the souls that were therein: he left none remaining, (according to all that he had done to Eglon,) but destroyed it utterly, and all the souls that were therein.

38 And Joshua returned, and all Israel with him, to Debir: and fought against it:

39 And he took it, and the king thereof, and all the cities thereof, and they smote them with the edge of the sword, and utterly of the army after the victory, in consequence of the kings being imprisoned in the cave near to it. No mention is made of any Israelite being slain, missing, or wounded, though we are particularly informed of the thirty-six men who were slain before Ai; but they are all said to have returned in peace to the camp: so that we may infer, that they were all preserved; and the victory was so complete, that there was none who durst so much as speak a word in contempt or reproach against them. (See Num. xxxi. 49.)

V. 24. Put your feet, &c.] This action of the Israelitish captains was not intended as an insult over these kings as their enemies, but to subscribe, as it were, their condemnation as the hardened enemies of God; as rejoicing in his victory and triumph over them, and as taking encouragement from thence respecting the remaining kings of Canaan. The transaction is also evidently typical of the conquests of the Redeemer, required in by his people; who, in overcoming their spiritual enemies by his help, anticipate that glorious season, when all his and their foes shall be put under his feet.

V. 40.

terly destroyed all the souls that were therein; he left none remaining: as he had done to Hebron, so he did to Debir, and to the king thereof, as he had done also to Libnah, and to her king.

40 So Joshua smote all the country of the hills, and of the south, and of the vale, and of the springs, and all their kings: he left none remaining, but utterly destroyed all that breathed, as the LORD God of Israel commanded.

41 And Joshua smote them from Kad-shbarnea

V. 40. So, &c.] When the Israelites had first passed Jordan, they made but slow progress. Jericho was taken by miracle; but the city and all the spoil were either destroyed, or dedicated to sacred uses. They shared the spoil of Ai, but the city was burnt and made an heap. Gibeon surrendered, and was spared. But when their faith, patience, and obedience had been properly proved, their success was more rapid; and they were enriched by the spoil of all these cities, which were preserved for their use; and by the acquisition of all the adjacent country, and its flocks, and herds, and crops, &c.: whilst all the ancient inhabitants were either exterminated or utterly driven away. Yet the Israelites still continued in a body at Gilgal, and did not go to dwell in their cities for the present.

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.

When sinners renounce the service of Satan and the friendship of the world, that they may make their peace with God and join interests with Israel; they must not marvel if the world hate them, if their former friends become their most rancorous foes, and if they meet with unexpected opposition and temptations, with which they have hitherto been unacquainted. By such methods Satan, the god of this world, discourages many, who are convinced of their danger and almost persuaded to be Christians; yet are so afraid of the cross, that they dare not venture to act according to the dictates of their own consciences. But these things should quicken them, in seeking the comfortable assurance that the covenant of peace is ratified with them by a merciful God; in surrendering themselves the more unreservedly to be his servants; and in applying to him for protection, assistance, and deliverance. For the meanest and most feeble of those, who have just begun to trust in and serve the Lord, notwithstanding former crimes, later miscarriages, and present ignorance and infirmities, are equally intitled to his defence, with those who have long and faithfully been his servants.—They, who are enemies to the Lord's people because they belong to him, are adjudged his enemies: nor do any more hasten and augment their own condemnation, than those who combine to impede the progress of true religion, by persecuting such as have embraced it, and intimidating those who appear disposed to embrace it.—No difficulties or dangers need dismay the believer, when in the path of duty and confiding in the Lord: and it is peculiarly incumbent upon us to defend and rescue the oppressed and afflicted, who have exposed themselves to trouble on our account, or for the sake of the gospel, and who look to us for help. In such a cause we ought not to be backward to endure hardship and fatigue, and expose ourselves to loss or inconvenience, without grieving those who depend on our help by needless delays.—The assurance of divine assistance should animate us to action, and to devise and execute every proper plan to ensure success: and when we trust in the Lord, and are disposed to give him the praise, we shall experience assistance, in some measure proportioned to our boldness and diligence.—The sun, moon, and stars in their courses, yea, the whole creation, will fight for the Lord's people against his enemies, though not so miraculously yet as effectually as in the days of Joshua; for all things combine to promote the salvation of the righteous, and the destruction of the wicked. How infatuated then are they, who harden their hearts against that God, whose mandate can arm all the universe to execute his vengeance on his enemies! Though hand join in hand, they cannot escape unpunished! their wisest counsels prove a snare to take themselves withal! their most valiant and vigorous exertions expose their weakness, and issue in disgrace and dismay! their choicest blessings are changed into a curse; and their secure retreats become their prisons or their graves!—Kings and mighty captains, who are disobedient to God, will at last be treated as arch-rebels, to be distinguished only by the deepest infamy and heaviest load of vengeance: and all the Israel of God will join the triumph of the Captain of their salvation, in trampling upon the necks of their proudest opposers, and exclaiming, "So let all thine enemies perish, O Lord:" (Psalm cxlix. 6—10.) This will be the final event of all the conflicts betwixt the church of God and its persecutors: but at present we are not called to avenge ourselves upon our enemies, but to forgive, love, pray for, and do good to them; and to endeavour to conquer their hearts with persevering patience and kindness. The Christian's warfare is of another nature: our worst enemies are our own lusts, as in a league with the powers of darkness: our sharpest conflicts and most glorious victories consist in resisting the devil, subduing the flesh, and striving against sin. In this war we must form no alliance, enter into no treaty, and give no quarter: and our once domineering sin, whether it be covetousness, pride, sensuality, or malice, must be marked as the object of our peculiar enmity and opposition; this, this especially must be crucified.—Activity, vigilance, courage, and wisdom, which this warfare requires, must be sought of God in earnest prayer; and thus we must "put on the whole armour of God;" to him we must look, on him we must depend, and to him give the glory, but without slacking our hands, or abating our diligence and self-denial. Nor must we be satisfied with obtaining some important victory, but must push our advantages, and pursue our scattered enemies, searching out the remains of sin as it rises up in our hearts; and thus proceed in aspiring at further conquests till we have set our feet upon the neck of every lust, and completed its entire destruction. In so doing we may confidently expect the assistance of the Lord: he will slay the sin that dwelleth in us, yet spare us, though the union seem to us inseparable: he will afford us light during our whole conflict, until until the warfare be accomplished: he will make one victory the forerunner and earnest of another; he will encourage us, and lead us on from strength to strength, until he hath made us more than conquerors. And though the war will be attended with labour and self-denial, yet there is not the least peril to the true soldiers who face their enemies; for not one of them shall perish. "The Lord God of "Israel fighteth for Israel;" and when he hath exercised our faith, patience, and subjection to his will, he will bring us all to the mansions above, enriched with the spoils of our conquered enemies, to join in songs of everlasting triumph and joyful praise. But let every Israelite remember, that he is a soldier belonging to a great army, whom he is to assist with all his power. Besides those particular advantages which he obtains for his own soul, the whole army are attempting to gain advantages against the common enemy, by the daily increase of the numbers of true believers. No single soldier can detachedly do any thing very considerable: but the combined efforts of the whole army, according to its several battalions, and every one manfully maintaining his post, may produce extensive and durable effects. And Oh that God would incline the hearts of all, who love Jesus Christ, and his cause of truth and righteousness, to lay aside their petty disputes and self-seeking, with their care about the interests of a party, that they might all concur in this glorious warfare; "endeavouring to keep the unity of the Spirit in the bond of "peace;" boldly professing their attachment to and dependence on the crucified Saviour; and striving to "let their "light shine before men, that they may see their good "works, and glorify their Father which is in heaven!"

NOTES.

CHAP. XI.] V. 1—3.] All the kings betwixt Jordan and the Mediterranean sea, from north to south, (ver. 2, 3.) had confederated against Israel: but it seems the events, recorded in the two preceding chapters, disconcerted and intimidated for a time, the kings who possessed the northern part of the land: and as Joshua did not proceed to attack them, they might have concluded that the Israelites, being satisfied with their present acquisitions, would push their conquests no further, if they were not molested. But their enmity and resentment would not permit them to be quiet, and when their courage was somewhat recovered, they renewed their confederacy against Israel. Thus the matter was so ordered of God, that in the whole war, except in the taking of Jericho and Ai, the Canaanites were the aggressors, and rushed forward upon their own destruction.

V. 4. As the sand, &c.] Josephus mentions three hundred thousand foot, with horses and chariots in proportion. We may with certainty infer the populousness and fertility of the promised land, from the expression in the text: as well as perceive the occasion which Joshua had of encouragement, for he had neither chariots, nor horsemen in his army; yet he had notwithstanding marched out to meet the enemy.

V. 6. Thou shalt hough, &c.] By cutting some sinews of their legs, the horses were rendered incapable of any service, except the drudgery of agriculture, and such other common employments. Joshua and the princes of Israel might hand of Iſrael, who ſmote them, and chaſed them unto great Zidon, and unto Mizrephoth-maim, and unto the valley of Mizpeh eaſtward; and they ſmote them, until they left them none remaining.

9 And Joſhua did unto them as the LORD bade him: he houghed their horſes, and burnt their chariots with fire.

10 And Joſhua at that time turned back and took Hazor, and ſmote the king thereof with the ſword: for Hazor before-time was the head of all thoſe kingdoms.

11 And they ſmote all the ſouls that were therein with the edge of the ſword, utterly deſtroying them: there was not any left to breathe; and he burnt Hazor with fire.

12 And all the cities of thoſe kings, and all the kings of them, did Joſhua take, and ſmote them with the edge of the ſword, and he utterly deſtroyed them, as Moſes the ſervant of the LORD commanded.

13 But as for the cities that ſtood ſtill in their ſtrength, Iſrael burned none of them, ſave Hazor only; that did Joſhua burn.

14 And all the ſpoil of theſe cities, and the cattle, the children of Iſrael took for a prey unto themſelves: but every man they ſmote with the edge of the ſword, until they had deſtroyed them, neither left they any to breathe.

15 As the LORD commanded Moſes his ſervant, ſo did Moſes command Joſhua, and ſo did Joſhua: he left nothing undone of all that the LORD commanded Moſes.

16 So Joſhua took all that land, the hills, and all the ſouth country, and all the land of Goſhen, and the valley, and the plain, and the mountain of Iſrael, and the valley of the ſame;

17 Even from the mount Halak, that goeth up to Seir, even unto Baal-gad, in the valley of Lebanon, under mount Hermon: and all their kings he took, and ſmote them, and ſlew them.

18 Joſhua made war a long time with all thoſe kings.

19 There was not a city that made peace with the children of Iſrael, ſave the Hivites, the inhabitants of Gibeon; all other they took in battle.

20 For it was of the LORD to harden their might have thought this a good opportunity of furniſhing themſelves with horſes, and chariots for their future uſe: but Iſrael was not permitted to truſt in chariots, and horſes; (Deut. c. xvii. v. 16. Pſalm c. xx. v. 7:) they were therefore commanded to diſable all the horſes, and burn all the chariots; and they implicitly obeyed the command.

V. 9.] This formed a proper trial, and a remarkable proof of their obedience of faith; and expreſſed a contempt for, and defiance of the moſt formidable enemies, and preparations of war, having the Lord on their ſide; which was both becoming their character, and honourable to his name.

10 Turned back, &c.] Joſhua had carried the war to the moſt northern extremities of the land, even to the great, and ancient city of Zidon; he then turned back to deſtroy Hazor, and it's king, who had taken ſhelter in his capital, and who was at the head of the confederacy: and as that city was not intended to be the chief city of the Iſraelites, it was utterly deſtroyed.

V. 18. A long time, &c.] Caleb was forty years of age, when he went from Kadeſh-barnea to ſpy out the land, and he was eighty-five when the conqueſts were completed, (c. xiv. v. 7—10:) near thirty-nine years were expired before the Iſraelites paſſed over Jordan; this calculation therefore leaves between ſix or ſeven years for the term of Joſhua's wars. The whole country from north to ſouth was then ſubjected, and all the inhabitants deſtroyed, whom they had met with: the ſubſequent hiſtory ſhews, that they were not exterminated; but concealed themſelves by one means or other, till they were again able to make head againſt the Iſraelites.

V. 19, 20.] The Lord had forbidden the Iſraelites to make any league with the idolatrous inhabitants of the land: but the examples of Rahab, and of the Gibeonites ſhew, that individuals, or cities, who would renounce their idolatry, and heartily come into the intereſts of Iſrael might be ſpared: but the Canaanites in general were not in the leaſt diſpoſed ſo to do; and never ſo much as propoſed any terms of accommodation. This we are told was of the Lord: they had previouſly filled up the meaſure of their iniquity; and were judicially left to the blindneſs, pride, obſtinacy, and enmity of their own hearts, and to the power of ſatan, all reſtraints being entirely withdrawn: and the diſpenſations of God's providence were ſo appointed, as tended to harden them in oppoſition, and drive them to deſperation; in order that they might bring upon themſelves that vengeance, which they had juſtly merited, which the Lord had purpoſed to inflict, and of which he had conſtituted the Iſraelites his executioners by the commandment, which he had given to Moſes. This laſt reaſon is added, and repeatedly mentioned, to ſhew that Joſhua, and Iſrael did not act, in this buſineſs, out of cruelty, revenge, or avarice; but ſimply in obedience to God; which alone could induce real godly men, to make ſuch undiſtinguiſhing ſlaughter of their fellow creatures; and in doing which, doubtleſs, many of them did great violence to their own feelings and inclinations.

hearts, that they ſhould come againſt Iſrael in battle, that he might deſtroy them utterly, and that they might have no favour, but that he might deſtroy them; as the LORD commanded Moſes.

21 And at that time came Joſhua, and cut off the Anakims from the mountains; from Hebron, from Debir, from Anab, and from all the mountains of Judah, and from all the mountains of Iſrael: Joſhua deſtroyed them utterly with their cities.

22 There was none of the Anakims left in the land of the children of Iſrael; only in Gaza, in Gath, and in Aſhdod, there remained.

23 So Joſhua took the whole land, according to all that the LORD ſaid unto Moſes, and Joſhua gave it for an inheritance unto Iſrael, according to their diviſions by their tribes. And the land reſted from war.

V. 21. The Anakims, &c.] The Anakims, whoſe name had ſo terrified the unbelieving Iſraelites formerly, (Num. c. xiii. v. 33,) no ways diſtinguiſhed themſelves in this war, but were ſubdued, and deſtroyed with the other inhabitants.

V. 23. The land reſted, &c.] The cities, which had been taken were doubtleſs garriſoned, and ſome of the people diſperſed through the country to cultivate the lands; and preparation was making for the regular partition of it amongſt their tribes and families. New occupations, of which they had no experience, now called for their attention: but the Lord, who gave them the land, was able to teach them to cultivate it, and they would ſoon make proficiency in ſuch a work, under ſuch a teacher. (Iſa. c. 28. v. 24—29.)

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.

The believer muſt never put off his armour, or expect durable peace, till he cloſe his eyes in death: nay as his ſtrength, experience, conſolations, and uſefulneſs are increaſed, he may expect more heavy trials, and more ſevere conflicts: but the Lord will not permit any of his enemies to aſſault him, until he hath prepared him for the battle. The ſtrongeſt faith will naturally be enfeebled, if we are left to ourſelves; and whenever we view difficulties or dangers with an eye of ſenſe, our hearts are overwhelmed with diſcouragement. But Jeſus ever liveth to intercede for his people, and their faith ſhall not fail, however ſatan may obtain permiſſion to aſſault them. By waiting upon the Lord they will renew their ſtrength; and their hopes will revive, and their hearts rejoice, even in the midſt of tribulation. Such perplexing trials will render their faith in, and dependance on God more ſimple, their prayers more fervent, and in the event their gratitude more lively: and without exception every croſs, and temptation, which the believer is enabled properly to endure, will enrich his ſoul with increaſing holineſs, and enlarge his everlaſting inheritance. The poſſeſſion of thoſe things, on which the carnal heart is prone to depend, is inimical to the life of faith, and the walk with God: therefore it is better to be without ſecular advantages, than to have our everlaſting intereſts endangered by them. True faith will produce obedience, and in proportion to the ſtrength of that faith: and they who proſper in the ways of God, take the precepts and directions from his word, as well as the promiſes, with equal ſimplicity of ſubmiſſion, and diligent obſervance. The Lord's ſervants have different employments allotted them, but every act of obedience will go counter to ſome natural inclination of our hearts; and therefore without a habit of ſelf-denial, and ſubjection of our will to the command of God, we cannot render unreſerved obedience. Nay, many times, in pleaſing God, we muſt expoſe ourſelves to the cenſure, and reproach of our fellow-creatures; and our beſt actions will by ill-judging men be ſuppoſed to reſult from the worſt of principles. But the teſtimony of our conſcience, and the approbation of our Judge will compenſate all conſequences. Would we approve our obedience upright, and the indubitable evidence of juſtifying faith, we muſt "leave nothing un-"done, which the Lord hath commanded to us:" for tho' omiſſions are neither ſo ſcandalous in the world, or in the church, as commiſſions, they are as certainly acts of diſobedience, and effects of a will unſubjected to God's authority. But however tedious, ſharp, and difficult the believer's warfare is, his patience in tribulation, may be encouraged by the joyfulneſs of hope; for he will ere long reſt in the Canaan above, from ſin, and from ſorrow. But how dreadful is the caſe of the obſtinate unbeliever, who is neither moved by promiſes, or warnings, judgments, or mercies, to ſeek peace with, and reconciliation to his offended God! When ſuch tranſgreſſors have provoked God to leave them to themſelves, they ſoon by their increaſing preſumption, and hardneſs of heart make way for the execution of his purpoſed vengeance, and for the diſplay of his righteouſneſs in their eternal deſtruction: nor will numbers, ſtrength, or carnal confidences avail any thing, when God ſhall ariſe to execute judgment upon his enemies. Thoſe trials, and perils, the proſpect of which deter many from a life of godlineſs, and often excite the apprehenſions of the true believer, are frequently in experience too inconſiderable for notice, and only excite ſhame and ſurpriſe, upon the recollection of the alarms, which they occaſioned. Let ſinners then take warning not to harden their own hearts, leſt God ſhould give them up to judicial hardneſs: let them lay down their arms of rebellion, and humbly ſue for peace, and they ſhall make peace, (Iſaiah c. xxvii. v. 5;) the effect of which ſhall be quietneſs and aſſurance for ever, (Iſaiah c. xxxii. v. 17.) And let none of us dread any thing in compariſon of the wrath of God, which is more terrible that we can poſſibly conceive.

NOW theſe are the kings of the land which the children of Iſrael ſmote, and poſſeſſed their land on the other ſide Jordan, toward the riſing of the ſun; from the river Arnon unto mount Hermon, and all the plain on the eaſt;

5 And reigned in mount Hermon, and in Salcah, and in all Baſhan, unto the border of the Geſhurites, and the Maachathites, and half Gilead, the border of Sihon king of Heſhbon;

6 Them did Moſes the ſervant of the LORD, and the children of Iſrael ſmite: and Moſes the ſervant of the LORD gave it for a poſſeſſion unto the Reubenites, and Gadites, and the half-tribe of Manaſſeh.

7 And theſe are the kings of the country which Joſhua and the children of Iſrael ſmote on this ſide Jordan on the weſt, from Baal-gad in the valley of Lebanon, even unto the mount of Halak, that goeth up to Seir; which Joſhua gave unto the tribes of Iſrael for a poſſeſſion, according to their diviſions:

NOTES.

CHAP. XII.] V. 1. Now theſe are, &c.] This chapter connects the hiſtory of the conqueſt of Canaan, with that of the diviſion of it, which follows.

V. 14.] The Iſraelites utterly deſtroyed king Arad, and his cities, in the life-time of Moſes, and called the name of them Hormah; (Numb. c. xxi. v. 1—3.) Probably the king of Arad here mentioned is the ſame perſon. As his kingdom, was on the ſouthern border of Canaan, and not eaſt of Jordan, his country came into the poſſeſſion of Iſrael, under Joſhua; and therefore he is numbered in that diviſion of the kings, though ſubdued under Moſes. But Hormah is here mentioned as a diſtinct kingdom, from that of Arad; and probably there was another of that name; (Numb. c. xiv. v. 45.)

V. 24.] Every conſiderable town, or city was under the government of a king, who poſſeſſed the adjacent fields, and ruled with a deſpotic ſway, as is generally ſuppoſed: and though they doubtleſs waged frequent wars with each other, and gained advantages over each other: yet no one had acquired the ſovereignty of the whole. A ſingle view of a good map of ancient Canaan, will ſhew the reader all that learned men have conjectured or determined concerning the relative ſituation of the ſeveral places, which are mentioned in this, and the following chapters. And as that is the eaſieſt, and indeed the only method of convey-

NOW Joſhua was old and ſtricken in years; and the LORD ſaid unto him, Thou art old and ſtricken in years, and there remaineth yet very much land to be poſſeſſed.

2 This is the land that yet remaineth: all the borders of the Philiſtines, and all Geſhuri,

3 From Sihor, which is before Egypt, even unto the borders of Ekron northward, which is counted to the Canaanite: five lords of the Philiſtines; the Gazathites, and the Aſhdothites, the Eſhkalonites, the Gittites, and the Ekronites; alſo the Avites:

4 From the ſouth, all the land of the Canaanites, and Mearah that is beſide the Sidonians, unto Aphek, to the borders of the Amorites:

5 And the land of the Giblites, and all Lebanon toward the ſun-riſing, from Baalgad under mount Hermon unto the entering into Hamath;

6 All the inhabitants of the hill-country, from Lebanon unto Miſrephoth-maim, and all the Sidonians: them will I drive out from before the children of Iſrael; only divide thou it by lot unto the Iſraelites for an inheritance, as I have commanded thee.

7 Now therefore divide this land for an inheritance unto the nine tribes, and the half-tribe of Manaſſeh, ing a clear idea of the ſubject into the mind, the diſcuſſion of it, in this place, will be almoſt entirely waved.

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.

The enjoyment of preſent bleſſings ſhould revive the memory of, and gratitude for former mercies: and the benefit derived from the labours of the living ſervants of the Lord ſhould remind us to reſpect the memories of thoſe, who have heretofore ſerved God, and their generation. The national covenant mediated by Moſes, engaged many temporal advantages to a ſmall number of the Iſrael of God; but Jeſus alone brings the whole multitude of them to the promiſed reſt, and inheritance: and though his true people enjoy many bleſſings from him in this world; yet they do not enter upon the poſſeſſion of their complete felicity, till they paſs over the Jordan of death to the manſions above. The vengeance of a righteous God inflicted upon all theſe kings, and their numerous ſubjects for their wickedneſs, ſhould impreſs our minds with reverential awe of his majeſty and purity, and with dread and hatred of ſin: whilſt the fruitful land, which he beſtowed upon his choſen people, and thus prepared for their reception, ſhould inſpire our hearts with hope and confidence in his mercy, and with humble gratitude. In both, the final iſſue of all things is repreſented: when the wicked ſhall go away into everlaſting puniſhment, and the righteous into life eternal. Let us then flee from the wrath to come, and ſeek and pray to be numbered with his ſaints here, that we may be numbered with them in glory everlaſting.

NOTES.

CHAP. XIII.] V. 1. Thou art old, &c.] Joſhua is ſuppoſed to have been about one hundred years of age at this time; and probably he found himſelf leſs capable of military ſervices, than he had formerly been: much of the land yet remained in the poſſeſſion of the ancient inhabitants, and perhaps he ſuppoſed, that the diviſion was not to take place, till the whole were actually ſubdued. But the Lord was pleaſed graciouſly to remove his anxiety, and to direct his conduct, by commanding him, whilſt he was able, and without further delay, to proceed to divide the land to thoſe tribes, which had not received their inheritance. The whole country, not excepting thoſe parts, which were yet in the hands of the ancient inhabitants, being ordered to be parted amongſt them, tended to remind them of the extent, and certainty of the divine promiſe, and to encourage them to expect, and ſeek the more complete performance of it: it was alſo a caution to them not to enter into any alliance with the remains of the devoted nations: and each tribe was thereby excited to levy war againſt thoſe Canaanites, who kept them out of poſſeſſion of their allotted inheritance.

V. 6. By lot, &c.] Though they had acquired the land by conqueſt, they were neitherto ſeize upon what they could, nor to have it all in common, nor to divide it by conſent, or by arbitration, but by a ſolemn appeal to the Lord himſelf, by the caſting of the lot. Canaan was the Lord's land, and Iſrael was the Lord's people, and the caſe was extraordinary: and this was the readieſt, and moſt effectual way of ſatisfying all parties, and preventing diſcontent, and inteſtine diſcord: and this method of diviſion would beſt typify the Lord's chooſing in his infinite wiſdom, and love, the temporal proviſion, and eternal inheritance of his true people. As every tribe had it's proportion, and ſituation determined by lot; ſo probably afterwards the ſubdiviſions to every family, and individual were regulated in the ſame manner: and thus their eſtates would deſcend to their poſterity, not ſo much as the inheritance of their fathers, as the inheritance, which the Lord had immediately allotted them.

9 From

9 From Aroer, that is upon the bank of the river Arnon, and the city that is in the midſt of the river, and all the plain of Medebah unto Dibon;

10 And all the cities of Sihon king of the Amorites, which reigned in Heſhbon, unto the border of the children of Ammon;

11 And Gilead, and the border of the Geſhurites and Maachathites, and all mount Hermon, and all Baſhan unto Salcah:

12 All the kingdom of Og in Baſhan, which reigned in Aſhtaroth and in Edrei, who remained of the remnant of the giants; for theſe did Moſes ſmite, and caſt them out.

13 Nevertheleſs, the children of Iſrael expelled not the Geſhurites, nor the Maachathites: but the Geſhurites and the Maachathites dwell among the Iſraelites until this day.

14 Only unto the tribe of Levi he gave none inheritance: the ſacrifices of the LORD God of Iſrael made by fire are their inheritance, as he ſaid unto them.

15 And Moſes gave unto the tribe of the children of Reuben inheritance according to their families:

16 And their coaſt was from Aroer, that is on the bank of the river Arnon, and the city that is in the midſt of the river, and all the plain by Medeba;

17 Heſhbon, and all her cities that are in the plain; Dibon, and Bamoth-baal, and Beth-baal-meon,

18 And Jahaza, and Kedemoth, and Mephaath,

19 And Kiriathaim, and Sibmah, and Zareth-ſhahar in the mount of the valley,

20 And Beth-peor, and Aſhdoth-piſgah, and Beth-jeſhimoth,

21 And all the cities of the plain, and all the kingdom of Sihon king of the Amorites, which reigned in Heſhbon, whom Moſes ſmote with the princes of Midian, Evi, and Rekem, and Zur, and Hur, and Reba, which were dukes of Sihon dwelling in the country.

22 Balaam alſo the ſon of Beor, the ſoothſayer, did the children of Iſrael ſlay with the ſword, among them that were ſlain by them.

23 And the border of the children of Reuben was Jordan, and the border thereof. This was the inheritance of the children of Reuben after their families, the cities and the villages thereof.

24 And Moſes gave inheritance unto the tribe of Gad, even unto the children of Gad, according to their families:

25 And their coaſt was Jazer, and all the cities of Gilead, and half the land of the children of Ammon, unto Aroer that is before Rabbah;

26 And from Heſhbon unto Ramath-mizpeh, and Betonim; and from Mahanaim unto the border of Debir;

27 And in the valley, Beth-aram, and Beth-nimrah, and Succoth, and Zaphon, the reſt of the kingdom of Sihon king of Heſhbon, Jordan and his border, even unto the edge of the ſea of Chinnereth, on the other ſide Jordan, eaſtward.

28 This is the inheritance of the children of Gad, after their families, the cities, and their villages.

29 And Moſes gave inheritance unto the half-tribe of Manaſſeh: and this was the poſſeſſion of the half-tribe of the children of Manaſſeh by their families.

30 And their coaſt was from Mahanaim, all Baſhan, all the kingdom of Og king of Baſhan, and all the towns of Jair, which are in Baſhan, threeſcore cities;

31 And half Gilead, and Aſhtaroth, and Edrei, cities of the kingdom of Og in Baſhan, were pertaining unto the children of Machir the ſon of Manaſſeh, even to the one half of the children of Machir by their families.

32 Theſe are the countries which Moſes did diſtribute for inheritance in the plains of Moab, on the other ſide Jordan by Jericho eaſtward.

33 But unto the tribe of Levi Moſes gave

Theſe authenticated records concerning the boundaries of the inheritances belonging to each tribe, were intended to prevent litigations, or decide differences in future ages: and they would be very intelligible to thoſe, who lived upon the ſpot, and at the time; though they appear obſcure, and in ſome degree unintereſting to us.

AND theſe are the countries which the children of Iſrael inherited in the land of Canaan, which Eleazar the prieſt, and Joſhua the ſon of Nun, and the heads of the fathers of the tribes of the children of Iſrael, diſtributed for inheritance to them.

2 By lot was their inheritance, as the LORD commanded by the hand of Moſes, for the nine tribes, and for the half-tribe.

3 For Moſes had given the inheritance of two tribes and an half-tribe on the other ſide Jordan: but unto the Levites he gave none inheritance among them.

4 For the children of Joſeph were two tribes, Manaſſeh and Ephraim: therefore they gave no part unto the Levites in the land, ſave cities to dwell in, with their ſuburbs for their cattle, and for their ſubſtance.

5 As the LORD commanded Moſes, ſo the children of Iſrael did, and they divided the land.

of the tribe of Levi, he gave a ſpecial proof that he acted by divine authority, in thus overlooking his own family, and his own tribe: for though the Levites were well provided for, yet the continuance of that proviſion was ſo interwoven with Iſrael's adherence to their religion, that had they univerſally apoſtatized, the Levites would have been left deſtitute, whilſt all the other tribes would have had poſſeſſion of their eſtates: that is, without ſome immediate divine interpoſition. And had Moſes intended that they ſhould have any inheritance in Iſrael, he would probably have firſt provided for them; but he not only did not do this, but expreſsly appointed that they ſhould have none.

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.

Old age gradually, and almoſt inſenſibly creeps upon mankind: and though the feeling of their infirmities continually reminds aged perſons of their time of life, yet they generally need to be put in remembrance of it by other methods, and excited to prepare for approaching diſſolution. "Whatever our hand findeth to do," reſpecting the glory of God, the ſalvation of our own ſouls, or the good of our fellow creatures, "we ſhould do it with all "our might:" and the expectation of death, as well as the calamities of life, ſhould warn us to redeem our time, and ſeize upon preſent opportunities of uſefulneſs. Our ſeaſon of labour, and of ſervice will ſoon expire, and we ſhall ſhortly be at reſt; we ought not therefore now to indulge ſloth, or ſhun to endure hardſhip. But if it be the Lord's will to lay us aſide through incapacitating infirmities, we ought to be ſubmiſſively willing to leave our deſigns unfiniſhed, to be completed by other hands. The Lord knoweth all our infirmities, and will not forſake his ſervants, when they are old, and infirm, and incapable of their work: yet when the heart is zealous, they who cannot perform one ſervice, will deviſe to be uſeful in ſome meaſure, in another, though not equally ſplendid, and honourable. But one ſucceſſion after another of godly perſons, and able miniſters die, and leave much of the earth in the poſſeſſion of the enemy of Chriſt, and of his people; though the promiſe aſſures us, that it will all in due time be wrenched out of the hands of that prince of darkneſs, and become entirely the kingdom of the Lord Jeſus. Indeed few, or none of us in this world live up to our privileges, and ſpiritual bleſſings, as delineated in the word of promiſe, being kept out of poſſeſſion by the enemies of our ſouls, eſpecially by "ſin that "dwelleth in us:" but this conſideration ſhould animate us to be active, and courageous, and to expect, and ſeek for ſtill greater, and richer acquiſitions of knowledge, holineſs, and heavenly conſolations. In the preſent ſtate of human nature, it is the Lord's will that there ſhould be diſtinctions of property, that every one may know, and be contented with his own. And whereſoever our habitation is placed; and in whatever honeſt way our portion is aſſigned us, we ſhould conſider them as allotted us of God, and acquieſce in, be thankful for, and make uſe of them as ſuch: and every prudent method ſhould be deviſed to prevent litigations about property, both at the preſent, and in future. The mercies of the Lord to his people, and his judgments upon his enemies, eſpecially thoſe, who have tempted others to commit wickedneſs, ought never to be forgotten, and ſhould frequently be mentioned by us; becauſe they are honourable to God, and profitable ſubjects for our meditation. The miniſters of the Lord ſhould ſtudy to ſhew, that they are peculiarly indifferent about worldly intereſts, (v. 33.) and the people ſhould take care, that they want nothing ſuitable to their ſtation; that they may neither be diſcouraged in, nor taken off from ſerving at the altar. But happy are they, who have the Lord God of Iſrael for their inheritance, how little ſoever of this world falls to their ſhare: his providence will ſupply their temporal neceſſities; his ordinances, and ſpiritual conſolations will feaſt their ſouls, until they arrive at that fulneſs of joy, and thoſe pleaſures, which are at his right hand for evermore.

Moſes the man of God, concerning me and thee in Kadeſh-barnea.

7 Forty years old was I when Moſes the ſervant of the LORD ſent me from Kadeſh-barnea to eſpy out the land; and I brought him word again as it was in mine heart.

8 Nevertheleſs, my brethren that went up with me made the heart of the people melt; but I wholly followed the LORD my God.

9 And Moſes ſware on that day, ſaying, Surely the land whereon thy feet have trodden ſhall be thine inheritance, and thy children's for ever; becauſe thou haſt wholly followed the LORD my God.

10 And now, behold, the LORD hath kept me alive, as he ſaid, Theſe forty and five years, even ſince the LORD ſpake this word unto Moſes, while the children of Iſrael wandered in the wilderneſs; and now, lo, I am this day fourſcore and five years old.

11 As yet I am as ſtrong this day as I was in the day that Moſes ſent me: as my ſtrength was then, even ſo is my ſtrength now, for war, both to go out and to come in.

12 Now therefore give me this mountain, whereof the LORD ſpake in that day; (for thou heardeſt in that day how the Anakims were there, and that the cities were great and fenced;) if ſo be the LORD will be with me, then I ſhall be able to drive them out, as the LORD ſaid.

13 And Joſhua bleſſed him, and gave unto Caleb the ſon of Jephunneh Hebron for an inheritance.

14 Hebron therefore became the inheritance of Caleb the ſon of Jephunneh the Kenezite unto this day; becauſe that he wholly followed the LORD God of Iſrael.

15 And the name of Hebron before was Kirjath-arba, which Arba was a great man among the Anakims. And the land had reſt from war.

having Hebron, and the lands adjacent, aſſigned to him, without the caſting of lots reſpecting it: and with him came his brethren of the tribe of Judah, as ſupporting him therein. From this chapter it appears probable, that when the other ſpies terrified themſelves, and the people about the Anakims, who dwelt in Hebron, (Num. c. xiii. v. 22. 33,) Caleb in the confidence of faith propoſed to take that place for his inheritance, and to wait for it, till the Anakims were diſpoſſeſſed: and that by divine direction Moſes had engaged and ordered that it ſhould be ſo, at the time when the Lord declared that Joſhua and Caleb alone ſhould live to enter the promiſed land. The performance of this engagement he therefore laid claim to, and in ſupport thereof ſpake of it as well known to Joſhua, and the other parties concerned: he took occaſion to rejoice in the teſtimony, which the Lord had borne to his uprightneſs, that he had followed him wholly, and in the concurrent teſtimony of his conſcience, that he had given his report, "as it was in his "heart," with unbiaſſed ſincerity: and whilſt he intimated how the other ſpies diſcouraged the people, to their common deſtruction; he thankfully mentioned the goodneſs of God to him, in keeping him alive for forty-five years, whilſt all that generation were waſted in the wilderneſs, and amidſt all the perils of the wars in Canaan: and he obſerves that he was at eighty-five years of age as ſtrong, and as capable of war, as he had been at forty. All this became him, who was ſo eminent in character, and venerable in years, being more than twenty years older than any man in Iſrael, except Joſhua, and ſome of the Levites. It ſeems from the narration, that the Anakims had poſſeſſed themſelves of Hebron, after it was taken by Joſhua; and Caleb in conſequence undertook to drive them out: this he expreſſed his readineſs to attempt, not confiding in his ſtrength, or valour, or in the aſſiſtance of his brethren; but reſting the whole upon "the Lord's being with him;" and in intimation of his unworthineſs of ſuch a favour, though it doth not appear that he doubted the event, he expreſſed his confidence in this form: "If the Lord will be with "me, then I ſhall be able," &c. In conſequence Joſhua, and the princes conſented to his propoſal, and deemed it meet that he ſhould be thus diſtinguiſhed: Joſhua alſo "bleſſed him," that is prayed for his ſucceſs in his intended expedition, and for his comfort in his inheritance. Thus the matter was ſettled, and in the next chapter we read of his driving out the Anakims: and when the lots were caſt, Hebron fell within the lot of Judah, and he was not ſeparated from his brethren.

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.

They, who deſire to proſper, and be comfortable, in their undertakings, and poſſeſſions, muſt acknowledge the Lord in all their ways, refer every matter to his deciſion, and regulate all their conduct by his commands. The preſervation, and contiuance of our lives, notwithſtanding internal decays, and diſeaſes, and external perils, and injuries, and whilſt ſuch numbers are dying around us, ought thankfully to be conſidered, and acknowledged as the Lord's doing: and when old perſons poſſeſs a meaſure of health, and vigour, at that time of life, which to others is labour and ſorrow, they are eſpecially called upon to be grateful. But old age, even when exempt from it's uſual attendants of infirmity and pain, is neither honourable, nor comfortable, except it be found in the way of righteouſneſs; for a long life ſpent in increaſing guilt, diffuſing wretchedneſs, and wickedneſs, and treaſuring up wrath againſt the day of wrath, will in the event prove the moſt direful of all evils. Yet they who ſeek the Lord early, and follow him wholly, and ſtand immoveably firm, in times of general apoſ-

THIS then was the lot of the tribe of the children of Judah by their families; even to the border of Edom; the wilderneſs of Zin ſouthward was the uttermoſt part of the ſouth coaſt.

2 And their ſouth border was from the ſhore of the ſalt ſea, from the bay that looketh ſouthward:

tacy, and prevailing ungodlineſs, and in ſeaſons of ſharp temptation, and imminent danger; if afterwards favoured with long life, and enabled to ſpend it all in glorifying God, and doing good, are the moſt diſtinguiſhed, and honourable of the human ſpecies. They may look back upon their lives paſt, ſpent, by the grace of God, in ſome meaſure uſefully, and they may look forward to diſſolution, as ſpeedily approaching, with holy conſolation, (2 Tim. c. iv. v. 6—8;) every part of their lives forms a divine atteſtation to their integrity, and evidences his ſpecial love, and their effectual calling. They have a teſtimony to their characters in the hearts of others, and may rejoice in the teſtimony of their own conſciences. Much have they to be thankful for: and it will become them, and they will know how with modeſty, and humility, to ſpeak of all, that the Lord hath done in them, for them, and by them, which will encourage others, and redound in many thankſgivings to God. And though the outward man decay, they will feel themſelves as ſtrong for their ſpiritual warfare as ever, and not fear by the help of God to drive out every enemy, which prevents their poſſeſſion of their promiſed inheritance. Such eminent believers ſometimes ſurvive envy, competition, calumny, and prejudice: their ſun, which hath long been obſcured by intervening clouds of ſlanderous reports, groundleſs jealouſies, and rancorous enmity, breaks through, and ſhines with bright ſerenity, before it ſets. The Lord bleſſes them; all around them perceive it, and call them bleſſed, and concur in ſhewing them diſtinguiſhing reſpect; and great uſefulneſs awaits their latter days, their cloſing ſcene, and dying teſtimony; whilſt they declare to all around them, that the Lord in performing his promiſes, hath exceeded their largeſt expectations. Let then young perſons be adviſed to ſeek the Lord early: let profeſſors be warned to follow the Lord wholly: let tried and tempted Chriſtians be encouraged to endure, and wait patiently: let thoſe, who meet with oppoſition, calumny, neglect, or ill ſucceſs, in their well-meant endeavours to do good, ſtand their ground ſtedfaſtly: let us all truſt in the Lord's faithful and merciful promiſes entirely; and aim ſo to walk with God, that if we are taken away more early in life, we may be found ready; and if ſpared till old age, may cloſe honourably, uſefully, and comfortably.

NOTES.

CHAP. XV.] V. 1—12.] (Numb. c. xxxiv. v. 3—6.) After ſome general ſurvey of thoſe parts of the land, of which they were poſſeſſed, Joſhua proceeded to allot to Judah, Ephraim, and the half of Manaſſeh their ſituations and inheritances, before they left Gilgal: and afterwards, removing to Shiloh, a more extenſive, and accurate ſurvey was made, and the other tribes had their portions aſſigned them by lot alſo: (c. xviii. v. 1—10.) The inheritance which Judah after ſome deductions actually poſſeſſed, was large; for it was intended that this tribe ſhould have the precedency, and it was the moſt numerous of them all.

11 And the border went out unto the ſide of Ekron northward: and the border was drawn to Shicron, and paſſed along to mount Baalah, and went out unto Jabneel: and the goings out of the border were at the ſea.

12 And the weſt border was to the great ſea, and the coaſt thereof. This is the coaſt of the children of Judah round about according to their families.

13 And unto Caleb the ſon of Jephunneh he gave a part among the children of Judah, according to the commandment of the LORD to Joſhua, even the city of Arba, the father of Anak, which city is Hebron.

14 And Caleb drove thence the three ſons of Anak, Sheſhai, and Ahiman, and Talmai, the children of Anak.

15 And he went up thence to the inhabitants of Debir: and the name of Debir before was Kirjath-ſepher.

16 And Caleb ſaid, He that ſmiteth Kirjath-ſepher, and taketh it, to him will I give Achſah my daughter to wife.

17 And Othniel the ſon of Kenez, the brother of Caleb, took it: and he gave him Achſah his daughter to wife.

18 And it came to paſs, as ſhe came unto him, that ſhe moved him to aſk of her father a field: and ſhe lighted off her aſs; and Caleb ſaid unto her, What wouldeſt thou?

19 Who anſwered, Give me a bleſſing; for thou haſt given me a ſouth land, give me alſo ſprings of water. And he gave her the upper ſprings, and the nether ſprings.

20 This is the inheritance of the tribe of the children of Judah, according to their families.

21 And the uttermoſt cities of the tribe of the children of Judah, toward the coaſt of Edom ſouthward, were Kabzeel, and Eder, and Jagur,

22 And Kinah, and Dimona, and Adadah,

23 And Kedeſh, and Hazor, and Ithnan,

24 Ziph, and Telem, and Bealoth,

28 And Hazar-ſhual, and Beer-ſheba, and Bizjothjah,

29 Baalah, and Iim, and Azem,

30 And Eltolad, and Cheſil, and Hormah,

31 And Ziklag, and Madmannah, and Sanſannah,

32 And Lebaoth, and Shilhim, and Ain,

V. 13.] (c. xiv. v. 6—15.) Caleb, the Lord being with him, drove out the Anakims, but we do not find that he ſlew them, but probably they retired amongſt the Philiſtines, to the weſt of Hebron. This hiſtory ſeems to be introduced by way of anticipation: we ſhall meet with the ſame again; (Judges, c. i. v. 10—15.)

V. 15. Debir—Kirjath-ſepher.] Theſe names, ſignifying the one a word, or an oracle, the other the city of a book, have induced the opinion that this city, was a ſort of academy, or a repoſitory of the records, &c, amongſt the ancient inhabitants. It is not probable that writing, or books, in our ſenſe of the word, were very common: but learning of ſome ſort, and ſome method of recording remarkable events, or federal tranſactions, they doubtleſs had amongſt them. (Acts, c. vii. v. 22.)

V. 16, 17.] Caleb by his example, and by other methods was earneſt to excite the Iſraelites to obtain the poſſeſſion of their inheritance: but by this propoſal he moreover employed an expedient well calculated to ſecure the marriage of his daughter with a worthy man, who had previouſly entertained an affection for her, and knew the value of an alliance with a perſon ſo eminent for faith, and piety. Fathers amongſt the Jews, (and indeed amongſt all the ancients,) ſeem to have exerciſed a more abſolute authority, in diſpoſing of their daughters in marriage, than is cuſtomary amongſt us; who were in general habituated to acquieſce in the choice made for them. It ſeems the Canaanites had recovered the poſſeſſion of this city, after Joſhua had taken it; but it was in this manner again taken out of their hands.

V. 18, 19.] As Caleb had his inheritance aſſigned him, in a different way than the other Iſraelites; and as this caſe was ſingular, his daughter, being married to one of the ſame tribe, was allowed to inherit, though he had ſons. Having therefore given her a portion of land, which was much expoſed to the ſun, and not well ſupplied with water; in concert with Othniel, to whom ſhe firſt propoſed it, ſhe petitioned her father to give her another field, in which were ſprings of water. This ſhe called a bleſſing, both as a token of his paternal affection, and as conducing to her comfort in her ſituation. To this Caleb conſented, and "gave her the upper ſprings, and the nether ſprings;" both higher, and lower ground well watered. This hath been long accommodated to ſpiritual, and temporal bleſſings, as conferred by the grace, and providence of God upon believers. We ſhall meet with Othniel hereafter, as judge over Iſrael.

V. 32. Twenty, and nine, &c.] Thirty eight are here enumerated, but nine of them were afterwards allotted to Simeon; (c. xix. v. 1—9.) and Rimmon; all the cities are twenty and nine, with their villages.

33 And in the valley, Eſhtaol, and Zoreah, and Aſhnah,

34 And Zanoah, and En-gannim, Tappuah, and Enam,

35 Jarmuth, and Adullam, Socoh, and Azekah,

36 And Sharaim, and Adithaim, and Gederah, and Gederothaim; fourteen cities with their villages.

37 Zenan, and Hadaſhah, and Migdal-gad,

38 And Dilean, and Mizpeh, and Joktheel,

39 Lachiſh, and Bozkath, and Eglon,

40 And Cabbon, and Lahmas, and Kithliſh,

41 And Gederoth, Beth-dagon, and Naamah, and Makkedah; ſixteen cities with their villages.

42 Libnah, and Ether, and Aſhan,

43 And Jiphtah, and Aſhnah, and Nezib,

44 And Keilah, and Achzib, and Mareſhah; nine cities with their villages.

45 Ekron, with her towns and her villages.

46 From Ekron even unto the ſea, all that lay near Aſhdod, with their villages:

47 Aſhdod with her towns and her villages, Gaza with her towns and her villages, unto the river of Egypt, and the great ſea, and the border thereof.

48 And in the mountains, Shamir, and Jattir, and Socoh,

49 And Dannah, and Kirjath-ſannah, which is Debir,

50 And Anab, and Eſhtemoh, and Anim,

51 And Goſhen, and Holon, and Giloh; eleven cities with their villages:

52 Arab, and Dumah, and Eſhean,

53 And Janum, and Beth-tappuah, Aphekah,

54 And Humtah, and Kirjath-arba, (which is Hebron,) and Zior; nine cities with their villages:

55 Maon, Carmel, and Ziph, and Juttah,

56 And Jezreel, and Jokdeam, and Zanoah,

57 Cain, Gibeah, and Timnah; ten cities with their villages:

58 Halhul, Beth-zur, and Gedor,

59 And Maarath, and Beth-anoth, and Eltekon; ſix cities with their villages:

60 Kirjath-baal, (which is Kirjath-jearim,) and Rabbah; two cities with their villages:

61 In the wilderneſs, Beth-arabah, Middin, and Secacah, 62 And Nibſhan, and the city of Salt, and En-gedi; ſix cities with their villages.

63 As for the Jebuſites the inhabitants of Jeruſalem, the children of Judah could not drive them out: but the Jebuſites dwell with the children of Judah at Jeruſalem unto this day.

V. 36. Fourteen, &c.] Fifteen names are mentioned, but probably the two laſt names belonged to the ſame place. The chief uſe of theſe catalogues to us, conſiſts in helping us to underſtand ſome paſſages in the ſubſequent hiſtory. Several cities of the ſame name are enumerated, and different names are given in ſome inſtances to the ſame place: this occaſions ſome confuſion to us, but it would be plain enough to the Iſraelites: ſomewhat of the ſame kind takes place in the hiſtory, and geography of other countries. The lot of Judah contained one hundred and fourteen cities, beſides country villages, without including thoſe, which were afterwards given to the Simeonites. Even though the moſt of them were ſmall, yet the land muſt have been very populous.

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.

The Lord delighteth to honour and bleſs thoſe, who honour, and obey him; and to anſwer the expectations of thoſe, who confide in him: in which reſpects wiſe, and good parents will be followers of him, in their conduct towards their dutiful, and obedient children. It is a very valuable privilege to be cloſely united with thoſe families, which are diſtinguiſhed for their faith, and piety; and to contract marriage with thoſe, who have been trained up in the nurture, and admonition of the Lord. When the character of parents, their education of their children, and the children's conſequent prudent, and pious conduct, combine; there is the faireſt proſpect that in the providence of God, they will be ſettled with their parents approbation, and to the mutual comfort, and advantage of all the parties concerned. Nature teaches us to grant the deſires of our children, in giving them temporal good things: grace will teach it's poſſeſſors to be ſtill more deſirous of, and earneſt in uſing means for, their being made partakers of ſpiritual bleſſings. When perſons in the married ſtate conſult each other's comfort, and advantage, and ſtudy to order all their concerns with mutual confidence, and agreement, domeſtic felicity will be their recompenſe. But if affection to a creature animates men to ſuch ſtrenuous efforts, and perilous adventures, what will the love of God our Saviour do, if it bear rule in our hearts? The deſire of enjoying his favour, of expreſſing our gratitude to him, and of promoting his glory, will prove a principle of ſelf-denying obedience, and patient ſuffering for his ſake, which will be "ſtronger than death;" (Can. c. viii. v. 6—8.) And if earthly parents, "being evil, know how to give good gifts "to their children; how much more will our heavenly "Father give good things, to thoſe who aſk him!" Huſbands, and wives frequently concur in ſeeking acceſſions to their temporal riches; and under certain limitations, it may be well: but it is much better when they concur heartily in ſeeking, and praying for thoſe things, which are above, both for themſelves, each other, their children, and all around them. Indeed all the bleſſings of both the upper, and the nether ſprings belong to the children of God: as related to Chriſt they have the firſt, or the largeſt portion for his ſake, freely given them of the Father, as the lot of their inheritance. But they muſt exert themſelves vigorouſly, to ſubdue thoſe enemies, within, and without, which keep them out of poſſeſſion of thoſe comforts that the promiſe holds forth to them: and he is ever ready to aſſiſt all, who call upon him, to ſuccour them in this warfare. May the Lord then excite our diligence, and increaſe our faith, that we may be ſtrong in him, and in the power of his might: then inſtead of ſaying, "we "cannot drive them out," we ſhall exclaim, "I can do all "things, through Chriſt which ſtrengtheneth me."

NOTES.

CHAP. XVI. V. 1—8.] The inheritance of the two tribes of Ephraim, and Manaſſeh extended from Jordan to the Mediterranean ſea, acroſs the land; it lay north of the tribes of Judah, Benjamin, Simeon, and Dan, and ſouth of the other tribes. And the ſouthern part of this general allotment was aſſigned to Ephraim, the northern to Manaſſeh. But little more can be ſatisfactorily determined about it.

V. 9. The ſeparate cities, &c.] There were ſome cities, which fell within the lot of Manaſſeh, aſſigned to the Ephraimites, who more wanted them: the ſame ſeems to have been done in the caſe of ſome other tribes (ch. xvii. v. 9. 11;) according to a rule before given; (Numb. c. xxxiii. v. 54.)

V. 10. Serve under tribute, &c.] As there is no intimation that any of theſe Canaanites, renounced their idolatry, and came heartily into the intereſts of Iſrael; and as the Ephraimites were ſtrong enough to ſubject them, and compel them to pay tribute, (c. xvii. v. 13:) no excuſe can be made for their conduct, in making a league with, and ſparing thoſe whom God commanded them to deſtroy: but they conſulted their preſent eaſe, more than either their duty, the common good of Iſrael, or their own true, and durable intereſt.

For Practical Obſervations, ſee the cloſe of the enſuing chapter; as the two will be beſt conſidered in connexion.

NOTES.

CHAP. XVII.] V. 1. For he was, &c.] Or "though "he was the firſt-born of Joſeph;" yet Ephraim inherited before him. (Gen. c. xlviii. v. 19, 20.) Machir is ſuppoſed to have been the only ſurviving ſon of Manaſſeh; and in ſome other inſtances, an only ſon is called the firſt-

Manaſſeh,

Manaſſeh, the father of Gilead: becauſe he was a man of war, therefore he had Gilead and Baſhan.

2 There was alſo a lot for the reſt of the children of Manaſſeh by their families: for the children of Abiezer, and for the children of Helek, and for the children of Aſriel, and for the children of Shechem, and for the children of Hepher, and for the children of Shemida: theſe were the male children of Manaſſeh, the ſon of Joſeph, by their families.

3 But Zelophehad, the ſon of Hepher, the ſon of Gilead, the ſon of Machir, the ſon of Manaſſeh, had no ſons, but daughters; and theſe are the names of his daughters, Mahlah, and Noah, Hoglah, Milcah, and Tirzah.

4 And they came near before Eleazar the prieſt, and before Joſhua the ſon of Nun, and before the princes, ſaying, The LORD commanded Moſes to give us an inheritance among our brethren. Therefore according to the commandment of the LORD, he gave them an inheritance among the brethren of their father.

5 And there fell ten portions to Manaſſeh, beſide the land of Gilead and Baſhan, which were on the other ſide Jordan;

6 Becauſe the daughters of Manaſſeh had an inheritance among his ſons: and the reſt of Manaſſeh's ſons had the land of Gilead.

7 And the coaſt of Manaſſeh was from Aſher to Michmethah, that lieth before Shechem, and the border went along on the right hand unto the inhabitants of En-tappuah.

8 Now Manaſſeh had the land of Tappuah: but Tappuah, on the border of Manaſſeh, belonged to the children of Ephraim:

9 And the coaſt deſcended unto the river Kanah, ſouthward of the river: theſe cities of Ephraim are among the cities of Manaſſeh; the coaſt of Manaſſeh alſo was on the north ſide of the river, and the outgoings of it were at the ſea:

10 Southward it was Ephraim's, and northward it was Manaſſeh's, and the ſea is his border, and they met together in Aſher on the north, and in Iſſachar on the eaſt.

11 And Manaſſeh had in Iſſachar, and in Aſher, Beth-ſhean and her towns, and Ibleam and her towns, and the inhabitants of Dor and her towns, and the inhabitants of Endor and her towns, and the inhabitants of Taanach and her towns, and the inhabitants of Megiddo and her towns, even three countries.

12 Yet the children of Manaſſeh could not drive out the inhabitants of thoſe cities, but the Canaanites would dwell in that land.

13 Yet it came to paſs when the children of Iſrael were waxen ſtrong, that they put the Canaanites to tribute; but did not utterly drive them out.

14 And the children of Joſeph ſpake unto Joſhua, ſaying, Why haſt thou given me but one lot and one portion to inherit, ſeeing I am a great people, foraſmuch as the LORD hath bleſſed me hitherto?

15 And Joſhua anſwered them, if thou be a great people, then get thee up to the wood-country, and cut down for thyſelf there, in the born. He was a man of war; probably he had diſtinguiſhed himſelf, whilſt in Egypt, in the aſſault, which the Philiſtines made upon the Ephraimites, and had defended his brethren; (ſee 1 Chron. c. vii. v. 21.) And as his poſterity were ſuppoſed to inherit his valour, ſome of them had their inheritance eaſt of Jordan, upon the frontiers, that they might defend them.

V. 5. Ten portions, &c.] It is not exactly known how many families of the Manaſſites inherited eaſt of Jordan; but in the caſe of Zelophehad's daughters, there were five ſubdiviſions, his ſingle portion being parted amongſt them, and ſome other ſubdiviſions made the whole number ten diſtinct lots.

14 The children of Joſeph, &c.] Joſhua was of the tribe of Ephraim, and his brethren might expect ſome favour on that account: their inheritance perhaps was leſs valuable, than that of Judah, and only ſufficient for one tribe, and they were two: much of their land was in the poſſeſſion of the natives; and they ſuppoſed, that if the Lord bleſſed, and increaſed them in future, as he had in times paſt, they ſhould be much ſtraitened for room. Theſe formed the grounds and encouragements of their petition. But there was a great deal blameable in them; they murmured againſt the portion, which the Lord had expreſsly aſſigned them by lot; they coveted what belonged to others, and neglected to get poſſeſſion of, and to cultivate their own land.

V. 15. If thou be a great, &c.] As a great people they were the better able to labour, and to fight; to clear and cultivate the unimproved wood-lands, and to diſpoſſeſs the Canaanites. And as the Lord had bleſſed them hitherto, they had the more encouragement to confide in his land of the Perizzites, and of the giants, if mount Ephraim be too narrow for thee.

V. 16. Chariots of iron, &c.] Theſe chariots were armed with long ſharp ſcythes from the axles, on each ſide, underneath, and in different directions. They were drawn by ſwift and ſtrong horſes, and driven by expert charioteers, who were generally accompanied by warriors that fought from the chariots. They made dreadful havock amongſt undiſciplined troops that were not accuſtomed to them; and were exceedingly formidable in the firſt onſet. But able commanders, by a ſkilful diſpoſition of their forces; and well-diſciplined troops by regular and expeditious movements, rendered their force and fury vain: and ſometimes by wounding and affrighting the horſes, they were driven back upon their own army with terrible confuſion and havock. Wherever therefore war became a ſcience, they fell into diſuſe as unwieldly and dangerous.

V. 17, 18.] Joſhua gently reproved the claimants for calling their portion one lot, and pointed out the improvement of which it was capable; and the extenſive tracts of land which might be cleared and reſcued from the Canaanites: and he aſſured them, that if they exerted their valour, force, and induſtry, according to their duty, in dependence on the Lord; the iron chariots, and the ſtrength of the Canaanites, would prove no bar to their ſucceſs and proſperity.

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS on the XVIth and XVIIth Chapters.

Though the diſtinctions of private property are from the Lord, and force or fraud muſt not be allowed to entrench upon them; yet brotherly love will not be very tenacious, but will readily communicate from its own abundance, to ſupply the wants of others, ſaying, "What is that between "me and thee?" The more we are endued with this ſpirit, the greater comfort we ſhall enjoy, and the more will God be glorified: and in every thing unity and affection among brethren is becoming, pleaſant, and mutually profitable. Alas! that even profeſſed Chriſtians ſhould be diſpoſed rather to murmur, envy, and covet, than to be content, thankful, and ready to diſtribute! But indeed we are naturally more prone to graſp at what belongs to others, than to manage our own to the beſt advantage; and many complain of poverty, and encroach upon the benevolence of others, becauſe they rebel againſt the ſentence of divine juſtice, "Thou ſhalt eat thy bread in the ſweat of thy "brow." In ſhort, men endeavour to excuſe themſelves from labour by any pretence: and nothing ſerves the purpoſe better, than having rich and powerful relations who are able to provide otherwiſe for them; though this is frequently done by a partial and unfaithful diſpoſal of thoſe emoluments, with which they are publicly entruſted. But there is more real kindneſs, in pointing to men out thoſe advantages which are within their reach, and in exciting and encouraging to a due improvement of them, than in granting any indulgence to ſloth and extravagance. True religion is far from giving the leaſt countenance to theſe evils: "We commanded," ſays the Apoſtle, "that if any man would not work, neither ſhould he "eat." (2 Theſ. iii. 7—12.) and many of our cannots, are only the language of ſluggiſhneſs, which magnifies every difficulty into an impoſſibility, and repreſents every danger as inevitable deſtruction. This is eſpecially the caſe in our ſpiritual work and warfare: but even our profeſſed relation to the Captain of the Lord's hoſt will not excuſe our ſloth and timidity. Our very complaints, that comforts are withheld and that our ſouls are joyleſs, frequently reſult from indolence and fear of the croſs: and when we are convinced that "without Chriſt we can do nothing," we are apt to ſit ſtill and attempt nothing. But "as many "as he loves, he rebukes and chaſtens;" and if we belong to him, he will ſtir us up to diligence, boldneſs, and perſeverance in well-doing; he will require us to break our league with every luſt, and renounce our worldly pleaſures and ſinful intereſts; to ſhake off our ſloth, and riſe ſuperior to our fears; to exert our beſt endeavours, and cry to him for help. Then our coaſt will be enlarged, (Note, 1 Chron. iv. 9, 10,) and our complainings ſilenced, or rather turned into joyful thankſgivings: and, if the Lord hath bleſſed us hitherto, this ſhould ſuffice to ſhame us out of our diſtruſt and repinings.—But we are again called to advert to Zelophehad's daughters; and thence to obſerve, that prudent foreſight, and believing application to and dependence on, the Lord, producing obedience to his commands, will enſure to us an intereſt in his promiſes, and a lot among his people in a future world. O Lord, teach us here to believe and obey, and give us an inheritance amongſt thy ſaints in glory everlaſting! Amen.

NOTES.

CHAP. XVIII.] V. 1. And, &c.] The tribes of Judah,

Shiloh, and set up the tabernacle of the congregation there: and the land was subdued before them.

2 And there remained among the children of Israel seven tribes, which had not yet received their inheritance.

3 And Joshua said unto the children of Israel, How long are ye slack to go to possess the land which the LORD God of your fathers hath given you?

4 Give out from among you three men for each tribe; and I will send them, and they shall rise and go through the land and describe it, according to the inheritance of them: and they shall come again to me.

5 And they shall divide it into seven parts: Judah shall abide in their coast on the south, and the house of Joseph shall abide in their coasts on the north.

6 Ye shall therefore describe the land into seven parts, and bring the description hither to me, that I may cast lots for you here before the LORD our God.

7 But the Levites have no part among you; for the priesthood of the LORD is their inheritance: and Gad, and Reuben, and half the tribe of Manasseh, have received their inheritance beyond Jordan on the east, which Moses the servant of the LORD gave them.

8 And the men arose, and went away: and Joshua charged them that went to describe the land, saying, Go, and walk through the land, and describe it, and come again to me, that I may here cast lots for you before the LORD in Shiloh.

9 And the men went, and passed through the land, and described it by cities into seven parts in a book, and came again to Joshua, to the host at Shiloh.

Ephraim, and Manasseh were at this time settled in their possessions; perhaps others were dispersed in some parts of the land, to cultivate it or gather in its fruits, where they could do it safely: it was therefore proper that the tabernacle and the ark should be removed to a more convenient situation; and Shiloh was selected for that purpose, doubtless by direction from the Lord, who might be consulted on the occasion by Urim and Thummim, (Deut. xii. 5. 11. 21.) This city was in the centre of the land, and as convenient as possible for all the tribes: and it was proper that the ark and the tabernacle, the glory and defence of the whole land, which were the visible symbols of Jehovah's presence, and stamped a relative holiness upon it, should be in the midst of it. Shiloh was in the lot of Ephraim, the tribe to which Joshua belonged, and it was convenient to all parties that the sanctuary should be near the residence of the chief governor.—The name of this city is the same with that by which Jacob predicted the Messiah; (Note, Gen. xlix. 10.) And it is supposed, that it was called Shiloh on this occasion, when selected for the resting place of the ark, and for the observance of all those institutions which typified our great Peace-maker, and our access to a reconciled God through his atonement and intercession. That part of the country being subdued, the Israelites could assemble without any interruption: and all personal cares and employments were laid aside; whilst with one consent they attended to this solemn and joyful religious duty: and probably such as still continued in their encampments, removed and pitched around the tabernacle, as they had before done, both in the wilderness and in Canaan.—In this place the ark and the sanctuary of God remained, till the former was taken by the Philistines in the time of Eli. Solomon's temple was begun four hundred and eighty years after Israel's departure from Egypt: and hence we may in general conclude, that the ark remained at Shiloh betwixt three and four hundred years.

V. 3—10.] The people, enriched with the plunder of the Canaanites, and living in plenty upon the labours of their conquered enemies, seem to have been more intent on present ease and indulgence, than upon obtaining possession of their intended inheritance; which could not be done without new dangers and fatigues. In the mean time the Canaanites were recovering strength and courage, much of their land remained unoccupied and uncultivated, and the Israelites were both impoverishing themselves and contracting bad habits. After a year or more had been consumed in this indolent manner, whilst they were but little acquainted with that part of the land, which was not yet divided among them, Joshua reproved their slackness, and directed them in what method to proceed. Some survey indeed must have been made previous to the allotment of portions to the aforementioned tribes; but it had not been sufficiently general and exact. Three persons, therefore, out of every tribe were chosen, that it might be done impartially; and perhaps they went in three companies for expedition, and made as exact an admeasurement and description of the country as they could: that the remaining land might be divided into seven parts, and the seven remaining tribes have their inheritances divided by lot; the situation being thus determined, and the quantity proportioned to their numbers. Whilst these surveyors were employed in this perilous work, they were, doubtless peculiarly emboldened and protected of God; the Canaanites, however enraged, were restrained from assaulting them; and they all returned in safety to Shiloh; and Joshua with religious solemnity cast lots for them before the Lord. After this survey it appeared that Judah's portion had been made disproportionably large: and therefore Simeon had his taken out from it; and that of Dan also seems to have fallen within the limits first described for Judah.

V. 14.

10 And Joshua cast lots for them in Shiloh before the LORD: and there Joshua divided the land unto the children of Israel, according to their divisions.

11 And the lot of the tribe of the children of Benjamin came up according to their families; and the coast of their lot came forth between the children of Judah and the children of Joseph.

12 And their border on the north side was from Jordan: and the border went up to the side of Jericho on the north side, and went up through the mountain westward; and the goings out thereof were at the wilderness of Beth-aven.

13 And the border went over from thence toward Luz, to the side of Luz, (which is Beth-el,) southward, and the border descended to Ataroth-addar, near the hill that lieth on the south-side of the nether Beth-horon.

14 And the border was drawn thence, and compassed the corner of the sea southward, from the hill that lieth before Beth-horon southward; and the goings out thereof were at Kirjath-baal, (which is Kirjath-jearim,) a city of the children of Judah. This was the west-quarter.

15 And the south quarter was from the end of Kirjath-jearim, and the border went out on the west, and went out to the well of waters of Nephtoah;

16 And the border came down to the end of the mountain that lieth before the valley of the son of Hinnom, and which is in the valley of the giants on the north, and descended to the valley of Hinnom, to the side of Jebusi on the south, and descended to Enrogel.

17 And was drawn from the north, and went forth to En-shemesh, and went forth toward Geliloth, which is over against the going up of Adummim, and descended to the stone of Bohan the son of Reuben,

18 And passed along toward the side over against Arabah northward, and went down unto Arabah;

19 And the border passed along to the side of Beth-hoglah, northward: and the outgoings of the border were at the north bay of the salt sea, at the south end of Jordan. This was the south coast.

20 And Jordan was the border of it on the east side. This was the inheritance of the children of Benjamin, by the coasts thereof round about, according to their families.

21 Now the cities of the tribe of the children of Benjamin, according to their families, were Jericho, and Beth-hoglah, and the valley of Keziz.

22 And Beth-arabah, and Zemaraim, and Beth-el,

23 And Avim, and Parah, and Ophrah,

24 And Chephar-haammonai, and Ophni, and Gaba; twelve cities with their villages:

25 Gibeon, and Ramah, and Beeroth,

26 And Mizpeh, and Chephirah, and Mozah,

27 And Rekem, and Irpeel, and Taralah,

28 And Zelah, Eleph, and Jebusi, (which is Jerusalem,) Gibeath, and Kirjath: fourteen cities with their villages. This is the inheritance of the children of Benjamin according to their families.

CHAP.

V. 14. The corner of the sea, &c.] As the inheritance of Benjamin did not extend to the Mediterranean sea; this expression must either mean that it terminated in an angle in that part nearest the sea; or some inland lake must be intended.

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.

The duties of religion are our most important business, and must be attended to in the first place, even to the neglect of our worldly interests; if we would be happy in our own souls, and prosper in our undertakings: and the ordinances of God, when properly administered and attended on by all ranks and orders of men, form the glory and bulwark of any nation; for "them that honour God "he will honour, but they who despise him shall be lightly esteemed;" (1 Sam. ii. 30.) Under the gospel dispensation we have the true tabernacle, the ark of the covenant, and the mercy-seat, not only in the midst of us, but every where present with us: and in our favoured land, we have the ordinances of God almost in every district; in which he is as truly, though not so sensibly, present, as between the cherubim over the mercy-seat. But what return do we render for such benefits? What improvement do we make of them? Alas! the courts of the Lord are generally unfrequented; his sabbaths are violated; his truths are opposed, despised, or abused; his commandments and authority are trampled upon; and few in comparison appear to value the pardon and everlasting life which are proposed to sinners in the gospel: and even they who profess proſeſs to accept of them are often, through indolence, ſelf-indulgence, and fear of difficulties, rendered very irreſolute and ſlack, in "poſſeſſing the land, which the Lord God "hath given them." Indeed many of them do not ſeem to underſtand, becauſe they have not carefully ſurveyed, the extent of their privileges: and, when they are preſerved from terrors and diſtreſs of conſcience; when they keep up ſome tolerable hope of getting to heaven at laſt, and taſte ſome little comfort from time to time in the ordinances of God: they ſeem to think, that they poſſeſs all that can be expected in this world; and conſider heaven as an eſtate in reverſion, when they ſhall be ejected from their preſent too well beloved tenure of worldly comforts. Nor are they aware, that a cloſe walk and intimate communion with God, increaſing conformity to him, love of him and of one another, and a will united to his will form the very ſubſtance of heavenly felicity; and that much more of theſe bleſſed privileges may be enjoyed on earth, than we any of us have yet experienced.—But our Joſhua will rebuke this ſlackneſs: and he commands his miniſters of every name to declare to his people the truths, which reſpect their preſent conſolation and ſanctification, as well as their future inheritance, that they may be excited to preſs onward to the enjoyment of them. At his command we may boldly undertake any ſervice, and need fear no enemies. He aſſigns to each of us our preſent and our future portion, yet in this appointment he takes into the account, that diligence, vigilance, and faithfulneſs, which through his grace we are enabled to exerciſe: and as the induſtrious huſbandman, and intrepid warrior are generally, ſo the diligent, watchful, and courageous Chriſtian ſhall always be moſt proſperous. Having therefore food and raiment in this world, let us be therewith content: and may our wealth be laid up in the land of promiſe above, whither all the tribes of the redeemed will, in their ſucceſſion, ſhortly arrive, and receive their incorruptible inheritance.

NOTES.

CHAP. XIX.] V. 9. Out of the portion, &c.] The inheritance of the tribe of Judah was found to be more than was neceſſary, or than properly came to their ſhare; a portion therefore was allotted to the tribe of Simeon, taken from the ſouth-weſt part of it; and, it ſeems, that without murmuring they renounced their claim, at the inſtance of Joſhua, and thoſe who had been nominated to the office of dividing the land: (Num. xxxiv. 17—29.) The tribe of Dan had their inheritance on the north, and north-weſt of the lot of Judah, and adjoining to that part of the country of which the Philiſtines kept poſſeſſion. The other tribes here mentioned were ſituated north of Ephraim and Manaſſeh; and Aſher's lot was moſt northerly of them all, in the neighbourhood of Tyre and Zidon. There are in ſome places more names inſerted, than anſwer to the ſum total mentioned, and it is ſuppoſed, that ſome of them were names of country-villages; and that ſome cities, allotted to one tribe, were ſituated within the borders of another.

V. 47.

15 And Kattath, and Nahallal, and Shimron, and Idalah, and Beth-lehem: twelve cities with their villages.

16 This is the inheritance of the children of Zebulun, according to their families, these cities with their villages.

17 And the fourth lot came out to Issachar, for the children of Issachar, according to their families.

18 And their border was toward Jezreel, and Chesulloth, and Shunem, 19 And Hapharaim, and Shihon, and Anaharath,

20 And Rabbith, and Kishion, and Abez,

21 And Remeth, and En-gannim, and En-haddah, and Beth-pazzez;

23 This is the inheritance of the tribe of the children of Issachar, according to their families, the cities and their villages.

24 And the fifth lot came out for the tribe of the children of Asher, according to their families.

25 And their border was Helkath, and Hali, and Beten, and Achshaph, 26 And Alammelech, and Amad, and Misheal; and reacheth to Carmel westward, and to Shihor-libnath,

27 And turneth toward the sun-rising to Beth-dagon, and reacheth to Zebulun, and to the valley of Jiphthah-el toward the north side of Beth-emek, and Neiel, and goeth out to Cabul on the left hand;

28 And Hebron, and Rehob, and Hammon, and Kanah, even unto great Zidon;

29 And then the coast turneth to Ramah, and to the strong city Tyre, and the coast turneth to Hosah; and the outgoings thereof are at the sea, from the coast to Achzib:

30 Ummah also, and Aphek, and Rehob: twenty and two cities with their villages.

31 This is the inheritance of the tribe of the children of Asher, according to their families, these cities with their villages.

32 The sixth lot came out to the children of Naphtali, even for the children of Naphtali according to their families.

33 And their coast was from Heleph, from Allon to Zaanannim, and Adami, Nekeb, and Jabneel, unto Lakum; and the outgoings thereof were at Jordan:

34 And then the coast turneth westward to Aznoth-tabor, and goeth out from thence to Hukkok, and reacheth to Zebulun on the south side, and reacheth to Asher on the west side, and to Judah upon Jordan toward the sun-rising.

35 And the fenced cities are Ziddim, Zer, and Hammath, Rakkath, and Cinnereth, 36 And Adamah, and Ramah, and Hazor,

37 And Kedesh, and Edrei, and En-hazor,

38 And Iron, and Migdal-el, Horem, and Beth-anath, and Beth-shemesh: nineteen cities with their villages.

39 This is the inheritance of the tribe of the children of Naphtali, according to their families, the cities and their villages.

40 And the seventh lot came out for the tribe of the children of Dan according to their families.

41 And the coast of their inheritance was Zorah, and Eshtaol, and Ir-shemesh, 42 And Shaalabbin, and Ajalon, and Jethlah,

43 And Elon, and Thimnathah, and Ekron,

44 And Eltekeh, and Gibbethon, and Baalath,

45 And Jehud, and Bene-berak, and Gath-rimmon,

46 And Me-jarkon, and Rakkon, with the border before Japho.

47 And the coast of the children of Dan went out too little for them; therefore the children of Dan went up to fight against Leshem, and took it, and smote it with the edge of the sword, and possessed it, and dwelt therein, and called Leshem, Dan, after the name of Dan their father.

48 This is the inheritance of the tribe of the children of Dan according to their families, these cities with their villages.

49 When they had made an end of dividing the land for inheritance by their coasts, the children of Israel gave an inheritance to Joshua the son of Nun among them:

51 These are the inheritances which Eleazar the priest, and Joshua the son of Nun, and the heads of the fathers of the tribes of the children of Israel, divided for an inheritance by lot, in Shiloh before the LORD, at the door of the tabernacle of the congregation. So they made an end of dividing the country.

THE LORD also spake unto Joshua, saying,

2 Speak to the children of Israel, saying, Appoint out for you cities of refuge, whereof I spake unto you by the hand of Moses:

3 That the slayer that killeth any person unawares, and unwittingly, may flee thither: and they shall be your refuge from the avenger of blood.

4 And when he that doth flee unto one of those cities shall stand at the entering of the gate of the city, and shall declare his cause in the ears of the elders of that city; they shall take him into the city unto them, and give him a place, that he may dwell among them.

5 And if the avenger of blood pursue after him, then they shall not deliver the slayer up into his hand; because he smote his neighbour unwittingly, and hated him not before-time.

6 And he shall dwell in that city, until he stand before the congregation for judgment, and until the death of the high priest that shall be in those days: then shall the slayer return, and come unto his own city, and unto his own house, unto the city from whence he fled.

7 And they appointed Kedesh in Galilee in mount Naphtali, and Shechem in mount Ephraim, and Kirjath-arba, (which is Hebron) in the mountain of Judah.

tled, before he required any provision for himself. Probably the Lord had commanded the Israelites to give him an inheritance, at the time when he gave orders about Caleb: accordingly he desired to have Timnath-serah, which was neither a city of great note, nor situated in the best part of the land; but it lay in the lot of his own tribe, and not far from Shiloh where the ark of God was stationed. Thus he closed all his great and memorable services by an example of moderation, equity, piety, and industry in rebuilding the city assigned him, which does great honour to his character.

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.

If the true believer have entered into engagements which are likely to prove injurious to him, he will not retract, or disappoint those who confided in him: but if he have obtained an unintended and improper advantage in any contract, he will recede from it without murmuring, in compliance with the requisitions of equity and kindness. For "love seeketh not her own,—and does not behave un-"seemly;" and it will therefore induce those, in whom it richly dwells, to part with their own superfluity to supply what is lacking to their brethren.—They are most favoured in Providence, who are placed nearest to the sanctuary, and have most advantages for the salvation of their souls, and the fewest hindrances; though they possess not worldly affluence or distinctions: and, as far as we have the choice referred to us, we should always decide by this rule. But a sovereign God dispenses his favours as he pleases, and one man has his habitation assigned him in "the valley of vision," and another his, "in the very re-"gion of the shadow of death;" according to the good pleasure of his will, who deigns not to give any account of his matters to the presumptuous objector.—Disinterestedness, and an unassuming deportment, shed a peculiar lustre upon eminent characters; and they, who labour most to do good to others, will in proportion be indifferent about their own worldly interests, and willing to forego all things, rather than preclude themselves from the sweet pleasure of communicating felicity. An inheritance in the Canaan above they must and do covet; but it will be soon enough to enter upon it when they have done all the service to their brethren, of which they are capable; nor can any thing more effectually assure them of their title to it, than laying themselves out properly to bring others to desire, to seek, and to obtain possession of it.—But Jesus hath far outdone all others in this, and in every other respect. "Though he was rich, for our sakes he became poor, that "we through his poverty might be made rich!" He would not enter upon his inheritance, till by his obedience unto death he had secured eternal happiness for all his people! nor will he account his own glory completed, until every ransomed sinner is put in possession of his heavenly rest.

NOTES.

CHAP. XX.] V. 2—6.] As soon as the Israelites were settled in their promised inheritance, they were reminded to separate the cities of refuge; the use and typical meaning of which have already been explained: (Notes, &c. Numb. xxxv.)—When the manslayer arrived at the city of refuge, he underwent a kind of trial, before he was taken under the protection of the elders of the city, who, it seems, were allowed to exclude or apprehend him, if he were eastward, they assigned Bezer in the wilderness upon the plain out of the tribe of Reuben, and Ramoth in Gilead out of the tribe of Gad, and Golan in Bashan out of the tribe of Manasseh.

9 These were the cities appointed for all the children of Israel, and for the stranger that sojourneth among them, that whosoever killeth any person at unawares might flee thither, and not die by the hand of the avenger of blood, until he stood before the congregation.

And afterwards he must stand in judgment before the congregation, or its magistrates: and if he were then condemned he was to be delivered to the avenger of blood: (9.) This was calculated to prevent such abuses, as were generally made of sanctuaries among other nations, in which the most atrocious criminals were screened from justice.

V. 7—9.] All these cities were assigned to the priests and Levites: and they were situated on each side of Jordan in different parts of the land, and in the most convenient places. (Deut. iv. 40—43.) As this institution was mainly intended for a type of the sinner's refuge from the sword of avenging justice, the signification of the names of these cities has generally been noticed, with reference to the person, character, offices, and love of Christ. Kedesh signifies holy, and Jesus is the Holy One of God, and is "made sanctification to us:" Shechem, a shoulder; and the "government is upon his shoulder;" Hebron, fellowship, and through him sinners are admitted to have fellowship with God; Bezer, a strong hold, and such is he to those who trust in him; Ramoth, exaltations, and he is exalted to be a Prince and Saviour: and Golan, exultation or joy, and in him all believers are justified and glory, or rejoice.

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.

We have great cause for thankfulness, that we have been preserved from the murderer's sword, nay if we have not ourselves committed that horrid crime: for the violent passions of the human heart, instigated by satan's temptations, naturally terminate in murder, if God withdraw his restraining hand. We ought likewise to be thankful that we have not been destroyed unwittingly by others, and if we have been preserved from the great calamity of being the unwilling cause of another's death.—We may also learn from the subject before us, to watch over all our passions with the strictest attention, and pray to be preserved from such sins and calamities; and to be made ready, if without warning we should be called out of time into eternity. No sanctuary should protect, no favour should on any account be shewn, the wilful murderer: and no protection, assistance, or kindness can be too great to be extended to the unfortunate manslayer.—But it will not be a needless, or a vain, repetition, if we are again reminded to bless God for that appointed and consecrated refuge, which he hath prepared in his Son, for our guilty perishing souls. They, who flee to him, will be secured from all condemnation, yea though they have committed the most atrocious crimes, not excepting even the worst of murders: nor will any protection, instruction, sanctification, fellowship with God, or holy joy be with-held from them. His power and presence will be their strong tower against all their enemies; nor will the exalted Saviour fail, (in consequence of his own death,) to restore every one of them to his forfeited inheritance; nay to exalt them to share his glory, in the presence of his Father and their Father, of his God and their God. To him let sinners flee, before the sword of vengence overtake them; for he is ever near, and will not cast out any who come to him: in him let believers abide, hope, and rejoice: him may we all love, imitate, and obey!

NOTES.

CHAP. XXI.] V. 1, 2.] The Levites had waited till all the other tribes had received their inheritance and were about to separate, before they preferred their claim to Joshua. They were excluded from receiving any portion in the division of the land, and had therefore as good a right to the tithes, first fruits, with other perquisites, and forty-eight cities with their suburbs for their habitation; as the other Israelites had to their lands. It hath already been observed, that these cities were intended for the benefit of the land; the Levites being thus situated in every part of it, to instruct and edify the people by their doctrine and example: (Note Numb. xxxv. 2—8.) It may be further remarked that they were dispersed as watchmen, to restrain idolatry, and to provide for the punishment of those who were notoriously guilty of it; and as it was their interest, as well as duty, to retain the people in the worship of Jehovah alone, this was a very suitable expedient. Numbers probably lived in these cities, besides the priests and Levites, as their tenants, for the advantage of their instructions, or to carry on trades among them; and the subsequent history countenances this supposition. Thus in every

4 And the lot came out for the families of the Kohathites: and the children of Aaron the priest, which were of the Levites, had by lot out of the tribe of Judah, and out of the tribe of Simeon, and out of the tribe of Benjamin, thirteen cities.

5 And the rest of the children of Kohath had by lot out of the families of the tribe of Ephraim, and out of the tribe of Dan, and out of the half-tribe of Manasseh, ten cities.

6 And the children of Gershon had by lot out of the families of the tribe of Issachar, and out of the tribe of Asher, and out of the tribe of Naphtali, and out of the half-tribe of Manasseh in Bashan, thirteen cities.

7 The children of Merari, by their families, had out of the tribe of Reuben, and out of the tribe of Gad, and out of the tribe of Zebulun, twelve cities.

8 And the children of Israel gave by lot unto the Levites these cities with their suburbs, as the LORD commanded by the hand of Moses.

9 And they gave out of the tribe of the children of Judah, and out of the tribe of the children of Simeon, these cities which are here mentioned by name,

10 Which the children of Aaron, being of the families of the Kohathites, who were of the children of Levi, had: (for their's was the first lot.)

11 And they gave them the city of Arba, the father of Anak, (which city is Hebron,) in the hill-country of Judah, with the suburbs thereof round about it.

12 But the fields of the city, and the villages thereof, gave they to Caleb the son of Jephunneh, for his possession.

13 Thus they gave to the children of Aaron the priest, Hebron with her suburbs to be a city of refuge for the slayer; and Libnah with her suburbs,

14 And Jattir with her suburbs, and Eshtemoa with her suburbs,

15 And Holon with her suburbs, and Debir with her suburbs,

16 And Ain with her suburbs, and Juttah with her suburbs, and Beth-shemesh with her suburbs: nine cities out of those two tribes.

19 All the cities of the children of Aaron, the priests, were thirteen cities with their suburbs.

20 And the families of the children of Kohath, the Levites which remained of the children of Kohath, even they had the cities of their lot out of the tribe of Ephraim.

21 For they gave them Shechem with her suburbs in mount Ephraim, to be a city of refuge for the slayer; and Gezer with her suburbs:

22 And Kibzaim with her suburbs, and Beth-horon with her suburbs: four cities.

25 And out of the half-tribe of Manasseh, Taanach with her suburbs, and Gath-rimmon with her suburbs: two cities.

26 All the cities were ten, with their suburbs, for the families of the children of Kohath that remained.

27 And unto the children of Gershon, of the families of the Levites, out of the other half-tribe of Manasseh, they gave Golan in Bashan with her suburbs, to be a city of refuge every way this tribe was plentifully provided for, as long as the people adhered to the worship, and respected the commandments of God.

V. 4. Thirteen cities.] The priests at this time could be but very few in number, how much soever the family of Aaron had increased since his appointment to the priesthood: yet all these cities were allotted to them, as a patrimony, and in the divine foreknowledge of their future multitudes; for we have reason to think that no family in Israel increased so much in proportion, after their departure out of Egypt, as that of Aaron. These cities were assigned them by lot, not so much in the neighbourhood of Shiloh, where the tabernacle and the ark then were; as in that of Jerusalem, whither they were removed four hundred years afterwards.

V. 11, 12.] Either the city of Hebron was not included with the territory in the grant made to Caleb: or he remitted from his right, that he might set a good example to his brethren, and induce them the more cheerfully to contribute to the maintenance of religion.

V. 43—45.]

fuge for the ſlayer; and Beeſhterah with her ſuburbs: two cities.

28 And out of the tribe of Iſſachar, Kiſhon with her ſuburbs, Dabareh with her ſuburbs, 29 Jarmuth with her ſuburbs, En-gannim with her ſuburbs: four cities.

32 And out of the tribe of Naphtali, Kedeſh in Galilee with her ſuburbs, to be a city of refuge for the ſlayer; and Hammoth-dor with her ſuburbs, and Kartan with her ſuburbs: three cities.

33 All the cities of the Gerſhonites, according to their families, were thirteen cities with their ſuburbs.

34 And unto the families of the children of Merari, the reſt of the Levites, out of the tribe of Zebulun, Jokneam with her ſuburbs, and Kartah with her ſuburbs, 35 Dimnah with her ſuburbs, Nahalal with her ſuburbs: four cities.

36 And out of the tribe of Reuben, Bezer with her ſuburbs, and Jahazah with her ſuburbs,

38 And out of the tribe of Gad, Ramoth in Gilead with her ſuburbs, to be a city of refuge for the ſlayer; and Mahanaim with her ſuburbs, 39 Heſhbon with her ſuburbs, Jazer with her ſuburbs: four cities in all.

40 So all the cities for the children of Merari, by their families, which were remaining of the families of the Levites, were by their lot, twelve cities.

41 All the cities of the Levites, within the poſſeſſion of the children of Iſrael, were forty and eight cities with their ſuburbs.

42 Theſe cities were every one with their ſuburbs round about them: thus were all theſe cities.

43 And the LORD gave unto Iſrael all the land which he ſware to give unto their fathers: and they poſſeſſed it, and dwelt therein.

44 And the LORD gave them reſt round about, according to all that he ſware unto their fathers: and there ſtood not a man of all their enemies before them; the LORD delivered all theſr enemies into their hand.

45 There failed not ought of any good thing which the LORD had ſpoken unto the houſe of Iſrael; all came to paſs.

V. 43—45.] This was a very proper concluſion to the hiſtory of the conqueſt and diviſion of the land; and a becoming acknowledgment of the faithfulneſs of God to his promiſes. For wiſe and gracious reaſons, ſome of the Canaanites were permitted to continue amongſt them; (Exod. c. xxiii. v. 29, 30;) but at that time they gave them no moleſtation; nor would they ever have made head againſt them, but ſpeedily have been exterminated, had not the people provoked the Lord, to employ them for their chaſtiſement, as we ſhall read in the ſubſequent hiſtory.

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.

The maintenance of the miniſtry is the appointment, and command of God, and not a matter of mere choice, or diſcretion; and they, "who labour in the word and doc-"trine" have as good a right to it, as other men have to their eſtates; and on ſome occaſions muſt be allowed without cenſure to aſſert their claim, againſt ſuch as would defraud them: but it ſhould always be with reluctancy, and backwardneſs; and as a matter of neceſſity, not of choice, or a diſpoſition to diſpute about temporal intereſts: and and with a willingneſs to refer themſelves to the arbitration of any impartial perſons. And in ordinary caſes it ſavours of a more excellent ſpirit, and more accords to the New Teſtament examples, when miniſters chooſe rather to "ſuffer all things," than to take any ſteps, which may impede the ſucceſs of their miniſtry. Yet their willingneſs to give up their right forms no excuſe for, but is an aggravation of their ſin, who deprive them of it. This proviſion for miniſters ought, if poſſible, to be ſo regulated, as to coincide with the grand end of their miniſtry, and to occaſion them as few avocations, temptations, or diſcouragements, as may be: and to afford them every advantage, of acceſs to the people; that they may exhort, reprove, and inſtruct them without falling under their contempt, or dreading their diſpleaſure. And it is well when miniſters, and their people conſider themſelves as watchers over each other: when the miniſter, from a recollection, that the people exactly obſerve his deportment, "walks the more "circumſpectly," "avoiding all appearance of evil;" leſt they ſhould be prejudiced or miſled; and leſt his exhortations and inſtructions ſhould loſe their efficacy: and when the people conſider that the miniſters are appointed to watch for their ſouls, as they, "that muſt give account;" and ſtudy ſo to receive their admonitions, and profit by their inſtructions, "that they may do it with joy, and not "wi h grief:" (Heb. c. xiii. v. 17.) But how dreadful is it when they encourage, and embolden one another

Contains, 1ſt. Joſhua diſmiſſing the Reubenites, Gadites, and Manaſſites, with commendation, counſel, prayers, and great booty, v. 1—10. 2d. Their erecting an altar on the banks of Jordan: the other tribes taking umbrage, preparing for war, and ſending ambaſſadors to them, v. 9—20. 3d. The anſwer of the Reubenites, &c. to the ſatisfaction of their brethren; and the name of their altar, v. 21—34.

THEN Joſhua called the Reubenites, and the Gadites, and the half-tribe of Manaſſeh,

2 And ſaid unto them, Ye have kept all that Moſes the ſervant of the LORD commanded you, and have obeyed my voice in all that I commanded you:

3 Ye have not left your brethren theſe many days unto this day, but have kept the charge of the commandment of the LORD your God.

4 And now the LORD your God hath given reſt unto your brethren, as he promiſed them: therefore now return ye, and get you unto your tents, and unto the land of your poſſeſſion, which Moſes the ſervant of the LORD gave you on the other ſide Jordan.

5 But take diligent heed to do the commandment, and the law, which Moſes the ſervant of the LORD charged you, to love the LORD your God, and to walk in all his ways, and to keep his commandments, and to cleave unto him, and to ſerve him with all your heart, and with all your ſoul.

6 So Joſhua bleſſed them, and ſent them away: and they went unto their tents.

7 Now to the one half of the tribe of Manaſſeh Moſes had given poſſeſſion in Baſhan; but unto the other half thereof gave Joſhua among their brethren on this ſide Jordan weſtin wickedneſs! A particular Providence is concerned in the ſituation of miniſters; who ſhould conſider their poſt, and work, as allotted to them of God, and chearfully continue therein, though they ſeem to have more diſcouragements, and inconveniences, than the reſt of their brethren; and not to remove, till they are ſatisfied in their own minds, after much ſerious conſideration, and prayer, that the Lord orders them to another ſtation, and work. Happy is that land where the true and faithful miniſters of God are to be met with in every diſtrict! The people will never be impoveriſhed by their maintenance; ſo long as they diligently apply themſelves to diſperſe the darkneſs of ignorance and error, and to diffuſe the light of divine truth: to oppoſe the ſpread of immorality, and to promote the practice of univerſal holineſs; and by their doctrine, influence, example, and prayers, to render all within their ſphere more wiſe, holy, and happy. Perſons of eminence ſhould take the lead in every good work, that their examples may excite others: always remembering, that pre-eminence in real uſefulneſs, is the moſt valuable of all diſtinctions.—In due ſeaſon all the promiſes of God will be accompliſhed to his true people: and their believing hope, and patient waiting, and ſelf-denying obedience, will iſſue in joyful ſongs of triumph, and thankful celebrations of his faithfulneſs, love, and power: then will it be univerſally acknowledged that there hath not failed ought of any good thing, which the Lord had ſpoken of, nay that he hath exceeded their largeſt expectations, made them more than conquerors, and brought them to their deſired, and delightſome reſt, and inheritance. May none of us at that ſeaſon be found amongſt his enemies, who ſhall be deſtroyed for ever! Let no true believer deſpond, becauſe of delays, tribulations, and temptations; for God hath confirmed his promiſe, and covenant with an oath, that we might have a ſtrong conſolation, who have fled for refuge, to lay hold on the hope ſet before us; let us then beg of him to enable us to confide in him entirely, and obey him unreſervedly, and to wait for him patiently: "for we have need of patience, that after we have done the "will of God, we might receive the promiſe." (Heb. c. x. v. 36.)

NOTES.

CHAP. XXII.] V. 3. Theſe many days, &c.] The Reubenites, &c, had at leaſt been abſent from home ſeven years: except as any of them had viſited their families, or been exchanged for others of their brethren. During this long war they had been very obedient to Joſhua, and did not attempt to return, till it was ended, the land divided, and their brethren ſettled; and then Joſhua honourably diſmiſſed them.

V. 5. With all your heart, &c.] The ſacred penman doth not record any of Joſhua's inſtructions to them, about their civil government, military diſcipline, or cultivation of their lands. Nothing was deemed worthy of inſertion in the ſacred volume, but thoſe things, which pertained to the maintenance of true godlineſs amongſt them. Perfect obedience to, or juſtification by the holy law of God, as a covenant of works, were no more practicable in the days of Joſhua, than at preſent: yet he exhorts them to that perfection, which the ſpiritual law of God requires. For the ſtandard of our obedience cannot be too complete, (Matt. c. v. ver. 48,) our aim cannot be too high: we ſhall be ſure to fall ſhort enough, whatever ſtandard we propoſe unto ourſelves; and the conſciouſneſs of ſuch imperfections will ſubſerve the purpoſes of humiliation; and the feeling of our own inſufficiency, will dictate, and render fervent our prayers for forgiveneſs, and aſſiſtance: whereas, if we previouſly aim at a low meaſure of holineſs, we ſhall become ſatisfied with preſent attainments, and ſupine and formal in our frame of ſpirit, if not buoyed up with ſelf-ſufficiency, and ſpiritual pride.

V. 6, 7. Joſhua bleſſed them, &c.] That is, he expreſſed ward. And when Joshua sent them away also unto their tents, then he blessed them;

8 And he spake unto them, saying, Return with much riches unto your tents, and with very much cattle, with silver, and with gold, and with brass, and with iron, and with very much raiment: divide the spoil of your enemies with your brethren.

9 And the children of Reuben, and the children of Gad, and the half-tribe of Manasseh, returned, and departed from the children of Israel out of Shiloh, which is in the land of Canaan, to go unto the country of Gilead, to the land of their possession, whereof they were possessed, according to the word of the LORD by the hand of Moses.

10 And when they came unto the borders of Jordan, that are in the land of Canaan, the children of Reuben, and the children of Gad, and the half-tribe of Manasseh, built there an altar by Jordan, a great altar to see to.

11 And the children of Israel heard say, Behold, the children of Reuben, and the children of Gad, and the half-tribe of Manasseh, have built an altar over against the land of Canaan, in the borders of Jordan, at the passage of the children of Israel.

12 And when the children of Israel heard of it, the whole congregation of the children of Israel gathered themselves together at Shiloh, to go up to war against them.

13 And the children of Israel sent unto the children of Reuben, and to the children of Gad, and to the half-tribe of Manasseh, into the land of Gilead, Phinehas the son of Eleazar the priest;

14 And with him ten princes, of each chief house a prince throughout all the tribes of Israel, and each one was an head of the house of their fathers among the thousands of Israel.

15 And they came unto the children of Reuben, and to the children of Gad, and to the half tribe of Manasseh, unto the land of Gilead, and they spake with them, saying, 16 Thus saith the whole congregation of the LORD, What trespass is this that ye have committed against the God of Israel, to turn away this day from following the LORD, in that ye have builded you an altar, that ye might rebel this day against the LORD?

17 Is the iniquity of Peor too little for us, from which we are not cleansed until this day, (although there was a plague in the congregation of the LORD,) his affectionate good-will to them, by fervent prayers for them, and pronouncing a solemn blessing on them.

V. 8. Divide, &c.] (Numb. c. xxxi. v. 27. 1 Sam. c. xxx. v. 24. Psalm lxviii. v. 12.)

V. 10. Built there, &c.] The Reubenites, &c, were suspected of intending to sacrifice on this altar: it was therefore doubtless in their own inheritance, east of Jordan; they were not ambitiously disposed to record their own exploits, but to erect a monument that they were the worshippers of Jehovah, and interested in the tabernacle worship, the altar, and all the sacrifices, that were offered upon it. This they devised to ascertain by erecting an altar, exactly in the form of that at Shiloh, but vastly larger. Yet they had done better, if they had previously consulted the Lord, or explained their intention to Joshua, Eleazar, and their brethren. But as they approved themselves upright, we do not find their indiscretion censured.

V. 12.] The command of God was express, that no sacrifices were to be offered, except at the door of the tabernacle: the building of another altar seemed to imply an intention of offering sacrifices, and this might prove one step towards apostacy, and idolatry: which was to be punished with death, (Deut. c. xiii,) without respect to affinity, or to numbers. Though these were their brethren, and had been very serviceable to them: yet their regard to the honour of God, and the interests of religion swallowed up, (as it were) all inferior regards; and in this commendable zeal, all the tribes of Israel were prepared to unite their arms against them. But they were too precipitate; and swayed too much by report, and convened at Shiloh with too angry a spirit, as if impatient to be engaged in so horrid a warfare. It was too harsh, even if they had sacrificed upon their altar, to condemn it as idolatry: and even in that case, they were commanded to make diligent search, and to go upon nothing less than an absolute certainty, in waging war against them; (Deut. c. xiii. v. 14, 15.) But when they were assembled at Shiloh, probably the wisdom, and authority of Joshua, Eleazar, &c, tempered their zeal, and they previously sent ambassadors to discover the truth, and to recover them to their duty by other methods, that they might not be necessitated to go to war with them. Phinehas was placed at the head of this embassy, whose zeal had before been so signalized: and having obtained an audience of the heads of the Reubenites, &c, they delivered their embassy in very plain terms, and such as appear somewhat rigorous; but which the more aptly denote, how much they were engaged in the cause of God, and of religion.

V. 17. From which we are not, &c.] This may be understood of the disgrace of the crime, which still lay upon them; or of the tokens of divine displeasure, which were yet felt amongst them, notwithstanding the plague: or rather, that there were many individuals in the congregation, who had never truly repented of, or recovered them-

18 But

18 But that ye muſt turn away this day from following the LORD? And it will be, ſeeing ye rebel to-day againſt the LORD, that to-morrow he will be wroth with the whole congregation of Iſrael.

19 Notwithſtanding, if the land of your poſſeſſion be unclean, then paſs ye over unto the land of the poſſeſſion of the LORD, wherein the LORD's tabernacle dwelleth, and take poſſeſſion among us: but rebel not againſt the LORD, nor rebel againſt us, in building you an altar beſide the altar, of the LORD our God.

20 Did not Achan the ſon of Zerah commit a treſpaſs in the accurſed thing, and wrath fell on all the congregation of Iſrael? and that man periſhed not alone in his iniquity.

21 Then the children of Reuben, and the children of Gad, and the half-tribe of Manaſſeh anſwered, and ſaid unto the heads of the thouſands of Iſrael,

22 The LORD God of gods, the LORD God of gods, he knoweth, and Iſrael he ſhall know, if it be in rebellion, or if in tranſgreſſion againſt the LORD, (ſave us not this day,)

23 That we have built us an altar to turn from following the LORD, or if to offer thereon burnt-offering, or meat-offering, or if to offer peace-offerings thereon, let the LORD himſelf require it:

24 And if we have not rather done it for fear of this thing, ſaying, in time to come your children might ſpeak unto our children, ſaying, What have ye to do with the LORD God of Iſrael?

25 For the LORD hath made Jordan a border between us and you: ye children of Reuben and children of Gad, ye have no part in the LORD: ſo ſhall your children make our children ceaſe from fearing the LORD.

26 Therefore we ſaid, Let us now prepare to build us an altar, not for burnt-offering, nor for ſacrifice:

ſelves from that wickedneſs, but who yet lay under the guilt of it, and were diſpoſed to renew their provocation, ſhould an occaſion be afforded them. In ſhort, the fire had been ſmothered up, but not totally extinguiſhed; and it was therefore very dangerous to admit of any practice, which might occaſion it's breaking forth again, leſt ſtill wider devaſtation ſhould enſue.

V. 18, 19.] The propoſal here made, diſplayed in a very affecting manner their piety, diſintereſtedneſs, and brotherly love. They had indeed reproved their brethren ſharply, and were prepared to wage war againſt them, with their whole force, if the glory of God, and the intereſts of religion required it: but yet they loved them with ſo generous an affection, that they would rather divide their eſtates with them, than be under the painful neceſſity of ſo doing: if therefore the Reubenites, &c, deemed their inheritance polluted, becauſe they had no altar amongſt them, on which to offer expiatory ſacrifices; and had by that conſideration been induced to tranſgreſs the commandment of God, and adopt a meaſure, which might be productive of ſuch fatal conſequences; they would chearfully relinquiſh a part of their inheritances in Canaan, to make room for them, on that ſide Jordan, rather than leave them to perſiſt in ſo ruinous an expedient.

V. 20. Periſhed not alone, &c.] The thirty-ſix men, who were ſlain before Ai, and all the family of Achan had periſhed with him in his iniquity: and wrath would have come upon the whole congregation, had he not been puniſhed. If then one man's ſin wrought ſo much indignation, what would be the conſequences of the apoſtacy of two tribes and an half!

V. 22. The Lord God, &c.] This anſwer of the Reubenites, &c, is well worthy of admiration. They took the ſuſpicions, reproofs, and even harſhneſs of their brethren in good part, and did not object to the authority of the elders at Shiloh, or adviſe them to look to themſelves, and their own concerns, or in any manner retort upon them: but with the utmoſt ſolemnity, and meekneſs proceeded to explain their intention, and to give their brethren all the ſatisfaction in their power. Their appeal to the Lord, againſt whom they were ſuppoſed to have rebelled, was made with peculiar propriety, and with great reverence. The titles, by which they addreſſed him, "the Lord God "of Gods, the Lord God of Gods, &c," formed a very proper confeſſion of their faith in, as well as an act of worſhip of him, as the Eternal, Almighty God, who was exalted far above, and ſovereign Lord of all creatures however great; and even of thoſe, which other nations worſhipped as their gods: they proteſted, knew, and Iſrael ſhould know, that they were not guilty of thoſe things, with which they were charged: and indeed if they could be proved guilty, they acknowledged, that they did not deſerve, and therefore did not aſk, to be ſpared.

V. 24, 25.] They further declared that their motives in erecting this altar were directly contrary to thoſe, which had been imputed to them. For they were greatly afraid, leſt in proceſs of time the other tribes ſhould not acknowledge them as brethren, nor admit them to the ordinances of the Lord; leſt their poſterity, by reaſon of their diſtance, or ſlackneſs in attendance upon the ſolemn feaſts, ſhould at length be refuſed admiſſion amongſt them, and thus be tempted, and gradually decline to idolatry: and that no other motive had induced them to build the altar in queſtion, after the faſhion of that at Shiloh, but that it might remain to ſucceeding generations a memorial that they were Iſraelites, that they were intereſted in all the ſacrifices offered upon the altar of the Lord, and had a right to join with them in all their public religious ſolemnities.

27 But that it may be a witneſs between us and you, and our generations after us, that we might do the ſervice of the LORD before him with our burnt offerings, and with our ſacrifices, and with our peace-offerings; that your children may not ſay to our children in time to come, Ye have no part in the LORD.

28 Therefore ſaid we, that it ſhall be, when they ſhould ſo ſay to us, or to our generations in time to come, that we may ſay again, Behold the pattern of the altar of the LORD, which our fathers made, not for burnt-offerings, nor for ſacrifices, but it is a witneſs between us and you.

29 God forbid that we ſhould rebel againſt the LORD, and turn this day from following the LORD, to build an altar for burnt-offerings, for meat-offerings, or for ſacrifices, beſide the altar of the LORD our God that is before his tabernacle.

30 And when Phinehas the prieſt, and the princes of the congregation, and heads of the thouſands of Iſrael, which were with him, heard the words that the children of Reuben, and the children of Gad, and the children of Manaſſeh ſpake, it pleaſed them.

31 And Phinehas, the ſon of Eleazer, the prieſt, ſaid unto the children of Reuben, and to the children of Gad, and to the children of Manaſſeh, This day I perceive that the LORD is among us, becauſe ye have not committed this treſpaſs againſt the LORD: now ye have delivered the children of Iſrael out of the hand of the LORD.

32 And Phinehas, the ſon of Eleazar, the prieſt, and the princes, returned from the children of Reuben, and from the children of Gad, out of the land of Gilead, unto the land of Canaan, to the children of Iſrael, and brought them word again.

33 And the thing pleaſed the children of Iſrael; and the children of Iſrael bleſſed God, and did not intend to go up againſt them in battle, to deſtroy the land wherein the children of Reuben and Gad dwelt.

34 And the children of Reuben and the children of Gad called the altar Ed: for it ſhall be a witneſs between us that the LORD is God.

CHAP.

V. 30. And, &c.] This anſwer entirely removed all the ſuſpicions from the minds of the ambaſſadors; and they were both pleaſed that their brethren were not guilty, and that they were ſo piouſly diſpoſed.

V. 31. Now ye have, &c.] Had the Reubenites, &c, been guilty; or had they anſwered with contempt, and ſo provoked the other tribes to war againſt them, they would have occaſioned ſin and puniſhment to the congregation: but their pious, frank, meek, and wiſe anſwer had brought the buſineſs to an amicable concluſion, and prevented all fatal conſequences.

V. 34. Called the altar, &c.] As the word Ed, in the firſt clauſe, is not in the original; ſo the meaning ſeems to be, that the perſons concerned inſcribed theſe words on the altar, It is a witneſs, that the Lord is God. They, as well as their brethren weſt of Jordan, acknowledged and worſhipped Jehovah, as the only true God: and by this meaſure they endeavoured to prevent any future abuſe or miſconſtruction of this altar; that it might neither occaſion ſuperſtition, nor be a ſtumbling-block to their brethren. Thus was this affair happily terminated; and though human infirmity is diſcoverable on both ſides; yet the pious reader will thence collect the moſt pleaſing ideas of the general and zealous regard, which was then paid to the worſhip and ordinances of God; and be confirmed in the ſentiment, that this was indeed the very beſt of all the generations of Iſrael.

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.

The work of God and the welfare of his people are entitled to a preference above our moſt important perſonal intereſts, our ſweeteſt domeſtic comforts, and our moſt endeared relative affections: and every engagement, into which we have entered, ought to be diſcharged with ſtrict punctuality, without the leaſt appearance of prevarication, and, if it can be done, to the complete ſatisfaction of all parties. Nay, the believer ſhould be ſo well pleaſed with ſerving the cauſe of the church of Chriſt on earth, as to be willing to tarry yet longer in this world of warfare, labour, and trouble, and to wait patiently till the Lord Jeſus honourably diſmiſſes him: (Phil. i. 20—24.) But if we are numbered among his ſoldiers, we ſhould obey his orders with chearfulneſs and exactneſs; that we may at laſt receive his commendation. Of this honour we all ought to be ambitious, and of this alone.—He will bleſs thoſe whom he approves, and recompenſe them in proportion to the ſelf-denial, hardſhip, and affliction which they have endured for his ſake: nay the power, number, and malice of our enemies, and the long continuance of our warfare, will eventually increaſe the riches of our gracious reward; which all our brethren will ſhare with us, by rejoicing in our fulneſs of joy, as we ſhall alſo rejoice in their's.—Commendation ought not to be withheld from thoſe who have behaved well; gratitude to the inſtruments conſiſts very well with ſuperior gratitude to the Author of all our mercies; our beſt counſels and fervent prayers are a debt, which we owe eſpecially to thoſe who have been uſeful to us; and the comfort of others ſhould be regarded equally with our own. The true intereſt of individuals and of nations does not conſiſt in wealth, or greatneſs, but in loving, cleaving to, and obeying the Lord: and we ſhould aim very high in this great concern, or elſe our attainments will be very low.—When urgent affairs have called or detained

AND it came to pass, a long time after that the LORD had given rest unto Israel from all their enemies round about, that Joshua waxed old and stricken in age.

2 And Joshua called for all Israel, and for their elders, and for their heads, and for their judges, and for their officers, and said unto them, I am old and stricken in age:

3 And ye have seen all that the LORD your God hath done unto all these nations because of you; for the LORD your God is he that hath fought for you.

tained men from their families for a season, they should return home as soon as they are able, that they may instruct and rule over them in the fear of God; and share all their acquisitions with them, in liberal hospitality, and not in personal indulgence or excess.—We should highly value the ordinances of God ourselves, and desire to perpetuate them to our posterity; that they may inherit the blessings of the communion of the saints, and be preserved from all temptations to ungodliness or false religion: and when our situation in life, or the choice which we have inadvertently made for them or for ourselves, exposes them to peculiar danger, we should devise every prudent means of preventing the fatal effects.—Though we ought carefully to take heed that our good be not evil spoken of; yet they, who are truly zealous for the honour of God, and active in promoting true godliness, must not think it strange, if their honest and proper measures be suspected or censured, even by such of their brethren, as are no less zealous than they, but from concurring circumstances are led to express their zeal in another way. We ought however constantly to watch against a disposition to rash judgment, uncandid surmises, and harsh reproofs; and to cultivate and pray for the contrary spirit: but should it be our trial to be rebuked with severity, and loaded with calumny; we should be thankful for the testimony of our consciences to our integrity, and for confidence in appealing to our heart-searching Judge, that we are misrepresented, or misunderstood. And if the Lord knoweth our innocence, Israel shall know it in due time; for when our consciences are clear, he will at length clear our character, which we may therefore safely commit to his keeping; (Psalm xxxvii. 6.) While we are exposed to this trial, we ought cautiously to avoid all recriminations, to speak with mildness and seriousness, and be ready to offer such explanations of our conduct and intentions, as may obviate misconstructions and satisfy the minds of our pious and candid brethren, and to alter whatever has been wrong, or appears suspicious.—But charity hopeth all things, and rejoiceth not in iniquity: and they, who "abound in this grace also," will be glad to find themselves mistaken, in the unfavourable opinion of their brethren which they reluctantly entertained; and will bless God for evidences of their faith and piety.—When our boldness in opposing, and our sharpness in reproving or punishing sin, are the effects of genuine zeal and love; they will be attended with a disposition to renounce our own interests, that sin may be prevented. God may be glorified, and temptations removed out of the way of our brethren: and we have learned a good lesson, when we are brought to dread sin worse than poverty or suffering.—In all our appeals to the Lord, we ought to have our minds possessed with a solemn reverential awe of his majesty, authority, heart-searching knowledge, and perfections; and never to call him to witness about any thing trivial or doubtful, or in a light and rash manner.—Happy will it be when all professed Christians shall learn, in their differences, to copy the example of Israel recorded in this chapter; and to unite zeal and steady adherance to the cause of truth, with candour, meekness, a readiness to understand each other, to explain, and to be satisfied with the sufficient explanations and concessions of their brethren. Oh how long shall acrimony, misrepresentation, uncandid construction, false testimony, severity, ridicule and contempt, opprobious epithets, and an obstinate pertinacity in defending every title of a system, and carrying every sentiment to the utmost extreme! how long, I say, shall these things disgrace the very name of religious controversy, and confirm the prejudices of thousands against those precious truths, which have often been contended for in so odious a manner! When will Christians remember, "that by this shall all men know the disciples of Christ, "when they have love one for another?" and when will they recollect that "if they bite and devour one another, they "are likely to be consumed one of another?" For the world, and the god of this world, have no higher gratification, than to see the different denominations of professing Christians exposing, reviling, and ridiculing each other! May the Lord increase the number of those, who "endea-"vour to keep the unity of the Spirit in the bond of "peace:" and may increasing grace and consolation be with all who love Jesus Christ in sincerity, by whatever name they are distinguished. Amen.

NOTES.

CHAP. XXIII.] V. 1. A long time, &c.] Perhaps about ten years.

V. 2. For all Israel, and for, &c.] That is for all Israel, even for their elders, &c. When Joshua had given the following charge to the elders, and to the rulers of thousands, and of hundreds; they would be enabled to communicate the substance of it in their several districts, that all Israel might hear. Probably this was done at Shiloh, on one of the solemn feasts.

V. 6.

5 And the LORD your God, he shall expel them from before you, and drive them from out of your sight; and ye shall possess their land, as the LORD your God hath promised unto you.

6 Be ye therefore very courageous to keep and to do all that is written in the book of the law of Moses, that ye turn not aside therefrom to the right hand or to the left:

7 That ye come not among these nations, these that remain among you, neither make mention of the name of their gods, nor cause to swear by them, neither serve them, nor bow yourselves unto them.

8 But cleave unto the LORD your God, as ye have done unto this day.

9 For the LORD hath driven out from before you great nations and strong: but as for you, no man hath been able to stand before you unto this day.

10 One man of you shall chase a thousand: for the Lord your God, he it is that fighteth for you, as he hath promised you.

11 Take good heed therefore unto yourselves, that ye love the LORD your God.

12 Else if ye do in any wise go back, and cleave unto the remnant of these nations, even these that remain among you, and shall make marriages with them, and go in unto them, and they to you;

13 Know for a certainty that the LORD your God will no more drive out any of these nations from before you; but they shall be snares and traps unto you, and scourges in your sides, and thorns in your eyes, until ye perish from off this good land which the LORD your God hath given you.

14 And behold this day I am going the way of all the earth: and ye know in all your hearts, and in all your souls, that not one thing hath failed of all the good things which the LORD your God spake concerning you; all are come to pass unto you, and not one thing hath failed thereof.

15 Therefore it shall come to pass, that as all good things are come upon you, which the

V. 6. Be ye, &c.] Whilst the Israelites adhered strictly to the whole law of Moses, they would be kept entirely distinct from the Canaanites and the surrounding nations, and would in consequence be exposed to their hatred and opposition. They were likewise required to carry on unceasing war against the inhabitants of the land, avowedly aiming at their entire extirpation; which would expose them to their unabating and most rancorous enmity. Great courage would therefore be required in order to a determinate obedience in such circumstances: and Joshua probably had observed that the people were more intent upon the quiet enjoyment of their present possessions, than upon boldly improving their advantages, as the Lord by Moses had commanded them.

V. 7. Cause to swear, &c.] The habitual mention of the names of idols, had it been allowed, would gradually have introduced the custom of swearing by them in common discourse: and this would have abated the abhorrence of idolatry in the minds of the people, and have prepared the way for more direct acts of idolatrous worship. The paintings, statutes, and poems, exquisitely finished by human ingenuity, but replete with references to the detestable heathen mythology, with which our land is stored, tend exceedingly to habituate the mind to reflect upon the Roman and Grecian idolatry without horror, nay with a kind of pleasure; to banish the language of piety from men's lips, and thus to subserve the cause of scepticism, infidelity, and ungodliness: (Note, Exod. xxiii. 13.).

V. 10. One man, &c.] If the Israelites continued to cleave unto the Lord, he engaged to fight for them as he had hitherto done. After they were dispersed in their several possessions, they might not be able to bring such large armies into the field, as when encamped in one body: but that ought not to discourage them; for one Israelite should chase a thousand Canaanites, so long as they cleaved unto the Lord; for he himself "would fight for them," (Lev. xxvi. 8. Deut. xxxii. 30. 1 Sam. xiv. 6.)

V. 13. Snares and traps, &c.] The Canaanites would first be snares and traps to the people, and then scourges in their sides and thorns in their eyes. If they entered into any amicable correspondence with the conquered nations, their women would allure them to form connections or marriages with them; and by their blandishments would entice them to join in idolatrous worship. Thus they would be taken in satan's snares and traps: for indeed the Canaanites must always be enemies to the Israelites under every mask; and they would always watch their opportunity of avenging themselves upon them. When therefore the Israelites had provoked the Lord to withdraw his protection, the Canaanites would be the ready instruments of their chastisement; but if that did not bring them to repentance, their cruelties would torment them as a thorn in the eye would do, and even drive them out of the promised land. The subsequent history abundantly illustrates the propriety of these expressions.

V. 14—16.] The Israelites were deeply affected with the wonderful performance of the promises which God had made to their fathers; and Joshua, (as he supposed with his parting breath,) declared to them, that the threatenings would be accomplished with equal certainty and exactness whenever they transgressed their covenant by apostacy and idolatry.

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.

Through the deceitfulness of the human heart, we are never more in danger of forgetting the Lord, than when he hath most favoured us with temporal prosperity!—They who the LORD your God promiſed you: ſo ſhall the LORD bring upon you all evil things, until he have deſtroyed you from off this good land, which the LORD your God hath given unto you.

16 When ye have tranſgreſſed the covenant of the LORD your God, which he commanded you, and have gone and ſerved other gods, and bowed yourſelves to them; then ſhall the anger of the LORD be kindled againſt you, and ye ſhall periſh quickly from off the good land which he hath given unto you.

Contains, 1ſt. His death and burial; Iſrael's adherence to the ſervice of the Lord; the burial of Joſeph's bones; and the death and burial of Eleazar,* 29—33.

AND Joſhua gathered all the tribes of Iſrael to Shechem, and called for the elders of Iſrael, and for their heads, and for their judges, and for their officers: and they preſented themſelves before God.

2 And Joſhua ſaid unto all the people, Thus ſaith the LORD God of Iſrael, Your fathers dwelt on the other ſide of the flood in old time, even Terah, the father of Abraham, and the father of Nahor: and they ſerved other gods.

who poſſeſs influence, on account of age, authority, reputation for wiſdom and piety, or eminent ſervices, ſhould employ it all, with unwearied perſeverance, to their lateſt breath, in promoting the practice of true godlineſs.—Gratitude, duty, intereſt, and regard to our own beſt happineſs, with united energy, require us to adhere to our profeſſion, and walk conſiſtently with it: yet we all need to be frequently reminded, exhorted, and warned of theſe things.—So long as men cleave to the Lord, though they have abated ſomewhat of their fervour and diligence, there is a good ground of hope that admonitions will have a proper effect; and the diſeaſes of the ſoul, like thoſe of the body, ſhould be reſiſted at firſt before they have gathered ſtrength.—We cannot too frequently be called upon to meditate on the Lord's paſt and preſent kindneſs to us; and to reflect upon his gracious promiſes, and aweful threatenings: and we ſhould treaſure up our experience of his exact performance of his word, to ſtrengthen our expectation of the accompliſhment of the whole in due ſeaſon; for hope and fear, and every paſſion of the ſoul, ought to be engaged to reſtrain men from ſin, and to keep them cloſe to their duty.—It is true wiſdom to diſcern and ſhun the occaſions of ſin and inlets to it; and none are more dangerous than ungodly companions. Acquaintance, friendſhip, and marriage, with perſons of no religion, or of falſe religion, have generally been found progreſſive ſteps towards the mere profeſſor's apoſtaſy, and the believer's loſs of all his life, comfort, and uſefulneſs. They, who at firſt are tempters, will eventually prove the ſcourges of thoſe who have liſtened to their ſeductions: and either bitter diſtreſs in this world, or utter deſtruction in the world to come, are the unavoidable effects of yielding to ſuch temptations. This all ought "to know for a certainty," that they "may take good "heed unto themſelves" and not allow the love of any creature to draw them off from the love of God and obedience to his laws.—Our minds ought to be filled with an abhorrence of every kind of ungodlineſs, equal to that which the moſt conſcientious perſons feel of murder or adultery; for the guilt of neglecting and deſpiſing the glorious God our Creator, is far greater, than that of injuring our fellow-creatures; yet this is vaſtly different from the ſentiments and conduct of fallen man. But our inward foes are the moſt dangerous; and we muſt oppoſe and mortify them with unrelenting ſeverity, or they will occaſion us much miſery: ſo that this warfare will require great courage and reſolution. For if we reſolutely adhere to the word of God as our rule, neither turning aſide to the right hand nor to the left; we ſhall certainly be hated, deſpiſed, and reproached, if not worſe treated, by them whoſe pride is affronted, or whoſe conſcience is made uneaſy through our holy ſingularity and faithful reproofs. We need not however fear them; "for the Lord our God "will fight for us, as he hath promiſed," and nothing will by any means hurt us: and though uſeful inſtruments and valued friends are removing from us; yet the Lord ever liveth to protect, uphold, guide, comfort, and bleſs us. But ſinners have indeed cauſe to tremble at his indignation: for he will as certainly execute his threatenings, as perform his promiſes; and hypocrites or apoſtates will be as ſeverely treated, as open infidels and profligates. Let us then watch and pray againſt temptation; let us truſt in the faithfulneſs, love, and power of God; let us plead his promiſes and cleave to his commandments; and then we ſhall be happy in life, and death, and for ever.

NOTES.

CHAP. XXIV.] V. 1. To Shechem, &c.] Shechem was nearer to Timnath-ſerah, than Shiloh was; and Joſhua, being old and infirm, convened the tribes and elders of Iſrael to that place. Finding his life ſtill prolonged, he was deſirous of once more enforcing upon the Iſraelites the great things of their religion, in the moſt ſolemn and affecting manner poſſible.

V. 2. The other ſide of the flood, &c.] That is, of the river Euphrates. It is ſaid that "they ſerved other gods;" hence it is evident that Abraham, (as well as Terah and Nahor,) had been guilty of idolatry, before he was called to the knowledge of God, when he was above ſeventy years of age.

V. 7.

4 And I gave unto Iſaac Jacob and Eſau: and I gave unto Eſau mount Seir, to poſſeſs it; but Jacob and his children went down into Egypt.

5 I ſent Moſes alſo and Aaron, and I plagued Egypt, according to that which I did among them; and afterward I brought you out.

6 And I brought your fathers out of Egypt: and ye came unto the ſea; and the Egyptians purſued after your fathers with chariots and horſemen unto the Red ſea.

7 And when they cried unto the LORD, he put darkneſs between you and the Egyptians, and brought the ſea upon them, and covered them: and your eyes have ſeen what I have done in Egypt: and ye dwelt in the wilderneſs a long ſeaſon.

8 And I brought you into the land of the Amorites, which dwelt on the other ſide Jordan; and they fought with you: and I gave them into your hand, that ye might poſſeſs their land; and I deſtroyed them from before you.

9 Then Balak the ſon of Zippor, king of Moab, aroſe and warred againſt Iſrael, and ſent and called Balaam the ſon of Beor to curſe you:

10 But I would not hearken unto Balaam; therefore he bleſſed you ſtill: ſo I delivered you out of his hand.

11 And ye went over Jordan, and came unto Jericho: and the men of Jericho fought againſt you, the Amorites, and the Perrizzites, and the Canaanites, and the Hittites, and the Girgaſhites, the Hivites, and the Jebuzites; and I delivered them into your hand.

12 And I ſent the hornet before you, which drave them out from before you, even the two kings of the Amorites; but not with thy ſword, nor with thy bow.

13 And I have given you a land for which ye did not labour, and cities which ye built not, and ye dwell in them: of the vineyards and olive-yards which ye planted not do ye eat.

14 Now therefore fear the LORD, and ſerve him in ſincerity and in truth; and put away the gods which your fathers ſerved on the other ſide of the flood, and in Egypt; and ſerve ye the LORD.

15 And if it ſeem evil unto you to ſerve the LORD, chooſe ye this day whom ye will ſerve; whether the gods which your fathers ſerved that were on the other ſide of the flood, or the gods of the Amorites, in whoſe land

V. 7. Your eyes, &c.] Many of thoſe, who in their youth had witneſſed theſe miracles, were doubtleſs ſtill living; and the elders, judges, and officers, whom Joſhua addreſſed, might conſiſt chiefly of this number.

V. 9. Warred, &c.] Balak intended to make war on Iſrael, and called Balaam previouſly to curſe them, but he was not permitted to execute his purpoſes.

V. 12 I ſent the hornet, &c.] (Note, Exod. xxiii. 28.) Probably theſe inſects ſo infeſted the armies of Sihon and Og, when preparing for the battle, as to throw them into confuſion, and thus to give the Iſraelites an eaſy victory; which demanded the greater gratitude from them, as not having been obtained by their ſword or bow.

V. 14. Put away the gods, &c.] It ſeems that the Iſralites ſtill retained ſome reliques of the idolatry of their fathers, which from time to time they were tempted to worſhip. In this very place Jacob had "put away the ſtrange "gods" which were in his family, and buried them under an oak; (Gen. xxxv. 2—4.) But his deſcendents had formed other images of the ſame ſuppoſed deities, and had not, during the life of Moſes or ſince his death, been induced to deſtroy them all, as Joſhua well knew; and therefore he inſiſted upon their putting them all away together, if they meant to be ſincere and entire in the ſervice of Jehovah.

V. 15. Chooſe ye, &c.] The Lord has an unalienable right to the worſhip and obedience of all rational creatures, which cannot be withheld without contracting the deepeſt guilt, and incurring the ſevereſt vengeance. But it is eſſential to this worſhip and obedience that it be performed with a willing mind; for LOVE is the very ſubſtance of it, and the only genuine principle whence it can ſpring. A reluctant unwilling worſhip and obedience can riſe no higher than hypocriſy. "The Father ſeeketh ſuch to worſhip him, who "worſhip him in ſpirit, and truth." But "the carnal mind "is enmity againſt God," and therefore incapable of ſuch a ſpiritual worſhip. Hence the neceſſity of being born again; and when we diſcover this neceſſity, and the nature of this gracious change, we are induced to ſeek for it in the uſe of appointed means; and thus we become conſciouſly and experimentally partakers of it, and are numbered among thoſe who worſhip God in ſincerity and genuine love. But in the viſible church of profeſſed worſhippers, numbers have always reſted in the mere form, in an unpleaſant taſk which they have impoſed upon themſelves, to avoid worſe conſequences, or in a ſelfiſh hope of reward: and a great part of the uſefulneſs of preaching conſiſts, in diſcovering the difference betwixt the form and the power of godlineſs; and in ſtirring up the minds of men from reſting in the former to ſeek after the latter. The method, which Joſhua adopted, in treating with the Iſraelites, was admirably calculated and evidently intended to produce this effect. Many of them were already ſpiritual worſhippers:

land ye dwell: but as for me and my houſe, we will ſerve the LORD.

16 And the people anſwered and ſaid, God forbid that we ſhould forſake the LORD, to ſerve other gods;

17 For the LORD our God he it is that brought us up, and our fathers, out of the land of Egypt, from the houſe of bondage, and which did thoſe great ſigns in our ſight, and preſerved us in all the way wherein we went, and among all the people through whom we paſſed:

18 And the LORD drave out from before us all the people, even the Amorites which dwelt in the land: therefore, will we alſo ſerve the LORD: for he is our God.

19 And Joſhua ſaid unto the people, Ye cannot ſerve the LORD; for he is an holy God: he is a jealous God; he will not forgive your tranſgreſſions, nor your ſins.

20 If ye forſake the LORD, and ſerve ſtrange gods, then he will turn and do you hurt, and conſume you, after that he hath done you good.

21 And the people ſaid unto Joſhua, Nay; but we will ſerve the LORD.

22 And Joſhua ſaid unto the people, Ye are witneſſes againſt yourſelves that ye have choſen you the LORD, to ſerve him. And they ſaid, We are witneſſes.

23 Now therefore put away, (ſaid he,) the ſtrange gods which are among you, and incline your heart unto the LORD God of Iſrael.

24 And the people ſaid unto Joſhua, The LORD our God will we ſerve, and his voice will we obey.

25 So Joſhua made a covenant with the people that day, and ſet them a ſtatute and an ordinance in Shechem.

26 And Joſhua wrote theſe words in the book

pers: a far greater number might be favourably diſpoſed toward the worſhip and ſervice of the Lord; but through procraſtination and worldly avocations not yet truly engaged in it: and many doubtleſs had a ſecret diſlike to ſpiritual religion, who would have been aſhamed to confeſs it, and would be ſhocked at the propoſal of renouncing the worſhip of God, and openly profeſſing themſelves idolaters. —Of this ſtate of their minds Joſhua aimed to take advantage, and to lead them by this propoſal to conſider their ways; to reflect upon their own inconſiſtency, formality, or procraſtination; and to engage deliberately, ſeriouſly, and with full purpoſe of heart, in the Lord's ſervice. Thus he likewiſe intimated that apoſtacy from God to the worſhip of idols would not be more deſtructive to them, than hypocriſy, a ſecret averſion from true godlineſs, and a lifeleſs profeſſion: that, if the ſervice of God were worth any thing, it was worth every thing: that for his part, he had made up his mind, and had deliberately and decidedly choſen to ſerve the Lord fully and heartily: that he was determined to uſe all his authority and influence with his family to prevail with them to follow his example: and that he greatly deſired to perſuade the people to make the ſame choice, and to act in the ſame manner.

V. 19. Ye cannot, &c.] Joſhua did not ſpeak this with any intention of deterring the people from God's ſervice; but to put them upon their guard againſt objections which are commonly made to a life of ſtrict godlineſs, as if intolerably difficult, or even impracticable; and to lead them to count their coſt, and to conſider before-hand what they engaged to do.—With great addreſs, and deep acquaintance with the human heart, he ſeized the advantage which their preſent impreſſions afforded him, to render them abiding and effectual. When a certain degree of inclination towards any object hath once gained poſſeſſion of the heart, it is always increaſed by the proſpect of difficulties in the way; provided they appear ſurmountable by contrivance, exertion, and perſeverance.—This management of Joſhua had a direct tendency to lead the Iſraelites to reflect upon the character and perfections of Jehovah, and upon the nature of his ſervice; to advert to their own unholineſs and inſufficiency, and to that encouragement and aſſiſtance which the word of God propoſed to them; to induce them to eſteem the acceptable ſerving of God, as a prize worth their utmoſt labour and earneſtneſs; to render them more diligent, watchful, humble, and dependent in their endeavours; to prepare them for the croſs, and for the conflict; and to prevent the effect of after-difficulties, diſcouragements, and temptations, by exciting the expectation of them; (Notes, &c. Luke, xiv. 25—33.) Such was the tendency of this addreſs, and ſuch by the bleſſing of God, appears to have been it's effect upon many of the Iſraelites, (31.)

V. 20. If ye forſake, &c.] The longer and the more open profeſſion the Iſraelites made of worſhipping Jehovah, the deeper would be their guilt and condemnation, if they at laſt apoſtatiſed to idolatry. Of this Joſhua reminded them; not that they ſhould refuſe to avow themſelves the worſhippers of the Lord; but that they might advert to the importance of that engagement, and be upon their guard againſt future temptations.

V. 23. Incline your heart, &c.] This expreſſion ſhews how earneſt this venerable ſervant of God was, to lead the people into the interior exerciſes of godlineſs, and to excite them to be ſpiritual and hearty, as well as entire in their religion.

V. 25. So Joſhua, &c.] In this way Joſhua led on his audience ſolemnly to renew the ratification of their covenant to be the Lord's people, and to adhere to his worſhip, in the moſt intelligent and deliberate manner; and then he formed the whole into a ſtatute and ordinance, which was promulgated for all Iſrael to underſtand and obey.

V. 26. Joſhua wrote, &c.] This ratification of the covenant ſeems to have been inſcribed in that copy of the law, which book of the law of God, and took a great stone, and set it up there under an oak that was by the sanctuary of the LORD.

27 And Joshua said unto all the people, Behold, this stone shall be a witness unto us; for it hath heard all the words of the LORD which he spake unto us: it shall be therefore a witness unto you, lest ye deny your God.

28 So Joshua let the people depart, every man unto his inheritance.

29 And it came to pass after these things, that Joshua the son of Nun, the servant of the LORD, died, being an hundred and ten years old.

30 And they buried him in the border of his inheritance in Timnath-serah, which is in mount Ephraim, on the north side of the hill of Gaash.

31 And Israel served the LORD all the days of Joshua, and all the days of the elders that overlived Joshua, and which had known all the works of the LORD, that he had done for Israel.

32 And the bones of Joseph, which the children of Israel brought up out of Egypt, buried they in Shechem, in a parcel of ground which Jacob bought of the sons of Hamor, the father of Shechem, for an hundred pieces of silver: and it became the inheritance of the children of Joseph.

which was laid up by the sides of the ark, as a perpetual memorial of the transaction: and it was also, probably, transcribed into all the other copies of the law then extant.

V. 27. Behold, this stone, &c.] This great stone would testify to succeeding generations that event, which it was set up to commemorate, and would be a witness against the people when they afterwards revolted to idolatry. A memorial of this kind likewise implied a forcible charge of insensibility against mankind, as if more regardless of their Maker than the inanimate creatures are; which, by answering the end of their creation seem to exclaim against the ingratitude and rebellion of the human species.—In this affecting manner Joshua took his leave of Israel; went home from his last, and perhaps his best, service to God and them, and was speedily taken home to his rest.

V. 32. And the bones of Joseph, &c.] The Israelites had carried Joseph's bones with them in all their wanderings, and had never attempted to bury them till they were peaceably settled in the land.—It is remarkable that Joshua just lived as many years as his renowned ancestor Joseph had done: he was not however buried in the same place with him, but in his own inheritance, which seems to have been the general practice.

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.

It is beautiful and honourable, when zeal for the glory of God and love to the souls of men gather strength, at a time when the body is ready to drop into the grave: and whilst life is spared, and any measure of health afforded, if our hearts glow with love and zeal, we shall devise some method to serve the cause of godliness, and to fix salutary impressions upon the minds of those around us: nay sometimes when the body is least capable of executing, the soul possesses most vigour for contriving proper methods of doing good.—In repeating our exhortations, heavenly wisdom will teach us to vary the manner of reaching the conscience and engaging the affections; but we can never with propriety omit the commemoration of the Lord's mercies to us: by frequent meditation on that subject, we shall recollect more and more instances of his goodness: and whatever in our experience demands our gratitude to God, will also furnish us with cause of humiliation and of encouragement.—The largeness and freeness of divine mercy are so illustrated in the salvation of the most eminent saints, mentioned in Scripture, that the chief of sinners may thence take encouragement in returning to the Lord.—The inference to be drawn from every delineation of the divine character, and from the memorial of his wonderous works and abundant mercies, is this, "now therefore fear the "Lord, and serve him in sincerity, and in truth:" fear his displeasure, seek his favour, embrace his mercy, trust his grace, reverence his authority, wait on him in his ordinances, be thankful for his benefits, and thus learn to love him and to keep his commandments. But without sincerity and truth, all professions of repentance, faith, fear, or love are mere hypocrisy, and will avail us nothing. His service must be our voluntary choice, and if we were disposed to use our reason aright, we could not but make choice of it. Blessed be his name, after all our sins, we are still invited to choose his service: and he will not reject us; if we seek him in the appointed way, and are decided in prefering his favour, worship, and obedience, to the pleasures of sin, and to the vanities of the world. But we must diligently study the nature of true religion, and what it will cost us, expose us to, and employ us in; that we may be prepared for the temptations, tribulations, conflicts, and self-denials to which it will certainly call us; and that we may be aware of our own insufficiency, and seek help and comfort from on high. The Lord our God is jealous, just, and holy: he will not be trifled with, he cannot be imposed upon, he abhors a double mind, and will not accept of a divided heart; he hates lukewarmness, and will as certainly punish the apostate, as forgive the humble believer: (Rev. iii. 15, 16:) but our only danger lies in forsaking him; for if we adhere to his service with an upright and willing mind, none of our mistakes, imperfections, or enemies can hurt us. We cannot serve the Lord without renouncing other masters, and inclining our hearts unto him; nor can we incline our hearts without his grace, which he readily bestows on every praying soul. Depending upon his assistance and merciful acceptance, notwithstanding all our difficulties and impotency, we may with confidence say, "God forbid that we should "forsake the Lord;" and we may reply to every objection "nay but we will serve the Lord;" and close all by positively averring, "the Lord our God will we serve, and his "voice

33 And Eleazar the ſon of Aaron died, and they buried him in a hill that pertained to Phinehas his ſon, which was given him in mount Ephraim.

"voices will we obey:" nor need we ſtruggle the moſt open and ſolemn ratification of his covenant, by which we avouch him to be our God, and ourſelves to be his people. For though the houſe of God, the Lord's table, and even the very walls and trees before which we have uttered our ſolemn purpoſes of ſerving him, would obteſt againſt us if we denied him; and all the good, which he had done us, would become an occaſion of evil to us: yet we may truſt in him to enable us to fulfill our engagements; and be confident he will ſo put his fear into our hearts, that we ſhall not depart from him.—They who in the plaineſt terms have ſhewn the neceſſity and the difficulty of ſerving God, and the danger of forſaking him; and who have preſſed others moſt ſtrongly to count their coſt, and to prepare for the croſs; ſhould be the moſt forward to avow their own purpoſe of chooſing and cleaving to his ſervice; and their deſires, endeavours, and prayers, that the bleſſings of true religion may be the inheritance of their children. Thus in our ſeveral ſtations we all ſhould deliberately determine by the grace of God, to ſerve him ourſelves, and to do the utmoſt in our power that our houſeholds may ſerve him likewiſe. And though God alone can give grace: yet he greatly approves and bleſſes ſuch earneſt endeavours to engage, and confirm men in his ſervice: and in ſome inſtances the pious labours of one ſingle day may produce the moſt important and beneficial effects for years, or even for generations to come. After a life thus ſpent, and thus concluded, how comfortably may the believer meet the ſtroke of death, and retire to his reſt in the realms of bliſs!—Thus the moſt uſeful men, having ſerved their generation according to the will of God, one after another fall aſleep, and ſee corruption: but Jeſus, having ſpent and ended his life on earth, more aſſiduouſly and effectually, than either Joſhua, or Joſeph, aroſe from the dead, and ſaw no corruption; and not only brings his ranſomed tribes to their reſt, but liveth with them, and reigneth over them, to conſummate and perpetuate their felicity to all eternity. And wherever their bodies are interred, he will ſhortly raiſe them incorruptible, and tranſform them into the likeneſs of "his own glorious body, "according to the mighty working, whereby he is able to "ſubdue all things unto himſelf.

THE BOOK OF JUDGES.

It is probable this Book was penned by the prophet Samuel; and it contains the hiſtory of Iſrael from the death of Joſhua to the time of Eli, for about three hundred years. The Judges, from whom its name is derived, were not a regular ſucceſſion of governors; but occaſional deliverers raiſed up of God as circumſtances required, to reſcue Iſrael from their oppreſſors, to reform the ſtate of religion, and to adminiſter juſtice to the people: and without aſſuming the pomp of regal authority, they were in fact the vicegerents of Jehovah the King of Iſrael. The ſtate of God's people does not appear in this book ſo proſperous, nor their character ſo religious, as might have been expected from what we have been conſidering in the preceding books: but we may ſuppoſe, that there were multitudes of believers among them; and that the tabernacle-ſervice was regularly ſupported and attended, (though it be not particularly recorded;) notwithſtanding the lamentable defection which took place in their national character. The whole narrative however is full of important inſtruction: it illuſtrates the ſcriptural doctrine of the corrupt bias of our fallen nature, and the manner in which men are drawn aſide into ungodlineſs or falſe religion, and the fatal effects of ſin upon all our comforts and proſpects. The juſtice, holineſs, power, and truth of God, in performing both his threatenings and promiſes, are manifeſted; in connection with his patience, compaſſion, and mercy. The nature and advantages of repentance and obedience, and the felicity of thoſe who truſt and ſerve the Lord, are very affectingly diſplayed; and the whole is ſuited to render the teachable and attentive reader, watchful and circumſpect; to warn thoſe, "who think they ſtand to take heed leſt they fall;" and to encourage thoſe who are fallen, to return to our forgiving God, in the way which he hath preſcribed.

NOW after the death of Joſhua it came to paſs, that the children of Iſrael aſked the LORD, ſaying, Who ſhall go up for us againſt the Canaanites firſt, to fight againſt them?

2 And the LORD ſaid, Judah ſhall go up: behold I have delivered the land into his hand.

3 And Judah ſaid unto Simeon his brother, Come up with me into my lot, that we may fight againſt the Canaanites, and I likewiſe will go with thee into thy lot. So Simeon went with him.

4 And Judah went up; and the LORD delivered the Canaanites and the Perizzites into their hand: and they ſlew of them in Bezek ten thouſand men.

5 And they found Adoni-bezek in Bezek; and they fought againſt him, and they ſlew the Canaanites and the Perizzites.

6 But Adoni-bezek fled; and they purſued after him, and caught him, and cut off his thumbs and his great toes.

7 And Adoni-bezek ſaid, Threeſcore and ten kings, having their thumbs and their great toes cut off, gathered their meat under my tables: as I have done, ſo God hath requited me. And they brought him to Jeruſalem, and there he died.

8 (Now the children of Judah had fought againſt Jeruſalem, and had taken it, and ſmitten it with the edge of the ſword, and ſet the city on fire,)

9 And afterwards the children of Judah went down to fight againſt the Canaanites that dwelt in the mountain, and in the ſouth, and in the valley.

10 And Judah went againſt the Canaanites that dwelt in Hebron, (now the name of Hebron before was Kirjath-arba,) and they ſlew Sheſhai, and Ahiman, and Talmai.

11 And from thence he went againſt the inhabitants of Debir: (and the name of Debir before was Kirjath-ſepher:)

12 And Caleb ſaid, he that ſmiteth Kirjath-ſepher, and taketh it, to him will I give Achſah my daughter to wife.

13 And Othniel the ſon of Kenaz, Caleb's younger brother, took it: and he gave him Achſah his daughter to wife.

14 And it came to paſs, when ſhe came to him, that ſhe moved him to aſk of her father a field: and ſhe lighted from off her aſs; and Caleb ſaid unto her, What wilt thou?

15 And ſhe ſaid unto him, Give me a bleſſing: for thou haſt given me a ſouth land, give me alſo ſprings of water. And Caleb gave her the upper ſprings and the nether ſprings.

16 And the children of the Kenite, Moſes' father-in-law, went up out of the city of

NOTES.

CHAP. I.] V. 1. Who ſhall go up? &c.] The Iſraelites were convinced that the war againſt the Canaanites was to be continued; but they were in doubt, about the manner in which it was to be conducted, after the death of Joſhua, and which tribe was to have the precedency: and in theſe reſpects they enquired of the Lord, probably by Urim and Thummim. It would have been well, if they had continued in the ſame mind; but ſloth, cowardice, and unbelief, and perhaps a misjudged lenity prevailed with them, to leave their work unfiniſhed; which created them almoſt an infinity of trouble, and miſery afterwards.

V. 2. Judah ſhall go up, &c.] This numerous and valiant tribe, whence the Meſſiah was to deſcend, and which was in all things to have the precedency, was directed to take the lead in this war, and by their example to embolden their brethren, and to mark out to them the path to victory, and proſperity.

V. 7. Adoni-bezek, &c.] That is "The Lord of Bezek." This prince had, it ſeems, been a great warrior, and a ſevere tyrant over his vanquiſhed enemies: he had had no fewer than ſeventy of the petty princes of thoſe times, one after another his priſoners: and having diſabled them with great diſgrace and pain by cutting off their thumbs, and great toes, he forced them to gather their food as dogs under his table. The Iſraelites, hearing of this, probably by divine direction, retaliated upon him; and his own conſcience extorted from him a confeſſion of the juſtice of God in this puniſhment.

V. 8. Had taken it, &c.] Judah ſeized upon the greateſt part of Jeruſalem, though it lay within the lot of Benjamin, and burnt ſome part of it; but not the whole, for the Benjamites dwelt in part of it immediately after, (21.)

V. 10—15.] (Notes, Joſhua, c. xv. v. 13—19.) Probably Caleb was commander in this whole expedition.

V. 16. The children of the Kenite, &c.] The deſcendants of Hobab, the ſon of Jethro, (who it ſeems acceded to the palm-trees with the children of Judah into the wilderneſs of Judah, which lieth in the ſouth of Arad: and they went and dwelt among the people.

17 And Judah went with Simeon his brother, and they ſlew the Canaanites that inhabited Zephath, and utterly deſtroyed it: (and the name of the city was called Hormah:)

18 Alſo Judah took Gaza with the coaſt thereof, and Aſkelon with the coaſt thereof, and Ekron with the coaſt thereof.

19 And the LORD was with Judah, and he drave out the inhabitants of the mountain; but could not drive out the inhabitants of the valley, becauſe they had chariots of iron.

20 And they gave Hebron unto Caleb, as Moſes ſaid: and he expelled thence the three ſons of Anak.

21 And the children of Benjamin did not drive out the Jebuſites that inhabited Jeruſalem; but the Jebuſites dwell with the children of Benjamin in Jeruſalem unto this day.

22 And the houſe of Joſeph, they alſo went up againſt Beth-el: and the LORD was with them.

23 And the houſe of Joſeph ſent to deſcry Bethel: (now the name of the city before was Luz.)

24 And the ſpies ſaw a man come forth out of the city, and they ſaid unto him, Shew us, we pray thee, the entrance into the city, and we will ſhew thee mercy.

25 And when he ſhewed them the entrance into the city, they ſmote the city with the edge of the ſword: but they let go the man and all his family.

26 And the man went into the land of the Hittites, and built a city, and called the name thereof Luz: which is the name thereof unto this day.

27 Neither did Manaſſeh drive out the inhabitants of Beth-ſhean and her towns, nor Taanach and her towns, nor the inhabitants of Dor and her towns, nor the inhabitants of Ibleam and her towns, nor the inhabitants of Megiddo and her towns: but the Canaanites would dwell in that land.

28 And it came to paſs when Iſrael was ſtrong, that they put the Canaanites to tribute, and did not utterly drive them out.

29 Neither did Ephraim drive out the Canaanites that dwelt in Gezer: but the Canaanites dwelt in Gezer among them.

30 Neither did Zebulun drive out the inhabitants of Kitron, nor the inhabitants of Nahalol: but the Canaanites dwelt among them, and became tributaries.

31 Neither did Aſher drive out the inhabitants of Accho, nor the inhabitants of Zidon, nor of Ahlab, nor of Achzib, nor of Helbah, nor of Aphik, nor of Rehob:

32 But the Aſherites dwelt among the Canaanites, the inhabitants of the land; for they did not drive them out.

33 Neither did Naphtali drive out the inhabitants of Beth-ſhemeſh, nor the inhabitants of Beth-anah; but he dwelt among the Canaanites, the inhabitants of the land: nevertheleſs the inhabitants of Beth-ſhemeſh and of Beth-anah became tributaries unto them.

34 And the Amorites forced the children of Dan into the mountain: for they would not ſuffer them to come down to the valley:

35 But the Amorites would dwell in mount invitation given him by Moſes, (Num. c. x. v. 29—32;) at their firſt entrance into Canaan, pitched their tents, at or near Jericho, which is ſuppoſed to be meant by the city of Palm-trees: but afterwards they had their portion aſſigned them in the borders of the wilderneſs, where they ſeem to have lived a very quiet, and peaceable life; little interfering in public affairs.

V. 19. But could not drive out, &c.] Not becauſe the Lord failed to help them, but becauſe their courage, and faith failed them, at the ſight of the iron chariots; and when they had loſt their confidence in God, they could do nothing: (Matt. c. xiv. v. 30, 31. c. xvii. v. 19, 20. Mark, c. vi. v. 5, 6.)

V. 26. The man went out, &c.] This perſon betrayed his country, not out of faith in God, or love to Iſrael, but out of fear, and to ſave his life: therefore, when he found himſelf at liberty, he would not unite intereſts with the people of God; but retiring to his countrymen, who had ſought ſhelter in ſome of the adjacent regions, he built a city, which he called after his own city, not Bethel, or the Houſe of God; but Luz according to it's old name.

V. 28. They did not, &c.] They neglected their opportunity, through ſelf-indulgence, when they had them in their power; and afterwards they found themſelves unable to drive them out: thus their ſin prepared their puniſhment, and their love of preſent eaſe became the cauſe of their perpetual diſquiet.

V. 35. The houſe of Joſeph, &c.] In the diſtreſs of the Heres in Aijalon, and in Shaalbim: yet the hand of the houſe of Joſeph prevailed, ſo that they became tributaries.

36 And the coaſt of the Amorites was from the going up to Akrabbim, from the rock, and upward.

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.

No detached efforts, however judicious, and ſpirited, without ſteady and conſtant perſeverance, can effect important changes, rectify abuſes in church, or ſtate, or promote a general revival of true religion. Such attempts may be compared to the raiſing of a large weight to a great height from the earth, in which all the former labour is loſt, if the exertion ceaſes before the object be fully accompliſhed. The caſe is the ſame in the Chriſtians warfare with the world, the fleſh, and the devil: all, that hath apparently been effected, will come to nothing, if he relax his diligence, or revert to carnal ſecurity. Under his command, after his example, and emboldened by his ſucceſs, who was deſcended from Judah, we are called upon to wage this war, and are aſſured, that "the Lord hath delivered our enemies into "our hands." They, who have the precedency in rank, or reputation, ſhould go before others in every good work, without being diſmayed by dangers and difficulties, that they may animate them by their example; and the ſtrongeſt ought not to deſpiſe, but to value the aſſiſtance of the weakeſt; and it becomes the people of God to unite together, and help each other againſt their common enemies: and eſpecially to aſſiſt the whole "church militant here on "earth," with their conſtant, and fervent prayers. We are ſure to have all profitable ſucceſs, when we engage in any enterprize according to the Lord's direction, and in dependance on his help: and whatever labour, conduct, or courage we diſplay, or whatever human aid we employ, to him the whole glory belongs. What a ſlippery place is worldly proſperity! eſpecially when it increaſes pride, inſolence, or cruelty! for a "haughty ſpirit goes before a fall;" and men may often read their crimes in their puniſhment: and at laſt every mouth ſhall be ſtopped, and all ſinners ſhall be conſtrained, to admit the juſtice of God in their extremeſt miſeries. Happy they, who juſtify him in their temporal afflictions, plead guilty before his mercy ſeat, and by repentance and faith ſeek deliverance from the wrath to come. Great things might be atchieved by the profeſſors of the goſpel, if they unitedly endeavoured to promote the common cauſe of truth and righteouſneſs; for then the Lord would be with them, and every mountain would ſink into a plain. But when outward difficulties are viewed by the eye of ſenſe, and the almighty power of God is forgotten, our hearts grow diſcouraged, our expectations feeble, and our attempts timid; and then no wonder that we do not proſper; for according to our faith will be our vigour, zeal, and ſucceſs. But love of eaſe, indulgence, and preſent worldly advantages, both ſpring from, and foſter unbelief. Thus many an awakened ſinner, who ſeemed to have clear eſcaped ſatan's bondage, is entangled again, and overcome, and his laſt ſtate is worſe, than the firſt. Thus many a believer, who begins well, is hindered: he grows negligent, and unwatchful, and afraid of the croſs; his graces languiſh, his luſts revive; ſatan perceives his advantage, and plies him with ſuitable temptations; the world recovers it's hold; he loſes his peace, brings guilt into his conſcience, anguiſh into his heart, diſcredit upon his character, and reproach upon the goſpel; his hands are tied, his mouth is cloſed, and his uſefulneſs ruined: and though, through ſharp rebukes, and ſalutary chaſtiſements, he is ſo recovered, that he doth not finally periſh: yet he may lament through his remaining days, and groan upon his dying bed, to reflect what opportunities of glorifying God, and ſerving his church, he hath irrecoverably loſt: nay perhaps in that ſolemn hour, he will be diſtreſſed with perplexing doubts about the ſtate of his own ſoul. Thus even the very beſt of Chriſtians ſuffer ſome loſs, and fail of living up to the extent of their privileges, and uſefulneſs. Let us then watch, and be ſober, and purſue our victory againſt every inbred foe not content with ſuppoſed delivery from the dominion of ſin, but aiming continually to weaken, and crucify the fleſh with it's affections, and luſts, even unto entire extirpation. For we can have no fellowſhip with the enemies of God within us, or around us, but to our hurt; and therefore our only wiſdom, and intereſt is to declare, and maintain unceaſing war againſt them, even unto the end of our days.

NOTES.

CHAP. II.] V. 1. An angel, &c.] The whole language of the reproof here given demonſtrates who this angel was; not a prophet, or a created angel; for ſuch meſſengers would not have ſpoken in the firſt perſon, without affixing, "Thus ſaith the Lord:" but the great angel of the covenant, the Word, and Son of God, who ſpake with divine authority, as Jehovah, as HE, who brought them out of Egypt, put them in poſſeſſion of Canaan, entered into covenant with them, gave them com-their

their altars: but ye have not obeyed my voice; why have ye done this?

3 Wherefore I alſo ſaid, I will not drive them out from before you; but they ſhall be as thorns in your ſides, and their gods ſhall be a ſnare unto you.

4 And it came to paſs, when the angel of the LORD ſpake theſe words unto all the children of Iſrael, that the people lifted up their voice, and wept.

5 And they called the name of that place Bochim: and they ſacrificed there unto the LORD.

6 And when Joſhua had let the people go, the children of Iſrael went every man unto his inheritance to poſſeſs the land.

7 And the people ſerved the LORD all the days of Joſhua, and all the days of the elders that outlived Joſhua, who had ſeen all the great works of the LORD that he did for Iſrael.

8 And Joſhua the ſon of Nun, the ſervant of the LORD, died, being an hundred and ten years old.

9 And they buried him in the border of his inheritance in Timnath-heres, in the mount of Ephraim, on the north ſide of the hill Gaaſh.

10 And alſo all that generation were gathered unto their fathers: and there aroſe another generation after them, which knew not the LORD, nor yet the works which he had done for Iſrael.

11 And the children of Iſrael did evil in the ſight of the LORD, and ſerved Baalim.

12 And they forſook the LORD God of their fathers, which brought them out of the land of Egypt, and followed other gods, of the gods of the people that were round about them, and bowed themſelves unto them, and provoked the LORD to anger.

13 And they forſook the LORD, and ſerved Baal and Aſhtaroth.

14 And the anger of the LORD was hot againſt Iſrael, and he delivered them into the hands of ſpoilers that ſpoiled them, and he ſold them into the hands of their enemies round about, ſo that they could not any longer ſtand before their enemies.

15 Whitherſoever they went out, the hand of the LORD was againſt them for evil, as the LORD had ſaid, and as the LORD had ſworn unto them: and they were greatly diſtreſſed.

16 Nevertheleſs, the LORD raiſed up judges, which delivered them out of the hand of thoſe that ſpoiled them.

17 And yet they would not hearken unto their judges, but they went a whoring after other gods, and bowed themſelves unto them: they turned quickly out of the way which their fathers walked in, obeying the commandments of the LORD; but they did not ſo.

18 And when the LORD raiſed them up judges, then the LORD was with the judge, and delivered them out of the hand of their enemies all the days of the judge: (for it repented the LORD becauſe of their groanings, by reaſon of them that oppreſſed them, and vexed them.)

19 And it came to paſs, when the judge was dead, that they returned, and corrupted themſelves more than their fathers, in followmandments, and now called them to account for their diſobedience. Probably this divine perſon made his firſt appearance, and declared the cauſe of his coming at Gilgal: (Joſhua, c. iv, v. 4, 5;) from thence he went, and appeared amongſt them at Shiloh, where they were aſſembled at ſome of their ſolemn feaſts. For it is probably from their ſacrifice, that they were at Shiloh, which was called Bochim, or the weepers; becauſe of their weeping. But though the people ſhewed ſigns of deep humiliation, the conſequent hiſtory evinces, that a general reformation did not take place.

V. 6—10.] This part of the hiſtory ſeems to be repeated, in order to ſhew the occaſion that there was of the ſevere reproof, which had been given them. Whilſt Joſhua lived the people had ſerved the Lord with conſiderable diligence; but after his death, and that of the elders, they relapſed into idolatry. The place, where Joſhua was buried, is here called Timnath-heres, inſtead of Timnath-ſerah: the word heres ſignifies the ſun, and it hath been aſſerted, that it was ſo called, becauſe of ſome memorial there erected of the Lord's miraculouſly retarding the courſe of the ſun, at his requeſt.

V. 11—13. Baalim, Aſhtaroth.] Both theſe words are plural, the one maſculine, and the other feminine; and they ſeem to be uſed generally for all the gods, and goddeſſes, which were worſhipped by their heathen neighbours.

V. 14. He ſold them, &c.] As the judge was uſed to ſell the criminal, or the creditor the debtor, for a ſlave, that the injured party might be reimburſed by their price: ſo the Lord recovered, as it were, that glory, by puniſhing the Iſraelites, of which they had robbed him by their ſins; and made the very Canaanites the inſtruments of his righteous indignation.

ing

ing other gods to ſerve them, and to bow down unto them: they ceaſed not from their own doings, nor from their ſtubborn way.

20 And the anger of the LORD was hot againſt Iſrael; and he ſaid, Becauſe that this people have tranſgreſſed my covenant which I commanded their fathers, and have not hearkened unto my voice;

21 I alſo will not henceforth drive out any from before them of the nations which Joſhua left when he died;

22 That through them I may prove Iſrael, whether they will keep the way of the LORD, to walk therein, as their fathers did keep it, or not.

23 Therefore the LORD left thoſe nations, without driving them out haſtily; neither delivered he them into the hand of Joſhua.

V. 23. Neither delivered he, &c.] The Lord foreſaw the future conduct of the Iſraelites; and therefore ſo ordered it in his Providence, that a remnant of the Canaanites ſhould be ſpared; that by them their proneneſs to idolatry might both be manifeſted, and chaſtiſed.

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.

The goodneſs of God to man, his faithful engagements to thoſe, who truſt in him, and the beneficial tendency of all his precepts combine to enhance the evil of every tranſgreſſion: and frequently men will gratify their craving luſts, though their own reaſon and conſcience teſtify, that they are acting a fooliſh, and ungrateful part; for, as no good reaſon can be given for diſobedience, it is much eaſier to convince the judgment that ſinful purſuits are wrong, than to diſpoſe the heart to renounce them. But if men cannot ſtand before the rebukes of God's word, and the convictions of their own conſcience; how will they be able to ſtand before the tribunal of the holy, heart-ſearching Judge? who now in the endeared character of a Saviour, and in the mild accents of love, warns and perſuades them, but in vain, to repent, and turn to God, and do works meet for repentance. "Whom he loves, he rebukes, and "chaſtens," and with increaſing ſeverity, until they become zealous, and repent: and all temporal afflictions are in their tendency caſtigatory, and warn men to forſake ſin, and ſeek forgiveneſs, before it be too late: but the eternal puniſhment of the world to come will be entirely penal, the final vengeance of God upon his incurable enemies. It is pleaſing to ſee men weep for their ſins: but though ſuch relentings attend that godly ſorrow, which worketh repentance unto ſalvation, not to be repented of; yet they alſo frequently wear off, and leave the heart unchanged, and ſin unſubdued. Our tears, and prayers, and amendment cannot expiate ſin; that can only be effected by the ſacrifice of Chriſt. And faith in him may be profeſſed, and the memorials of his dying love attended upon, with great apparent affection, yet without renovation of heart, and newneſs of life. Over many ſuch ſuppoſed converts we have to mourn, and to regret, "that their goodneſs is as a morning "cloud, and as the early dew, it goeth away;" (Hoſea, c. vi. v. 4.) The worſhip of God in it's own nature is joy, praiſe, and thankſgiving, and our crimes alone render weeping needful: yet conſidering what we are, and what we have done, it is much to be wiſhed, that our religious aſſemblies were more frequently called Bochim, "the place "of the weepers;" "for bleſſed are they that mourn, for "they ſhall be comforted."—Were we duly attentive to the word of God we might foreſee many of thoſe events, which take place in his Providence. We might eſpecially foretel ſevere afflictions to thoſe godly perſons, who aſſociate, and connect themſelves with the openly profane; and to thoſe, who relax their diligence in mortifying, and ſtriving againſt ſin, and in watching againſt temptation. Alas! that ſhew of religion, which there is in times of general reformation, often ariſes from temporary affections, and perſonal regards: when the influence, and example of ſome reſpected, or beloved perſon ceaſe, when there is no longer any fear of grieving, or being rebuked by him, and when the emotion of the paſſions hath had time to ſubſide, men's unmortified luſts again recover the aſcendancy: and many fair appearances die away. We have need therefore to examine how matters ſtand with ourſelves, and to pray without ceaſing, "that we may be rooted and grounded in love, and "that Chriſt may indeed dwell in our hearts by faith." Believing parents ſhould be very diligent in inſtructing their children, and very earneſt in praying, that they may inherit their faith, and grace: and the ſpeedy diſappearance of religion, after it hath been very flouriſhing, muſt ever be aſcribed in great meaſure to their negligence in this reſpect: and very often the ignorance and ungodlineſs of children are a diſgrace to the parent's memory. But the carnal mind of man is enmity againſt God, and the tendency of human nature is to apoſtacy, and the vileſt luſt, or the meaneſt worldly object, will be preferred to his favour, and the pleaſure of his ſervice, by thoſe, who have the benefit of his written word and preached goſpel; unleſs by a continual exertion of Almighty power, his grace is communicated to, and his image is renewed upon their hearts. This is the cauſe of all human miſery, in time, and to eternity: when men rob God of his glory, he will ſell them for their ſin, and ſatisfy his juſtice in their puniſhment: and how can they but be wretched, againſt whom are the oath, and the hand of the immutable, and Almighty God! Their heavieſt diſtreſſes on earth, unleſs timely repentance intervene, are only the forerunners of eternal miſery. The vileſt of the profane are more likely to proſper, for a time, than apoſtate profeſſors: nay backſliding believers are more ſure to experience affliction in this world, than any other perſons. Yet the Lord hath long-patience, and manifeſts great compaſſion to his people; he is ready to forgive, and to relieve; he raiſes up inſtruments to effect their deliverance, and over-rules their chaſtiſements for their good: and upon the whole of his dealings with them, it will appear manifeſt, that they are not ſaved for the ſake of their own righteouſneſs, but for the ſake of his great name; that it is of his "mercies, that they are "not conſumed" and that he ſaves them from, and notwithſtanding, their manifold tranſgreſſions. The more the human heart is proved, the worſe it is manifeſted to be;

NOW theſe are the nations which the LORD left to prove Iſrael by them; (even as many of Iſrael as had not known all the wars of Canaan;

2 Only that the generations of the children of Iſrael might know to teach them war, at the leaſt ſuch as before knew nothing thereof;)

3 Namely, five lords of the Philiſtines, and all the Canaanites, and the Sidonians, and the Hivites that dwelt in mount Lebanon, from mount Baal-hermon unto the entering in of Hamath.

4 And they were to prove Iſrael by them, to know whether they would hearken unto the commandments of the LORD, which he commanded their fathers by the hand of Moſes.

5 And the children of Iſrael dwelt among the Canaanites, Hittites, and the Amorites, and Perizzites, and Hivites, and Jebuſites:

6 And they took their daughters to be their wives, and gave their daughters to their ſons, and ſerved their gods.

7 And the children of Iſrael did evil in the ſight of the LORD, and forgat the LORD their God, and ſerved Baalim and the groves;

8 Therefore the anger of the LORD was hot againſt Iſrael, and he ſold them into the hand of Chuſhan-riſhathaim king of Meſopotamia: and the children of Iſrael ſerved Chuſhan-riſhathaim eight years.

9 And when the children of Iſrael cried unto the LORD, the LORD raiſed up a deliverer of the children of Iſrael, who delivered them, even Othniel the ſon of Kenaz, Caleb's younger brother.

whilſt "we ceaſe not from our doings," we can only be ſtubborn, and rebellious: for his own glory the Lord tries men, as ſilver is tried, and whilſt he diſtinguiſhes betwixt thoſe, who chooſe, and thoſe, who forſake his ways; he will ſecure to himſelf all the praiſe of all that is good in his people. Too late his enemies will curſe their folly for neglecting thoſe things, which were commanded them: and the reflection that their opportunity is loſt for ever will complete their miſery. Let us then without delay obey the goſpel call, declare war againſt every ſin, and follow after holineſs, unto the end of our days, that we may have an abundant entrance into the everlaſting kingdom of our Lord, and Saviour Jeſus Chriſt.

NOTES.

CHAP. III.] V. 2. Might know to teach them war, &c.] As the Iſraelites were ſurrounded by many warlike nations; and as they were a type of the church militant here on earth, they were not to be enervated by ſloth, and luxury, but inured to hardſhip, and conflict: this the Lord was pleaſed to effect by the remains of the devoted nations, whom they ſpared, when they ought to have deſtroyed them, and they were in conſequence engaged in continual conteſts with them. They had moreover taſted the ſweets of victory, without feeling the evils of war, in their firſt conqueſt of the land; but they proved ungrateful for the mercy, and left their work unfiniſhed; and were therefore made to feel the evils of war, without the advantages of victory, in their future conflicts.

V. 4. To know whether, &c.] Trials, and temptations diſcover whether ſin, or grace have dominion in the heart; and are therefore employed of God to detect the ſecret hypocriſy of the falſe profeſſor, and to manifeſt, exerciſe, and ſtrengthen the graces of the true believer: and this diſcovery is very comfortable to the upright, of ſalutary tendency to thoſe, who deceive themſelves, edifying to the church, and honourable to God, and true religion.

V. 5. Dwelt among, &c.] Inſtead of attempting to extirpate the inhabitants of the land, the Iſraelites endeavoured to live amicably with them; this induced them to intermarry with them, and then to conform to their idolatrous worſhip; until numbers of them had utterly apoſtatized from God, in that very land, wherein by his tabernacle he dwelt in the midſt of them.

V. 7. The groves.] Thoſe idols, which were worſhipped under the ſhade of thick trees, (Deut. c. xvi. v. 21.)

V. 8. King of Meſopotamia, &c.] As this prince reigned beyond the Euphrates, his oppreſſing the Iſraelites, who lived at ſo great a diſtance, appeared the more evidently to be the effect of God's diſpleaſure.

V. 9. Cried unto, &c.] In their proſperity they forgot the Lord: but in their diſtreſs they found that their idols, and idolatrous allies, could not help them; and then they remembered the wonderful works of the Lord, and began to pray unto him, though not until they had ſmarted under the rod for the ſpace of eight years: and he being rich in mercy, was pleaſed to hear their prayer, notwithſtanding their heinous provocations, and ſtirred up the ſpirit of Othniel to effect their deliverance: and probably there was a conſiderable reformation for ſome time afterwards. Nor ſhould the method, in which this deliverance was accompliſhed, paſs unnoticed. Doubtleſs Othniel had lamented over the degeneracy, and miſery of his brethren: but he attempted nothing, until "the Spirit of the Lord "came upon him:" then he began "with judging Iſrael," that is, with attempting to reform abuſes, and revive re-

10 And the Spirit of the LORD came upon him, and he judged Iſrael, and went out to war: and the LORD delivered Chuſhan-riſhathaim king of Meſopotamia into his hand; and his hand prevailed againſt Chuſhan-riſhathaim.

11 And the land had reſt forty years: and Othniel the ſon of Kenaz died.

12 And the children of Iſrael did evil again in the ſight of the LORD: and the LORD ſtrengthened Eglon the king of Moab againſt Iſrael, becauſe they had done evil in the ſight of the LORD.

13 And he gathered unto him the children of Ammon and Amalek, and went and ſmote Iſrael, and poſſeſſed the city of palm-trees.

14 So the children of Iſrael ſerved Eglon the king of Moab eighteen years.

15 But when the children of Iſrael cried unto the LORD, the LORD raiſed them up a deliverer, Ehud the ſon of Gera, a Benjamite, a man left-handed: and by him the children of Iſrael ſent a preſent unto Eglon the king of Moab.

16 But Ehud made him a dagger (which had two edges) of a cubit length; and he did gird it under his raiment upon his right thigh.

17 And he brought the preſent unto Eglon king of Moab: and Eglon was a very fat man.

18 And when he had made an end to offer the preſent, he ſent away the people that bare the preſent.

19 But he himſelf turned again from the quarries that were by Gilgal, and ſaid, I have a ſecret errand unto thee, O king: who ſaid, keep ſilence. And all that ſtood by him went out from him.

20 And Ehud came unto him; and he was ſitting in a ſummer-parlour, which he had for himſelf alone: and Ehud ſaid, I have a meſſage from God unto thee. And he aroſe out of his ſeat.

21 And Ehud put forth his left hand, and took the dagger from his right-thigh, and thruſt it into his belly.

22 And the haft alſo went in after the blade; and the fat cloſed upon the blade, ſo that he could not draw the dagger out of his belly: and the dirt came out.

23 Then Ehud went forth through the ligion; and then he went forth to war, and prevailed over their foreign enemies; for the Lord delivered them into his hands.

V. 11. Forty years, &c.] According to a ſcheme of chronology ſhortly to be mentioned, I would compute theſe years from the death of Joſhua, to that of Othniel; though it be impoſſible to aſcertain, how long it was before he was raiſed up to be their Judge. But if we would keep within the Scripture bounds, we muſt place the years of Iſrael's oppreſſions, under thoſe aſſigned to ſome of their judges; and if we date theſe from Joſhua's death, a very ſimple, (though not certain) method will guide us through this obſcure period of the hiſtory.

V. 12. Strengthened, &c.] The Lord had formed Eglon of a ſtout and valiant ſpirit, had raiſed him to conſiderable power, and proſperity as a prince, and afforded him ſucceſs in his enterprize againſt the Iſraelites.

V. 14. Eighteen years.] Their guilt was more aggravated, and their ſpirits were more ſtubborn; and therefore it was the longer before they began to cry unto the Lord; and it was his pleaſure, that their chaſtiſement ſhould be more ſevere, and of longer continuance.

V. 15. A man left-handed, &c.] Some have ſuppoſed, that Ehud could uſe both hands alike well: but if he were unable to uſe his right hand, Eglon would be the leſs apt to ſuſpect him, and he would be no leſs ſuitable an inſtrument for the Lord to work by: (1 Cor. c. i. v. 29, 30.) The Iſraelites had by him ſent their tribute, under the name of a preſent; and the Lord, who raiſed him up to deliver Iſrael, doubtleſs directed him to take this opportunity of executing his vengeance on the tyrant. Ehud was the deputy of the King of Iſrael, and acted by commiſſion from him: Eglon had uſurped the Lord's throne, and became his rival, and was ordered to be thus put to death. But Ehud's conduct cannot poſſibly be drawn into precedent, or authoriſe the aſſaſſination of kings, however tyrannical, or perſecuting; without any man were called to act by the ſame evident commiſſion from the God of heaven. The law of being ſubject to principalities and powers in all things lawful is the rule of our conduct.

V. 19. The quarries, &c.] Or graven images, probably the idols of Moab, which were ſet up in contempt of the God of Iſrael.

I have a ſecret errand, &c.] Ehud had ingratiated himſelf with Eglon by the preſent: and he had no ſuſpicion of one, whom he ſuppoſed to be unarmed: and it is likely, he expected ſome information concerning ſtate affairs, or the ſecret combination of his countrymen: but he was ſtrangely infatuated to truſt himſelf alone with an Iſraelite.

V. 20. From God, &c.] The word here uſed is common to the true God, and the ſuppoſed deities of the Gentiles. Eglon therefore expecting ſome oracle from God, roſe up in reverence, and afforded Ehud the opportunity of effecting his purpoſe. A ſecret errand, a meſſage from God he had indeed with him, but it was of a far different nature, than Eglon expected.

V. 22.] Thus would this powerful oppreſſor be found

porch, and ſhut the doors of the parlour upon him, and locked them.

24 When he was gone out his ſervants came; and when they ſaw that behold the doors of the parlour were locked, they ſaid, Surely he covereth his feet in his ſummer-chamber.

25 And they tarried till they were aſhamed; and behold he opened not the doors of the parlour: therefore they took a key and opened them; and behold, their lord was fallen down dead on the earth.

26 And Ehud eſcaped while they tarried, and paſſed beyond the quarries, and eſcaped unto Seirath.

27 And it came to paſs when he was come, that he blew a trumpet in the mountain of Ephraim, and the children of Iſrael went down with him from the mount, and he before them.

28 And he ſaid unto them, Follow after me; for the LORD hath delivered your enemies the Moabites into your hand. And they went down after him, and took the fords of Jordan towards Moab, and ſuffered not a man to paſs over.

29 And they ſlew of Moab at that time about ten thouſand men, all luſty, and all men of valour; and there eſcaped not a man.

30 So Moab was ſubdued that day under the hand of Iſrael. And the land had reſt fourſcore years.

31 And after him was Shamgar the ſon of Anath, which ſlew of the Philiſtines ſix hundred men with an ox-goad; and he alſo delivered Iſrael.

weltering in his own blood, and excrements, in the moſt diſgraceful manner, in that very place, where he had ſo often indulged his pride, ſloth, and luxury. As he fell without any noiſe, and died without being enabled to cry for help, Ehud had a full opportunity of eſcaping: and he departed with that circumſpection, and deliberation, which ſprang from confidence in God, and a conſciouſneſs of having done his duty.

V. 29. Ten thouſand, &c.] So ſmall an army of valiant ſoldiers ſerved to curb the whole kingdom of Iſrael, when once it was ſubjected: but they were eaſily reinforced from beyond Jordan. Therefore Ehud took poſſeſſion of the fords, not only that none might eſcape, but that no more might come to their aſſiſtance. And when their prince was dead, they were too much intimidated to make any effectual aſſiſtance. Probably Eglon had fixed his reſidence weſt of Jordan, near the place where Jericho had ſtood.

V. 30. Fourſcore years.] They had reſt, until eighty years, from the cloſe of the aforementioned forty years, were expired. Yet the deliverance from the Philiſtines ſeems to coincide with this part of the hiſtory. Shamgar, probably being employed in agriculture, when the Philiſtines invaded the land, was ſupernaturally animated to attack them, and miraculouſly aſſiſted, in making this havock amongſt them with an ox goad, or plough-ſhare; for ſo ſome tranſlate it: this broke their force, and ſpirits for a conſiderable time.

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.

Temptations, and trials detect the wickedneſs of the hearts of ſinners; and manifeſt, exerciſe, and ſtrengthen the graces of believers: who, being called to be ſoldiers, muſt learn and practice war all their days, and in their conflict with ſatan, ſin, and this evil world muſt be inured to hardſhips, watchfulneſs, and ſelf-denial, for their future and eternal good. In this evil world they are conſtrained to live, but they are not of it, and are forbidden to conform to it: this reſtriction marks the difference betwixt them, and mere profeſſors in every age; for the friendſhip of the world is more fatal than it's enmity: the latter can only kill the body; but the former murders many a precious ſoul. When the heart is not eſtabliſhed by grace, the deſcent from the moſt plauſible profeſſion is natural, and almoſt imperceptible. Civility to ungodly people; in which to be ſure there can be no harm, by an eaſy ſtep introduces them to more intimate connexions: ſome conceſſions muſt in this caſe be made, and they muſt be a little conformable to ſuch kind friends, or relatives; and it is not eaſy to draw the line: one compliance prepares for another, until a man's profeſſion ends in apoſtacy. But if any true believers thus backſlide from God, they ſhall ſurely, and ſpeedily be corrected, and know by experience that the friendſhip of the wicked, and the gain of tranſgreſſion will not profit them in the day of trouble here: how then can they profit the ſinner in the day of wrath hereafter? Thoſe afflictions, however ſevere, and tedious, which bring the Lord to our remembrance, and excite a ſpirit of humble earneſt prayer, are very precious bleſſings. And as he is ready to forgive, and plenteous in mercy to all them, that call upon him; as he will not upbraid the penitent with his ſins, nor fail to appear for his relief, how wonderful is it, that men, groaning under their burdens, are ſo long ere they cry unto him for help? For if we would get out of trouble effectually, we muſt begin with repentance, and ſeeking forgiveneſs of our ſins; and then in due time deliverance, reſt, and inward peace, and comfort will enſue. But, alas! how inveterate is man's propenſity to be ungrateful to the Lord! And how readily do we relapſe into our former offences! And the ſecret hiſtory of every one of us, even if we are kept from open ſcandals, or viſible declenſions, greatly tallies with the hiſtory of Iſrael: Oh, fooliſh people, and unwiſe, do we thus requite the Lord, that bought us! This renders repeated chaſtiſements abſolutely neceſſary; for ſo perverſe are we, that the more indulgently we are treated by our heavenly Father, the more diſobedient we generally prove. Yet after our moſt aggravated provocations, and in our deepeſt diſtreſſes, if we again cry unto him, he will deliver us; and the meaneſt inſtrument, or the moſt unlikely method ſhall be effectual, if he appoints and bleſſes them: but unleſs the grace of God ſoften our hearts, repeated judgments, mercies, and convictions concur to render them more ſtout, and callous: luxury, ſloth, and pride fatten men for deſtruction: the Lord delights to abaſe thoſe, who exalt themſelves againſt him, and oppreſs his people, and to diſgrace to the depth of infamy, as well as to caſt into the depth of miſery, thoſe, who have been the haughty, and the terrible of the earth. What meſſage from God, but a meſſage of vengeance can a proud rebel expect? And ſuch a meſſage is evidently contained in the word of God: and though we are not now commiſſioned, or allowed to be the executioners of it: yet his miniſters muſt boldly declare it, without fearing the frown, or reſpecting the perſons of ſinners. Bleſſed be God, they have another meſſage to deliver, a meſſage of mercy, and free ſalvation; and that of vengeance only belongs to thoſe, who neglect, and refuſe the gracious propoſal.—With reverent attention let us hear this meſſage, in humble faith, let us ſeek for, and accept of this great ſalvation; let us beg of God to give us repentance, and enable us to bring forth fruits meet for repentance: let us put ourſelves under his protection, and conduct: let us enliſt under the Redeemer's banner, put on his armour, and declare determined war againſt his, and our enemies. He hath begun our triumphs by his victory over the powers of darkneſs upon the croſs; and over the King of terrors by his reſurrection: the trumpet of his goſpel calls us to follow after him; obeying that ſummons, the day will be ours, and we ſhall conquer, triumph and reign with him in glory for evermore.

NOTES.

CHAP. IV.] V. 2. In Haroſheth, &c.] Jabin king of Hazor had formerly confederated againſt Iſrael, and Joſhua had ſlain him, and burned his city, (Joſh. c. xi.). In proceſs of time the Canaanites had rebuilt it, and another Jabin, probably deſcended from him, reigned there with great power. Hazor lay in the northern part of the land, and probably Haroſheth in the neighbourhood. The remains of the nations of Canaan having in great numbers reſorted thither to aſſiſt, and be protected by Siſera, the commander of Jabin's army, in whom he placed great confidence, it was called "Haroſheth of the Gentiles," or nations. The offending Iſraelites were grievouſly oppreſſed by theſe enemies for twenty years, before they heartily ſet about reformation, or united in prayers to the Lord for deliverance. Though Deborah, in conſequence of her extraordinary call to judge Iſrael, could not perſonally undertake thoſe military expeditions, which generally diſtinguiſhed theſe deliverers, ſhe might uſe her authority to repreſs iniquity, to reform religion, and to execute impartial juſtice to the people. She is called the wife of Lapidoth; but the termination is feminine, and ſeldom uſed for the names of men; hence it hath been queſtioned whether the paſſage be aright tranſlated. Some ſuppoſe it to be the name of the town, to which ſhe belonged; and others refer it, according to the ſignification of the original word, either to her occupation, as employed in making lamps; or to the inſpiration of the Almighty, with which ſhe was favoured. As we read no more of her huſband, and as it is otherwiſe ſufficiently demonſtrable "that marriage is "honourable amongſt all men," it is of no conſequence to determine, whether ſhe were, or were not married.

V. 5. Under the palm-tree, &c.] That is, in ſome lowly habitation, ſhaded by a large palm-tree, more ſuited to the ſanctity of a propheteſs, than the dignity of a judge.

V. 6. Barak, &c.] It is not certain whether Barak had previouſly been employed by Deborah or not. But by direction from God, he was at this time, ſingled out by her, commanded whither to go, and what troops to raiſe, and aſſured of both opportunity to attack, and aſſiſtance to ſubdue the enemies of Iſrael.

8 And Barak ſaid unto her, If thou wilt go with me, then I will go; but if thou wilt not go with me, then I will not go.

9 And ſhe ſaid, I will ſurely go with thee: notwithſtanding the journey that thou takeſt ſhall not be for thine honour; for the LORD ſhall ſell Siſera into the hand of a woman. And Deborah aroſe, and went with Barak to Kedeſh.

10 And Barak called Zebulun and Naphtali to Kedeſh: and he went up with ten thouſand men at his feet: and Deborah went up with him.

11 Now Heber the Kenite, which was of the children of Hobab the father-in-law of Moſes, had ſevered himſelf from the Kenites, and pitched his tent unto the plain of Zaanaim, which is by Kedeſh.

12 And they ſhewed Siſera, that Barak the ſon of Abinoam was gone up to mount Tabor.

13 And Siſera gathered together all his chariots, even nine hundred chariots of iron, and all the people that were with him, from Haroſheth of the Gentiles unto the river of Kiſhon.

14 And Deborah ſaid unto Barak, Up; for this is the day in which the LORD hath delivered Siſera into thine hand: is not the LORD gone out before thee? So Barak went down from mount Tabor, and ten thouſand men after him.

15 And the LORD diſcomfited Siſera, and all his chariots, and all his hoſt with the edge of the ſword, before Barak: ſo that Siſera lighted down off his chariot, and fled away on his feet.

16 But Barak purſued after the chariots, and after the hoſt, unto Haroſheth of the Gentiles: and all the hoſt of Siſera fell upon the edge of the ſword; and there was not a man left.

17 Howbeit Siſera fled away on his feet to the tent of Jael the wife of Heber the Kenite: for there was peace between Jabin the king of Hazor and the houſe of Heber the Kenite.

18 And Jael went out to meet Siſera, and ſaid unto him, Turn in, my lord, turn in to me; fear not, and when he had turned in unto her into the tent, ſhe covered him with a mantle.

19 And he ſaid unto her, Give me, I pray thee, a little water to drink; for I am thirſty: and ſhe opened a bottle of milk, and gave him drink, and covered him.

20 Again he ſaid unto her, Stand in the

V. 8. If thou, &c.] Barak wiſhed to have the benefit of Deborah's preſence, counſel, and prayers, as the judge of Iſrael, and the propheteſs of the Lord: but his faith ſeems to have been weak, and his conduct culpably timorous. It is wonderful that in all theſe events we read nothing of the high prieſt with Urim, and Thummim, of the prieſts with their trumpets, or of the Levites: we muſt conclude that the people greatly diſregarded the divine appointment; and that the prieſts, &c, grievouſly neglected their duty.

V. 9. Into the hand, &c.] Deborah probably meant that the honour of the victory would be given to her, inſtead of Barak; but the Spirit of God predicted the death of Siſera by Jael.

V. 11. From the Kenites, &c.] The other Kenites dwelt upon the borders of the wilderneſs of Judah; but Heber had removed with his family to the northern part of the land, where he dwelt in tents, and found convenient paſturage for his flocks.

V. 14. From mount Tabor, &c.] Barak ſeems to have ſecured his army by the advantage of the ground, until a more favourable opportunity preſented itſelf of attacking the enemy; but Deborah aſſured him, that the very day was come, that "the Lord was gone forth before him," and would deliver Siſera into his hand. Thus encouraged he ventured down with his army of ten thouſand foot ſoldiers into the plain, where the iron chariots had their utmoſt advantage; and ſo the victory became the more illuſtrious.

V. 15. And the Lord, &c.] Doubtleſs Barak, and his army diſplayed both conduct, and bravery in this battle; yet the victory is wholly aſcribed to the Lord, who both gave them conduct and courage, and rendered them effectual. It is to be lamented that this pious, and rational language of the Scriptures ſhould be ſo much, amongſt Chriſtians, laid aſide, for a phraſeology, which borders upon heatheniſm, or even atheiſm; by aſcribing all events to ſecond cauſes, and excluding the mention of the firſt great Cauſe of all things.

V. 17. On his feet, &c.] Siſera quitted his chariot, and fled away on foot, that he might eſcape notice; and for the ſame purpoſe he took refuge in the obſcure tent of Heber: from whoſe peaceable family, not being Iſraelites, he apprehended no danger.

V. 18. Turn in, my lord, &c.] Probably Jael really intended kindneſs to Siſera, when ſhe invited him into the tent, and ſhewed him all the hoſpitality, which it afforded; but by a divine impulſe ſhe was afterwards led to conſider him as the determined enemy of the Lord, and his people, and to avail herſelf of that opportunity to deſtroy him.

V. 20.] It is obſervable, that Jael did not promiſe Siſera, that ſhe would deny his being there: ſhe would give him ſhelter, and refreſhment, but not utter a falſehood to oblige him. It is a ſad deviation from ſincerity, and godly door of the tent: and it ſhall be, when any man doth come and enquire of thee, and ſay, Is there any man here? that thou ſhalt ſay, No.

21 Then Jael Heber's wife took a nail of the tent, and took an hammer in her hand, and went ſoftly unto him, and ſmote the nail into his temples, and faſtened it into the ground: (for he was faſt aſleep, and weary:) ſo he died.

22 And behold as Barak purſued Siſera, Jael came out to meet him, and ſaid unto him, Come, and I will ſhew thee the man whom thou ſeekeſt. And when he came into her tent, behold Siſera lay dead, and the nail was in his temples.

23 So God ſubdued on that day Jabin the king of Canaan before the children of Iſrael.

24 And the hand of the children of Iſrael proſpered, and prevailed againſt Jabin the king of Canaan, until they had deſtroyed Jabin king of Canaan.

CHAP. V.

Contains an hymn of praiſe for the late victory; in which 1ſt. This deliverance is compared with former mercies, v. 1—5. 2d. The previous ſin, and miſery of the people, are declared, v. 6—8. 3d. Connected with the praiſes of the Lord; commendations are beſtowed on ſome, and cenſures paſſed on others of the Iſraelites, v. 9—23. 4th. Jael's conduct is extolled, v. 24—27. 5th. The diſappointed expectation of Siſera's mother is recorded, v. 28—30. 6th. A prayer is added againſt the enemies, and for the people of God, v. 31.

ſimplicity, which is become cuſtomary amongſt us; I mean, the inſtructing and requiring ſervants to prevaricate, (to word it no more harſhly,) in order that their maſters may be preſerved from the inconvenience of unwelcome viſitants. Surely ſome more manly, candid, and Chriſtian method might be ſubſtituted of giving an impertinent intruder to underſtand, that he was not welcome; and to intimate to friends, that their company would be more ſeaſonable at another time. I have been informed, that on ſuch occaſions the French ſend word that they are not viſible; which is certainly nearer the truth, than to order a ſervant to ſay, that they are "not at home." And it ſhould be conſidered, whether they who require their ſervants to diſregard the truth for their pleaſure, will not teach them an evil leſſon againſt themſelves, and habituate them to uſe falſehood for their own pleaſure alſo.

V. 21.] When Jael ſaw Siſera faſt aſleep, and was ſatisfied, that ſhe was required to deſtroy him; her faith overcame all reluctancy, and every feminine fear, and with the hammer, and the nail of the tent, which ſhe was accuſtomed to handle, ſhe ſpeedily, and effectually accompliſhed her purpoſe.

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.

Reformations are often ſpeedily ſtopped, when the reformer is removed; and notwithſtanding the painful effects of ſin, which men repeatedly experience, they will venture upon it, and provoke the Lord to puniſh them with increaſing ſeverity; (Lev. c. xxvi. v. 18. 24. 28:) and tempters commonly prove inſtruments of correction, or vengeance. But the Lord's thoughts, and ways are not as ours: when they, who have moſt frequently, and grievouſly rebelled, begin to pray unto him, he is ready to hear, and help them. Nay he often regards the mere cry of diſtreſs, and relieves men from temporal miſery, ſaying, "ſin no "more, leſt a worſe thing come unto thee." He ſelects his inſtruments in that manner, as ſhall moſt mortify the pride, and expoſe the weakneſs of his haughty oppoſers: when repentance, and reformation have prepared the way, the chief difficulty is removed, and deliverance is ſecured to his people: yet unbelief weakens men's hands, and being diſhonourable to God, will eventually diſcredit thoſe, who indulge it. The counſel, and prayers of perſons eminent for faith, and piety, are highly to be valued; but our confiden cemuſt be placed, not in them, but in the preſence, and protection of the Almighty. Whether it pleaſe him to ſave by many, or by few, he hath all hearts in his hands, and ſoon gathers willing, and ſuitable inſtruments for his work: and a variety of incidents, which originate from the voluntary conduct of men acting from ſecular motives, appear by the event to form a part of the ſecret counſel of God, in order to effect his own purpoſes. And as courage, and faith are his gifts, we may expect, that he will ſo diſpenſe them, as ſhall conduce to his own glory; and to ſhew the ſtrongeſt, that they need to be encouraged, and on ſome occaſions are ſurpaſſed, by their weaker brethren. How wretched are they, who have the Lord for their enemy! Their numbers, or power can make no reſiſtance; and in vain ſhall they attempt to flee away and eſcape: ſoon will they be aſhamed of their preſent confidence, and glorying; in vain they may court the friendſhip of the Lord's deſpiſed people; or ſeek refuge in privacy, and obſcurity: ſooner, or later they muſt all periſh, perhaps ſuddenly; and how dreadful to be hurried from the commiſſion of daring crimes into the preſence of their angry Judge! Every natural inclination muſt be counteracted, when the will of God to the contrary is made known; and all our connexions with his enemies muſt be broken off, if we would have the Lord for our God, and his people for our people. It is true, that we are to love, pray for, and be kind to our worſt enemies: yet there are ſome of his foes, to whom we muſt not bid God ſpeed, nor entertain them in our houſes, (2 John, v. 10, 11.) However we ſhould to the uttermoſt perſevere in our endeavours to reclaim them; and direct our moſt implacable reſentment againſt our own luſts, aiming at nothing leſs than their utter deſtruction.

CHAP. V.] V. 1. Then ſang Deborah, &c.] (Notes, Exod. c. xv. ver. 1. Deut. c. xxxi. v. 19.) By this me-

2 Praiſe ye the LORD for the avenging of Iſrael, when the people willingly offered themſelves.

3 Hear, O ye kings: give hear, O ye princes; I, even I will ſing unto the LORD; I will ſing praiſe to the LORD God of Iſrael.

4 LORD, when thou wenteſt out of Seir, when thou marchedſt out of the field of Edom, the earth trembled, and the heavens dropped, the clouds alſo dropped water.

5 The mountains melted from before the LORD, even that Sinai from before the LORD God of Iſrael.

6 In the days of Shamgar the ſon of Anath, in the days of Jael, the highways were unoccupied, and the travellers walked through by-ways.

7 The inhabitants of the villages ceaſed, they ceaſed in Iſrael, until that I Deborah aroſe, that I aroſe a mother in Iſrael.

8 They choſe new gods; then was war in the gates: was there a ſhield or ſpear ſeen among forty thouſand in Iſrael?

9 My heart is toward the governors of Iſrael, that offered themſelves willingly among the people. Bleſs ye the LORD.

thod of celebrating the wonderful works of God, the affections of love, and gratitude would be the more excited and more deeply fixed in the hearts of believers, and the events commemorated would attract more general notice, become more exactly known, and be much longer remembered, than in any proſe narration; and multitudes would become acquainted with them, who had not the opportunity of reading the records of them.—Probably this ſong of praiſe was ſung by Deborah, and Barak, &c, the whole army, and vaſt multitudes of the Iſraelites, as ſoon after the victory, as poſſible.

V. 2. Praiſe ye the Lord, &c.] Whatever Deborah, or Barak, or the army had done in obtaining this victory, the Lord muſt have all the praiſe: the will, the power, and the ſucceſs were all from him: and they were eſpecially required to praiſe the Lord for avenging them upon their oppreſſors; as they had brought their miſeries upon them by their own crimes.

V. 3. O ye kings, &c.] The kings of the ſurrounding nations were contriving the ruin of the Iſraelites: the kings of the earth have generally in all ages been ſeeking their own glory; or calling upon the people to praiſe their idol gods. This ſong was likely to be heard or read by many of them, through ſucceſſive generations; and the propheteſs therefore calls on them to hear what God had wrought for Iſrael, and againſt their enemies, and to take warning not to meddle to their hurt: ſhe reminds them, that praiſe, and glory belong to the Lord, and not to them, or their idols; and that it would be dangerous for them to rival him, who poureth contempt upon proud, and ambitious princes; and that it was their true wiſdom, honour, and intereſt to ſeek his favour, to become his ſervants, and to uſe their authority in advancing his worſhip, and promoting his glory; as ſhe publicly avowed, that ſhe did, and would do.

V. 4, 5.] (Note Deut. c. xxxiii. v. 2. Pſalm lxviii. v. 7—9. Iſaiah, c. lxiv. v. 1—3. Hab. c. iii. v. 3.) The extraordinary diſplays of the divine Majeſty, which their fathers had witneſſed at mount Sinai, are here deſcribed in very poetical language, and compared with the preſent interpoſition of the Lord for Iſrael. The preſence of God had thrown all nature, as it were, into convulſions: the thunderings, and lightnings were attended by impetuous ſhowers of rain, and mount Sinai was in ſuch agitation, that it ſeemed to be melted from before the Lord.

V. 6. In the days of Shamgar, &c.] Shamgar probably lived towards the cloſe of the eighty years reſt beforementioned, (c. iii. v. 30.) But the Iſraelites, growing more wicked, found their difficulties increaſe, and nothing was done effectually for their relief, till Jael completed Balak's victory by the ſlaughter of Siſera. This ſeems to be the meaning of the paſſage, which may be rendered "from the days of Shamgar,—to the days of Jael." During this time the land was ſo infeſted by invaders, and haraſſed by oppreſſion, that they could not travel in ſafety on the highways; the villages were deſerted, and the fields left uncultivated, whilſt the inhabitants ſought refuge in the fenced cities, where they were in danger of periſhing by famine.

V. 7. A mother in Iſrael.] Deborah employed her authority, for the people's real good, with that tender, and diſintereſted aſſiduity, which a mother ſhews to her beloved children. Kings ſhould be fathers of their people, employing all their time, and abilities to render them happy: Deborah was a mother to Iſrael in reality; and eſpecially as diligently promoting the cauſe of godlineſs, and the ſalvation of their ſouls: (Iſaiah c. xlix. v. 23.)

V. 8. They choſe new gods, &c.] Joſhua had engaged the people ſolemnly to chooſe the Lord for their God, and to ſerve him only: but they grew weary of his holy ſervice, and "choſe new gods," with new names, and newly come up. But under all theſe images ſatan was virtually worſhipped, who permitted his deluded votaries to indulge their ſenſual luſts, in order to allure them to his ſervice: though they ſoon paid dear for their gratifications; when they were ſubdued, diſarmed and oppreſſed by thoſe enemies, over whom they had formerly triumphed, and whom they ought to have extirpated.

V. 9. My heart, &c.] There were governors over every tribe, and in every diſtrict, who ſucceeded in their authority to the captains over thouſands, &c, of whom we have before read: ſome of theſe willingly offered their aſſiſtance to Deborah in promoting reformation, and to Barak in attacking the Canaanites: to theſe the propheteſs ſpake with peculiar affection, and reſpect, and for them ſhe bleſſed the Lord: (2 Cor. c. viii. v. 1, 2. 16.)

V. 10. Speak, ye that ride, &c It ſeems that riding upon white aſſes was a diſtinction appropriated to ma-

11 They that are delivered from the noiſe of archers in the places of drawing water; there ſhall they rehearſe the righteous acts of the LORD, even the righteous acts towards the inhabitants of his villages in Iſrael: then ſhall the people of the LORD go down to the gates.

12 Awake, awake, Deborah; awake, awake, utter a ſong: ariſe, Barak, and lead thy captivity captive, thou ſon of Abinoam.

13 Then he made him that remaineth have dominion over the nobles among the people: the LORD made me have dominion over the mighty.

14 Out of Ephraim was there a root of them againſt Amalek; after thee, Benjamin, among thy people; out of Machir came down governors, and out of Zebulun they that handle the pen of the writer.

15 And the princes of Iſſachar were with Deborah; even Iſſachar, and alſo Barak: he was ſent on foot into the valley. For the diviſions of Reuben there were great thoughts of heart.

16 Why abodeſt thou among the ſheepfolds, to hear the bleatings of the flocks? For the diviſions of Reuben there were great ſearchings of heart.

17 Gilead abode beyond Jordan: and why did Dan remain in ſhips? Aſher continued on the ſea ſhore, and abode in his breaches.

18 Zebulun and Naphtali were a people that jeoparded their lives unto the death in the high places of the field.

giſtrates, and to the chief perſons in Iſrael: which was a proof not only of their poverty, but of their remaining ſimplicity, in that they had not yet learned to multiply horſes, and chariots, in conformity to their heathen neighbours. Theſe perſons were here called upon in their ſeveral diſtricts, and whilſt in ſafety they travelled from place to place, to adminiſter juſtice, or upon their own concerns, to teach the people by their example to celebrate the praiſes of the Lord, for his late mercies vouchſafed unto them.

V. 11. From the noiſe, &c.] The people could not go out of the gates of the city to draw water, without being expoſed to the arrows of their oppreſſors, who watched that opportunity to murder them; ſo that in ſome caſes they muſt either periſh by thirſt, or ſeek to quench it at the peril of their lives. Thus, in times of perſecution, God's ordinances, thoſe wells of ſalvation, whence are drawn the waters of life, cannot be approached, but at the hazard of the lives of thoſe, who attend upon them: nay at all times ſatan with his temptations will endeavour to deter the believer from drawing near to the throne of grace. "The righteous acts of the Lord" were to be rehearſed by them: his juſtice in the deſtruction of their enemies, and in the miſeries which they had endured for their ſins; and his faithfulneſs in delivering them, and in enabling them to return to their habitations, and employments in peace, and ſafety.

V. 12. Awake, awake, Deborah, &c.] The governors, and the people having been reminded to praiſe the Lord, Deborah here called upon her own ſoul, or by way of reſponſe inſtructed the people to call upon her, to ſhake off drowſineſs, and be in earneſt in this moſt reaſonable, and delightful employment; "for he that will ſet the hearts "of other men on fire with the love of Chriſt, muſt "himſelf burn with love."—Barak alſo was excited to proſecute his advantage; and as he had deſtroyed the whole army of Siſera in the field of battle; to gather all the unarmed multitude as his captives, to lead them in triumph, and complete their deſtruction.

V. 13. Him, that remaineth, &c.] Multitudes of the Iſraelites had been ſlain, and driven into other countries: yet the Lord had made the remnant of them, under the government of a woman, to have dominion over their ſtrongeſt enemies.

V. 14. Out of Ephraim, &c.] Probably the Amalekites were coming to the aſſiſtance of Jabin, but ſome of the tribe of Ephraim, oppoſed, and prevailed againſt them: but Benjamin moved firſt, and the Ephraimites aſſiſted them. The governors of Machir, or of Manaſſeh came to the aſſiſtance of Barak, and formed uſeful commanders: and the Zebulunites were ſo in earneſt, that even their ſtudents came to join the army, and to ſerve the common cauſe, as there was occaſion.

V. 15.] Both the princes, and people of Iſſachar attended upon Deborah, either to abide with her, or to accompany Barak, when he was ſent down into the valley with his ſmall number of foot-ſoldiers poorly armed, (v. 8,) to meet the army, and chariots of Siſera. But Reuben kept at a diſtance as diſaffected to the common cauſe; which gave great concern, excited much reſentment, and occaſioned many thoughts in the minds of his brethren, about the cauſe of ſuch an alienation. But he made the care of his flocks the pretence for tarrying at home on this conjuncture.

V. 17. Gilead, &c.] The tribe of Dan, and the half-tribe of Manaſſeh inhabited mount Gilead: and Machir before-mentioned was that half of Manaſſeh, which dwelt weſt of Jordan. And it is probable that all the Iſraelites, who dwelt eaſt of Jordan abode at home, and refuſed their concurrence. The tribes of Dan, and Aſher did the ſame; the one being occupied in merchandiſe, or fiſhery, and the other, as ſome think, in repairing the breaches, and ſtopping the incurſions, which the ſea had made upon their inheritance.

V. 18. Zebulun, and Naphtali, &c.] From theſe two tribes Barak had raiſed his army, and they had boldly ventured their lives, in meeting the enemy, with their iron chariots, in the open field of battle. But ſome of the others were ready to follow the blow, though not preſent in the firſt engagement.

19 The kings came and fought; then fought the kings of Canaan in Taanach by the waters of Megiddo: they took no gain of money.

20 They fought from heaven; the ſtars in their courſes fought againſt Siſera.

21 The river of Kiſhon ſwept them away, that ancient river, the river Kiſhon. O my ſoul, thou haſt trodden down ſtrength.

22 Then were the horſe-hoofs broken by the means of the pranſings, the pranſings of their mighty ones.

23 Curſe ye Meroz, (ſaid the angel of the LORD,) curſe ye bitterly the inhabitants thereof; becauſe they came not to the help of the LORD, to the help of the LORD againſt the mighty.

24 Bleſſed above women ſhall Jael the wife of Heber the Kenite be; bleſſed ſhall ſhe be above women in the tent.

25 He aſked water, and ſhe gave him milk; ſhe brought forth butter in a lordly diſh.

26 She put her hand to the nail, and her right hand to the workmen's hammer: and with the hammer ſhe ſmote Siſera; ſhe ſmote off his head, when ſhe had pierced and ſtricken through his temples.

27 At her feet he bowed, he fell, he lay down; at her feet he bowed, he fell; where he bowed, there he fell down dead.

28 The mother of Siſera looked out at a window, and cried through the lattice, Why is his chariot ſo long in coming? why tarry the wheels of his chariots?

29 Her wiſe ladies anſwered her, yea, ſhe returned anſwer to herſelf,

30 Have they not ſped? have they not divided the prey; to every man a damſel or two? to Siſera a prey of divers colours, a prey of divers colours of needle-work, of divers

V. 19. The kings, &c.] The other kings of Canaan confederated with Jabin out of hatred againſt Iſrael, without receiving any recompenſe for their aſſiſtance.

V. 20. The ſtars, &c.] The angels are called "morning ſtars," (Job, c. xxxviii. v. 7.) And their aſſiſtance as the Lord's armies may be here meant: or in poetical language a violent tempeſt, raiſed at that time, which greatly facilitated the deſtruction of the Canaanites, may be aſcribed to the influences of the ſtars in their courſes; who, thus without any ſuch miraculous alteration in the appearance of the heavens, as took place in the days of Joſhua, fought effectually for Iſrael againſt their enemies.

V. 21. The river of Kiſhon, &c.] The ſtream of this rivulet ſeems to have been ſo ſwelled by the rains, which had fallen at this time, that numbers of the Canaanites attempting to croſs it, were ſwept away by it.

O my ſoul, &c.] Deborah, by exciting Barak, and the Iſraelites againſt their powerful enemies, and by her ſtrong faith, and fervent prayers, had trodden down their ſtrength in the very duſt.

V. 23. Curſe ye Meroz, &c.] Meroz was probably ſome city near to the field of battle, and the inhabitants were more inexcuſeable in not affording their aſſiſtance, than thoſe, who lived more remote: and perhaps their refuſal evidently aroſe from a ſecret favour born the Canaanites. The Lord did not want their help againſt the mightieſt of his enemies; but their conduct ſhewed their unbelief, and degeneracy, and expoſed them to this terrible curſe. Deborah did not curſe them out of perſonal reſentment, but the angel of the Lord commanded her to pronounce it upon them, that Angel of the Lord, who was the captain of the Lord's hoſt: (Joſhua, c. v. ver. 14.) Perhaps Meroz had before been a flouriſhing city, but in conſequence of this curſe, it decayed, till it became ſo obſcure, that it's ſituation is at preſent unknown. We have no authority, and ought to have no inclination to pronounce curſes upon any perſon: but we cannot remain neuter, in the conteſt betwixt the Lord, and his enemies; and if we do not actively endeavour to promote his cauſe in this wicked world, according to our ability, we ſhall with them fall under the curſe, that he hath pronounced againſt the workers of iniquity.

V. 24. Bleſſed, &c.] The inhabitants of Meroz, though Iſraelites, feared the power, and valued the friendſhip of the Canaanites, more than they dreaded the power, and deſired the favour of God; and therefore were joined with the accurſed Canaanites: Jael, though not an Iſraelite, out of faith, and love to the cauſe of God, preferred the friendſhip of his oppreſſed people to that of their enemies, and was joined with them in the bleſſing, yea had a ſpecial, and ſuperior bleſſing. And indeed "in the tent," ſhe jeoparded her life as much as the ſoldiers did "in "the high places of the field."

V. 26. She ſmote off his head, &c.] When ſhe had driven the nail through his head, ſhe probably cut it off with his own ſword. When he felt the anguiſh of the nail penetrating his head, perhaps he ſtruggled to ariſe, but fell down again, and bowed, and died at her feet, finding death, where he had ſought life, and a terrible enemy, where he expected a kind friend.

V. 28. The mother of Siſera, &c.] In a mere human compoſition we ſhould ſay, that this was finely imagined; but in an inſpired poem we muſt ſuppoſe that it was actually the caſe. With impatient expectations the mother of Siſera looked for his return, and wondered what ſo long delayed him; not in the leaſt fearing his ſucceſs in ſo unequal a conteſt, as this appeared to her.

V. 29. Her wiſe ladies, &c.] This is ſpoken ironically: her ladies, in their great wiſdom ſuggeſted that Siſera only waited to divide the immenſe ſpoil, which he had taken; and ſhe as wiſely pleaſed her vain mind with the ſoothing imagination.

V. 30. A damſel or two, &c.] What a picture doth thisgive of an ungodly and ſenſual heart! How ſhameful are colours

colours of needle-work on both ſides, meet for the necks of them that take the ſpoil?

31 So let all thine enemies periſh, O LORD: but let them that love him be as the ſun when he goeth forth in his might. And the land had reſt forty years.

theſe wiſhes of an aged mother for a beloved ſon! That a woman of honour, and virtue, as we ſay, could delight her fancy, with conceiving the Iſraelitiſh virgins divided amongſt the conquerors, as their property, to be expoſed to their unbridled domineering luſt! And that nothing more excellent could be conceived by her trifling mind, than to ſee her ſon, and his attendants, and concubines arrayed in fine garments, wrought by the ſkill, and induſtry of their vanquiſhed enemies! But ſhe is left to enjoy her imaginary triumph, and meet her bitter diſappointment; whilſt the hymn of praiſe concludes with wiſhing ſimilar deſtruction to all the enemies of the Lord, and proſperity to thoſe, who love him: that their characters may be honourable, their endeavours ſucceſsful, their courſe increaſingly uſeful; and their path ſhining more and more; till they reſemble the noon day, when the ſun by his full ſtrength hath diſpelled thoſe miſts, and clouds which his riſing drew up, and which at firſt obſcured his way; but afterwards increaſe his ſplendour.

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.

No time ought to be loſt in returning thanks to the Lord for his mercies; for our praiſes are moſt acceptable, pleaſant, and profitable, when they flow from a full heart, before the tide of affection hath begun to ſubſide. And we ſhould not be backward to celebrate the praiſes of the Lord, and declare our obligations to him, before his moſt determined enemies, or in the preſence of the mightieſt, and haughtieſt of the princes of the earth. Let them be reminded that the Lord is above them, and againſt them, whilſt they ſeek their own glory, and oppoſe his cauſe: let them be warned to rejoice with trembling in their dangerous pre-eminence: let them lower their diadems to the crown of the King of kings: let them be taught to embrace his ſalvation, and become his ſervants, or they will ere long periſh like Jabin, and Siſera; (Pſalm lxxxiii. v. 9, 10.) And thoſe princes, who deſire to ſerve the Lord, muſt learn to truſt in him, and not in chariots, and horſes; to uſe their authority in advancing truth, and righteouſneſs, and to account his worſhip to be their moſt honourable, and delightſome privilege, and employment.—Every recent mercy calls upon us to renew our gratitude for former benefits. The works of the Lord can only worthily be compared with each other; and all combine in proclaiming, that nothing is too hard for his power, or too large for his love to his people. Our praiſes in proſperity will be heightened, and purified by the remembrance of preceding troubles, and by the humiliation for thoſe ſins, which occaſioned them: for nothing but ſin gives birth to miſery, perſonal, or public, temporal, or eternal. When men rebel againſt the Lord, he withdraws his protection, and ſets his face againſt them: then their feebleſt foes prevail; and his curſe infuſes bitterneſs into all their comforts, nor can any thing but repentance ſtop the ſpeedy progreſs of advancing judgments. But when faithful, and zealous perſons are raiſed up, as magiſtrates, or miniſters, to attempt reformation; when others willingly offer themſelves to concur therein, and when the peeple are ſuitably influenced by ſuch endeavours; the affairs of nations, and churches begin to wear a more favourable aſpect. And when in our perſonal afflictions we are brought to humble ourſelves before God, to repent, to pray, and ſeek forgiveneſs of our ſins, deliverance and comfort are not far off. And happy are they, who are thus "chaſtened of the Lord, that they ſhould not "be condemned with the world:" for the proſperity of the wicked increaſes their pride, inſolence, preſumption, and ſenſuality, till they ſuddenly periſh, and that without remedy. Whilſt we can go abroad, or reſt at home in ſecurity, whilſt we can follow our employments, and attend on the ordinances of God, without any to make us afraid: let us join to our thankſgivings for ſuch diſtinguiſhing mercies, our ſympathiſing prayers, for thoſe, who are groaning under the calamities of war, oppreſſion, and perſecution. But as a craving appetite will urge men to venture their lives for it's gratification, did we aright thirſt for the bleſſings of ſalvation; neither the perſecutor's rage, nor the tempter's aſſaults could keep us from the houſe of God, or the throne of grace. Whilſt we rehearſe the righteous, faithful, and merciful acts of the Lord, from whom cometh every good gift; we ſhould bear true reſpect, and affection, and give deſerved commendation to thoſe, who have been his willing meſſengers of kindneſs to us; and ſhould recompenſe them with our fervent prayers for his bleſſing upon them: and though He needs no human help, yet is he pleaſed to employ, and accept of their ſervices, who in their ſeveral ſtations, improve their talents to advance his cauſe. Nay he requires every man ſo to do, and will call thoſe to a ſevere account, who neglect, or ſhift his ſervice. And the higher any man is advanced in his Providence, the more forward ought he to be in promoting the public good, and in ſtirring up others, by his example, influence, and authority to do the ſame: not deeming the high praiſes of God unbecoming the bench, the ſenate, or the throne; or unſeaſonable in the moſt ordinary converſation with ſtrangers, or with the nobles of the earth. And, they, who call others to this heavenly work, ſhould firſt call upon themſelves to be lively, and to abound therein. They, who would do good, muſt ſhake off ſloth, and renounce indulgence; and learn to be active and endure hardſhip: at ſome times they may be called to jeopardy their lives in the high places of the field; at all times to ſacrifice many perſonal intereſts for the public good, and in ſo doing to incur the reproach and cenſure of a miſ-judging world. Moſt men will therefore excuſe themſelves from ſuch ſervices; and whilſt they are averſe to the croſs, and diſaffected to the cauſe of God, they will find apologies enough for their conduct, from the variety of their ſecular engagements, and avocations. But, they, who temporiſe in a matter which admits not of neutrality; and refuſe their active ſupport to the cauſe of God, are numbered amongſt his enemies; and whilſt they grieve, and diſcourage the hearts of others, they bring the heavy wrath of God upon themſelves. Indeed the power, and pre-eminence at preſent ſeem to be on their ſide; and the ſervants of God are poor, deſpiſed, and afflicted: but the tables will ſoon be turned; and the feebleſt believer ſhall tread down the ſtrength of,

AND the children of Iſrael did evil in the ſight of the LORD; and the LORD delivered them into the hand of Midian ſeven years.

2 And the hand of Midian prevailed againſt Iſrael: and becauſe of the Midianites the children of Iſrael made them the dens which are in the mountains, and caves, and ſtrong holds.

3 And ſo it was, when Iſrael had ſown, that the Midianites came up, and the Amalekites, and the children of the eaſt, even they came up againſt them;

4 And they encamped againſt them, and deſtroyed the increaſe of the earth, till thou come unto Gaza; and left no ſuſtenance for Iſrael, neither ſheep, nor ox, nor aſs.

5 For they came up with their cattle, and their tents, and they came as graſhoppers for multitude; for both they and their camels were without number: and they entered into the land to deſtroy it.

6 And Iſrael was greatly impoveriſhed becauſe of the Midianites; and the children of Iſrael cried unto the LORD.

7 And it came to paſs, when the children of Iſrael cried unto the LORD becauſe of the Midianites,

8 That the LORD ſent a prophet unto the children of Iſrael, which ſaid unto them, Thus ſaith the LORD God of Iſrael, I brought you up from Egypt, and brought you forth out of the houſe of bondage;

9 And I delivered you out of the hand of the Egyptians, and out of the hand of all that oppreſſed you, and drave them out from before you, and gave you their land:

10 And I ſaid unto you, I am the LORD your God; fear not the gods of the Amorites, in whoſe land ye dwell: but ye have not obeyed my voice.

and exerciſe dominion over the mightieſt of the wicked. When God ariſes to judgment, and to help all the meek upon earth, and to avenge the cauſe of his people; the whole creation will wage war againſt his enemies: the ſtars in their courſes, the elements melting with fervent heat, and all the angels in heaven ſhall concur in their deſtruction: whilſt all the hoſts of God, ſhall ſing with triumphant acclamations, "So let all thine enemies periſh, O Lord:" and they, who love the Lord, ſhall then ſhine as the ſun in the kingdom of their Father. What will then become of the hopes of the ſenſual, the vain, the covetous, and the ambitious? The objects of their nobleſt wiſhes were degrading, and many of their deſires were baſe, and brutiſh: yet will not even theſe wiſhes, and deſires be gratified; and eternal diſappointment, and black deſpair will complete their final miſery. Where will then be their boaſted wiſdom; where their high-ſounding titles, and glittering diſtinctions? All, all vaniſhed, and gone for ever. But the righteous may wait that cloſing ſolemn ſcene with joyful expectation: may conſider death and judgment as the coming of their beloved to complete their felicity: and though willing to wait his time, yet longing to behold his face, they may well ſay, "Why is his chariot ſo long in "coming? Why tarry the wheels of his chariots?" But though they meet delays, they ſhall not ſuffer diſappointment; for yet a little ſpace, and he will come, and receive them to his glorious, and eternal reſt.

NOTES.

CHAP. VI.] V. 2. The dens, &c.] Theſe caverns were well known to the Iſraelites, when this hiſtory was publiſhed; but it was proper that the original, and uſe of them ſhould be remembered; both for their humiliation, and to excite their gratitude. The Midianites and Amalekites came againſt them, rather in the form of free-booters, than as a diſciplined army of troops under experienced commanders: yet the courage of the Iſraelites was ſo ſunk, that they did not dare to make reſiſtance, but daſtardly concealed themſelves under ground from their ravages: (Lev. c. xxvi. v. 17. 36, 37.)

V. 4. Unto Gaza, &c.] The country of Midian was beyond the moſt eaſtern borders of the land, and Gaza was near the Mediterranean ſea on the weſt. So that they went quite acroſs the country, and occupied, and deſolated the whole.

V. 7. When they cried, &c.] After having long ſmarted under their affliction, they cried unto the Lord to deliver them from it; but do not ſeem to have been humbled for their ſins, (Iſaiah, c. i. v. 15, 16.) Therefore he ſent a prophet to call them to repentance, before he raiſed up a judge to deliver them from their enemies. The meſſage of this prophet was very plain, and convincing, and probably he delivered it from city to city throughout the land; and it ſeems to have had conſiderable effect, as it prepared the way for their deliverance.

11 And there came an angel of the LORD, and ſat under an oak which was in Ophrah, that pertained unto Joaſh the Abiezrite: and his ſon Gideon threſhed wheat by the wine-preſs, to hide it from the Midianites.

12 And the angel of the LORD appeared unto him, and ſaid unto him, The LORD is with thee, thou mighty man of valour.

13 And Gideon ſaid unto him, O my Lord, if the LORD be with us, why then is all this befallen us? and where be all his miracles which our fathers told us of, ſaying, Did not the LORD bring us up from Egypt? but now the LORD hath forſaken us, and delivered us into the hands of the Midianites.

14 And the LORD looked upon him, and ſaid, Go in this thy might, and thou ſhalt ſave Iſrael from the hand of the Midianites: have not I ſent thee?

15 And he ſaid unto him, O my Lord, wherewith ſhall I ſave Iſrael? behold, my family is poor in Manaſſeh, and I am the leaſt in my father's houſe.

16 And the LORD ſaid unto him, Surely I will be with thee, and thou ſhalt ſmite the Midianites as one man.

17 And he ſaid unto him, if now I have found grace in thy ſight, then ſhew me a ſign that thou talkeſt with me.

18 Depart not hence, I pray thee, until I come unto thee, and bring forth my preſent, and ſet it before thee. And he ſaid, I will tarry until thou come again.

19 And Gideon went in, and made ready a kid, and unleavened cakes of an ephah of flour: the fleſh he put in a baſket, and he put the broth in a pot, and brought it out unto him under the oak, and preſented it.

20 And the angel of God ſaid unto him, Take the fleſh and the unleavened cakes, and lay them upon this rock, and pour out the broth. And he did ſo.

V. 11. By the wine-preſs, to hide, &c.] The Iſraelites contrived to conceal in this manner a ſcanty portion of their harveſt, juſt ſufficient to keep them from ſtarving. In the wine-preſs Gideon beat out the wheat with a ſtaff, unſuſpected: for either the vintage was not ripe; or they had lately had no uſe for their wine-preſſes, being glad to get a morſel of bread, and to do without wine.

V. 12. Thou mighty man of valour.] Perhaps Gideon, at his work, was meditating on the miſerable eſtate of Iſrael, and conceiving bold deſigns againſt their invaders, which yet he ſaw no poſſibility of accompliſhing.

V. 13. If the Lord, &c.] The angel had ſaid "The "Lord is with thee:" but Gideon's mind was occupied about his people, and he therefore anſwered, "If the Lord "be with us," &c, as not conceiving that the Lord could be with him, when there was no evidence of his ſpecial preſence with Iſrael. But though he formed a proper judgment, when he concluded that they could not have been ſo diſtreſſed, if the almighty Lord, who had brought them out of Egypt, had not forſaken them: yet he did not ſuitably advert to thoſe crimes, which had provoked him ſo to do.

V. 14. And the Lord looked, &c.] We here learn who this angel was: even the Lord, Jehovah, the only begotten ſon of God, who hath in all ages declared the Father to mankind. Theſe repeated evidences continually remind the attentive reader, that the Scriptures are calculated to lead us to conceive of the one living, and true God, as ſubſiſting in diſtinct perſons. We read of Jehovah, who ſent, and of Jehovah, who was ſent, and though in that reſpect he appeared "in the form of a ſervant," yet he ſpake as Lord of all. And we ſhall hereafter perceive this to be equally the caſe in reſpect of the Holy Ghoſt. The Lord looked upon Gideon with ſome peculiar expreſſion of Majeſty, or of favour, giving energy to his words.

In this thy might, and, &c.] Either to execute the bold deſigns, which he was revolving in his mind: or rather in that ſtrength of faith which he then poſſeſſed. If he believed that nothing was wanting to deliver them from the Midianites, but the preſence of God, who redeemed them from Egypt, let him go in this confidence, and he ſhall find that ſame power exerted to render him ſucceſsful: "Have "not I ſent thee," ſaith the divine ſpeaker.

V. 15. My family is poor, &c.] Manaſſeh was not one of the leading tribes in Iſrael: the thouſand, (for ſo the word ſignifies,) to which his fathers houſe belonged, was poor in that tribe; and he was the meaneſt perſon in the family in his own humble opinion of himſelf, and unfit to undertake ſuch a ſervice, though he could not help wiſhing for Iſrael's deliverance.

V. 16. As one man.] With great facility, and to their entire deſtruction.

V. 17. That thou talkeſt, &c.] Gideon ſeems to have deſired to be ſatisfied, that the perſon, that ſpake to him, was the ſame, who at the buſh commiſſioned Moſes to deliver Iſrael out of Egypt, and who had given him ſenſible tokens of his divine power, and authority.

V. 19. A kid, &c.] (See Gen. c. xviii. v. 5.) This preparation would ſerve either for an hoſpitable meal, or for a ſacred oblation: the quantity was vaſtly more than was neceſſary for one perſon at one time: and it ſhews that even in his poverty, Gideon was ready to uſe hoſpitality without grudging, according to the cuſtom of thoſe times.

V. 20, 21.] This command ſeems to have been intended as a trial of his faith and obedience; wherein the Lord gave him the ſign, which he required: with the ſtaff which he held in his hand, he touched the fleſh, &c, and by fire miraculouſly kindled the whole was conſumed, as a ſacrifice, and not as an entertainment; for he was God, and not man.

21 Then the angel of the LORD put forth the end of the ſtaff that was in his hand, and touched the fleſh, and the unleavened cakes; and there roſe up fire out of the rock, and conſumed the fleſh and the unleavened cakes. Then the angel of the LORD departed out of his ſight.

22 And when Gideon perceived that he was an angel of the LORD, Gideon ſaid, Alas, O Lord God! for becauſe I have ſeen an angel of the LORD face to face.

23 And the LORD ſaid unto him, Peace be unto thee; fear not: thou ſhalt not die.

24 Then Gideon built an altar there unto the LORD, and called it Jehovah-ſhalom: unto this day it is yet in Ophrah of the Abi-ezrites.

25 And it came to paſs the ſame night, that the LORD ſaid unto him, Take thy father's young bullock, even the ſecond bullock of ſeven years old, and throw down the altar of Baal that thy father hath, and cut down the grove that is by it;

26 And build an altar unto the LORD thy God upon the top of this rock, in the ordered place, and take the ſecond bullock, and offer a burnt-ſacrifice with the wood of the grove which thou ſhalt cut down.

27 Then Gideon took ten men of his ſervants, and did as the LORD had ſaid unto him: and ſo it was, becauſe he feared his father's houſhold, and the men of the city, that he could not do it by day, that he did it by night.

28 And when the men of the city aroſe early in the morning, behold the altar of Baal was caſt down, and the grove was cut down that was by it, and the ſecond bullock was offered upon the altar that was built.

29 And they ſaid one to another, Who hath done this thing? And when they enquired and aſked, they ſaid, Gideon the ſon of Joaſh hath done this thing.

30 Then the men of the city ſaid unto Joaſh, Bring out thy ſon, that he may die: becauſe he hath caſt down the altar of Baal, and becauſe he hath cut down the grove that was by it.

31 And Joaſh ſaid unto all that ſtood againſt him, Will ye plead for Baal? will ye ſave him? he that will plead for him, let him be put to death whilſt it is yet morning: if he be a god, let him plead for himſelf, becauſe one hath caſt down his altar.

32 Therefore on that day he called him Jerubbaal, ſaying, Let Baal plead againſt him, becauſe he hath thrown down his altar.

V. 22. I have ſeen, &c.] The ſight of a created angel, though it might have ſurpriſed, would not have thus terrified Gideon: but it was a current opinion, that the viſion of the divine glory was fatal: and, except as ſeen in Jeſus Chriſt, it would be ſo: (Exod. c. xxxiii. v. 20—22.)

V. 23. The Lord ſaid, &c.] Either at a ſecond appearance, or by an audible voice, or in a viſion, as afterwards, (v. 25.)

V. 24. An altar, &c.] Not for ſacrifice, but for a memorial of the Lord's pacific appearance to him. Jehovah-Shallom ſignifies "the Lord our peace," or the Lord ſhall ſend peace.

V. 25. Even the ſecond, &c.] It is controverted whether Gideon was to ſacrifice one bullock, or two; and, what is meant by "the ſecond bullock." But he underſtood the Lord's meaning very well, and it doth not much concern us. It is alſo generally ſuppoſed, that this bullock, or theſe bullocks were intended as a ſacrifice to Baal, and fattened for that purpoſe. Before he offered them, he was commanded to break down the altar of Baal, "which his father "had;" and whereupon he and his citizens joined in ſacrifice. So devoted were they to their idolatry, even when ſeverely ſmarting for it! We may ſuppoſe that Gideon had expreſſed his diſapprobation of their conduct, but in vain; they had not regarded the prophet of the Lord, and would not regard him. By throwing down this altar, and cutting down the grove, which ſhaded it, he declared open war againſt Iſrael's idolatry, before he attacked their enemies. After this he was ordered to build an altar, and to offer ſacrifices to Jehovah; intimating that their ſin could only be pardoned through that atonement, which was therein typified. And though he was not a prieſt, or Levite, and ordinarily they were confined to the altar at Shiloh; yet the Lord would diſpenſe with his own ritual inſtitutions, and accept his ſacrifice.

V. 27. Becauſe he feared, &c.] His father's large family, was grievouſly infected with this idolatry; which the more magnifies the mercy of God in preſerving Gideon, and in ſelecting him to be Iſrael's deliverer. But there were ſome even there, who were otherwiſe diſpoſed, and willing to help in this perilous attempt.

V. 28, 29.] When they aroſe betimes, perhaps to pay their morning devotions to Baal, and ſaw what was done, they ſuſpected Gideon, and were ſpeedily aſſured that he had done it; and nothing but his blood could ſatisfy the perſecuting rage of theſe infatuated idolaters!

V. 31. Will ye plead, &c.] Joaſh, though a ring-leader in their idolatry, was unwilling to have his ſon puniſhed; and probably was convinced of the ſin, and folly of worſhipping Baal. However he concluded, that if Baal were a God, he could avenge his own cauſe; and if not, they who pleaded for him deſerved to die. On this occaſion he 33 Then all the Midianites, and the Amalekites, and the children of the eaſt, were gathered together, and went over, and pitched in the valley of Jezreel.

34 But the Spirit of the LORD came upon Gideon, and he blew a trumpet; and Abiezer was gathered after him.

35 And he ſent Meſſengers throughout all Manaſſeh; who alſo was gathered after him: and he ſent meſſengers unto Aſher, and unto Zebulun, and unto Naphtali; and they came up to meet them.

36 And Gideon ſaid unto God, If thou wilt ſave Iſrael by mine hand, as thou haſt ſaid, 37 Behold, I will put a fleece of wool in the floor; and if the dew be on the fleece only, and it be dry upon all the earth beſide, then ſhall I know that thou wilt ſave Iſrael by mine hand, as thou haſt ſaid.

38 And it was ſo: for he roſe up early on the morrow, and thruſt the fleece together, and wringed the dew out of the fleece, a bowlfull of water.

39 And Gideon ſaid unto God, Let not thine anger be hot againſt me, and I will ſpeak but this once: Let me prove, I pray thee, but this once with the fleece; let it now be dry only upon the fleece, and upon all the ground let there be dew.

40 And God did ſo that night: for it was dry upon the fleece only, and there was dew on all the ground.

gave his ſon a new name, and called him Jerubbaal; as if he had ſaid, let Baal plead againſt him, if he be able; and by this name Gideon bade defiance to the power of their idol, and proteſted againſt his ſtupid worſhippers. He was alſo called Jerub-beſheth, which ſignifies, "let ſhame "plead;" for what the people called Baal, or their Lord, was indeed their ſhame.

V. 34. Abiezer, &c.] It ſeems a very great reformation took place on this occaſion; for that city furniſhed him his firſt attendants, when he prepared to attack the Midianites.

V. 36—40.] The view of the vaſt multitudes of the enemy diſcouraged Gideon; who for the confirmation of his own faith, and that of his troops, deſired this miraculous ſign of the Lord's preſence, as the ſeal of his commiſſion. But as it is the nature of wool to ſuck in the moiſture, when there is any in the air; ſo the firſt token did not quite ſatisfy him: and, yet conſcious of his unbelief, he aſked the reverſal of the ſign with an humble deprecation of the Lord's diſpleaſure; and he obtained it. According to this miracle, the nation of Iſrael was moiſtened by the dew of heavenly bleſſings, when the whole earth beſide remained dry: and now that the nations of the earth enjoy the bleſſings of redemption, the Jews remain like the dry fleece.

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.

The tendency of fallen nature to apoſtacy from God, is ſo ſtrong, that no means can of themſelves prevent it's effect; and when divine grace is withheld, man as naturally does evil, as the ſtone gravitates to the centre. Theſe Scriptures were intended to teach us this humiliating truth, that all the glory of every thing good in man may be given to the Lord; that the ſinner may depend entirely upon his gracious aſſiſtance; that we may all be reminded, that in our fleſh dwelleth no good thing; and that miniſters may remember, that without the ſpecial bleſſing of God, even Paul might plant in vain. The Lord hath ſo conſtituted the world, that fear, ſhame, and miſery are the natural effects of ſin, and will infallibly follow the commiſſion of it; though impenitent ſinners endeavour to ſhift them off, and for a time ſucceed. But conſcious guilt appalls the heart, and reduces men to the moſt degrading expedients for ſelf-preſervation. And when plenty is abuſed in ſenſuality, it is a merciful chaſtiſement to be pinched with want, and reminded that we have provoked the Lord. The preſſure of affliction will extort even from nature a cry of diſtreſs, and a prayer for relief. If the Lord regard theſe prayers, he will convince ſuch perſons of their ſinfulneſs, and lead them to repentance: and no relief from ſuffering will eventually be a mercy, which is not accompanied by deliverance from the guilt, and power of ſin. When miniſters have declared the perfections, and authority of God; the relations in which we ſtand to him, and the favours which each hath received from him; the reaſonableneſs of his precepts, the advantages of his ſervice, the evil of ſin, and the number of men's tranſgreſſions: the matter muſt be left to conſcience, which, when allowed to ſpeak, will teſtify their need of repentance and forgiveneſs, and that they ought to turn from all their wicked ways, and obey the voice of God: yet many feel that theſe things are right, who yet proceed in their ungodlineſs. But the Lord will reſerve to himſelf a remnant in the worſt of times, to whom he will manifeſt his gracious preſence; and they are never more likely to be thus favoured, that when ſtruggling with outward difficulties, employed in honeſt labour, and meditating upon heavenly things. Talents ſuited for peculiar ſervices, for a time may be buried in obſcurity, but in due ſeaſon the Lord will take the candle from under the buſhel, and place it upon a candleſtick, to give light to all around. That time muſt be waited for by thoſe, whoſe hearts glow with deſires of uſefulneſs, which at preſent they have no opportunity of executing. We are more diſpoſed to muſe upon our troubles, than upon our tranſgreſſions; and when we do not directly experience the ſame deliverances, which have been afforded to others, we are apt to think that the Lord's hand is ſhortened, or that he hath forgotten to be gracious: not conſidering that he worketh every thing in it's appointed ſeaſon, according to the determinations of his unfathomable wiſdom, and as beſt anſwers the purpoſes of his own glory. But before honour is humility; and the delays, and diſappointments, whereby the Lord humbles thoſe, whom he delighteth to honour, often discourage their hearts, and induce distrust, and reluctancy to duty; so imperfect, and defiled with sin are our best graces! yet he generally employs those, who are most sensible of their own unworthiness, and insufficiency; teaching them to exercise the courage of faith, and to grow strong, by simply expecting help from God; and graciously assuring them, that he employs them, and will be with them. When the Lord favours his servants with glimpses of his glory, and tastes of his love, they long for the continuance of his gracious presence: and when the sense of his pardoning love hath banished the fear of wrath; they will rise superior to their discouragements, will praise him for his mercies, and be ready to say, "here I am, send "me." (Isaiah, c. vi. v. 8;) though the service be dangerous, and difficult, and requires much self-denial. In attempting reformation, (which is the first step towards recovering prosperity,) no man must be known according to the flesh: nay when the commands of God are concerned, even parental authority loses it's obligation; and though the method of procedure should be directed in wisdom, yet we must not be counselled by natural affection, or the fear of man. If we do any thing effectual against the cause of Satan, his servants will certainly be enraged, especially they, that are zealous for a false religion: but the Lord hath all hearts in his hands, and can easily intimidate the enemies of his people, or convert them into friends, and helpers: and persecution must always appear unreasonable, and odious to a reflecting mind. Let Baal, if he be a god, plead his own cause: and Jehovah allows not his servants to use such carnal weapons. Wicked men are frequently most furious, when their destruction is just at hand: for when the enemy comes in like a flood, the Spirit of the Lord lifteth up a standard against him. Yet even they, who have the Spirit of God, and by the trumpet of the gospel call others to the conflict, cannot always keep out disquieting fears, in circumstances of peculiar danger, and difficulty. In this struggle against involuntary unbelief, the Lord himself, the author, and finisher of his people's faith, is their refuge: to him will they make application, and he will help them; and when they are encouraged, they will be enabled to sympathise with, and to strengthen their brethren. Yet the same inward enemy will again and again assail them; and conscious that their fears dishonour the power, faithfulness, and love of God, they will deprecate his displeasure, whilst they beseech him to strengthen their faith; and he will both pardon and condescend to their desires, whilst they endeavour to trust in him, but cannot do the thing, that they would. What cause have we sinners of the Gentiles to bless the Lord, that the dew of heavenly blessings, which was once confined to Israel, now descends upon the inhabitants of the earth, without that limitation! yet still the means of grace are dispensed in different measures according to the purposes of God; and even in the same congregations one man's soul is like Gideon's moistened fleece, another like the dry ground. Let us then continually pray for the divine blessing on the ordinances of God to ourselves, and others: not forgetting the Jewish nation, which hath been so long a dry fleece, whilst the earth around hath engrossed the blessing.

2 And the LORD said unto Gideon, The people that are with thee are too many for me to give the Midianites into their hands, lest Israel vaunt themselves against me, saying, Mine own hand hath saved me.

NOTES.

CHAP. VII.] V. 3. Whosoever is fearful, &c.] Gideon either forgot the law, to this purpose, (Deut. c. xx. v. 8;) or thought it might be dispensed with on this occasion. But the Lord saw the pride of the people's hearts, and their disposition to overlook him in the whole transaction: many of them were through unbelief afraid of the enemy; yet if they had prevailed, they would have ascribed the victory to their own courage, and conduct. The people had flocked together at first very readily, but the sight of the innumerable host of the Midianites made such of them tremble, as were destitute of faith, and disquieted by a guilty conscience. They were bid to depart from 6 And the number of them that lapped, putting their hand to their mouth, were three hundred men: but all the reſt of the people bowed down upon their knees to drink water.

7 And the LORD ſaid unto Gideon, By the three hundred men that lapped will I ſave you, and deliver the Midianites into thine hand: and let all the other people go every man unto his place.

8 So the people took victuals in their hand, and their trumpets: and he ſent all the reſt of Iſrael every man unto his tent, and retained thoſe three hundred men. And the hoſt of Midian was beneath him in the valley.

9 And it came to paſs the ſame night, that the LORD ſaid unto him, Ariſe, get thee down unto the hoſt; for I have delivered it into thine hand.

10 But if thou fear to go down, go thou with Phurah thy ſervant down to the hoſt.

11 And thou ſhalt hear what they ſay, and afterward ſhall thine hands be ſtrengthened to go down unto the hoſt. Then went he down with Phurah his ſervant unto the outſide of the armed men that were in the hoſt.

12 And the Midianites, and the Amalekites, and all the children of the eaſt, lay along in the valley like graſhoppers for multitude; and their camels were without number, as the ſand by the ſea-ſide for multitude.

13 And when Gideon was come, behold, there was a man that told a dream unto his fellow, and ſaid, Behold, I dreamed a dream; and, lo, a cake of barley bread tumbled into the hoſt of Midian, and came unto a tent, and ſmote it that it fell, and overturned it, that the tent lay along.

14 And his fellow anſwered and ſaid, This is nothing elſe ſave the ſword of Gideon the ſon of Joaſh, a man of Iſrael: for into his hand hath God delivered Midian and all the hoſt.

15 And it was ſo, when Gideon heard the telling of the dream, and the interpretation thereof, that he worſhipped, and returned into the hoſt of Iſrael, and ſaid, Ariſe, for the LORD hath delivered into your hand the hoſt of Midian.

16 And he divided the three hundred men into three companies, and he put a trumpet in every man's hand, with empty pitchers, and lamps within the pitchers.

17 And he ſaid unto them, Look on me, and do likewiſe: and, behold, when I come to the outſide of the camp, it ſhall be, that as I do, ſo ſhall ye do.

18 When I blow with a trumpet, I and all that are with me, then blow ye the trumpets alſo on every ſide of all the camp, and ſay, The ſword of the LORD, and of Gideon.

19 So Gideon, and the hundred men that were with him, came unto the outſide of the camp in the beginning of the middle watch; and they had but newly ſet the watch: and they blew the trumpets, and brake the pitchers that were in their hands.

mount Gilead, ſome mountain of that name weſt of Jordan, of leſs note than mount Gilead, which lay eaſt of that river.

V. 6. Of them that lapped, &c.] Perhaps the army was led to the water, under the idea, that they were going directly to attack the enemy. It ſeems to have been cuſtomary for them to drink as the cattle do, by putting their mouths down to the water, and drawing it in: but they, who only took a little into their hands, and ſucked it up, (as dogs are remarked to lap a little water haſtily,) might be ſuppoſed to be leſs enſlaved to their appetite, more able to endure hardſhip, and more eager to engage.

V. 8. Victuals, &c.] This ſmall company ſeems to have retained nothing, but preſent neceſſary proviſions, and perhaps all the trumpets, which belonged to the whole army, without any other arms.

V. 13, 14.] This dream ſeemed to have little coherency, or ſignificancy in it: but the interpretation given of it, evidently proved the whole to be from the Lord; and at the ſame time diſcovered that the name of Gideon had filled the hearts of the Midianites with terror. The ſmall unarmed company which Gideon headed, had the Midianites known about them, would have appeared as contemptible to them as the barley cake, and no more likely to deſtroy their army, than that would have been to overturn a tent. Gideon therefore took this as a ſure pledge of ſucceſs, and without delay worſhipped, and praiſed God for it, and returned with confidence to his three hundred men, who were "the hoſt of the Lord," by whom he intended to deliver Iſrael.

V. 16—22.] This ſmall number of men thus divided would be able to encompaſs the whole camp of the Midianites: concealing their lamps in their pitchers, they would paſs unobſerved to their appointed ſtations: then in the dead of the night, when moſt of the enemy were faſt aſleep, all at once breaking their pitchers one againſt another, with as much noiſe as they could, and blowing the trumpets, and ſhouting "The ſword of the Lord, and of 20 And the three companies blew the trumpets, and brake the pitchers, and held the lamps in their left hands, and the trumpets in their right hands to blow withal: and they cried, The ſword of the LORD, and of Gideon.

21 And they ſtood every man in his place round about the camp: and all the hoſt ran, and cried, and fled.

22 And the three hundred blew the trumpets, and the LORD ſet every man's ſword againſt his fellow, even throughout all the hoſt: and the hoſt fled to Beth-ſhittah in Zererath, and to the border of Abel-meholah unto Tabbath.

23 And the men of Iſrael gathered themſelves together out of Naphtali, and out of Aſher, and out of all Manaſſeh, and purſued after the Midianites.

24 And Gideon ſent meſſengers throughout all mount Ephraim, ſaying, Come down againſt the Midianites and take before them the waters unto Beth-barah, and Jordan. Then all the men of Ephraim gathered themſelves together, and took the waters unto Beth-barah and Jordan.

25 And they took two princes of the Midianites, Oreb and Zeeb; and they ſlew Oreb upon the rock Oreb, and Zeeb they ſlew at the wine-preſs of Zeeb, and purſued Midian, and brought the heads of Oreb and Zeeb to Gideon on the other ſide Jordan.

" Gideon," they would occaſion a great alarm: and when their enemies were awaked out of ſleep, and heard the continued ſound of ſo many trumpets, and ſaw the whole camp ſurrounded with lights, they would in their confuſion naturally conclude themſelves ſurpriſed by a large army: and perceiving the lamps and trumpeters ſtill keeping their ſtations, they would be led to ſuſpect that the enemy was even now in the camp; and thus in the dark would become jealous of one another: and when ſome had by miſtake been ſlain by their comrades, the diſtraction, and terror, and ſuſpicion would become more general; until every one was engaged in battle with his fellow ſoldier. Thus we may eaſily conceive of the ſucceſs of this ſtratagem: but the power of God had previouſly prepared the diſmayed hearts of the Midianites to receive ſuch an impreſſion, and he ſet every man's ſword againſt his fellow: nay the obedience of faith alone could have induced ſo defenceleſs a company, to venture upon ſuch an expedient.

24. Gideon ſent, &c.] As ſoon as the ſtratagem began to take effect, he diſpatched meſſengers to the neighbouring places; from whence thoſe, who had been diſmiſſed contrary to their inclinations, and many others were ſoon collected; and whilſt ſome occupied the fords of Jordan to prevent the eſcape of any Midianites, others purſued, and ſlew the fugitives.

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.

Activity, and prudence very properly accompany dependance upon God for aſſiſtance, and ſucceſs in our lawful undertakings: but the Lord ſeeth not, as man ſeeth; and being acquainted with the ſecrets of every heart, he varieth his conduct with a wiſe regard to a multitude of circumſtances, which are imperceptible by all others. And when he ſees men inclined to overlook him, and through unbelief to ſhrink from perilous ſervices, or through pride " to vaunt themſelves againſt him," he will ſet them aſide, and do his work by other inſtruments. Many profeſs themſelves followers of Chriſt, helpers to his ſervants, and prepared to fight under his banner, whilſt perſecution, and tribulation are at a diſtance: but without true faith, and a good conſcience, the heart will fail in the immediate proſpect of danger; and ſome pretence will be found, for deſerting the cauſe, and eſcaping the croſs. But though a religious ſociety may be diminiſhed in numbers, and in external proſperity, by their apoſtacy; yet they will be gainers in purity, and may conſequently expect an increaſing bleſſing from the Lord. Many who have real faith, and grace, are unfit for ſome ſpecial ſervices, and unable to bear ſome peculiar trials, from which therefore the Lord will exempt them; and to which he will appoint thoſe, to whom he hath given ſuperior hardineſs, boldneſs, and firmneſs of ſpirit: and very trivial incidents will ſometimes make diſcovery of men's capacities, and diſpoſitions; and ſhew who are, and who are not to be depended on in arduous undertakings. But whilſt the Lord purſues his purpoſes of diſplaying his own glory, he will try to the uttermoſt the faith and courage of the ſtrongeſt believer: and even when they are acting by his orders, and have the ſecurity of his promiſe to ſupport them, appearances may be ſo very ſtrong againſt them, that they cannot keep out the miſgivings, and ſtruggles of unbelief: this the Lord perceiveth, and in the moſt ſeaſonable hour, by ſome " token for " good," he will make their faith victorious, and eſtabliſh their hearts in confidence. Dreams generally ſavour of men's waking thoughts, deſires, fears, or diſpoſitions, and frequently diſcover the ſin, that dwelleth in us: often may we be humbled on recollecting our ſleeping imaginations, or made thankful that they were not realities; and be reminded to pray againſt terrifying, or polluting dreams. And ſometimes they may afford us a ſalutary hint, which being according to the truth, and precept of God's word, may be made uſeful, without exactly aſcertaining how it was brought to our mind: and if we can get any benefit from the dreams of others, we ſhould readily embrace, and thank the Lord for it. In the diſcovery of the diſpoſition of thoſe, with whom we are concerned, faith may frequently diſcern the ſecret operation of God, and both take encouragement, and point it out to others. The feebleſt, and moſt improbable methods, when appointed of God, and uſed in faith, produce the moſt deciſive conſequences. quence; but are comparable to mean earthen pitchers; (2 Cor. c. iv. v. 7:) accompanied by the trumpet of the gospel, preached by them in their several stations, is the power of God to the salvation of his people, and to the subversion of the kingdom of sin, and satan. Nor should they shrink from danger, or fear death: the earthen pitcher must be broken, and frequently the light of their testimony, and example shines brightest after their decease; especially when they have been honoured by being called to lay down their lives in so good a cause. That same light, and sound of heavenly truth, which saves the Israel of God, confounds, and dismays his enemies: and if threatened vengeance so appals the sinner's alarmed conscience in this world: what will be the effect of the archangel's trumpet, the voice of the Judge, and the shout of the redeemed, at the great day of account? and of that full blaze of light, which will then manifest all hearts, display every character, and shew every impenitent sinner his deserved and inevitable doom? In this world the wicked are often left, under the power of their own delusions, and the fury of their mad passions, to avenge the cause of God upon each other: and a period is approaching when we may expect that the persecuting foes of Christianity will destroy one another, whilst the host of Israel shall look on, and have nothing to do but to blow the gospel trumpet, and read the meaning of such singular events in the light of the Scripture prophecies: and in the world to come the wicked, by mutual enmity, upbraidings, and contempt, will increase their own, and each other's miseries. What then have the people of God to fear but unbelief and sin? What have they to do, but to believe the word of God, to trust his power and promise, to obey his orders, to wait his time, and to help one another, as occasions are afforded, and circumstances require? For they, who are incapable of one service, may be useful in another. Their victory is sure, and will soon be complete, over their most numerous, and powerful opponents.

NOTES.

CHAP. VIII.] V. 1—3. The men of Ephraim, &c.] Gideon was of the tribe of Manasseh, and the Ephraimites were perhaps jealous of him for taking the lead in this business. They were probably averse to take any part in the perilous, and arduous attempt of delivering Israel: but it served as a pretence for their unreasonable anger, that they had not been called upon to assist, though Gideon acted expressly by divine command. But with a presence of mind, a prudence, meekness, and modesty, which did honour to his character, he threw a vail over his own atchievements, and spoke well of theirs, and thus prevented the fatal effects of their anger. He represented his own victory by the three hundred men, who were chiefly of Abi-ezer, as inferior to their taking the princes of Midian: though the former might be called the vintage, and the other the gleaning: and intimated, that the whole glory belonged neither to them, nor him, but to the Lord. This seems to be introduced by anticipation; for the Ephraimites did not bring the heads of Oreb, and Zeeb to Gideon, until he had passed over Jordan; (c. vii. v. 25.)

V. 4. He, and the three hundred, &c.] Gideon, and his three hundred chosen men, passed over Jordan alone in pursuit of the two kings of Midian, who with fifteen thousand men had got over before the fords were taken: though they were deserted by some, and chided by others, and abused by others of the Israelites; and though the remaining Midianites so far exceeded them in number; yet in the courage, self-denial, and patience of faith, they pursued them, faint, and hungry, as they were, with long watching, fasting, and fatigue.

V. 6. Are the hands, &c.] The services of Gideon, and his men were very great, their necessity very urgent, and their request very moderate: the behaviour therefore of the men of Succoth, and Penuel was extremely insolent and base, and proved them disaffected to Israel, and the God of 7 And Gibeon ſaid, Therefore when the LORD hath delivered Zebah and Zalmunna into mine hand, then I will tear your fleſh with the thorns of the wilderneſs, and with briers.

8 And he went up thence to Penuel, and ſpake unto them likewiſe; and the men of Penuel anſwered him as the men of Succoth had anſwered him.

9 And he ſpake alſo unto the men of Penuel, ſaying, When I come again in peace, I will break down this tower.

10 Now Zebah and Zalmunna were in Karkor, and their hoſts with them, about fifteen thouſand men, all that were left of all the hoſts of the children of the eaſt: for there fell an hundred and twenty thouſand men that drew ſword.

11 And Gideon went up by the way of them that dwelt in tents, on the eaſt of Nobah and Jogbehah, and ſmote the hoſt: for the hoſt was ſecure.

12 And when Zebah and Zalmunna fled, he purſued after them, and took the two kings of Midian, Zebah and Zalmunna, and diſcomfited all the hoſt.

13 And Gideon the ſon of Joaſh returned from battle before the ſun was up, 14 And caught a young man of the men of Succoth, and enquired of him: and he deſcribed unto him the princes of Succoth, and the elders thereof, even threeſcore and ſeventeen men.

15 And he came unto the men of Succoth, and ſaid, Behold, Zebah and Zalmunna, with whom ye did upbraid me, ſaying, Are the hands of Zebah and Zalmunna now in thine hand, that we ſhould give bread unto thy men that are weary?

16 And he took the elders of the city, and thorns of the wilderneſs, and briers, and with them he taught the men of Succoth.

17 And he beat down the tower of Penuel, and ſlew the men of the city.

18 Then ſaid he unto Zebah and Zalmunna, What manner of men were they whom ye ſlew at Tabor? And they anſwered, As thou art, ſo were they; each one reſembled the children of a king.

19 And he ſaid, They were my brethren, even the ſons of my mother: as the LORD liveth, if ye had ſaved them alive, I would not ſlay you.

20 And he ſaid unto Jether his firſt-born, Up, and ſlay them: but the youth drew not his ſword; for he feared, becauſe he was yet a youth.

21 Then Zebah and Zalmunna ſaid, Riſe thou, and fall upon us: for as the man is, ſo is his ſtrength. And Gideon aroſe, and ſlew Zebah and Zalmunna, and took away the ornaments that were on their camel's necks.

Iſrael. They deſpiſed Gideon's feeble army, depreciated his former ſucceſs, attempted to weaken his confidence of completing the delivery; and would not afford him the leaſt aſſiſtance in his patriotic, and pious undertaking.

V. 7. I will tear, &c.] Gideon deferred his indignation; and intimated to them, that if the kings of Midian eſcaped, they might; but if the Lord enabled him to deſtroy them, it would be plain that he had appointed him judge of Iſrael, and in that character he would puniſh their ill behaviour, and teach them better. It is not agreed in what manner he uſed theſe briars and thorns in tearing the fleſh of the men of Succoth; but though he put them to pain, it is not probable that he ſlew them.

V. 9. This tower.] They probably boaſted of, and confided in their tower to ſecure them both from the Midianites, and from Gideon: he therefore deſtroyed it; and as ſome at leaſt of the men of Penuel were ſtill more culpable, than thoſe of Succoth, he put them to death, (v. 17.).

V. 14. He deſcribed, &c.] By this young man's information Gideon was enabled to diſtinguiſh betwixt the guilty, and the innocent, and ſo to inflict puniſhment upon the offenders only.

V. 18, 19.] In the troubles of Iſrael theſe kings of Midian had ſlain the brethren of Gideon: and therefore he determined on this occaſion to act as the avenger of blood upon them. As they were not of the devoted nations of Canaan, he might otherwiſe have ſpared them, and he declared that he would. It ſeems that Gideon, though little in his own eyes, was a man of a very majeſtic appearance: and that his brethren much reſembled him: and perhaps this excited the jealouſy of the Midianitiſh kings againſt them, who ſlew them for their own ſecurity, though it eventually proved their deſtruction.

V. 20, 21.] Gideon deſired to inure his ſon to execute vengeance on the enemies of God, and Iſrael; but the youth was timorous, and declined the ſervice; and the kings themſelves intreated, that they might be ſlain, (if they muſt die,) by the hand of Gideon; who being in his full ſtrength, and of great reputation, was more fit for ſuch a ſervice; for their death would be both ignominious, and lingering, if afeeble, timid youth were their execu-

22 Then

22 Then the men of Iſrael ſaid unto Gideon, Rule thou over us, both thou, and thy ſon, and thy ſon's ſon alſo: for thou haſt delivered us from the hand of Midian.

23 And Gideon ſaid unto them, I will not rule over you, neither ſhall my ſon rule over you: the LORD ſhall rule over you.

24 And Gideon ſaid unto them, I would deſire a requeſt of you, that ye would give me every man the ear-rings of his prey: (for they had golden ear-rings, becauſe they were Iſhmaelites.)

25 And they anſwered, We will willingly give them. And they ſpread a garment, and did caſt therein every man the ear-rings of his prey.

26 And the weight of the golden ear-rings that he requeſted was a thouſand and ſeven hundred ſhekels of gold, beſide ornaments, and and collars, and purple raiment that was on the kings of Midian, and beſide the chains that were about their camel's necks.

27 And Gideon made an ephod thereof, and put it in his city, even in Ophrah: and all Iſrael went thither a whoring after it: which thing became a ſnare unto Gideon, and to his houſe.

28 Thus was Midian ſubdued before the children of Iſrael, ſo that they lifted up their heads no more: and the country was in quietneſs forty years in the days of Gideon.

29 And Jerubbaal the ſon of Joaſh went and dwelt in his own houſe.

30 And Gideon had threeſcore and ten ſons of his body begotten: for he had many wives.

31 And his concubine that was in Shechem, ſhe alſo bare him a ſon, whoſe name he called Abimelech.

32 And Gideon the ſon of Joaſh died in a good old age, and was buried in the ſepulchre of Joaſh his father, in Ophrah of the Abiezrites.

33 And it came to paſs, as ſoon as Gideon was dead, that the children of Iſrael turned again, and went a whoring after Baalim, and made Baal-berith their god.

34 And the children of Iſrael remembered not the LORD their God, who had delivered them out of the hands of all their enemies on every ſide:

35 Neither ſhewed they kindneſs to the houſe of Jerubbaal, namely, Gideon, according to all the goodneſs which he had ſhewed unto Iſrael.

tioner. The ornaments from the camels necks, being in the ſhape of the moon, were probably uſed in ſome idolatrous, or ſuperſtitious manner.

V. 22, 23.] Gideon was willing to fight for, adminiſter juſtice to, and reform religion amongſt them; but only as the Lord's deputy, and whilſt he pleaſed. He would not accept of the perpetual government from them, nor the hereditary ſucceſſion to his children; let the Lord the king of Iſrael, appoint whom he pleaſed.

V. 24. Iſhmaelites.] (Note Gen. c. xxxvii. v. 28.)

V. 27. An ephod, &c.] A very rich garment, like that worn by the high prieſt. Whether Gideon formed this at firſt only as a memorial of his victory; or whether he intended to inquire of the Lord by it, (c. xvii. v. 5. c. xviii. v. 5:) It afterwards became an occaſion of idolatrous worſhip. Probably other requiſites were added, and ſo ſacrifices were offered upon the altar before erected, (c. vi. v. 26.) inſtead of that at Shiloh; which gratified the people's humour, and eaſe: and perhaps Gideon and his family were pleaſed with worſhipping at home, inſtead of going to the tabernacle: this became to them at leaſt an inlet to forbidden worſhip; to the people of idolatry. So that after the death of Gideon, they proceeded to renounce Jehovah entirely, and to worſhip Baal as their God, under the name of Baal-berith, or the Lord of the covenant; having generally covenanted to be his people.

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.

It is one vanity incident to human affairs, that for every right work a man is envied by his neighbour; (Eccl. c. iv. v. 4.) They who will not attempt, or venture any thing in the cauſe of God, will be the moſt ready to cenſure, and quarrel with ſuch, as are of a more zealous, and enterprizing ſpirit: the charge of pride, and ambition, will be brought againſt the moſt unexceptionable undertakings; and when cenſure is ſilenced in one reſpect by the event, it will aſſume another form; and they, who were moſt reluctant to difficult ſervices, will be the moſt exaſperated to be excluded from the credit of them. But only by pride cometh ſuch contention; and it is the wiſdom of Chriſtians to turn away wrath by a ſoft anſwer; and their moſt noble victory is the conqueſt of their own ſpirits, (Prov. c. xvi. v. 32:) In thoſe things, which pertain to the truth, will, and glory of God, they ſhould be unmoved as the ſturdy oak; but in the little concerns of their own intereſt or reputation, they ſhould reſemble the pliant willow, which yields to every guſt. And if by throwing a ſhade over what the Lord hath done by them, and making honourable mention of what he hath hath done by others, by giving obliging language in return for rough words, and commendations in lieu of bitter chidings, envy may be avoided, anger abated, and contention prevented; the common cauſe will be more advantaged, than by the moſt ſucceſsful controverſy, which always takes Chriſtians off from their ſpiritual warfare. The active ſervants of God will always meet with more dangerous oppoſition from degenerate profeſſors, than from open enemies: but they muſt not regard the unreaſonable behaviour of thoſe, who are Iſraelites in name, but Midianites in heart, or who vainly wiſh to obſerve a neutrality. Through manifold tribulations, they muſt carry on their warfare, and purſue the enemies of their own ſouls, and of the cauſe of God, though ready to faint through inward conflicts, and outward hardſhips. And they ſhall be enabled thus to perſevere: for the leſs men help, and the more they hinder them, the more effectually will the Lord aſſiſt, and the more remarkably will he proſper them. It behoves magiſtrates to diſtinguiſh betwixt the guilty, and the innocent, and to puniſh thoſe, who injure their brethren; yet with temper, and to teach them, or others to behave better in future: miniſters muſt warn and ſeverely rebuke thoſe, who diſcourage the hearts of their fellow ſervants; in due ſeaſon the Lord himſelf will appear againſt, and execute vengeance upon thoſe, who have oppoſed his people in their obedience to his commands: In the mean time we muſt defer our anger, and go on with our work, not attempting to avenge ourſelves. Whatever earthly object men glory in, it will be torn from them; and ſinners are never ſo expoſed to danger, as when they deem themſelves moſt ſecure: (1 Theſ. c. v. v. 3.) Sins long forgotten by man, muſt be accounted for to God; and ſinful methods of ſelf-preſervation will only haſten, and aggravate the tranſgreſſor's deſtruction; eſpecially when innocent blood hath been ſhed. The execution of atrocious criminals, and the ſhedding of the blood of God's enemies, are in many reſpects honourable ſervices; (Pſalm c. lxxxiii. v. 11:) yet we may well be thankful, if we are employed in ſaving men's lives, rather than in deſtroying them. What a miſerable conſolation in death is derived from the hope of ſuffering leſs pain, and dying with leſs diſgrace, than ſome others do! yet many are more anxious upon theſe accounts, than concerning the future judgment, and it's eternal conſequences!—No honour is to be ſought, or ſo much as accepted, but that, which cometh from God, and conſiſteth with his ſole authority and glory; nor may we ſeek for our children thoſe things, which we may not deſire for ourſelves. Whatever deputies are employed, and whoever hath the external precedency in God's church; he is the only real Judge, defender, and ruler of his people. How ſoon will thoſe ornaments which feed the luſt of the eye, and form the pride of life; as well as the indulgences of the fleſh, become the ſhame of thoſe, who were fond of them? The characters of mere men have a ſad, and wonderful mixture in them; nor may we follow them, farther than they follow Chriſt: things ſanctioned by venerable names, and clothed with fair pretexts, are often found by the light of God's word to be vile abominations; and are proved by experience to be dangerous, and fatal ſnares, to thoſe eſpecially, who over-venerate their fellow worms. Small deviations from our rule, are a dangerous precedent, and open the way for more flagrant enormities: and even in marriage, when once the original inſtitution is diſregarded, the ſenſual heart of man, like an humoured child, will bear no contradiction, nor be confined by any limitations. But the Lord pardons, and accepts the true believer, notwithſtanding his infirmities, and after an uſeful life brings him to a quiet end: but conſcious of our own ingratitude to God, and obſerving that of mankind in general; we may learn to be patient under the unſuitable returns, that we meet with for our poor ſervices, and to reſolve after the divine example, "not to be overcome of evil, but to overcome evil with good."

NOTES.

CHAP. IX.] V. 1. To Abimelech, &c.] Gideon, and his family had miſled the people, through the ephod at Ophrah: Iſrael had grievouſly offended in joining themſelves to Baal-berith; and the Lord manifeſted his diſpleaſure, not by delivering them up to foreign invaders, but by giving them up to their own vile paſſions. By Abimelech, the ſon of a concubine, Gideon's flouriſhing family was all at once deſtroyed; and after a time Abimelech, and his aſſiſtants in this baſe wickedneſs, executed vengeance on each other. Gideon had refuſed the proffered kingdom for himſelf, and his ſons; yet Abimelech's name, which ſignifies "my father the king," carried royalty in it: the concubines, whoſe children did not inherit, would naturally ſet up an intereſt oppoſite to the reſt of the family: and Abimelech's mother being of Shechem, a principal city of Ephraim, he conceived the idea of obtaining the kingdom, by her means. In order to ſucceed in this ambitious project, he accuſed his brethren, of intending to ſeize upon the government, and poſſeſs it with joint authority; and pleaded that it would be better to be governed by one prince, than ſo many petty tyrants; and that if they, who were ſo nearly related to him, would raiſe him to the throne, he would be peculiarly attentive to their intereſts: and in this manner he acquired the government, without either merit, or capacity for ſuch an honour.

4 And they gave him threeſcore and ten pieces of ſilver out of the houſe of Baal-berith; wherewith Abimelech hired vain and light perſons, which followed him.

5 And he went unto his father's houſe at Ophrah, and ſlew his brethren, the ſons of Jerubbaal, being threeſcore and ten perſons, upon one ſtone: notwithſtanding, yet Jotham the youngeſt ſon of Jerubbaal was left; for he hid himſelf.

6 And all the men of Shechem gathered together, and all the houſe of Millo, and went and made Abimelech king, by the plain of the pillar that was in Shechem.

V. 4. Out of the houſe, &c.] The Iſraelites had preſented this money as an oblation to their new god; and the men of Shechem borrowed it of him to ſupply their upſtart king. It doth not appear of what value theſe pieces of ſilver were; but they ſufficed for Abimelech's preſent purpoſe; and he thus became a penſioner of Baal, and ſeemed to engage to employ his authority to promote his worſhip; as if he was determined to ſhew himſelf as unlike as poſſible to his father, who had deſtroyed the altar of Baal, &c. With this ſupply he hired a ſet of men, fit for any villainy, and with their aſſiſtance barbarouſly murdered all the numerous family of Gideon, except one ſon, who eſcaped him: and by ſuch infamous meaſures, and perſons, was this baſe born, but baſer ſpirited man made king of Iſrael; and it ſeems the whole nation tamely allowed him to poſſeſs the title of their king.

V. 7. Mount Gerizzim, &c.] This mountain lay near to Shechem, and from thence Jotham ſpake to the Shechemites, (who are ſuppoſed to have been aſſembled on ſome public occaſion,) that at leaſt many of them would hear him, and report what he ſaid to the reſt; and he ſolemnly called upon them "to hearken to him, that God might "hearken unto them:" for if they did not repent of their ungrateful treatment of his father's family, and deſiſt from their malicious intentions againſt him, the only remaining ſon thereof, they could not expect, that God would hear their cry, when anguiſh, and diſtreſs came upon them.

V. 8—15.] A parable is a deſcriptive picture, which ſhews the ſimilitude of an event, or action, in lively colours; and conveys to the mind, ere it is aware, the perception of ſome important truth, to which it was previouſly inattentive, or againſt which it was prejudiced: thereby thoſe things are placed in their proper light, which before were miſapprehended; and thoſe are made evident, which before ſeemed doubtful: the ſubject is ſtripped of ſuch things, as do not properly belong to it; and the trouble of a long chain of arguments being ſpared, the cauſe is brought to a compendious deciſion; and reaſon, and conſcience are induced to paſs ſentence, before ſelf love is conſulted, and a man is for a moment as it were impoſed upon, in order to his being profitably undeceived; he is made judge in his own cauſe before he is aware, and decides againſt himſelf, without ever intending it. The truth of a parable lies in the inſtruction contained in it; and the feigned circumſtances being known to be ſuch, are no ways inconſiſtent with veracity, but greatly ſubſerve the cauſe of truth; conveying it in an unſuſpected, and agreeable manner to the mind: and they have been much uſed by wiſe men in all ages, as the moſt advantageous method of teaching mankind the ſalutary leſſons of juſtice, and prudence; and were ſanctioned by the perpetual uſe, which Jeſus Chriſt made of them. In this parable of Jotham, the folly, and ingratitude of the Shechemites, in making the baſeſt of Gideon's ſons their king, and in murdering the others; the preſumption, and arrogance of Abimelech, in pretending to ſuch an honour, and the conſequences of ſo unreaſonable a procedure, are repreſented with great ingenuity, and ſimplicity. The olive-tree, the fig-tree, and the vine had excellency, and uſefulneſs, if the trees had indeed wanted a king: thus Gideon, and his other ſons were worthy of, and entitled to Iſrael's conſideration, if there had been any occaſion for them to ſet a king over them; but they had humbly, and wiſely preferred the comforts, and duties of private life, to the cares, burdens, and perils of the kingdom. But Abimelech, the ſon of a ſlave, and a concubine, a mean, and worthleſs perſon, uſeleſs, and troubleſome as a bramble, had come and put your truſt in my ſhadow; and if not, let fire come out of the bramble, and devour the cedars of Lebanon.

16 Now therefore if ye have done truly and ſincerely, in that ye have made Abimelech king, and if ye have dealt well with Jerubbaal and his houſe, and have done unto him according to the deſerving of his hands:

17 (For my father fought for you, and adventured his life far, and delivered you out of the hand of Midian;

18 And ye are riſen up againſt my father's houſe this day, and have ſlain his ſons, threeſcore and ten perſons, upon one ſtone, and have made Abimelech, the ſon of his maidſervant, king over the men of Shechem, becauſe he is your brother:)

19 If ye then have dealt truly and ſincerely with Jerubbaal and with his houſe this day, then rejoice ye in Abimelech, and let him alſo rejoice in you;

20 But if not, let fire come out from Abimelech, and devour the men of Shechem, and the houſe of Millo; and let fire come out from the men of Shechem, and from the houſe of Millo, and devour Abimelech.

21 And Jotham ran away, and fled, and went to Beer, and dwelt there, for fear of Abimelech his brother.

22 When Abimelech had reigned three years over Iſrael, 23 Then God ſent an evil ſpirit between Abimelech and the men of Shechem; and the men of Shechem dealt treacherouſly with Abimelech:

24 That the cruelty done to the threeſcore and ten ſons of Jerubbaal might come, and their blood be laid upon Abimelech their brother which ſlew them; and upon the men of Shechem which aided him in the killing of his brethren.

25 And the men of Shechem ſet liers in wait for him in the top of the mountains, and they robbed all that came along that way by them: and it was told Abimelech.

26 And Gaal the ſon of Ebed came with his brethren, and went over to Shechem: and the men of Shechem put their confidence in him.

27 And they went out into the fields, and gathered their vineyards, and trode the grapes, and made merry, and went into the houſe of their god, and did eat and drink, and curſed Abimelech.

28 And Gaal, the ſon of Ebed ſaid, Who is Abimelech, and who is Shechem, that we ſhould ſerve him? Is not he the ſon of Jerubbaal? and Zebul his officer? Serve the men of Hamor the father of Shechem; for why ſhould we ſerve him?

29 And would to God this people were under my hand! then would I remove Abime-by inſinuation induced them to offer him the kingdom, and had without heſitation accepted of it, and fooliſhly promiſed them vaſt advantages from his protection, and terrible conſequences from their offending of him: though indeed he was fit for nothing elſe, but a fire brand, to ſet them all at variance to their common deſtruction; as the bramble being ſet on fire, may communicate the flame to the loftieſt cedars, and conſume them along with itſelf in the common conflagration.—The oil from the olive tree was the chief ingredient of the ointment, wherewith the prieſts were anointed, it was uſed for the lamps in the ſanctuary, and formed a part of the meat-offering; whereby God was honoured: beſides it's uſefulneſs to man. The wine was uſed in drink-offerings, which were acceptable to God, when properly preſented. Theſe uſeful trees better repreſented what a king ought to be, than the ſtately cedars; for piety to God, and uſefulneſs to man, are more eſſential to the character of a good prince, than external pomp, and majeſty.

V. 20. The houſe of Millo, &c.] This ſeems to have been the name of their ſenate houſe, or town hall: and by the houſe of Millo are meant, all the chief perſons of Shechem, who had combined to make Abimelech king, (v. 6;) who are alſo intended by the cedars, which the fire from the bramble would devour.

V. 23. God ſent an evil ſpirit, &c.] God gave permiſſion to an evil ſpirit to ſow contention betwixt them, by ſtirring up the pride, envy, malice, and other vile paſſions of their hearts, that they might execute his deſerved vengeance upon each other.

V. 25. Set liers in wait, &c.] Being enraged againſt Abimelech, who was abſent from the city, and expected back again, they employed ſome aſſaſſins to lay wait for him, and kill him: who miſſing of him robbed the travellers, and thus helped to increaſe the miſery of the people.

V. 26—29. Gaal, the ſon of Ebed, &c.] The word Ebed ſignifies a ſlave, and ſuch his father ſeems to have been, and one of the remnant of the Canaanites, who falſely boaſted his deſcent from Hamor, the father of Shechem, from whom the city was called: yet the Iſraelitiſh inhabitants baſely made him the head of their conſpiracy againſt Abimelech. Under this imagined protector they gathered lech. And he ſaid to Abimelech, Increaſe thine army, and come out.

30 And when Zebul the ruler of the city heard the words of Gaal the ſon of Ebed, his anger was kindled.

31 And he ſent meſſengers unto Abimelech privily, ſaying, Behold, Gaal the ſon of Ebed, and his brethren, be come to Shechem; and, behold, they fortify the city againſt thee.

32 Now therefore up by night, thou and the people that is with thee, and lie in wait in the field:

33 And it ſhall be, that in the morning, as ſoon as the ſun is up, thou ſhalt riſe early, and ſet upon the city: and, behold, when he and the people that is with him come out againſt thee, then mayeſt thou do to them as thou ſhalt find occaſion.

34 And Abimelech roſe up, and all the people that were with him, by night, and they laid wait againſt Shechem in four companies.

35 And Gaal the ſon of Ebed went out, and ſtood in the entering of the gate of the city: and Abimelech roſe up, and the people that were with him, from lying in wait.

36 And when Gaal ſaw the people, he ſaid to Zebul, Behold, there come people down from the top of the mountains. And Zebul ſaid unto him, Thou ſeeſt the ſhadow of the mountains as if they were men.

37 And Gaal ſpake again, and ſaid, See, there come people down by the middle of the land, and another company come along by the plain of Meonenim.

38 Then ſaid Zebul unto him, Where is now thy mouth, wherewith thou ſaidſt, Who is Abimelech, that we ſhould ſerve him? Is not this the people that thou haſt deſpiſed? go out, I pray now, and fight with them.

39 And Gaal went out before the men of Shechem, and fought with Abimelech.

40 And Abimelech chaſed him, and he fled before him; and many were overthrown and wounded, even unto the entering of the gate.

41 And Abimelech dwelt at Arumah: and Zebul thruſt out Gaal and his brethren, that they ſhould not dwell in Shechem.

42 And it came to paſs on the morrow, that the people went out into the field; and they told Abimelech.

43 And he took the people, and divided them into three companies, and laid wait in the field, and looked, and behold, the people were come forth out of the city; and he roſe up againſt them, and ſmote them.

44 And Abimelech, and the company that was with him, ruſhed forward, and ſtood in the entering of the gate of the city: and the two other companies ran upon all the people that were in the fields, and ſlew them.

45 And Abimelech fought againſt the city all that day; and he took the city, and ſlew the people that was therein, and beat down the city, and ſowed it with ſalt.

46 And when all the men of the tower of Shechem heard that, they entered into an hold of the houſe of the god Berith.

47 And it was told Abimelech, that all the men of the tower of Shechem were gathered together.

48 And Abimelech gat him up to mount Zalmon, he and all the people that were with in their harveſt, and vintage, and kept a feaſt to the honour of Baal-berith, and in their revellings curſed Abimelech in his name. Had they forſaken their idolatry, when they deſerted the uſurper, it had been well. On this occaſion Gaal, heated perhaps with wine, expreſſed his diſdain that Abimelech ſhould reign over him, and ſo honourable, and ancient a city, as Shechem: in which he reviled him as the ſon of Jerub-baal, who deſtroyed the worſhip of Baal; and it could not therefore be right that Baal's worſhippers ſhould ſubmit to him, but rather that they ſhould avenge Baal's cauſe upon him: he alſo ſpoke ſlightingly of Zebul, who was left governor of the city, and who was hereby much offended: he invited them to reſtore the authority, in his perſon, to the deſcendants of Hamor, promiſed what great things he would do againſt Abimelech; and challenged him, as if he had been preſent, to decide the conteſt by a battle: the expreſſion tranſlated, "would to God," is only an earneſt wiſh that it might be ſo.

V. 36. Thou ſeeſt, &c.] Zebul, who had not yet declared againſt Gaal, ſpake this either in deriſion, or to carry on the deception, till Abimelech ſurpriſed them at unawares.

V. 41—45. Thruſt out Gaal, &c.] As his conduct, and ſucceſs had not anſwered the people's expectations, they were willing to be rid of him and his company: and on the morrow, they went forth to fight with Abimelech, who by means of Ambuſhments ſmote them, took the city, ſlew the inhabitants, and utterly deſolated the whole.

V. 46—49.] The inhabitants of a part of the city, called the tower of Shechem, took refuge in the temple of Baal-berith, hoping that Abimelech would reſpect the ſacredhim; and Abimelech took an ax in his hand, and cut down a bough from the trees, and took it, and laid it on his ſhoulder, and ſaid unto the people that were with him, What ye have ſeen me do, make haſte, and do as I have done.

49 And all the people likewiſe cut down every man his bough, and followed Abimelech, and put them to the hold, and ſet the hold on fire upon them: ſo that all the men of the tower of Shechem died alſo, about a thouſand men and women.

50 Then went Abimelech to Thebez, and encamped againſt Thebez, and took it.

51 But there was a ſtrong tower within the city, and thither fled all the men and women, and all they of the city, and ſhut it to them, and gat them up to the top of the tower.

52 And Abimelech came unto the tower, and fought againſt it, and went hard unto the door of the tower to burn it with fire.

53 And a certain woman caſt a piece of a millſtone upon Abimelech's head, and all to brake his ſkull.

54 Then he called haſtily unto the young man his armour-bearer, and ſaid unto him, Draw thy ſword, and ſlay me, that men ſay not of me, A woman ſlew him. And his young man thruſt him through, and he died.

55 And when the men of Iſrael ſaw that Abimelech was dead, they departed every man unto his place.

56 Thus God rendered the wickedneſs of Abimelech which he did unto his father, in ſlaying his ſeventy brethren.

57 And all the evil of the men of Shechem did God render upon their heads: and upon them came the curſe of Jotham the ſon of Jerubbaal.

neſs of the place; but in deep revenge, he contrived to burn the temple, and the whole company of them.

V. 50. To Thebez, &c.] This is ſuppoſed to have been a city, which confederated againſt Abimelech, and to which perhaps ſome Shechemites had fled: but this blood-thirſty tyrant, having taken the city, thought to have burned the inhabitants with the tower, as he had done at Shechem; in which he anſwered the character of the bramble, which may ſet fire to that, which is nobler, and better than itſelf: but his meaſure of iniquity was accompliſhed, he had been the executioner of vengeance upon others, and he muſt ſuffer deſerved vengeance himſelf: in his rage therefore coming too near the tower, he was mortally wounded by a piece of millſtone from the hand of a woman; and being acquainted with this circumſtance, in a vain attempt to avoid the diſgrace of ſuch a death, he ordered his armour bearer to ſlay him, who obeyed his command; and the world, and Iſrael were rid of a vile murderer, uſurper, and tyrant, who came in with ſubtlety, ruled in cruelty, and died in infamy. In this whole hiſtory the wickedneſs, and madneſs of man; the degeneracy, and dreadful apoſtacy of Iſrael; the terrible effects of ambition, revenge, and headſtrong luſts; and the wiſdom, and juſtice of God, in over-ruling the whole for the purpoſes of his own glory, are very much illuſtrated.

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.

If parents could foreſee what their children would do, and what they would ſuffer, their joy in them would be often turned into grievous lamentations: we may then be thankful, that we cannot ſee into futurity; we are reminded to commit thoſe, whom we moſt love, into the hands of the Lord, and to attend to our preſent duty, caſting our care upon him reſpecting ourſelves, and them; and to be willing to leave this world, when he pleaſes; for if we lived, we might behold ſuch afflictions, as would break our hearts. Above all we ſhould fear, and watch againſt ſin; for our miſconduct may produce the moſt fatal effects upon our families, and upon ſociety, after we are laid in our graves. No judgment is more terrible to individuals, than being given up to their own luſts; and nothing more dreadful to communities, than to be governed by wicked princes. Able, upright men, who know the duty, and difficulty of exalted ſtations, will be diffident of themſelves, and reluctant to quit the ſecurity, ſweetneſs, and uſefulneſs of private life, for the toils, and dangers of pre-eminence. But men of ſordid, and ſelfiſh minds, deſtitute of the fear of God, and benevolence to man, are capable of a vaſt, and daring ambition; can form crafty projects to accompliſh their deſigns; by inſinuation will draw over ſuch perſons to their intereſts, as are of their own temper, and character; and as they heſitate not at the commiſſion of the moſt horrid crimes, they will often for a ſeaſon, ſeem to have been proſpered in their wickedneſs. Slanders, lies, flatteries, promiſes, bribery, perjuries, nay even murders of the moſt atrocious kind, are the weapons, which they uſe, as occaſion requires, and as ambition, or ſuſpicion ſuggeſt. If by any vile means money can be procured, (and ſatan will help out ſuch faithful ſervants in their emergencies;) they will with it hire thoſe, who for a paltry ſum, are ready for any villany; and will wade through rivers of blood, if neceſſary, to authority, and pre-eminence; their neareſt relatives are not ſafe, if they ſtand in their way; the foundations of all government civil, and eccleſiaſtical muſt be ſubverted to make way for them, and diſtractions, and public troubles, are the element, in which they delight. Such Abimelechs every age produces; and it is ſurpriſing how they impoſe upon thouſands to concur in their baſe deſigns. — But when men are avowed infidels, profligates, and debauchees, what can be expected from them, when not reſtrained by human laws? And their wickedneſs is equalled by the folly of thoſe, who, intruſt power into their hands. But by ſuch ſcourges of the human race, and such infatuated counsels, the righteous God chastises his offending people, and executes vengeance on his enemies, as he seeth good: and he will preserve, in the most imminent dangers, those, whom he intends to use for the good of others. He seldom proceeds to extremities against wicked men, without giving them warning: and they, who will not hearken to his call to repent; to the voice of the oppressed, who demand justice, or that of the afflicted, who supplicate relief, will one day cry unto the Lord in extreme anguish, and he will not regard them. All the works of the creation, in their several ways honour their Creator, and subserve the comfort, and benefit of man; who is thereby made the more inexcuseable in neglecting and rebelling against his bounteous Benefactor. In departing from God men are necessitated to trust in creatures, which can do no other but disappoint and ruin them: and one man of moderate talents may soon do more mischief, than many very wise, and excellent persons can do good by the most persevering exertions. But though the wicked may flourish for a time, yet they shall be rooted out at the last: in answer to the cries of the oppressed, God will give them up to their own mad passions; their suspicion, envy, malice, and revenge, shall be kindled against each other; and the weapons with which they destroyed those, who obstructed their iniquitous designs, will at length destroy themselves. The history of mankind impartially related would greatly resemble that of this chapter. The records of the most splendid events present to our view a contest for power amongst ambitious men, carried on by treachery, flattery, mutual insult, contempt, revenge, and cruelty; in which multitudes miserably perished, who were no ways concerned in the cause, or the event of the quarrel. Such scenes, though subjects of panegyric, amongst ungodly poets, orators, and historians, are chiefly useful in illustrating the Scripture doctrine of the deceitfulness, and desperate wickedness of the human heart, the force of men's ungovernable lusts, and the effects of satan's influence: that we may see as in a glass what we should be, if left to ourselves, and learn thankfulness for being preserved from such enormities; for an obscure situation, by which we are less exposed to the danger of falling victims to the ambition, and jealousy of others; and for the gospel of Jesus Christ, whose kingdom is in righteousness, peace, and joy in the Holy Ghost.—But it is most lamentable, when such outrages are committed by the professors of the gospel, and disgrace the religion of Jesus in the eyes of multitudes, who cannot, or will not distinguish betwixt Christianity, and those persons, who have no more than the name of Christians: wo be to the world because of such offences; and wo be to them, by whom such offences come!—We should further note that boasting issues generally in shame: that dangers, which are despised at a distance, terrify the more when they approach: that the courage, which wine inspires, is of short continuance: that a mean spirit, and a proud heart harbour the most implacable resentments; whilst the truly generous, and humble are slow to anger, and ready to forgive: that every sinful refuge from danger accelerates or ensures destruction: that more ingenuity, and diligence have hitherto been employed in destroying, than in saving men's lives: that men's sins are often punished in kind, and their cruelty is retorted upon themselves, and by the meanest, and least dreaded instruments: and that the most successful wickedness speedily issues in lasting misery, and disgrace. Vain and foolish is the concern, and worthless are the expedients of dying sinners to preserve their reputation from dishonour, when everlasting contempt, as well as misery, are inevitably reserved for them in a future state. And God will record their crimes, and punishment in this world, notwithstanding all their endeavours to the contrary, as far as is necessary for the instruction of others, and for his own glory: and how can they expect fidelity, or mercy from men, who have been traitors to God, and cruel deceivers of their brethren? But how strong must be man's propensity to wickedness, when such general, and horrible idolatry, and unrighteousness prevailed even in Israel, after all the Lord had done for them, and notwithstanding all the advantages, which they enjoyed. Lord thou hast given us thy word of truth, and righteousness, O pour out upon us thy Spirit of purity, peace, and love, and write thy holy law in our hearts we beseech thee; else all our outward mercies will but enhance our guilt, and increase our condemnation!

NOTES.

CHAP. X.] V. 1. After Abimelech, &c.] After the death of this usurper, the Lord raised up Tola, to judge Israel. We read not that he waged any war: but he restored peace, and the regular administration of justice, after the late distractions; and he reformed the state of religion amongst them; and was thus as great a blessing, as those judges, who performed more memorable exploits. His name signifies a worm, and he was no worse fitted for being the Lord's instrument for good to his people, if his opinion of himself accorded to so humble a name. Though of the tribe of Issachar, he came to live in mount Ephraim, that he might be in the centre of Israel, and near the tabernacle.

V. 3. Jair, &c.] He was a descendant of Jair of 5 And Jair died, and was buried in Camon.

6 And the children of Iſrael did evil again in the ſight of the LORD, and ſerved Baalim, and Aſhtaroth, and the gods of Syria, and the gods of Zidon, and the gods of Moab, and the gods of the children of Ammon, and the gods of the Philiſtines, and forſook the LORD, and ſerved not him.

7 And the anger of the LORD was hot againſt Iſrael, and he ſold them into the hands of the Philiſtines, and into the hands of the children of Ammon.

8 And that year they vexed and oppreſſed the children of Iſrael: eighteen years, all the children of Iſrael that were on the other ſide Jordan, in the land of the Amorites, which is in Gilead.

9 Moreover the children of Ammon paſſed over Jordan to fight alſo againſt Judah, and againſt Benjamin, and againſt the houſe of of Ephraim; ſo that Iſrael was ſore diſtreſſed.

10 And the children of Iſrael cried unto the LORD, ſaying, We have ſinned againſt thee, both becauſe we have forſaken our God, and alſo ſerved Baalim.

11 And the LORD ſaid unto the children of Iſrael, Did not I deliver you from the Egyptians, and from the Amorites, from the children of Ammon, and from the Philiſtines?

12 The Zidonians alſo, and the Amalekites, and the Maonites did oppreſs you; and ye cried to me, and I delivered you out of their hand.

13 Yet ye have forſaken me, and ſerved other gods: wherefore I will deliver you no more.

14 Go and cry unto the gods which ye have choſen: let them deliver you in the time of your tribulation.

15 And the children of Iſrael ſaid unto the LORD, We have ſinned, do thou unto us whatſoever ſeemeth good unto thee; deliver us only, we pray thee, this day.

16 And they put away the ſtrange gods from among them, and ſerved the LORD: and his ſoul was grieved for the miſery of Iſrael.

17 Then the children of Ammon were gathered together, and encamped in Gilead: and the children of Iſrael aſſembled themſelves together, and encamped in Mizpeh.

whom we have read before, and his numerous ſons inherited ſome of the cities, which then fell to his lot (Num. c. xxxii. v. 40, 41;) and aſſiſted him as magiſtrates, riding from place to place, to adminiſter juſtice. We may reckon ſome of theſe years as the beſt times of Iſrael under their judges. For did princes rule over their own people in equity, and the fear of God, without moleſting other nations; and did the people live under them in godlineſs, and honeſty, hiſtorians would have but little to record. Yet we muſt take the eighteen years of Iſrael's apoſtacy from the latter part of Jair's government; during which the people ſeem gradually to have corrupted themſelves, and fallen under oppreſſion; and when Jair could not reſtrain them from idolatry, he was no no longer able to defend them from their enemies.

V. 6—9.] The Iſraelites having caſt off the worſhip of Jehovah, and multiplied their idols, were delivered into the hands of the Philiſtines on the weſt, and the Ammonites on the eaſt; who betwixt them cruſhed the people for eighteen years, but moſt terribly towards the cloſe of them.

V. 13. Wherefore, &c.] This is ſpoken after the manner of man, and ſhews their deſervings, the demands of God's juſtice, and the conſequence of impenitence: but ſuch threatenings always imply a reſerve of mercy for the penitent.

V. 15. Do thou, &c.] The foregoing meſſage was ſent by a prophet, or was delivered by the High Prieſt, when the congregation were aſſembled before the Lord: but the people with one conſent ſubmitted themſelves to the juſtice of God, yet hoping in his mercy; they left themſelves in his hands, craved deliverance from their enemies, and were the more earneſt in reformation. (2 Sam. c. xxiv. v. 14.)

V. 16. His ſoul was, &c.] Compaſſion as effectually moved the Lord to relieve his oppreſſed people; as a man is urged to aſſiſt a wretched fellow-creature, when he cannot otherwiſe help ſharing his diſtreſs: or as a father is diſpoſed to aſſiſt his ſuffering child.

V. 18. What man, &c.] The Lord did not as uſual, on this occaſion, expreſsly appoint them a deliverer; but he ſecretly directed, and openly confirmed their choice of one for themſelves.

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.

The removal of deſperate ſinners by a righteous God often makes way for reformation, and public tranquillity, and proves a great mercy to thoſe, who ſurvive. Man's carnal heart is prone to prefer the bondage of ſin, and ſatan, to the ſervice of God: but their preſent indulgence enſures future miſery; for every expectation of advantage from ſin, the world, and the friendſhip of wicked men, will enſure a diſtreſſing diſappointment. God is able to multiply men's puniſhments, according to the number of their iniquities, and idols. But there is hope, when, under temporal afflictions, ſinners cry unto the Lord for help, and lament their ungodlineſs, as well as their more ſcandalous tranſgreſſions. Yet the Lord might juſtly leave thoſe, who have forſaken him, to their wretched choice; he might upbraid them with former mercies, and their baſe returns; he might ſend them to their beloved idols, and luſts; he might mock at their calamity, and abſolutely refuſe to help them. This will be the deſperate condition of the wicked in another world; but here mercy can never be ſought in vain: yet, for the deeper humiliation of thoſe, who are but ſuperficially convinced; and to quicken thoſe, who are not duly in earneſt; the Lord will ſeem to ſhut up his loving kindneſs in diſpleaſure; he will upbraid them with their former ſins, and purſue them with his awful threatenings, and almoſt bring to conclude that their caſe is deſperate. Nevertheleſs he will keep them from deſperation: and when their prayers are rendered more fervent, their confeſſions more ingenuous, their ſelf-examination more diligent, their dependance more entire on divine mercy, and their forſaking of ſin more unreſerved, we may be ſure, that comfort, and deliverance are at hand. (Jer. c. xxxii. v. 18—20.) Let then the trembling ſinner, and the almoſt deſpairing backſlider ceaſe from inquiring about God's ſecret purpoſes, or expecting to extract hope from former experiences: let them not indulge deſpondency, or yield to heartleſs indolence: let them caſt themſelves upon the mercy of God our Saviour, patiently ſubmit to his ſevereſt chaſtiſement, humble themſelves more, and more under his hand; ſeek deliverance upon any terms from the powers of darkneſs; ſeparate themſelves as much as poſſible from ſin, and all occaſions of it; uſe all the means of grace diligently, and wait the Lord's time; and they ſhall certainly rejoice in his mercy. (Iſai. c. lv. v. 7, 8. Matt. c. xv. ver. 21—28.) And let all thoſe, who think they ſtand, take heed leſt they fall; and the Lord help us to cleave to him with full purpoſe of heart.

NOTES.

CHAP. XI.] V. 1. The ſon of an harlot, &c.] It ſeems that Jephthah was the ſon of a woman of bad character; "a ſtrange woman," either a foreigner, or an Iſraelite, who from the infamy of her conduct, was thus called; (Prov. c. v. ver. 3. c. vi. v. 24.) The law of Moſes forbad that the offspring of ſuch connexions ſhould enter into the congregation of the Lord; and the filling of any office in church, or ſtate ſeem eſpecially to be intended in that law; (Deut. c. xxiii. v. 2.) But the princes of Gilead, conſidering him as a man of approved courage, and conduct, either did not recollect that law, or thought that it might on this emergency be diſpenſed with; eſpecially as Jephthah had already, as is probable, begun to fight againſt the Ammonites, and was on that account entitled to the command; (c. x. v. 18.) And the Lord was pleaſed to confirm their choice of him; that they, who had made themſelves vile by their ſins, might be delivered from their enemies by one, who lay under ſo diſgraceful a ſtigma: and that Jephthah himſelf might be kept from being exalted above meaſure; when he conſidered himſelf as marked in the law of God with the ſame brand as the Ammonites, whom he had conquered.

V. 2. Gilead, &c.] This Gilead ſeems to have been a deſcendant of him, from whom the country derived it's name. Jephthah, as the ſon of an harlot, had no right to any ſhare in the inheritance; but he had not deſerved to be turned deſtitute, as if he had been a vagabond, or a malefactor. His brethren were probably ſome of the elders of Gilead; for he attributed his ill uſage to their hatred, (v. 7;) being of an enterprizing ſpirit, perhaps they ſuſpected him of ambitious deſigns.

V. 3. Vain men, &c.] A number of men of broken fortunes, and unſettled diſpoſitions joined themſelves to him, (1 Sam. c. xxii. v. 2:) it appears not that they attempted any thing improper: but made repriſals on thoſe nations, who oppreſſed Iſrael. In which way of life they learned hardineſs, boldneſs, and military ſkill; and Jeph-

8 And the elders of Gilead ſaid unto Jephthah, Therefore we turn again to thee now, that thou mayeſt go with us, and fight againſt the children of Ammon, and be our head over all the inhabitants of Gilead.

9 And Jephthah ſaid unto the elders of Gilead, If ye bring me home again to fight againſt the children of Ammon, and the LORD deliver them before me, ſhall I be your head?

10 And the elders of Gilead ſaid unto Jephthah, the LORD be witneſs between us, if we do not ſo according to thy words.

11 Then Jephthah went with the elders of Gilead, and the people made him head and captain over them: and Jephthah uttered all his words before the LORD in Mizpeh.

12 And Jephthah ſent meſſengers unto the king of the children of Ammon, ſaying, What haſt thou to do with me, that thou art come againſt me to fight in my land?

13 And the king of the children of Ammon anſwered unto the meſſengers of Jephthah, becauſe Iſrael took away my land when they came up out of Egypt, from Arnon even unto Jabbok, and unto Jordan: now therefore reſtore thoſe lands again peaceably.

14 And Jephthah ſent meſſengers again unto the king of the children of Ammon,

15 And ſaid unto him, Thus ſaith Jephthah, Iſrael took not away the land of Moab, nor the land of the children of Ammon:

16 But when Iſrael came up from Egypt, and walked through the wilderneſs unto the Red ſea, and came to Kadeſh;

17 Then Iſrael ſent meſſengers unto the king of Edom, ſaying, Let me, I pray thee, paſs through thy land: but the king of Edom would not hearken thereto. And in like manner they ſent unto the king of Moab; but he would not conſent: and Iſrael abode in Kadeſh.

18 Then they went along through the wilderneſs, and compaſſed the land of Edom, and the land of Moab, and came by the eaſt ſide of the land of Moab, and pitched on the other ſide of Arnon, but came not within the border of Moab: for Arnon was the border of Moab.

19 And Iſrael ſent meſſengers unto Sihon king of the Amorites, the king of Heſhbon; and Iſrael ſaid unto him, Let us paſs, we pray thee, through thy land unto my place.

20 But Sihon truſted not Iſrael to paſs through his coaſt: but Sihon gathered all his people together, and pitched in Jahaz, and fought againſt Iſrael.

21 And the LORD God of Iſrael delivered Sihon and all his people into the hand of Iſrael, and they ſmote them: ſo Iſrael poſſeſſed all the land of the Amorites, the inhabitants of that country.

22 And they poſſeſſed all the coaſts of the Amorites, from Arnon even unto Jabbok, and from the wilderneſs even unto Jordan.

23 So now, the LORD God of Iſrael hath diſpoſſeſſed the Amorites from before his people Iſrael, and ſhouldſt thou poſſeſs it?

24 Wilt not thou poſſeſs that which Chemoſh thy god giveth thee to poſſeſs? So thah thus acquired that reputation, which made way for his advancement: and being a godly man, we may ſuppoſe that he alſo inſtructed his followers in true religion.

V. 8. Therefore we turn, &c.] The elders acknowledged, that they had uſed him ill, and deſired to appoint him their captain, that they might make him ſome amends for their former injuſtice.

V. 11. And Jephthah uttered, &c.] Jephthah, before he undertook this important ſervice, ſought the Lord's direction, aſſiſtance, and bleſſing very particularly in fervent prayer, as one who would go forth in faith, and expected all his ſucceſs from God. The Mizpeh here mentioned was eaſt of Jordan, and was called Mizpeh of Gilead, (v. 29,) and Mizpeh of Moab, in contradiſtinction from another place of the ſame name, which lay weſt of Jordan.

V. 12. And Jephthah ſent, &c.] Perhaps by divine direction, he propoſed peace to the Ammonites before he declared war againſt them, according to the law of Moſes; (Deut. c. xx. v. 10, 11.)

V. 24. Wilt thou not, &c?] Jephthah did not allow Chemoſh to be really a God: but he ſpake to the Ammonites according to their notions; who were wont to aſcribe their ſucceſs to the aſſiſtance of this ſuppoſed deity. The whole of this meſſage ſhews that Jephthah had well ſtudied the hiſtorical part of the books of Moſes, (Num. c. xxi. v. 26—30.) His argument was very clear, and his demand very reaſonable; for he only required, that the Ammonites ſhould ceaſe to harraſs a people, who neither had injured, nor intended to injure them. Upon their refuſal the war became juſt, and neceſſary: and therefore he ſolemnly appealed to the Lord to judge betwixt Iſrael, and whomwhomſoever the LORD our God ſhall drive out from before us, them will we poſſeſs.

25 And now, art thou any thing better than Balak the ſon of Zippor, king of Moab? did he ever ſtrive againſt Iſrael, or did he ever fight againſt them, 26 While Iſrael dwelt in Heſhbon and her towns, and in Aroer and her towns, and in all the cities that be along by the coaſts of Arnon, three hundred years? why therefore did ye not recover them within that time?

27 Wherefore I have not ſinned againſt thee, but thou doeſt me wrong to war againſt me: the LORD the Judge be judge this day between the children of Iſrael and the children of Ammon.

28 Howbeit, the king of the children of Ammon hearkened not unto the words of Jephthah which he ſent him.

29 Then the Spirit of the LORD came upon Jephthah; and he paſſed over Gilead and Manaſſeh, and paſſed over Mizpeh of Gilead, and from Mizpeh of Gilead he paſſed over unto the children of Ammon.

30 And Jephthah vowed a vow unto the LORD, and ſaid, If thou ſhalt without fail deliver the children of Ammon into mine hands, 31 Then it ſhall be, that whatſoever cometh forth of the doors of my houſe to meet me, when I return in peace from the children of Ammon, ſhall ſurely be the LORD's, and I will offer it up for a burnt-offering.

32 So Jephthah paſſed over unto the children of Ammon to fight againſt them; and the LORD delivered them into his hands.

33 And he ſmote them from Aroer, even till thou come to Minnith, even twenty cities, and unto the plain of the vineyards, with a very great ſlaughter. Thus the children of Ammon were ſubdued before the children of Iſrael.

34 And Jephthah came to Mizpeh unto his houſe, and, behold, his daughter came out to meet him with timbrels and with dances: and ſhe was his only child: beſide her he had neither ſon nor daughter.

35 And it came to paſs, when he ſaw her, that he rent his clothes, and ſaid, Alas, my daughter! thou haſt brought me very low, and thou art one of them that trouble me: for I have opened my mouth unto the LORD, and I cannot go back.

36 And ſhe ſaid unto him, My father, if thou haſt opened thy mouth unto the LORD, do to me according to that which hath prothe Ammonites, and to decide in favour of thoſe, who had the more righteous cauſe. Every declaration of war implies ſuch an appeal; but it is ſeldom made upon ſuch good grounds, and in the ſame ſpirit of humble faith.

V. 30, 31.] Perhaps Jephthah's army was ſmall, and his courage was ready to fail through unbelief, and the proſpect of imminent danger; and therefore he joined a ſolemn vow to his earneſt prayers. But the vow itſelf was evidently raſh and improper. The Lord had preſcribed the animals, that were to be offered in the different kinds of ſacrifices. There were alſo different kinds of vows, and particular regulations of them. It was therefore very wrong to vow, that whatſoever firſt came forth of the doors of his houſe, "ſhould be the Lord's, and be offered for a "burnt-offering:" A dog, cat, or other unclean animal might firſt have met him; but it was likely that one of his family would; which indeed he ſeems to have expected. Not being ſo well acquainted with the preceptive part of the books of Moſes, as with the hiſtorical, he ſeems to have confounded in his mind the ſeveral laws concerning ſacrifices, and vows; and eſpecially to have had ſome confuſed idea of the law, and cuſtom of devoting perſons, or things to utter deſtruction; (Note Lev. c. xxvii. v. 28, 29:) which being eſpecially intended for the enemies of God, and things abuſed to idolatry, &c; he erroneouſly applied to innocent perſons, and Iſraelites, over whoſe lives he could have no power, either in his public, or private character: and he ſuppoſed that the execution of this vow was by offering them for a burnt-offering. And it appears, that his judgment was not only confuſed through ignorance of the divine law; but that it was alſo perverted by a too great familiarity with the cuſtoms of the ſurrounding idolaters, who, on ſuch emergencies, frequently vowed, and offered human ſacrifices; ſuppoſing them acceptable to the Deity, in proportion to the pain which they occaſioned to themſelves.

V. 34—40.] Many writers have endeavoured to ſhew that Jephthah did not ſacrifice his daughter, but that he ſhut her up in perpetual ſolitude, and virginity: and they urge in favour of that opinion, that "ſhe bewailed her vir-"ginity," not her death; and that "ſhe knew no man:" and they ſuppoſe that the daughters of Iſrael went to condole with her four times in the year, and not to lament her death. But it is not likely that it ſhould become a cuſtom, not only for her acquaintance, or the daughters of Gilead, but for thoſe of all Iſrael, thus to flock to her four times in the year: and we never read of either law, or cuſtom in the Old Teſtament for any perſon to be devoted to the Lord by perpetual celibacy: on the contrary, marriage was deemed ſo honourable in all, and bearing children, in the women; that to die unmarried, or childleſs was deemed diſgraceful, as well as a misfortune; (Luke c. i. v. 25:) which ſeems to have occaſioned the expreſſions above-mentioned. As her death was ſuppoſed to be for the glory of God, and the good of Iſrael, ſo pious a perſon, as ſhe evidently ceeded out of thy mouth; forasmuch as the LORD hath taken vengeance for thee of thine enemies, even of the children of Ammon.

37 And she said unto her father, Let this thing be done for me; Let me alone two months, that I may go up and down upon the mountains, and bewail my virginity, I and my fellows.

38 And he said, Go. And he sent her away for two months: and she went with her companions, and bewailed her virginity upon the mountains.

39 And it came to pass at the end of two months, that she returned unto her father, who did with her according to his vow which he had vowed: and she knew no man. And it was a custom in Israel, 40 That the daughters of Israel went yearly to lament the daughter of Jephthah the Gileadite four days in a year.

was, would not bewail on that account; but, according to the sentiment of all the Israelitish women, she would bewail that she died unmarried, and childless, especially as her father had no other child, nor any prospect of posterity: and had she been shut up in perpetual solitude, she need not have requested two months, to bewail her virginity, for she had all her remaining life to do it in. It would be very wrong to decide positively in so controverted a case, which at last is more matter of curiosity, than of edification: it however appears to me most probable, that Jephthah, did offer his daughter as a burnt-offering, perhaps induced thereto by a misapprehension of Abraham's being commanded to sacrifice his son Isaac. In this he acted conscientiously, and he shewed his readiness to part with any thing for the glory of God: but his conscience was erroneous, and his error arose from his ignorance of the Scriptures. Had he been properly instructed, he would doubtless have repented of making such a rash vow, and have offered a sin-offering, with his thank-offerings for his victory, at the altar of Shiloh: and not have added one fault to another; in treating his own child, who appears to have been a most dutiful, amiable, and pious young woman; who came out with songs of praise to the Lord for his goodness to Israel, and congratulations of Jephthah's success against their enemies; as if she had been the accursed enemy of God, and of his people: much less would he have offered so horrid a sacrifice to Jehovah, who had expressly forbidden them, as "an abomination, which he "hated;" (Deut. c. xii. v. 31.) Some account and extenuation of the affair may be given, but he cannot be vindicated in it. When Saul had rashly brought Jonathan under the curse of utter destruction, the people rescued him, and did right, for Saul, not Jonathan, was the transgressor; and the whole transaction shews how little the people were acquainted with, or governed by the law of God.

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.

As the sins of parents so often occasion disgrace, and hardship to their children; this should unite with higher motives to induce men to govern their passions according to the law of God. Activity, capacity, prudence, and piety will often render a man superior to all the disadvantages of his birth; and the hardships of his youth will prepare him for the services, of his future life. We should not injure, or despise the meanest person; for we know not how soon we may supplicate their assistance. It is especially dangerous to mal-treat the servants of God; and many who do so in prosperity, in seasons of terror, and distress, are glad to seek the benefit of their protection, counsel, and prayers: and in all ages, they, whom God hath most honoured, and employed, have previously been treated even by those, to whom they afterwards were most useful, with contempt, and injustice. And none ought to be discouraged, or surprised by it; as they are dealt with in the manner that Joseph, Moses, Jephthah, and David were; nay in this especially are followers of the Son of God, who endured the contradiction of sinners against himself, before he was exalted to be a Prince, and Saviour. Thus also the Lord is continually treated: men neglect his service, despise his authority, and rob him of his glory; yet in their distress they apply unto him for to save them. But as he forgives without upbraidings the penitent sinner, so ought his people to behave to their enemies: nor will Jesus himself save any who do not consent, that he should reign over them; and his disciples, also should seek to reform those, whose temporal distresses they relieve. Those undertakings are like to prosper, and those public situations to be well filled, respecting which the Lord is consulted and trusted in simple faith, prayer, and conscientious obedience. They, who possess the most courageous faith, will be the most disposed for peace, and the readiest to make advances, and concessions in order thereto: and when rapacity, and ambition, cloking their designs under the mask of equity; (for though few men love justice, most would be thought to do so;) render such endeavours unavailing; having shewn that we would, if possibly, live peaceable with all men, we may safely leave the matter with the Lord. And as the Judge of all the earth, he will award to those who delight in contention, public or private, a recompense meet for their turbulent dispositions, and evil deeds. As far as we are acquainted with the word of God, we shall find a clear light shine upon our paths, discovering to us the safe and happy way: but, even if we act uprightly, yet are ignorant of the Scriptures, we shall fall into lamentable mistakes, to the dishonour of God, and the great discomfort of our souls. This should incite us to a diligent study of the whole word of God, that we may be completed in the knowledge of the will of the Lord: and this should remind ministers to be exact, copious, and frequent, in discussing practical subjects; that they, who are disposed to perform their duty, may not be left to sin through ignorance or mistake. How checkered are the scenes of this mortal life! Sorrow treads upon the heels of mirth; and our choicest comforts, often through our own unwatchfulness, become the occasions of our severest trials: but we need the less wonder at this, when we observe, how defective the characters of the best of men are; and how the best actions are often connected with such, as are utterly unwarrantable. A chearful mind, diſpoſed to be grateful unto God, and to endure any thing for his honour, and out of love to his people; and a ready ſubmiſſion to parental authority, are ſuch beautiful bloſſoms, in young perſons, and promiſe ſuch fruit in riper years; that we muſt regret to ſee them blaſted by premature death; and lament that they, who have ſo well performed the inferior duties, are not ſpared to be uſeful in the more important relations of the married ſtate. But though their death is a loſs to ſociety, they are themſelves no loſers; for the preparation for an uſeful life will render death alſo comfortable, in whatever way, they may be called hence. In lawful vows, when we have opened our "mouth unto the Lord, we "may not go back;" we ſhould therefore be very conſiderate in forming them, that we may not involve ourſelves, or others, in diſtreſs, perplexities, or temptations: but nothing can oblige us to that which is in itſelf unlawful. With this ſingle exception we cannot do too much to expreſs our gratitude for mercies received, or part with too much for the glory of God. Though we cannot approve of the conduct of Jephthah; we may well admire, and imitate his reſolution, and ſelf-denial, and ſtill more thoſe of his daughter. Let us not then forget the love of the Father in giving his Son, or of the Son in giving himſelf a real, and acceptable ſacrifice for the ſins of rebellious man. Bought with ſuch a price, let us preſent our bodies, and ſouls for a living ſacrifice unto God; and look forward with heartfelt ſatisfaction to that country, where ignorance, error, ſin, or ſorrow ſhall be known no more: where the believer's victory will be complete, his triumphs unalloyed, and unſullied, and his hallelujahs, uninterrupted, and eternal.

NOTES.

CHAP. XII.] V. 1—6. And the men of Ephraim, &c.] (Note, c. viii. v. 1.) Jephthah was a Manaſſite, and the Ephraimites had the ſame quarrel with him, that they had formerly had with Gideon: but their reſentment vented itſelf in a more outrageous, and abuſive manner. We cannot find much to blame in Jephthah's anſwer: but it was not ſo conciliating as that of Gideon had been. They had it ſeems been ſent to, and would not come, and their anger was therefore extremely unreaſonable: but inſtead of being ſatisfied with Jephthah's arguments, they proceeded to aſſault him; and irritated the Gileadites by abuſive language; as if they had been the refuſe of the deſcendants of Joſeph, who had been baniſhed for their crimes beyond Jordan. But the Gileadites took a moſt ſevere revenge upon them, for getting poſſeſſion of the fords of Jordan, they ſlew great numbers of them, when indeed they were fugitives; having artfully deviſed to diſtinguiſh them by their provincial pronunciation of the Hebrew word, which ſignifies a river. How far Jephthah concurred in this cruel revenge cannot be determined; but it was entirely unjuſtifiable, and exceedingly weakened the common cauſe of Iſrael.

V. 7. Judged Iſrael, &c.] It ſeems after this tranſaction, all Iſrael quietly ſubmitted to Jephthah, as their judge: but he lived but a ſhort time, and ſaw little comfort after his advancement.

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.

Whilſt pride prevails in the heart, diſcord, and contention will proceed from it: and when inſolence eſcapes chaſtiſement, it often grows more abuſive. But ſuch perſons will at length meet with thoſe, who are as ready to revenge, as others have been to endure their affronts. Nothing is more fooliſh than ſcurrility: without any advantage it rouſes the moſt implacable reſentment, and prepares the way for bloodſhed. Thus the tongue, "that "unruly evil, ſets on fire the whole courſe of nature, and

2 And there was a certain man of Zorah, of the family of the Danites, whoſe name was Manoah: and his wife was barren, and bare not.

3 And the angel of the LORD appeared unto the woman, and ſaid unto her, Behold now, thou art barren, and beareſt not: but thou ſhalt conceive, and bear a ſon.

4 Now therefore beware, I pray thee, and drink not wine nor ſtrong drink, and eat not any unclean thing:

5 For, lo, thou ſhalt conceive, and bear a ſon; and no razor ſhall come on his head:

" is ſet on fire of hell." But they, who are moſt ready to boaſt, hector, and revile, generally prove cowardly in real danger; and might have their own reproaches, with great propriety, retorted upon them; but that Chriſtians muſt not render railing for railing. In the origin, or the event of contention, both parties are commonly to blame: even good men cannot always bear the ingratitude, and ill-treatment of thoſe, whom they have ſerved, with proper calmneſs: nor have all of them equally the talent of turning away wrath by a ſoft anſwer; and in a juſt cauſe, we are apt to be hurried on by our paſſions to unwarrantable lengths: for " the beginning of ſtrife is like the letting " forth of water, therefore let us leave off contention " before it be meddled with." Yet even in ſuch lamentable ſcenes, the Lord is righteous, and proſecutes his ſettled plan of reſiſting, and abaſing the proud. The ſplendour of men's exploits, and the excellency of their characters often increaſe the number, and rage of their enemies: nor need they be ſurpriſed, if they, who ought to thank, commend, reward, and congratulate them upon their ſucceſs in dangerous attempts to promote the public welfare, ſhould abuſe, and hate them, and threaten their deſtruction. None is prepared to do good in ſuch a world as this, who hath not learned to expect, and accept of evil, as his recompenſe from man; and to perſevere in hope of a better recompenſe from a gracious God. No contentions are ſo bitter, as thoſe, which ariſe betwixt brethren, or betwixt rivals for honour, and precedency. What need have we then to watch and pray againſt envy, pride, ambition, and thoſe evil tempers, which ſet the world as it were in flames, from age to age, and which by horrid carnage gratify that firſt great murderer the devil? Alas! that ſo many Shibboleths ſhould be invented to divide the church alſo; to be the watchword of angry diſputants, and the pretext for profeſſed diſciples of Chriſt abuſing, and perſecuting each other! May the Lord incline all his people " to follow " after the things, which make for peace, and things, " whereby one may edify another!" Many renowned and envied perſons die of broken hearts on account of perſonal, and domeſtic affections: ſo that their inward anguiſh muſt ſoften their bittereſt enemies into compaſſion, if they knew the whole. The Lord is to be acknowledged, in giving domeſtic comforts; as well as ſubmitted to, when he withholds, or withdraws them: but increaſing families bring increaſing cares, and duties, in inſtructing, providing for, and ſettling children in a ſuitable manner; which cannot be neglected without guilt, and painful conſequences.—In fine the happieſt life of individuals, and the happieſt ſtate of ſociety, is that, which affords the feweſt remarkable events. To live in credit, and quiet, to be peacefully uſeful in our circle, to poſſeſs a clear conſcience, and to enjoy communion with God our Saviour whilſt we live; and to die at peace with God and man, forms the ſubſtance of all that a wiſe man can deſire.

AND the children of Iſrael did evil again in the ſight of the LORD; and the LORD delivered them into the hand of the Philiſtines forty years.

2 And there was a certain man of Zorah, of the family of the Danites, whoſe name was Manoah: and his wife was barren, and bare not.

3 And the angel of the LORD appeared unto the woman, and ſaid unto her, Behold now, thou art barren, and beareſt not: but thou ſhalt conceive, and bear a ſon.

4 Now therefore beware, I pray thee, and drink not wine nor ſtrong drink, and eat not any unclean thing:

5 For, lo, thou ſhalt conceive, and bear a ſon; and no razor ſhall come on his head:

" is ſet on fire of hell." But they, who are moſt ready to boaſt, hector, and revile, generally prove cowardly in real danger; and might have their own reproaches, with great propriety, retorted upon them; but that Chriſtians muſt not render railing for railing. In the origin, or the event of contention, both parties are commonly to blame: even good men cannot always bear the ingratitude, and ill-treatment of thoſe, whom they have ſerved, with proper calmneſs: nor have all of them equally the talent of turning away wrath by a ſoft anſwer; and in a juſt cauſe, we are apt to be hurried on by our paſſions to unwarrantable lengths: for " the beginning of ſtrife is like the letting " forth of water, therefore let us leave off contention " before it be meddled with." Yet even in ſuch lamentable ſcenes, the Lord is righteous, and proſecutes his ſettled plan of reſiſting, and abaſing the proud. The ſplendour of men's exploits, and the excellency of their characters often increaſe the number, and rage of their enemies: nor need they be ſurpriſed, if they, who ought to thank, commend, reward, and congratulate them upon their ſucceſs in dangerous attempts to promote the public welfare, ſhould abuſe, and hate them, and threaten their deſtruction. None is prepared to do good in ſuch a world as this, who hath not learned to expect, and accept of evil, as his recompenſe from man; and to perſevere in hope of a better recompenſe from a gracious God. No contentions are ſo bitter, as thoſe, which ariſe betwixt brethren, or betwixt rivals for honour, and precedency. What need have we then to watch and pray againſt envy, pride, ambition, and thoſe evil tempers, which ſet the world as it were in flames, from age to age, and which by horrid carnage gratify that firſt great murderer the devil? Alas! that ſo many Shibboleths ſhould be invented to divide the church alſo; to be the watchword of angry diſputants, and the pretext for profeſſed diſciples of Chriſt abuſing, and perſecuting each other! May the Lord incline all his people " to follow " after the things, which make for peace, and things, " whereby one may edify another!" Many renowned and envied perſons die of broken hearts on account of perſonal, and domeſtic affections: ſo that their inward anguiſh muſt ſoften their bittereſt enemies into compaſſion, if they knew the whole. The Lord is to be acknowledged, in giving domeſtic comforts; as well as ſubmitted to, when he withholds, or withdraws them: but increaſing families bring increaſing cares, and duties, in inſtructing, providing for, and ſettling children in a ſuitable manner; which cannot be neglected without guilt, and painful conſequences.—In fine the happieſt life of individuals, and the happieſt ſtate of ſociety, is that, which affords the feweſt remarkable events. To live in credit, and quiet, to be peacefully uſeful in our circle, to poſſeſs a clear conſcience, and to enjoy communion with God our Saviour whilſt we live; and to die at peace with God and man, forms the ſubſtance of all that a wiſe man can deſire.

for the child shall be a Nazarite unto God from the womb; and he shall begin to deliver Israel out of the hand of the Philistines.

6 Then the woman came, and told her husband, saying, A man of God came unto me, and his countenance was like the countenance of an angel of God, very terrible: but I asked him not whence he was, neither told he me his name.

7 But he said unto me, Behold, thou shalt conceive, and bear a son; and now drink no wine nor strong drink, neither eat any unclean thing: for the child shall be a Nazarite to God from the womb to the day of his death.

8 Then Manoah entreated the LORD, and said, O my Lord, let the man of God which thou didst send come again unto us, and teach us what we shall do unto the child that shall be born.

9 And God hearkened to the voice of Manoah; and the angel of God came again unto the woman as she sat in the field: but Manoah her husband was not with her.

10 And the woman made haste, and ran, and shewed her husband, and said unto him, Behold, the man hath appeared unto me, that came unto me the other day.

11 And Manoah arose, and went after his wife, and came to the man, and said unto him, Art thou the man that spakest unto the woman? And he said, I am.

12 And Manoah said, Now let thy words come to pass: how shall we order the child? and how shall we do unto him?

13 And the angel of the LORD said unto Manoah, Of all that I said unto the woman, let her beware.

14 She may not eat of any thing that cometh of the vine, neither let her drink wine or strong drink, nor eat any unclean thing: all that I commanded her let her observe.

15 And Manoah said unto the angel of the LORD, I pray thee, let us detain thee until we shall have made ready a kid for thee.

16 And the angel of the LORD said unto Manoah, Though thou detain me, I will not eat of thy bread; and if thou wilt offer a burnt-offering, thou must offer it unto the LORD: for Manoah knew not that he was an angel of the LORD.

17 And Manoah said unto the angel of the LORD, What is thy name, that, when thy sayings come to pass, we may do thee honour?

18 And the angel of the LORD said unto him, Why askest thou thus after my name, seeing it is secret?

19 So Manoah took a kid, with a meat-offering, and offered it upon a rock unto the dead body, &c, was broken, and to be begun over again. But Samson was devoted by the Lord's express appointment all the days of his life; and it seems probable that the nature of this separation was not so strict, as the voluntary vow. The infant in the womb, and at the breast would subsist upon the same nourishment, with the mother, and therefore she was required to observe the same rules, during that period: she would also be led to expect something extraordinary, from a child whose birth was attended by such observances. (1 Sam. c. i. v. 11. Luke c. i. v. 15.)

V. 6. A man of God, &c.] That is, an holy prophet, one peculiarly devoted to, and honoured of God. This supposed man of God is said to have been "like an angel;" by which it is evident that angels, as they actually appeared to the people of God, were not distinguishable in general from prophets, except by a more venerable appearance: though in the emblematic description of them in some parts of Scripture, they are represented with wings. Some attention to this circumstance should be paid by those designers, or painters, who would preserve historical truth in their performances.

V. 8.] Manoah doubted not the performance of the promise, which had been made to his wife in his absence; but only prayed that the same supposed prophet might be sent to instruct them in their duty relative thereto. This was the genuine exercise of faith.

V. 16. Though thou detain, &c.] Manoah, not knowing who this messenger of God was, seems to have doubted whether he should prepare him a banquet, or a sacrifice; (c. vi. v. 18—21:) to this hesitation this answer was directed: "for Manoah knew not that he was an angel of "the Lord;" this seems to imply, that had he known, who it was, the thought of offering a burnt-offering, would not have been improper. But as he took him only for a man, it arose from ignorance, and was very sinful: the same would have been equally true, had he been the greatest created angel. (Matt. c. xix. v. 17.)

V. 18. Secret.] Or wonderful; the same name that is given to the Messiah by the prophet. (Isaiah, c. ix. v. 6. Gen. c. xxxii. v. 29.) In consequence of this intimation Manoah, though no priest, offered his burnt-offering, &c, upon a rock, where some rude altar was hastily prepared; and he was accepted in so doing: probably fire from the rock consumed the sacrifice; (c. vi. v. 21.) He offered it to Jehovah, and he did wondrously; (for the words "the "angel" are not in the original,) according to the meaning of his name "wonderful;" for in the presence of Manoah, and his wife, he ascended towards heaven with the flame of

LORD:

LORD: and the angel did wondrously; and Manoah and his wife looked on.

20 For it came to pass, when the flame went up toward heaven from off the altar, that the angel of the LORD ascended in the flame of the altar: and Manoah and his wife looked on it, and fell on their faces to the ground.

21 (But the angel of the LORD did no more appear to Manoah and to his wife.) Then Manoah knew that he was an angel of the LORD.

22 And Manoah said unto his wife, We shall surely die, because we have seen God.

23 But his wife said unto him, If the LORD were pleased to kill us, he would not have received a burnt-offering and a meat-offering at our hands; neither would he have shewed us all these things, nor would, as at this time, have told us such things as these.

24 And the woman bare a son, and called his name Samson; and the child grew, and the LORD blessed him.

25 And the Spirit of the Lord began to move him at times in the camp of Dan, between Zorah and Eshtaol.

fire from off the altar, and by that Manoah knew him to be the angel Jehovah, which occasioned his terror, lest death should be the consequence of having seen God. From these circumstances the reader will easily collect, whom Manoah supposed the angel to have been.

V. 23. If the Lord, &c.] Manoah's wife being, at that time at least, the stronger in faith, encouraged her husband, by the consideration that their accepted sacrifice, united with the promises, which had been given, to assure them of the Lord's favour; for had he intended their destruction, he would not have done those wondrous works, or have spoken those gracious words unto them. The revelation of the gospel, the appointment of divine ordinances, as means of grace, the favouring us with the written, or preached word, and the stirring up our minds to pay regard thereto, are all hopeful tokens of special love. But when we are taught above all things to desire the salvation of Christ, and to fear coming short of it: where we take delight in his ordinances, and commandments, and experimentally know that our prayers are heard, and answered, we may safely, and confidently infer, that the Lord would not have done such things for us, and shewn such things to us, if he had meant our destruction, nay if he had not appointed us unto salvation. (Psalm lxvi. v. 16—20. 1 Thess. c. v. v. 9.)

V. 25. In the camp of Dan, &c.] Probably that tribe, which lay next the Philistines land, was encamped to preserve their country from their depredations: amongst them Samson discovered at times such extraordinary courage, strength, and activity, as evidently proceeded from the Spirit of the Lord.

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.

It is our duty to prevent sin, and misery, as far as we can, and our honest endeavours for that purpose will be accepted of God, whether we succeed or not: but his judgments are a great deep, and for infinitely wise reasons he is pleased to permit their entrance, and to over-rule them to kind and merciful purposes. We ought to make haste to keep God's commandments; but to wait patiently for his performance of his promises: his purposes will gradually unfold, his plan will in due season be completed: and when we see the whole, the wisdom, justice, and goodness of it, will be more bright than the noon-day sun. We may in the mean time be thankful that the Lord hath a remnant in all ages; and though they have trials, which are unknown to, unpitied by, or incapable of relief from, their fellow-creatures: yet they have no sorrows, which the Lord doth not pity; none which he will not remove in the best time, and manner: and he will by various means discover to them the kind notice he takes of their troubles, for their support, until he sees good to relieve them. Retirement is always friendly to communion with God, and his people are never less alone, than when alone. Every promise of God implies a correspondent duty, and in expecting the performance of the one, we must not neglect the other: and those, who are peculiarly honoured of God, must be proportionably ready to deny themselves for his sake. If parents desire their children to be mortified to fleshly lusts, and devoted to God, they should be careful to be so themselves. The parental duty commences even from the child's conception, and every thing should be attended to which may conduce to it's welfare of body, and soul: prayer should be offered in it's behalf; for an immortal creature is brought into existence, which will be happy or miserable for ever; and it is conceived in sin, and cannot be holy or happy, without the special grace of God, and an interest in the great Redeemer. We need also divine direction in respect of our children's education, lest any of the rules of God's word should be forgotten, mistaken, or neglected; that being trained up in the nurture and admonition of the Lord, there may be a well-grounded hope of their becoming useful to the church, and to the world. Happy is it, when married persons possess unreserved confidence in each other, and can converse freely together concerning their spiritual experiences; that they may have the benefit of each others counsel, and prayers: (Eccles. c. iv. ver. 9—12:) the one may suggest hints, and encouragements, which did not occur to the other; and they, who at one time, or in one respect are the weakest, may at other times, and in other respects prove the strongest, and the wisest.—When we desire to know, that we may do the will of God, we may pray for instruction with the most unshaken assurance of it's being granted; (James, c. i. v. 5, 6:) but perhaps he may see good to teach us by means of our inferiors; and we should be ready to receive instruction in that humiliating manner. And true spiritual knowledge, grace, and consolation, always excite desires, and dictate prayers, for further communications, and displays of God's glory to our souls. They, whom he honours, as instruments of good to us, we should honour likewise, yet not in any way derogatory to the glory of the Lord himself. But hospitality without grudging to those, who love his name, and a readiness to devote our substance to his glory, are always an ornament to the profession of godliness. In our best meant actions we are prone to forget or mistake the truths, and precepts of God's word, and need reminding of them: and a vain curiosity often supplants our proper attention to the plain practical parts of Scripture, especially those, which relate to our present duty: but we should be as willing to be ignorant of what the Lord is pleased to conceal, as willing to receive whatever he is pleased to teach us; and many of our prayers are most profitably answered, by being denied. The name of our Lord is wonderful, and secret, because incomprehensible: but by his wonderful works he makes himself known, as far as our instruction, and encouragement require it; and further knowledge would only puff us up with self-conceit: his chief display of himself is in the person of Jesus Christ, his co-equal Son, who, having offered on earth one sacrifice for our sins, and being risen from the dead, and ascended into heaven, presents with acceptance our spiritual sacrifices, when offered through faith in his name. Happy are we, when our hearts, and affections ascend, whither the Saviour is gone before: we may then with pleasure, and admiration contemplate the wonders of redeeming love, and every discovery of his glory, will awe our souls into deeper reverence, and humiliation before him. This satan will sometimes attempt to convert into terror, and discouragement, whilst we compare his holiness, and majesty, with our meanness, and pollution. But he will not cast off those, who are humbly determined if they must perish to perish supplicating his mercy: having spared them when enemies, and taught them to value his salvation, he will answer their prayers, dispel their fears, and fulfil his largest promises; for which blessing they should wait with patient faith. When children possess in health the use of their limbs, senses, and understandings, parents have abundant cause for gratitude: but most of all, when they give early indications, that the Holy Spirit is working upon their tender minds, and preparing them for the service of God. This let us in the first place desire, seek, and pray for; and may this blessing be widely bestowed upon the rising generation!

NOTES.

CHAP. XIV.] V. 4. Knew not that it was of the Lord, &c.] Many think that Samson contracted this marriage by special direction from the Lord: such marriages not being immoral in themselves, but forbidden on account of their pernicious consequences: (Hos. c. i. v. 2, 3.) That by intimation from God, he thus sought occasion against the Philistines: and shewed his respect to his parents by asking their concurrence; who opposed his marriage as long, as "they knew not that it was of the Lord." The words (v. 3.) translated, "she pleaseth me well," may be rendered, "the matter is right," and be considered as an intimation, that it was from God; upon which they consented, and went with him. This transaction was a type of Christ's espousing the church of the Gentiles, according to the good pleasure of the Father. But perhaps the expression only means, that it pleased God to leave Samson to follow his own inclinations, intending in his infinite wisdom to educe good from his misconduct, and his parents consented, because he was bent upon it. However his example is not recorded for our imitation.

N. B. The chronology from Exodus to the building of Solomon's temple, being four hundred and eighty years, is here computed upon the following obvious, though not certain scheme: fifty-seven years were spent in the wilderness, and under Joshua: to these are added the number of years assigned to each judge; with a supposed coincidence betwixt Jair in Gilead, and Tola in Canaan (c. 10;) for which thirteen years are allowed; and another betwixt Samson and Eli of about six years: this leaves sixty years from the death of Eli to the commencement of David's reign. As this seemed the most probable conjecture I could frame for this obscure period, I date the whole according to it, and only mention it on that account.

V. 5, 6. To the vineyards of Timnath, &c.] Samson when at a distance from his parents, was assaulted by, and tho' unarmed, easily slew a young strong lion; because "the "Spirit of the Lord came mightily upon him," and he mentioned not the extraordinary exploit to his parents. This was upon him, and he rent him as he would have rent a kid, and he had nothing in his hand: but he told not his father or his mother what he had done.

7 And he went down, and talked with the woman; and ſhe pleaſed Samſon well.

8 And after a time he returned to take her, and he turned aſide to ſee the carcaſe of the lion: and behold, there was a ſwarm of bees and honey in the carcaſe of the lion.

9 And he took thereof in his hands, and went on eating, and came to his father and mother, and he gave them, and they did eat: but he told not them that he had taken the honey out of the carcaſe of the lion.

10 So his father went down unto the woman: and Samſon made there a feaſt; for ſo uſed the young men to do.

11 And it came to paſs, when they ſaw him, that they brought thirty companions to be with him.

12 And Samſon ſaid unto them, I will now put forth a riddle unto you; if ye can certainly declare it me within the ſeven days of the feaſt, and find it out, then I will give you thirty ſheets and thirty change of garments:

13 But if ye cannot declare it me, then ſhall ye give me thirty ſheets and thirty change of garments. And they ſaid unto him, Put forth thy riddle, that we may hear it.

14 And he ſaid unto them, out of the eater came forth meat, and out of the ſtrong came forth ſweetneſs. And they could not in three days expound the riddle.

15 And it came to paſs on the ſeventh day, that they ſaid unto Samſon's wife, Entice thy huſband, that he may declare unto us the riddle, leſt we burn thee and thy fa-an earneſt of his victories over the Philiſtines, not by human might, or power, but by the Spirit of the Lord. David in like manner ſlew a lion, and a bear, before he killed Goliath, and ſubdued the enemies of Iſrael: and Jeſus Chriſt in the wilderneſs, ere he entered upon his public miniſtry; and on the croſs, previous to his aſcenſion into glory, overcame the devil, that roaring lion, that goeth about ſeeking whom he may devour.

V. 8, 9.] By the ſpecial providence of God a ſwarm of bees had ſettled, and collected honey in the carcaſe of the lion; which was a moſt unlikely place for that purpoſe; being both inconvenient and offenſive to that delicate inſect, which draws honey from the moſt odoriferous flowers, and plants. This Samſon found, when he turned aſide to ſee the carcaſe, and perhaps to repeat his thanks for his deliverance.

V. 12—14.] When Samſon, in conformity to cuſtom celebrated his marriage feaſt, the Philiſtines brought him thirty companions, pretending reſpect, but probably placing them as a watch upon him, being aware of his great ſtrength. To prevent a worſe uſe of their time, Samſon propoſed his riddle as a trial of ingenuity, and a wager with each of them, of a ſheet, ſhirt, or other linen garment, and a change of raiment of all ſorts, that they could not reſolve it. The riddle, in its literal purport, meant no more, than that he had got honey, for food, and pleaſure from the lion, which in it's ſtrength, and fury was prepared to devour him. Yet this explanation of the riddle may be interpreted as containing another riddle of more importance, and more hard to be underſtood, except by the teaching of God—The victory of Chriſt over ſatan, by means of his humiliation, agonies, and death; and the exaltation that followed to him, the glory that redounded to the Father, and the ſpiritual advantages, which thence accrue to his people, ſeem immediately typified thereby. The entrance of ſin, the fall of man, and the ruin of the human race, through the malice of ſatan will iſſue in his deeper miſery, in God's greater glory, and in the increaſed felicity of all the redeemed, and of all holy creatures to all eternity. The perſecutions of the church have promoted it's purity, and proſperity. The trials, conflicts, and temptations of God's people, are productive of holineſs, and comfort to their ſouls in this world, and work for them an exceeding weight of glory in the next. Even the remains of indwelling ſin, and the very falls of real believers, become occaſions to them of deeper humility, more ſimple dependance on, and ardent love for the Saviour, more admiring gratitude to God, more compaſſion for their fellow ſinners, more fitneſs for many kinds of ſervice on earth, and greater meetneſs for the occupations of the redeemed in glory. And if any abuſe this ſacred truth, let them know, that they are not concerned in it; for upright ſouls are alwas rendered more watchful, humble, diligent, ſimple, compaſſionate, and fervent in prayer, by every falſe ſtep they make: at leaſt no others give evidence that they are believers. And even death that devouring monſter, that king of terrors, being robbed of his ſting, and ſtripped of his horror, tranſmits the ſoul to the realms of bliſs, and will ere long reſtore the body incorruptible immortal and glorious, to partake of endleſs felicity. In theſe, and many other ſenſes, "out of the eater comes "forth meat, and out of the ſtrong ſweetneſs."

V. 15.] The barbarity, inſolence, and ſelfiſhneſs of this conduct illuſtrate the miſery of Iſrael's bondage under ſuch tyrants. Mr. Henry notes, "That they ought not "to lay wagers, who cannot bear to loſe with better tem-"per:" we may add, that ſuch paſſions, and implacable reſentments are the common effects of affronted pride, and diſappointed covetouſneſs, in every kind, and degree of gaming: which is a good reaſon for entirely avoiding it. The ſeventh day here mentioned ſeems to have been the ſeventh day of the week, and the fourth of the feaſt:

ther's houſe with fire: have ye called us to take that we have? is it not ſo?

16 And Samſon's wife wept before him, and ſaid, Thou doſt but hate me, and loveſt me not: thou haſt put forth a riddle unto the children of my people, and haſt not told it me. And he ſaid unto her, Behold, I have not told it my father nor my mother, and ſhall I tell it thee?

17 And ſhe wept before him the ſeven days, while their feaſt laſted: and it came to paſs on the ſeventh day, that he told her, becauſe ſhe lay ſore upon him; and ſhe told the riddle to the children of her people.

18 And the men of the city ſaid unto him on the ſeventh day before the ſun went down, What is ſweeter than honey? and what is ſtronger than a lion? And he ſaid unto them, If ye had not plowed with my heifer, ye had not found out my riddle.

19 And the Spirit of the LORD came upon him, and he went down to Aſhkelon, and ſlew thirty men of them, and took their ſpoil, and gave change of garments unto them which expounded the riddle: and his anger was kindled, and he went up to his father's houſe.

20 But Samſon's wife was given to his companion, whom he had uſed as his friend.

the remaining part of which Samſon's wife ſpent in entreating him with tears to tell the riddle to her, out of fear of, or attachment to her countrymen; and at length prevailed.

V. 18. If ye had not, &c.] They could not have diſcovered it of themſelves, if they had not drawn it from him, by tampering with his wife.

V. 19. The Spirit of the Lord, &c.] He found himſelf, by an immediate impulſe of the Spirit of God directed, emboldened, and aſſiſted in this attack upon the enemies of Iſrael; which was fully juſtified by their public oppreſſion, without adverting to their treachery to Samſon.

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.

In contracting marriage, the eye, the ear, the ſenſes are dangerous counſellors; beauty, and wit are very doubtful recommendations, and wiſdom, piety, and holineſs ought principally to be attended to. Next to the word of God, the concurrence of parents is requiſite to render that relation honourable, and comfortable. But parents ought to act with conſideration, and kindneſs in this matter: and if conſtrained to refuſe their concurrence; they ſhould give ſuch convincing, and important reaſons, as may prove that their refuſal, ſprings from wiſdom and affection, not from caprice, and ſeverity: and from an unwillingneſs that they ſhould make an imprudent choice, not from any diſpoſition to bind them, againſt their will, to a ſingle life. Yet ordinarily there can be no neceſſity for a perſon, that profeſſes godlineſs, to marry with one, who is manifeſtly irreligious. But the Lord can over-rule for the beſt of purpoſes, thoſe actions, which we muſt by no means imitate: his deſigns do not influence our conduct, unleſs he inform us of them; but his written word is our conſtant rule. We are always expoſed to danger of body, and ſoul, when alone, and when in company, but nothing can hurt us, except we are wandering from the path of duty. Even ſatan, "that roaring lion," may be effectually reſiſted, and completely overcome, if in anſwer to the prayer of faith, the Spirit of God communicate his ſtrength to our ſouls; in this way alone can we overcome this enemy; and thus all his temptations ſhall eventually conduce to our benefit: but by oſtentation, and we often loſe the comfort, and the real credit, of our beſt diſputed conflicts with our ſpiritual enemies. The ſpecial favours, which God beſtows upon us, can only be mentioned on ſome occaſions, to ſome perſons, and in great modeſty, without ſavouring of vain-glory; and we obtain ſome ſecret victories over temptation, for which we need repeatedly to bleſs God, but of which we cannot ſpeak particularly to our neareſt earthly friend. We ſhould be always ready to aſſiſt the comforts of others, by conferring with them on thoſe topics, which have comforted us; and alſo to impart to them our temporal good things: eſpecially to parents, and benefactors. We enjoy the moſt ſweetneſs from God's goodneſs to us when we moſt frequently turn aſide to meditate upon and bleſs God on that account: and as one ſucceſsful conflict prepares for another; ſo one ſeaſon of peculiar mercy is an earneſt of another. It is almoſt impoſſible to aſſociate with worldly people, without conforming to their vain cuſtoms: at beſt, when evident evil is avoided, we waſte time to no purpoſe: but we are called to redeem our time, and to do all to the glory of God. We ought conſtantly to watch and pray againſt pride, anger, and covetouſneſs, and to avoid every thing, that gives force to them! for their effects are inconceivably dreadful, when they acquire the aſcendancy. It is dangerous to be connected with thoſe, who will not be ſatisfied with any meaſure of love, or reſpect, except we will offend God, or injure ourſelves to oblige them; and a worldly wife, or a wordly friend is to a godly man, as an enemy in the camp, who will watch every opportunity to betray him; and by aſſiduity and perſeverance will more, or leſs prevail, over his reſolutions, and prevail with him to make ſuch compliances, as will greatly injure his credit and comfort. Nor can thoſe connexions be comfortable or durable, where important ſecrets cannot be entruſted without the danger of being divulged. And, indeed ſatan's chief advantage againſt us, ariſes from his correſpondence with our deceitful hearts, and inbred luſts. But the wiſeſt counſels of wicked men are very fooliſhneſs, and all their gain is loſs at length: they ſecure ſome worldly intereſt, and for it loſe their lives, or their ſouls! We are naturally more prone to be angry with thoſe, who have injured us, than to repent of our ſin againſt God. Imprudent connexions commonly iſſue in ſpeedy ſeparations; nor are any more likely to aſperſe a man's character, cheat him of his property, or defile his bed, than they, who have been

BUT it came to paſs within a while after, in the time of wheat harveſt, that Samſon viſited his wife with a kid; and he ſaid, I will go in to my wife into the chamber. But her father would not ſuffer him to go in.

2 And her father ſaid, I verily thought that thou hadſt utterly hated her; therefore I gave her to thy companion: is not her younger ſiſter fairer than ſhe? take her, I pray thee, inſtead of her.

3 And Samſon ſaid concerning them, Now ſhall I be more blameleſs than the Philiſtines, though I do them a diſpleaſure.

4 And Samſon went and caught three hundred foxes, and took fire-brands, and turned tail to tail, and put a fire-brand in the midſt between two tails.

5 And when he had ſet the brands on fire, he let them go into the ſtanding corn of the Philiſtines, and burnt up both the ſhocks, and alſo the ſtanding corn, with the vineyards and olives.

6 Then the Philiſtines ſaid, Who hath done this? and they anſwered, Samſon, the ſon-in-law of the Timnite, becauſe he had taken his wife, and given her to his companion. And the Philiſtines came up, and burnt her and her father with fire.

7 And Samſon ſaid unto them, Though ye have done this, yet will I be avenged of you, and after that I will ceaſe.

8 And he ſmote them hip and thigh with a great ſlaughter: and he went down and dwelt in the top of the rock Etam.

9 Then the Philiſtines went up, and pitched in Judah, and ſpread themſelves in Lehi.

10 And the men of Judah ſaid, Why are ye come up againſt us? and they anſwered, To bind Samſon are we come up, to do to him as he hath done to us.

treated with unmerited kindneſs and confidence. But happy they, who feaſt upon the fruits of Chriſt's conflicts, and victories: all things ſhall work together for their good; and their ſharpeſt trials on earth, yea the ſevereſt agonies of death ſhall prove the occaſion of their loudeſt ſongs of triumphant joy, and praiſe in heaven.

NOTES.

CHAP. XV.] V. 1. Viſited his wife, &c.] Not knowing that his wife was given to another man, Samſon after a time found his anger ſubſide, and his affection revive: and accordingly he went to ſee her, taking with him a kid, on which to feaſt with her, and her friends.

V. 3—5.] We are to note, that Samſon was conſcious that he was to deliver Iſrael from the Philiſtines; and only waited for a fair occaſion to declare againſt them: this was afforded by their injurious treatment of him; which was a ſpecimen of the conduct of the Philiſtines towards the Iſraelites when moſt ſubmiſſive. And in the means, which he employed, we muſt advert to the power of God, both in ſupplying, and ſucceeding them; to mortify the pride, and puniſh the wickedneſs of the Philiſtines. The foxes were doubtleſs very numerous in thoſe parts, and the people very expert in taking them: Samſon probably employed others in procuring, and preparing them, by faſtening a lighted torch between the tails of two of them. Being thus let go, they would hinder each other from gaining their holes, in the woods, and would take ſhelter in the neighbouring corn-fields, and vineyards: and the weather being dry, the corn ripe, and the fire kindled in many places at once, we may eaſily conceive that great deſtruction would very ſpeedily be effected by this uncommon contrivance.

V. 6. Burnt her, &c.] Samſon's wife betrayed him, for fear of being burnt with fire; and thereby brought that very death upon herſelf, for having by her treachery provoked Samſon to this meaſure: thus the Jews crucified Chriſt, leſt his claim to be their king ſhould bring the Romans upon them; and thereby brought that very calamity upon themſelves.

V. 7. Though ye, &c.] The Philiſtines had indeed avenged Samſon of thoſe, who had injured him; but they were inſtigated by hatred to him, though they dared not to attack him: therefore he purpoſed, before he ceaſed, more effectually to avenge himſelf, and his people upon them.

V. 8. Hip and thigh, &c.] This obſcure phraſe, which has greatly perplexed the critics, probably means, that he run upon them, as they fled from him, and threw them down, and trampled them to death. "To go down, and dwell "on the top of a rock," ſeems alſo very obſcure. Perhaps he ſlew the enemy upon a mountain, from which he deſcended, and then went, and dwelt alone on the top of a rock. This ſeems to have been for retirement, that he might not be ſurpriſed by the Philiſtines, and becauſe he choſe not to truſt the Iſraelites.

V. 11. What is this, &c.] The Iſraelites were ſunk into done done unto us? and he ſaid unto them, As they did unto me, ſo have I done unto them.

12 And they ſaid unto him, We are come down to bind thee, that we may deliver thee into the hand of the Philiſtines. And Samſon ſaid unto them, Swear unto me that ye will not fall upon me yourſelves.

13 And they ſpake unto him, ſaying, No; but we will bind thee faſt, and deliver thee into their hand: but ſurely we will not kill thee. And they bound him with two new cords, and brought him up from the rock.

14 And when he came unto Lehi, the Philiſtines ſhouted againſt him: and the Spirit of the LORD came mightily upon him; and the cords that were upon his arms became as flax that was burnt with fire, and his bands looſed from off his hands.

15 And he found a new jaw-bone of an aſs, and put forth his hand and took it, and ſlew a thouſand men therewith.

16 And Samſon ſaid, with the jaw-bone of an aſs, heaps upon heaps, with the jaw of an aſs have I ſlain a thouſand men.

17 And it came to paſs when he had made an end of ſpeaking, that he caſt away the jaw-bone out of his hand, and called that place Ramath-lehi.

18 And he was ſore athirſt, and called on the LORD and ſaid, Thou haſt given this great deliverance into the hand of thy ſervant: and now ſhall I die for thirſt, and fall into the hand of the uncircumciſed?

19 But God clave an hollow place that was in the jaw, and there came water thereout; and when he had drunk, his ſpirit came again, an abject frame of ſpirit; and were ſatisfied with their bondage to the Philiſtines, or deſpaired of deliverance, or baſely feared the trouble, and peril of attempting it; or they would not have yielded up their champion in ſo baſe a manner.

V. 12. That ye will not fall, &c.] Samſon quietly ſubmitted to be bound by the Iſraelites, who were intentionally his murderers, and to be delivered up to the Philiſtines: but he indented with them, that they would not themſelves fall upon him, leſt he ſhould be conſtrained to deſtroy them, inſtead of their enemies, which he was unwilling to do, though ſo ſhamefully treated by them. In all this he was an evident type of Chriſt, who in his retirement was rudely aſſaulted by the Jews, whom he could eaſily have deſtroyed, but would not: into their hands he ſurrendered himſelf, and they bound him, and delivered him up to the Romans to be crucified; though even the bonds of death could not hold him, or prevent his victories, and triumphs.

V. 14, 15.] When the "Spirit of the Lord came "mightily upon him," his bonds were ſoon broken: ("for "where the Spirit of the Lord is, there is liberty:") and then the jaw bone of the contemptible aſs, became a more formidable weapon than ſword or ſpear, and a thouſand men fell before him, being alike unable to reſiſt, or to eſcape!

V. 16, 17. And Samſon, &c.] Elated with this ſurpriſing victory, he celebrated his own praiſe, inſtead of giving glory to God, which rendered the conſequent trial needful, and ſalutary. Ramath-lehi ſignifies, the lifting up of the jaw-bone.

V. 18. And he was ſore, &c.] Thus he felt his weakneſs in himſelf, as before he had ſhewn his ſtrength, when aſſiſted of God: this urgent diſtreſs reminded him of his danger, led him to thank God for his deliverance, and to pray unto him for preſent relief.

V. 19. In the jaw, &c.] Or in the place, where the jaw lay, or in Lehi, a ſpring was ſupernaturally opened, by which he was relieved from his danger; and he called the place "En-hakkore," that is the well of him that cried.

Chriſt too in his grand conflict with the enemies of our ſalvation, "thirſted," but had no well opened for his relief: for he drank of the cup of the wrath of God for us, which Samſon did not; as well as trod the wine-preſs alone, as did Samſon on this occaſion. After this event Samſon was ſubmitted to, as judge by the people. The twenty years during which he judged Iſrael, are ſaid to be in the days of the Philiſtines, which intimates that their deliverance was incomplete, and their enemies very formidable; becauſe, as we may ſuppoſe, they had not duly repented and returned to the Lord.

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.

He gains the nobleſt victory, in every conteſt, who firſt propoſes reconciliation; eſpecially when this is done by the offended party, and the ſuperior relation: and ſuch conceſſions adorn the characters even of thoſe, who are moſt renowned for courage. Where the knowledge of God, and of his law are wanting, the moſt ordinary tranſactions of life will be conducted upon ſuch principles, as tend to confuſion, and licentiouſneſs: and wicked men, conſcious of their own baſe intentions, will ſuſpect the worſt of deſigns; or pretend to do ſo, to cover their own injuſtice: and their propoſals, made under the guiſe of peace, are no leſs to be dreaded, than their open injuſtice. It is therefore beſt to avoid all fellowſhip with them. We ſhould endeavour to live at peace with all men: and in caſe that be impracticable, to avoid every thing, which may render us juſtly chargeable with the conſequences of contention. And ere the Lord proceed to execute vengeance, he will manifeſt the inexcuſable wickedneſs of the hearts and lives of his enemies. In the hands of his ſervants the moſt contemptible inſtruments are ſufficient, and ſucceſsful. When men obtain plenty by rapine, and abuſe it upon their luſts, they may reaſonably expect to have it taken from them: nor does it require much ability, to be an incendiary, and kindle the fire of diſcord in families, churches and nations: indeed ſuch wretches are inſtigated by one more ſubtle, and malicious than themſelves, and will probably be conſumed in and he revived. Wherefore he called the name thereof En-hakkore, which is in Lehi unto this day.

20 And he judged Iſrael in the days of the Philiſtines twenty years.

the fire, which they have kindled. They who ſin to avoid ſuffering, will bring troubles upon themſelves, againſt which they can have no protector. Heartleſs profeſſors, who value the friendſhip, and fear the frown of the world, and are the ſlaves of ſin, and ſatan, will cenſure, hate, and betray thoſe, who call them to liberty in the ſervice of God: and to ſave themſelves in times of perſecution, will apoſtatize, and turn betrayers, and accuſers of the brethren: (Matt. c. xxiv. v. 9, 10:) and in ſuch men's judgment, the beſt ſervices, and moſt dangerous endeavours to do good, deſerve reproach, condemnation, and puniſhment. But we ſhall not be diſcouraged by ſuch things, when we conſider how the Saviour was treated: we ſhall ſee how we ought to act, when we obſerve his meekneſs, patience, and dying prayers for his crucifiers: and we ſhall diſcard our fears, when we conſider his triumphs, his aſcenſion, his glory, and his promiſe, that they, who ſuffer with him, ſhall alſo be glorified with him. Whenever we are peculiarly favoured of God, without great watchfulneſs, the pride of our hearts will lead us to rob him of his glory: hence every comfort muſt be counterbalanced with a croſs: and the more any man is made uſeful to others, the more mortifying mementos he generally needs of his own weakneſs, folly, and unworthineſs. By ſuch painful diſcipline we are taught to know our own place, and to feel our entire dependance on, and continual obligations to the Lord. When our trials have produced theſe effects, they ſhall be removed, and become ſources of gratitude, and comfort; and excite us to raiſe freſh monuments of the goodneſs of God. But in this world our enemies will continue powerful, and our victories will be incomplete: ere long we ſhall be made more than conquerors, and render perfect and eternal hallelujahs.

NOTES.

CHAP. XVI.] V. 1—3. Then went Samſon, &c.] Hitherto Samſon's character, though uncommon, has appeared illuſtrious: and when we conſider him as raiſed up to deliver Iſrael; and inſtructed, as well as aſſiſted in doing it, in that unprecedented manner, which beſt tended to mortify the Philiſtines, and to manifeſt the mighty power of God; we may fairly vindicate moſt of his paſt conduct, and ſafely imitate much of it: and notwithſtanding many infirmities we have hitherto met with nothing inconſiſtent with his character of a Nazarite. But in this chapter we find him behaving in ſo wicked, and infatuated a manner, that many have been led to queſtion, whether he were a godly man or not. But the apoſtle has determined that queſtion; (Heb. c. xi. v. 32:) and adverting to the doctrines, and examples of Scripture, the deceitfulneſs of the human heart, the artifices of ſatan, and the methods, in which the Lord frequently deals with his people, we may interpret this riddle of a man, (as ſome have called him,) and perceive that we are not very different; and may thus learn uſeful leſſons from this hiſtory, which puzzles ſome, ſtumbles others, and emboldens others to cavil, and object. Confiding in his great ſtrength, and the terror of him, with which the Philiſtines were ſeized, he boldly entered Gaza, one of their chief cities, on what account we know not; and there was tempted to go in unto an harlot, to gratify his ſenſual luſt. This diſgraceful circumſtance was made known to the inhabitants, who fearful of attacking him laid wait for him all night, and were probably forming ſome ſtratagem, or ſending for ſome re-inforcements, in order in the morning to aſſault, or enſnare, and kill him. But at midnight, perhaps awakened by remorſe of conſcience, he aroſe; and the Lord, though offended "wrought for his own name's "ſake;" and by his aſſiſtance, in contempt of the guards, he ſeized upon the gate, with the poſt, and bars, and all, and carried them ſeveral miles to the top of an hill, no one venturing to interrupt, or ſeize him. This reminds us of him, who in the likeneſs of ſinful fleſh, was crucified betwixt two thieves: but he aroſe as a conqueror over death, and every foe, and, as it were, broke open and carried away with him the very gates of the grave, whilſt he aſcended into heaven as the firſt-fruits of the reſurrection.

V. 4. Whoſe name was Delilah.] Delilah ſignifies "a conſumer." It is not certain whether ſhe were a Philiſtine, or a licentious Iſraelite. But Samſon indulged a baſe affection for her, and waſted his time in her company in a moſt ſhameful manner: perhaps emboldened by his impunity, in the foregoing inſtance.

V. 5. The lords of, &c.] The princes of their five ſee wherein his great ſtrength lieth, and by what means we may prevail againſt him, that we may bind him to afflict him: and we will give thee every one of us eleven hundred pieces of ſilver.

6 And Delilah ſaid to Samſon, Tell me, I pray thee, wherein thy great ſtrength lieth, and wherewith thou mighteſt be bound to afflict thee.

7 And Samſon ſaid unto her, If they bind me with ſeven green withs that were never dried, then ſhall I be weak, and be as another man.

8 Then the lords of the Philiſtines brought up to her ſeven green withs which had not been dried, and ſhe bound him with them.

9 (Now there were men lying in wait, abiding with her in the chamber.) And ſhe ſaid unto him, The Philiſtines be upon thee, Samſon. And he brake the withs, as a thread of tow is broken when it toucheth the fire. So his ſtrength was not known.

10 And Delilah ſaid unto Samſon, Behold, thou haſt mocked me, and told me lies: now tell me, I pray thee, wherewith thou mighteſt be bound.

11 And he ſaid unto her, If they bind me faſt with new ropes that never were occupied, then ſhall I be weak, and be as another man.

12 Delilah therefore took new ropes, and bound him therewith, and ſaid unto him, The Philiſtines be upon thee, Samſon. And there were liers in wait abiding in the chamber. And he brake them from off his arms like a thread.

13 And Delilah ſaid unto Samſon, Hitherto thou haſt mocked me, and told me lies: tell me wherewith thou mighteſt be bound. And he ſaid unto her, If thou weaveſt the ſeven locks of my head with the web.

14 And ſhe faſtened it with a pin, and ſaid unto him, The Philiſtines be upon thee, Samſon. And he awaked out of his ſleep, and went away with the pin of the beam and with the web.

15 And ſhe ſaid unto him, How canſt thou ſay, I love thee, when thine heart is not with me; thou haſt mocked me theſe three times, and haſt not told me wherein thy great ſtrength lieth.

chief cities, ſoon heard of Samſon's conduct, and formed their plan for his ruin: by promiſing Delilah about ſix hundred pounds ſterling, they induced her to employ all her inſinuation to find out the cauſe of his ſupernatural ſtrength, which they ſuppoſed to depend on ſome obſervance, that he might be induced to neglect; upon which his ſtrength failing him, they might avenge themſelves upon him. It ſeems that their terror of him was ſo great, that they durſt not upon any advantage, attempt any thing againſt him, till they were ſatisfied that his great ſtrength was departed from him. However the hand of God, in reſtraining them from killing him, when he was aſleep in the chamber with them, and when one was employed in ſhaving his head, is very viſible and ſurpriſing.

V. 6, 7. Tell me, &c.] We may be ſure that this artful woman would propoſe this as a mere curious queſtion; that ſhe would couch it in ſuch terms, accompany it with ſuch blandiſhments, and urge it at ſuch times, as were moſt likely to prevail. Yet Samſon had ſome ſuſpicion that it was with no good deſign, that ſhe deſired to pry into this important ſecret; but inſtead of leaving her, or giving her a direct refuſal, he endeavoured to amuſe her by an evaſive anſwer. He knew that his ſtrength was immediately from God, who had conſtituted him a perpetual Nazarite, of which his hair was the token: but if he renounced his Nazarite's character, by ſhaving his head, the Lord would depart from him, and he would become as other men. He was not at firſt ſo infatuated, as to diſcloſe the ſecret: but he was taken in ſatan's net, and was ſure to become every moment more, and more entangled.

V. 9. Now there were, &c.] Samſon's infatuation was very great: but we cannot conceive that he would have fallen aſleep again, and again in Delilah's lap, if he had ſeen the Philiſtines in the chamber prepared to ſeize him. We may ſuppoſe, that they waited every time to ſee, whether he were able to break his bonds, before they quitted their concealment: and that when they found that his ſtrength was not departed, they kept cloſe: and that Delilah artfully turned the matter off, as a jeſt, which ſhe put upon him to diſcover, whether he had told her the truth, or not.

V. 14. And ſhe faſtened, &c.] Theſe repeated attempts would have ſatisfied him, that ſhe intended his ruin, had not whoredom taken away his heart, and made him ſenſeleſs, and brutiſh.—Every ſtep brought him nearer to the fatal diſcovery, and cataſtrophe.

V, 15. When thine heart is not with me, &c.] Delilah pretended to diſcredit all his profeſſions of love for her, ſo long as he refuſed to give her this peculiar proof of it. He had ſacrificed his honour, conſcience, intereſt, and every other valuable object to his paſſion for her: but whilſt he had one reſerve, ſhe would not be ſatisfied. Such abſolute affection cannot be placed upon any creature without idolatry: but it is that very love, which the Lord juſtly requires of us, when he bids us to give him our heart: nor will he accept of us, whilſt there is one reſerve: whilſt we deliberately refuſe to part with one worldly object for his ſake; or to yield him any ſervice, which he requires at our hands. Had Abraham peremptorily refuſed to facri-

16 And

16 And it came to pass, when she pressed him daily with her words, and urged him so that his soul was vexed unto death:

17 That he told her all his heart, and said unto her, There hath not come a razor upon mine head; for I have been a Nazarite unto God from my mother's womb: if I be shaven, then my strength will go from me, and I shall become weak, and be like any other man.

18 And when Delilah saw that he had told her all his heart, she sent and called for the lords of the Philistines, saying, Come up this once; for he hath shewed me all his heart. Then the lords of the Philistines came up unto her and brought money in their hand.

19 And she made him sleep upon her knees: and she called for a man, and she caused him to shave off the seven locks of his head; and she began to afflict him, and his strength went from him.

20 And she said, The Philistines be upon thee, Samson. And he awoke out of his sleep, and said, I will go out as at other times before, and shake myself. And he wist not that the LORD was departed from him.

21 But the Philistines took him, and put out his eyes, and brought him down to Gaza, and bound him with fetters of brass; and he did grind in the prison house.

22 Howbeit, the hair of his head began to grow again, after he was shaven.

23 Then the lords of the Philistines gathered them together, for to offer a great sacrifice unto Dagon their god, and to rejoice: for they said, Our god hath delivered Samson our enemy into our hand.

24 And when the people saw him, they praised their god: for they said, Our god hath delivered into our hands our enemy, and the destroyer of our country, which slew many of us.

fice his beloved Isaac, the Lord might have said, "how "canst thou say, that thou lovest me, when thy heart is "not with me!" For the true love of the infinitely glorious God swallows up, regulates, or subordinates every other affection; and is itself alone absolute or unreserved.

V. 16. Vexed unto death.] What an infatuation was this, that when he was thus incessantly and intolerably teased to do so foolish, and wicked an action, he had not resolution to depart from her!

V. 19—21. She made him sleep, &c.] It seems that Delilah bound him in his sleep, as it is said, that "she "began to afflict him." By which the Philistines being satisfied, that his strength was departed from him, they ventured from their concealment, seized upon their prey, and having put out his eyes, preserved him as a monument of their victory, and made him drudge in hard labour. To all which he could make no effectual resistance, for he found that the Lord was departed from him. What a change was this? To what wretched, and disgraceful situation had sin reduced this mighty judge of Israel, who was before himself as a whole army of men! Had his head been shaven without his fault, the case would have been different: But his whole conduct had been as great a contempt of the Lord's favour, glory, and authority; as if he had in disdain cut off his Nazarite's hair with his own hands: and therefore he was constrained to endure the dreadful effects of his folly. Thus men proceed in sin, till they are given up of God, and fast bound in satan's fetters, and drudge on in his service. Thus believers, growing negligent, and self-indulgent, grieve the Spirit of God, lose their strength, and are taken captive by this enemy. The Lord generally rebukes and chastens them for their first offences: but to teach them all whither their deviations tend, and to what their recoveries are owing, he permits a few to wander wider, and sink deeper; and yet recovers them at last; and marking his displeasure in their most severe temporal sufferings, preserves them from sinking into the pit of destruction. These examples hypocrites will abuse, and Pharisees revile, and infidels deride, to their own more fearful punishment: but true Christians will be thereby rendered more humble, watchful, and circumspect; more simple in their dependance on the Lord, more fervent in prayer to be kept, and praise for being preserved, from falling; and if they fall, they will by them be secured from sinking into despair. Such an example was Samson, and this is the real interpretation of the riddle of his character.

V. 22. The hair of, &c.] Without doubt Samson's afflictions were the means of bringing him to deep repentance: by the loss of his bodily sight the eyes of his understanding were opened to perceive his own madness, and wickedness; and, by depriving him of his bodily strength, the Lord was pleased to renew his spiritual strength. Then would he humble himself before the Lord, and seek his merciful forgiveness, and not seek it in vain. In token of his reconciliation, his hair grew probably much faster than is usual; which was an indication that the Spirit of the Lord was returning unto him, and that he would recover his extraordinary strength. But the Philistines having blinded, and fettered him, were under no further apprehensions on that account.

V. 23, 24.] This was either some occasional feast for their victory over Samson, or some annual festival, that was observed on that account with the greater solemnity, in honour of Dagon. When they had offered their sacrifice, they met together to feast, and to divert themselves, either in the temple of Dagon, or as some think in a theatre erected for that purpose. On this occasion the 25 And it came to pass, when their hearts were merry that they said, Call for Samson, that he may make us sport. And they called for Samson out of the prison-house; and he made them sport. And they set him between the pillars.

26 And Samson said unto the lad that held him by the hand, Suffer me that I may feel the pillars whereupon the house standeth, that I may lean upon them.

27 Now the house was full of men and women: and all the lords of the Philistines were there; and there were upon the roof about three thousand men and women, that beheld while Samson made sport.

28 And Samson called unto the LORD, and said, O LORD God! remember me, I pray thee, and strengthen me, I pray thee, only this once, O God, that I may be at once avenged of the Philistines for my two eyes.

29 And Samson took hold of the two middle pillars upon which the house stood, and on which it was borne up, of the one with his right hand, and of the other with his left.

30 And Samson said, Let me die with the Philistines. And he bowed himself with all his might; and the house fell upon the lords, and upon all the people that were therein. So the dead which he slew at his death were more than they which he slew in his life.

Philistines renewed their triumphs over Samson, who probably had been preserved for that purpose; and also presumed to celebrate the triumph of Dagon their god, over Jehovah the God of Israel: (Dan. c. v. ver. 1—5:) as if by his help they had prevailed against the judge of Israel, who formerly by the help of the Lord had been victorious over them.

V. 25. Made them sport, &c.] They diverted themselves by insulting over his abject situation, exercising their cruel ingenuity in making him appear contemptible, and ridiculous. Thus Christ being apprehended, and bound by his enemies, was insulted by the council, the servants, and the soldiers.

V. 26. The pillars, &c.] The main weight of the building rested upon two pillars in the centre, very near together, according to the method of building made use of in some parts of the world; against which Samson, as if wearied, desired leave to rest himself.

V. 27. All the lords, &c.] All the principal persons of the nation, were within this building, whilst about three thousand others were upon the flat roof, looking through apertures made for that purpose, to enjoy the cruel pleasure of insulting over their fallen enemy.

V. 28. And Samson called, &c.] The triumph of the Philistines was the triumph of Dagon: but the cause of Samson was the cause of Israel, and of God. He was the judge of Israel, appointed of God to be an avenger of their enemies; and for his transgression he had been justly delivered into their hands, and they had not only cruelly treated him, but impiously blasphemed God. As in ordinary cases we may hope for the conversion, and salvation of any of our fellow-sinners, so we are commanded to forgive, do good to, and pray for every one of them: and such extraordinary cases are not recorded for our imitation, though the persons concerned did what was in their case right, and were influenced by the Spirit of God. For the same reason that satan, and his angels, being the incurable enemies of God, are the objects of our allowed abhorrence; we should be required to detest any individual on earth, whom we certainly knew to be the object of God's final hatred: and in a future state, when sinners will no longer be under a dispensation of mercy, we shall rejoice in the destruction of all the enemies of God. (2 Tim. c. iv. ver. 14. Rev. c. vi. v. 10.) Samson's prayer was both dictated, and answered of God; nor could the knowledge of it have been attained, but by revelation. And in his extraordinary case he knew, that it was right that he should avenge the cause of God, and Israel, and that he should desire to execute the vengeance of God upon them, for their despiteful cruelty to him. Nor is he to be accused of self-murder: he sought not his own death, but Israel's deliverance, and the destruction of their enemiss: and there is no intimation, that he was impatient under his sufferings; though in accomplishing his purpose, he was willing to lay down his life with them. There is a vast difference betwixt rushing uncalled into the presence of God, out of proud impatience, rebellion, and contempt of life, when it is made miserable by a man's own misconduct; and being willing to lay down life for the honour of God, and the welfare of his people; though the circumstances, into which a man adventures be as certainly fatal, as the means by which a man murders himself: for a man is no more deemed a self-murderer, who sacrifices his life for the good of his country in the field of battle; than he is deemed a murderer of others, who in a just war slays the enemies of his country.

V. 30.] The numbers within, and upon the building would naturally occasion much slaughter amongst them: but we must ascribe to the same power, which enabled Samson to throw down the building, the decisive destruction, which it caused. Thus Samson died in bonds, and amongst the Philistines, as an awful rebuke for his sins: but he died penitent, and had not his future portion with them: and the effects of his death typified those of the death of Christ, who, by voluntarily laying down his life amongst transgressors, subverted the foundations of satan's kingdom, and provided for the deliverance of his people. By this blow the princes of the Philistines were destroyed, their government was unhinged, their power crushed, and their courage daunted; so that they made no opposition to Samson's relations, when they went to fetch his body, to be buried amongst his people. Thus the body of Christ also was, without opposition, given to his friends, that it might be honourably interred. Samson signifies "a little sun;" according to this allusion, he arose upon Israel after a suitable pre-intimation to his parents, and during the morning of his life he ſhone very bright: but towards the evening he was greatly obſcured by clouds; yet when ſetting he burſt through the gloom, and ſhone with more ſplendour than ever. So Jeſus, our long-expected ſun of righteouſneſs, aroſe upon Iſrael, and upon the earth; after ſhining with glorious, and benign luſtre during his life, he was obſcured by the thickeſt clouds juſt before his ſetting: but when he cried out "it is finiſhed," and gave up the ghoſt, he ſhone forth with mild but moſt glorious ſplendour, and died a triumphant conqueror. But he differed from Samſon; in that he died praying for his murderers, and aroſe again to complete the redemption of his people.

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.

Nothing, except our evident duty, ſhould ever prevail with us to venture into thoſe places, where bad examples, and licentious characters abound. Even in that caſe, we ſhould go with fear, and trembling, and earneſtly begging of God to turn away our eyes from beholding, and to preſerve our hearts from conceiving vanity, and to ſtrengthen us to reſiſt every temptation. For when we become unwatchful, and ſelf-confident, we are near ſome humiliating fall; the roving eye readily admits the licentious deſire into the heedleſs heart; and luſt being conceived, ſin is brought forth, and miſery is the conſequence. Even they, who have grown old in an honourable profeſſion of godlineſs, are no longer ſafe, than they are kept humble: and ſinful propenſities, which have long lain dormant, will revive under ſuitable temptations, and acquire their former aſcendancy, and even domineer more than ever, if we provoke God to leave us to ourſelves. The blandiſhments of beautiful women have proved dreadful weapons againſt the church of God. (Prov. c. ii. v. 16—19. c. v. ver. 3—14. 22, 23. c. vii. v. 26, 27:) And ſatan would rather ſee the active, and uſeful ſervant of God, yielding to the enticements of an harlot, and ſleeping in Delilah's lap; than boldly venturing the tyrant's rage, and yielding up himſelf to be caſt into the fiery furnace. They, who are captivated in this manner, are ſpeedily expoſed to the deepeſt ſhame, and the moſt imminent danger; their reputation, ſtrength, and uſefulneſs will be torn from them; the cauſe, which they ſhould ſerve, will be betrayed by them, and their enemies will be hardened in their triumphs over them, and the religion, which they profeſs. The outward peril, which attends ſuch forbidden intercourſe, is generally ſo great, that nothing but blind infatuation can induce men to venture upon it: but who can tell the machinations of the powers of darkneſs againſt thoſe, who are ſtupidly indulging their luſts, and ſleeping in the very jaws of deſtruction? It muſt be aſcribed to the Lord's unſpeakable goodneſs if any eſcape, who are once taken in theſe ſnares. But lamentable is it to conſider, that this goodneſs is ſo generally abuſed into an encouragement to further crimes; for every ſinful propenſity is ſtrengthened by indulgence. Even true believers are ſeldom duly humbled for their ſins, till they taſte the bitter effects of them; and therefore it is eventually better to be chaſtened for our firſt offences, than to eſcape with impunity. Companions in iniquity can have no good reaſons for truſting one another. And they, who betray the cauſe of God, can expect no other, than to be betrayed by their fellow-creatures; for they who are enſlaved to one luſt, need not wonder to find their companions under the dominion of another. Unworthy of a man, and ſtill more of a believer is that love, which is placed on a worthleſs object, on account of external embelliſhments, and for the ſake of animal gratification, whilſt conſcience, honour, and every noble purpoſe of the ſoul, are ſacrificed thereto. When a man is thus bound in the chain of his own luſts, he ſeems to loſe even common ſenſe; and no wickedneſs in the object of his idolatrous affections can make him ſenſible of his folly and danger, or willing to renounce the baſe attachment. This is indeed a deep ditch, into which many great men, and even ſome good men have fallen; but from which few have eſcaped, and they by a miracle of mercy, and with the loſs of almoſt every thing, except their precious ſouls. Whatever a man hath already ſacrificed to ſuch a criminal paſſion, ſtill more will be required; no denial will be taken, no bounds aſſigned, or end fixed to artful, and intereſted importunity, until a man has ruined himſelf and all thoſe, who are, or ought to be dear to him; for aſſiduity, diſſimulation, and inceſſant blandiſhment will overcome the ſtrongeſt reſolutions, and teaſe a man into compliance with the moſt unreaſonable, and ruinous demands: and all counſels, warnings, and paſt experiences are in this caſe ineffectual. On this Delilah's lap thouſands ſleep ſo ſound, that nothing but the flames of hell can awake them. And though the Lord again, and again deliver his people, even when they grieve his Spirit by their ſins; yet if they preſume upon his goodneſs, he will ſeverely puniſh them, and even make them the contempt, and reproach of the fooliſh; he will tear from them all their earthly comforts, and fill their ſouls with the moſt exquiſite anguiſh; and, without ſending them to hell, he can make their ſufferings ten thouſand times greater than all the pleaſures of their ſins. Nay he can cloud the characters of the moſt eminent of his ſervants with ſo dark a veil, that the people of God ſhall be ready to conſider them as hypocrites, and apoſtates. Thus he will ſet them up as a beacon to warn others of the rocks on which they ſplit. And though many will, by their falls and miſeries, be taught to watch and pray againſt temptation; yet they will be oppreſſed by the painful reflexion, that multitudes will by their crimes be prejudiced, and hardened in infidelity, and ungodlineſs to their everlaſting deſtruction. Out of this horrible pit none can eſcape, but by deep humiliation for ſin, earneſt cries for mercy, patient ſubmiſſion to correction, and renewed converſion unto God through Jeſus Chriſt. Their heavieſt ſorrows when they have theſe effects will prove moſt precious favours, their comfort, and ſtrength ſhall be renewed, and their cruel enemies ſhall finally be diſappointed. Yet even in this caſe the chaſtening rod may purſue them to the grave. When ſuch perſons have obtained pardon, and hope to die in peace, and go to glory; they can deſire to live for no other purpoſe, but to wipe off, if poſſible, the blot, which they have caſt upon the goſpel, and to take vengeance, (ſo to ſpeak,) upon ſatan and his cauſe, for the injury, they have ſuſtained; and with their dying lips, or in their dying moments to render ſome ſervice to the church of God: and ſome who have diſgraced the goſpel, and rejoiced the hearts of it's enemies, have afterwards been ſo deeply humbled, and have cloſed their lives in ſuch a manner, as hath more than counterbalanced all, and turned the triumphings of wicked men into confuſion. Indeed all ſucceſsful villainy will ſoon be puniſhed; and they who hate, betray, and perſecute the church of God, or any of it's members, have not only the prayers of God's people, but the interceſſion of Chriſt himſelf againſt them, whilſt they continue impenitent: how then can they eſcape deſtruction? Vain is our expectation of protection, or aſſiſtance from God, when we are committing deliberate ſin: we may think to go forth as at other times, but ſhall find that our locks are ſhorn, and our ſtrength is gone. Nay, if miniſters, with unrepented guilt upon their conſcience, continue to preach, pray, and adminiſter the ſacraments, their exertions will fail of their wanted efficacy; and as the Lord is departed from them, ſatan will diſregard their feeble efforts. But it is moſt lamentable, when they alone are not ſenſible of the awful change: what can then be expected, but that the enemy will blind, and enſlave them more and more to his baſeſt drudgery! May God help us to walk humbly, and watchfully, to abſtain from fleſhly luſts, and avoid the beginnings of evil; and to beware of the ſubtlety of ſatan, and his agents, and the deceitfulneſs of our own hearts. May our unreſerved love and entire dependance be placed upon the divine Saviour. He conquered by dying, and roſe to triumph: by his power all his true people ſhall conquer, and triumph alſo. Here they muſt live mingled with the wicked, and die outwardly in the ſame manner; but they have a friend to receive their departing ſouls; and a place in heaven prepared for them. Their bodies, may or may not be buried together; but they ſhall certainly be ſeparated at the reſurrection of the dead; the one ſhall go away into everlaſting puniſhment, the other into life eternal. May we then chooſe this good part, which ſhall never be taken from us!

3 And when he had reſtored the eleven hundred ſhekels of ſilver to his mother, his mother ſaid, I had wholly dedicated the ſilver unto the LORD from my hand for my ſon, to make a graven image, and a molten image; now therefore I will reſtore it unto thee.

NOTES.

CHAP. XVII.] V. 1. And there was, &c.] Samſon was the laſt judge before Eli, as is generally agreed, and the events recorded in the enſuing chapters were coincident with the preceding hiſtory; and took place, not many years after the death of Joſhua.

V. 2—4.] Micah's mother, having loſt her money, in a rage imprecated the divine vengeance upon the thief, if he did not reſtore it, pretending that it was devoted to God, by a ſolemn vow. Her ſon, who had ſtole it, was by this curſe affrighted to diſcloſe the theft, and reſtore the money; and thus he obtained her bleſſing, ſuch as it was: in conſequence two hundred ſhekels were expended in making an image, and perhaps the remainder in the preparation for its worſhip.

V. 5. An houſe of gods, &c.] Or "of God;" for it is probable that he purpoſed to worſhip the God of Iſrael, and he ignorantly imagined, that in this manner, having appointed his ſon to be prieſt, he might ſerve God as acceptably, as by going up to the tabernacle.

V. 6. There was, &c.] Either there was no judge at that time, or he poſſeſſed not that authority, which was requiſite for repreſſing idolatry, as a king might have done. Probably the judges, when they had performed thoſe ſervices, for which they were raiſed up, were not much regarded in the diſtant parts of the land, by a people, who were always prone to return to their idols.

V. 7. Of the family of Judah, &c.] His father was a Levite, but by marriage allied to the tribe of Judah, in whoſe lot Bethlehem lay. We cannot ſuppoſe a Levite was conſtrained for mere want, to ramble like a vagabond:

10 And Micah ſaid unto him, Dwell with me, and be unto me a father and a prieſt, and I will give thee ten ſhekels of ſilver by the year, and a ſuit of apparel, and thy victuals. So the Levite went in.

this man was probably of an unſettled diſpoſition, and did not love to be under the controul of the prieſts: rather than be their ſervant, he would be the prieſt of an idol, at very low wages.

V. 13. Now I know, &c.] Micah was conſcious that the prieſthood of his ſon was informal; but fooliſhly fancied that he had now mended the matter. Whereas a Levite had no right to officiate as prieſt, nor had he any authority to conſecrate him; and to his other crimes he added that of tempting a Levite to idolatry.

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.

Old age will never cure the heart of it's love of worldly objects, and when men have loſt their reliſh for other ſinful indulgences, the love of money frequently acquires double force: but every idol, is liable to be torn from them, and their inordinate love of it, will increaſe their grief and reſentment for the loſs of it. The curſe cauſeleſs will only hurt the perſon, who vents it; yet when children rob their parents, they may expect from them a curſe inſtead of a bleſſing, and in conſequence the diſpleaſure of God, (Prov. c. xxviii. v. 24.) Confeſſion, and reſtitution, though attendants on true repentance, do not always imply it's preſence: (Matt. c. xxvii. v. 3—5. Thoſe parents cannot reaſonably expect their children to do their duty to them, who have neither by their inſtructions or example taught them their duty to God, but have been their tempters to ungodlineſs. Riches are ſeldom made a good uſe of: in one form or other they are commonly idolized, either in themſelves, or in thoſe idols, which proud, and ſenſual men purchaſe with them. Men naturally love their own inventions in religion, being more flattering to their pride, and more indulgent to their ſloth and luſts, than God's appointments: and the liberality of ſuperſtitious people, often ſhames the niggardlineſs of the profeſſors of true religion. They, who once deviate from the rule of God's word, will wander ſtill more widely, and bewilder themſelves more entirely: and will preſumptuouſly expect a reward from God, for the very practices, which he abhors. When pride, an unſettled temper, ignorance, and ſloth meet in thoſe ordained to the miniſtry, with poverty, or extravagance; by the proſpect of ſecular advantage, they may be induced to patronize crimes, and become ringleaders in tranſgreſſion; whilſt their example, and concurrence give a quietus to every remaining ſcruple in the conſciences of others. Many wealthy people love to have ſuch Levites for their prieſts; becauſe, inſtead of reproving their ſins, they embolden them therein; and induce them, to conclude, that there is no reality at all in religion, as it's miniſters are ſo mercenary, and ungodly.

NOTES.

CHAP. XVIII.] V. 1. All their inheritance, &c.] In the diviſion of the land the city Laiſh, or Leſhem (Joſh. c. xix. v. 47, 48.) had been aſſigned to the Danites, beſides their portion near the lot of Judah; but as it lay in the northern extremity of the country, they had not attempted to poſſeſs it, till they were conſtrained for want of room to ſeek new ſettlements.

V. 5, 6.] The Danites had not conſulted the Lord by pray pray thee, of God, that we may know whether our way which we go ſhall be proſperous.

6 And the prieſt ſaid unto them, Go in peace; before the LORD is your way wherein ye go.

7 Then the five men departed, and came to Laiſh, and ſaw the people that were therein, how they dwelt careleſs, after the manner of the Zidonians, quiet and ſecure; and there was no magiſtrate in the land, that might put them to ſhame in any thing: and they were far from the Zidonians, and had no buſineſs with any man.

8 And they came unto their brethren to Zorah and Eſhtaol: and their brethren ſaid unto them, What ſay ye?

9 And they ſaid, Ariſe, that we may go up againſt them: for we have ſeen the land, and, behold, it is very good; and are ye ſtill? be not ſlothful to go, and to enter to poſſeſs the land.

10 When ye go, ye ſhall come unto a people ſecure, and to a large land: for God hath given it into your hands; a place where there is no want of any thing that is in the earth.

11 And there went from thence of the family of the Danites, out of Zorah and out of Eſhtaol, ſix hundred men appointed with weapons of war.

12 And they went up, and pitched in Kirjath-jearim in Judah: wherefore they called that place Mahaneh-dan unto this day; behold, it is behind Kirjath-jearim.

13 And they paſſed thence unto mount Ephraim, and came unto the houſe of Micah.

14 Then anſwered the five men that went to ſpy out the country of Laiſh, and ſaid unto their brethren, Do ye know that there is in theſe houſes an ephod, and teraphim, and a graven image, and a molten image? now therefore conſider what ye have to do.

15 And they turned thitherward, and came to the houſe of the young man the Levite, even unto the houſe of Micah, and ſaluted him.

16 And the ſix hundred men appointed with their weapons of war, which were of the children of Dan, ſtood by the entering of the gate.

17 And the five men that went to ſpy out the land went up, and came in thither, and took the graven image, and the ephod, and the teraphim, and the molten image: and the prieſt ſtood in the entering of the gate with the ſix hundred men that were appointed with weapons of war.

18 And theſe went into Micah's houſe, and fetched the carved image, the ephod, and the teraphim, and the molten image. Then ſaid the prieſt unto them, What do ye?

19 And they ſaid unto him, Hold thy peace, lay thine hand upon thy mouth, and go with us, and be to us a father and a prieſt: is it better for thee to be a prieſt unto the houſe of one man, or that thou be a prieſt unto a tribe and a family in Iſrael?

20 And the prieſt's heart was glad, and he took the ephod, and the teraphim, and the graven image, and went in the midſt of the people.

21 So they turned and departed, and put the little ones, and the cattle, and the carriage, before them.

his high prieſt about their intended enterpriſe: but when their ſpies met with this Levite, whom they had known in his former rambles, and were informed by him that he was become a prieſt, they bethought themſelves of conſulting the Lord by him: in which their ignorance and inattention were proved to be lamentably great. The Levite having gone through his form, anſwered them according to their inclinations, which being verified by the event, raiſed the reputation of the oracle, and ſanctioned the idolatry. Thus fortune-tellers, and monthly prognoſticators, ſometimes happening to conjecture right, all their blunders are forgotten, and theſe random lucky gueſſes raiſe their credit with the ignorant, and credulous. But in this manner God ſends men a ſtrong deluſion to believe a lie, who ſeek information in a way prohibited in the ſacred Scriptures.

V. 7. They dwelt careleſs, &c.] The Iſraelites had ſo neglected to proſecute their victories, that the Canaanites deſpiſed them: and this people living, unmoleſted in a plentiful country, had no magiſtrates, and were not ſecured by walls, troops, or alliances, but every one lived according to his own inclination, without either fear or ſhame.

V. 11. Six hundred men, &c.] So ſmall a company out of this large tribe, (Numb. c. xxvi. v. 43,) unaſſiſted by their brethren, marching upon this enterprize, manifeſted how regardleſs the Iſraelites were of the public cauſe, and how intent they were upon their perſonal indulgence. Yet houſes near to Micah's houſe were gathered together, and overtook the children of Dan.

23 And they cried unto the children of Dan: and they turned their faces, and ſaid unto Micah, What aileth thee, that thou comeſt with ſuch a company?

24 And he ſaid, Ye have taken away my gods which I made, and the prieſt, and ye are gone away; and what have I more? and what is this that ye ſay unto me, What aileth thee?

25 And the children of Dan ſaid unto him, Let not thy voice be heard among us, leſt angry fellows run upon thee, and thou loſe thy life, with the lives of thy houſehold.

26 And the children of Dan went their way: and when Micah ſaw that they were too ſtrong for him, he turned and went back unto his houſe.

27 And they took the things which Micah had made, and the prieſt which he had, and came unto Laiſh, unto a people that were at quiet and ſecure: and they ſmote them with the edge of the ſword, and burnt the city with fire.

28 And there was no deliverer, becauſe it was far from Zidon, and they had no buſineſs with any man; and it was in the valley that lieth by Beth-rehob: and they built a city, and dwelt therein.

29 And they called the name of the city Dan, after the name of Dan their father, who was born unto Iſrael: howbeit the name of the city was Laiſh at the firſt.

30 And the children of Dan ſet up the graven image: and Jonathan, the ſon of Gerſhon, the ſon of Manaſſeh, he and his ſons were prieſts to the tribe of Dan until the day of the captivity of the land.

31 And they ſet them up Micah's graven image, which he made, all the time that the houſe of God was in Shiloh.

this ſmall troop, in confidence of ſucceſs, took their families with them. Mahaneh-dan ſignifies the camp of Dan.

V. 24. And what have I more? &c.] Micah, though ignorant and immoral, yet deemed his religion his chief treaſure; and therefore when they had taken that from him, wherein he had gloried, and on account of which he was confident, that the Lord would do him good, he counted himſelf to have loſt all, and intimated that they might as well have taken all the reſt of his ſubſtance too. Whatever a man thus values, and confides in, and ſuppoſes he cannot live, and be happy in the want of, is his idol, and occupies God's throne in his heart: and he will ere long have to exclaim, "My gods are gone, and what have I more?" Had the Danites deſtroyed Micah's idols, and made an example of the Levite, it might have been juſtifiable: but their conduct was equally a robbery of God, and man. They coveted this ready made religion, and this upſtart prieſt, and oracle, which had ſuddenly riſen into reputation; and they thought the piety of the end, would juſtify the violence of the means, which they employed to accompliſh it. And indeed it was a very proper beginning of ſo vile an apoſtacy. The captivity afterwards mentioned was that of the ark, by the Philiſtines, in the early days of Samuel; for it may be ſuppoſed that Samuel and David repreſſed all open idolatry in the land; but it continued all the years of the judges, till the ark was removed from Shiloh. Afterwards Jeroboam ſet up the worſhip of the golden calf in this very city.

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.

If men were as ſenſibly affected with the wants of their ſouls, as they are with thoſe of the body, the inheritance of the kingdom of heaven, though diſtant, and future, would not be neglected; and the labour, danger, and ſelf-denial, which lie in the way would no longer affright, or deter them from ſeeking it. Whatever valour, wiſdom, or diligence we employ in any undertaking, we ſhall not be really ſucceſsful, if we forget to conſult the Lord, and ſeek his aſſiſtance, and bleſſing; nor are they fit to ſpy out the good land for others, who begin not in this manner. Men will generally find out thoſe of their own character in every place; and an ignorant, and erroneous conſcience will meet with ſome ſuperſtition or falſe religion, apparently coined on purpoſe for it. Succeſs proves not our undertakings to be pleaſing to God, any more than a fortunate conjecture proves a man a prophet: for the former is ſometimes ſent as a curſe upon the ſoul: and the latter is permitted to puniſh thoſe, who deſpiſe, and hate the truth. We ought to be thankful for good government; and for magiſtrates, who put men to ſhame for their crimes; without which they can ſcarce be prevented from deſtroying each other. The bleſſings alſo of liberty, and proſperity call for gratitude: yet when they produce ſloth, ſelf-indulgence, and carnal ſecurity, they indicate approaching deſtruction. Wordly men finding "no want of any thing, "that is in the earth," conſider not the diſadvantages, they lie under, in reſpect of their ſouls: for if their ſituations, or occupations conſiſt not with true religion, they can either do without any, or frame one ſuited to their conveniency. If men are deſtitute of the fear of God, they will ſeize upon whatever they covet, when they poſſeſs power, and can do it with impunity: and juſtice, gratitude, and the rights of hoſpitality form but feeble barriers in their way. Indeed, injuſtice and idolatry conſiſt well with each other; for ſatan loves, though God hates "rob-"bery for burnt-offering." They who do wrong, are commonly much offended, if the injured party dares to complain, or remonſtrate; and thus theft is frequently an

AND it came to pass in those days, when there was no king in Israel, that there was a certain Levite sojourning on the side of mount Ephraim, who took to him a concubine out of Beth-lehem-judah.

2 And his concubine played the whore against him, and went away from him unto her father's house to Beth-lehem-judah, and was there four whole months.

3 And her husband arose, and went after her, to speak friendly unto her, and to bring her again, having his servant with him, and a couple of asses: and she brought him into her father's house; and, when the father of the damsel saw him, he rejoiced to meet him.

4 And his father-in-law, the damsel's father, retained him; and he abode with him three days: so they did eat and drink, and lodged there.

5 And it came to pass on the fourth day, when they arose early in the morning, that he rose up to depart: and the damsel's father said unto his son-in-law, comfort thine heart with a morsel of bread, and afterward go your way.

6 And they sat down, and did eat and drink both of them together: for the damsel's father had said unto the man, Be content, I pray thee, and tarry all night, and let thine heart be merry.

7 And when the man rose up to depart, his father-in-law urged him; therefore he lodged there again.

8 And he arose early in the morning on the fifth day to depart: and the damsel's father said, Comfort thine heart, I pray thee. And they tarried until afternoon, and they did eat both of them.

introduction to murder, through the joint influence of avarice, pride, and malice. But they, who rob God of his glory, and tempt others to iniquity, deserve to be plundered by their fellow-creatures; and they, who trust in unprincipled persons need not wonder, if they are deceived. Mercenary priests will go very disgraceful lengths to obtain preferment, and even set their services to sale to the highest bidder. But whilst they eagerly seize upon the proposed advantage, let them remember, that they are increasing guilt, shame, mischief, and condemnation. When the removal of idols weans the heart from idolatry, the anguish of parting will be made up by the consequent advantage: but wretched are they, who are deprived of their idols, and left under the power of the idolatrous affection! Thus death will rend men from all those worldly objects, on which they have placed their affections: their gods will be for ever gone, and what have they more? But the case of self-confident hypocrites, when disappointed of all their towering hopes, will be peculiarly dreadful! Happy they, who renounce all for Christ, and in him have the Lord for their God! no enemies or changes can take their portion, or the comfort of it from them. If we would have this felicity, we must carefully attend to the word, and ordinances of God, and be afraid of every deviation from our perfect rule: "for behold how great a matter a "little fire kindleth."

CHAP. XIX.] V. 1. In those days, &c.] This happened whilst Phinehas the son of Eleazar was High Priest, and therefore not very long after the death of Joshua: (c. xx. v. 28.) There was then no king in Israel, nor any judge, who exercised authority over the people in general; and the want of a regular civil government produced many fatal effects. This should teach us thankfully to receive the benefits, and patiently to submit to the real, or imaginary inconveniencies of that government, which the Providence of God hath placed over us. In this, and the following chapters we have a most shocking history, which not only gives us a melancholy view of the state of matters in Israel, at so early a period; but a very humiliating picture of the desperate wickedness of the human heart; and a very instructive lesson concerning the fatal effects of sin.

V. 2. His concubine, &c.] (Note, Gen. c. xxv. v. 6.) This woman seems to have been the Levite's only wife, and was called his concubine, because not admitted to all the privileges of that relation: but her father is called his father-in-law, and he is called her husband. (c. xx. v. 4.) Only this Levite, and that worthless one, of whom we read in the foregoing chapters, are mentioned in the book of Judges: the one of which proved the guilty cause of establishing idolatry; and the concubine of the other, the occasion of the almost total destruction of a tribe in Israel.

V. 3. Speak friendly, &c.] By this expression we may hope that this woman was penitent, and cast down under the sense of her guilt, and afraid of being made a public example: which the Levite thus compassionately obviated. It is generally thought that her father was faulty in entertaining her, when she left her husband; and that she had been improperly indulged by him: but it is more plain, that she was not a proper wife for a Levite; and probably his affection for her was inordinate, and his choice imprudent, being chiefly on account of her beauty, which seems to have attracted the inhabitants of Gibeah, when they reand his concubine, and his servant, his father-in-law, the damsel's father, said unto him, Behold now, the day draweth towards evening, I pray you tarry all night: behold, the day groweth to an end, lodge here, that thine heart may be merry; and to-morrow get you early on your way, that thou mayest go home.

10 But the man would not tarry that night, but he rose up and departed, and came over against Jebus, (which is Jerusalem,) and there were with him two asses saddled; his concubine also was with him.

11 And when they were by Jebus, the day was far spent; and the servant said unto his master, Come, I pray thee, and let us turn in unto this city of the Jebusites, and lodge in it.

12 And his master said unto him, We will not turn aside hither into the city of a stranger, that is not of the children of Israel; we will pass over to Gibeah.

13 And he said unto his servant, Come, and let us draw near to one of these places to lodge all night, in Gibeah, or in Ramah.

14 And they passed on, and went their way, and the sun went down upon them when they were by Gibeah which belongeth to Benjamin.

15 And they turned aside thither, to go in and to lodge in Gibeah: and, when he went in, he sat him down in a street of the city; for there was no man that took them into his house to lodging.

16 And, behold, there came an old man from his work out of the field at even, which was also of mount Ephraim; and he sojourned in Gibeah: but the men of the place were Benjamites.

17 And when he had lifted up his eyes, he saw a way-faring man in the street of the city: and the old man said, Whither goest thou? and whence comest thou?

18 And he said unto him, We are passing from Beth-lehem-judah toward the side of mount Ephraim; from thence am I: and I went to Beth-lehem-judah, but I am now going to the house of the LORD; and there is no man that receiveth me to house.

19 Yet there is both straw and provender for our asses; and there is bread and wine also for me, and for thy handmaid, and for the young man which is with thy servants: there is no want of any thing.

20 And the old man said, Peace be with thee: howsoever, let all thy wants lie upon me; only lodge not in the street.

21 So he brought him into his house, and gave provender unto the asses: and they washed their feet, and did eat and drink.

22 Now as they were making their hearts merry, behold, the men of the city, certain sons of Belial, beset the house round about, and beat at the door, and spake to the master of the house, the old man, saying, Bring forth the man that came into thine house, that we may know him.

23 And the man, the master of the house, went out unto them, and said unto them, Nay, my brethren, nay, I pray you, do not so wickedly; seeing that this man is come into mine house, do not this folly.

24 Behold, here is my daughter, a maiden, and his concubine, them I will bring out now, and humble ye them, and do with them what seemeth good unto you: but unto this man do not so vile a thing.

25 But the men would not hearken to him: so the man took his concubine, and brought her forth unto them; and they knew her, and abused her all the night until the morning: and when the day began to spring they let her go.

26 Then came the woman in the dawning of the day, and fell down at the door of the man's house where her lord was, till it was light.

27 And her lord rose up in the morning, and opened the doors of the house, and went out to go his way: and, behold, the woman his concubine was fallen down at the door of the house, and her hands were upon the threshold.

28 And

jected the offer of the Ephraimite's daughter, (v. 25.) In other respects the Levite's character seems to have been consistent with his profession.

V. 18. To the house of the Lord, &c.] At Shiloh, which was near his habitation in mount Ephraim: either his employment as a Levite required his attendance, or he purposed to offer sacrifices, according to the circumstances of his family, before he returned home. His conduct in refusing to contract familiarity with the inhabitants of the land, was a very proper, and seasonable example, and protest against the general disobedience of the Israelites in that respect.

28 And he said unto her, Up, and let us be going: but none answered. Then the man took her up upon an ass, and the man rose up, and gat him unto his place.

29 And when he was come into his house he took a knife, and laid hold on his concubine, and divided her, together with her bones, into twelve pieces, and sent her into all the coasts of Israel.

THEN

V. 29, 30.] It had an inhuman appearance thus to mangle the dead corpse of this unhappy woman: but it was intended to excite a more general attention, and a keener resentment against so horrible a crime, which called for as tremendous a punishment. The justice of God was displayed even by the enormous wickedness of these men: adultery was punishable by death; this woman was about to escape; but in this dreadful manner her iniquity found her out, and was punished in kind. We hope that she died penitent, and found mercy; but the temporal judgment of God pursuing her to death, formed an aweful, and salutary warning to others not to venture upon such crimes, which God will punish, though man may connive at them.

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.

Men are seldom aware of the future consequences of their conduct when they yield to temptation: and few sins are followed with so fatal and durable effects, personal, domestic, or social, as adultery. But it becomes ministers and professors of godliness to forgive and be reconciled, without upraiding those who have most inexcusably injured them, when they appear penitent; and to speak comfortably to those who are in danger of being swallowed up of over much sorrow.—External attractions are very deceitful, and often prove the occasion to the possessors themselves, as well as to others, of much sin and misery, nay of final destruction: they who are thus distinguished, instead therefore of being vain of them, have cause to tremble, and to be doubly watchful against temptation, and instant in prayer for the preserving grace of God.—So much depends on the character and behaviour of ministers; that if they contract marriages with improper persons, through such worthless inducements, they will be sure to find either a snare or a cross.—Kindness is due to those, who behave with affection in the several relations of life; but every man hath his proper place and duty which require his attendance; pressing importunities therefore may be carried too far, and induce imprudent and prejudicial concessions. For it is always advisable to set about our work early; and what we call time enough, generally proves little enough.—How changeable are human affairs! Unexpectedly our brightest prospects are clouded, and the deepest calamities overtake us: we should therefore learn to moderate our affections, to lower our expectations, and to stand prepared for the worst.—Ministers should put themselves to any inconveniency to enforce their precepts by their own example.—More inhumanity and villainy may be expected from degenerate professors, than from infidels: and in general where we expect the most kindness, we often meet with the greatest injuries, that we may learn to cease from man.—An unfeeling disregard to the wants of others generally accompanies sensuality and ungoverned lusts: and there are numbers who imitate the example of those whose shameful crimes have been recorded in their punishment, to one who copies the examples of hospitality, integrity, and piety, which are mentioned with commendation in the Scriptures.—When men have cast off the fear of God, they are frequently given up to their own vile lusts even to disgrace human nature, and to exceed the very beasts in brutishness. Israelites especially, who rebel against the light, and grow hardened under the means of grace, will become as abandoned as filthy Sodomites, and vastly more inexcusable.—When iniquity becomes generally triumphant, few will dare to protest against it: and it is safer to venture into a den of lions than into such recesses of iniquity.—Yet in the worst of times, there are some who venture scorn and reproach in being kind to the Lord's servants for his sake; and who do not grudge the expence of hospitality: for whilst idleness and sensual lusts, waste a man's substance, honest labour and frugality support the expence of being liberal. But such persons live as strangers in this world, and must expect to be abused by their wicked neighbours, except when an equitable government affords them benign protection.—In imitating the good actions of God's people, we are very liable to be betrayed into their faults; (Gen. xix. 6—8;) and an unbelieving policy often induces us to make unwarrantable concessions: but the commission of sin to avoid danger will generally involve us in still greater difficulties.—The righteous Lord permits sinners to execute his just vengeance upon one another: and if the scene described in this chapter is horrible, what will be the discoveries of the day of judgment? Yet this is human nature! And though few will believe the humbling truth, all this wickedness is in every human heart; and if we have not committed these abominations in our lives, we owe the more gratitude to the Lord, for the restraints of his Providence, or the influences of his grace. Whilst therefore it behoves those in authority, to consider, take advice, and speak their minds, how, in this state of human nature, crimes may best be prevented by the salutary punishment of criminals: we may each of us consider, how to escape from the wrath to come, to mortify the sins of our own hearts, to resist Satan's temptations, and to avoid the pollutions that are in the world; and how we may best be prepared for, and extract benefit from, all our temporal calamities.

THEN all the children of Israel went out, and the congregation was gathered together as one man, from Dan even to Beer-sheba, with the land of Gilead, unto the LORD in Mizpeh.

2 And the chief of all the people, even of all the tribes of Israel, presented themselves in the assembly of the people of God, four hundred thousand footmen that drew sword.

3 (Now the children of Benjamin heard that the children of Israel were gone up to Mizpeh.) Then said the children of Israel, Tell us, how was this wickedness?

4 And the Levite, the husband of the woman that was slain, answered, and said, I came into Gibeah that belongeth to Benjamin, I and my concubine, to lodge.

5 And the men of Gibeah rose against me, and beset the house round about upon me by night, and thought to have slain me; and my concubine have they forced, that she is dead.

6 And I took my concubine, and cut her in pieces, and sent her throughout all the country of the inheritance of Israel: for they have committed lewdness and folly in Israel.

7 Behold ye are all children of Israel; give here your advice and counsel.

8 And all the people arose as one man, saying, We will not any of us go to his tent, neither will we any of us turn into his house;

9 But now this shall be the thing which we will do to Gibeah, we will go up by lot against it;

10 And we will take ten men of an hundred throughout all the tribes of Israel, and an hundred of a thousand, and a thousand out of ten thousand, to fetch victual for the people, that they may do, when they come to Gibeah of Benjamin, according to all the folly that they have wrought in Israel.

11 So all the men of Israel were gathered against the city, knit together as one man.

12 And the tribes of Israel sent men through all the tribe of Benjamin, saying, What wickedness is this that is done among you?

13 Now

NOTES.

CHAP. XX.] V. 1, 2.] There is here no mention of any judge, or great council of the nation, though it is generally thought that the council of seventy elders subsisted at this time. Probably Phinehas the high Priest confined himself to the duties of his office; and, considering his piety, zeal, wisdom, and experience, he seems to have been much neglected by the new generation of Israelites. Each tribe appears to have had it's own internal government, to which the Levite sent his message; by their united determination, the people were gathered together in arms, to the amount of 400,000 men; and we must suppose that some were left at home out of every tribe, to take care of the flocks and fields, and other concerns. Doubtless the Benjamites were summoned also, but they would not come, and probably were offended at the interposition of the other tribes in this business. Mizpeh was situated near to Shiloh, and the encampment of so vast a multitude might be more conveniently formed there: but they "were gathered together before the Lord "at Mizpeh," and were near the tabernacle, and the High Priest, to enquire of him concerning their business, yet it seems he was only applied to officially, to consult the Lord by Urim and Thummim, about such questions as they proposed to him.

V. 8—11.] The abhorrence of the crime here expressed, and the determination formed by the Israelites to punish the criminals, were very proper: but they formed their resolves with too much precipitation, resentment, self-preference, and self-confidence. There were "with them also "sins against the Lord:" the abomination of Gibeah was both an evidence and effect of national degeneracy; and it called for deep humiliation and lamentation that such wickedness had been wrought in Israel, as well as for indignation against the criminals. They ought to have begun with personal and national repentance and reformation; with godly sorrow, solemn sacrifices, and earnest supplications. This was required in other wars, much more in such a war as this. (Deut. xxiii. 9.) No resolution should have been formed, until all this had been thoroughly attended to; nor until enquiry had been made of the Lord, what he would have them do on so melancholy an occasion. For they were not expressly commanded to proceed in this manner against any crime, however horrid, except idolatry: and we do not find, that they attempted any thing against the idolatrous Danites, (xviii:) whose conduct, though not so destructive of the peace of society, more immediately struck at the honour of God and the interests of true religion. Not attending to these previous duties, but going forth to battle under the guilt of their own sins, confiding in their superior numbers and the goodness of their cause, and elated with self-preference on account of their exemption from this crime and their zeal to punish it, they met at first with severe rebukes; and the Benjamites were employed to chastise them, before they executed the vengeance of God upon the Benjamites for their more atrocious wickedness. These observations will help to explain the difficulty, which strikes the reader at the first perusal of this chapter: how it was, that the Israelites with so good a cause, and good intentions, and ardent zeal, and some regard to religion, should meet with such disasters. Indeed the judgments of God are a great deep, and we frequently cannot discern the reasons of his dispensations: but in this case, his wisdom and justice are easily perceived by the attentive mind, and much important instruction may be thence derived.

V. 13.

13 Now therefore deliver us the men, the children of Belial, which are in Gibeah, that we may put them to death, and put away evil from Iſrael. But the children of Benjamin would not hearken to the voice of their brethren the children of Iſrael:

14 But the children of Benjamin gathered themſelves together out of the cities unto Gibeah, to go out to battle againſt the children of Iſrael.

15 And the children of Benjamin were numbered at that time out of the cities, twenty and ſix thouſand men that drew ſword, beſide the inhabitants of Gibeah, which were numbered ſeven hundred choſen men.

16 Among all this people there were ſeven hundred choſen men left-handed: every one could ſling ſtones at an hair-breadth, and not miſs.

17 And the men of Iſrael, beſide Benjamin, were numbered four hundred thouſand men that drew ſword; all theſe were men of war.

18 And the children of Iſrael aroſe, and went up to the houſe of God, and aſked counſel of God, and ſaid, Which of us ſhall go up firſt to the battle againſt the children of Benjamin? And the LORD ſaid, Judah ſhall go up firſt.

19 And the children of Iſrael roſe up in the morning, and encamped againſt Gibeah.

20 And the men of Iſrael went out to battle againſt Benjamin, and the men of Iſrael put themſelves in array to fight againſt them at Gibeah.

21 And the children of Benjamin came forth out of Gibeah, and deſtroyed down to the ground of the Iſraelites that day twenty and two thouſand men.

22 And the people the men of Iſrael encouraged themſelves, and ſet their battle again in array, in the place where they put themſelves in array the firſt day.

23 (And the children of Iſrael went up, and wept before the LORD until even, and aſked counſel of the LORD, ſaying, Shall I go up again to battle againſt the children of Benjamin my brother? And the LORD ſaid, Go up againſt him.)

24 And the children of Iſrael came near againſt the children of Benjamin the ſecond day.

25 And Benjamin went forth againſt them out of Gibeah the ſecond day, and deſtroyed down to the ground of the children of Iſrael again eighteen thouſand men; all theſe drew the ſword.

26 Then

V. 13. Benjamin, &c.] The conduct of the Iſraelites was very equitable in this demand: but whether the rulers of Gibeah ought not previouſly to have been applied to, to have delivered up all the criminals to juſtice, ſeems doubtful. However, the refuſal of the Benjamites, and their patronizing of ſo horrid a villainy becauſe committed by their own tribe, prove them to have been deeply corrupted; and (all their advantages conſidered) they were as ripe for divine vengeance, as the inhabitants of Sodom and Gomorrah had been. Confiding in their own valour and military ſkill, they ſeem to have firſt prepared for battle in this unequal conteſt.

V. 16. Left-handed, &c.] Whether theſe Benjamites could uſe both hands, as ſome think, or only the left-hand, they would diſcharge the ſtones in a direction, againſt which their opponents were not upon their guard, and thus do the greater execution. (1 Chron. xii. 2.) The Benjamites were much decreaſed, ſince they were numbered before their entrance into Canaan. (Numb. xxvi. 41.)

V. 18. Aſked counſel, &c.] This is the only tranſaction in this whole book where mention is made of the tabernacle, ark, prieſts, and ſacrifices; though they had been inſtituted in ſo expreſs and particular a manner; which circumſtance not only marks the ſinful inattention of Iſrael, but ſhews that the typical meaning of thoſe inſtitutions was the grand end deſigned by them. The Iſraelites did not on this occaſion enquire of the Lord, whether they ſhould war againſt the Benjamites or not? or what reformation, humiliation, faſting, or ſacrifices, ſhould precede the diſtreſſing enterprize? but they took it for granted that they ought to go up, and that they were worthy to be employed, and ſufficient to ſucceed in that ſervice, and only enquired which tribe ſhould have the precedency: accordingly they received an anſwer to this queſtion, which neither authorized the expedition, nor promiſed ſucceſs in it.

V. 23—25.] The people were much afflicted at ſo ſevere a rebuke, and ſomewhat affected with a ſenſe of their ſin, as having brought this calamity upon them: and they accordingly made their enquiry more particular than before. But they were not yet ſufficiently humbled or chaſtiſed; and therefore, though the Lord commanded them to go up to battle, they were again put to the worſe, and loſt ſo many men, that the whole number ſlain in the two encounters amounted to many more, than all the fighting men of the tribe of Benjamin. This was a public rebuke for national crimes, and ſhewed, that, though it was their duty to puniſh the offenders, they had not gone about it in the proper manner, and in a proper dependence upon the Lord.

V. 26.

26 Then all the children of Iſrael and all the people went up, and came unto the houſe of God, and wept, and ſat there before the LORD, and faſted that day until even, and offered burnt-offerings, and peace-offerings before the LORD.

27 And the children of Iſrael enquired of the LORD, (for the ark of the covenant of God was there in thoſe days; 28 And Phinehas, the ſon of Eleazar, the ſon of Aaron, ſtood before it in thoſe days,) ſaying, Shall I yet again go out to battle againſt the children of Benjamin my brother, or ſhall I ceaſe? And the LORD ſaid, Go up; for to-morrow I will deliver them into thine hand.

29 And Iſrael ſet liers in wait round about Gibeah.

30 And the children of Iſrael went up againſt the children of Benjamin on the third day, and put themſelves in array againſt Gibeah, as at other times.

31 And the children of Benjamin went out againſt the people, and were drawn away from the city; and they began to ſmite of the people, and kill, as at other times, in the high-ways, of which one goeth up to the houſe of God, and the other to Gibeah in the field, about thirty men of Iſrael.

32 And the children of Benjamin ſaid, They are ſmitten down before us as at the firſt. But the children of Iſrael ſaid, Let us flee, and draw them from the city unto the highways.

33 And all the men of Iſrael roſe up out of their place, and put themſelves in array at Baal-tamar; and the liers in wait of Iſrael came forth out of their places, even out of their meadows of Gibeah.

34 And there came againſt Gibeah ten thouſand choſen men out of all Iſrael, and the battle was ſore: but they knew not that evil was near them.

35 And the LORD ſmote Benjamin before Iſrael; and the children of Iſrael deſtroyed of the Benjamites that day twenty and five thouſand and an hundred men: all theſe drew the ſword.

36 So the children of Benjamin ſaw that they were ſmitten: for the men of Iſrael gave place to the Benjamites, becauſe they truſted unto the liers in wait which they had ſet beſide Gibeah.

37 And the liers in wait haſted, and ruſhed upon Gibeah: and the liers in wait drew themſelves along, and ſmote all the city with the edge of the ſword.

38 Now there was an appointed ſign between the men of Iſrael and the liers in wait, that they ſhould make a great flame with ſmoke to riſe up out of the city.

39 And when the men of Iſrael retired in the battle, Benjamin began to ſmite and kill of the men of Iſrael about thirty perſons; for they ſaid, Surely they are ſmitten down before us, as in the firſt battle.

40 But when the flame began to ariſe up out of the city with a pillar of ſmoke, the Benjamites looked behind them, and, behold, the flame of the city aſcended up to heaven.

41 And when the men of Iſrael turned again, the men of Benjamin were amazed: for they ſaw that evil was come upon them.

42 Therefore they turned their backs before the men of Iſrael unto the way of the wilderneſs; but the battle overtook them: and them which came out of the cities they deſtroyed in the midſt of them.

43 Thus

V. 26—28.] At length the people were convinced of their error; and inſtead of murmuring, or queſtioning the divine authority of the anſwers that they had received, as an unhumbled heart would have been prone to do; they blamed themſelves alone: and by weeping, praying, faſting, ſacrifices, and particular enquiries, of the Lord, conducted the ſolemn buſineſs, in the way in which it ſhould originally have been undertaken; i. e. in a ſpirit of humiliation, repentance, faith, and dependence on the Lord. So that their loſſes proved eventually bleſſings, by ſubſerving the cauſe of true religion amongſt them. Accordingly they received from the Lord a more particular anſwer, and a promiſe of ſucceſs, which was immediately fulfilled, though not without ſome further loſs. (31.) In the mean time the Benjamite's ſucceſs increaſed their inſolence, and hardened them to their deſtruction.

V. 35. The Lord ſmote, &c.] Though the numbers of the Iſraelites were ſo much ſuperior to thoſe of Benjamin; though their ſtratagem was well laid and executed, and the battle bravely fought; yet the inſpired penman aſcribes the victory to the Lord as entirely, as if he had ſmitten the Benjamites by miracle.

V. 47.

43 Thus they incloſed the Benjamites round about, and chaſed them, and trode them down with eaſe, over againſt Gibeah toward the ſun-riſing.

44 And there fell of Benjamin eighteen thouſand men: all theſe were men of valour.

45 And they turned, and fled toward the wilderneſs unto the rock of Rimmon: and they gleaned of them in the high-ways five thouſand men; and purſued hard after them unto Gidom, and ſlew two thouſand men of them.

46 So that all which fell that day of Benjamin were twenty and five thouſand men that drew the ſword: all theſe were men of valour.

47 But ſix hundred men turned, and fled to the wilderneſs unto the rock Rimmon, and abode in the rock Rimmon four months.

48 And the men of Iſrael turned again upon the children of Benjamin, and ſmote them with the edge of the ſword, as well the men of every city, as the beaſt, and all that came to hand: alſo they ſet on fire all the cities that they came to.

V. 47. Six hundred men, &c.] The ſmall number that are not mentioned, but which are required to make up the ſum total, are ſuppoſed to have been ſlain in the foregoing engagements: and it ſeems that the whole tribe of Benjamin, with all their women, and children, were deſtroyed, except ſix hundred men. The Iſraelites cannot be juſtified in this uncommanded, and undiſtinguiſhing ſlaughter, and were doubtleſs actuated by vehement reſentment: but the Lord was pleaſed to permit it, as an awful example to future ages of his vengeance againſt thoſe, who commit, and thoſe who countenance, and protect others in ſuch abominations. But though the battle in Gibeah ſo dreadfully overtook the Benjamites, it did not prevent the growth of ungodlineſs amongſt the other Iſraelites: ſo that "the battle "in Gibeah againſt the workers of iniquity did not over-"take them," (Hoſea, c. x. v. 9.)

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.

We are once more called to behold the fatal effects of indulged luſts; and taught to abſtain from, and mortify every ſinful inclination. Indignation againſt ſin, zeal, promptitude, ſelf-denial, unanimity, and reſolution in bringing criminals to juſtice, when united with a careful inveſtigation of facts, and circumſtances, that the innocent may not be involved with the guilty, are very commendable in rulers, and in every one according to their ſtation in ſociety: yet repentance of ſins, perſonal and national, with fruits meet for repentance; a dependance on God's mercy in Jeſus Chriſt for forgiveneſs and grace, and an application to him for direction and ſucceſs, are indiſpenſably neceſſary to enſure his acceptance and aſſiſtance. Nature can abhor with indignation the crimes of other men; but grace teaches us to lothe our own. Nature prompts us to puniſh others with ſeverity; grace inclines us to exerciſe ſeverity in mortifying our own luſts, and to be tender towards others. But if we attempt to execute wrath upon offenders, or even to reprove, and reform them, whilſt we are under the guilt of unrepented, and allowed ſin in our hearts, and lives; it is merciful in God to rebuke us ſharply for our hypocriſy, and not to leave us to be hardened in it through impunity. But having obtained forgiveneſs, and deliverance from our own ſins, we may reaſonably hope to be uſeful to others alſo: (Matt. c. vii. v. 1—5. Rom. c. ii. v. 1. 21—23. 1 Tim. c. iv. v. 16.) We may not judge of the goodneſs of a cauſe by it's ſucceſs at firſt, or for a long time; but muſt wait for the final iſſue of things, except we can determine by the law of God. And if we are baffled in our endeavours, (though honeſtly meant, and zealouſly perſiſted in,) to ſerve the cauſe of God; we are not to infer, that we are not called to, or are required to deſiſt from them; or even to content ourſelves in our ill ſucceſs: but we are reminded to inquire, whether we have begun our work at the right end? whether our private conduct do not blaſt our public endeavours? whether we have not been precipitate in our meaſures? whether we have duly adverted to our own character, as ſinners, and are habitually exerciſing repentance towards God, and faith in our Lord Jeſus Chriſt? whether we have not failed of humility, and of tenderneſs towards others? and whether by ſelf-preference, and ſelf-confidence we have not provoked the Lord to leave us experimentally to learn what we are in ourſelves, and what we can do without him? Many an honeſt and zealous endeavour, in a good cauſe, has attained but little ſucceſs; for ſuch reaſons as theſe. Therefore we ſhould ſtrictly examine, and deeply humble ourſelves for our ſins; praying earneſtly, that the Lord would not condemn us, but ſhew us wherefore he contendeth with us. And ſolemn times ſet apart for faſting and prayer are never more ſeaſonable, than when we are conſtrained to lament the ill ſucceſs, which hath attended our labours to glorify God, and promote his cauſe, whether as miniſters, or as private Chriſtians. When our failures have this effect, they will promote our ſucceſs; our blunders will increaſe our wiſdom, and our weakneſs will prove an occaſion of increaſing our ſpiritual ſtrength: ſatan, and his moſt formidable agents will in due time be conſtrained to give ground, and whatſoever we attempt ſhall proſper. In the mean time we ſhould thankfully accept of his chaſtiſement, and not deſpair of that ſucceſs, which we prematurely at firſt expected. But it is hard to temper zeal with tenderneſs, and boldneſs with meekneſs and wiſdom: impetuoſity hurries us into unwarrantable exceſſes, or timidity ſtops ſhort of proper deciſion. We ought therefore to watch careſully over our own ſpirits, and to pray continually to be preſerved from this ſtrange fire in the work of God: and above all to depend upon the atoning blood of Chriſt for the forgiveneſs, and acceptance of our beſt ſervices. The ſame conſiderations ſhould induce us to make candid allowances for thoſe, who are betrayed into ſimilar, or contrary miſtakes. But evil purſueth ſinners; their triumphing is ſhort, and increaſes their hardneſs, and preſumption: and how dreadful will be their caſe, when they ſhall ſee deſtruction coming upon them,

Their contrivance for furniſhing the others with wives, v.* 19—25.

NOW the men of Iſrael had ſworn in Mizpeh, ſaying, There ſhall not any of us give his daughter unto Benjamin to wife.

2 And the people came to the houſe of God, and abode there till even before God, and lifted up their voices, and wept ſore;

3 And ſaid, O LORD God of Iſrael, why is this come to paſs in Iſrael, that there ſhould be to-day one tribe lacking in Iſrael?

4 And it came to paſs on the morrow, that the people roſe early, and built there an altar, and offered burnt-offerings and peace-offerings.

5 And the children of Iſrael ſaid, Who is there among all the tribes of Iſrael that came not up with the congregation unto the LORD? for they had made a great oath concerning him that came not up to the LORD to Mizpeh, ſaying, He ſhall ſurely be put to death.

6 And the children of Iſrael repented them for Benjamin their brother, and ſaid, There is one tribe cut off from Iſrael this day:

7 How ſhall we do for wives for them that remain, ſeeing we have ſworn by the LORD, that we will not give them of our daughters to wives?

8 And they ſaid, What one is there of the tribes of Iſrael that came not up to Mizpeh to the LORD? And, behold, there came none to the camp from Jabeſh-gilead to the aſſembly.

9 For the people were numbered, and, behold, there were none of the inhabitants of Jabeſh-gilead there.

10 And the congregation ſent thither twelve thouſand men of the valianteſt, and commanded them, ſaying, Go and ſmite the inhabitants of Jabeſh-gilead with the edge of the ſword, with the women and the children.

11 And this is the thing that ye ſhall do, Ye ſhall utterly deſtroy every male, and every woman that hath lien by man.

12 And they found among the inhabitants of Jabeſh-gilead four hundred young virgins, that had known no man by lying with any without any poſſibility of eſcape! For though temporal calamities are often terrible, eternal miſery alone is to be feared entirely, and abſolutely. At that awful period ſinners will be holden in the cords of their own iniquities; their rejoicing will be turned into wailing, and gnaſhing of teeth, and all their hopes will iſſue in eternal deſpair. Hitherto there is ſpace given for repentance, a refuge provided, mercy proclaimed, and a throne of grace erected: thither let ſinners come, and plead the Saviour's name, and yet they ſhall be ſafe and happy. But how will they eſcape, who neglect ſo great ſalvation? all things will combine to haſten, and enhance their condemnation; eſpecially that of thoſe, who live under the light of the goſpel, whoſe crimes are more inexcuſable, and whoſe puniſhment will be proportionably ſevere. And all, who patronize, and delight in the workers of iniquity, will as accomplices ſhare their awful doom. From this condemnation good Lord deliver us!

NOTES.

CHAP. XXI.] V. 1. There ſhall not, &c.] This raſh vow was the effect of the people's great indignation at the brutal crime of the men of Gibeah, and at the tribe of Benjamin, for protecting them. They deemed thoſe unworthy to be married to any of the daughters of Iſrael, who could treat another man's wife in ſuch a manner, or ſide with thoſe who did: and they haſtily ſwore that they would none of them marry their daughters to them: the conſequence of which ſeemed to be, either that a tribe would periſh from Iſrael; or that the ſurviving Benjamites would be conſtrained to marry heathen wives, contrary to law. Thus they brought themſelves needleſsly into great perplexities, and at laſt evaded the vow by a mere artifice.

V. 4. They built there an altar, &c.] As ſo great a multitude was aſſembled, and there were ſo many occaſions for offering ſin-offerings, burnt-offerings, thank-offerings, and vows, &c, probably the brazen altar was found inſufficient, and this was erected as a temporary addition to it, for the preſent occaſion: it ſeems to have been built at Shiloh, (v. 2.)

V. 5. A great oath, &c.] They who refuſed their aſſiſtance on this occaſion were doubtleſs blame-worthy, but this did not warrant their brethren thus to devote them to total extirpation. They were backward enough in attempting to extirpate the Canaanites, who were God's devoted enemies; but very haſty to vow the deſtruction of their brethren, who ſlighted their authority.

V. 9—12. None of the, &c.] This city lay at a conſiderable diſtance, beyond Jordan, in the borders of the Ammonites, and might not have heard of the vow, that had been made. But if they were guilty of neglect, and diſaffection to the common cauſe, they had not aſſiſted the Benjamites: and yet when the people were grieved for having proceeded to ſuch extremities againſt them; they proceeded to treat thoſe, who were far leſs criminal, with equal rigour! Surely a ſlighter puniſhment might have ſufficed, and enough of the blood of Iſrael had already been male:

male: and they brought them unto the camp to Shiloh, which is in the land of Canaan.

13 And the whole congregation ſent ſome to ſpeak to the children of Benjamin that were in the rock Rimmon, and to call peaceably unto them.

14 And Benjamin came again at that time; and they gave them wives, which they had ſaved alive of the women of Jabeſh-gilead: and yet ſo they ſufficed them not.

15 And the people repented them for Benjamin, becauſe that the LORD had made a breach in the tribes of Iſrael.

16 Then the elders of the congregation ſaid, How ſhall we do for wives for them that remain, ſeeing the women are deſtroyed out of Benjamin?

17 And they ſaid, There muſt be an inheritance for them that be eſcaped of Benjamin, that a tribe be not deſtroyed out of Iſrael.

18 Howbeit, we may not give them wives of our daughters: for the children of Iſrael have ſworn, ſaying, Curſed be he that giveth a wife to Benjamin.

19 Then they ſaid, Behold, there is a feaſt of the LORD in Shiloh yearly, in a place which is on the north ſide of Beth-el, on the eaſt ſide of the high-way that goeth up from Beth-el to Shechem, and on the ſouth of Lebonah.

20 Therefore they commanded the children of Benjamin, ſaying, Go and lie in wait in the vineyards;

21 And ſee, and, behold, if the daughters of Shiloh come out to dance in dances, then come ye out of the vineyards, and catch you every man his wife of the daughters of Shiloh, and go to the land of Benjamin.

22 And it ſhall be, when their fathers or their brethren come unto us to complain, that we will ſay unto them, Be favourable unto them for our ſakes; becauſe we reſerved not to each man his wife in the war: for ye did not give unto them at this time, that ye ſhould be guilty.

23 And the children of Benjamin did ſo, and took them wives according to their number, of them that danced, whom they caught: and they went and returned unto their inhe-ſhed! In interpreting their oath, they concluded to ſpare the virgins; probably with reference to the orders given concerning the Midianitiſh women; (Numb. c. xxxi. v. 17, 18.) But if their great curſe would admit of this limitation; why could they not have ſpared the other women, and children, and innocent perſons, and only have puniſhed the criminals? But eſpecially why did they not aſk counſel of the Lord, before they proceeded to action? The habit of military executions, which they had contracted in the wars of Canaan, in obedience to the Lord's expreſs command, ſeems to have had too great influence upon them in this affair, without making proper diſtinctions: and convenience, rather than juſtice, or piety ſeems to have induced them to ſpare the virgins, that they might be extricated from ſome of the difficulties, in which their other oath had involved them. But they would have acted better, if they had repented of their raſh oaths, brought their ſin-offerings, and ſought forgiveneſs in the appointed way, than thus to attempt to avoid the guilt of perjury, by actions equally unjuſtifiable.

V. 17. There muſt be an inheritance, &c.] The whole inheritance of the tribe was the property of the ſurvivors; and therefore wives muſt be procured them, that they might be repleniſhed to occupy it. The conduct of the Iſraelites in preſerving to the tribe of Benjamin its whole inheritance, was very commendable. Thus the ſurviving Benjamites were unexpectedly advanced to great affluence, by the miſerable deſtruction of their relations: and had it not been for the oath, many of the Iſraelites would have readily contracted alliances with them; by which it appears that they acted conſcientiouſly, though under a miſtaken opinion.

V. 21. Dance in dances, &c.] As ſacred dances formed a part of the religious ſolemnities under that diſpenſation; and as this feaſt was obſerved at Shiloh, we may ſuppoſe that it was a religious feſtival; perhaps the feaſt of tabernacles: otherwiſe dancing would have been very unſeaſonable in this time of public affliction. Yet probably the religious joy had gradually given place to a more diſſipated, and ſenſual mirth; as hath been the caſe with the feſtivals, which have been cuſtomarily obſerved in the Chriſtian church. Theſe dances were of young women only, without either men, or married women. This permiſſion was an evaſion of the vow, and gave licenſe to fraud, violence, and the marriage of children, without the conſent of their parents: and if that might be allowed of, the Benjamites could have found themſelves wives, without their giving them their daughters, and without uſing auy force towards them.

V. 22. Each man, &c.] In this diminiſhed ſtate of the tribe, when every Benjamite could have maintained ſeveral wives, they only deviſed to procure one for each man: whence it appears, that polygamy, though connived at, was not generally practiſed amongſt them. Nor did they ever propoſe ſending them to the neighbouring nations to procure wives; by which it is probable, that ſuch marriages were not very common at that time.

V. 23. And dwelt in them.] Thus the remains of the ſitance, and repaired the cities, and dwelt in them.

24 And the children of Iſrael departed thence at that time, every man to his tribe, and to his family, and they went out from thence every man to his inheritance.

25 In thoſe days there was no king in Iſrael: every man did that which was right in his own eyes.

tribe began to increaſe; and ſome compute, that Ehud was raiſed up to be the judge of Iſrael, of this tribe, after it had been thus diminiſhed.

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.

When the paſſions are vehemently excited, thoſe meaſures appear needful, which afterwards are perceived to be unreaſonable, and unlawful. Such times require peculiar caution, and deliberation, that our paſſions may have leiſure to ſubſide; elſe we ſhall certainly make work for bitter repentance. There is this danger in all conteſts public and private; and a good cauſe often becomes the occaſion of great crimes, as the exceſs of zeal carries men beyond all the bounds of equity, and humanity. Well might the politic Romans refuſe triumphs to thoſe, who conquered in civil war; in which, the common intereſt is weakened, and the common enemies exult, whatever party acquires the aſcendancy. Such unnatural contentions are generally conducted with the moſt pertinacious fury, and the moſt envenomed reſentment, through the depravity of the human heart, and the ſubtlety of ſatan! But he triumphs ſtill more, when he can excite diviſions, and contentions in the church of God, whereby the truth is diſgraced, the weak, and prejudiced are ſtumbled, and the enemies of religion alone are rejoiced. Yet many perſons of apparent godlineſs, uſe greater aſperity againſt their brethren, who are not exactly of their mind; than againſt the avowed oppoſers of all religion! But all ſuch conteſts end in bitterneſs; (2 Sam. c. ii. v. 26, 27;) and the combatants will ere long weep over the effects of their own ſucceſs. Nothing can be more abſurd, than oaths taken, and ſolemn vows made, in the heat of paſſion: many have thereby entangled themſelves in inextricable perplexity, have been induced to add one crime to another, and to uſe the moſt diſingenuous evaſions, and equivocations: (Matt. c. xiv. v. 7—11. Acts c. xxiii. v. 12—24:) of all things they require the moſt cautious reflection upon their future probable conſequences. Our penitent confeſſions, and devotional exerciſes are too often ſucceeded by relapſes into ſin, for want of ſimply ſeeking direction from God, and depending on him to uphold us; whereby alone, we can diſcern, and proceed in the ſafe path, with comfort to ourſelves, and with honour to our profeſſion. Even neceſſary juſtice ſhould be executed with deep concern: and men would not be forward in inflicting vengeance on leſſer offenders, whilſt more atrocious criminals were ſpared, were they not more ambitious of dominion for themſelves, than zealous for the glory of God. Even lawful employments may induce habits, which will be apt to influence the conduct in concerns of another nature, and with very bad effect: we ſhould therefore ſeek for ſelf-knowledge, keep a ſtrict watch upon our hearts, and be daily conſulting the word of God as the rule of our duty. When great offenders are much caſt down, they ſhould be treated with gentleneſs, and preſerved, if poſſible from temptations to deſpair, and total apoſtacy: and every act of apparent ſeverity ſhould be connected with evident diſintereſtedneſs. Too often the ordinances of God degenerate into a mere form, and carnal mirth ſupplants holy rejoicing: but thoſe ſcenes, which the ſenſual, moſt delight in, expoſe them to unthought of conſequences; (Eccl. c. xi. v. 9;) and give ſatan, and deſigning men their utmoſt advantage againſt them: all our chearfulneſs ſhould therefore be tempered with reflection, and watchfulneſs. Children are generally very culpable, who marry without the conſent of their parents; and they are ſtill more vile, who entice them to do ſo: yet when the matter cannot be remedied, it is commonly the parent's duty, and wiſdom to be favourable, and to make the beſt of it. That men can be ſo abſurd, as to counſel others to acts of treachery, or violence, and to countenance them therein, out of a ſenſe of duty, forms a ſtriking proof of the blindneſs of the human mind, when left to itſelf; and of the fatal effects of an ignorant, or erroneous conſcience. Our troubles in this world may be ſucceeded by ſeaſons of comfort, and iſſue in our advantage; but they, who are cut off in their ſins, ſink into evil, only evil, and that for ever. Finally, we ſhould be thankful for good magiſtrates, to reſtrain the violence of wicked men: but the fear, and love of God ſhould reſtrain us from doing what is right in our own eyes, except as they are opened to behold the excellency of his moſt holy law.

THE BOOK OF

R U T H.

This ſhort book forms an appendix to the book of Judges, and an introduction to the enſuing hiſtory. It contains many particulars concerning the family of Elimelech, and informs us in what manner Ruth, a Moabiteſs, became the wife of Boaz, and an anceſtor of David, and of Chriſt. The chief events of the hiſtory took place at Beth-lehem, afterwards the city of David, whoſe genealogy concludes the book; and they muſt have occurred early in the time of the Judges. And probably Samuel was the penman thereof. We find in this Book excellent examples of faith, piety, patience, humility, induſtry, and loving kindneſs, in the ordinary occurrences of life: intimations of the ſpecial care, which God's providence takes of our moſt minute concerns, encouraging our entire confidence therein: and ſome typical repreſentations of the condeſcending love of the Saviour, in aſſuming the likeneſs of ſinful fleſh; and in bringing us ſinners of the Gentiles into the cloſeſt union with himſelf, and enriching us with all his unſearchable riches: theſe ſhould bind our hearts to his ſervice, and conſtrain us to live to his glory.

Before Chriſt 1320.

CHAP. I.

Contains, 1ſt. Elimelech, and his family going into the land of Moab; his death; the marriage of his two ſons with Moabitiſh women; their death without children, and Naomi Elimelech's widow preparing to return into the land of Iſrael, v. 1—6. 2d. Orpah and Ruth, her daughters-in-law, propoſing to accompany her; her converſation with them, Orpah's return back, and Ruth's profeſſion, and reſolution to attend her, v. 7—18. 3d. Their arrival and reception at Beth-lehem, v. 19—22.

NOW it came to paſs, in the days when the judges ruled, that there was a famine in the land: and a certain man of Beth-lehem-judah went to ſojourn in the country of Moab, he and his wife, and his two ſons.

Before Chriſt 1320.

2 And the name of the man was Elimelech, and the name of his wife Naomi, and the name of his two ſons Mahlon, and Chilion, Ephrathites of Beth-lehem-judah: and they came into the country of Moab, and continued there.

3 And Elimelech, Naomi's huſband, died; and ſhe was left, and her two ſons.

4 And they took them wives of the women of Moab; the name of the one was Orpah, and the name of the other Ruth: and they dwelled there about ten years.

5 And Mahlon and Chilion died alſo both of them; and the woman was left of her two ſons and her huſband.

NOTES.

CHAP. I.] V. 1. Went to ſojourn, &c.] This removal of Elimelech from the ordinances and people of God appears to have been improper. The famine was not ſo extreme, but others could endure it, and he was a perſon of property, and not likely to want the neceſſaries of life. Probably he thought that he could live better, and at leſs expence in the land of Moab, than in Canaan; but it terminated in the impoveriſhing, and waſting of his family. Elimelech "ſignifies my God the king," and Mahlon, and Chilion, ſignify "ſickneſs, and conſumption," having perhaps been children of a weakly conſtitution.

V. 4. They took them wives, &c.] This was the natural conſequence of Elimelech's conduct, in bringing them away from the people of God, and leading them into an acquaintance with the women of Moab. Thus they ſettled in the land of Moab, and ſpent their lives amongſt idolaters, eſtranged from the worſhip of Jehovah; and had they left families, they would probably have been incorporated with the Moabites.

6 Then she arose with her daughters-in-law, that she might return from the country of Moab: for she had heard in the country of Moab, how that the LORD had visited his people in giving them bread.

7 Wherefore she went forth out of the place where she was, and her two daughters-in-law with her: and they went on the way to return unto the land of Judah.

8 And Naomi said unto her two daughters-in-law, Go, return each to her mother's house: the LORD deal kindly with you, as ye have dealt with the dead, and with me.

9 The LORD grant you that ye may find rest, each of you in the house of her husband. Then she kissed them: and they lifted up their voice, and wept.

10 And they said unto her, Surely we will return with thee unto thy people.

11 And Naomi said, Turn again, my daughters; why will ye go with me? are there yet any more sons in my womb, that they may be your husbands?

12 Turn again, my daughters, go your way; for I am too old to have an husband. If I should say, I have hope, if I should have an husband also to-night, and should also bear sons;

13 Would ye tarry for them till they were grown? would ye stay for them from having husbands? nay, my daughters: for it grieveth me much for your sakes, that the hand of the LORD is gone out against me.

14 And they lifted up their voice, and wept again: and Orpah kissed her mother-in-law; but Ruth clave unto her.

15 And she said, Behold, thy sister-in-law is gone back unto her people, and unto her gods: return thou after thy sister-in-law.

16 And Ruth said, Intreat me not to leave thee, or to return from following after thee: for whither thou goest, I will go; and where thou lodgest, I will lodge: thy people shall be my people, and thy God my God.

17 Where thou diest will I die, and there will I be buried: the LORD do so to me, and more also, if ought but death part thee and me.

18 When she saw that she was stedfastly minded to go with her, then she left speaking unto her.

19 So they two went until they came to

V. 6. Then she arose, &c.] Perhaps Naomi abode in this strange country contrary to her inclination out of regard to her husband, and her sons; and she was now encouraged to return, by hearing, that the Lord had visited the land with greater plenty; for it would have been very hard for a destitute widow to return home, in a time of great scarcity. She seems to have been a person of eminent faith, and piety, and to have diligently instructed her daughters-in-law in the true religion; which she recommended by her example. They both had a great affection for her, and at first purposed to go with her into the land of Israel, notwithstanding her afflicted condition, though Orpah's resolution failed upon the trial. And their conduct to their husbands, and to herself, received her commendation, and excited her good wishes, and fervent prayers for them.

V. 11. That they may be, &c.] According to the law, and custom of the surviving brother marrying the widow of the deceased, who left no children. Naomi thus intimated to them, that she had no temporal advantages, or prospects to propose to them, if they were not disposed to accompany her out of disinterested love to God, and to the people of Israel. Upon this Orpah, not being prepared to venture all consequences, and renounce all her worldly prospects, for the sake of religion, though reluctantly, and with tokens of affection for Naomi, returned back to her country, her relations, and her gods; (Matt. c. xix. v. 22. 2 Tim. c. iv. ver. 10.)

V. 15. Return thou, &c.] Naomi did not desire that Ruth should return; but she intended to make trial of her sincerity, and to excite her to consider how she could bear poverty, and hardship, for the sake of the God of Israel. That if she were not in earnest it might now be discovered; or that she might set out with more steady determination of mind, and more absolute dependance on the grace of God, to enable to stand stedfast in her profession. When therefore she perceived that she was stedfastly minded to go with her, she spake no more upon that subject.

V. 16. Intreat me not, &c.] The examples and instructions of Naomi had given Ruth the most favourable opinion of the character and religion of the Israelites, so that she desired to have her lot with them at any rate: for the sake of this, she was willing to renounce all her connexions, and prospects in the land of Moab, and to embrace hardship, and penury in a strange country, (c. ii. v. 11.) She was also determined to cleave to Naomi, whose converse had been so useful to her, however destitute, and afflicted she were, until death separated them. For her sincerity in this profession she called the Lord to witness, as well as to multiply her troubles, if she did not fulfill this her solemn engagement. These were doubtless the effects of true faith, and grace; and we may be sure that he who had thus far taught her, would bring her acquainted with every thing necessary to her salvation, and comfort, in due season, and order; and her future conduct evinced that her profession was sincere, and her faith living and genuine. Thus she renounced idolatry, and became a worshipper, and servant of the living God, and counted all but loss for the sake of his favour, and salvation.

V. 19. Was moved, &c.] Naomi had probably lived in affluence, and had been much respected: her neighbours

Beth-lehem. And it came to pass, when they were come to Beth-lehem, that all the city was moved about them; and they said, Is this Naomi?

20 And she said unto them, Call me not Naomi, call me Mara: for the Almighty hath dealt very bitterly with me.

21 I went out full, and the LORD hath brought me home again empty: why then call ye me Naomi, seeing the LORD hath testified against me, and the Almighty hath afflicted me?

22 So Naomi returned, and Ruth the Moabitess, her daughter-in-law, with her, which returned out of the country of Moab: and they came to Beth-lehem in the beginning of barley-harvest.

were therefore much surprised to see her return home, so altered in her appearance, and circumstances.

V. 20. Call me, &c.] Naomi signifies "pleasant," but Mara signifies "bitter:" she humbly considered her afflictions as coming from the Lord's hand upon her, and her family, for her sins, and that thereby "the Almighty testified against her," (v. 13:) perhaps considering herself to have been guilty in not leaving the land of Moab, immediately upon the death of her husband.

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.

We cannot form any judgment of the Lord's love or hatred towards us, or others, by outward circumstances; for whom he loves he chastens for their profit, and leaves his enemies to be hardened in prosperity. Afflictions should be submitted to, as the rebuke of God, and we are reminded by them to exercise repentance, and resignation to the divine will: for every endeavour, by carnal policy, to shift off correction, will eventually entangle us in greater difficulties. They, who, when they meet with inconveniency, or hardship, are disposed to change their situations, seldom prosper in this world; and prove that they understand not the real causes of their uneasiness: the displeasure of God, and the pride, and impatience of our hearts, cannot be avoided by change of place, or situation; and whilst these remain, we shall find misery, whithersoever we remove. But when we are tempted to remove from the ordinances of God, and the communion of his people, out of secular motives, we should "remember Lot," and Sodom. In such measures our children, and families are deeply concerned: if they are estranged from the people, and house of God, and brought acquainted with persons of no religion, or of a false religion, no other can be expected, but that they will closely connect themselves with them, and have their portion with them living and dying. Better would it be, to be pinched with poverty, and worn down with labour in the Lord's land, than to live in luxury, and ease, by hazarding such consequences. For our earthly trials, or enjoyments are of short continuance; death is continually removing those of every age, and situation; breaking in upon the most endeared unions as soon as formed, and marring all our outward comforts: we cannot therefore too decidedly prefer those advantages, which shall endure for ever; that we may be ready for every separating stroke. If we are constrained to dwell for a season in places of temptation, we should retire, when the necessity ceases; and consider every rebuke in God's providence as a call to us, to come out, and be separate from the workers of iniquity. If the Lord visit his people, in giving them bread, they ought to be content, and thankful, though they have not abundance of silver, and gold: and the assurance, that he will supply the real necessities of his true servants, should encourage us chearfully to cast our lot amongst them. In every situation, and relation in life, especially amongst such, as are strangers to, or prejudiced against the truth, believers must aim to adorn the doctrine of God our Saviour in all things. And when they behave with prudence, integrity, meekness, and kindness; when they have well performed the duties of relative life; when they shew attention to the temporal comfort, and compassion for the sufferings of those around them, with a readiness to do them good; and when they commend what is right in the moral, and relative conduct of those, who are not acquainted with spiritual things; they win much upon them, and render them more disposed to take in good part their endeavours to do good to their souls: and thus, beside the comfort of domestic harmony, the Lord will bless such a conduct, to be the means of bringing those, who were ignorant, careless, or prejudiced, to inquire after his truth, and salvation: whilst the contrary behaviour of too many professors forms the grand prejudice against true religion in the minds of thousands. However many will entertain an affection for such believers, as have been kind to them, and will have favourable sentiments of the gospel; who will not renounce all their worldly interests, pleasures, connexions, and prospects, and join themselves to the poor, and despised people of God, for the sake of Christ, and his salvation. They more desire, "rest in the house of an husband," or in some worldly settlement, or satisfaction, than that rest, to which Jesus invites our souls; and therefore upon trial they will depart from Christ, though sorrowful, and reluctant. Nothing but a deep sense of the importance of eternal things; and a conviction of our guilt, and our need of a Saviour: nothing but that faith, which is inseparably connected with true repentance, and hatred of sin, and which works by love of Christ, and his people, his truths, ordinances, and precepts, will carry a man through all possible temptations in such a world as this. And therefore the Lord proves those, who profess themselves his disciples, by setting the consequences before them in his word, and by giving them some experience of them in his Providence; by which they, who have not faith, are discouraged, and go back to their own people, and their idols: this, though lamentable, is no one's loss but their own. And though we ought greatly to desire the increase of true Christians, yet we should be cautious in our endeavours to multiply the number of professors; lest we engage those, who will betray the cause, that they are expected to defend. Especially we ought to examine whether we ourselves are thus stedfastly minded, and determined to cast our lot with the Lord's people, however poor, despised, or persecuted; and that living, or dying, and for ever? We should inquire whether this be our aim, and prayer? Whe-

AND Naomi had a kinſman of her huſband's, a mighty man of wealth, of the family of Elimelech; and his name was Boaz.

2 And Ruth the Moabiteſs ſaid unto Naomi, Let me now go to the field, and glean ears of corn after him, in whoſe ſight I ſhall find grace. And ſhe ſaid unto her, Go, my daughter.

3 And ſhe went, and came, and gleaned in the field after the reapers: and her hap was to light on a part of the field belonging unto Boaz, who was of the kindred of Elimelech.

4 And, behold, Boaz came from Bethlehem, and ſaid unto the reapers, The LORD be with you. And they anſwered him, The LORD bleſs thee.

5 Then ſaid Boaz unto his ſervant that was ſet over the reapers, Whoſe damſel is this?

6 And the ſervant that was ſet over the reapers anſwered, and ſaid, It is the Moabitiſh damſel that came back with Naomi out of the country of Moab;

7 And ſhe ſaid, I pray you, let me glean and gather after the reapers amongſt the ſheaves: ſo ſhe came, and hath continued even from the morning until now, that ſhe tarried a little in the houſe.

8 Then ſaid Boaz unto Ruth, Heareſt thou not, my daughter? Go not to glean in another field, neither go from hence, but abide here faſt by my maidens.

9 Let thine eyes be on the field that they do reap, and go thou after them: have I not charged the young men that they ſhall not touch thee? and when thou art athirſt, go unto the veſſels, and drink of that which the young men have drawn.

ther the proſpect of ſecular advantage has not ſome influence upon our minds? And whether, if that were withdrawn, or changed for the proſpect of poverty, and ſuffering, we ſhould not be tempted to draw back? But if we thus decided in our judgment for the Lord, and his ſervice, and ſalvation, he will aſſuredly accept of, and provide for us; he will make up all our loſſes, ſupport us under all our trials, and communicate unſpeakable conſolations; and whilſt others draw back unto perdition, we ſhall believe unto the ſaving of our ſouls: nay we ſhall even grow more determined by the apoſtacy of others, and by our own difficulties, and temptations: if we are reduced in our circumſtances, we ſhall be more grieved for the ſake of others, than for ourſelves; the conſciouſneſs of our ſins will teach us to ſubmit to our trials without murmuring: and our mourning will be mingled with heavenly ſweetneſs. Whilſt we remark the changes, that take place with reſpect to others, with compaſſion we ſhould be reminded to prepare for changes ourſelves, eſpecially for our laſt change; when the true believer ſhall find that all things have worked together for his everlaſting good.

NOTES.

CHAP. II.] V. 2. Let me now, &c.] When Naomi and Ruth were ſettled in ſome homely lodging at Bethlehem; the latter, expecting nothing in Canaan but a life of hard labour, and mean fare, propoſed to go and glean in ſome field, where ſhe might obtain ſuch a favour; for the ſubſiſtence of herſelf, and her mother in-law, who was unable to endure the fatigue and heat, incident to ſuch an employment. The Lord indeed intended other things for her; but he was pleaſed in this manner to prove her ſincerity, humility, induſtry, and patience; and her affection to Naomi for his ſake. Such a trial Orpah could not have ſtood; but had ſhe been aſſured of ſuch a ſettlement in Iſrael, as Ruth at length obtained, ſhe would have come alſo, and have made an hypocritical profeſſion of religion for the ſake of ſecular advantage.

V. 3. Her hap, &c.] This circumſtance was with Ruth merely accidental, and not the reſult of choice, or contrivance; but it was the effect of the Lord's ſecret direction, in whoſe providence great events depend upon apparently trivial incidents.

V. 4. The Lord be with you, &c.] The name of Boaz ſignifies, "ſtrength is in him," and he was a "mighty man "of wealth;" but he was not above perſonally ſuperintending his own reapers; which is generally both for the maſter's intereſt, and the ſervant's comfort. The pious, affectionate language interchanged betwixt him, and his reapers, and which appears to have been familiar to them, induces us to hope that there were many godly perſons in Iſrael, notwithſtanding national defections: and it ſhews what effect their religion had upon their relative conduct, and common converſation, which all ſavoured of unaffected piety, and mutual good-will, producing affability in Boaz, and reſpect and affection in them. It is too lamentably true, that ſuch language as this is ſeldom heard in our fields, whilſt the bounty of Providence is gathering in; but frequently the reverſe; yea whatever can inflame the paſſions, and corrupt the morals, is both heard, and witneſſed on theſe occaſions: ſo that a ſtranger, who ſhould occaſionally be preſent, would thence be apt to form a very different opinion of the religion of England, than Ruth did of that of Iſrael, from the converſe and conduct of Boaz, and his reapers.

V. 10. Seeing I am a ſtranger.] That is, no Iſraelite, herſelf herſelf to the ground, and ſaid unto him, Why have I found grace in thine eyes, that thou ſhouldeſt take knowledge of me, ſeeing I am a ſtranger?

11 And Boaz anſwered and ſaid unto her, It hath fully been ſhewed me all that thou haſt done unto thy mother-in-law ſince the death of thine huſband; and how thou haſt left thy father and thy mother, and the land of thy nativity, and art come unto a people which thou kneweſt not heretofore.

12 The LORD recompenſe thy work, and a full reward be given thee of the LORD God of Iſrael, under whoſe wings thou art come to truſt.

13 Then ſhe ſaid, Let me find favour in thy ſight, my lord; for that thou haſt comforted me, and for that thou haſt ſpoken friendly unto thine handmaid, though I be not like unto one of thine handmaidens.

14 And Boaz ſaid unto her, At meal-time come thou hither, and eat of the bread, and dip thy morſel in the vinegar. And ſhe ſat beſide the reapers: and he reached her parched corn, and ſhe did eat, and was ſufficed, and left.

15 And when ſhe was riſen up to glean, Boaz commanded his young men, ſaying, Let her glean even among the ſheaves, and reproach her not:

16 And let fall alſo ſome of the handfuls of purpoſe for her, and leave them, that ſhe may glean them, and rebuke her not.

17 So ſhe gleaned in the field until even, and beat out that ſhe had gleaned: and it was about an ephah of barley.

18 And ſhe took it up, and went into the city; and her mother-in-law ſaw what ſhe had gleaned: and ſhe brought forth, and gave to her that ſhe had reſerved after ſhe was ſufficed.

19 And her mother-in-law ſaid unto her, Where haſt thou gleaned to-day? and where wroughteſt thou? bleſſed be he that did take knowledge of thee. And ſhe ſhewed her mother-in-law with whom ſhe had wrought, and ſaid, The man's name with whom I wrought to-day is Boaz.

but a Heathen born, and brought up, a Moabiteſs, who am unworthy the regard, and unmeet for the ſociety of the people of God, even for that of the handmaidens, (v. 13.) the pooreſt of them; much leſs of the attention of one ſo eminent amongſt them. (Matt. c. xv. v. 26, 27. Luke c. vii. v. 6, 7.)

V. 11, 12.] Ruth had renounced the gods of Moab, and become a profeſſed worſhipper, and ſervant of the God of Iſrael. In proof of her ſincerity, ſhe had left the land of her nativity, where ſhe might have expected a comfortable ſettlement, to come into the land of Iſrael, without any proſpect of ſubſiſtance, but by her labour. She had left her parents, who were ſtill living, and her other relations, and friends, to come to a people, with whom ſhe had had no previous acquaintance, but againſt whom ſhe had been educated in prejudice, and enmity; and to attach herſelf to a poor widow, whom by her induſtry ſhe muſt help to maintain. And this ſhe did, becauſe ſhe believed that Jehovah was the only true God, and Iſrael his people: and therefore ſhe deſired to be aſſociated with them, and to have the benefit of the ordinances, and inſtructions, with which they were favoured. Thus ſhe came to truſt under the wings of the Lord God of Iſrael, depending on his power, care, and love, both for the bleſſings of ſalvation, and for the things, which were needful for the body. This her conduct had been much noticed, and Boaz had heard of it, and had formed a favourable opinion of her faith, and piety; and therefore he ſhewed her much kindneſs, encouraging her induſtry and affording her protection: and he aſſured her of his prayers for her, "that the Lord would recompenſe her work, &c:" for, though nothing, that we do, can merit ought of God, as a debt; yet every thing which is done, and every advantage, which is renounced for the Lord's ſake, out of humble faith, ſhall certainly be recompenſed with a gracious reward; perhaps in this world with more deſirable temporal comforts; than thoſe, which have been left behind: aſſuredly with inward peace, and with eternal life at laſt; (Luke c. xviii. v. 29, 30.) In all ages, and nations, converſion is ſubſtantially the ſame: irreligion or falſe religion are therein exchanged for the ſpiritual worſhip of the true God, through the appointed mediator, and in his inſtituted ordinances; the practice of ſin is changed for the purſuit of true holineſs; ſelf-dependance, for reliance upon God's mercy, grace, and providence for every thing; the expectation of felicity from the world, for the favour of God, as our portion; and the company of the workers of iniquity, for the ſociety of thoſe, who love, and ſerve God. But many circumſtantials depend upon a man's outward ſituation. They who have godly parents, and relations, who are engaged in lawful, and uſeful employments, and live in peaceable times, will not be immediately required to make the ſame ſacrifices, as they are, who are called out of families of embittered oppoſers, from occupations inconſiſtent with the precepts of God's word, or in times of furious perſecution. However the more we venture, renounce, or ſuffer for the Lord's ſake, the clearer evidence we have, that our faith is genuine, and that we ſhall receive a full reward. The principle, and the precept are in all caſes alike; but the application varies, according as different trials are allotted us, in the providence of God.

20 And Naomi ſaid unto her daughter-in-law, Bleſſed be he of the LORD, who hath not left off his kindneſs to the living and to the dead. And Naomi ſaid unto her, The man is near of kin unto us, one of our next kinſmen.

21 And Ruth the Moabiteſs ſaid, He ſaid unto me alſo, Thou ſhalt keep faſt by my young men, until they have ended all my harveſt.

22 And Naomi ſaid unto Ruth her daughter-in-law, It is good, my daughter, that thou go out with his maidens, that they meet thee not in any other field.

23 So ſhe kept faſt by the maidens of Boaz to glean unto the end of barley-harveſt and of wheat-harveſt; and dwelt with her mother-in-law.

V. 20. To the living, &c.] Boaz had been kind to Elimelech's family, before his removal to the land of Moab; and Naomi rejoiced that his care of her had revived, when ſhe ſo much needed his aſſiſtance; and ſhe begged of the Lord to repay him with his bleſſing.

V. 22. That they meet thee not, &c.] That would ſeem a ſlight put upon the kindneſs ſhewn her, as well as evidence an inconſtant temper of mind, which would give them an unfavourable opinion of her.

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.

The diſtinctions, which we form in our narrow minds, concerning little, and great, mean, or important in the perſons, and affairs of men, do not comport with the judgment of the Lord: the gleaning of a poor Moabiteſs, who truſted in him, was deemed more worthy of his condeſcending notice, than the tranſactions of the greateſt princes, then living, which are almoſt entirely conſigned to oblivion. We ought not therefore to mind high things, but to condeſcend to men of low eſtate; and neither to glory in, nor to value others for thoſe diſtinctions, which the Lord thus diſregards. Honeſt induſtry, humble patience in poverty, and hardſhip, and a willingneſs to labour for aged parents, relations, or benefactors, who are unable to provide for themſelves, when they ſpring from true faith, are both honourable, and acceptable to God. True religion will teach a man to behave with propriety in every circumſtance, and relation of life, and will form kind maſters, faithful ſervants, and harmonious families: it will produce mutual love amongſt perſons of different ranks, and engage the rich to condeſcenſion, and the poor to humble, and reſpectful behaviour to their ſuperiors, and benefactors: and it will naturally expreſs itſelf in prayer, and praiſe. This return the pooreſt may render for favours beſtowed, and no liberality will excuſe the rich in the neglect of it: and the good examples of thoſe, who are placed in eminent ſtations, and employ many in their ſervice, are moſt extenſively beneficial. With what gratitude to God, and liberality to the poor ſhould the bounty of a kind providence be received by us unworthy ſinners! and how inexcuſable are they, who abuſe their plenty in intemperance, or covetouſly neglect the indigent, or allow themſelves in wickedneſs, when they are thus experiencing the goodneſs of the Lord! For if the unexpected, and unmerited favours, which we receive from our fellow creatures, engage us to gratitude; what return ought we to render to the Lord for his mercies? In ſhewing kindneſs to the deſtitute, we ought to avoid every thing, that may appear like reproaching them; and uſe our authority to induce others to a ſimilar conduct; for a generous mind in diſtreſs has very exquiſite ſenſibility, that ſhould not be wounded. All perſons ſhould be careful what connexions they form, and what places they frequent; but eſpecially young women, both for conſcience, and credit's ſake: and parents, and other ſuperior relations ſhould have a watchful eye over them, and require an account, where, and with whom they have ſpent their time. In the path of duty is ſafety, and we ſhould keep cloſe to thoſe employments, and ſituations, wherein the Lord hath bleſſed us, without being deſirous of change: he will not ſuffer thoſe, who truſt in him, to want the neceſſaries of life, and will often far exceed their expectations; and tender concern for each other's welfare, affectionate, and edifying converſation, with true piety, and contentment, will render the loweſt circumſtances, and the meaneſt fare comfortable. The Lord will prove thoſe, who enter upon a religious profeſſion, whether they are ſound hearted, and willing to ſtoop, and ſuffer for his ſake or not: but when he hath made trial of them, he will ſtir up the minds of his more experienced ſervants, to ſpeak comfortably to, and deal kindly with them. This is a good work, which all Chriſtians ſhould embrace every opportunity of performing; eſpecially to thoſe, who are chearfully induſtrious, and enduring hardſhip for conſcience ſake. But may not accommodation be here allowed of? Ought not parents to aſk their children where, and what they have gleaned from the ſermons, which they have heard, the books, which they have read, and the converſation that they have joined in? May we not alſo aſk ourſelves the ſame queſtion? He that would increaſe in wiſdom muſt be always thus gleaning, and muſt call himſelf frequently to account reſpecting it; and determine, if poſſible, to get ſome profitable hint from every perſon, and every occurrence. They, who thus daily collect knowledge from others, and keep cloſe to the word, and ordinances of God, will become thoroughly furniſhed for every good work. Finally let us, in the kindneſs of Boaz to Ruth, contemplate the kindneſs of Jeſus to poor ſinners; to whoſe meanneſs he moſt freely condeſcends, on whom though moſt unworthy, he liberally confers his benefits: and whom he neither upbraids himſelf, nor ſuffers others to upbraid with their former tranſgreſſions.

THEN

THEN Naomi her mother-in-law ſaid unto her, My daughter, ſhall I not ſeek reſt for thee, that it may be well with thee?

2 And now is not Boaz of our kindred, with whoſe maidens thou waſt? behold, he winnoweth barley to-night in the threſhing-floor.

3 Waſh thyſelf therefore, and anoint thee, and put thy raiment upon thee, and get thee down to the floor: but make not thyſelf known unto the man, until he ſhall have done eating and drinking.

4 And it ſhall be, when he lieth down, that thou ſhalt mark the place where he ſhall lie, and thou ſhalt go in, and uncover his feet, and lay thee down; and he will tell thee what thou ſhalt do.

5 And ſhe ſaid unto her, All that thou ſayeſt unto me I will do.

6 And ſhe went down unto the floor, and did according to all that her mother-in-law bade her.

7 And when Boaz had eaten and drunk, and his heart was merry, he went to lie down at the end of the heap of corn: and ſhe came ſoftly, and uncovered his feet, and laid her down.

8 And it came to paſs at midnight, that the man was afraid, and turned himſelf; and, behold, a woman lay at his feet.

9 And he ſaid, Who art thou? and ſhe anſwered, I am Ruth thine handmaid; ſpread therefore thy ſkirt over thine handmaid; for thou art a near kinſman.

10 And he ſaid, Bleſſed be thou of the LORD, my daughter; for thou haſt ſhewed more kindneſs in the latter end than at the beginning, inaſmuch as thou followedſt not young men, whether poor or rich.

11 And now, my daughter, fear not; I will do to thee all that thou requireſt: for all the city of my people doth know that thou art a virtuous woman.

12 And now it is true that I am thy near kinſman: howbeit, there is a kinſman nearer than I.

13 Tarry this night, and it ſhall be in the morning, that if he will perform unto thee the part of a kinſman, well; let him do the kinſman's part: but if he will not do the part

NOTES.

CHAP. III.] V. 1—5.] We need not determine, whether this propoſal of Naomi, and the compliance of Ruth, were entirely free from blame, or not: certainly it was not recorded for imitation, and is not to be judged of according to the rules of modern decorum. If the propoſed meaſure had been of as ill appearance in thoſe days, as it would be with us, we cannot conceive that Naomi would have adviſed it, or Ruth complied with it: and whatever tenderneſs Boaz might have ſhewn on ſuch an occaſion, it would have formed a ſufficient reaſon for his refuſing to marry her. The law concerning a man's marrying his brother's widow when he died childleſs, extended, it ſeems to the other near relations, when there were no brethren. This law, and cuſtom gave Ruth, now proſelyted to the true religion, a legal claim upon Boaz, as Naomi ſuppoſed, who knew not of another nearer kinſman. It was cuſtomary for widows to aſſert this claim; (Deut. c. xxv. ver. 5—10;) and conſidering Boaz's character, and ſuperiority of ſtation, ſhe ſuppoſed that this was beſt done in a private manner. She deemed herſelf bound to promote this deſirable ſettlement for Ruth, and had an entire confidence in both her, and Boaz. And as Ruth ſuppoſed Naomi to be beſt acquainted with the laws, and cuſtoms of Iſrael, ſhe followed her counſel implicitly. Yet, when all allowances are made, perhaps neither party can be entirely exculpated. Their intentions were good, and the Lord prevented all bad conſequences.

V. 7. And when Boaz, &c.] When their work was finiſhed, it ſeems that he feaſted with his labourers; and, according to the ſimplicity, and hardineſs of the times, afterwards lay down to ſleep upon ſome couch prepared for him in the barn, or in an adjoining tent. It is ſaid "his "heart was merry;" but it may be tranſlated, "his heart "was good;" and be an intimation of his thankfulneſs for the plenty, which the Lord had ſent after the famine; and that his feaſt was conſiſtent with temperance, and piety, as his conſequent conduct proves it to have been. In the mean time Ruth concealed herſelf, till he was left alone, and then laid down at his feet waiting her opportunity of ſpeaking to him; and by that very action preferred her claim to be received into the marriage relation to him.

V. 9. Spread thy ſkirt, &c.] This is ſuppoſed to have been a cuſtomary ceremony in contracting marriage, and implied the woman's being taken under the protection of her huſband, and admitted to ſhare all his comforts. This therefore was a direct claim upon Boaz to marry her; which ſhe grounded upon the law of God, and his being the neareſt relation of her deceaſed huſband.

V. 10—13.] The conduct of Boaz in this tranſaction is worthy of the higheſt encomiums. He attempted not to take advantage of Ruth's ſituation, and propoſal of marriage: he did not reproach her with the impropriety of her conduct; nor diſdain her, as a poor, deſtitute ſtranger; nor ſuggeſt, that ſhe was ſwayed by intereſt in preferring her claim: but, inſtead of ſuſpecting her of any ill intenof a kinſman to thee, then will I do the part of a kinſman to thee, as the LORD liveth: lie down until the morning.

14 And ſhe lay at his feet until the morning: and ſhe roſe up before one could know another. And he ſaid, Let it not be known that a woman came into the floor.

15 Alſo he ſaid, Bring the vail that thou haſt upon thee, and hold it. And when ſhe held it, he meaſured ſix meaſures of barley, and laid it on her: and ſhe went into the city.

16 And when ſhe came to her mother-in-law, ſhe ſaid, Who art thou, my daughter? And ſhe told her all that the man had done to her.

17 And ſhe ſaid, Theſe ſix meaſures of barley gave he me; for he ſaid to me, Go not empty unto thy mother-in-law.

18 Then ſaid ſhe, Sit ſtill, my daughter, until thou know how the matter will fall: for the man will not be in reſt, until he have finiſhed the thing this day.

tions, he imputed her whole conduct to her affection to the family of Elimelech, and to Naomi; as if ſhe had thus ſhewn her greater kindneſs, than in coming with her into the land of Iſrael; and he commended her, for giving him, an elder man, the preference to younger perſons, whether rich or poor, Moabites, or Iſraelites; and for her regard to the law of God: and perceiving her confuſed, as is probable, upon the recollection of her ſituation, he obviated her fears, applauded her, as a woman of approved virtue, and made her a conditional promiſe of marriage, which he confirmed for her fuller ſatisfaction, with a ſolemn oath: and as ſoon as the morning arrived ſent her away with a preſent to her mother-in-law.

V. 14. Let it not, &c.] We may conſider theſe words as containing his reaſons for diſmiſſing her ſo early; for he ſaid within himſelf, "Let it not be known, that a woman "came into the floor:" or as his caution to Ruth, not to ſpeak of it to any one. For we do not find that there was any ſervant privy to the interview.

V. 16. Who art thou? &c.] Or what haſt thou done? What hath paſſed?

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.

It behoves aged perſons to recollect their younger days, and not to exclude young perſons from thoſe lawful ſatisfactions, of which themſelves have now given up all thoughts. Indeed we ſhould not make ourſelves a ſtandard for others, in any matter, which the law of God leaves to our choice; but ſhould, without cenſure, allow others in many things, which we deem inexpedient for ourſelves. The word of God hath pronounced marriage honourable in all; and therefore they, who from inclination, prudential regard to the intereſts of their families, a pious deſire of being more at leiſure, and having more in their power, for the ſervice of God, or through advancing years calling to prepare for the eternal world, chooſe to abide in a ſingle ſtate, ſhould not condemn thoſe, who may have as good reaſons for preferring a married life. If they are imprudent, they will have trouble in the fleſh, but their brethren ſhould ſpare them; and not cenſure what the word of God doth not condemn. (1 Tim. c. v. ver. 14.) The married ſtate, when properly entered into, is a reſt, as much as any thing on earth can be ſo called; as it ought to fix the affections, and form a connection for life: and it therefore ſhould be engaged in with great ſerioufneſs, and with earneſt prayers for the direction, and bleſſing of God upon it, and with an eye to his precept, and Providence. And parents ſhould carefully adviſe their children in this important concern, "that it may be well with them," as to the intereſts of their ſouls. The more willing any one is, for conſcience ſake, to renounce wordly intereſts, the more ſhould others deviſe how to promote his advantage. But good intentions will not juſtify improper means: and it is well for us, that we have to do with a pardoning God, who takes better care of our intereſt, purity, credit, and peace, than we often do of our own, and of each other's. Parents ſhould be very cautious what injunctions they lay upon their children, leſt their regard for, and obedience to them, ſhould enſnare their conſcience, and lead them into temptation: for the authority of a parent will not juſtify a ſinful action. Few men have ſuch command of their paſſions, and ſuch candour of mind, as neither to injure the virtue, or the reputations of females, who indiſcreetly put themſelves in their way: and yet to take advantage of a woman's affection, and confidence, for her irreparable damage, is much baſer, than defrauding thoſe, who implicitly truſt in us. However they, who value either their chaſtity, or their character, ſhould flee from ſuch ſituations, in which they can only be preſerved by the ſame power, that preſerved the young men, in the fiery furnace. All our plenty ſhould be ſhared with the poor, and induſtrious: and all our feaſting ſhould be ſo moderated, that we may neither be unfitted thereby for our ordinary employments, nor for the exerciſes of devotion. And when in ſuch circumſtances, and on ſuch occaſions, men can retain the dominion over their paſſions, and conduct themſelves with tenderneſs, prudence, piety, juſtice, and regard to the law of God, though moſt powerfully tempted to ſin, their wealth may be pronounced bleſſed, and their uſe of it honourable. But we muſt not be content even with a clear conſcience in the ſight of God; but we ſhould endeavour to preſerve a clear character, and to avoid whatever may excite ſuſpicion in the minds of others, or open the envenomed lips of ſlander; and we ought to be as tender of other's reputations, as of our own. And in every undertaking we ſhould be diligent in uſing proper means, and then quietly leave the whole to the Lord's deciſion. But without any impropriety we poor, polluted ſinners may apply to Jeſus Chriſt, our neareſt kinſman, and our brother, as dwelling in human nature, to ſpread his ſkirt over us, and to eſpouſe our ſouls to himſelf, to take us under his almighty care, and to admit us to ſhare all his unſearchable riches. He will never blame us for doing this unſeaſonably, or condemn us for the imperfections of our application, if we deſire to be

THEN went Boaz up to the gate, and ſat him down there: and, behold, the kinſman of whom Boaz ſpake came by; unto whom he ſaid, Ho, ſuch a one, turn aſide, ſit down here. And he turned aſide, and ſat down.

2 And he took ten men of the elders of the city, and ſaid, Sit ye down here. And they ſat down.

3 And he ſaid unto the kinſman, Naomi, that is come again out of the country of Moab, ſelleth a parcel of land which was our brother Elimelech's:

4 And I thought to advertiſe thee, ſaying, Buy it before the inhabitants, and before the elders of my people. If thou wilt redeem it, redeem it; but if thou wilt not redeem it, then tell me, that I may know: for there is none to redeem it beſides thee; and I am after thee. And he ſaid, I will redeem it.

5 Then ſaid Boaz, What day thou buyeſt the field of the hand of Naomi, thou muſt buy it alſo of Ruth the Moabiteſs, the wife of the dead, to raiſe up the name of the dead upon his inheritance.

6 And the kinſman ſaid, I cannot redeem it for myſelf, leſt I mar mine own inheritance: redeem thou my right to thyſelf; for I cannot redeem it.

7 Now this was the manner in former time in Iſrael, concerning redeeming, and concerning changing, for to confirm all things: a man plucked off his ſhoe, and gave it to his neighbour: and this was a teſtimony in Iſrael.

8 Therefore the kinſman ſaid unto Boaz, Buy it for thee: ſo he drew off his ſhoe.

9 And Boaz ſaid unto the elders, and unto all the people, Ye are witneſſes this day, that I have bought all that was Elimelech's, and all that was Chilion's and Mahlon's, of the hand of Naomi.

10 Moreover Ruth the Moabiteſs, the wife of Mahlon, have I purchaſed to be my wife, to raiſe up the name of the dead upon his inheritance, that the name of the dead be not cut off from among his brethren, and from the gate of his place: ye are witneſſes this day.

11 And all the people that were in the gate, and the elders, ſaid, We are witneſſes. The LORD make the woman that is come into thine houſe like Rachel and like Leah, which two did build the houſe of Iſrael: and do thou worthily in Ephratah, and be famous in Bethlehem.

12 And let thy houſe be like the houſe of Pharez, (whom Tamar bare unto Judah,) of the ſeed which the LORD ſhall give thee of this young woman.

13 So Boaz took Ruth, and ſhe was his wife; and when he went in unto her, the LORD gave her conception, and ſhe bare a ſon.

his: he will make the beſt of us, and all we do; and will take our love to him, and deſire of his ſalvation moſt kindly. And when we have applied to him, he will not reſt till he hath accompliſhed our deſires, and will in the mean time communicate bleſſings to us, and to ours in anſwer to our prayers. Nor can we too earneſtly deſire, and ſeek this ſame reſt for our children, and friends, that it may be well with them alſo.

NOTES.

CHAP. IV.] V. 1—8.] Probably Elimelech's eſtate had been ſold, till the year of jubilee; but it could not be alienated from the family, (Lev. c. xxv. ver. 25—28.) The neareſt relation therefore had a right to redeem it by refunding the proportion of the purchaſe money; and as this would prove advantageous to him, he might be induced thereby to be kind to the poor family. As Elimelech had no ſurviving iſſue, it ſeems probable, that Ruth his daughter-in-law, was conſidered as entitled to his inheritance, according to the law given in the caſe of thoſe, who left only daughters, (Numb. c. xxvii.) But to obviate all doubt in this matter, Boaz propoſed to this kinſman of Elimelech's, that he ſhould both redeem the eſtate, and marry Ruth; in which caſe the eſtate would certainly belong to his eldeſt ſon by her: but if he was unwilling to do it, he deſired him to renounce his claim, and he would marry her, and redeem the land for himſelf, (Numb. c. xxxvi. v. 5—9.) But he was not willing to marry the poor widow, leſt he ſhould injure the circumſtances of his family, and he therefore reſigned all claim to the eſtate alſo. For this tranſaction reſpects all the ſeveral laws above referred to, and doubtleſs the whole was ſettled in the moſt regular, legal, and cuſtomary manner: and as the pulling off the ſhoe of the kinſman, was not done by Ruth, with the preſcribed ceremonies, it ſeems not to refer to the law about refuſing to marry a brother's widow, (Deut. c. xxv.

14 And the women ſaid unto Naomi, Bleſſed be the LORD, which hath not left thee this day without a kinſman, that his name may be famous in Iſrael.

15 And he ſhall be unto thee a reſtorer of thy life, and a nouriſher of thine old age: for thy daughter-in-law which loveth thee, which is better to thee than ſeven ſons, hath born him.

16 And Naomi took the child, and laid it in her boſom, and became nurſe unto it.

17 And the women her neighbours gave it a name, ſaying, There is a ſon born to Naomi, and they called his name Obed: he is the father of Jeſſe, the father of David.

18 Now theſe are the generations of Pharez: Pharez begat Hezron, 19 And Hezron begat Ram, and Ram begat Amminadab,

20 And Amminadab begat Nahſhon, and Nahſhon begat Salmon, 21 And Salmon begat Boaz, and Boaz begat Obed.

22 And Obed begat Jeſſe, and Jeſſe begat David.

v. 9, 10,) but to have been the cuſtom in transferring inheritances.

V. 14, 15.] Naomi was congratulated on this occaſion more than the reſt, as ſhe had the ruins of her family thus providentially repaired, and her old age ſolaced after the death of her huſband, and ſons, through her daughter-in-law, who had loved her, and been a greater bleſſing to her, than ſeven ſons. The piety of the language, and conduct of all parties on this occaſion, ſhould not paſs unnoticed.

V. 17. Obed.] This ſignifies either "a ſervant," or "ſerviceable;" either alluding to the low eſtate of his mother, when gleaning in the fields, which now belonged to her: or to the expected uſefulneſs of her ſon to his family, and to Iſrael. From him Chriſt deſcended; and peculiar bleſſings and honour redounded to Boaz, who had not diſdained the low eſtate of Ruth, but had paid due honour to his deceaſed relations, and their decayed family: whilſt the kinſman, who refuſed ſo to do, is not allowed a place for his name in the book of God, but it is diſgracefully conſigned to oblivion.

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.

Diligence in buſineſs, punctuality to engagements without unneceſſary delay, integrity, and fair dealing in the affairs of common life, not only adorn a profeſſion of godlineſs, but tend to proſperity in the ordinary courſe of God's providence. Men are generally ready to embrace opportunities of increaſing their eſtates, but few know the value of godlineſs: nor can it be expected, that they, who ſupremely value carnal things themſelves, will make a due eſtimate of ſpiritual excellency in the character of others. Such are frequently the wiſe men of this world, whom the Lord charges with folly; they attend not to the concerns of their ſouls, and reject the ſalvation of Chriſt, for fear of marring their inheritance! Nay ſelfiſhneſs not only obliterates from their breaſts all charity, and juſtice, but extinguiſhes natural affection, and cauſes them to treat with diſdain their neareſt relatives, however excellent, if they are poor, and need their aſſiſtance. But the loſs, in the final event of things, will be their own alone; the Lord will raiſe up other friends for thoſe, who love, and truſt in him; and eſpecially for thoſe, who have ſhewn themſelves willing to bear hardſhip for his ſake. Nay, ſuch perſons, however poor, are a bleſſing to all connected with them. Eſpecially they to be valued in the marriage relation: "a prudent wife is "of the Lord," and "the price of a virtuous woman is "above rubies;" (Prov. c. xix. v. 14. c. xxxi. v. 10;) unſpeakably more valuable, than one poſſeſſed of wealth, beauty, and every external accompliſhment, but deſtitute of wiſdom, and grace. As marriage is honourable in the ſight of God, it ought to be publicly contracted, and recognized, that it may be diſtinguiſhed from thoſe deeds of darkneſs, which require concealment: and it is then like to be comfortable, when the law of God is regarded, and the bleſſing of God is ſupplicated in entering into it. In this important concern, (as in all others,) the people of God ſhould pray for one another, that the parties may live together in peace, be good examples, do worthily in the church, and in the world, and train up families for future uſefulneſs, when they have ſerved their generations, and are fallen aſleep. The birth of children alſo calls for united prayers, that they may be indeed a comfort to their parents, bleſſings to ſociety, and bleſſed themſelves: for without the bleſſing of God none of theſe things can be expected: and the general diſuſe of ſuch pious language, and behaviour amongſt profeſſing Chriſtians too plainly ſhew that true religion is at a low ebb amongſt us. Yet we ſhould never promiſe ourſelves much comfort from any earthly object; for our heavieſt trials often ariſe from thoſe quarters, whence we expected moſt ſatisfaction; and our greateſt ſolace from thoſe, whence we expected none: and one true Chriſtian friend may be better to us, than all our children, and relations. But if theſe ſtreams are ſo refreſhing, what may we not expect from the fountain? Let us then look to Jeſus, our redeemer, who "though he "was rich, for our ſakes became poor;" and at the price of his ſufferings, both ranſomed our inheritance, and purchaſed us to be eſpouſed unto him in truth and righteouſneſs: not induced thereto by our worthineſs, or excellency, but by his own unfathomable love to our polluted ſouls. To this union he invites the periſhing ſinner: This relation to the poor deſpiſed believer he avows, and glories in. Let us then joyfully accept of his ſalvation, expect all our felicity from him, and devote ourſelves to his ſervice; and being bought with a price, let us glorify him with our bodies, and ſpirits, which are his; by obeying his commandments, imitating his example, and recommending him, and his ſalvation by word, and deed to all around us.

The

The First Book of SAMUEL,

OTHERWISE CALLED

The First Book of the KINGS.

This Book, and that, which follows, have their name from the prophet Samuel; though only a part of this first Book could be written by him; and the penman of the remainder is not known. But when Samuel was raised up to be the judge of Israel a new epoch commenced; in him the government by judges terminated, and the regal government was introduced, in Saul first, and afterwards in David, whom Samuel by divine command anointed kings; and these books proceed no farther, than their reigns, and are an introduction to the following history of the other kings of Judah, and Israel. From the Vulgate Latin translation, they are also called the first, and second Books of Kings, and the following, the third, and fourth Books of Kings. The first Book contains the history of about eighty years, though the chronology cannot be exactly ascertained. Therein we find Israel under the government of Eli, the High Priest, and their affairs greatly disordered by the wickedness of his sons. We have an account of Samuel's being raised up to be their reformer, and deliverer, and of his character, and actions. The history proceeds in the advancement of Saul to be the king of Israel, and of his ill behaviour; in the anointing of David to be his successor, and of his character, and exploits, and of Saul's persecution of him, until his death opened the way for David to the throne; who was not only the ancestor of Christ, but an eminent type of him, both in his person, and his kingdom. Many things in this book are worthy of our imitation, and encouraging to the faith, hope, and patience of the suffering believer: there are also many useful cautions, which we should regard with peculiar attention; and many awful warnings, to deter men, from turning back from a religious profession, from yielding to the suggestions of pride, envy, and malice, or from using their authority, and influence in persecuting the servants of God.

CHAP. I.

Contains, 1st. An account of Elkanah, and of Hannah, and Peninnah, his wives, v. 1—3. 2d. Elkanah's attention to the worship of the Lord; and Hannah's disquietude because of her barrenness, and the misbehaviour of Peninnah, v. 4—8. 3d. Her prayer, and vow, and consequent comfort, and Eli's discourse with her, v. 9—18. 4th. The birth of Samuel, and the performance of her vow, v. 19—28.

NOW there was a certain man of Ramathaim-zophim, of mount Ephraim, and his name was Elkanah, the son of Jeroham, the son of Elihu, the son of Tohu, the son of Zuph, an Ephrathite:

NOTES.

CHAP. I.] V. 1. An Ephrathite.] Elkanah appears to have been a Levite, (1 Chron. c. vi. v. 26—28. 33, 34.) Ramathaim Zophim was the place, which is afterwards called Ramah, and Arimathea; and, from the plural number here used, is supposed to have been divided into two or more parts, upon different eminences; the word Zophim signifies watchmen, perhaps because some watch towers, and watchmen were stationed there, for Ramah, signifies exaltation: or it might be so called from Zuph, Elkanah's ancestor. Ephrath is the same as Bethlehem, and he was called an Ephrathite probably from being allied in the female line to some family of the tribe of Judah, whose inheritance lay there.

Before Christ 1131.

2 And

2 And he had two wives; the name of the one was Hannah, and the name of the other Peninnah: and Peninnah had children, but Hannah had no children.

3 And this man went up out of his city yearly to worſhip, and to ſacrifice unto the LORD of hoſts in Shiloh: and the two ſons of Eli, Hophni and Phinehas, the prieſts of the LORD, were there.

4 And when the time was that Elkanah offered, he gave to Peninnah his wife, and to all her ſons and her daughters, portions.

5 But unto Hannah he gave a worthy portion; for he loved Hannah: but the LORD had ſhut up her womb.

6 And her adverſary alſo provoked her ſore, for to make her fret, becauſe the LORD had ſhut up her womb.

7 And as he did ſo year by year, when ſhe went up to the houſe of the LORD, ſo ſhe provoked her: therefore ſhe wept, and did not eat.

8 Then ſaid Elkanah her huſband to her, Hannah, why weepeſt thou? and why eateſt thou not? and why is thy heart grieved? am not I better to thee than ten ſons?

9 So Hannah roſe, up after they had eaten in Shiloh, and after they had drunk: (now Eli the prieſt ſat upon a ſeat by a poſt of the temple of the LORD:)

10 And ſhe was in bitterneſs of ſoul, and prayed unto the LORD, and wept ſore.

11 And ſhe vowed a vow, and ſaid, O LORD of hoſts, if thou wilt indeed look on the affliction of thine handmaid, and remember me, and not forget thine handmaid, but wilt give unto thine handmaid a man-child, then I will give him unto the LORD all the days of his life, and there ſhall no razor come upon his head.

12 And it came to paſs, as ſhe continued praying before the LORD, that Eli marked her mouth.

13 Now Hannah, ſhe ſpake in her heart; only her lips moved, but her voice was not heard: therefore Eli thought ſhe had been drunken.

14 And Eli ſaid unto her, how long wilt thou be drunken? put away thy wine from thee.

15 And Hannah anſwered and ſaid, No, my lord; I am a woman of a ſorrowful ſpirit: I have drunk neither wine nor ſtrong drink, but have poured out my ſoul before the LORD.

16 Count not thine handmaid for a daughter of Belial; for out of the abundance of my complaint and grief have I ſpoken hitherto.

V. 3. Yearly to worſhip, &c.] The worſhip at Shiloh was kept up, but probably in an irregular manner, or Elkanah a Levite, would have had employment there. However in thoſe times of apoſtacy, and idolatry, when men abhorred the offering of the Lord, through the wickedneſs of Eli's ſons, it was commendable in Elkanah to go up, though but once a year, perhaps at the Paſſover, to worſhip the Lord. The Iſraelites were confined to one place, one altar, &c; and therefore Elkanah could not go elſewhere. But, though the wickedneſs of miniſters doth not deprive the pious Chriſtian of the bleſſing, nor furniſh a ſufficient excuſe for neglecting the ordinances of God; yet not being under a ſimilar limitation, we ſhould prefer attending on their miniſtry, who appear at leaſt to be walking heaven-ward themſelves, as well as teaching others the true way thither.

V. 5. A worthy portion, &c.] When Elkanah evidenced his affection for Hannah, who probably was his firſt wife, by the cuſtomary indications, the envy, and jealouſy of Peninnah, as well as her proud contempt of Hannah's barrenneſs, were excited, and great uneaſineſs was occaſioned in his family; for Hannah laid theſe things more to heart, than ſhe ought, and her perpetual ſorrow diſtreſſed Elkanah, and greatly interrupted the comfort, and benefit of the religious ordinances, on which they were attending. As this was the caſe from year to year, it was a ſtrong temptation to him to keep away: and it might be one reaſon why Hannah refuſed to eat of the ſacrifices; leſt being eaten in mourning, the Lord ſhould be diſpleaſed with her: (Deut. c. xxvi. v. 14. Mal. c. ii. v. 13.)

V. 8. Am not I, &c.] Elkanah remonſtrated with Hannah concerning her immoderate grief, and reminded her, that though ſhe had no children, ſhe poſſeſſed his affection; which would conduce more to her real comfort, than ten ſons without it would; and that therefore her ſituation was more deſirable than that of Peninnah. This gentle rebuke prevailed with her to repreſs her grief, and partake of the ſacrifice: but that did not comfort her heart, till ſhe had poured it out in prayer.

V. 14—16. How long, &c.] Perhaps Eli had many times ſeen ſuch abuſes, as he here charged Hannah with, in thoſe days of diſorder, and exceſs, and ſat near the tabernacle, (or temple, as it is called, being now ſtationary,) to repreſs ſuch enormities, though he did not adopt the only effectual method. Perceiving her great diſcompoſure, he too haſtily attributed it to drunkenneſs; which was faulty in him, and had a tendency to increaſe her diſtreſs: (Acts, c. ii. v. 13—15.) But Hannah had now obtained ſuch inward conſolation, that this ſevere reflection neither diſtreſſed her, nor excited her anger. And ſhe

17 Then Eli anſwered and ſaid, Go in peace: and the God of Iſrael grant thee thy petition that thou haſt aſked of him.

18 And ſhe ſaid, Let thine handmaid find grace in thy ſight. So the woman went her way, and did eat, and her countenance was no more ſad.

19 And they roſe up in the morning early, and worſhipped before the LORD, and returned, and came to their houſe to Ramah: and Elkanah knew Hannah his wife; and the LORD remembered her.

20 Wherefore it came to paſs, when the time was come about, after Hannah had conceived, that ſhe bare a ſon, and called his name Samuel, ſaying, Becauſe I have aſked him of the LORD.

21 And the man Elkanah, and all his houſe, went up to offer unto the LORD the yearly ſacrifice, and his vow.

22 But Hannah went not up; for ſhe ſaid unto her huſband, I will not go up until the child be weaned, and then I will bring him, that he may appear before the LORD, and there abide for ever.

23 And Elkanah her huſband ſaid unto her, Do what ſeemeth thee good; tarry until thou have weaned him; only the LORD eſtabliſh his word. So the woman abode, and gave her ſon ſuck until ſhe weaned him.

24 And when ſhe had weaned him, ſhe took him up with her, with three bullocks, and one ephah of flour, and a bottle of wine, and brought him unto the houſe of the LORD in Shiloh: and the child was young.

25 And they ſlew a bullock, and brought the child to Eli.

26 And ſhe ſaid, Oh, my lord! as thy ſoul liveth, my lord, I am the woman that ſtood by thee here, praying unto the LORD.

27 For this child I prayed; and the LORD hath given me my petition which I aſked of him:

28 Therefore alſo I have lent him to the LORD; as long as he liveth he ſhall be lent to the LORD. And he worſhipped the LORD there.

calmly explained to him the real cauſe of her agitation; and declared her abhorrence of the crime, of which he ſuſpected her. In doing this, ſhe defined the nature of fervent prayer very emphatically: "I poured out my ſoul before "the Lord." For prayer doth not conſiſt only in uſing good words, but in opening before the Lord the inmoſt ſoul, and in unreſerved confidence pouring out before him all our fears, ſorrows, deſires, and purpoſes; as a child would before a loving father, from whom alone he had expectations of relief, and who, he was ſatisfied, was able and diſpoſed to help him.

V. 17. Then Eli anſwered, &c.] Though the character of Eli was very defective, yet there are many traces in it of true piety; and this anſwer is one. He was open to conviction, and willing to acknowledge himſelf miſtaken; and to make Hannah, when he underſtood her real character, amends, by his commendation, bleſſing, and prayers, for the injury, which he had done her.

V. 20. Samuel, &c.] That is, "aſked of God." This name would remind his mother, every time it was mentioned, of the Lord's kindneſs in remembering her affliction, and in anſwering her prayer.

V. 21. His vow.] Probably Elkanah had made a vow in caſe of Hannah's having a child, as well as conſented to that, which ſhe had made. The women were not commanded to go up to the ſanctuary, and Hannah had a ſufficient engagement at home.

V. 26. That ſtood by thee, &c.] Her heart was too full of joy, and gratitude, upon this occaſion, to recollect the injurious reflection Eli had caſt upon her: but ſhe well remembered her prayer, and vow, and the Lord's gracious anſwer. This was a proper uſe of the memory; though we are more apt to remember injuries from man, than mercies from God.

V. 28. I have lent him, &c.] It may be rendered "I have "returned him to the Lord," as from him I have received him. It was her intention, that, as a Levite, and a Nazarite, Samuel ſhould ſpend all his life in the immediate ſervice of the ſanctuary. But the Lord was pleaſed afterwards to employ him, as a prophet, and a judge in the public affairs of Iſrael.

He worſhipped, &c.] The Jewiſh writers ſay that Samuel was three years old at this time: but he was not too young to attend with reverence on the worſhip of God, and to give early indications of true piety.

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.

General experience evinces the kindneſs, as well as equity, of the original inſtitution of the divine law of marriage, and the fatal effects of deviating from it: for thereby men have marred their own comfort, and given riſe to domeſtic contentions, and to envy, malice, impatience, and every evil work, to the interruption of the worſhip of God, and the deſtruction of family religion. But none of our croſſes, and trials muſt be ſuffered to drive us from the ordinances of God; for if ſatan can induce us to yield to diſcouragement in one reſpect, he will make trial in another, and never ceaſe to haraſs us, when we are engaged in the duties of religion, till he hath driven us from every thing. Reſolute reſiſtance, and perſeverance, with earneſt cries to the Lord for his aſſiſtance, are our only ſucceſsful weapons: "give not place to the devil:" (Eph. c. iv. ver. 26, 27.) The human heart can neither bear proſperity without inſolence, or adverſity without impatience; both which imply rebellion againſt the precept, or the providence of God. Inſtead of being contented and thankful in our appointed ſituation, and rejoicing in the happineſs of others, we are prone to murmur, and to envy, and to vex ourſelves, becauſe others are more favoured, or proſpered, than we ſuppoſe ourſelves to be: yet could we change conditions in every reſpect with them, we ſhould generally increaſe our uneaſineſs. And impartial reflection upon our own ſituation in life, compared with our unworthineſs, and the condition of others, would ſilence our complaints, or convert them into thankful praiſes. But all inordinate paſſions are irrational, as well as inimical to our comfort: and even godly perſons, who are ſhocked at the thought of yielding to ſome temptations, often rebelliouſly, and ungratefully indulge exceſſive grief; which they ſhould watch, and pray againſt. But if our earthly comforts, when duly eſtimated, are greater than our croſſes, and the one ought to conſole us under the other; ſurely the favour of God is better to his people, than all beloved relations, or outward ſatisfactions, and ſufficient to compenſate for the want, or the loſs of them all. Every one ſhould comfort thoſe, who are in bitterneſs of ſoul: yet a mild, and tender rebuke is frequently the greateſt kindneſs, when we ſee our friends forgetting their mercies, or their duty. Nothing can give ſolid comfort to thoſe, who are in anguiſh of ſpirit, but the experience of the love of God ſhed abroad in the heart; nor will that cordial in general be communicated, till they have poured out their ſouls repeatedly in earneſt ſecret prayer. All other comforts, and comforters give feeble and tranſitory relief; this alone is adequate, and effectual. Without this, even the ſacrifice, and interceſſion of the Saviour, the attendance on public ordinances, and every religious exerciſe, will communicate no peace or joy to the ſoul. But ſecret prayer, when earneſt, and importunate, brings a bleſſing upon, and puts life into them all: nor could a concurrence of all poſſible diſtreſſes, and temptations render that man miſerable, or long uncomfortable, who improves aright the precious privilege of acceſs to the mercy-ſeat of a reconciled God in Chriſt Jeſus. But through ſatan's temptations, and the evil of our hearts, we are often reluctant to begin, and ſlight in preſenting, and haſty in concluding our petitions. Hence it is that we go mourning all the day long, inſtead of caſting our burden upon the Lord: and our miſeries will increaſe upon us, till we take this courſe; and the more we experience the ſweet conſolations, which are thus communicated, whilſt the ſoul is poured out before the Lord, the more we ſhall determine to call upon him, "as long as we live;" (Pſalm cxvi. v. 1—4.) Amongſt the various trials, to which we are expoſed in this world, none is in general more bitter, than the unkind ſuſpicions, and unmerited cenſures of thoſe, whom we love, and eſteem: who judging by appearances, may undeſignedly condemn our beſt actions, as deeming them the worſt of crimes. But whilſt the Lord hears our prayers, and comforts our hearts, we may bear even this with patience, and anſwer it with meekneſs: for though it is painful to be counted a child of Belial by our brethren; yet if our loving Father ſees that correction to be needful for us, and favours us with the aſſurance of his acceptance, and the light of his countenance, we may thankfully ſubmit to his will. Even before thoſe bleſſings are vouchſafed, which we have aſked in prayer, or we are certain of obtaining them, the Lord ſometimes communicates theſe ſupports to the ſoul, that exceed every temporal advantage, that no outward trouble can deſtroy, and that give a reliſh for thoſe mercies, which before we undervalued, or overlooked. We are moſt likely to obtain our deſires, when we are rendered willing to ſubmit our wills to the will of God, whether we ſhall have them or not. And no temporal ſatisfaction can be durably comfortable, which we cannot name Samuel "aſked of the "Lord;" which we do not receive from him with gratitude, as an anſwer to our prayers, and uprightly deſire to uſe to his glory, and in his ſervice. And although in general it is better to ſubmit to the Lord's will, whether he pleaſes to give us children, or not: yet if he give them, we ſhall have the moſt comfort in them, when they are moſt entirely his; and therefore we ſhould devote them to him from the firſt, bring them up for him, and pray continually that we may ſee early proofs, that he hath received them into his family, and made them his, to ſerve him all their days. The vows, or prayers, that we have made in our diſtreſs, muſt be performed with gratitude, when our deſires have been granted; that others may praiſe the Lord with us, and be encouraged to truſt in, and call upon him. We ought to be very cautious how we condemn thoſe who are uncommonly earneſt in religion, as if they were guilty of hypocriſy, enthuſiaſm, or other iniquity: and miniſters eſpecially, in their zeal againſt ſin, ought to be very careful, that they do not grieve ſuch, as are in bitterneſs of ſpirit: but if we have raſhly cenſured thoſe, who are not faulty, we ſhould be ready to hear their plea, to retract our deciſion, to give them encouragement, and to aſſiſt them with our prayers. It becomes not the profeſſion of godlineſs to be ſoon weary of the ordinances of God; but to leave them reluctantly to attend on our other duties: and when men are in ſuch haſte to ſet out upon journeys, or to engage in buſineſs, that they have not time to worſhip God, they are like to proceed without his preſence and bleſſing. There are times, when domeſtic employments may render it a duty to be occaſionally abſent from public ordinances; but thoſe ſeaſons ſhould abound the more in the exerciſes of ſecret devotion: and when ſpecial bleſſings have been conferred, and reſtraints are removed, the true believer will go with more eager deſires to the courts of the Lord, to pay his vows, and render his grateful praiſe. With what tranſports of joy then will the true believer at laſt, leave this diſtant land below, to aſcend to the courts above, to receive the full anſwer of all his prayers, and to render everlaſting praiſes, with an uninterrupted flow of holy affections, and with ineffable delight!

NOTES.

CHAP. II.] V. 1. Hannah prayed, &c.] (Luke, c. i. v. 46—55.) The word prayer is ſometimes uſed for any act of devotion, whether it be confined to petition, or include thankſgiving, and praiſe, or chiefly conſiſts of the latter. When Hannah aſked Samuel, ſhe ſpake in heart, but her voice was not heard; for that matter lay entirely betwixt the Lord, and her ſoul: but when, according to her vow, ſhe preſented him to God, his glory, and the edification of his people required a public acknowledgment. Whilſt her heart was enlarged with love and gratitude, ſhe was led on by the ſpirit of prophecy, to deſcant on thoſe things, which relate to the diſpenſation of God's providence, and grace to Iſrael, to the church of God, and to the world at large, even in future ages to the end of time. "Her heart rejoiced," not in Samuel, though juſtly beloved, but "in the Lord," who had given him to her; in his power, faithfulneſs and love: as having ſhewn her this ſpecial favour, what might ſhe not expect from ſuch a friend? "Her horn," (which is the weapon for defence, and annoyance in animals,) "was exalted in the Lord, and her "mouth was enlarged over her enemies;" for being delivered from the provocations of her rival, ſhe took that as an earneſt of more important victories, and rejoiced in the hope of triumphing over the adverſaries of her ſoul; for ſhe expected, and rejoiced in the ſalvation of the Lord, and in the expectation of it's completion in glory; as well as of His coming, who is the whole ſalvation of his people.

V. 2. There is none, &c.] From theſe perſonal mercies, Hannah proceeded to contemplate the perfections of that God, from whom they were derived. His holineſs, which compriſes all thoſe moral excellencies, that are his glory, and beauty, ſhe firſt celebrated. Juſtice, truth, goodneſs, and mercy, with abhorrence of every thing inconſiſtent with them, are in the Lord alone, underived, immutable, and complete; "there is none holy as the Lord:" all created holineſs is derived, dependant, mutable, and ſcanty; all human holineſs, defiled with a mixture of impurity. Nay, ſays the propheteſs, "there is none beſide thee," none holy, no other God, and all creatures are leſs than nothing, and vanity in the compariſon with him, (Iſaiah, c. xl. v. 15—17.) "nor is there any rock, like our God;" (Deut. c. xxxii. v. 4. 31:) he is the only protector, refuge, and ſupport: and they only are ſafe and ſtrong, who truſt entirely in him.

V. 3. Talk no more, &c.] If the propheteſs here at all noticed the boaſtings of Peninnah; ſhe certainly alſo meant ſomewhat much greater; and addreſſed as preſent the enemies of the church, who confiding in their numbers, ſtrength, courage, and conduct; and elated by ſucceſs, arrogantly gloried in themſelves, and inſulted over the deſpiſed ſervants of God. Theſe ſhe commanded to ceaſe from their proud boaſtings, and to remember, "that the Lord "is a God of knowledge, and by him actions are weighed." He diſtinguiſhes men's characters, and weighs their actions in the balance, and knows when to interpoſe in behalf of his people; for he knows, and approves of their temper and conduct, and will certainly plead their cauſe: he alſo knows thoſe, who deſpiſe, and hate him, and abhors their character, and will in due time effectually puniſh them, though for a ſeaſon they may ſeem to proſper.

V. 4—8.] The events which theſe verſes ſpeak of, are frequently called the viciſſitudes of blind fortune, whoſe fickleneſs, and capriciouſneſs are frequently railed at: but thy are indeed the reſult of infinite wiſdom, juſtice, and goodneſs, with irreſiſtible power, and ſovereign authority executing the ſettled purpoſes of God, of manifeſting his own perfections of ſaving thoſe, who truſt in, and love him; and of pouring contempt upon all other diſtinctions, in which ungodly men confide, and glory. Are they proud of their valour, military ſkill, or bodily ſtrength? their bows ſhall be broken, and themſelves unaccountably cruſhed, by an inferior, and deſpiſed company. Do they glory in their riches, and riot in eaſe, and luxury, whilſt they deſpiſe, and oppreſs the poor? They are frequently impoveriſhed, and reduced to the neceſſity of hiring themſelves out for bread, whilſt the poor and hungry are ſurpriſingly advanced to affluence. Do any glory, (as Peninnah did) in the increaſe of their families, and deſpiſe thoſe, who remain childleſs? The providence of God can ſoon, by unexpected death reduce their numbers, whilſt the deſolate are as wonderfully increaſed. For the Lord gives life, and takes it away, as he pleaſes: the moſt vigorous are by the ſtroke of his hand brought down to the gates of the grave; and the feeble are unexpectedly reſtored to health, and ſtrength. Such viciſſitudes are often obſerved in men's circumſtances, and families, contrary to all the rules of probability, wherein capacity and induſtry are utterly unavailing to prevent adverſity; and have no hand in raiſing men to proſperity; even from the loweſt, and moſt abject condition, to the throne of glory. Such events occaſion ſurpriſe, and many attempt to account for them; but the truth is, that it is the Lord's doing. "The pillars of the earth are his, and he "hath ſet the world upon them:" and the ſame power, which firſt created, and eſtabliſhed the earth in it's ſettled courſe, without human help, and in ſuch a manner, as no human power can change; by his ſecret overruling providence does every thing, and ſhould be acknowledged in every thing: and all creatures, animate, and inanimate, rational, or irrational, willing, or unwilling, are his inſtruments: and not only thoſe intelligent agents, who obey his ſelves for bread; and they that were hungry ceaſed: ſo that the barren hath born ſeven; and ſhe that hath many children is waxed feeble.

6 The LORD killeth, and maketh alive: he bringeth down to the grave, and bringeth up.

7 The LORD maketh poor, and maketh rich: he bringeth low, and lifteth up.

8 He raiſeth up the poor out of the duſt, and lifteth up the beggar from the dunghill, to ſet them among princes, and to make them inherit the throne of glory: for the pillars of the earth are the LORD's, and he hath ſet the world upon them.

9 He will keep the feet of his ſaints, and the wicked ſhall be ſilent in darkneſs; for by ſtrength ſhall no man prevail.

10 The adverſaries of the LORD ſhall be broken to pieces; out of heaven ſhall he thunder upon them: the LORD ſhall judge the ends of the earth; and he ſhall give ſtrength unto his king, and exalt the horn of his anointed.

11 And Elkanah went to Ramah to his houſe; and the child did miniſter unto the LORD before Eli the prieſt.

12 Now the ſons of Eli were ſons of Belial; they knew not the LORD.

13 And the prieſt's cuſtom with the people was, that when any man offered ſacrifice, the prieſt's ſervant came, while the fleſh was in ſeething, with a fleſh-hook of three teeth in his hand;

14 And he ſtruck it into the pan, or kettle, commands; but they, who follow their own devices, have all their attempts overruled to promote his ſecret wiſe, and righteous purpoſes. Theſe things are equally applicable to the diſpenſations of his kingdom of grace: wherein he reſpects not men's wiſdom, learning, greatneſs, or imagined excellency: but, paſſing by thoſe, who deem themſelves intitled to his regard, ſelects the vile, the poor, the fooliſh of the world, having taught them to feel their guilt, and miſery, and to value his free, and precious ſalvation: and thus he repleniſhes his church from the high-ways, and hedges, and "takes the poor from the duſt, and the beg-"gars from the dunghill, to ſet them among princes, and "to make them inherit the throne of glory," "according "to the eternal purpoſe, which he hath purpoſed in Chriſt "Jeſus our Lord:" (Pſalm, cxiii. v. 7, 8. Eph. c. iii. v. 11.)

V. 9. He will keep, &c.] His ſaints are thoſe, whom his grace hath ſeparated from a ſinful world, and ſanctified unto himſelf. "Their feet he will keep:" they ſhall be directed, and upheld in his ways; they ſhall not ſo ſtumble, as utterly to be caſt down; nor be ſo ſnared, as finally to be taken captive by their enemies; for the Lord being their guide, and keeper, will lead and protect them "in the midſt of the "paths of judgment," through this dangerous world to glory. But however ſinners may now boaſt, and fill the world with clamour, and confuſion, they will ere long be put to ſilence, and ſink ſpeechleſs under the divine ſentence of condemnation, into everlaſting darkneſs, and deſpair. "For by ſtrength ſhall no man prevail," either to injure the Lord's people, overturn the intereſt of true religion, or ſecure themſelves from merited deſtruction.

V. 10. The adverſaries, &c.] Whilſt the Lord's adverſaries ſhall be totally ruined, his church ſhall proſper, not only as it did under the government of David, his king, whom Samuel by his command anointed; but under the goverment of his ſon, the Meſſias, who hath all power given him in heaven, and earth, who ſhall go on conquering, till all the ends of the earth ſubmit to his mediatorial ſway; and until he come to judge the quick and dead, at his appearing; when all enemies ſhall finally be put under his feet, and his glory be diſplayed in their deſtruction, and in the complete ſalvation of his people.

V. 11. The child did miniſter, &c.] The Levites were not called to any of their peculiar ſervices, until they were twenty-five years of age; but Samuel being devoted to the Lord in an eſpecial manner, was from a child employed about the ſanctuary, in thoſe things, of which he was capable: and as he did this from a pious diſpoſition of mind, it was approved, and called "miniſtering unto the Lord."

V. 12. They knew not the Lord, &c.] The ſons of Eli had been brought up in the courts of the Lord, and inſtructed out of the law, and perhaps had ſome ſpeculative knowledge of divine things: yet being ſons of Belial, men of a rebellious, and diſobedient ſpirit, it is ſaid, that "they knew "not the Lord." They had not that acquaintance with the divine character, united to a diſpoſition of heart to love it's excellency, which are eſſential to true Godlineſs; nor that experience of his faithfulneſs, and loving kindneſs, which they attain to, who truſt in, and call upon him, and have real communion with him. For want of this knowledge of God, and through their ignorance, error, or inattention to theſe firſt principles of religion, all their attendance upon divine ordinances was from the firſt mere hypocriſy, and they gradually ran into more flagrant abuſes. Eli appears to have been a godly man, and probably ſet his ſons a good example in private life, and gave them good advice, and inſtruction: but he yielded to a natural timidity, and feebleneſs of mind, and ſhunned trouble, and exertion; by this diſpoſition he was induced to indulge his children too much, without uſing his parental authority to reſtrain, and correct them, when young: and he connived at many abuſes in the ſervice of the ſanctuary, till they became cuſtoms, and made way for greater abominations; and even then he did not exert himſelf as became the High-Prieſt, and judge of Iſrael to puniſh, and repreſs them. This one fault opened the way for all the enormities, and fatal conſequences, which followed.

V. 13, 14.] The prieſts had their portion allotted them by the law out of every ſacrifice; which was given them or

or caldron, or pot; all that the fleſh-hook brought up the prieſt took for himſelf. So they did in Shiloh unto all the Iſraelites that came thither.

15 Alſo before they burnt the fat, the prieſt's ſervant came, and ſaid to the man that ſacrificed, Give fleſh to roaſt for the prieſt; for he will not have ſodden fleſh of thee, but raw.

16 And if any man ſaid unto him, Let them not fail to burn the fat preſently, and then take as much as thy ſoul deſireth; then he would anſwer him, Nay; but thou ſhalt give it me now: and if not, I will take it by force.

17 Wherefore the ſin of the young men was very great before the LORD; for men abhorred the offering of the LORD.

18 But Samuel miniſtered before the LORD, being a child, girded with a linen ephod 19 Moreover his mother made him a little coat, and brought it to him from year to year, when ſhe came up with her huſband to offer the yearly ſacrifice.

20 And Eli bleſſed Elkanah and his wife, and ſaid, The LORD give thee ſeed of this woman, for the loan which is lent to the LORD. And they went unto their own home.

21 And the LORD viſited Hannah, ſo that ſhe conceived, and bare three ſons and two daughters. And the child Samuel grew before the LORD.

22 Now Eli was very old, and heard all that his ſons did unto all Iſrael; and how they lay with the women that aſſembled at the door of the tabernacle of the congregation.

after the burning of the fat, and before thoſe, who offered the peace-offerings, prepared to feaſt on their portion with their friends. In addition thereto, this cuſtom had crept in, and the people in veneration for the prieſthood had quietly ſubmitted to it; by which their appetites were gratified with greater variety, and their avarice, with an additional perquiſite; (Iſa. c. lvi. v. 9—12.)

V. 15, 16.] The ſons of Eli were not long ſatisfied with the cuſtomary innovation; but, whilſt they neglected, or poſtponed the duty of burning the fat, (which, typifying the ſacrifice of Chriſt, and being the appointed expreſſion of the officer's repentance, and faith, was eſſential to the acceptance of the offering,) they inſiſted upon having ſuch portions of the fleſh, as they choſe, that they might indulge their ſenſual appetite: and when any one conſcientiouſly, and mildly remonſtrated againſt ſuch an abuſe in the ordinance of God, though willing to yield every other point to them, their very ſervants were ſo inſolent, as to threaten to take it by force. Thus they "lorded it over God's heri-"tage," and "kicked at his ſacrifice, which he had com-"manded."

V. 17. The ſin of the, &c.] Their contempt of God, and of his ordinances, and the public diſhonour done to his name was very great; and their ſin was aggravated by their public character, and eminent ſtation: but it is eſpecially noted, that through them, "men abhorred the "offering of the Lord;" many were ſo prejudiced by their ſcandalous behaviour, as to think any religion, or no religion, better than the ſervice at the tabernacle, and ſo were tempted to, or hardened in their idolatry, or irreligion: others, who were better diſpoſed, would deem it unneceſſary to put themſelves to the trouble, and expence of going up to Shiloh with their ſacrifices, to witneſs ſuch enormities: and even they, who perſevered in their attendance, were ſo grieved, that they hated to go, and had no comfort in the ordinances of God. Thus the whole appointment of God was likely to be neglected, and forſaken, and general ignorance, ungodlineſs and profligacy to enſue. Yet we do not read that Eli reproved them for theſe things, or refuſed to feaſt with them upon thoſe portions of the ſacrifices, which they ſo ſacrilegiouſly obtained! for he ſeems to have been too indulgent of himſelf, as well as of them.

V. 18, 19.] The contraſt betwixt the child Samuel, and the wicked ſons of Eli, betwixt his docility, and early piety, is intentionally marked, by the accounts of them being thus interwoven. It was a trial of the faith of Elkanah, and Hannah to leave their ſon with ſuch abandoned prieſts; but they were performing a vow, and the Lord, with whom they truſted him, preſerved him from the contagion: and Eli was peculiarly pleaſed with him, and clothed him in a linen ephod, ſuch as the prieſts wore, and others occaſionally, in the ſervice of God, thereby denoting the great expectations, that he had from him. And his parents who perſevered in coming to the courts of the Lord, notwithſtanding abuſes, ſupplied him with every thing that he wanted, ſuitable to his ſtation.

V. 20, 21.] It ſeems that Elkanah, and Hannah, having ſo hopeful a ſon, though they ſeldom ſaw him, were ſatisfied without more children: but in the midſt of our cenſures of Eli, we have here ſomewhat to his praiſe: it appears that he really loved thoſe, who loved the Lord; and was ſo taken with the conduct of Samuel, and with the piety of his parents; that his heart was enlarged in bleſſing them, and in praying, that they might be recompenſed for devoting their only ſon to the ſervice of God's ſanctuary, by having more children: and his prayer in this reſpect was heard, and abundantly anſwered.

V. 22. How they lay, &c.] Theſe women, who aſſembled at the door of the tabernacle, are ſaid by ſome writers, to have dedicated themſelves by courſes to the ſervice of the ſanctuary, doing any work pertaining thereto, which belonged to their ſex: ſuch as ſpinning, weaving curtains, &c: and that by their attendance there the prieſts formed that acquaintance with them, which they abuſed to ſuch vile purpoſes. Their buſineſs at the door of the tabernacle, was doubtleſs profeſſedly of a religious nature; and perhaps they were not, at firſt, devoid of ſerious impreſſions: but when thoſe, who ought to have been their inſtructors in 23 And he ſaid unto them, Why do ye ſuch things? for I hear of your evil dealings by all this people.

24 Nay, my ſons: for it is no good report that I hear; ye make the LORD's people to tranſgreſs.

25 If one man ſin againſt another, the judge ſhall judge him: but if a man ſin againſt the LORD, who ſhall intreat for him? notwithſtanding they hearkened not unto the voice of their father, becauſe the LORD would ſlay them.

26 (And the child Samuel grew on, and was in favour both with the LORD, and alſo with men.)

27 And there came a man of God unto Eli, and ſaid unto him, Thus ſaith the LORD, Did I plainly appear unto the houſe of thy father, when they were in Egypt, in Pharaoh's houſe?

28 And did I chooſe him out of all the tribes of Iſrael to be my prieſt, to offer upon mine altar, to burn incenſe, to wear an ephod before me? and did I give unto the houſe of thy father all the offerings made by fire of the children of Iſrael?

29 Wherefore kick ye at my ſacrifice, and at mine offering, which I have commanded in my habitation; and honoureſt thy ſons above me, to make yourſelves fat with the chiefeſt of all the offerings of Iſrael my people?

religion, uſed their influence to ſolicit them to wickedneſs, the moſt ſhameful conſequences followed. A more horrible abomination can ſcarce be conceived; and we ſhould hardly have deemed it credible, did not almoſt every age and place produce examples of the ſame ſhameful abuſe of religious profeſſion, to the great diſhonour of the goſpel, and to the hardening and rejoicing of the hearts of the oppoſers of it's ſacred truths.

V. 22—25.] This laſt enormity induced Eli to reprove his ſons; which he did in language very reaſonable, and ſuited to the caſe of thoſe, who though faulty poſſeſs a tender conſcience; but much too mild for ſuch atrocious offenders. Indeed no words ought in ſuch a caſe to have ſufficed: the execution of condign puniſhment upon them was abſolutely due to the inſulted honour of God, and in order to counteract, by the ſalutary example, the fatal effects of their crimes upon the minds of the people. To have finally excluded them from the execution of every prieſtly office, was the leaſt, that Eli, as the High-Prieſt, and the judge of Iſrael, ought to have done: and if he had remembered the words of Moſes, (Deut. c. xxxiii. v. 9,) and had honoured God more than his ungodly ſons, he would have done it: for there were prieſts enough without employing ſuch monſters of iniquity, in ſo ſacred a ſervice, and with ſuch fatal conſequences: and his neglect of this duty was chaſtiſed in the moſt terrible manner, in their deſtruction, with the ſlaughter of 30,000 Iſraelites, in the captivity of the ark, in his own violent death, and in the ruin of his family! However his words are worthy our conſideration: he endeavoured to convince them, that their conduct was notoriouſly evil, that their characters were publicly infamous, that religion was ſcandalized, and the Lord's people, in various ways, were made to tranſgreſs: that, if their crimes had only injured their fellow-creatures, the judge might have appointed a penalty, which being paid, or ſubmitted to, the guilt might have been taken away: or if their ſin had been of an ordinary kind, the prieſt, who was judge in ſuch caſes, having offered their ſin-offering, and intreated the Lord for them, they might have been forgiven. But their offence was ſo directly againſt the Lord, and ſo interwoven with their miniſtrations as prieſts, and was committed even in offering the ſacrifices for ſin; that, no expiation was appointed for ſuch preſumptuous crimes, no intreaty or interceſſion could be made for them; and none could dare to ſtand between them, and that wrath of God to which they were expoſed: for the interceſſion for ſinners with a holy God, is grounded upon the atonement of the promiſed Saviour, which the ſacrifices, which they had ſo horribly polluted, were intended to typify; (Heb. c. x. v. 26—29.) This ſeems to have been the meaning, which was couched under Eli's words, though, perhaps through his timidity, not very plainly expreſſed. Every wilful deliberate ſin contains ſuch ingratitude, rebellion, and enmity againſt God, and ſuch robbery, and contempt of him, that no creature could have dared to have intreated for a ſinner, if the Son of God had not expiated guilt with his own ſacrifice, and undertaken the office of mediator betwixt God, and man. But they, who ſin againſt that remedy, by perſiſting in the neglect, contempt, or abuſe of this great ſalvation, muſt periſh without help, and without mercy, and without any one, at the laſt, ſo much as intreating the Lord for them. Their caſe was indeed bad, for whom their own father could not intreat the Lord, though he had not reſolution to reſtrain, and puniſh them. It ſeems that they utterly diſregarded their father's reproof; for the Lord was determined to reſtore the honour of his own ordinances by executing ſignal vengeance upon them, and therefore he left them to total obduracy.

V. 27. A man of God, &c.] (Judges c. vi. v. 8—10.) This prophet, as moſt of thoſe in after ages were, was ſent an extraordinary meſſenger from God, to reprove the neglect, and wickedneſs of his ordinary miniſters, the prieſts. And this humiliating circumſtance, of a man of God being ſent to the High-Prieſt, and judge of Iſrael, was in itſelf a token of the Lord's diſpleaſure, and a preparation to his being further warned and reproved from God by the mouth of the child Samuel.

V. 29. Honoureſt thy ſons, &c.] As Eli was intruſted with authority, and bound by his combined offices to repreſs wickedneſs without partiality, and to maintain the worſhip of God in it's purity, he was deemed an accomplice in the crimes of his ſons, becauſe he connived at them; and was therefore with them accuſed of ingratitude for the ſingular favour, which God had ſhewn the family of Aaron in gene-

30 Wherefore the LORD God of Iſrael ſaith, I ſaid indeed that thy houſe, and the houſe of thy father, ſhould walk before me for ever: but now the LORD ſaith, Be it far from me; for them that honour me I will honour, and they that deſpiſe me ſhall be lightly eſteemed.

31 Behold, the days come that I will cut off thine arm, and the arm of thy father's houſe, that there ſhall not be an old man in thine houſe.

32 And thou ſhalt ſee an enemy in my habitation, in all the wealth which God ſhall give Iſrael: and there ſhall not be an old man in thine houſe for ever.

33 And the man of thine whom I ſhall not cut off from mine altar, ſhall be to conſume thine eyes, and to grieve thine heart: and all the increaſe of thine houſe ſhall die in the flower of their age.

34 And this ſhall be a ſign unto thee, that ſhall come upon thy two ſons, on Hophni and Phinehas; in one day they ſhall die both of them.

35 And I will raiſe me up a faithful prieſt, that ſhall do according to that which is in mine heart, and in my mind: and I will build him a ſure houſe; and he ſhall walk before mine Anointed for ever.

ral, and their branch of it in particular; with "kicking at," and deſpiſing the ſacrifices, only regarding them, as the means of gratifying their avarice, and ſelf-indulgence, without any view to the glory of God, and the benefit of his people. All this aroſe from his partial regard to his ſons, whom he honoured, by continuing them ſtill in the prieſts office, notwithſtanding their crimes: nay he honoured them more than God himſelf, by preferring their ſafety, intereſt, and indulgence, to the glory of God, the honour of his ordinances and law, and the ſalvation of his people: whereas he ought not to have "known his own children," but to have diſregarded even their lives, and to have ſtifled all paternal tenderneſs, in his zeal for God, and his worſhip.

V. 30. I ſaid indeed, &c.] Eli was deſcended from Ithamar, the younger ſon of Aaron. It is not known why the High Prieſthood came to be tranſlated from the line of Eleazar, probably it was for ſome miſconduct; and perhaps the Lord had given a conditional promiſe that it ſhould continue in Ithamar's family, whilſt they continued to "walk before him in "true Godlineſs." But this promiſe was now forfeited by their crimes; and the Lord informed Eli, that office ſhould not be continued in his family; aſſigning a reaſon, of univerſal application, in the diſpenſations of God; "them "that honour me, I will honour, and they that deſpiſe me, "ſhall be lightly eſteemed." They, who chooſe the Lord for their portion, truſt him for their ſalvation, love him above all created objects, renounce worldly intereſts, and connexions for his glory, and count nothing too good to part with, too hard to do, or too ſharp to ſuffer for his ſake, and to promote his cauſe, ſhall be honoured by him, perhaps in this world, certainly in the world to come: but they who deſpiſe his authority, his favour, his frown, his ſalvation, his cauſe, or his glory; in compariſon of the intereſts, eaſe, credit, or pleaſure of themſelves, or their families, ſhall ſink into contempt in this world, or in the world to come, or in both.

V. 31—34. I will cut off thine arm, &c.] The Lord declared that he would impoveriſh his family, and reduce the remains of it to the moſt debaſed condition; with this peculiar circumſtance, that as Eli had in old age ſo miſbehaved himſelf, all his family ſhould die young. This began to take place, when the Philiſtines invaded, and plundered Iſrael, made dreadful havock, and took the ark of God, (thus as it were ſpoiling his habitation of the chief glory, and treaſure of Iſrael,) and ſlew his two ſons in one day. And had Eli lived to ſee the miſerable ſlaughter, which Saul made of his deſcendants; (c. xxii. v. 17—20;) and Abiathar's being depoſed by Solomon for treaſon, (1 Kings, c. ii. v. 27,) and the conſequent indigence, and miſery of his family, the ſight would have been painful to his eyes, and grieving to his heart.

V. 35. A faithful prieſt, &c.] This was fulfilled, when Zadok, of the line of Eleazar, was made High-Prieſt, whoſe poſterity continued in that office during the reigns of the deſcendants of David, and concurred with the pious princes in promoting true religion; to whom the deſcendants of Eli, crouched and petitioned for the loweſt ſervice; not for love of the work, but out of mere indigence, and in order to earn the ſmalleſt wages, or meaneſt maintenance. The concurrence of the prieſts of Aaron's line, with the kings of David's family, whilſt they thus walked before the anointed of the Lord, to fulfil the will of the Lord, typified the union of the kingly and prieſtly offices in Jeſus Chriſt.

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.

The mercies, which we receive in anſwer to our prayers, ſhould not only be acknowledged with thankful praiſe, but ſhould lead us to rejoice in the Lord, as the fountain of felicity, and the God of ſalvation, and to anticipate with chearful hope, our complete deliverance from, and victory over all the enemies of our ſouls. From what the Lord hath done for us, we ſhould be led to meditate upon his glorious perfections, as diſplayed in all his works, but eſpecially in his dealings with ſinners, who hope in his mercy. An eſtabliſhed judgment, concerning his perfect wiſdom, power, love, and faithfulneſs, as exerciſed with ſovereign authority in all the adminiſtrations of his kingdom of providence, and grace; and an habitual regard to his operations in all theſe events, which take place through the inſtrumentality of ſecond cauſes, or rational agents, of whatever kind or character, will confirm our belief, that they, and they only are ſafe and happy, who truſt in him, and enjoy his favour; that the preſent ſucceſs, boaſtings, and confidence of the wicked will ſhortly iſſue in diſappointment, miſery, and deſpair; and the troubles of every humble believer, in triumph, and exultation. Vain and tranſitory are all other diſtinctions except that, betwixt the godly, and the ungodly, which will ſurvive, and ſwallow up all the reſt, and will endure to all eternity. The Lord is a God of knowledge, and by him actions "are weighed:" and he knoweth, and approveth his people, and he marketh with abhorrence the preſumptuous offender: with uncontrolable authority he diſpenſeth to every man, as he pleaſes; and in his own moſt wiſe, and gracious time, and manner, he will terminate the afflictions, and advance the comforts of his people, and overrule every event, for their good. In him let them therefore truſt, and to him ſubmit, and wait his time, and they ſhall acknowledge at laſt, that he hath done all things well. All the circumſtances of our life, and death are already appointed in the ſecret purpoſe of our God, and we ſhall live, however expoſed, till he pleaſes to take our breath; and then we muſt die, whatever efforts may be made to prolong our lives. As this unknown period cannot be far diſtant, our wiſdom and duty is to prepare for it; to make it our one great buſineſs to obtain the Lord's favour, and do his will: and then, we ſhall at length inherit the throne of glory, however abject our condition may be in this world. And though our path be dark, and ſlippery, and beſet with ſnares, and enemies, the Lord will keep our feet, and uphold our goings, by the ſame power, which eſtabliſheth the earth: nor can any power prevail againſt his ſaints, or prevent the deſtruction of his enemies. And may the Lord haſten that day, when his anointed prieſt and king ſhall eſtabliſh his authority, throughout the earth, upon the ruins of all oppoſition. Our gracious God accepts our thanks for mercies received, as prayers for further benefits; and when we offer him his own, he conſiders the ſervice as a loan, and as ſuch will recompenſe it. Out of the mouth of babes he can perfect his praiſe, and by their example expoſe the ſhame of thoſe ſons of Belial, who, with every advantage, know him not, and rebel againſt him. There is great encouragement given us to devote our children to the Lord in prayer, from their birth, yea from their conception in the womb, to bring them early to his courts, and to train them up in his ways; for, generally he takes ſuch children into his ſervice, and gives them that ſpiritual, and experimental knowledge of himſelf, which fortifies the heart againſt temptation, and is the ſource of all true godlineſs. The feeble attempts of children to ſerve God are noticed with condeſcending regard, as peculiarly pleaſing to him; and in all caſes, "where "there is a willing mind, it is accepted according to what "a man hath, and not according to what he hath not:" and the grace of God is ſufficient for his feebleſt ſervants, in their proper place, though in the midſt of the worſt examples, and ſtruggling with the moſt powerful temptations. The neglect of properly educating children, and the indulgence of their wayward inclinations, is a ſin, which God ſeverely chaſtiſes in his own people: becauſe it ſeems to imply a contempt of his authority and ſpecial favour, and a diſregard to his glory, as well as to their immortal ſouls; and becauſe it tends to the moſt fatal abuſes, and apoſtaſies, and to the utter decay of true religion. None are generally more abandoned than the degenerate children of godly perſons, when they have broken through all the reſtraints of ſhame, conſcience, and regard to character: and thus the cauſe of godlineſs ſuffers in loſing thoſe families, which were it's ſupport, and in the prejudice, which their baſe conduct excites in the minds of beholders. And when ſuch children of Belial have been admitted into the ſacred miniſtry, and go on with the forms of godlineſs, for the ſake of the emoluments, or authority, whilſt they are real infidels, and profligates; they prove the moſt fatal enemies to the cauſe of God, and the moſt deſtructive murderers of the ſouls of men. Many they miſlead, but more they prejudice againſt all religion, and furniſh atheiſts, ſceptics, blaſphemers, and ſcoffers, with their moſt formidable weapons; they ſupply excuſes to the careleſs, and ſlothful; they diſcourage the hearts, and damp the zeal of thoſe, who are ſeriouſly diſpoſed, and cauſe even the Lord's people to tranſgreſs; they bolſter up the confidence of hypocrites, and by their enticements and examples tempt many to ſuch crimes, as they would otherwiſe have trembled to think of. Though we ſhould abhor the crimes of ſuch men; yet we ought not on that account to think the worſe of the ordinances, truths, or precepts of God's words; but by perſevering in a contrary conduct, we ſhould enter our proteſt againſt them, and evince the difference betwixt the name, and the reality of religion.—Abuſes in the ſervice of God, when once introduced, are ſoon ſanctioned by cuſtom, and conformed to without heſitation: and when wicked men have gained one point; for their own lucre, they will attempt another, and not ſhrink from the commiſſion of the baſeſt crimes, for the ſerving of their ſelfiſh purpoſes. In ſuch a caſe mild arguments, and gentle rebukes are feeble weapons: the coercive arm of authority ſhould impartially and deciſively interpoſe: for, though the magiſtrate muſt not uſe his ſword in matters of conſcience; yet he ought to uſe it in puniſhing atrocious immorality in perſons of every deſcription. However, if they eſcape with impunity, through the falſe tenderneſs, or partial negligence of thoſe, who ought to execute condign puniſhment upon them, they will not eſcape the vengeance of God: and wretched indeed is their caſe, who by their abuſe, or contempt of the ſacrifice of Chriſt, are excluded from the benefit of his interceſſion; and, who have ſo long hardened themſelves, as to be let alone of God to be hardened, becauſe he hath determined to deſtroy them. But when they, who have the grace of God in their hearts, yield to temptation, and repeatedly commit iniquity, the Lord will perſevere in his rebukes, and chaſtenings, till he hath brought them to repentance: and in this proceſs offenders will ſmart ſeverely; the diſhonour, which they have occaſioned to the name of the Lord, ſhall redound in diſgrace upon themſelves, and their families: the crimes, which they have connived at in others, through eaſe, ſelf-indulgence, or partial affection, ſhall be corrected in themſelves: their expectations ſhall be blaſted, their diſtinctions withered, their uſefulneſs precluded, and their honour laid in the duſt; or rather transferred to thoſe, who honour God: and perhaps the repeated and ſevereſt ſtrokes of the Lord's chaſtiſing rod, ſhall purſue them down to the grave. That improper regard to the intereſt of their families, which induces men to offend God, often proves the immediate cause of the ruin of their posterity; whilst that disregard to all personal, or relative interests, when the glory of God is concerned, which his word requires, forms the best method of promoting their welfare. Many of the Lord's offending people live to see terrible effects of their misconduct; but how would it grieve their hearts, if they could foresee all the future consequences of every kind, upon their families, upon the church of God, and in hardening sinners to their destruction! Let us endeavour to conceive of them, that we may be induced to greater abhorrence and dread of sin, and to more constant watchfulness and prayer: for these things were written for our warning, that we might more earnestly resist temptation, and strive against the beginnings of iniquity, and train up our families in the nurture, and admonition of the Lord. But whosoever misbehaves, or is degraded from the Lord's service, the work shall not be stayed for want of instruments: and though others have been, and are useful, and faithful, as servants, in their several generations; yet the Son of God is the faithful and merciful High Priest, who doeth according to all, that is in the heart of his heavenly Father, and whose priesthood shall be unchangeable and eternal. The meanest office under him, is great preferment; his pleasant service recompenses itself; he will here feed, and hereafter glorify all, who disinterestedly serve him: but the hirelings he will utterly exclude. May he furnish, and send forth many faithful ministers, who may seek his glory, and follow his example; and may he never henceforth suffer any, who resemble Hophni, and Phinehas, to prostitute the sacred ministry to their avarice, and ambition, or to disgrace it by their crimes!

NOTES.

CHAP. III.] V. 1. And the word of, &c.] We have only read of the prophetess Deborah, and of two other prophets since the death of Moses, (Ch. ii. v. 27. Judg. c. vi. v. 8:) and they seem only to have delivered an occasional message, and to have retired; so that their names are not recorded. But in Samuel prophecy was openly established, and continued, after his days, for many ages in Israel. But before his days, "there was no open vision;" i. e. extraordinary persons raised up statedly to declare the will of God to the people by immediate revelation, were not openly known amongst them; so that any occasional discovery of it, was more precious in their estimation, than when prophecy was more common.

V. 3. Ere the lamp, &c.] The lamps of the golden candlestick ought never to have gone out: this appointment therefore was either neglected; or some other lamp was intended, which being lighted in the evening, went out during the night. Eli being old and infirm had laid down long before, but Samuel was just retired to rest, in some room near to Eli's chamber, whom he waited on, and to the tabernacle, about which he was daily occupied.

V. 4—6.] The Lord called him by name, in an audible voice, which he mistook for the call of Eli, who probably often disturbed him in the night, through the infirmities of old age. But when Eli assured him that he did not call him, he went again to his bed, and supposed that he had been mistaken; and this repeatedly: his humble diligence, and submissive respect for Eli should not pass unnoticed.

V. 7. Not yet know the Lord, &c.] Samuel was not unacquainted with the Lord in that sense, in which the sons of Eli knew him not; but he did not know his manner of making his will known to the prophets; and was not therefore sensible that this was the voice of God: but the Lord overruled his mistake, to make Eli acquainted with his intentions of revealing himself to Samuel, and to excite his inquiry about it.

V. 9. That thou shalt say, &c.] Eli could not but consider this preference shewn to a child, before himself, and his family, as a severe, and humiliating rebuke to him; especially as he was aware that it was a message from the Lord to himself, denouncing judgments upon him, and his

10 And the LORD came, and ſtood, and called as at other times, Samuel, Samuel, Then Samuel anſwered, Speak, for thy ſervant heareth.

11 And the LORD ſaid to Samuel, Behold, I will do a thing in Iſrael, at which both the ears of every one that heareth it ſhall tingle.

12 In that day I will perform againſt Eli all things which I have ſpoken concerning his houſe: when I begin, I will alſo make an end.

13 For I have told him, that I will judge his houſe for ever, for the iniquity which he knoweth: becauſe his ſons made themſelves vile, and he reſtrained them not.

14 And therefore I have ſworn unto the houſe of Eli, that the iniquity of Eli's houſe ſhall not be purged with ſacrifice nor offering for ever.

15 And Samuel lay until the morning, and opened the doors of the houſe of the LORD: and Samuel feared to ſhew Eli the viſion.

16 Then Eli called Samuel, and ſaid, Samuel, my ſon. And he anſwered, Here am I.

17 And he ſaid, What is the thing that the LORD hath ſaid unto thee? I pray thee hide it not from me: God do ſo to thee, and more alſo, if thou hide any thing from me, of all the things that he ſaid unto thee.

18 And Samuel told him every whit, and hid nothing from him. And he ſaid, It is the LORD; let him do what ſeemeth him good.

19 And Samuel grew, and the LORD was with him, and did let none of his words fall to the ground.

20 And all Iſrael, from Dan even to Beerſheba, knew that Samuel was eſtabliſhed to be a prophet of the LORD.

21 And the LORD appeared again in Shiloh: for the LORD revealed himſelf to Samuel in Shiloh by the word of the LORD.

houſe: yet without envy, reſentment, or impatience, he gave Samuel directions, how to behave upon the occaſion!

V. 10. And ſtood, and called, &c.] This ſeems to imply that there was a viſible appearance, as well as an audible voice: it is alſo mentioned that the name Samuel was twice repeated; and that Samuel omitted the word "Lord," in anſwering, as Eli had inſtructed him, probably through uncertainty, and timidity.

V. 11. Shall tingle.] The very report ſhould ſo affect the hearer, as to continue to thrill in his ears, long after; as very loud, and ſtupendous noiſes are uſed to do.

V. 12. When I begin, &c.] This meſſage was probably ſent to Eli ſome years before his death, and tradition reports that Samuel was at this time only twelve years of age. The forbearance of God tended to harden the hearts of Eli's ſons, in preſumptuous expectations of impunity: but the Lord aſſured them, that though he waited ſome time before he began, yet when the appointed period arrived, he would fully execute all his threatened vengeance.

V. 14. Purged, &c.] The ſins of individuals of Eli's houſe might be pardoned, through the ſacrifice of Chriſt, if they repented, and believed, for their ſalvation from eternal puniſhment: but the Lord had irrevocably determined, that no number of ſin-offerings, ſhould prevail with him to continue that family in the High-Prieſthood, or to deliver them from the awful temporal judgments, which had been denounced againſt them; as perhaps both Eli and his ſons had hoped would be the caſe.

V. 15. Opened, &c.] Early in the morning, Samuel opened the gates of the court of the tabernacle, into which the people came to worſhip, as if nothing had occurred; neither elated with the diſtinction, nor neglecting his buſineſs, nor mentioning the matter, nor ſhewing any diſreſpect to Eli; but rather through his great reſpect and affection for him, being reluctantly afraid to inform him of the diſtreſſing meſſage.

V. 18. It is the Lord, &c.] Eli, in this remarkable anſwer to ſo awful a denunciation, delivered to him in ſo humiliating a manner, adverted to the ſovereignty, juſtice, wiſdom, truth, and goodneſs of God; acknowledging that he had a right to do as he ſaw good, and being aſſured that he would do nothing wrong. He was conſcious that he deſerved the awful ſentence, and acquieſced in the will of God, caſting himſelf entirely upon his mercy. The meekneſs, patience, and humility contained in theſe words are very admirable; and ſatisfy the mind, that he was truly penitent: though in his old, and infirm age, he had not courage, vigour of mind, or even authority, to execute puniſhment upon his ſons, who would now ſet him at defiance.

V. 19—21.] Samuel, it ſeems, was after this immediately and frequently favoured with revelations from God to the people, which were punctually accompliſhed, and made very uſeful: and therefore his appointment to be the prophet of the Lord was known, and acknowledged, throughout the land.—"By the word of the Lord," may either mean, by an audible voice from God to him, or by the appearance of him, whoſe name is called "The Word "of God."

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.

Men are ſeldom duly ſenſible of the value of their mercies, till they are convinced of it by the want of them. And this perverſity operates even in matters pertaining to religion: we, who are favoured with the written word, and with the public preaching of the goſpel, in plenty, and by miniſters of varied talents, and endowments, can ſcarce conceive the value, that our fore fathers, in days of ignorance, and perſecution, put upon a Bible, or upon the opportunity of hearing a faithful ſermon: and which many ſtill put upon them in different parts of the world. This humbling reflection ſhould teach us to be thankful for and to improve our privileges, lest the Lord should shew us their preciousness, by depriving us of them. The Lord disposes of his special favours in holy and wise sovereignty, without confining himself to age, station, or office in his church; but he orders every thing for their correction, who offend him, and to honour those, who honour him. Docility, diligence, respectful submission to superiors, and an humble, self denying disposition in youth, are happy indications, of an honourable, and useful life: and they, who reduce to practice what they have been already taught, shall be favoured with further discoveries of the Lord's truth, and will: and where the heart is upright, mistakes and infirmities will be pardoned, rectified, and over-ruled for good. Those spiritual gifts are like to be useful, which are accompanied with humility, and a willingness to be serviceable in the meanest situation, and to behave with due respect to superiors, though faulty, and under divine rebukes. However no deference to men, because superior in every respect to themselves, must influence those, whom the Lord employs, as his messengers, to conceal, or to mutilate their message. And they are most unwise in their spiritual concerns, who wish to be flattered: nay, who do not desire above all things to know the whole of the revealed will of God, and the worst of their own state and case: for though temporal punishment may be unalterably determined; yet, blessed be God, the blood of Jesus cleanses the believer's soul from all sin, and assuredly delivers him from eternal misery: and Jesus casts out none that come to him, however vile they have heretofore made themselves. Presumptuous hopes of impunity, because the Lord is long-suffering, ruin multitudes, who postpone repentance till God hath sworn in his wrath, that they shall not enter into his rest; and when he begins to take vengeance, he will also fully execute his most tremendous threatenings. And if temporal sufferings may be so terrible, as to cause the ears of all, who hear of them, to tingle, what will be the everlasting punishment of the wicked? For men make themselves vile by their sins, but God reduces them to an abject state of misery for their sins. Let us then humble ourselves before him, before the door of mercy be for ever shut; let us accept of his chastisement, however sharp; let us submit to the Lord, because he is a mighty sovereign, and because he is perfectly wise, righteous, and merciful; let us cast ourselves upon his mercy, and seek for his salvation; and study to shew our repentance, not only by good words, but by good works; by restraining others from sin, as well as avoiding it ourselves, and by faithfully improving every talent committed to us. Then, though the infirmities of old age disable us for usefulness, and though we meet with many humiliating dispensations, we may rejoice to see others like to be useful when we are gone; and willingly impart to them the best counsel we are able, though their rising reputation be attended with our dishonour. And even if the prospect for our families be gloomy, we may encourage ourselves in the hope of that state, where the "wicked shall cease from "troubling, and where the weary are at rest."

NOTES.

CHAP. IV.] V. 1. And the word, &c.] This may either mean the word, which the Lord had spoken to him, concerning the ruin of Eli's family; or the word, which from time to time the Lord sent by him to the people, declaring his will, and calling them to repentance: these things they heard with attention, throughout the land, but were not duly influenced by them. According to the conjectural calculation of chronology before given, (note, Jud. c. xiv. v. 1;) it was supposed that the first six years of Eli were coincident with the last of Samson: according to which the several events have been dated: some have supposed that all the time allotted to Eli was coincident with that of other judges, and that this battle was fought immediately after Samson's death: but this is very improbable. Others have not allowed of any coincidence, either in this case, or that of Tola and Jair; (Jud. c. x.) But if we allow of none, we must begin the forty years, which the apostle mentions as the date of Saul's reign, from the death of Eli; (Acts, c. xiii. v. 21.) But Samuel does not appear to have been publickly acknowledged as judge, till twenty years after that event: (c. vii. ver. 2.) There are great difficulties in reconciling the different accounts, which it is not intended to enter upon, except very briefly upon the texts, in which they occur.

V. 3. Wherefore, &c.] The elders of Israel seem to have been miserably sunk in ignorance, and formality; and no wonder, when impiety was so prevalent in the courts of the Lord. Though ripe for terrible judgments, they had no idea that this rebuke was intended, as a warning to repent; but proposed a very foolish expedient, to secure the assistance of Jehovah. Whether it were allowable on any occasion to carry the ark of the covenant into the field of battle or not: (c. xiv. ver. 18. 2 Sam. c. xi. v. 11:) it cannot admit of a doubt, but that they acted very wickedly in this matter. They had heard what wonders had formerly been wrought for Israel, when this symbol of Jehovah's

4 So the people ſent to Shiloh, that they might bring from thence the ark of the covenant of the LORD of hoſts, which dwelleth between the cherubims: and the two ſons of Eli, Hophni and Phinehas, were there with the ark of the covenant of God.

5 And when the ark of the covenant of the LORD came into the camp, all Iſrael ſhouted with a great ſhout, ſo that the earth rang again.

6 And when the Philiſtines heard the noiſe of the ſhout, they ſaid, What meaneth the noiſe of this great ſhout in the camp of the Hebrews? And they underſtood that the ark of the LORD was come into the camp.

7 And the Philiſtines were afraid; for they ſaid, God is come into the camp. And they ſaid, Woe unto us! for there hath not been ſuch a thing heretofore.

8 Woe unto us! who ſhall deliver us out of the hand of theſe mighty Gods? theſe are the Gods that ſmote the Egyptians with all the plagues in the wilderneſs.

9 Be ſtrong, and quit yourſelves like men, O ye Philiſtines, that ye be not ſervants unto the Hebrews, as they have been to you: quit yourſelves like men, and fight.

10 And the Philiſtines fought, and Iſrael was ſmitten, and they fled every man into his tent; and there was a very great ſlaughter: for there fell of Iſrael thirty thouſand footmen.

11 And the ark of God was taken, and the two ſons of Eli, Hophni and Phinehas, were ſlain.

12 And there ran a man of Benjamin out of the army, and came to Shiloh the ſame day, with his clothes rent, and with earth upon his head.

13 And when he came, lo, Eli ſat upon a ſeat by the way-ſide, watching: for his heart trembled for the ark of God. And when the man came unto the city and told it, all the city cried out.

14 And when Eli heard the noiſe of the crying, he ſaid, What meaneth the noiſe of this tumult? and the man came in haſtily, and told Eli.

15 Now Eli was ninety and eight years old; and his eyes were dim, that he could not ſee.

preſence, was, by his command, carried before the people, under the care of holy men, who truſted in, and glorified God; and when Iſrael was comparatively an obedient people, fighting under the banner of the Almighty: and they diſcerned not between the outſide ſymbol, and the real inviſible preſence of God. They even made an idol of the ark; and imagined that by fetching it into the army, of their own accord, without conſulting the Lord, when carried by two ſons of Belial, who were doomed to deſtruction, and whoſe touch polluted the ark, and whoſe preſence brought a curſe into the camp, (Joſh. c. vii:) without any humiliation before God, or amendment of life, they could induce him to fight for them, though he was evidently contending againſt them. But he would not countenance their hypocriſy, and preſumption; for he could employ other methods of preſerving, and diſplaying the honour of the ark, and of his own inſtitutions.

V. 4, 5. The two ſons, &c.] Probably theſe wicked men did not ſo much as aſk the conſent of their aged father on this occaſion, whoſe heart foreboded the fatal conſequences. But they were hardened to their deſtruction, and were left to venture preſumptuouſly into the holy of holies, and to carry the ark into the army: and thus, without any proper call, they were found within the reach of the ſword of the Philiſtines, by which they were deſtined to be ſlain. Doubtleſs they were much pleaſed with, and proud of the office, of coming in as the ſuppoſed deliverers of Iſrael, bearing the ark of the covenant. And when they entered the camp, the whole army were infatuated with the ſame groundleſs preſumption; which only tended to render them more negligent of their proper duty, and more remiſs in their military arrangements; as if God were now engaged to fight for them, however wicked, and careleſs they were.

V. 7. God is come, &c.] No wonder the Philiſtines confounded all the diſtinctions betwixt the ark, and that inviſible God, whoſe preſence with his believing people it denoted; when the Iſraelites entirely overlooked them. It ſeems the Philiſtines, though idolaters, and enemies to the worſhippers of Jehovah, had at times ſome apprehenſions that he was the true God, and above all others; but thoſe were only tranſient convictions, not grounded upon true faith, and therefore they excluded not the hope of gaining the maſtery, and tended on this occaſion to increaſe their intrepidity, and reſolution. They ſpake of the works of Jehovah in Egypt, and in the wilderneſs, in language, very expreſſive of their partial information, and confuſed apprehenſions of them.

V. 13—18. His heart trembled, &c.] Though Eli had been ſinfully indulgent to his ſons, and had abundant reaſon to expect to hear of their death, as well as of the defeat of Iſrael; yet his chief anxiety was about the ark of God. Accordingly he bare the tidings of Iſrael's calamity, and of the death of his ſons, in the midſt of their unrepented crimes, with apparent fortitude, and reſignation; but when he heard that the ark of God was taken, came out of the army, and I fled to-day out of the army. And he said, What is there done, my son?

17 And the messenger answered and said, Israel is fled before the Philistines: and there hath been also a great slaughter among the people; and thy two sons also, Hophni and Phinehas, are dead; and the ark of God is taken.

18 And it came to pass, when he made mention of the ark of God, that he fell from off the seat backward, by the side of the gate, and his neck brake, and he died; for he was an old man, and heavy: and he had judged Israel forty years.

19 And his daughter-in-law, Phinehas' wife, was with child, near to be delivered: and when she heard the tidings that the ark of God was taken, and that her father-in-law and her husband were dead, she bowed herself and travailed; for her pains came upon her.

20 And about the time of her death, the women that stood by her, said unto her, Fear not, for thou hast born a son. But she answered not, neither did she regard it.

21 And she named the child I-chabod, saying, The glory is departed from Israel: (because the ark of God was taken, and because of her father-in-law, and her husband:)

22 And she said, The glory is departed from Israel; for the ark of God is taken.

the reflection upon the dishonour to God, and to religion, and the dreadful loss to his people, which his negligence had occasioned, was more than he could support; and he fell down in a swoon, and his neck brake and he died. Thus expiring in so terrible a manner, under the rebuke of God, he formed, and still forms an useful warning to others: and yet, even in the manner of his death, he testified his supreme regard to the honour of God, and the interests of religion, above all personal, and relative considerations; and with all his faults he fell in, and even by a lively exercise of love to God, and his ordinances.

V. 19—22.] The wife of Phinehas also, though married to so wicked a priest, appears to have been a person of eminent piety. The death of her father-in-law, and of her husband contributed to hasten her death; but her dying regret was for the captivity of the ark, and the departure of the glory from Israel; for with her parting breath she named her son Ichabod, or "where is the glory?" In this her judgment was right; the presence, and ordinances of the Lord were the chief glory of Israel; and the loss of them was the departure of the glory. But if she supposed that the Lord had finally departed from Israel, she was under a mistake. From Shiloh the ark, the glory of Israel, was finally removed, with every indication of deep displeasure; for probably the inhabitants of that city had too much resembled the abandoned priests, (Psalm lxxviii. v. 59—68. Jer. c. xxvi. v. 6.) But it was restored to Israel, and established elsewhere; nor was the ruin of Eli's family, the destruction of the Aaronic priesthood. However these were events, which must make the ears of all, who heard of them to tingle.

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.

When the judgments, denounced in the word of God, do not bring sinners to repentance, their speedy execution may be expected. The nearer any persons are to the Lord in profession, and the more privileges they are favoured with, the more certain, and dreadful will be their punishment, if they thence take encouragement to commit iniquity. Unhumbled professors of religion are apt to think, that they are entitled to help from God, because they are called by his name, though they disgrace it with their crimes; and to murmur at those rebukes, by which they are warned to repent of their sins, and to amend their lives. As their dependance is placed upon their external forms, the increase of their hypocrisies bolsters up their presumptuous hopes, and they often take the name of the Lord in vain, and dishonour his ordinances more, in attending on them, than they could do by neglecting them: so that he abhors those services, for which they expect his favour: but he will rather let his avowed enemies triumph for a season, than encourage such hypocrites, whose crimes still more dishonour his holy name; and all their forms will only serve to lull them into a fatal security, and precipitate their ruin. The most avowed infidels and atheists, and the most atrocious, and desperate offenders, have their pangs of conviction, and disquietude of mind; and with all their efforts they cannot utterly exclude forebodings of fatal effects from their contempt of, and rebellion against the God of heaven: and though they conceal, stifle, and get rid of this apprehension for a time, and may even prosper in their ungodliness; yet their fear will come upon them, and even worse than they ever foreboded. Whilst the impenitent are consigned to final ruin; the offending servants of God, who tremble at his judgments, and for the dishonour, which they have occasioned to his name, may die in an awful manner, without comfort, for a warning to those, who are left behind: yet when death in it's most formidable shape finds men, humbled for their sins, crying for mercy, and more anxious for the cause of God and truth, than for the most idolized creature comforts, it will eventually prove a blessing; yea every dispensation is in mercy, which rescues the immortal soul from hell. What miseries do some ungodly men entail upon all those, who are connected with them! And what an awful lesson is here for parents, who are tempted to connive at the first appearances of vice in their children! Let them reflect on Eli's death, of his sons more fatal end, of Phinehas' wife, of the slaughter of Israel, of the ark taken captive, the glory departed, and Shiloh forsaken; and let them tremble to think "how great a matter

AND the Philiſtines took the ark of God, and brought it from Eben-ezer unto Aſhdod.

2 When the Philiſtines took the ark of God, they brought it into the houſe of Dagon, and ſet it by Dagon.

3 And when they of Aſhdod aroſe early on the morrow, behold, Dagon was fallen upon his face to the earth before the ark of the LORD. And they took Dagon, and ſet him in his place again.

4 And when they aroſe early on the morrow morning, behold Dagon was fallen upon his face to the ground before the ark of the LORD; and the head of Dagon, and both the palms of his hands, were cut off upon the threſhold; only the ſtump of Dagon was left to him.

5 Therefore neither the prieſts of Dagon, nor any that come into Dagon's houſe, tread on the threſhold of Dagon in Aſhdod unto this day.

6 But the hand of the LORD was heavy upon them of Aſhdod, and he deſtroyed them, and ſmote them with emerods, even Aſhdod, and the coaſts thereof.

7 And when the men of Aſhdod ſaw that it was ſo, they ſaid, The ark of the God of Iſrael ſhall not abide with us: for his hand is ſore upon us, and upon Dagon our God.

8 They ſent therefore and gathered all the lords of the Philiſtines unto them, and ſaid, What ſhall we do with the ark of the God of Iſrael? And they anſwered, Let the ark of the God of Iſrael be carried about unto Gath. And they carried the ark of the God of Iſrael about thither.

9 And it was ſo, that after they had carried it about, the hand of the LORD was againſt the city with a very great deſtruction: and he ſmote the men of the city, both ſmall and great, and they had emerods in their ſecret parts.

10 Therefore they ſent the ark of God to Ekron. And it came to paſs as the ark of God came to Ekron, that the Ekronites cried

But they, who belong to the Lord, need not deſire to ſurvive, when the ordinances of God are withdrawn, and the cauſe of God is run down: little comfort can they take in their children, or even in life itſelf, in ſuch circumſtances: yet even ſuch trials ſhall prove bleſſings, where the ark, and cauſe of God are thus dear to the heart. And though the glory may be withdrawn from one ſinful nation, city, or village after another; yet it ſhall never depart from Iſrael, but ſhall ſhine forth in one place, when it hath been eclipſed in another: for Jeſus, our High Prieſt, ever liveth to maintain his own cauſe, and the gates of hell ſhall never prevail againſt his church; whatever may be the triumphing boaſts of his enemies, or the deſponding fears of his people.

NOTES.

CHAP. V.] V. 2. They ſet it by Dagon.] The Philiſtines placed the ark beneath Dagon in his temple, as a trophy of their victory by his ſuppoſed aſſiſtance, over the God, and people of Iſrael, (Judges c. xvi. v. 23, 24.) But as they did not deſtroy it, as Iſrael had deſtroyed the images of the Canaanites, nor ſhew it any other tokens of contempt, it hath been conjectured, that they alſo intended to have worſhipped it, in conjunction with, and ſubordination to their former idol.

V. 3—5. Dagon was fallen, &c.] Though the workmen doubtleſs had taken care to faſten up the image to keep it from falling, (Iſaiah c. xli. v. 7;) yet in the morning they found it proſtrate before the ark, as utterly unable to withſtand the power of the God of Iſrael: but attributing this to ſome accident, they ſet the image again in his place; and the next morning, when they aroſe early to pay their devotions, they found it fallen, and broken to pieces. The image of Dagon is ſuppoſed to have been framed above like a man, and beneath like a fiſh; but when the head, and hands were broken off, a deformed trunk alone remained. By this the utter helpleſſneſs, and inſenſibility of the dumb idol were made apparent; and alſo the comparative weakneſs and folly of thoſe evil ſpirits, who thus courted worſhip to themſelves: and yet the Philiſtines, as if they were as ſenſeleſs, as their idol, inſtead of learning to deſpiſe ſo contemptible a ſtock, and worſhipping the God of Iſrael, revered as ſacred the very threſhold, on which their idol, had been diſgraced, and broken; and thus perpetuated the memory of Jehovah's triumph, by their own fooliſh ſuperſtition! And they either continued to worſhip the ſtump of Dagon, or got a new image of him formed, as ſoon as poſſible.

V. 6—12.] The Philiſtines, not being by this defeat of their idol convinced of their folly in attempting to impriſon the ark of the God of Iſrael, were next ſmitten with ſore judgments, by which multitudes died, (v. 12;) and others were afflicted with emerods, ſuppoſed to be of the nature of the piles, very dreadful, and general amongſt all thoſe, who eſcaped death. By theſe judgments, they were rendered 11 So they sent and gathered together all the lords of the Philistines, and said, Send away the ark of the God of Israel, and let it go again to his own place, that it slay us not, and our people: for there was a deadly destruction throughout all the city; the hand of God was very heavy there.

12 And the men that died not were smitten, with the emerods; and the cry of the city went up to heaven.

desirous of getting rid of the ark, but were not induced to renounce their idolatry, or to worship Jehovah. Thus, whilst Israel was punished for their hypocrisy, and wickedness, and were become so basely degenerate as not to attempt the recovery of the ark of the Lord, and indeed were unworthy of being employed in such a service; Jehovah vindicated his own glory, and made the captivity of the ark the occasion of exposing idolatry to contempt, and of convincing his enemies that his instituted worship could not be profaned with impunity. (Psalm lxxviii. v. 65, 66.)

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.

The Lord may for a season permit his cause to be run down, in order to expose the hypocrisy, to undermine the vain confidence, or to chastise the wickedness of his professed people: for he knows how, without any human help, and in defiance of all enemies, to recover it from the ruins, and to establish it in greater splendour. But the short-lived triumphings of the wicked on such occasions will issue in their greater contempt, and punishment. Men may be convinced by the judgments of God, that he is a terrible enemy, and that it is in vain to contend with him, and may be constrained to render him a feigned submission; (Psalm lxvi. v. 3. lxxxi. 15:) but nothing, except his renewing grace, will produce genuine repentance, faith, and love, and conversion from every idol, to his worship, and service. Yet those confessions, which are extorted by torment, or terror, are honourable to God, though useless to the impenitent sinner; (Mark c. v. ver. 7;) and he will glorify his name in the punishment of his enemies, as well, as in the salvation of his people. When he contendeth, he will overcome, and all endeavours to evade, or escape his wrath, will only increase man's misery, till the sinner be either brought to true repentance, or sunk under final condemnation; and the contempt, shall equal the torment of his despisers. When the Lord's appointed time shall arrive, all attempts to uphold the falling kingdom of idolatry, infidelity, superstition, or profaneness, will be utterly unavailing; and destruction will overtake those, who are not led to repentance by the discoveries of his power, justice, truth, and love, which will be made in that day of setting up his kingdom throughout the earth. Equally dangerous is it to oppose those partial revivals of true religion, which take place from age to age: for the ark of God will cause every Dagon to fall down before it, until they be broken in pieces; notwithstanding the insolent triumphs of those, who attempt to set them up, and secure them in their place: and the zeal, and pertinacity, with which the grossest idolatries, and most stupid superstitions, have been supported against the cause of God and truth, display the blindness of fallen man's understanding, as much as the depravity of his affections. Thus convinced sinners also with perverse assiduity set up again those false confidences, and worldly idols, which seemed to be thrown down under the preaching of the gospel; or when the old delusion will no longer sooth their conscience, they will exchange it for another, equally absurd, as long as they continue to love sin, and to hate the spiritual service, and humbling truth of God. But when Christ, the true ark of the covenant, really enters the heart of fallen man, (which is indeed satan's temple,) every idol will fall before his presence, and power, every endeavour to set them up again shall be in vain; every iniquity will be forsaken, and unrighteous gain restored; and the Lord will claim, and possess the throne. But pride, self-love, and worldly lusts, though dethroned, and crucified, like the stump of Dagon still remain within us. Let us then watch, and pray against their prevalency, let us seek to have them more entirely destroyed, and let us consider death, as the final destruction of our worst enemy, "the "sin, that dwelleth in us."

NOTES.

CHAP. VI.] V. 1. Seven months.] So long the Philistines endured the judgments of God, before they yielded to restore the ark: so long the Israelites neglected all endeavours to recover it. But it was more honourable to the Lord, to constrain the Philistines to send it back of their own accord, than that war should wrest, or money should ransom it out of their hands.

V. 2—9.] When they could no longer endure the anguish of the emerods, the desolation of the pestilence, or the depredations of the mice, which had now begun to mar their land, (v. 5.) they consulted their priests, and diviners upon the business: and their answer contains such inconsistencies, as aptly develope the workings of the human heart, in such circumstances. From the tradition of Pharaoh's rebellion, and destruction, they exhorted the people very seriously not to harden their hearts, but to let the ark go; but they did not advise them to repent, to renounce idolatry, and to worship Jehovah: nay they were unwilling

3 And they ſaid, If ye ſend away the ark of the God of Iſrael, ſend it not empty; but in any wiſe return him a treſpaſs-offering: then ye ſhall be healed, and it ſhall be known to you why his hand is not removed from you.

4 Then ſaid they, What ſhall be the treſpaſs-offering which we ſhall return to him? They anſwered, Five golden emerods, and five golden mice, according to the number of the lords of the Philiſtines: for one plague was on you all, and on your lords.

5 Wherefore ye ſhall make images of your emerods, and images of your mice that mar the land; and ye ſhall give glory unto the God of Iſrael: peradventure he will lighten his hand from off you, and from off your gods, and from off your land.

6 Wherefore then do ye harden your hearts, as the Egyptians and Pharaoh hardened their hearts? When he had wrought wonderfully among them, did they not let the people go, and they departed?

7 Now therefore make a new cart, and take two milch-kine, on which there hath come no yoke, and tie the kine to the cart, and bring their calves home from them:

8 And take the ark of the LORD, and lay it upon the cart; and put the jewels of gold, which ye return him for a treſpaſs-offering, in a coffer by the ſide thereof; and ſend it away, that it may go.

9 And ſee, if it goeth up by the way of his own coaſt to Beth-ſhemeſh, then he hath done us this great evil: but if not, then we ſhall know that it is not his hand that ſmote us; it was a chance that happened to us.

10 And the men did ſo; and took two milch-kine, and tied them to the cart, and ſhut up their calves at home:

11 And they laid the ark of the LORD upon the cart, and the coffer with the mice of gold and the images of their emerods.

12 And the kine took the ſtraight way to the way of Beth-ſhemeſh, and went along the high-way, lowing as they went, and turned not aſide to the right hand or to the left; and the lords of the Philiſtines went after them unto the border of Beth-ſhemeſh.

13 And they of Beth-ſhemeſh were reaping their wheat-harveſt in the valley: and they lifted up their eyes, and ſaw the ark, and rejoiced to ſee it.

14 And the cart came into the field of Joſhua a Beth-ſhemite, and ſtood there, where there was a great ſtone: and they clave the wood of the cart, and offered the kine a burnt-offering unto the LORD.

15 And the Levites took down the ark of the LORD, and the coffer that was with it, wherein the jewels of gold were, and put them on the great ſtone: and the men of Beth-ſhemeſh offered burnt-offerings and ſacrificed ſacrifices, the ſame day unto the LORD.

to conclude that their afflictions were from him, and framed an artful device for putting it to the trial; and if they were not convinced by another miracle, they determined to keep the ark, and aſcribe all their ſufferings to chance. Some treſpaſs-offerings they ſuppoſed to be neceſſary, if the ark was reſtored, in order that the Lord might "lighten his "hand from off them:" or that they might know wherefore "he did not;" but they were ſuch oblations as were utterly unfit for that purpoſe, though monuments of their perpetual ſhame, and of the Lord's triumph over them. In ſhort they evinced how unwilling they were to yield, and how unable to reſiſt, and the whole tended to magnify this ſymbol of the Lord's preſence. As the Egyptians hired Iſrael with jewels of gold to depart from them, yet were unwilling to let them go quite away; ſo did the Philiſtines by the ark, in taking which, they had ſo triumphed.

10—15.] That two kine, which had never been yoked, and whoſe calves were left at home, ſhould draw quietly, and keep the road without a driver, for ſeveral miles, neither ſtopping, turning aſide, or attempting to return: and that, whilſt they ſhewed the force of inſtinct in lowing for their calves, they ſhould be urged forward with a ſtronger impulſe to the very place, which the Philiſtines had mentioned, was certainly miraculous: and the obedience of the animals, in carrying back the ark, reproached the negligence of Iſrael. The preſumption of the Philiſtines in requiring this additional proof of Jehovah's power, was very great; but it was overruled for the manifeſtation of his glory, and to their deeper condemnation in perſiſting in their idolatry. The triumph of the ark was completed, when it was thus miraculouſly reſtored, with oblations, and the diſtant attendance of the Lords of the Philiſtines. Beth-ſhemeſh was a city of prieſts, in the border of the land; and they very properly offered the kine in ſacrifice before the ark; for nothing, which had been uſed in this ſacred ſervice, could lawfully have been employed to any common uſe: their offering unto the LORD; for Aſhdod one, for Gaza one, for Aſkelon one, for Gath one, for Ekron one:

18 And the golden mice, according to the number of all the cities of the Philiſtines belonging to the five lords, both of fenced cities, and of country villages, even unto the great ſtone of Abel, whereon they ſet down the ark of the LORD; which ſtone remaineth unto this day in the field of Joſhua the Beth-ſhemite.

19 And he ſmote the men of Beth-ſhemeſh, becauſe they had looked into the ark of the LORD, even he ſmote of the people fifty thouſand and threeſcore and ten men. And the people lamented, becauſe the LORD had ſmitten many of the people with a great ſlaughter.

20 And the men of Beth-ſhemeſh ſaid, Who is able to ſtand before this holy LORD God? and to whom ſhall he go up from us?

21 And they ſent meſſengers to the inhabitants of Kirjah-jearim, ſaying, The Philiſtines have brought again the ark of the LORD; come ye down, and fetch it up to you.

other ſacrifices alſo were proper expreſſions of joy and gratitude; but their placing the ark upon this great ſtone, in the open air, without either taking it into their houſes, or preparing a tent for it, ſeems to have been improper. The inhabitants of Kirjath-jearim gave it a different reception, and were accepted in ſo doing; probably they intended to forward it without long delay to Shiloh, but this was not the Lord's intention.

V. 19—21.] The Bethſhemites availed themſelves of this opportunity of gratifying their curioſity, by preſumptuouſly looking into the ark, the outſide of which was not to be ſeen uncovered by the Levites, who carried it. (Num. c. v. ver. 6.) Perhaps they pretended to examine whether the Philiſtines had taken away the tables of the law; perhaps ſome preſumed upon their prieſtly office, which aggravated their offence; and others upon they having firſt received the ark, and offered ſacrifices before it. But the Lord was provoked by their irreverent intruſion to puniſh many of them with ſudden death. The number, as it ſtands in our verſion, is ſo large to be found in one ſmall city, and the expreſſion in the original is ſo uncommon, that many have conjectured that there is ſome miſapprehenſion reſpecting it: and Joſephus mentions only ſeventy, who were ſlain. However we are not much intereſted in the deciſion of the queſtion. It does not appear that the Bethſhemites were humbled for their offence; but they were ſo terrified, that like the Philiſtines, they wanted to have the ark removed from them, and ſolicited the men of Kirjath-jearim to fetch it.

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.

When men under divine rebukes, harden themſelves in ſin, they are ſure to prolong and multiply their own miſeries: and it is ſo much more pleaſant to learn wiſdom in ſuch things, by the experience of others, than by our own, that it would be deemed madneſs to do otherwiſe, were it not ſo general! Thoſe convictions which ſpring from terror, without humiliation, will never produce more than an unwilling obedience: and the indignant heart of proud rebels will catch at every pretence, to aſcribe afflictions to chance, and not to the hand of God, and to infer, that it is not abſolutely neceſſary to part with every ſin. If correction be withdrawn, whilſt the heart is thus diſpoſed, the reſpite will prove an encouragement to proceed in tranſgreſſion: if the affliction be continued after a partial amendment, it will be deemed an argument, that repentance, and reformation are uſeleſs; and every diſpenſation of providence will eventually tend to increaſing guilt, and condemnation. Natural reaſon, and conſcience, with ſome fragments of traditional revelation, may convince men, that ſome method ſhould be uſed to appeaſe the anger of God; and enable them to give plauſible advice upon that ſubject: and when men are ſmarting under afflictions, and under the terrors of an awakened conſcience, they will bid high, and do much to purchaſe peace with the Lord: but faith alone, appropriating the information of the word of God, can diſcover what oblation he will accept, or in what way he will be approached by his ſinful creatures. But the inconſiſtencies, and ſuperſtitions of idolaters, and the lukewarmneſs of his profeſſing people, ſhall in due ſeaſon combine to diſplay his glory, to greater advantage. The very brute creation, when he pleaſes, ſhall ſhame man's ingratitude and diſobedience; his enemies ſhall furniſh memorials of their own diſgrace, and all ſhall be conſtrained to ſay, "this hath God "wrought." Many will appear joyful at the revival of religion, and favourable to it's truths, and ordinances, who are too buſy about the world, to put themſelves to much trouble, or expence about them: and many will unite in external obſervances, who have no inward reverence for the divine majeſty. The true glory of religion conſiſts in it's ſpiritual excellency; and that ſimplicity, which the carnal mind, deſpiſes, forms it's higheſt ornament. But preſumptuous intruſion into the ſecret things, which belong to God, forms a heinous provocation, and ſprings from a careleſs, and impenitent heart: and the nearer to the Lord ſuch intruder is, in profeſſion, and in office, the greater his guilt, and the more terrible will be his puniſhment: for though we are not under ſuch a diſpenſation of darkneſs, and diſtance, as Iſrael was; yet our God is ſtill a conſuming fire, and muſt be worſhipped with reverence, and godly fear. Inſtead of this reverence the carnal heart will ſubſtitute a ſlaviſh fear, and when rebuked for preſumption, and contempt, or alarmed with diſcoveries of the juſtice, and holineſs of God, will with the Gadarenes, or theſe Bethſhemites, requeſt the Saviour to depart out of their coaſts, and vainly ſeek to eſcape the Lord's diſpleaſure, by an entire neglect, and forgetfulneſs of him. Thus many ſtifle their convictions, and put away ſalvation from them; and by running into one extreme, or another, the very truths, and ordinances of God, which are means of life, and ſalvation to ſome, become the occaſion of deeper condemnation to others. May the Lord give us a ſpirit of humble fear,

NOTES.

CHAP. VII.] V. 1—2.] Kirjath-jearim lay in the road betwixt Beth-shemesh, and Shiloh, but was not a city of priests. The inhabitants of it, being convinced that the ark was indeed the pledge of their prosperity, and only dangerous, when treated with irreverence, were ready to entertain it, until it's intended removal to Shiloh. It doth not appear, that either Abinadab, or Eleazar his son, were priests, or Levites; and there seems to have been an intentional neglect shewn to that tribe for their wickedness; so that no notice was taken of them in a business, which properly belonged to them wholly: we are not so much as informed whether any of them were employed to fetch the ark to Kirjath-jearim, or whether the Lord dispensed with the irregularity of the inhabitants of that city in carrying it themselves. Here the ark remained, until David removed it in the beginning of his reign, which was more than sixty years after this time. The apostle says, (Acts, c. xiii. v. 21,) "That God gave them Saul by the space "of forty years:" but it is supposed that this term includes Samuel's government also, from the time of the events recorded in this chapter, which was twenty years after the ark was removed to Kirjath-jearim. (Note, Judg. c. xiv. ver. 1.) During this space the Israelites continued in subjection to the Philistines, and in general careless about the ark, or the worship of the Lord: but we must suppose that the prophet Samuel was labouring incessantly, and successfully, from town to town, throughout the whole land, to bring them to repentance, and to revive true religion amongst them.

V. 3—4. Samuel spake, &c.] When he had brought numbers of the people to a sense of their sin, and of their duty, he urged the heads of their several tribes to concur in a public, and avowed reformation, and re-establishment of the worship of Jehovah. Few words are indeed used, but they are so expressive, that we cannot hesitate in pronouncing this to have been one of the most general, and effectual revivals of religion, which ever took place in the church of Israel.

V. 5, 6.] (Note, Judg. c. xx. v. 1.) This ceremony of drawing water, and pouring it out before the Lord, might be an emblem of the effects of divine grace upon the heart, which disposes it to pour forth itself as water, before the Lord, in penitential confessions, with tears of godly sorrow, and in fervent prayers, and thanksgivings. On this occasion, Samuel seems to have been first publicly acknowledged as judge of Israel.

V. 7. And when, &c.] The Philistines considered this general convention of Israel, as the signal for shaking off their yoke, and determined immediately to attack them, before they were prepared for resistance: but their repentance of sin, and earnestness in seeking and serving the Lord formed the best preparation for war: and the event shewed their enemies the difference, betwixt attacking them, whilst thus disposed, and employed, and when buoyed up with presumption, though impenitent, and under condemnation.

V. 9. Samuel took, &c.] Samuel was not a priest, but he acted by an extraordinary authority in this, and many other instances, as a prophet of the Lord, and under his offered

offered it for a burnt-offering wholly unto the LORD: and Samuel cried unto the LORD for Iſrael; and the LORD heard him.

10 And as Samuel was offering up the burnt-offering, the Philiſtines drew near to battle againſt Iſrael: but the LORD thundered with a great thunder on that day upon the Philiſtines, and diſcomfited them; and they were ſmitten before Iſrael.

11 And the men of Iſrael went out of Mizpeh, and purſued the Philiſtines, and ſmote them, until they came under Beth-car.

12 Then Samuel took a ſtone, and ſet it between Mizpeh and Shen, and called the name of it Eben-ezer, ſaying, Hitherto hath the LORD helped us.

13 So the Philiſtines were ſubdued, and they came no more into the coaſt of Iſrael, and the hand of the LORD was againſt the Philiſtines all the days of Samuel.

14 And the cities which the Philiſtines had taken from Iſrael were reſtored to Iſrael, from Ekron even unto Gath; and the coaſts thereof did Iſrael deliver out of the hands of the Philiſtines. And there was peace between Iſrael and the Amorites.

15 And Samuel judged Iſrael all the days of his life.

16 And he went from year to year in circuit to Beth-el, and Gilgal, and Mizpeh, and judged Iſrael in all thoſe places.

17 And his return was to Ramah; for there was his houſe: and there he judged Iſrael; and there he built an altar unto the LORD.

immediate direction. This ſingle lamb, offered in humble faith, was immenſely more acceptable, than the moſt coſtly ſacrifices offered in pride aud hypocriſy.

V. 12. Eben-ezer, &c.] The tranſgreſſions and chaſtiſements of Iſrael had been many; they had repeatedly humbled themſelves before God, and obtained deliverance; and they had again relapſed into ſin, and fallen into diſtreſs: but they had not been given up to total apoſtacy, or utter ruin; and had now once more been brought to repentance, and made partakers of a ſingular deliverance, by the immediate interpoſition of the Almighty. This Samuel, and the people acknowledged with gratitude; and ſet up this ſtone to be a monument of the Lord's goodneſs, for his glory, and the encouragement of themſelves, and their deſcendants to future ages. The word Eben-ezer, ſignifies "the ſtone of help." The church of God, and every believer have continually occaſion to ſet up Eben-ezers, on the ſame account, and for the ſame purpoſes.

V. 14.] After this ſucceſs the Philiſtines were conſtrained to reſtore ſuch cities of Iſrael, as they had ſeized, even thoſe, which were ſituated in the neighbourhood of Ekron and Gath: and though we do not ſuppoſe that the Iſraelites entered into treaty with the Amorites, who dwelt amongſt them, they were ſo kept under, as to create them no diſturbance.

V. 15. All the days of his life.] That is, from this time, which probably was near thirty-eight years, and within about two years of the death of Saul: for Samuel ſeems to have retained conſiderable influence during the reign of that king, eſpecially in the neighbourhood of Ramah.

V. 17. And there he built an altar, &c.] It is very remarkable, that in this great revival of true religion the ark was neither removed to Shiloh, nor placed with the tabernacle in any other ſituation. It is uncertain whether the ſanctuary ſervice was carried on at Shiloh, or not, during this period: but probably it was either neglected, or very improperly conducted; and as to the ark, it's glory, was departed, the more pious Iſraelites diſregarded it; and preferred joining with Samuel in the ſacrifices, and worſhip, which doubtleſs by divine direction, he performed near his own houſe. This diſregard to the Levitical inſtitutions, ſurely intimated that their typical meaning formed their chief uſe; and that, when that was overlooked, they became a lifeleſs carcaſe, by no means to be compared with repentance, faith, and the love of God, and man.

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.

When the ſtated miniſters of God's word neglect their duty, and ſcandalize their profeſſion, the Lord will render them contemptible in the eyes of the people, (Mal. c. ii. v. 8, 9;) and employ others to reform the ſtate of religion, and uphold his worſhip: for every external inſtitution had better be diſpenſed with, than irreligion be permitted to diffuſe it's baneful influence. The truths and ordinances of God are dangerous only to thoſe, who deſpiſe, and abuſe them, and are always comfortable, and profitable to the humble believer: the threatenings therefore of God's word, and the judgments, that he hath executed upon ſuch, as have profaned them, ſhould not induce us to reject, or neglect them; but to be more circumſpect, and jealous of ourſelves, in our profeſſed regard to, and attendance on them. When the cauſe of God is deſerted in one place, it will be ſupported in another; and, though the public, and regular adminiſtration of divine ordinances be very deſirable, yet the ſame bleſſing may redound to individuals, when in God's providence, they are driven into corners, and confined to private houſes. The word of God may be faithfully preached, and other proper means of promoting true religion be uſed for a long time, without producing viſible, or extenſive effects: but they, who are employed in ſuch a work, ſhould ſow the ſeed in faith, and hope, and water it with prayers, and tears; they ſhould be inſtant in ſeaſon, and out of ſeaſon; perſevere without wearineſs, or yielding to deſpondency, and wait the Lord's time: and their labour will not be in vain; nay perhaps the ſeed, which hath been long ſown, and conſidered as loſt, will at length ſpring up with ſo large an increaſe, as to exceed their own moſt ſanguine expectations. It is a pleaſing proſpect to the faithful labourer, when he perceives the hearers convinced of their ſins, and mourning for the tokens of the Lord's diſpleaſure: and this will alſo afford him the long-wiſhed opportunity, of preſſing matters ſtill more cloſely, and particularly upon their conſciences; that

AND it came to paſs, when Samuel was old, that he made his ſons judges over Iſrael.

2 Now the name of his firſt-born was Joel, and the name of his ſecond Abiah: they were judges in Beer-ſheba.

3 And his ſons walked not in his ways, but turned aſide after lucre, and took bribes, and perverted judgment.

4 Then all the elders of Iſrael gathered themſelves together, and came to Samuel unto Ramah,

5 And ſaid unto him, Behold, thou art old, and thy ſons walk not in thy ways: now make us a king to judge us like all the nations.

ſuch good impreſſions may not wear off through procraſtination, or produce only a partial, or external reformation: but that the people may be prevailed upon to "return to the "Lord with all their hearts, and to ſerve him only," expecting all their ſalvation, and comfort from him, and renouncing every falſe dependance, and worldly luſt. Though this bleſſed frame of mind be the effect of divine grace, yet it is our duty; and in the uſe of means, we are required to prepare our hearts, and arm our ſouls with a ſtedfaſt determination thus to truſt in, and to ſerve the Lord: (Acts, c. xi. v. 23. 1 Pet. c. iv. ver. 1.) When in the firſt place every one hath "taken heed unto himſelf," he ought next to employ his beſt endeavours to engage his family, and his neighbour to the ſervice of God alſo: and when thoſe in the high ſtations, and public employments in ſociety unite in uſing their influence for theſe purpoſes, the moſt extenſive bleſſings may be expected. The effectual fervent prayer alſo of a righteous man availeth much: and the more men know of God, and of themſelves, the more will they deſire, and value the prayers of every Chriſtian, and of thoſe eſpecially, who are moſt eminent for faith, and holineſs; at all times, but particularly in ſeaſons of temporal, or ſpiritual diſtreſs. Bleſſed be God that Jeſus ever liveth to intercede for us, and at all ſeaſons pleadeth his own atoning blood in the behalf of all, who come to God through him! And through his ſacrifice, and mediation all our prayers for ourſelves, and others, are accepted of the Father. But neither his merits, nor the prayers of his ſervants for us, ſuperſede the neceſſity of our perſonal repentance, confeſſions of ſin, cries for mercy, and holy obedience: and ſeaſons of deep humiliation for ſin, and prayer for ſpecial bleſſings, are very properly attended with faſting, and other indications of ſelf-diſplacency, and diſregard to animal indulgence; that we may pour out our whole ſouls before the Lord, without having our attention diſtracted by any outward concern. When we are thus employed in earneſt devotion, ſatan, and his agents, may be eſpecially excited to aſſault us, as hating ſuch holy engagements, and envying our felicity: but they cannot do us any harm, except they can fright us from our duty. Nor can any hoſtile preparations prevail againſt that nation, which, in a ſpirit of true repentance, and reformation, and the fervent prayer of faith, hath entruſted itſelf unto the Lord's protection. Through ſucceſſive generations the church of God hath had occaſion to ſet up Eben-ezers for renewed deliverances: for neither outward perſecutions, nor internal corruptions have yet prevailed againſt her; becauſe "hitherto the Lord hath helped her;" and he will help her, even unto the end of the world. Every believer ſhould review the records of this preſervation, and theſe deliverances with admiring gratitude, and joyful hope; and then looking back into his own experience, he will find an abridgment of the ſame hiſtory: notwithſtanding temptation, and outward oppoſition. Notwithſtanding the deceitfulneſs of his own heart, and the power of his inbred luſts; through ſeaſons of ſlackneſs, and revival; through many tranſgreſſions, corrections, deliverances, and relapſes; through many fears, conflicts, and difficulties, he hath ſtill been preſerved from apoſtacy, and perhaps from diſgracing his profeſſion; "for hitherto hath the Lord helped him." If this be our happy caſe, let us raiſe up our Eben-ezers, in rendering the Lord our unreſerved praiſe: let us renew our application to God our Saviour for increaſing ſtrength in our ſoul, and power againſt our enemies: let us ſpeak to the encouragement of others of his love, and truth, that they may be animated to truſt and rejoice in the Lord: let us puſh ſtill farther every advantage againſt our enemies, aſpiring after entire liberty, and complete deliverance: let us ſubmit to thoſe, who have approved themſelves faithful, and have been made uſeful to us, in watching for our ſouls: let us keep cloſe to the means of grace, and the worſhip of God, and diligently improve our talents, and lay ourſelves out for the good of all around us. At ſtated ſeaſons, as at the concluſion of the year, or when about to approach the Lord's table, &c, or when we have received ſome remarkable mercy, we ſhall find it peculiarly uſeful thus to review our ways, and to wait upon the Lord to renew our ſtrength: in ſo doing we may hope ere long to ſet up our laſt Eben-ezer in the realms above, and to begin our eternal ſongs of joyful praiſe, to him, who hath helped us quite through, and made us more than conquerors.

NOTES.

CHAP. VIII.] V. 1—5. He made his ſons, &c.] We do not find that either God, or the people cenſured Samuel in this affair: we may thence infer, that he had properly educated his ſons, and that they appeared properly qualified for this office, and were appointed to it, for the good, and by the approbation of the people; though they deceived theſe expectations, and through love of money, became unjuſt judges. This was Samuel's affliction, rather than Iſrael's grievance; for had they conferred with him, he would doubtleſs have agreed to their deprivation, and cenſure, and to the appointment of more proper perſons in their places:

6 But

6 But the thing diſpleaſed Samuel, when they ſaid, Give us a king to judge us. And Samuel prayed unto the LORD.

7 And the LORD ſaid unto Samuel, Hearken unto the voice of the people in all that they ſay unto thee: for they have not rejected thee, but they have rejected me, that I ſhould not reign over them.

8 According to all the works which they have done, ſince the day that I brought them up out of Egypt even unto this day, wherewith they have forſaken me, and ſerved other gods; ſo do they alſo unto thee.

9 Now therefore, hearken unto their voice: howbeit, yet proteſt ſolemnly unto them, and ſhew them the manner of the king that ſhall reign over them.

10 And Samuel told all the words of the LORD unto the people that aſked of him a king.

11 And he ſaid, This will be the manner of the king that ſhall reign over you; He will take your ſons, and appoint them for himſelf, for his chariots, and to be his horſemen; and ſome ſhall run before his chariots.

12 And he will appoint him captains over thouſands, and captains over fifties, and will ſet them to ear his ground, and to reap his harveſt, and to make his inſtruments of war, and inſtruments of his chariots.

13 And he will take your daughters to be confectionaries, and to be cooks, and to be bakers.

14 And he will take your fields, and your vineyards, and your olive-yards, even the beſt of them, and give them to his ſervants.

15 And he will take the tenth of your ſeed, and of your vineyards, and give to his officers, and to his ſervants.

16 And he will take your men-ſervants, and your maid-ſervants, and your goodlieſt young men, and your aſſes, and put them to his work.

17 He will take the tenth of your ſheep: and ye ſhall be his ſervants.

18 And ye ſhall cry out in that day, becauſe of your king which ye ſhall have choſen you; and the LORD will not hear you in that day.

19 Nevertheleſs, the people refuſed to obey the voice of Samuel: and they ſaid, Nay, but we will have a king over us, 20 That we alſo may be like all the nations, and that our king may judge us, and go out before us, and fight our battles.

21 And Samuel heard all the words of the people, and he rehearſed them in the ears of the LORD.

22 And the LORD ſaid to Samuel, Hearken unto their voice, and make them a king.

but they were more diſpleaſed at this ſmall injury to their temporal intereſts, than they had been by all the diſhonour done to God by the impious debaucheries of Eli's ſons. They were weary of being ruled by pious judges, and prophets, raiſed up of God to reform religion; and wanted to look great in the eyes of the ſurrounding nations, by the external grandeur of kingly government: and this circumſtance ſerved them for an occaſion of propoſing the matter to Samuel.

V. 6—18.] Iſrael never had had ſo much reaſon to be ſatisfied with the government of judges, as under Samuel, who had been the inſtrument of exceeding great advantages to them: he was therefore much diſpleaſed to ſee them thus evidently actuated by an impatient diſcontented ſpirit; and felt with great ſenſibility, their ingratitude to himſelf. But he did not vent his diſpleaſure in reproaches, but in prayer, not knowing what anſwer to return to their demand, till he was inſtructed by the Lord; for if he had endeavoured to diſſuade them from their purpoſe, they would have aſcribed it to his ambition. Accordingly the Lord reminded him, that in rejecting him their judge, they actually rejected the Lord, who as king appointed their judges, according to all their former rebellions; and that therefore they were to be allowed their choice, for their correction. However he was directed to inform them, not how a king ought to rule, but of the manner, in which they generally do rule; by what heavy taxes, and oppreſſive meaſures, they ſupport their luxury, and magnificence; and by what methods they perform their oſtentatious works, and keep up their military force; perverting authority into tyranny, and changing ſubjection into ſlavery. As theſe are the natural effects of too great power entruſted with a fallen creature, we ought conſequently to prefer thoſe limitations, and reſtrictions, which are equally beneficial to the governors, and the governed. He was alſo directed to warn them, that if they obſtinately perſiſted in their requeſt, they would certainly be ſorry for it, and would cry unto the Lord to redreſs their grievances, but that he would not hear them.

V. 19—22.] After ſuch a proteſtation from their aged prophet in the name of the Lord, the people were ſo madly ſet upon their own meaſures, that they would have a king; accordingly they were diſmiſſed with the aſſurance of being gratified. Amidſt all this evil, we muſt note to their commendation, that they ſhewed great reſpect to Samuel: they did not ſet up a king for themſelves of their own chooſing, but ſought his counſel, and concurrence; and they put ſuch confidence in his word, that upon an intimation from him, that a king ſhould be given them, they were willing to wait, and departed quietly to their own houſes. The hiſtory of the world cannot produce another inſtance, in which a public determination was formed to appoint a king; and yet no one perſon either propoſed himſelf, or ſome other to be king, but referred the determination entirely to the providence of God! Ambition of authority was certainly not the motive in the leading men, who ſupported this meaſure.

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.

Our lives are ſo ſhort, and our faculties are ſo ſoon impaired, that we ought to be active in the ſervice of God, whilſt we poſſeſs health of body, and vigour of mind: then under diſqualifying infirmities, it will be our comfort to reflect, that our youth, and ſtrength were ſpent to ſome uſeful purpoſes. No inſtructions, or examples of men can overcome the bias of nature to evil: and the Lord communicates his ſanctifying grace by wiſe, and righteous rules, of which he doth not deign to inform us: duty is our part, and conſequences muſt be left with him. External reſtraints may produce appearances, which impoſe upon the moſt diſcerning Judges; yet when they are withdrawn, and temptations are met with, the evil heart will diſcover itſelf: and proſperity has a natural tendency to increaſe evil propenſities. Parents ſhould therefore prepare to bear with reſignation diſappointments reſpecting their children; and they ſhould not be anxious to prefer, or enrich them, leſt they ſhould aſſiſt in inflaming their luſts. The love of money is the root of all evil, and is peculiarly odious, and miſchievous in magiſtrates, and miniſters. They, who have been moſt active, diſintereſted, and uſeful, muſt expect to meet with ingratitude, and neglect, as man's recompence for their ſervices; but every loſs, and injury will prove a real gain to thoſe who expect their gracious recompence from God alone. And ſurely we may chearfully ſubmit to be rejected, deſpiſed, and hated by thoſe, who reject, deſpiſe, and hate the Lord; nay we ſhould conſider it as an honourable teſtimony, that we are acknowledged to ſtand on his part. Grace will change, and convictions will reſtrain human depravity; but in itſelf it is the ſame from generation to generation; and is now prone to the ſame rebellions, which heretofore provoked the Lord to anger. Diſcontent, and fondneſs of change, and a deſire of conformity to the world, and of outward ſplendour, are natural to man, and follow him from the cradle to the grave, unleſs ſubdued by divine grace: no change of circumſtance can cure theſe diſeaſes; the diſſatisfaction of the preſent ſituation is impatiently felt, the comfort of ſome other is eagerly, and ignorantly conceived; and neither the counſels of wiſe men, nor the teſtimony of God will ſuppreſs the cravings of inordinate deſires. When the mind is thus diſpoſed, the ſlighteſt circumſtance will ſerve as a pretext for ruſhing upon gratification; yet a godly man would grieve to give others by his conduct ſuch an occaſion of ſin. Nay the Lord requires his ſervants rather to yield to the unjuſt, and unreaſonable deſires of men, than to ſeem attached to earthly objects. And he frequently gives them their wiſhes in anger, (Hoſea c. xiii. v. 10, 11.) to chaſtiſe their iniquity, and convince them of their folly. When our grief, or diſpleaſure ſends us to prayer, nothing can injure, or even long diſtreſs us; for the conſolations of God will richly repay the injuries of men. Under the troubles, which the providence of God hath allotted us, we may expect the ſupports of his grace: but if we abſolutely perſiſt in chooſing for ourſelves; when we have exchanged ſlight inconveniences for real grievances, we ſhall have the aggravation of an accuſing conſcience, and the divine rebuke: and this will often be the caſe; for thoſe things which at a diſtance look pleaſant, are generally moſt bitter, when in actual poſſeſſion. The law of God, and the manner of men are widely different from each other; the former ſhould be our rule in the ſeveral relations of life; the latter the meaſure of our expectations from others. As magiſtracy is God's appointment, and a great bleſſing; and as every form is liable to abuſes; our wiſdom is to be thankful for the advantages, and patient under the inconveniences of that government, which we live under; and to pray continually for our rulers, that they may govern us in the fear of God, and that we may live under them in all godlineſs, and honeſty; thus honouring God, and the king, and not meddling with them, that are given to change, or diſpoſed, upon every imaginary grievance, to ſpeak evil of the ruler of the people: for many deſired alterations are only from bad to worſe. But the Lord's people ſhould behave ſo unexceptionably, that even thoſe that injure them may not be able to impeach their integrity, or to withhold from them reſpect, and confidence. And it is an hopeful ſymptom, when our deſires of worldly objects can brook delay; and when we can refer the time, and manner of their being granted to the determination of God's providence.

NOTES.

CHAP. IX.] V. 1, 2. Now there, &c.] It is wonderful, that ſome chief of the tribe of Judah did not now claim the kingdom, in virtue of Jacob's bleſſing; but it was of the Lord, that he might firſt give them ſuch a king, as they had ſet their hearts upon, for their correction, before he raiſed up for them a king after his own heart. The tribe of Benjamin, by the fatal cataſtrophe of Gibeah's wickedneſs, was reduced to be the leaſt in Iſrael; but the indivi-lier perſon than he: from his ſhoulders and upward he was higher than any of the people.

3 And the aſſes of Kiſh, Saul's father, were loſt; and Kiſh ſaid to Saul his ſon, Take now one of the ſervants with thee, and ariſe, go ſeek the aſſes.

4 And he paſſed through mount Ephraim, and paſſed through the land of Shaliſha, but they found them not: then they paſſed through the land of Shalim, and there they were not; and he paſſed through the land of the Benjamites, but they found them not.

5 And when they were come to the land of Zuph, Saul ſaid to his ſervant that was with him, Come, and let us return; leſt my father leave caring for the aſſes, and take thought for us.

6 And he ſaid unto him, Behold now, there is in this city a man of God, and he is an honourable man; all that he ſaith cometh ſurely to paſs: now, let us go thither: peradventure he can ſhew us our way that we ſhould go.

7 Then ſaid Saul to his ſervant, But behold, if we go, what ſhall we bring the man? for the bread is ſpent in our veſſels, and there is not a preſent to bring to the man of God: what have we?

8 And the ſervant anſwered Saul again, and ſaid, Behold, I have here at hand the fourth part of a ſhekel of ſilver; that will I give to the man of God to tell us our way.

9 (Before-time in Iſrael, when a man went to enquire of God, thus he ſpake, Come, and let us go to the ſeer: for he that is now called a Prophet, was before-time called a Seer.)

10 Then ſaid Saul to his ſervant, Well ſaid; come, let us go: ſo they went unto the city where the man of God was.

11 And as they went up the hill to the city, they found young maidens going out to draw water, and ſaid unto them, Is the ſeer here?

12 And they anſwered them, and ſaid, He is; behold, he is before you: make haſte now, for he came to-day to the city; for there is a ſacrifice of the people to-day in the high place.

13 As ſoon as ye be come into the city ye ſhall ſtraightway find him, before he go up to the high place to eat: for the people will not eat until he come, becauſe he doth bleſs the ſacrifice; and afterwards they eat that be bidden. Now therefore, get you up; for about this time ye ſhall find him.

14 And they went up into the city: and when they were come into the city, behold, Samuel came out againſt them, for to go up to the high place.

15 Now the LORD had told Samuel in his ear a day before Saul came, ſaying,

16 To-morrow about this time I will ſend thee a man out of the land of Benjamin, and thou ſhalt anoint him to be captain over my people Iſrael, that he may ſave my people duals were enriched in proportion. Even if Kiſh were of an inferior family in this tribe, (v. 21,) he might be a very wealthy perſon; and his ſon was poſſeſſed of all external accompliſhments, ſuited to that carnal principle, which had dictated Iſrael's requeſt. Though Saul had ſons grown up, he was ſtill in the full vigour of manhood, which is all that is implied in the expreſſion, that is tranſlated "a choice "young man."

V. 5. Zuph, &c.] (ch. i. v. 1.) The land, where Ramah ſtood.

V. 6—10.] It is obſervable that the ſervant knew more of Samuel, than Saul did, and ſpake very reſpectfully of him: yet they both looked upon him rather as a diviner, than as a prophet of God, whoſe office it was to inſtruct them in his truth and will: and though it might be cuſtomary to ſhew their reſpect in thoſe days to prophets, and even to princes, by a preſent; yet when they concluded, that Samuel would not be approached without ſome gift, they judged of him by themſelves, or rather by the mercenary pretenders to divination. The ninth verſe was evidently inſerted, as a comment, in after ages, perhaps by Ezra, who is ſuppoſed to have collected, and ſet forth a correct edition of the Scriptures then extant, under the ſuperintendency of the Spirit of prophecy. In the days of Samuel, prophets were emphatically ſtiled "Seers," or perſons, who ſee further into divine things than other men do.

V. 12—14.] (Note c. vii. v. 17.) Samuel having burned upon the altar the appointed portion of the peace-offerings, previous to the ſacred feaſt upon the remainder, poured out fervent prayers to the Lord for his acceptance, and for his bleſſing on the ſervice, as a religious ordinance, to the good of their ſouls; as well as on their food for the refreſhment of their bodies. And doubtleſs this was the general obſervance in all the ſacrifices at the tabernacle, and temple, at thoſe times when true religion flouriſhed; though at other times it would degenerate into a form.

V. 16. Out of the hand, &c.] When Iſrael grew ſlack in ſerving God, the Philiſtines recovered their authority: and though Saul did not reform their religion, yet in many inſtances he ſucceſsfully fought their battles.

out of the hand of the Philiſtines: for I have looked upon my people, becauſe their cry is come unto me.

17 And when Samuel ſaw Saul, the LORD ſaid unto him, Behold the man whom I ſpake to thee of: this ſame ſhall reign over my people.

18 Then Saul drew near to Samuel in the gate, and ſaid, Tell me, I pray thee, where the ſeer's houſe is.

19 And Samuel anſwered Saul, and ſaid, I am the ſeer: go up before me unto the high place; for ye ſhall eat with me to-day; and to-morrow I will let thee go, and will tell thee all that is in thine heart.

20 And as for thine aſſes that were loſt three days ago, ſet not thy mind on them; for they are found. And on whom is all the deſire of Iſrael? is it not on thee, and on all thy father's houſe?

21 And Saul anſwered and ſaid, Am not I a Benjamite, of the ſmalleſt of the tribes of Iſrael? and my family the leaſt of all the families of the tribe of Benjamin? wherefore then ſpeakeſt thou ſo to me?

22 And Samuel took Saul and his ſervant, and brought them into the parlour, and made them ſit in the chiefeſt place among them that were bidden, which were about thirty perſons.

23 And Samuel ſaid unto the cook, Bring the portion which I gave thee, of which I ſaid unto thee, Set it by thee.

24 And the cook took up the ſhoulder, and that which was upon it, and ſet it before Saul. And Samuel ſaid, Behold that which is left, ſet it before thee, and eat; for unto this time hath it been kept for thee, ſince I ſaid, I have invited the people. So Saul did eat with Samuel that day.

25 And when they were come down from the high place into the city, Samuel communed with Saul upon the top of the houſe.

26 And they aroſe early: and it came to paſs about the ſpring of the day, that Samuel called Saul to the top of the houſe, ſaying, Up, that I may ſend thee away. And Saul aroſe, and they went out both of them, he and Samuel, abroad.

27 And as they were going down to the end of the city, Samuel ſaid to Saul, Bid the ſervant paſs on before us, (and he paſſed on,) but ſtand thou ſtill a while, that I may ſhew thee the word of God.

V. 24. Behold that, which is left, &c.] Or "reſerved;" being ſet apart, the beſt portion for Saul, as the chief gueſt, whom Samuel had expected before he came. All theſe circumſtances were calculated to prepare Saul's mind for what followed, and to ſhew him the interpoſition of God therein.

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.

We are never more like to be unhappy, than when we have our outward portion, or connexions, according to the choice, and wiſh of our own hearts: we ought therefore to beg of God in every thing to chooſe for us, and to teach us to acquieſce in his appointment. True excellency of character doth not reſult from external accompliſhments; nor true felicity from proſperous circumſtances, and outward ſplendour: inattention to theſe obvious truths occaſions the moſt fatal miſtakes of mankind. Diligence in buſineſs, and good behaviour in relative life, are commendable, but no ſure tokens of true piety, or acceptance with God. We ſenſibly feel our temporal loſſes, and beſtow much pains to retrieve them: but how little do we attempt, and how ſpeedily are we weary, in ſeeking the ſalvation of our ſouls! Nay, if miniſters could inform men how to ſecure their property, or to acquire wealth, they would be more reſpected, and conſulted, than they now are, when they are employed in teaching them how to eſcape eternal miſery, and to obtain eternal life! Indeed we all are naturally more deſirous to learn our fortune, than our duty; and curioſity, or worldly motives are generally the firſt means of bringing men acquainted with the miniſters, and the word of God: and were they not providentially brought to them, they would ſeldom go out of their way to enquire after them: this is the reaſon that poor ſervants, and mechanics are ſo often better acquainted with, and have more reſpect for the men of God, than the rich and great; as they have not ſo many things to take off their thoughts from, or prejudice their hearts againſt them, and their meſſage. But many will ſpeak of miniſters, as men of God, and honourable men, whoſe words will certainly come to paſs, who neither comply with their exhortations, nor imitate their examples: and whilſt they are conſcious, that they do not chooſe to be at any expence in religion; they ſuſpect, that the miniſters teach for hire, and will do no more, than they are paid for. And indeed there always have been ſo many of this temper, that inattentive obſervers will not readily underſtand the difference betwixt ſuch mercenary diviners, and the true ſervants of the Lord, who ſeek not their's but them; nor between the blind watchmen, and guides, and thoſe, who are ſeers indeed, whoſe eyes the Lord hath opened, and thus qualified to ſhew others the way of ſalvation. But the ſeeing eye, and the hearing ear are, in this ſenſe alſo, from the Lord, and to thoſe, that wait on him, he will communicate those truths, which he would have them communicate to the people. True grace will teach us to honour those, whom God hath honoured, though their advancement be attended by our degredation; but it is always right to regulate that respect in such a manner, as to endeavour to bring them acquainted with the truths, and worship of God. Without fervent prayer and praise, springing from a penitent believing heart, a solemn sacrifice would have degenerated into a profane meal; and with them an ordinary meal becomes a spriritual sacrifice: but they, who eat their food without thanking the Lord for it, or craving his blessing on it, are scarce distinguishable from brutes, or from Atheists: and the examples of eminent persons, even in such matters as these, may have a salutary effect on those around them. Before honour is humility, and they, who have well learned to obey, are most likely to be advanced to command, and to do it properly. But how different are the Lord's purposes respecting us, to our intentions for ourselves! perhaps Saul was the only man, who set out to seek asses, and literally found a kingdom: but many have set out, and moved their habitations, &c, to seek riches and pleasures, who have been guided to such places, where they have found the salvation of their souls: having met with those, who have addressed them, as if informed of the secrets of their lives, and hearts; and having been thereby led seriously to regard the message of the Lord delivered by them. If this hath been our case, though our worldly projects have all been frustrated, let us cease caring about it; for the Lord has given, or prepared for us that, which is infinitely better.

NOTES.

CHAP. X.] V. 1. Then Samuel took, &c.] In the conversation of thepreceding evening, and of that morning, Samuel had doubtless given Saul all needful information, preparatory to this ceremony; and probably with exhortations, counsels, and prayers. The priests were anointed to their office, as types of Christ, and as implying their need of the communication of the Holy Spirit, to furnish them for their sacred work; for the same reasons, the kings also were anointed. In performing this sacred rite Samuel assured Saul of the Lord's choice of him to be the king of Israel, and of his own hearty concurrence: the kiss denoted affection, and subjection to him as the Lord's anointed king, (Psalm ii. v. 12.) The vial of oil hath been considered as an emblem of the feebleness, frailness, and short continuance of the kingdom in Saul's family: (c. xvi. v. 13.)

V. 2. When thou art departed, &c.] We may suppose that Saul was exceedingly surprised, and scarce able to believe what Samuel had said to him: to convince him therefore, that the matter was from the Lord, Samuel prophetically informed him of some incidents, which he would meet with in his return.

V. 3, 4. To Bethel, &c.] In the present derangement of the Levitical institutions, high places were connived at, where sacrifices were offered to Jehovah, and where priests attended to receive their oblations, and minister in their office. These persons carrying their offerings to Bethel, were secretly disposed of God to present two loaves to Saul, as the first tribute paid him, after he was anointed king; which hath been thought an emblematic instruction to him, still to be content with plain fare, and not to covet luxuries.

V. 5, 6.] This hill of God, which was kept by a garrison of the Philistines, seems to have been near Gibeah, where Saul lived; and an high-place for the worship of God was situated there, (v. 13.) From the time of Samuel there appear to have been seminaries, where pious young men were educated under the tuition of some approved prophets, in the knowledge of divine things; upon whom God was frequently pleased to bestow the spirit of prophecy: and they were very useful in preserving some sense of true religion in the land, when the priests, and Levites

7 And let it be, when theſe ſigns are come unto thee, that thou do as occaſion ſhall ſerve thee; for God is with thee.

8 And thou ſhalt go down before me to Gilgal; and, behold, I will come down unto thee, to offer burnt-offerings, and to ſacrifice ſacrifices of peace-offerings: ſeven days ſhalt thou tarry, till I come to thee, and ſhew thee what thou ſhalt do.

9 And it was ſo, that, when he had turned his back to go from Samuel, God gave him another heart: and all thoſe ſigns came to paſs that day.

10 And when they came thither to the hill, behold, a company of prophets met him; and the Spirit of God came upon him, and he propheſied among them.

11 And it came to paſs, when all that knew him before-time ſaw that, behold, he propheſied among the prophets, then the people ſaid one to another, What is this that is come upon the ſon of Kiſh? Is Saul alſo among the prophets?

12 And one of the ſame place anſwered, and ſaid, But who is their father? Therefore it became a proverb, Is Saul alſo among the prophets?

13 And when he had made an end of propheſying, he came to the high place.

14 And Saul's uncle ſaid unto him and to his ſervant, Whither went ye? And he ſaid, To ſeek the aſſes: and when we ſaw that they were no where, we came to Samuel.

15 And Saul's uncle ſaid, Tell me, I pray thee, what Samuel ſaid unto you?

16 And Saul ſaid unto his uncle, He told us plainly that the aſſes were found. But of the matter of the kingdom, whereof Samuel ſpake, he told him not.

17 And Samuel called the people together unto the LORD to Mizpeh;

18 And ſaid unto the children of Iſrael, Thus ſaith the LORD God of Iſrael, I brought up Iſrael out of Egypt, and delivered you out of the hand of the Egyptians, and out of the hand of all kingdoms, and of them that oppreſſed you:

19 And ye have this day rejected your God, who himſelf ſaved you out of all your adverſities and your tribulations; and ye have ſaid unto him, Nay, but ſet a king over us. Now therefore preſent yourſelves before the LORD by your tribes, and by your thouſands.

20 And when Samuel had cauſed all the tribes of Iſrael to come near, the tribe of Benjamin was taken.

21 When he had cauſed the tribe of Benjamin to come near by their families, the fa-too generally neglected their duty. The garriſon of the Philiſtines did not, it ſeems, diſturb them in their devout ſtudies, and exerciſes. The prophets frequently uſed ſolemn muſic to compoſe their minds for the illapſes of the Spirit of God; (2 Kings, c. iii. v. 15.)

V. 8. And thou ſhalt, &c.] The deliverance of Iſrael from the oppreſſion of the Philiſtines, though one great end of Saul's appointment to the kingdom, was not attempted, till the ſecond year of his reign, in which probably he ſinfully procraſtinated. At that time Saul, at Gilgal, neglected to wait for Samuel, according to directions given him, which correſpond with theſe, (c. xiii. v. 8.) To that event therefore this paſſage ſeems to refer, and to imply an inſtruction from God, that as ſoon as Saul was confirmed in the kingdom, he ſhould aſſemble the Iſraelites at Gilgal, and there wait till Samuel came to offer ſacrifices for him: his delay might make way for his acting contrary to his inſtructions; and perhaps the latter clauſe was intended as a rule to be obſerved on every occaſion.

V. 9. Another heart, &c.] That is, another diſpoſition of mind: he was inſpired with fortitude, and reſolution, and his mind enlarged to great deſigns of governing, and delivering Iſrael, and deſtroying their enemies, &c. Perhaps he was alſo brought under religious impreſſions, which might be termed another, though not a new heart. And indeed his conduct for a ſeaſon appeared very promiſing, though he afterwards proved very vile.

V. 10—13.] When he came among the prophets the Spirit of the Lord came upon him, and he ſpake ſo pertinently and fluently in divine things; that thoſe, who before had known him, were aſtoniſhed to hear him: and one ſaid, "But who is their father?"—This may be interpreted, is not God the father, or former of prophets? Why need you then be ſurpriſed to ſee Saul, though before an unlikely perſon, become one of them? Or, is not Samuel the father, or inſtitutor of this ſeminary? and Saul has been all night with him, and is thus become one of them. It cauſed greater aſtoniſhment many ages afterwards to ſee another Saul among the apoſtles of Jeſus! Some imagine that Saul went to the High Place to perform his devotions, before he returned home.

V. 16. He told him not, &c.] This may be aſcribed to a commendable modeſty, and prudence, by which he would avoid oſtentation, ſhun envy, and patiently wait the event in God's providence.

V. 20. The tribe, &c.] The determination was probably mily

mily of Matri was taken, and Saul the ſon of Kiſh was taken, and when they ſought him he could not be found.

22 Therefore they enquired of the LORD further, if the man ſhould yet come thither. And the LORD anſwered, Behold, he hath hid himſelf among the ſtuff.

23 And they ran and fetched him thence: and when he ſtood among the people, he was higher than any of the people, from his ſhoulders and upward.

24 And Samuel ſaid to all the people, See ye him whom the LORD hath choſen, that there is none like him among all the people? And all the people ſhouted, and ſaid, God ſave the king.

25 Then Samuel told the people the manner of the kingdom, and wrote it in a book, and laid it up before the LORD. And Samuel ſent all the people away, every man to his houſe.

26 And Saul alſo went home to Gibeah; and there went with him a band of men, whoſe hearts God had touched.

27 But the children of Belial ſaid, How ſhall this man ſave us? and they deſpiſed him, and brought him no preſents: but he held his peace.

by lot; for God's appointment was thus aſcertained, not the people's election. His hiding himſelf ſeems to have ariſen from an improper diffidence, and diſtruſt of God.

V. 25. The manner of the kingdom, &c.] That is, the rules of the government; or in modern language, the prerogatives of the prince, and the privileges of the people. We may be ſure this manner of the kingdom would differ conſiderably from the manner of the king before mentioned: the one being the appointment of God, and the other, the depraved diſpoſition of human nature, when entruſted with authority.

V. 26, 27.] The greateſt part of the people treated the matter with indifference: Saul modeſtly went home to his own houſe, but was attended by a band of men, whoſe hearts God had diſpoſed to ſupport his authority; whilſt others deſpiſed him, and would not acknowledge him king. But he very wiſely held his peace, and reſented not their affront: by which means civil diſcords were prevented.

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.

Many are called to, fitted for, and employed in outward ſervices to the Lord's people, who are not anointed with the unction of ſanctifying grace; yet the moſt eminent Chriſtians, or miniſters muſt honour, and obey God's authority in them. The attentive believer comparing the diſpenſations of Providence with the word of God, will perceive his hand in the moſt ordinary concerns of life, as fulfilments of the Scripture, anſwers of Prayer, and evidences of the Lord's peculiar kindneſs to him. A ſuperior care in common life ſwallows up a leſſer; the tender parent ceaſes from his anxiety about his property, when ſolicitous for the welfare of his ſon: children therefore ſhould be careful not to diſtreſs ſuch kind friends: but we are alſo reminded hereby, that a due concern about eternal things would moderate our care about the intereſts of this life. No incumbent evils can mar their comfort, who enjoy communion with God; no enemy can annoy them, when he wills them to be at peace; and he will teach them, to uſe in ſubſerviency to godlineſs thoſe things, wherewith carnal minds inflame their paſſions, and diſſipate all ſerious reflection. Many changes may take place in a man's language, conduct, and diſpoſition, who is not born of God: another man he may become, and not a new creature! another heart he may have, but not an holy heart! he may be qualified for ruling, or preaching, and not be made meet for the inheritance of the ſaints in light; nay he may propheſy, and work miracles, and yet be a child of the devil! Sudden changes are indeed generally to be ſuſpected: but when we conſider who makes the Chriſtian, and the prophet, we need not be offended, ſhould we number amongſt profeſſors, or preachers of the goſpel, ſome ungodly Saul of our former acquaintance: for true converſion makes ſo great a change in a man's character, &c, that former friends can ſcarce believe him to be the ſame; whether they admire and love, or whether they deſpiſe and hate the change. As far as we depend upon the guidance of the Spirit of God, we may regulate our general conduct, as circumſtances require, and may act with humble confidence in perplexing ſituations, being aſſured that God is with us: but every enterprize ſhould be entered upon, with reference to the authority, and worſhip of God; his directions carefully obſerved, and his time waited for. We may freely ſpeak of thoſe things, which are honourable to others, but had ordinarily beſt be ſilent, as to thoſe tranſactions, which tend to advance our own reputation. The Lord will bring to a ſeaſonable determination thoſe affairs, which are referred to him: but the joy of having inordinate deſires gratified will be ſhort lived. It is good to be conſcious of our unworthineſs, and inſufficiency, for the ſervices, to which we are called; and to avoid oſtentation, and whatever may excite envy, and oppoſition: but men ſhould be careful not to run into the oppoſite extreme, by refuſing the employments, to which the Lord and his church call them, through meanneſs of ſpirit, and unbelief. Indeed high ſtations are heavy burdens, when the duties of them are conſcientiouſly attended upon: and the comfort of them is but ſmall; for the heart of man is prone to envy all, who are preferred. Our natural enmity to God diſpoſes us to deſpiſe, and oppoſe the inſtruments, that he ſelects for the government of ſtates, and for promoting the cauſe of his church: and if ſome approve, rejoice in, honour and help them; others will revile, and contemn them. But we ſhould wait the Lord's will with patience, and without diſcouragement, and bear man's ſcorn and malice in ſilent meekneſs, and attend to the duties of our ſtation, according to the manner of it; thus the fatal effects of diſcord will be prevented, and in due ſeaſon the Lord will plead our cauſe, and all oppoſition will fall before us. Men ſeldom receive that with

THEN Nahash the Ammonite came up, and encamped against Jabesh-gilead: and all the men of Jabesh said unto Nahash, Make a covenant with us, and we will serve thee.

2 And Nahash the Ammonite answered them, On this condition will I make a covenant with you, that I may thrust out all your right eyes, and lay it for a reproach upon all Israel.

3 And the elders of Jabesh said unto him, Give us seven days respite, that we may send messengers unto all the coasts of Israel: and then, if there be no man to save us, we will come out to thee.

4 Then came the messengers to Gibeah of Saul, and told the tidings in the ears of the people: and all the people lifted up their voices, and wept.

5 And, behold, Saul came after the herd out of the field; and Saul said, What aileth the people that they weep? And they told him the tidings of the men of Jabesh.

6 And the Spirit of God came upon Saul when he heard those tidings, and his anger was kindled greatly.

7 And he took a yoke of oxen, and hewed them in pieces, and sent them throughout all the coasts of Israel by the hands of messengers, saying, Whosoever cometh not forth after Saul and after Samuel, so shall it be done unto his oxen. And the fear of the LORD fell on the people, and they came out with one consent.

8 And when he numbered them in Bezek, the children of Israel were three hundred thousand, and the men of Judah thirty thousand.

9 And they said unto the messengers that came, Thus shall ye say unto the men of Jabesh-gilead, To-morrow, by that time the sun be hot, ye shall have help. And the messengers came and shewed it to the men of Jabesh; and they were glad.

10 Therefore the men of Jabesh said, To-morrow we will come out unto you, and ye shall do with us all that seemeth good unto you.

11 And it was so on the morrow, that Saul put the people in three companies, and they came into the midst of the host in the morning watch, and slew the Ammonites until the heat of the day: and it came to pass, that they which remained were scattered, so that two of them were not left together.

thankfu'ness, which they sought with eagerness; for every particular doth not exactly answer their expectation, and that occasions dissatisfaction and sullen discontent. And if any welcome with unfeigned gratitude God's gracious appointment, and set themselves cordially to promote his cause; (especially the cause of Christ, our anointed king, whom so many children of Belial despise;) they are such, whose hearts he hath touched by his grace; and let him have all the praise.

NOTES.

CHAP. XI.] V. 1—3. Jabesh-gilead had been desolated by the Israelites some time before: (Jud. c. xxi. v. 8—12:) but being now replenished, it was assaulted by the Ammonites, on whose borders it was situated; and it could in capitulation obtain no better terms, than for every man to have his right eye put out, and to be made a slave. Nor would their enemies have consented to a few days respite, but in confidence that they would not be helped, and that in consequence the nation of Israel would be the more disgraced.

V. 5. After the herd, &c.] Saul finding himself despised by some, and neglected by the most of the Israelites, returned quietly to his former occupations, and left the matter entirely to the providence of God. In this chapter he looks as great, as the much celebrated Roman dictator from the plough, and indeed greater; for he followed his herds after he was appointed to the kingdom by the Lord himself: yet when called forth to action, his vigour and success were not inferior to those of the renowned Roman.

V. 5—10.] Saul being fired with a generous indignation at the indignity offered Israel, in a very spirited, yet humble, and clement manner summoned the attendance of the people; and through the immediate influence of God upon their hearts a vast multitude assembled with surprising celerity: upon which he undertook, and performed a march perhaps of fifty miles, within the space of about twenty-four hours; and by this dispatch arrived in time to rescue their trembling brethren, and unexpectedly to assault, and destroy their insulting enemies.

V. 12—15.] Saul's success went further with the people, than either the Lord's appointment of him, or his personal accomplishments. And now the sons of Belial were saved from death, as well as Israel from the Ammonites, by him, whom they despised, as unable to save them. In this whole affair Saul's conduct was unexceptionable, and exemplary; and the whole was closed with such humanity, and piety, as promised better effects, than followed; the the men, that we may put them to death.

13 And Saul said, There shall not a man be put to death this day: for to-day the LORD hath wrought salvation in Israel.

14 Then said Samuel to the people, Come, and let us go to Gilgal, and renew the kingdom there.

15 And all the people went to Gilgal; and there they made Saul king before the LORD in Gilgal; and there they sacrificed sacrifices of peace-offerings before the LORD; and there Saul and all the men of Israel rejoiced greatly.

4 And they said, Thou hast not defrauded us, nor oppressed us, neither hast thou taken ought of any man's hand.

for external good conduct doth not always prove a gracious heart.

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.

Hasty settlements amongst bad neighbours often produce multiplied calamities: and when professed Christians act inconsistent with the covenant of God, they may expect to be forced to the basest subjection to man: when they dishonour God, he will disgrace them, and make them a reproach to their vilest enemies. To save their lives men will part with their liberty, and even consent to have their eyes put out: is it then no part of wisdom to part with our right eye, rather than to be cast into hell-fire? Lusts, or interests, thus dear to our carnal hearts, must be crucified, if we would covenant with God for the life of our souls; and whatever respite he gives us, none can save us out of his hand: We must consent to his proposals, or perish. But tender mercy is couched under this apparently severe requisition; the dreaded operation will not be very painful, the advantages immense, and his service is perfect freedom. His Providence will bring forth those, whom he hath designed, and prepared for usefulness: nor will any repent of humbly waiting in obscurity, and honest industry, till he is pleased to call them forth; for only pride, and impatience can conclude, that the Lord hath lighted a candle to leave it under a bushel. The reproach of the gospel, the distresses of God's people, and the insulting triumphs of their enemies should not only cause our sympathizing sorrows, but our most decisive exertions in our several stations to redress such evils, yea our keen, and generous indignation. But magistrates in all cases should be sparing of the lives of their subjects, and only punish them in their property, when that can be made effectual. When zeal for the glory of God, and love for the brethren prompt men to earnestness, and vigorous efforts; and when God is pleased to concur, great effects may speedily be produced: but in critical junctures ordinary measures of dispatch are unmeaning. Deliverance in extreme distress is doubly welcome, and it is oft vouchsafed to the true Christian: but the destruction, which frequently overtakes the wicked in the height of their triumphs, and security, is inexpressibly dreadful. Humility and clemency add superior lustre to the most splendid actions: he, who forgives his enemies, when he has them in his power, obtains the noblest victory; and by giving the praise of illustrious exploits to God, a man acquires the most solid honour. The Lord delighteth to plead their cause, who are dumb under injuries, and do not plead for themselves; to put to silence those, who contend with his servants; and to work by those instruments, which man despises. Thus the despised Saviour will at length be universally acknowledged as the Lord's anointed king, with songs of triumph and praise: as yet, upon a mercy-seat he receives the submissions and pleads the cause of rebels, who are willing that he should reign over and save them: but shortly from his righteous tribunal he will condemn to everlasting ruin all those, who persist in their contempt of, and opposition to him.

NOTES.

CHAP. XII.] V. 1. And Samuel said, &c.] The elders, and tribes of Israel being convened at Gilgal, where they had celebrated the late victory with sacrifices, &c, and confirmed the kingdom to Saul; Samuel embraced the opportunity of appealing to the people, and to their king, concerning his integrity, as their judge, when he was about to divest himself of his authority. By this he not only meant to clear his own character, but to set before Saul an instructive example, and to convince the people of their ingratitude to God, and to him.

V. 2. And I am old, &c.] If Samuel was about eighteen when Eli was killed, he would be thirty-eight when constituted judge at Mizpeh: from that event to the death of Saul we compute forty years. David was anointed not many years from the commencement of Saul's reign, we cannot suppose him to have been younger, than eighteen at that time, and he was thirty when Saul was killed; we may therefore suppose that Saul actually reigned about 5 And he ſaid unto them, The LORD is witneſs againſt you, and his anointed is witneſs this day, that ye have not found ought in my hand. And they anſwered, He is witneſs.

6 And Samuel ſaid unto the people, It is the LORD that advanced Moſes and Aaron, and that brought your fathers up out of the land of Egypt.

7 Now therefore ſtand ſtill, that I may reaſon with you before the LORD of all the righteous acts of the LORD, which he did to you and to your fathers.

8 When Jacob was come into Egypt, and your fathers cried unto the LORD, then the LORD ſent Moſes and Aaron, which brought forth your fathers out of Egypt, and made them dwell in this place.

9 And when they forgat the LORD their God, he ſold them into the hand of Siſera, captain of the hoſt of Hazor, and into the hand of the Philiſtines, and into the hand of the king of Moab, and they fought againſt them.

10 And they cried unto the LORD, and ſaid, We have ſinned, becauſe we have forſaken the LORD, and have ſerved Baalim and Aſhtaroth: but now deliver us out of the hand of our enemies, and we will ſerve thee.

11 And the LORD ſent Jerubbaal, and Bedan, and Jephthah, and Samuel, and delivered you out of the hand of your enemies on every ſide, and ye dwelled ſafe.

12 And when ye ſaw that Nahaſh, the king of the children of Ammon, came againſt you, ye ſaid unto me, Nay, but a king ſhall reign over us; when the LORD your God was your king.

13 Now therefore behold the king whom ye have choſen, and whom ye have deſired! and, behold, the LORD hath ſet a king over you.

14 If ye will fear the LORD, and ſerve him, and obey his voice, and not rebel againſt the commandment of the LORD, then ſhall both ye, and alſo the king that reigneth over you, continue following the LORD your God.

15 But if ye will not obey the voice of the LORD, but rebel againſt the commandment of the LORD; then ſhall the hand of the LORD be againſt you, as it was againſt your fathers.

16 Now therefore ſtand and ſee this great thing, which the LORD will do before your eyes.

17 Is it not wheat-harveſt to-day? I will call unto the LORD, and he ſhall ſend thunder and rain; that ye may perceive and ſee that your wickedneſs is great, which ye have done in the ſight of the LORD, in aſking you a king.

18 So Samuel called unto the LORD; and the LORD ſent thunder and rain that day:

ſixteen, or ſeventeen years; and conſequently that Samuel was at this time about ſixty. From a child he had been labouring aſſiduouſly for their good, and was grown grey in their ſervice; yet they had at laſt rejected him! His ſons had indeed miſbehaved, and had been ſet aſide, and were there preſent, if they choſe to call them to an account: but for himſelf he could appeal to the Lord, and to their conſciences, and was even willing that their anointed king ſhould decide, whether he had not acted with equity, impartiality, and diſintereſtedneſs, during his whole adminiſtration. When they had in conſequence acknowledged his integrity, he did not expoſtulate further with them concerning their ill uſage of him; but endeavoured to convince them of their wickedneſs in the ſight of God.

V. 11, 12.] Bedan is probably another name for ſome of the judges, whoſe hiſtory hath been conſidered; perhaps for Samſon: Samuel adjoins his own name, in attempting to convince them, that in rejecting him, after all his ſervices, they had in effect rejected the government of God. It ſeems that the fear of Nahaſh influenced them in their peremptory demand of a king: whereas, if they had left it to the Lord, he would have protected them as effectually ſome other way.

V. 14, 15.] They might ſuppoſe, that under a king, to whom they might always apply for ſuccour, their affairs would not be expoſed to the ſame viciſſitudes as before. But Samuel aſſured them, that there would be no difference in that reſpect: for obedience would ſtill continue to enſure proſperity, and diſobedience would bring down judgments upon them: and that their privileges, as the Lord's peculiar people would ſtill be continued to them, as they had been before, by adhering to his ſervice, and not otherwiſe.

V. 17. Is it not wheat-harveſt, &c?] At that ſeaſon rain was very uncommon, this thunder-ſtorm was very violent; and being predicted, and prayed for, was an atteſtation of Samuel's word, and very ſuited to produce conviction, and alarm in their conſciences.

V. 18, 19. Feared the Lord, and Samuel, &c.] Being terrified with the diſplays of the Lord's power in anſwer to Samuel's prayers, and perceiving how much he was honoured of God, they were afraid of ſome immediate judgment upon them, ſuch as were inflicted on their forefathers for rebelling againſt Moſes, and Aaron. In this terror they earneſtly begged of him to pray for them, and not againſt them.

and all the people greatly feared the LORD and Samuel.

19 And all the people said unto Samuel, Pray for thy servants unto the LORD thy God, that we die not: for we have added unto all our sins this evil, to ask us a king.

20 And Samuel said unto the people, Fear not: (ye have done all this wickedness: yet turn not aside from following the LORD, but serve the LORD with all your heart;

21 And turn ye not aside: for then should ye go after vain things, which cannot profit nor deliver; for they are vain:)

22 For the LORD will not forsake his people for his great name's sake; because it hath pleased the LORD to make you his people.

23 Moreover, as for me, God forbid that I should sin against the LORD in ceasing to pray for you: but I will teach you the good and the right way.

24 Only fear the LORD, and serve him in truth with all your heart: for consider how great things he hath done for you.

25 But if ye shall still do wickedly, ye shall be consumed, both ye and your king.

V. 20. Fear not, &c.] Samuel repeatedly exhorted them to fear the Lord; (v. 14. 23:) yet here he exhorted them not to fear; that is not to fear destruction, to their discouragement. A reverential fear of the divine Majesty, and a fear of his displeasure, when counterpoised by the hope of his favour, quicken men in seeking and serving him: but such a fear of wrath, as occasions despondency, and hard thoughts of God, drives men from their duty, and exposes them to manifold temptations. (Note, Gen. c. xlv. ver. 5.)

V. 22. For the Lord, &c.] In preferring the seed of Jacob to other families, to be his people, the Lord acted as a sovereign, who is not bound, and doth not deign to assign his reasons: but having made them his people, the honour of his perfections required that he should not forsake them, however severely he corrected them, till the promised seed was come.

V. 23. God forbid, &c.] The people had no occasion to fear Samuel's resentment; for he deemed himself bound in duty to persevere in praying for them, notwithstanding the affront, which they had put upon him. And though no longer their chief magistrate, he promised still to devote the remnant of his life to their service, as their religious instructor, and as determining their disputes in a subordinate station: in which senses he judged them all the days of his life.

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.

We cannot justify ourselves before God by our obedience to his holy law, which requires perpetual, unfailing perfection in heart and life; but we may justify our conduct before our fellow creatures, if we have conscientiously behaved ourselves towards them: and under reproaches, and ingratitude the testimony of our conscience to our integrity may prove a source of comfort, and rejoicing, if we are true believers. The favoured few, who have walked before God from their childhood to old age, whilst they look upon their past lives with gratitude, as the sure evidences of their acceptance, and as confirming their expectation of eternal glory; may receive this satisfaction as a gracious recompence from the Lord; and may use it as an argument with the young, to seek, and serve him without delay.—There may be seasons, when we may properly vindicate our own characters; but it should be always in subserviency to the conviction, and edification of others; and we may speak of our own conduct, when we can thus convey any useful hints to our juniors, or successors: and men may recede from public stations with comfort, when they can extort from their very despisers a testimony to their integrity. The honour rendered to those, who are concluding their course, differs widely from the applause, and congratulation, which many meet with, when they first step forth before the public eye, and which often terminates in disgrace and contempt; and is therefore unworthy our wishes, and ought surely never to move a wise man's envy, though it be rendered at his expense. Prosperity in sin, is no proof of impunity; and sinners therefore never need to be warned more, than when successful in their undertakings. But the servants of God, though ill treated, should be careful not much to expostulate with those, who have injured them, about their behaviour to them: but to reason with them of the righteous acts of the Lord, and his truth and mercy towards them, and of their conduct towards him, for their humiliation before God. Our safe, and happy state consists in a willing dependance on, and subjection to the Lord: but we affect independence, and refuse obedience, by which we change substantial good, for an empty shadow; for the greatest outward prosperity only contributes to our felicity, when it induces us to fear the Lord, and serve him, and obey his voice. Disobedience ensures misery, from generation to generation; whatever our station, or circumstance in life may be: and to be enabled to continue following the Lord, as his accepted servants, is the highest privilege, which we can enjoy. The most useful benefactors of mankind, who have spent their lives, and worn out their constitutions, in unceasing labours for the good of others, must not be surprised, if they are at length cast off with contempt, and ingratitude: and if the perverseness of their brethren prevents them from doing all that good, which they desired to do, they should still do all the good they can: this is a general rule for us all; they, who cannot rule, may teach, and they, who cannot teach, may pray, and shew an edifying example; and no provocations should tempt us to sin against God in ceasing to pray for children, relations, friends, people, fellow sinners, or even inveterate enemies. Yet the prayers of the church, and the intercession of Christ will in the event appear to have been united against impenitent sinners; and the elements, and the whole creation will shortly be armed against them to their destruction. The belief of this alarming truth should warn them to flee from the wrath

SAUL reigned one year: and when he had reigned two years over Israel,

2 Saul chose him three thousand men of Israel, whereof two thousand were with Saul in Michmash, and in mount Beth-el, and a thousand were with Jonathan in Gibeah of Benjamin: and the rest of the people he sent every man to his tent.

3 And Jonathan smote the garrison of the Philistines that was in Geba: and the Philistines heard of it. And Saul blew the trumpet throughout all the land, saying, let the Hebrews hear.

4 And all Israel heard say that Saul had smitten a garrison of the Philistines, and that Israel also was had in abomination with the Philistines. And the people were called together after Saul to Gilgal.

5 And the Philistines gathered themselves together to fight with Israel, thirty thousand chariots, and six thousand horsemen, and people as the sand which is on the sea-shore in multitude: and they came up, and pitched in Michmash, eastward from Beth-aven.

6 When the men of Israel saw that they were in a strait, (for the people were distressed,) then the people did hide themselves in caves, and in thickets, and in rocks, and in high places, and in pits.

7 And some of the Hebrews went over Jordan to the land of Gad and Gilead: as for Saul, he was yet in Gilgal, and all the people followed him trembling.

8 And he tarried seven days, according to the set time that Samuel had appointed: but Samuel came not to Gilgal; and the people were scattered from him.

to come, to confess their sins, to obey the gospel of Christ, and to desire the prayers, and counsels of his ministers. But when sinners are deeply convinced of their guilt, and danger, they will need encouragement, lest their fear should issue in despondency. In the day of judgment all those things, which men have inordinately loved, and for which they have forsaken the Lord, will be found vain, and such as cannot profit or deliver, even though they were the kingdoms of the world, and the glory of them. Happy then are they, whom the Lord hath pleased to make his people! he will never leave or forsake them, but will glorify himself in their eternal salvation. But none can know assuredly, that these blessings belong to them, except they attend to "the good, and right way, and fear the Lord, and serve "him with all their heart:" and if "we consider what "great things he hath done for us," especially in the great work of redemption, we can neither want motive, encouragement, or assistance for so doing.

NOTES.

CHAP. XIII.] V. 1—4.] After Saul had defeated Nahash, and been confirmed in the kingdom; after he had joined with Samuel in offering sacrifices, and intreated the benefit of his prayers, he should have marched his victorious army immediately against the Philistines: but elated with success, pleased with the shew of royalty, and disposed to ease, and indulgence, he, for the present, dismissed the bulk of the people, retaining only a small number for his guard, and the support of his authority over the Israelites. Thus their ardour was abated, and probably many of them were disgusted; and for above a year the Philistines had time to prepare for war, and to weaken, and disarm the Israelites; which they did most assiduously, knowing that their king had been chosen on purpose to shake off their yoke. In the mean time Jonathan, probably by Saul's command, and as some imagine, contrary to treaty, destroyed a garrison of the Philistines; and thus exasperated them, before they were prepared to receive them. Nay Israel was had in abomination by the Philistines; they not only resented the affront, but abhorred their perfidy. And when Saul at length sounded the alarm, the people, dissatisfied with his management, or terrified with the power of the enemy, either did not come to him, or speedily deserted him. In all this Saul was very impolitic: but the Lord intended to chastise the people for their sins, to expose their folly in expecting, that a king could save them, and to prepare the way for a glorious deliverance, which he intended to effect for them.

V. 5. Thirty thousand chariots, &c.] The Philistines had doubtless collected troops on this emergency from all the surrounding nations; but the number of chariots is so immensely large, that commentators conjecture, that it included also all their carriages for baggage, &c.

V. 7. All the people, &c.] All the people, who were capable of bearing arms, who had not hid themselves, or fled beyond Jordan.

V. 8—9. And he tarried, &c.] (Note, c. x. v. 8.) According to the direction before given, and perhaps since had had made an end of offering the burnt-offering, behold, Samuel came; and Saul went out to meet him, that he might ſalute him.

11 And Samuel ſaid, What haſt thou done? And Saul ſaid, Becauſe I ſaw that the people were ſcattered from me, and that thou cameſt not within the days appointed, and that the Philiſtines gathered themſelves together at Michmaſh;

12 Therefore ſaid I, the Philiſtines will come down now upon me to Gilgal, and I have not made ſupplication unto the LORD: I forced myſelf therefore, and offered a burnt-offering.

13 And Samuel ſaid to Saul, thou haſt done fooliſhly: thou haſt not kept the commandment of the LORD thy God, which he commanded thee: for now would the LORD have eſtabliſhed thy kingdom upon Iſrael for ever.

14 But now thy kingdom ſhall not continue; the LORD hath ſought him a man after his own heart, and the LORD hath commanded him to be captain over his people, becauſe thou haſt not kept that which the LORD commanded thee.

15 And Samuel aroſe, and gat him up from Gilgal unto Gibeah of Benjamin. And Saul numbered the people that were preſent with him, about ſix hundred men.

16 And Saul, and Jonathan his ſon, and the people that were preſent with them, abode in Gibeah of Benjamin: but the Philiſtines encamped in Michmaſh.

17 And the ſpoilers came out of the camp of the Philiſtines in three companies: one company turned unto the way that leadeth to Ophrah, unto the land of Shual:

18 And another company turned the way to Beth-horon: and another company turned to the way of the border, that looketh to the valley of Zeboim, toward the wilderneſs.

19 Now there was no ſmith found throughout all the land of Iſrael: (for the Philiſtines ſaid, Leſt the Hebrews make them ſwords or ſpears:)

20 But all the Iſraelites went down to the Philiſtines, to ſharpen every man his ſhare, and his coulter, and his axe, and his mattock.

21 Yet they had a file for the mattocks, and for the coulters, and for the forks, and for the axes, and to ſharpen the goads.

repeated, Saul tarried for Samuel until the ſeventh day: but before the cloſe of it, being impatient of his ſituation, perhaps diſpleaſed with Samuel for not coming ſooner, and attributing the people's terror and deſertion to his abſence, and the want of ſome token of the Lord's preſence with them; he proceeded to offer ſacrifices, contrary to the expreſs injunction, that had been laid upon him: and, as no mention is made of any prieſt being employed, he is ſuppoſed to have officiated himſelf, as if his appointment to the kingdom would authoriſe his intruſion into the prieſthood: and perhaps he was vainly pleaſed in aſſerting before the people that he could ſacrifice for himſelf, and was not dependent on, and had no occaſion for Samuel.

V. 12. I forced myſelf, &c.] When Samuel came, Saul went out to meet him, and ſalute, or bleſs him, as one well ſatisfied with what he had done, and who expected to be approved for it. But when he perceived that Samuel was diſpleaſed, he attempted to excuſe himſelf by the plea of neceſſity, and the reluctance, with which he had done it, leſt the Philiſtines ſhould attack him before he had performed his devotions. But he might, without blame, have made his ſupplications unto the Lord, without preſuming to offer ſacrifices, and to diſobey his command by his prophet, who had anointed him to the kingdom. His dependance on ſuch performances detected the formality of his religion.

V. 13. Thou haſt not, &c.] This commandment was probably intended as a teſt of Saul's diſpoſition, and his tranſgreſſion proved, that he regarded not the word of the Lord, when it interfered with his own inclinations or ſentiments, whereby he was ſhewn to be unfit to rule as God's vicegerent over his people. He was weighed in this balance, and found wanting. Had he behaved properly, the kingdom would have been confirmed in his family, but now he was ſentenced to be removed, to make way for one of a more tractable diſpoſition. This the Lord foreſaw, but his ſecret purpoſe was not the motive of Saul's conduct; which to the Searcher of all hearts might appear much more aggravated, than it doth to us. Though Samuel on this occaſion departed from Saul: yet, as he went to Gibeah, and came to him afterwards, it is conjectured that the ſentence was not irreverſible; but that, if he had repented of this ſin, and been more obedient in future, he might have been continued in the kingdom.

V. 19. No ſmith found, &c.] The Philiſtines had probably long practiſed this policy; but they had uſed peculiar aſſiduity, and ſucceſs during the laſt year, whilſt they were preparing for war: which diſplays the inattention of Saul, and the tameneſs of the people, in ſubmitting to ſo great an oppreſſion. As ſome parts of the land were very diſtant from the country of the Philiſtines, it hath been conjectured that ſmiths of that nation were ſent amongſt them; who both would impoveriſh them by demanding an exorbitant price for their work, and ſerve as ſpies and informers, if any Iſraelite attempted to learn or practiſe that trade.

22 So it came to pass in the day of battle, that there was neither sword nor spear found in the hand of any of the people that were with Saul and Jonathan: but with Saul and with Jonathan his son was there found.

23 And the garrison of the Philistines went out to the passage of Michmash.

V. 22. There was neither sword, &c.] The Israelites used bows, slings, and javelins in war, and with these perhaps the people were armed: perhaps the Philistines had seized the armour, which they had used against Nahash, after they were dispersed; and many, who had armour, might have deserted. However, in the providence of God, it was so ordered, that none but Saul, and Jonathan, had either sword, or spear. Thus they, who expected to look formidable, under kingly government, were made to appear very contemptible: not that the Lord had forsaken his people; but because he would humble them, and shew them, that the victory did not depend upon swords, and spears, but upon the favour and assistance of the Almighty.

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.

Our sanguine expectations from creatures are sure to issue in disappointment: and when we resolve to choose for ourselves, we shall certainly have cause to repent of our self-will. And when men are lifted up in self-sufficiency, they are often left to the most unaccountable infatuation. The chief advantages of the enemies of the church, are derived from the misconduct of it's professed friends: for when these act inconsistent with equity and fidelity, religious people without discrimination are looked upon with abhorrence, and contempt. Yet whilst sinners are studying to revenge themselves, the Lord often restrains their malice by invisible boundaries, and uses their machinations for the chastisement of his people. When deep resentment and great power are united, they occasion great consternation, and men thus terrified will flee, or hide themselves from their fellow-creatures: How then will the terror of the Almighty appal the wicked in the approaching day of his inevitable, and intolerable wrath? At that awful time there will be no place to flee to, or take refuge in: let us then in the believing expectation of it, without delay seek the Lord upon a mercy-seat, through the great peace-maker Jesus Christ. When men in trouble are counselled by their pride, and impatience, they will involve themselves in still deeper guilt, and misery, by their foolish expedients to extricate themselves: our observance of the Lord's directions will always bear an exact proportion to our faith in his protection, and our submission to his will: and they who are most dilatory in doing their duty, are commonly the most impatient of delay in waiting the Lord's time of deliverance from trouble. Our disposition to obey, or disobey God will often be decisively proved, by our behaviour, in apparently small things: and they, who most neglect the duties of their own station in life, are most forward to censure the supposed negligence of others, and to intrude into the work, which belongs to their fellow-servants: but by minding, and keeping to our own business, we shall best approve ourselves to our common Lord. Men destitute of inward piety, are frequently most scrupulously attached to the forms of godliness: nay they fancy that the Lord will accept them, because they force themselves to act contrary to their own inclinations, or even to the dictates of their natural conscience! We are commanded not to speak evil of rulers; yet they, who are called to speak to them in God's name, must point out to them very plainly, the folly, and evil of their conduct, and remind them of the anger of the Lord against workers of iniquity, without respect of persons: for though a prince may not in this life lose his throne, or his dignity, by his offences against God; yet if he die impenitent he will certainly lose his soul in the world to come: how empty then are those distinctions, from which so many are hurried into everlasting misery? Whatever is our station in life, may we by divine grace be made men after the Lord's own heart, and we shall certainly inherit the throne of glory in the blissful regions above. Sin hath indeed forfeited our felicity; but unbelief, and impenitency ratify that forfeiture: and they, who have undeniably broke the commandments of God, yet persist in excusing, and justifying themselves, are evidently both impenitent and unbelievers. The trouble of such persons must certainly increase upon them, whilst they continue in that temper; and as they refuse to submit to God, they may be reduced to the most abject misery in the slavery of sin. But, whilst the Lord pours contempt upon proud princes, and brings to nought all the honourable of the earth, he will deliver his people by his own power: and whilst he shames those who trust in man, he will honour those who expect help from him alone.

NOTES.

CHAP. XIV.] V. 3. And Ahiah, &c.] After Samuel had left Saul, he probably sent to Shiloh for Ahiah, or Abimelech, (Ch. xxii. v. 9,) Eli's great grandson, who was invested with the High Priesthood. Having him in the camp, with his priestly garments, and the breast-plate of judgment, and having fetched the ark thither also; (though the fate of Eli's sons might have shewn him the folly of that presumptuous measure,) Saul appeared to himself, and to the people to be very religious, and to have abundant tokens of the Lord's presence with him: and he of Gibeah, under a pomegranate-tree which is in Migron: and the people that were with him were about ſix hundred men;

3 And Ahiah, the ſon of Ahitub, I-chabod's brother, the ſon of Phinehas, the ſon of Eli, the LORD's prieſt in Shiloh, wearing an ephod. And the people knew not that Jonathan was gone.

4 And between the paſſages by which Jonathan ſought to go over unto the Philiſtines garriſon, there was a ſharp rock on the one ſide, and a ſharp rock on the other ſide: and the name of the one was Bozez, and the name of the other Seneh.

5 The fore-front of the one was ſituate northward over againſt Michmaſh, and the other ſouthward over againſt Gibeah.

6 And Jonathan ſaid to the young man that bare his armour, Come, and let us go over unto the garriſon of theſe uncircumciſed; it may be that the LORD will work for us: for there is no reſtraint to the LORD to ſave by many or by few.

7 And his armour-bearer ſaid unto him, Do all that is in thine heart: turn thee; behold, I am with thee according to thy heart.

8 Then ſaid Jonathan, Behold, we will paſs over unto theſe men, and we will diſcover ourſelves unto them.

9 If they ſay thus unto us, Tarry until we come to you; then we will ſtand ſtill in our place, and will not go up unto them.

10 But if they ſay thus, Come up unto us; then we will go up: for the LORD hath delivered them into our hand; and this ſhall be a ſign unto us.

11 And both of them diſcovered themſelves unto the garriſon of the Philiſtines: and the Philiſtines ſaid, Behold the Hebrews come forth out the holes where they had hid themſelves.

12 And the men of the garriſon anſwered Jonathan and his armour-bearer, and ſaid, Come up to us, and we will ſhew you a thing. And Jonathan ſaid unto his armour-bearer, Come up after me, for the LORD hath delivered them into the hand of Iſrael.

13 And Jonathan climbed up upon his hands and upon his feet, and his armour-bearer after him: and they fell before Jonathan; and his armour-bearer ſlew after him.

14 And that firſt ſlaughter which Jonathan and his armour-bearer made, was about twenty men, within as it were an half-acre of land, which a yoke of oxen might plow.

15 And there was trembling in the hoſt, in the field, and among all the people; the garriſon, and the ſpoilers, they alſo trembled; could now inquire of the Lord, as he thought, without being liable to Samuel's ſharp reproofs, as Ahiah would be more compliant towards him. But the Lord poured contempt upon this formal preparation, whilſt Saul's heart was unhumbled, and impenitent; and in delivering Iſrael he ſelected another inſtrument, who neither conſulted Saul or the High-Prieſt in reſpect of his conduct.

V. 4—5.] The hand of God was very viſible in reſtraining this vaſt army of the Philiſtines from aſſaulting, and diſperſing the ſmall remaining company of the Iſraelites; and in their keeping entrenched in their camp, in an almoſt inacceſſible ſituation, as if they ſtill feared the enfeebled Iſraelites.

V. 6—10.] The faith of Jonathan, and his armour-bearer, was doubtleſs very ſtrong at other times: but the thought of marching againſt this vaſt army, and attacking them, was doubtleſs ſuggeſted to Jonathan's mind immediately from God, and his faith, and expectation increaſed in proportion to the extraordinary attempt: and he was enabled with reference to his own conduct, to view the almighty power of God, as ſufficient for his ſafeguard in the midſt of the Philiſtines; and alſo to ſave Iſrael by him, and his armour-bearer, as well as by the moſt numerous, and powerful army, (2 Chron. c. xiv. v. 11:) and conſidering the Iſraelites as the covenant people of God, who were oppreſſed by the uncircumciſed Philiſtines, he expected that the Lord would appear for them in the ſame wonderful manner on this occaſion, as he had for their fathers in former times; and in this hope he was confirmed by the chearful concurrence of the armour-bearer, whoſe mind had been raiſed to the ſame faith and expectation: thus they, as it were, ſaid, "Here we are, Lord ſend us." But for their fuller ſatisfaction in this matter, they agreed upon a token, according to which their proceedings were to be determined: if adviſed by the Philiſtines to tarry till they were attacked, they would conſider it as a divine monition, to keep their ground, and act upon the defenſive; but if they called to them to come up, they would take it as a ſignal to climb the rock, and attack them. Such extraordinary attempts, and triumphs of faith are recorded for our admiration, and encouragement in our more ordinary ſervices; and not for our imitation.

V. 11—15.] It ſeems to have been early in the morning, when Jonathan, and his armour-bearer placed themſelves in the view of the Philiſtines, who in contempt challenged them "to come up, and they would ſhew them a "thing," meaning that they would cauſe them to repent of their audacity; which being the expected token from God, Jonathan was perſuaded himſelf, and aſſured his ar-and the earth quaked: ſo it was a very great trembling.

and

16 And the watchmen of Saul in Gibeah of Benjamin looked: and behold the multitude melted away, and they went on beating down one another.

17 Then ſaid Saul unto the people that were with him, Number now, and ſee who is gone from us. And when they had numbered, behold Jonathan and his armour-bearer were not there.

18 And Saul ſaid unto Ahiah, Bring hither the ark of God: (for the ark of God was at that time with the children of Iſrael.)

19 And it came to paſs, while Saul talked unto the prieſt, that the noiſe that was in the hoſt of the Philiſtines went on and increaſed; and Saul ſaid unto the prieſt, Withdraw thine hand.

20 And Saul and all the people that were with him aſſembled themſelves, and they came to the battle: and behold every man's ſword was againſt his fellow, and there was a very great diſcomfiture.

21 Moreover the Hebrews that were with the Philiſtines before that time, which went up with them into the camp, from the country round about, even they alſo turned to be with the Iſraelites that were with Saul and Jonathan.

22 Likewiſe all the men of Iſrael which had hid themſelves in mount Ephraim, when they heard that the Philiſtines fled, even they alſo followed hard after them in the battle.

23 So the LORD ſaved Iſrael that day: and the battle paſſed over unto Beth-aven.

24 And the men of Iſrael were diſtreſſed that day: for Saul had adjured the people, ſaying, Curſed be the man that eateth any food until evening, that I may be avenged on mine enemies. So none of the people taſted any food.

25 And all they of the land came to a wood; and there was honey upon the ground.

26 And when the people were come into the wood, behold the honey dropped; but no man put his hand to his mouth: for the people feared the oath.

27 But Jonathan heard not when his father charged the people with the oath: wherefore he put forth the end of the rod that was in his hand, and dipped it in an honey-comb, and put his hand to his mouth; and his eyes were enlightened.

28 Then anſwered one of the people, and ſaid, Thy father ſtraitly charged the people with an oath, ſaying, Curſed be the man that eateth any food this day. And the people were faint.

29 Then ſaid Jonathan, My father hath troubled the land: ſee, I pray you, how mine eyes have been enlightened, becauſe I taſted a little of this honey.

30 How much more, if haply the people had eaten freely to-day of the ſpoil of their enemies which they found? for had there not been now a much greater ſlaughter among the Philiſtines?

mour-bearer, that the Lord would deliver them by their means into the hand of Iſrael: and ſo they both without heſitation climbed up the rock, into the enemy's camp, apparently ruſhing into the jaws of deſtruction: but by the immediate interpoſition of God, the Philiſtines were ſo confounded at this daring aſſault, that they fell down without reſiſtance before Jonathan, and were diſpatched by his armour-bearer; till twenty were ſlaughtered in a ſmall ſpace, without attempting either to fight, or to flee. Upon which the whole army was ſeized with trembling and conſternation, and an earthquake, which took place at the ſame moment, increaſed their terror; ſo that it was "a trembling of "God," the whole being, not only very great, but altogether miraculous: in conſequence of which, they ſuppoſed the Iſraelites to have been in the midſt of the camp, and began to ſlay one another, in every part of it.

V. 16—23.] This being obſerved by the centinels of Saul's ſmall army, and none being abſent from the camp, but Jonathan, and his armour-bearer, great ſurpriſe was occaſioned: and Saul prepared to conſult the Lord, whether he ought to attack the Philiſtines or no; but his impatient ſpirit could no more wait for Ahiah's anſwer, than for Samuel's arrival: but perceiving the commotion ſtill increaſing, he haſtily determined to march againſt them: though he might juſtly have queſtioned, whether the Lord, who had begun the work without him, would accept of his aſſiſtance; at leaſt there could not be ſuch want of it, but that he might ſtay till he had inquired the Lord's will, and received orders to engage, (c. xxx. 7, 8.) And though the Lord in ſaving Iſrael, was pleaſed to make uſe of theſe forces, as well as of the deſerters and fugitives; yet his haſty interpoſition, and his ſubſequent raſhneſs were rebuked in ſuch a manner, as to prevent the complete deſtruction of their enemies.

V. 24—35.] The abſolute prohibition of all food to the ſoldiers for the whole day was very impolitic; though

31 And

31 And they ſmote the Philiſtines that day from Michmaſh to Aijalon: and the people were very faint.

32 And the people flew upon the ſpoil, and took ſheep, and oxen, and calves, and ſlew them on the ground: and the people did eat them with the blood.

33 Then they told Saul, ſaying, Behold, the people ſin againſt the LORD, in that they eat with the blood. And he ſaid, Ye have tranſgreſſed: roll a great ſtone unto me this day.

34 And Saul ſaid, Diſperſe yourſelves among the people, and ſay unto them, Bring me hither every man his ox, and every man his ſheep, and ſlay them here, and eat; and ſin not againſt the LORD in eating with the blood. And all the people brought every man his ox with him that night, and ſlew them there.

35 And Saul built an altar unto the LORD: the ſame was the firſt altar that he built unto the LORD.

36 And Saul ſaid, Let us go down after the Philiſtines by night, and ſpoil them until the morning light, and let us not leave a man of them. And they ſaid, Do whatſoever ſeemeth good unto thee. Then ſaid the prieſt, Let us draw near hither unto God.

37 And Saul aſked counſel of God, Shall I go down after the Philiſtines? wilt thou deliver them into the hand of Iſrael? But he anſwered him not that day.

38 And Saul ſaid, Draw ye near hither all the chief of the people; and know and ſee wherein this ſin hath been this day:

39 For as the LORD liveth, which ſaveth Iſrael, though it be in Jonathan my ſon, he ſhall ſurely die. But there was not a man among all the people that anſwered him.

40 Then ſaid he unto all Iſrael, Be ye on one ſide, and I and Jonathan my ſon will be on the other ſide. And the people ſaid unto Saul, Do what ſeemeth good unto thee.

41 Therefore Saul ſaid unto the LORD God of Iſrael, Give a perfect lot. And Saul and Jonathan were taken: but the people eſcaped.

42 And Saul ſaid, Caſt lots between me and Jonathan my ſon. And Jonathan was taken.

43 Then Saul ſaid to Jonathan, Tell me what thou haſt done. And Jonathan told him, and ſaid, I did but taſte a little honey with the end of the rod that was in mine hand, and, lo, I muſt die.

44 And Saul anſwered, God do ſo, and more alſo: for thou ſhalt ſurely die, Jonathan.

Saul might properly have cautioned them not to waſte their time about taking food, on penalty of his diſpleaſure: but to accompany the prohibition with that awful curſe, whereby the enemies of God were devoted to utter deſtruction, was profane, and raſh in the extreme: and it was the more inexcuſable, in that he did not ſay, "that the Lord may "avenge Iſrael on his enemies;" but "that I may be "avenged on mine enemies." The people fearing the curſe abſtained from the honey, which was laid in their way, and with which without any loſs of time, they might have refreſhed themſelves, and been enabled to have made a much greater ſlaughter of the Philiſtines: and in the evening, being almoſt fainting with labour and hunger, they were tempted haſtily to kill the cattle, which they had taken, and to eat the fleſh, without evacuating the blood, as the law commanded them, until they were reſtrained by Saul's authority. And Jonathan, ignorant of the curſe, when ready to faint with fatigue, having eaten a little honey, by which he was ſenſibly, and viſibly revived, ſo that his eyes which were dim and languiſhing, were enlightened, and looked lively, found himſelf caught in a ſnare, and expoſed to the moſt imminent danger.

V. 35. And Saul built, &c.] He converted the great ſtone, on which the cattle had been ſlaughtered, into an altar, on which ſacrifices were probably offered, before they attempted to proceed any further. He built this his firſt altar, when diſregarding Samuel, he had begun to apoſtatize from God.

V. 36—44. Let us draw near, &c.] Ahiah, having been before interrupted by Saul's impatience, very properly propoſed on this occaſion to reſume his enquiring of the Lord: and when no anſwer was returned, Saul juſtly concluded, that the Lord was offended, and he deſired to diſcover the cauſe: but, if he had been humbly ſenſible of the evil of his own paſt conduct, he would not have needed to enquire any further. However the Lord was pleaſed, that the conduct of Jonathan, who had unwarily expoſed himſelf to his father's curſe, ſhould be diſcovered, as the cauſe, why he would not anſwer the High Prieſt's inquiries: that the people might underſtand how much they were intereſted in the conduct of their king; and be convinced of their folly in rejecting the government of a pious prophet, whoſe prayers brought down bleſſings upon them; for that of a king, whoſe curſes brought down wrath upon them. In the ſame raſh, and profane ſpirit, Saul, before the lots were caſt, ſware by the Lord, that if Jonathan were the offender, (ſuſpecting any one more than himſelf,) he ſhould ſurely die; without knowing whether the crime committed deſerved death, or whether it might not be expiated by a ſin-offering: and after the lots had been caſt, 45 And the people ſaid unto Saul, Shall Jonathan die, who hath wrought this great ſalvation in Iſrael? God forbid: as the LORD liveth, there ſhall not one hair of his head fall to the ground; for he hath wrought with God this day. So the people reſcued Jonathan, that he died not.

46 Then Saul went up from following the Philiſtines: and the Philiſtines went to their own place.

47 So Saul took the kingdom over Iſrael, and fought againſt all his enemies on every ſide, againſt Moab, and againſt the children of Ammon, and againſt Edom, and againſt the kings of Zobah, and againſt the Philiſtines, and whitherſoever he turned himſelf he vexed them.

48 And he gathered an hoſt, and ſmote the Amalekites, and delivered Iſrael out of the hands of them that ſpoiled them.

49 Now the ſons of Saul were Jonathan, and Iſhui, and Melchi-ſhua: and the names of his two daughters were theſe; the name of the firſt-born Merab, and the name of the younger Michal:

50 And the name of Saul's wife was Ahinoam, the daughter of Ahimaaz; and the name of the captain of his hoſt was Abner the ſon of Ner, Saul's uncle:

51 And Kiſh was the father of Saul; and Ner the father of Abner was the ſon of Abiel.

52 And there was ſore war againſt the Philiſtines all the days of Saul: and when Saul ſaw any ſtrong man, or any valiant man, he took him unto him.

(with prayer, as probably was the conſtant practice,) and Jonathan was taken, with an affected ſternneſs; without any humiliation for his own ſin, in thus raſhly troubling Iſrael: as one, who pretended to be very zealous for God's glory, and for the obligation of an oath; but who was really very tenacious of his own will, and authority, and as regardleſs of Juſtice, as of natural affection, he with tremendous execrations upon himſelf, proceeded to denounce the ſentence of death upon his own pious ſon.

V. 45. And the people ſaid, &c.] They judged very rightly, that the guilt was contracted by, and the rebuke intended for Saul, who raſhly vented ſuch tremendous curſes; not for Jonathan, who innocently was brought within the reach of them: and therefore they reſcued the inſtrument of their extraordinary deliverance from the hands of his ſevere parent. And though Saul could not but deſire the life of his ſon: yet conſidering him, as decidedly preferred before himſelf, both by the Lord, and Iſrael; and knowing that Jonathan's deliverance was a ſevere rebuke of his raſhneſs; and perhaps apprehending, as was indeed the caſe, that his own repeated curſes would light on his own head; he returned home evidently diſſatisfied, and diſpleaſed: thus the opportunity of completing the deſtruction of the Philiſtines was loſt; nor could it be expected, that an expedition, which was begun, and conducted ſo very ill, ſhould terminate without ſome evident tokens of the divine diſpleaſure againſt Saul; though the Lord's love to Iſrael was diſplayed in an unparalleled manner, through the faith, and courage of his pious ſon Jonathan. Through Saul's miſconduct, and as if in anſwer to his imprecations, Jonathan was excluded from the kingdom, and ſlain with him by the Philiſtines, when the Lord did unto him as he intended to do unto his ſon, "and more alſo;" having indeed devoted him to utter deſtruction. Yet after this Saul was proſperous in many of his wars, as appears in the cloſe of this chapter.

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.

The ſame principle, which induces men to ſeek relief from the accuſations of their conſciences, by abounding in the externals of religion, will lead them to ſeek refuge from the warnings, and reproofs of faithful miniſters, by paying court to others, who, with ſome ſemblance of truth, and piety, prove more compliant to their will; and either, out of miſtake, timidity, or unfaithfulneſs, give them leſs diſturbance in their ſins: but God will ſhew a marked diſapprobation of ſuch attendance on his own ordinances, or profeſſion of his truths, as are intended to quiet the conſcience, or ſupport the credit of ſinners, who perſiſt in diſobeying the plain precepts of his holy word. Such hypocrites often ſhew their indifference about the religion, which they profeſſedly chooſe; for as it has no practical energy upon them, a ſmall matter induces them to diſpenſe with the uſeleſs form: and in ſearching the ſcriptures, or hearing the word preached, they evidence, that they do not really enquire the will of God, that they may do it; but only deſire to have their curioſity gratified, their ſentiments corroborated, and their ſelf flattery increaſed: for they diſregard, or reject all, that anſwers not theſe purpoſes. No warnings or examples are ſufficient to convince men of the folly, and danger of truſting in the forms of godlineſs, whilſt they neglect the power of it; but from age to age numbers will proceed in the ſame deſtructive path. But bleſſed be God, every age alſo produces illuſtrious inſtances of thoſe, who being ſtrong in faith, give glory unto God; and its triumphs are proportioned to its ſtrength. Whilſt we are obeying the commands, truſting in the protection, and ſeeking the glory of God, neither the ſenſe of our own weakneſs, nor the power of our enemies ſhould diſmay us; "for there is no reſtraint to the Lord to ſave by many or "by few." Though we may not now expect miraculous interpoſitions; yet the feebleſt inſtrument, who ſincerely, and in faith uſes the appointed means, in order to ſubvert ſatan's kingdom of ignorance, error, and wickedneſs, may expect conſiderable ſucceſs; for "it may be that the Lord will "work with him:" and then the weapons of his warfare will prove mighty, and no force of the enemies of our God and his Christ, can stand before him. Before his frown the mightiest armies melt away, or prove instruments of each other's destruction: what then will be the consternation and horror, when the whole world shall be assembled before his tribunal, and the wicked shall be cast into hell, yea all the nations that forget God? His cause will at last appear the strongest; and all men shall either be emboldened to embrace it, or be convinced of their madness in refusing to do so, when invited by his gracious word. But in the midst of the most glorious successes one sinner often destroyeth much good: and rash zeal is as hurtful, as timid inaction. It indeed becomes an Israelite to be superior to the cravings of his appetites: but there is neither prudence, or piety in restraining men, from partaking of the bounty of God's providence, when placed honestly within their reach; and when it is so used, as not to take men off from, but to prepare them for, and encourage them in his service. They are indeed troublers of Israel, who prohibit such use of God's good creatures: and the curses, with which they sanction their antichristian mandates, will fall upon their own heads; and they will be answerable for all the consequences; for restraints from things lawful prove temptations to forbidden indulgences; and a superstitious zeal about externals hath often hindered men from performing essential services to the church of God. When rulers by authority would withhold men from transgression, and yet in their own conduct give them an example of disobedience to God, they can expect but little success. We are too much in haste in our most important employments, if we cannot allow ourselves time to consult the Lord, and seek his blessing; and ministers should plainly remind those, who are running into this common mistake. When our prayers are not answered, we may safely conclude, that iniquity withholds good from us, and we should make diligent search for it; but we should always first suspect, and examine ourselves: whereas an unhumbled heart, suspects every other person, and looks every where, but at home, for the sinful cause of calamity. They, who are most indulgent to their own sins, are generally most severe in animadverting upon the faults of others: and they, who most disregard God's authority, are most impatient when their own commands appear to be slighted, or their reputation eclipsed; and by severity against small sins, they will endeavour to varnish over their own enormous transgressions. Such as delight in cursing, will have enough of it, and the habit of swearing will be sure to involve a man in the guilt of perjury, as well as of profaneness; and though now concealed, his iniquity will be sure to find him out. But no oath can bind a man to commit injustice: the rash swearer should repent of his iniquity, and not add one crime to another: and all men should join to rescue the innocent from punishment: and in this world, if they, who have wrought with God, and been remarkably useful to his people, escape persecution, and death, as their recompence, they are more favoured than those, who have gone before them, and need not expect much advantage to themselves from their usefulness, till they come to heaven. In the midst of mercy the Lord will rebuke his people for their sins; and by mismanagement men lose the comfort of their successes, and are discontented, and filled with vexation, in the midst of blessings. But the Lord employs even wicked men as instruments of providential good to his people; and in temporal prosperity they forget their sins, and the threatened wrath of God; and thus blaze for a moment, like a meteor, and then are put out in utter darkness. Lord, let us rather be chastened here, than thus prosper, and be condemned with the world!

NOTES.

CHAP. XV.] V. 1—3.] For some time Saul seems to have taken no notice of Samuel in his wars, and successes; perhaps resenting the sharp rebuke, that he had before given him, (c. xiii. v. 13.) But now Samuel was sent to him with an express command to go, and utterly destroy the Amalekites. In delivering his message the prophet reminded him, that he had been sent by the Lord to anoint him king, and that he now came by the same authority: and he intimated plainly, that if he did not "hearken to the "voice of the words of the Lord," he should be authorised to denounce the sentence of rejection against him; and he gave him his instructions in the most explicit, and particular manner. The Amalekites had long before been condemned (Ex. c. xvii. v. 14:) but they had been hitherto spared, till they had filled up the measure of their iniquities. We are sure, that the righteous Lord did no injustice to any individuals; and the example was of a salutary tendency, to deter others in future ages from meddling to their hurt with the servants of the living God.

V. 4. Two hundred thousand, &c.] This vast number, which was collected, when Samuel directed the enterprize, shews that the people had much more confidence in their rejected prophet, than in the king, whom they had so inordinately desired. The disproportionate number of Judah, thouſand footmen, and ten thouſand men of Judah.

5 And Saul came to a city of Amalek, and laid wait in the valley.

6 And Saul ſaid unto the Kenites, Go, depart, get you down from among the Amalekites, leſt I deſtroy you with them: for ye ſhewed kindneſs to all the children of Iſrael when they came up out of Egypt. So the Kenites departed from among the Amalekites, 7 And Saul ſmote the Amalekites from Havilah, until thou comeſt to Shur, that is over againſt Egypt.

8 And he took Agag the king of the Amalekites alive, and utterly deſtroyed all the people with the edge of the ſword.

9 But Saul and the people ſpared Agag, and the beſt of the ſheep, and of the oxen, and of the fatlings, and the lambs, and all that was good, and would not utterly deſtroy them: but every thing that was vile and refuſe that they deſtroyed utterly.

10 Then came the word of the LORD unto Samuel, ſaying,

11 It repenteth me that I have ſet up Saul to be king: for he is turned back from following me, and hath not performed my commandments. And it grieved Samuel; and he cried unto the LORD all night.

12 And when Samuel roſe early to meet Saul in the morning, it was told Samuel, ſaying, Saul came to Carmel, and, behold, he ſet him up a place, and is gone about, and paſſed on, and gone down to Gilgal.

13 And Samuel came to Saul; and Saul ſaid unto him, Bleſſed be thou of the LORD: I have performed the commandment of the LORD.

14 And Samuel ſaid, What meaneth then this bleating of the ſheep in mine ears, and the lowing of the oxen which I hear?

15 And Saul ſaid, They have brought them from the Amalekites: for the people ſpared the beſt of the ſheep and of the oxen, to ſacrifice unto the LORD thy God; and the reſt we have utterly deſtroyed.

16 Then Samuel ſaid unto Saul, Stay, and I will tell thee what the LORD hath ſaid to me this night. And he ſaid unto him, ſay on.

17 And Samuel ſaid, When thou waſt little in thine own ſight, waſt thou not made the head of the tribes of Iſrael, and the LORD anointed thee king over Iſrael?

18 And the LORD ſent thee on a journey, was perhaps the effect of their diſſatisfaction with a king of another tribe.

V. 8, 9.] The Lord had devoted the whole multitude, and all their ſubſtance to utter deſtruction, as a ſacrifice to his juſtice: but Saul, though compaſſion did not induce him to ſpare the women or children; yet in complaiſance to royalty, and to grace his victory, he ſpared Agag their king; and in covetouſneſs he ſpared the beſt of their flocks, and herds, deſtroying only the refuſe of them. As the commandment had been expreſs, and particular, and a teſt of his diſpoſition to obey God, his conduct was evidently the effect of a proud rebellious ſpirit. As many Amalekites eſcaped, probably without his fault, we ſhall read of them, as a people hereafter.

V. 11. It repenteth, &c.] (Note, Gen. c. vi. v. 6.) The Lord's change of conduct towards Saul was ſimilar to that change in our conduct, which ſprings from repentance: though by the whole he accompliſhed his wiſe and righteous purpoſes. Samuel was ſoon reconciled to the people's rejection of him, and his family, and chearfully anointed Saul to ſuperſede himſelf. But he had hoped that the change would have proved a bleſſing to Iſrael; and from Saul's firſt actions he had framed a favourable opinion of him. When therefore Saul was rejected, he was exceeding grieved, both on his account, and that of the people; and he interceded all night for the reverſal of the ſentence, and that he might not be charged with this painful commiſſion.

V. 12. Set him up a place, &c.] That is ſome trophy, as a monument of his victory: the whole verſe implies, that Saul took great ſtate upon himſelf, and was not a little elated with his ſucceſs.

V. 13. Bleſſed be thou, &c.] Saul was conſcious of having done wrong, and addreſſed Samuel in this reſpectful language, in order to conciliate his good-will, and to ward off the rebuke, which he was afraid of.

V. 15. To ſacrifice, &c.] We cannot determine whether Saul, or the people had any intention to offer all this cattle in ſacrifice; but probably it was a mere pretence: however, if it were ſo, to ſpare thoſe, whom the Lord had devoted to deſtruction, was to oppoſe man's will, and wiſdom againſt the Lord's: and doubtleſs they intended to ſave their own cattle by means of them. It is obſervable, that Saul took all the merit of his obedience to himſelf; but he threw all the blame of the diſobedience upon the people: and though Samuel charged it upon his greedineſs of the ſpoil, he returned to the ſame plea again, and again. But had he exerted his authority with as much deciſion in ſupport of God's command, as he had done before in enforcing his own prohibition; and had he been as determined in executing vengeance upon Agag, as he was diſpoſed to be in putting his ſon to death, no oppoſition, it may be ſuppoſed, would have been made to his orders.

V. 18. On a journey, &c.] The expedition was ſo

and

and ſaid, Go, and utterly deſtroy the ſinners the Amalekites, and fight againſt them until they be conſumed.

19 Wherefore then didſt thou not obey the voice of the LORD, but didſt flee upon the ſpoil, and didſt evil in the ſight of the LORD?

20 And Saul ſaid unto Samuel, Yea, I have obeyed the voice of the LORD, and have gone the way which the LORD ſent me, and have brought Agag the king of Amalek, and have utterly deſtroyed the Amalekites.

21 But the people took of the ſpoil, ſheep and oxen, the chief of the things which ſhould have been utterly deſtroyed, to ſacrifice unto the LORD thy God in Gilgal.

22 And Samuel ſaid, Hath the LORD as great delight in burnt-offerings and ſacrifices, as in obeying the voice of the LORD? Behold, to obey is better than ſacrifice; and to hearken than the fat of rams.

23 For rebellion is as the ſin of witchcraft, and ſtubbornneſs is as iniquity and idolatry: becauſe thou haſt rejected the word of the LORD, he hath alſo rejected thee from being king.

24 And Saul ſaid unto Samuel, I have ſinned: for I have tranſgreſſed the commandment of the LORD, and thy words; becauſe I feared the people, and obeyed their voice.

25 Now therefore, I pray thee, pardon my ſin, and turn again with me, that I may worſhip the LORD.

26 And Samuel ſaid unto Saul, I will not return with thee: for thou haſt rejected the word of the LORD, and the LORD hath rejected thee from being king over Iſrael.

27 And as Samuel turned about to go away, he laid hold upon the ſkirt of his mantle, and it rent.

28 And Samuel ſaid unto him, The LORD proſperous, that it was more like a ſafe, and eaſy journey, than a laborious, and perilous warfare.

V. 22. Behold, to obey, &c.] The ſubmiſſion of the underſtanding to divine inſtruction, and of the will to the authority of God muſt be eſſential to true religion under every diſpenſation: but there is a great difference betwixt the ſubmiſſion of an holy, and that of a ſinful creature. The external obedience to the precepts of the moral law is good, only ſo far as it ſprings from a willing internal ſubmiſſion to the divine authority: the profeſſion of the truths of the goſpel is good, only when it ariſes from this internal ſubmiſſion to the divine teaching, to the juſtice of the condemnation, under which ſinners are concluded, and to the wiſdom, ſuitableneſs, and grace of the method of ſalvation therein revealed. All inſtituted worſhip derives its value from the expreſs appointment of God, from the honour, which it renders to his name, from the diſpoſition of the worſhipper, and from the grace and ſpiritual bleſſings, which are thereby communicated. Sacrifices eſpecially declared the deſert of the offender, and typified the ſufferings of the Saviour: their value was derived from the divine appointment; and they were not acceptable, except offered in obedience to his authority, and with a penitent and pious mind. When therefore they were ſubſtituted in the place of true piety, or truſted in as meritorious; when the means were uſed to compenſate for the neglect of the end, and the ſign was exalted into the place of the thing ſignified, they became an abomination, however coſtly, and numerous they were. Had Saul offered thouſands of bullocks, and rams of his own herds, and flocks, exactly according to the divine ritual, in his preſent impenitent, and ſelf-confident diſpoſition; God would have abhorred them: how much more then, when the animals to be ſacrificed, were ſpared for that purpoſe, in direct diſobedience to the expreſs command of God! What could this have been, but proudly pretending to know what was for the glory of God, better than he himſelf had done? And attempting to bribe him with coſtly oblations, to diſpenſe with the violation of his own commandments?

V. 23. For rebellion, &c.] The heinouſneſs of a ſin is not to be judged of by the magnitude of the object, in which it is committed, or the groſſneſs of the outward action; but from the deliberate, and determined diſobedience of the will, from whence it ariſes. When the Lord expreſsly ays "thou ſhalt;" and his rational creature dares, to perſiſt in ſaying, "I will not;" whether the conteſt be about an apple, or a kingdom, it is ſtubbornneſs, and rebellion; a contempt of the commandment, and a daring inſult to the majeſty, and authority of God; and has in it all the eſſential malignity, which, in other circumſtances, conſtitutes idolatry, witchcraft, or the moſt flagrant injuſtice. This is abundantly illuſtrated in the conſequent hiſtory of Saul himſelf.

V. 24. 25. I have ſinned, &c.] Saul could no longer deny or entirely excuſe his offence; and therefore he reluctantly confeſſed it: yet in ſuch a manner, as detected an unhumbled, and hypocritical heart. He perſiſted in tranſferring the blame to the people; "for he feared them, and "obeyed their voice:" yet he was not ſo timid, or obedient to them, when his own intereſt, or authority were concerned. He was more diſquieted, becauſe Samuel was offended, leſt he ſhould alienate the people, than becauſe the Lord was angry with him: and he prayed of him to pardon him, as if forgiveneſs of ſins had belonged to him; (Pſal. c. li. v. 4.)

V. 27, 28.] Saul perſonally cared not for Samuel; but he was ſenſible what influence he poſſeſſed over the people; and he feared, that if he departed in diſpleaſure, he would proceed to anoint another king, and would ſtir up the people to revolt from him, and thus immediately execute the ſentence againſt him: therefore he thus earneſtly oppoſed his departure; and by renting Samuel's mantle, hath rent the kingdom of Iſrael from thee this day, and hath given it to a neighbour of thine, that is better than thou.

29 And alſo the Strength of Iſrael will not lie, nor repent: for he is not a man, that he ſhould repent.

30 Then he ſaid, I have ſinned; yet honour me now, I pray thee, before the elders of my people, and before Iſrael, and turn again with me, that I may worſhip the LORD thy God.

31 So Samuel turned again after Saul; and Saul worſhipped the LORD.

32 Then ſaid Samuel, Bring ye hither to me Agag the king of the Amalekites: and Agag came unto him delicately. And Agag ſaid, Surely the bitterneſs of death is paſt.

33 And Samuel ſaid, As thy ſword hath made women childleſs, ſo ſhall thy mother be childleſs among women. And Samuel hewed Agag in pieces before the LORD in Gilgal.

34 Then Samuel went to Ramah; and Saul went up to his houſe to Gibeah of Saul.

35 And Samuel came no more to ſee Saul until the day of his death; nevertheleſs, Samuel mourned for Saul: and the LORD repented that he had made Saul king over Iſrael.

afforded a ſignificant token of the kingdom being rent from him, and given to a more worthy perſon; as Samuel by divine inſpiration interpreted it.

V. 29. The Strength of Iſrael, &c.] "Or the victory "of Iſrael:" Saul took the honour of the victory, and of Iſrael's protection to himſelf, and raiſed a trophy of it, before he offered thank-offerings to God: but Samuel covertly rebuked his vanity, and reminded him that the Lord, who had irreverſibly condemned him to loſe his kingdom, was Iſrael's ſtrength, and victory.

V. 30. Honour me now, &c.] When he ſhould publicly have taken ſhame to himſelf for his ſin, he was anxious for Samuel to honour him before the people, that his example might influence their conduct!

V. 31. So Samuel, &c.] Samuel, perhaps by divine direction, changed his mind, that he might not occaſion any inſurrection amongſt the people, and that he might execute the juſtice of God upon Agag: ſo he witneſſed Saul's worſhip, but it doth not appear that he took any part in it.

V. 32. Delicately, &c.] That is, affecting the ſtate, and dignity of a monarch, as if he would over-awe the aged prophet: and either he ſpake as one, who deemed himſelf in no danger of death, as he had eſcaped the ſword of a conquering king, and could have nothing to fear from Samuel: or elſe, as one, who had got over the fear of death, and was determined to meet it with intrepidity. He was the chief perſon, who was to have been ſlain, both as to the head of the devoted nation, and for his own crimes: and therefore Samuel hewed him to pieces before the Lord, near his altar, and as a ſacrifice to his juſtice. Thus Samuel, who was of a lenient ſpirit, and prayed all night for Saul, heſitated not to execute that ſentence of God upon this condemned criminal, which Saul, who afterwards proved himſelf very cruel, refuſed to do. After this Samuel withdrew entirely from Saul, as one rejected of God; and though Saul once came to him, he never went to Saul any more.

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.

They are not well qualified to rule over men, who have not learned to obey God; eſpecially to rule over his people. The righteous vengeance of God may be long delayed, but will certainly be executed, according to his moſt tremendous threatnings, upon all impenitent ſinners; but with the moſt marked ſeverity upon the ring-leaders in perſecution, and ſuch, as have endeavoured to hinder thoſe, who were ſetting out in the ways of godlineſs. When the Lord calls us to our work, and his time is come, he will provide us helpers, and give us ſucceſs; but he will at the ſame time make trial of our ſpirits. We may not avenge ourſelves without expreſs command; but we may at any time requite the kindneſs of our benefactors: and they, who do good to God's people for his ſake, treaſure up bleſſings for their poſterity. It is dangerous living amongſt wicked people, and if we would not periſh with them, we muſt keep ſeparate from them. The pride of man's heart can admit the blaſphemous idea of being in ſome caſes more merciful than God, and of cenſuring the threatened puniſhment of ſinners, as too ſevere: and covetouſneſs deems the vile, and refuſe good enough to be ſpent wholly in the ſervice of the Lord: and hypocriſy is detected by partiality in obedience, and paying more honour to wicked great men, than to the commandments of God. Many go far in the external appearance of religion, who go back from following the Lord, and are given up to be hardened, and periſh. Over ſuch perſons faithful miniſters are often conſtrained to grieve, and they pour out many prayers for them, which return into their own boſom. However they muſt, and will deliver the Lord's meſſage, though their hearts be pained by ſo doing: and if ſinners knew their ſecret ſorrow and prayers for them, and conſidered, that they ſpeak no more, than God hath required them to ſay, they would not reſent their moſt faithful reproofs. When men are ſolicitous to perpetuate the memory of their religious ſervices, they ſhew that they only ſought the praiſe of men, and verily they have their poor reward: and when they boaſt of their obedience, and by fair ſpeeches would extort commendation from the ſervants of God, be ſure their conduct will not endure a ſcrutiny. Many obſervable circumſtances betray the hypocriſy of ſome confident profeſſors of godlineſs. If you are true diſciples of Chriſt, what mean theſe evil tempers, this covetouſneſs, this luxury, and pride of life, this conformity to the world, this contempt and neglect of the poor? Was this the mind, and life of Chriſt? Is this the ſcriptural character of a Chriſtian? By ſelf-examination, and circumſpection men ſhould render it unneceſſary for miniſters to preſs home upon their conſciences ſuch convincing queſtions. But the unhumbled heart will never want an excuſe, or palliation of the moſt evident criminality; and it always will be neceſſary, for the preachers of God's word, to drive ſinners from their ſubterfuges; to ſhew them the malignity, and aggravations of their offences; to ſilence their objections, and excuſes, and to urge conviction upon their hearts: though the convincing ſpirit of God alone can render the means effectual to the deſired end. In exerciſing this part of the ſacred miniſtry, nothing is of more importance, than an accurate knowledge of the relative and comparative value of the truths, precepts, and ordinances of religion; about which hypocrites ſo miſtake, and thereby impoſe upon themſelves. An obedient heart is in one way or other eſſential to all religion; and in that of a ſinner implies a willing obedience to the command given to all men to repent; an obedient reliance on the Saviour's merits; an obedient attendance on all inſtituted ordinances, as means of grace; and a willing obedience to the commands of Chriſt, out of love to his name, and to adorn his goſpel. The expreſſion of this temper in the moſt minute concerns, and with much infirmity, and miſtake is accepted of a merciful God: but a proud, ſtubborn, rebellious will renders the moſt ſplendid ſervices, and the moſt ſpecious profeſſion, abominable in the ſight of the Lord, and ranks them with the moſt atrocious crimes. The impenitent ſinner may be detected even in his confeſſions, and concomitant behaviour: he hath always ſome reſerve; he will throw the blame off from himſelf; he will ſhew an anxiety about the eſteem of man, and a fear of temporal loſs, ſhame, and ſuffering, more than about the future wrath of an offended God; and will attempt to quiet his conſcience with external forms, and a partial reformation. In vain will ſuch men endeavour to prevail with faithful miniſters, to afford them countenance; and the more they attempt it, the more awful warnings will they receive of approaching ruin: and when the ſervants of God deſpair of doing them good, they will withdraw from them, and leave them to themſelves, whatever their rank in life may be, that they may interpret their ſilence, and abſence into a conſtant reproof. The fear of man is no excuſe for diſobeying God; and yet it often is a mere pretence; for many will plead the fear of man for neglecting ſelf-denying duties, who fear not their diſpleaſure in the gratification of their own paſſions. When the ſentence of final rejection is irreverſibly denounced, repentance will be unavailing: and though our God be now ready to forgive, he will neither repent, nor change his purpoſes of vengeance hereafter; and the ſtrength of Iſrael will be eternally engaged to puniſh his ſtouteſt, proudeſt foes. If they, who were regarded, when little in their own eyes, are elated by proſperity, and forget the Lord, he will contemn them: and when one inſtrument is rejected, another ſhall be ſought out more fit for the work. The mighty of the earth are ſo accuſtomed to flattery, and diſtinction, that they can ſcarce ſuppoſe that any will dare to withhold it from them; but with God there is no reſpect of perſons: and, though he requires his ſervants to honour thoſe, who are in authority; yet he teaches them to be of his judgment concerning comparative excellency. Neither dignity, delicacy, or vain confidence, give the ſinner any ſecurity: the bitterneſs of death may meet them when and where they leaſt expect it; but the bitterneſs of future miſery is the moſt to be feared. Our warfare however is of ſomewhat a different nature, than Saul's: But if we therein ſpare one domineering luſt, or profitable iniquity, we ſhall forfeit the promiſed kingdom with deep diſgrace: for our ſincerity muſt be approved by devoting every ſin to utter deſtruction, by the power of God's grace, and for the glory of his name. For this in all ages, and nations, is the line of diſtinction betwixt Samuel, and Saul, betwixt the Chriſtian and the hypocrite; that the one levels his whole force againſt Agag, againſt that luſt, which by conſtitution, and cuſtom, has got the greateſt aſcendancy over him, that he may hew it in pieces before the Lord: whilſt the other is anxious to preſerve his maſter ſin, however willing he may appear to mortify, or refrain from thoſe ſins, to which he hath been leſs addicted.

NOTES.

CHAP. XVI.] V. 2. How can I go, &c.?] Saul was now become very ſuſpicious, fierce, and tyrannical, and enraged againſt Samuel for the ſentence, that he had denounced againſt him: This queſtion therefore might not reſult wholly from unbelieving fear, but from a deſire to receive inſtructions, for the more prudent management of the affair: accordingly he was directed to go to Beth-lehem to ſacrifice, as he probably did from time to time, in many different places: the anſwer, which he was inſtructed to return, was the truth, and he was not bound to divulge all his intentions.

V. 4. Trembled, &c.] They were conſcious, it is likely, of ſome iniquity committed amongſt them, and feared, leſt Samuel was ſent to denounce the wrath of God upon them.

of the town trembled at his coming, and ſaid, Comeſt thou peaceably?

5 And he ſaid, Peaceably: I am come to ſacrifice unto the LORD; ſanctify yourſelves, and come with me to the ſacrifice. And he ſanctified Jeſſe and his ſons and called them to the ſacrifice.

6 And it came to paſs when they were come, that he looked on Eliab, and ſaid, Surely the LORD's anointed is before him.

7 But the LORD ſaid unto Samuel, Look not on his countenance, or on the height of his ſtature; becauſe I have refuſed him: for the LORD ſeeth not as man ſeeth; for man looketh on the outward appearance, but the LORD looketh on the heart.

8 Then Jeſſe called Abinadab, and made him paſs before Samuel. And he ſaid, Neither hath the LORD choſen this.

9 Then Jeſſe made Shammah to paſs by. And he ſaid, Neither hath the LORD choſen this.

10 Again, Jeſſe made ſeven of his ſons to paſs before Samuel. And Samuel ſaid unto Jeſſe, The LORD hath not choſen theſe.

11 And Samuel ſaid unto Jeſſe, Are here all thy children? And he ſaid, There remaineth yet the youngeſt, and, behold, he keepeth the ſheep. And Samuel ſaid unto Jeſſe, Send and fetch him: for we will not ſit down till he come hither.

12 And he ſent and brought him in. Now he was ruddy, and withal of a beautiful countenance, and goodly to look to. And the LORD ſaid, Ariſe, anoint him: for this is he.

13 Then Samuel took the horn of oil, and anointed him in the midſt of his brethren: and the Spirit of the LORD came upon David from that day forward. So Samuel roſe up, and went to Ramah.

14 But the Spirit of the LORD departed from Saul, and an evil ſpirit from the LORD troubled him.

15 And Saul's ſervants ſaid unto him, Behold now, an evil ſpirit from God troubleth thee.

16 Let our lord now command thy ſervants, which are before thee, to ſeek out a man who is a cunning player on an harp: and it ſhall come to paſs, when the evil ſpirit from God is upon thee, that he ſhall play with his hand, and thou ſhalt be well.

V. 5. He ſanctified, &c.] He inſtructed them in the nature of this ſacred ordinance, and by his counſels, and prayers aſſiſted them in preparing for acceptably, and profitably attending upon it.

V. 7. Look not, &c.] Samuel did not fully underſtand, that the Lord in anger gave Iſrael their firſt king, after their own heart, but that he now intended in mercy to give them one after his own heart; being chiefly remarkable for his ſtrong faith and fervent piety.

V. 11. He keepeth, &c.] David being young, not more than eighteen or twenty years of age, and being of a contemplative diſpoſition, was not thought by Jeſſe to be capable of tranſacting buſineſs of importance, and was not therefore kept at home on this occaſion: ſo different doth the Lord ſee, than man does!—His name ſignifies "Beloved," and he was an eminent type of the beloved Son of God.

V. 13. An horn, &c.] The quantity of oil, ſuppoſed to be greater, than had been uſed about Saul, and the durable horn, contraſted with the brittle vial, are ſignificant of David's fuller meaſure of endowments for governing, and of the perpetuity of his kingdom. He was anointed "in the midſt of his brethren," though it was kept ſecret from others, and yet none of them rivalled, oppoſed, or injured him: from that time he was evidently endowed with the Spirit of the Lord, qualifying him for great things; nevertheleſs he returned to his humble and laborious occupation, waiting therein the Lord's time for being called to action.

V. 14. But the Spirit, &c.] About the ſame time it became evident that the Spirit of the Lord had departed from Saul, and that he was deprived of his capacity for public buſineſs, performing nothing prudently, or ſucceſſfully: nay that an evil ſpirit was judicially permitted to impel him to the moſt furious ſallies of rage, or jealouſy, to oppreſs his ſpirits to a deep melancholy, and to render him at times diſtracted.

V. 16. A cunning, &c.] This might be a proper method of ſoothing his melancholy and calming his paſſions; but the cauſe of his malady lay much deeper. It had been better advice, if his ſervants had perſuaded him to ſend for Samuel to converſe with, and pray for him; for without repentance, and forgiveneſs of ſins, his diſorder could not be cured, though the ſymptoms might be mitigated. The hand of the Lord was manifeſt in thus bringing David to court. After his anointing he had in one way or other ſo ſignalized himſelf, that he was much taken notice of, c. xvii. v. 34—36:) and eſpecially his ſkill in muſic was remarked by ſome perſon, who attended on Saul. Thus he was introduced to him, and his ſolemn ſacred muſic was much more ſuitable to his caſe, than more amuſing ſtrains would have been. He came to Saul with a high character, which he did not diſgrace; he was uſeful to, and beloved by him; and yet, when Saul no longer wanted him, he returned back to his flocks as contented as ever, and was ſoon forgotten at court.

17 And Saul ſaid unto his ſervants, Provide me now a man that can play well, and bring him to me.

18 Then anſwered one of the ſervants, and ſaid, Behold, I have ſeen a ſon of Jeſſe the Beth-lehemite, that is cunning in playing, and a mighty valiant man, and a man of war, and prudent in matters, and a comely perſon, and the LORD is with him.

19 Wherefore Saul ſent meſſengers unto Jeſſe, and ſaid, Send me David thy ſon, which is with the ſheep.

20 And Jeſſe took an aſs laden with bread, and a bottle of wine, and a kid, and ſent them by David his ſon unto Saul.

21 And David came to Saul, and ſtood before him: and he loved him greatly; and he became his armour-bearer.

22 And Saul ſent to Jeſſe, ſaying, Let David, I pray thee, ſtand before me: for he hath found favour in my ſight.

23 And it came to paſs, when the evil ſpirit from God was upon Saul, that David took an harp, and played with his hand: ſo Saul was refreſhed, and was well, and the evil ſpirit departed from him.

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.

Our moſt diſintereſted ſorrow may be exceſſive, and imply rebellion againſt the righteous will of God: and he will then rebuke us for, as well as encourage us under, our diſtreſs.—We ought not inconſolably to mourn for thoſe, whom the Lord hath rejected, but ſhould rather rejoice in thoſe, whom he is calling forth to uſefulneſs: and no partial affection ſhould interfere with preſent duty. The moſt eminent believers are not entirely ſuperior to the fear of man, when dangerous ſervices are aſſigned them. But the Lord will inwardly ſtrengthen, and outwardly protect them: and without immediate revelation, he can by his word and Spirit ſhew them ſtep by ſtep what they ought to do. The guilty conſcience trembles at a meſſage from heaven: yet the miniſters of Chriſt all come peaceably, propoſing ſalvation, through the ſacrifice of the Redeemer, and ſpeaking terror to none, except thoſe, who neglect ſo great ſalvation. There is a preparation of heart required for the receiving of this atonement, as well as for attending on divine ordinances; and the inſtruction, converſe, and prayers of faithful miniſters are very uſeful, in both caſes, to thoſe, who deſire to profit by them; and parents ought not needleſsly to permit their children to miſs ſuch favourable opportunities: for through the ſacrifice of Chriſt, and the ordinances of his worſhip, the unction of the holy Spirit is communicated, according to the will of God. It is difficult wholly to diveſt ourſelves of partiality for thoſe, who are recommended by external accompliſhments; and we often frame an erroneous judgment of characters: but the Lord values nothing comparatively, but that holy faith, fear, and love, which are implanted in the heart, beyond the reach of human penetration. And He doth not favour our children according to our fond partialities; but often moſt honours, and bleſſes thoſe, who have been leaſt regarded. The Lord's method of educating men for important ſtations of uſefulneſs differ much from thoſe, which human wiſdom hath deviſed. Humble induſtry, and obedient attention to obſcure duties; contemplation, and retired devotion; and a patient ſelf-denying aſſiduity, are the beſt preparatives for ſerving the cauſe of God and his church. When ſinners, by reſiſting the Holy Ghoſt, have provoked his final departure, they are expoſed to every incurſion of ſatan, and are likely to become tormentors of themſelves, and of others: nay ſome may perceive, that they are given up of God, in his righteous diſpleaſure, without taking warning by their awful caſe. Indeed we none of us have the leaſt ſecurity either for our bodies or ſouls, againſt the malignity of evil ſpirits, except in the protection of that God, whom alas! we are continually provoking. When conſcious guilt and fears of divine vengeance diſorder the minds of men, they, who perceive their diſtreſs, but underſtand neither the cauſe, nor the cure, are apt to propoſe very fatal methods of relief: and muſic, diverſion, company, or buſineſs, have for a ſeaſon been frequently employed as a ſucceſsful quietus for a wounded conſcience: but nothing can effect a real cure, but the blood of Chriſt, applied in faith, and the ſanctifying Spirit ſealing the pardon, by his holy comforts: and all theſe expedients to diſpel religious melancholy are ſure methods of increaſing diſtreſs, either in this world, or in the next.—Every endowment, which admits of an uſeful exerciſe, in ſubſerviency to godlineſs, is to be aſcribed to the energy of the divine Spirit: and opportunities will be afforded for its being diſplayed; and if the Lord be graciouſly with us, they will be ſuitably improved: and good behaviour in inferior ſtations is the beſt introduction to higher advancement.—Thus Jeſus was obedient unto death, ere he was exalted to his glorious throne: and thus he trains up his people, by obedience, in the midſt of temptation, and trouble, for their future inheritance in the region of purity and felicity.

NOW the Philiſtines gathered together their armies to battle, and were gathered together at Shochoh, which belongeth to Judah, and pitched between Shochoh and Azekah, in Ephes-dammim.

2 And Saul and the men of Iſrael were gathered together, and pitched by the valley of Elah, and ſet the battle in array againſt the Philiſtines.

3 And the Philiſtines ſtood on a mountain on the one ſide, and Iſrael ſtood on a mountain on the other ſide: and there was a valley between them.

4 And there went out a champion out of the camp of the Philiſtines, named Goliath of Gath, whoſe height was ſix cubits and a ſpan.

5 And he had an helmet of braſs upon his head, and he was armed with a coat of mail: and the weight of the coat was five thouſand ſhekels of braſs.

6 And he had greaves of braſs upon his legs, and a target of braſs between his ſhoulders.

7 And the ſtaff of his ſpear was like a weaver's beam, and his ſpear's head weighed ſix hundred ſhekels of iron: and one bearing a ſhield went before him.

8 And he ſtood and cried unto the armies of Iſrael, and ſaid unto them, Why are ye come out to ſet your battle in array? Am not I a Philiſtine, and ye ſervants to Saul? chooſe you a man for you, and let him come down to me.

9 If he be able to fight with me, and to kill me, then will we be your ſervants: but if I prevail againſt him, and kill him, then ſhall ye be our ſervants, and ſerve us.

10 And the Philiſtine ſaid, I defy the armies of Iſrael this day; give me a man that we may fight together.

11 When Saul and all Iſrael heard thoſe words of the Philiſtine they were diſmayed, and greatly afraid.

12 Now David was the ſon of that Ephrathite of Beth-lehem-judah, whoſe name was Jeſſe; and he had eight ſons: and the man went among men for an old man in the days of Saul.

13 And the three eldeſt ſons of Jeſſe went and followed Saul to the battle: and the names of his three ſons that went to the battle were Eliab the firſt born, and next unto him Abinadab, and the third Shammah.

14 And David was the youngeſt: and the three eldeſt followed Saul.

15 But David went, and returned from Saul, to feed his father's ſheep at Beth-lehem.

16 And the Philiſtine drew near morning and evening, and preſented himſelf forty days.

17 And Jeſſe ſaid unto David his ſon, Take now for thy brethren an ephah of this parched

NOTES.

CHAP. XVII.] V. 1. Now the Philiſtines, &c.] Saul had repeatedly allowed the Philiſtines time to recover their ſtrength, and courage: and perhaps the report of the diſordered ſtate of his mind had emboldened them to this invaſion: yet the Lord ſo ordered it, that he was in ſome meaſure recovered, ere the war was begun.

V. 4. A champion, &c.] "Or a dueller," one who wiſhed to diſtinguiſh himſelf in ſingle combat, confiding in the greatneſs of his ſtrength. He was of the race of the Anakims, and upon the moſt moderate computation was ten feet high; and the weight of his armour ſhews that his bulk, and ſtrength were proportionable. Probably men in general were about the ſame ſize as at preſent; for ſuch giants then cauſed as much ſurpriſe, as they now would. (Num. c. xiii. v. 33.)

V. 8, 9. Then will we be, &c.] By this propoſal the conſternation of the Iſraelites was increaſed; as if they muſt needs become ſlaves to the Philiſtines, unleſs ſome one of them could overcome their champion: but no nation will ever ſuffer its liberties, and intereſts to be diſpoſed of in ſuch a manner.

V. 11. They were diſmayed, &c.] When the Spirit of the Lord departed from Saul, he loſt his former courage: or, depending on the God of Iſrael, he might have aſſaulted the army of the Philiſtines, and at once have ſilenced the proud boaſtings of Goliath: but his timidity diſheartened the army; for faith, and piety were evidently at a low ebb amongſt them. Nor had Jonathan the ſame inward intimation to engage in this ſervice, that he formerly had to undertake one, at leaſt equally perilous; for the Lord had reſerved it for David.

V. 12. Went among men, &c.] Being far advanced in years he was exempted from war; but he ſent three of his ſons with Saul.

V. 15. But David went, &c.] Saul's diſorder being relieved, and his mind engaged in public buſineſs, David's muſic was not wanted, and therefore he very contentedly returned to his former laborious, and obſcure occupation: Probably he had only nominally been appointed Saul's armour-bearer, and had not been employed in actual ſervice.

corn, corn, and these ten loaves, and run to the camp to thy brethren;

18 And carry these ten cheeses unto the captain of their thousand, and look how thy brethren fare, and take their pledge.

19 Now Saul, and they, and all the men of Israel, were in the valley of Elah, fighting with the Philistines.

20 And David rose up early in the morning, and left the sheep with a keeper, and took, and went, as Jesse had commanded him: and he came to the trench as the host was going forth to the fight, and shouted for the battle.

21 For Israel and the Philistines had put the battle in array, army against army.

22 And David left his carriage in the hand of the keeper of the carriage, and ran into the army, and came and saluted his brethren.

23 And as he talked with them, behold, there came up the champion, (the Philistine of Gath, Goliath by name) out of the armies of the Philistines, and spake according to the same words: and David heard them.

24 And all the men of Israel, when they saw the man, fled from him, and were sore afraid.

25 And the men of Israel said, Have ye seen this man that is come up? surely to defy Israel is he come up: and it shall be, that the man who killeth him, the king will enrich him with great riches, and will give him his daughter, and make his father's house free in Israel.

26 And David spake to the men that stood by him, saying, what shall be done to the man that killeth this Philistine, and taketh away the reproach from Israel? for who is this uncircumcised Philistine, that he should defy the armies of the living God?

27 And the people answered him after this manner, saying, So shall it be done to the man that killeth him.

28 And Eliab his eldest brother heard when he spake unto the men; and Eliab's anger was kindled against David, and he said, Why camest thou down hither? and with whom hast thou left those few sheep in the wilderness? I know thy pride, and the naughtiness of thine heart; for thou art come down that thou mightest see the battle.

29 And David said, What have I now done? Is there not a cause?

30 And he turned from him towards another, and spake after the same manner: and the people answered him again after the former manner.

31 And when the words were heard which David spake, they rehearsed them before Saul; and he sent for him.

32 And David said to Saul, Let no man's

V. 18. Take their pledge.] Some concerted token of their welfare, as was customary, whilst epistolary correspondence was infrequent.

V. 19. Fighting with, &c.] They seem to have had frequent skirmishes, though it came not to a general engagement.

V. 22. His carriage, &c.] That, which he had brought for his brethren, and their captain.

V. 25, 26.] It does not appear that Saul consulted the Lord, or offered sacrifice, or even made supplications, on this occasion; but he employed mere carnal policy. To this conduct, David's speech, glowing with confidence in God, zeal for his glory, and resentment of Israel's disgrace, formed a noble contrast. However terrible the gigantic Goliath might appear, he was an uncircumcised Philistine; and those whom he defied, were not merely "the servants of "Saul," (v. 8,) but "the armies of the living God." And in this view, who, or what was he, that any true Israelite should fear him? The very enquiry implied the most pointed reproof of the unbelief, and cowardice of Saul, and of the whole army.

V. 28. Eliab's anger, &c.] Eliab was acquainted with David's anointing, and understood at least, that it was an indication of his future superiority; and he was doubtless moved by envy on this occasion: he also considered the spirit of his younger neglected brother as a tacit reproach of his own timidity. He therefore falsely accused him of leaving his flock without a keeper, and of coming without being sent, out of curiosity, or ambition; and intimated that he was notoriously of a proud, aspiring wicked disposition: by these insinuations he meant both to discourage David, and to prejudice the hearers, that he might be disregarded.

V. 29. Is there not a cause?] This answer was as admirable for the meekness of wisdom, as the former question was for the courage of faith. David took no notice of the reproach cast upon his character; or of the false reason assigned for his coming into the army: it was no time to enter into such altercations. But, says he, "what have I "now done? Is there not a cause?" Should not every Israelite feel a holy indignation to hear an uncircumcised Philistine defy the armies of the living God? And ought not some Israelite to step forward and venture his life, to wipe away this reproach?

heart

heart fail because of him; thy servant will go and fight with this Philistine.

33 And Saul said to David, Thou art not able to go against this Philistine to fight with him: for thou art but a youth, and he a man of war from his youth.

34 And David said unto Saul, Thy servant kept his father's sheep, and there came a lion and a bear, and took a lamb out of the flock;

35 And I went out after him, and smote him, and delivered it out of his mouth: and when he arose against me, I caught him by his beard, and smote him, and slew him.

36 Thy servant slew both the lion and the bear: and this uncircumcised Philistine shall be as one of them, seeing he hath defied the armies of the living God.

37 David said moreover, The LORD that delivered me out of the paw of the lion, and out of the paw of the bear, he will deliver me out of the hand of this Philistine. And Saul said unto David, Go, and the LORD be with thee.

38 And Saul armed David with his armour, and he put an helmet of brass upon his head; also he armed him with a coat of mail.

39 And David girded his sword upon his armour, and he assayed to go; for he had not proved it. And David said unto Saul, I cannot go with these; for I have not proved them. And David put them off him.

40 And he took his staff in his hand, and chose him five smooth stones out of the brook, and put them in a shepherd's bag which he had, even in a scrip, and his sling was in his hand; and he drew near to the Philistine.

41 And the Philistine came on, and drew near unto David; and the man that bare the shield went before him.

42 And when the Philistine looked about and saw David, he disdained him; for he was but a youth, and ruddy, and of a fair countenance.

43 And the Philistine said unto David, Am I a dog, that thou comest to me with staves? And the Philistine cursed David by his gods.

44 And the Philistine said to David, Come to me, and I will give thy flesh unto the fowls of the air, and to the beasts of the field.

45 Then said David to the Philistine, Thou comest to me with a sword, and with a spear, and with a shield; but I come to thee in the name of the LORD of hosts, the God of the armies of Israel, whom thou hast defied.

46 This day will the LORD deliver thee into mine hand, and I will smite thee, and take thine head from thee; and I will give the carcases of the host of the Philistines this day unto the fowls of the air, and to the wild beasts of the earth; that all the earth may know that there is a God in Israel.

47 And all this assembly shall know that the LORD saveth not with sword and spear: for the battle is the LORD's, and he will give you into our hands.

V. 34—37. A lion and a bear, &c.] In defence of his flock David had been enabled at different times, to slay a lion and a bear; and he looked upon this as an earnest of victory over this uncircumcised Philistine, whom he meant to attack, out of zeal for the glory of God, and the interests of Israel. Goliath was in himself no more terrible to any Israelitish soldier, than a lion, or a bear, bereaved of their prey, would be to an unarmed shepherd; his deliverance from them was of the Lord, who would also deliver him from the Philistine. Thus when the Spirit of the Lord was upon Samson, he rent the lion, before he destroyed the Philistines.

V. 38—40.] David not being accustomed to such armour, as Saul put upon him, was not satisfied to go in that manner: but this was from the Lord, that it might more evidently appear, that he fought and conquered in faith; and that the victory was from him, who works by the feeblest, and most despised means, and instruments.

V. 42—44. A youth, &c.] Perhaps David might at this time be twenty-two, or twenty-three years of age; but his unwarlike appearance excited contempt and disdain in Goliath's breast; and he was affronted to be opposed by such a stripling, accoutred in such a manner. But though he cursed him by his gods, he evidently trusted not in them, but in the might of his own arm.

V. 45—47.] Nothing can exceed the humility, the faith, the piety and the zeal for the glory of God, and the cause of Israel, and of true religion, which glow in this most beautiful speech. David therein expressed with peculiar animation his assured expectation of success; he gloried in his own contemptible appearance and armature, that the victory might the more unquestionably be ascribed to the Lord: and he anticipated the effects of this transaction; he even conceived a hope that it might produce a salutary conviction in the minds of the Philistines, that the God of Israel was the only true God: and he predicted that his power and glory would by means thereof be made known to all the earth.

1. SAMUEL. CH. XVII. VE. LVII.

Richter del. Cooper Sc.

Published as the Act directs by Bellamy & Roberts. Sept.r 10. 1791.

48 And it came to pass, when the Philistine arose, and came and drew nigh to meet David, that David hasted and ran toward the army to meet the Philistine.

49 And David put his hand in his bag, and took thence a stone, and slang it, and smote the Philistine in his forehead, that the stone sunk into his forehead; and he fell upon his face to the earth.

50 So David prevailed over the Philistine with a sling and with a stone, and smote the Philistine, and slew him; but there was no sword in the hand of David.

51 Therefore David ran, and stood upon the Philistine, and took his sword, and drew it out of the sheath thereof, and slew him, and cut off his head therewith. And when the Philistines saw their champion was dead, they fled.

52 And the men of Israel and of Judah arose, and shouted, and pursued the Philistines, until thou come to the valley, and to the gates of Ekron: and the wounded of the Philistines fell down by the way to Shaaraim, even unto Gath, and unto Ekron.

53 And the children of Israel returned from chasing after the Philistines, and they spoiled their tents.

54 And David took the head of the Philistine, and brought it to Jerusalem: but he put his armour in his tent.

55 And when Saul saw David go forth against the Philistine, he said unto Abner, the captain of the host, Abner, whose son is this youth? And Abner said, As thy soul liveth, O king, I cannot tell.

56 And the king said, Enquire thou whose son the stripling is.

57 And as David returned from the slaughter of the Philistine, Abner took him, and brought him before Saul, with the head of the Philistine in his hand.

58 And Saul said to him, Whose son art thou, thou young man? And David answered, I am the son of thy servant Jesse the Bethlehemite.

V. 49. The stone sunk, &c.] Either Goliah in fearless presumption had neglected to fasten on his helmet; or the stone, directed, and impelled by the power of the Almighty, penetrated both the helmet and his skull, as a stone sinks into the water.

V. 51. They fled.] Perceiving so evident a proof of the power, and presence of the God of Israel, they had not courage to stand their ground after their champion's death, but yielded Israel a complete victory.

V. 54. To Jerusalem, &c.] Either David carried the head of Goliath to Jerusalem, as a terror to the Jebusites, and put his armour in his own tent, until it was removed to the tabernacle of God (c. xxi. v. 8—9.) Or this is spoken by anticipation; and means, that afterwards Goliath's skull was preserved in Jerusalem, and his armour in that tent, which David there formed for the ark; as a monument of the victory to the glory of God.

V. 55. Whose son, &c.] The disordered state of Saul's mind, the multiplicity of his affairs, the intervening time, and a variety of new objects might combine to occasion his forgetfulness of David; who before had been useful to, and favoured by him.

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.

When they, to whom it belongs officially to defend the cause of God, and his church, are destitute of his Spirit; and are given up to ambition, covetousness, envy, malice, or lust; no wonder if open enemies are encouraged, and friends dispirited: and as the fear of God declines, the fear of man, in one form or other, will gather strength. But when one instrument is thrown aside, another shall be prepared, and produced for the work of the Lord: for though Israel be cast down, and his enemies for a season triumph, yet shall he be raised up again, and their success shall terminate in deeper disgrace, and ruin. Every gift of God to man, instead of inspiring gratitude, naturally increases his proud self-admiration, and confidence, and his disposition to despise, and insult over others. But what are human wisdom, strength, or courage, unless preserved by him, that gave them? When they are withdrawn from their dependance on him, or employed in rebellion against him; the haughty possessor becomes more expressly the enemy, and rival of the Almighty, and is prepared for a more distinguished monument of his righteous vengeance. Degenerate professors often receive just rebukes from the mouths of the most decided enemies of true religion: nor need either persecutor, or heresiarch fear defying the disciples of man, any more than Goliath feared defying the servants of Saul; were they only such, as their names, and conduct on some occasions seem to imply. For in human accomplishments the opposers of the truth of God have frequently possessed an undisputed superiority: confiding therein they have defied, and still do defy the advocates of scriptural truth, to engage with them, and seem to dream of a total and decided victory. But they have the armies of the living God, and their invincible Captain himself, to contend with; and who are these uncircumcised Philistines, that a true Israelite should be afraid of them? Any believer in the divine Saviour may predict that their triumphing will be short: and, if fairly called to it, we need not fear to go forth with the despised sling and stone, with plain testimonies of holy Scripture, unadorned by eloquence, and unsupported by human learning, against the most formidable of them: trusting in him, who hath all

AND it came to paſs, when he had made an end of ſpeaking unto Saul, that the ſoul of Jonathan was knit with the ſoul of David, and Jonathan loved him as his own ſoul.

2 And Saul took him that day, and would let him go no more home to his father's houſe.

3 Then Jonathan and David made a covenant, becauſe he loved him as his own ſoul.

4 And Jonathan ſtripped himſelf of the robe power in heaven and earth engaged in ſupport of his cauſe, and truth. But they, who would ſerve God, muſt learn patience, meekneſs, and ſelf-denial; to bear neglect, contempt, and ingratitude; to be laborious, faithful, and obedient; to ſhun obſervation, and oſtentation; to walk by faith, and to wait the Lord's time for every promiſed, or expected mercy; and not to put themſelves forward, till it be undeniably evident, that there is a cauſe. In times of general formality, and lukewarmneſs, every degree of zeal, which implies a readineſs to go further, or to venture more in the cauſe of God, than others do, will be cenſured as pride, and ambition, &c: and by none more, than near relations, and negligent ſuperiors. Such cenſures will ſeldom be unmingled with unjuſt inſinuations, and attempts to blacken a man's character; in order to excite prejudice againſt him, and to render his efforts unſucceſsful. But conſcious integrity, and confidence in God, united with meekneſs, wiſdom, and perſeverance, will carry a man through, and raiſe him above ſuch diſcouraging oppoſition: and they, who would do good, ſhould not multiply words in defence of their own characters, ſhould avoid whatever may needleſsly exaſperate, prolong contention, or foment envy; and be ſatisfied with appealing to the conſcience, and common ſenſe of impartial perſons, that times, and circumſtances require ſuch exertions. The hope of being an inſtrument of good, and of being accepted by the Lord will animate the true believer in every undertaking; and the expectation of a reward from man, or the fear of human cenſure will be with him inferior conſiderations. The due improvement of our experience of the Lord's faithfulneſs, love, and power in former ſeaſons of danger, and difficulty, will inſpire confidence in the proſpect of future conflicts; and on ſome occaſions may be referred to for the ſatisfaction of others: and to be engaged againſt the acknowledged enemies of God, and his church, is in all caſes a proper ground of encouragement. In the ſervice of our common Lord we are not all qualified to handle the ſame weapons, or to fill up the ſame ſtations: none ſhould therefore be ſet up in all things as models, nor ought any of us indiſcriminately to imitate the moſt approved characters. Rules, and method, which are uſeful, and natural to one man, are encumbrances to another: and we all do beſt when we cultivate our own peculiar talent, taking hints from every body, and not attempting exact conformity to any one. But faith, and prayer, and truth, and righteouſneſs, the whole armour of God; and the mind, that was in Chriſt, are equally needful for all the ſervants of the Lord, whatever be their particular work, or method of doing it. The curſes of wicked men are no more to be feared, than their power; they will at length rebound upon themſelves, and proud ſelf-confidence will ſurely be confounded. But they, who truſt in the Lord, and ſimply ſeek his glory, ſhall never be aſhamed: in their hands the feebleſt means ſhall be ſucceſsful, and before them the moſt formidable oppoſition ſhall come to nothing: and the event of every conflict of the church of God againſt her enemies, ſhall evince, "that the Lord ſaveth not with "ſword, and ſpear; for the battle is the Lord's, and he "will give it into our hands:" and this ſhall tend to make known his glory throughout the earth. But human favour is of ſmall value, when men ſo ſoon forget thoſe, who have been moſt uſeful to them: they alone are happy, who enjoy his favour, who never forgets, or forſakes the meaneſt of his true people. Finally in David's conflict with, and victory over the champion of the Philiſtines, we may ſee a faint ſhadow of the Redeemer's victory over ſatan, who for ages had defied the armies of the living God, and from the fall of Adam, to his coming, found no one able in his own ſtrength to ſtand againſt him: but Jeſus overcame him upon his own ground, and foiled him with his own weapons; and ſtill goes on by his deſpiſed goſpel to purſue the victory; whilſt all the hoſts of the true Iſrael join in, and ſhare the benefits of his conqueſts, and ſhall ere long meet in heaven to celebrate his triumphs with everlaſting ſongs of praiſe.

NOTES.

CHAP. XVIII.] V. 1. Was knit, &c.] The modeſty, piety, and faith of David were ſo congenial to the diſpoſition of Jonathan, that they attracted his moſt cordial eſteem, and affection: ſo that they continued thenceforth united in the moſt endeared friendſhip, notwithſtanding Saul's envy, and malice, and Jonathan's knowledge that David was anointed to be king, to his excluſion. Their friendſhip was the effect of that grace of God, which produces in all true believers "one heart, and ſoul," forms them of the ſame judgment and diſpoſition, and cauſes them to delight in each other's converſe, and comfort.

V. 2. And Saul took, &c] Saul did not at firſt know David, but he ſoon recollected him: heretofore he had frequently returned from Saul to his paſtoral employments, but from this time he returned no more to them.

V. 3, 4.] Jonathan, by ſtripping off his own clothes, and armour, and giving them to David, intended to ratify the covenant betwixt them, as well as to teſtify his affection, and equip him according to his character, and ſtation: David then put off the ſhepherd, and put on the courtier, and ſoldier. Thus the Son of God laid aſide for a ſeaſon that was upon him, and gave it to David, and his garments, even to his ſword, and to his bow, and to his girdle.

5 And David went out whitherſoever Saul ſent him, and behaved himſelf wiſely: and Saul ſet him over the men of war; and he was accepted in the ſight of all the people, and alſo in the ſight of Saul's ſervants.

6 And it came to paſs, as they came, when David was returned from the ſlaughter of the Philiſtine, that the women came out of all the cities of Iſrael, ſinging and dancing, to meet king Saul, with tabrets, with joy, and with inſtruments of muſick.

7 And the women anſwered one another as they played, and ſaid, Saul hath ſlain his thouſands, and David his ten thouſands.

8 And Saul was very wroth, and the ſaying diſpleaſed him; and he ſaid, They have aſcribed unto David ten thouſands and to me they have aſcribed but thouſands: and what can he have more but the kingdom?

9 And Saul eyed David from that day and forward.

10 And it came to paſs on the morrow, that the evil ſpirit from God came upon Saul, and he propheſied in the midſt of the houſe; and David played with his hand, as at other times: and there was a javelin in Saul's hand.

11 And Saul caſt the javelin; for he ſaid, I will ſmite David even to the wall with it. And David avoided out of his preſence twice.

12 And Saul was afraid of David, becauſe the LORD was with him, and was departed from Saul.

13 Therefore Saul removed him from him, and made him his captain over a thouſand; and he went out and came in before the people.

14 And David behaved himſelf wiſely in all his ways; and the LORD was with him.

15 Wherefore when Saul ſaw that he behaved himſelf very wiſely, he was afraid of him.

16 But all Iſrael and Judah loved David, becauſe he went out and came in before them.

17 And Saul ſaid to David, Behold, my elder daughter Merab, her will I give thee to wife; only be thou valiant for me, and fight the LORD's battles: for Saul ſaid, Let not mine hand be upon him, but let the hand of the Philiſtines be upon him.

his robes of Divine majeſty, to appear in the mean attire of a ſervant; that he might clothe us in his robes of righteouſneſs, ſalvation, and glory, according to the tenor of the everlaſting covenant, to which he invites ſinners to accede.

V. 6—9.] Some time after the death of Goliath, and the conſequent rout of the Philiſtines, Saul, and perhaps David with him, went to ſeveral of the cities of Iſrael: and wherever they came, the women, according to the cuſtom of the times, went forth to meet them with inſtruments of muſic, and ſinging an ode, that had been compoſed on the occaſion. In this no injuſtice was done, nor any affront offered to Saul: yet the wording of it was very imprudent, and might have given umbrage to a mind leſs propenſe to envy, and ſuſpicion, than Saul's was. Accordingly he was greatly diſpleaſed; and perceiving how David increaſed, whilſt he decreaſed, in popularity, he concluded that God was about "to rend the kingdom from him, and "to give it to a neighbour of his, who was better than he:" perhaps he was alſo informed that Samuel had anointed David, and favoured his intereſt. So that he began to look upon him with a jealous, and malignant eye.

V. 10. That the evil ſpirit, &c.] When Saul indulged malevolence he "gave place to the devil." and provoked the Lord to permit the evil ſpirit again to trouble him. Being under a ſupernatural influence, he behaved in ſome reſpects, as the prophets did, when the Spirit of inſpiration came upon them; but from a contrary cauſe: but whether he aſſumed this appearance to cloke his attempt of murdering David; or whether ſatan wrought upon him till he was thus carried away, is not certain: however he was influenced by deliberate malice when he threw the javelin at David, and fully intended to have murdered him. Perhaps David, though conſcious of his innocence, and ſatisfied that he was doing his duty, and under God's protection, he would not leave his place, yet ſuſpected ſome miſchief from the javelin in Saul's hand, and thus was enabled to avoid the blow. But whether the javelin was thrown twice ſucceſſively at this time; or once now, and once on another occaſion, doth not certainly appear: David however, being providentially preſerved, expreſſed no reſentment, though probably he became more circumſpect.

V. 12—16.] Saul was conſcious that the Lord was departed from him, and that his former capacity for public buſineſs was withdrawn: and he perceived that the Lord had given David peculiar wiſdom, and was with him to proſper all his undertakings; and this increaſed the diſquietude of his malevolent mind, and his fear of David, as a prevailing rival. Under pretence of advancing him, he therefore removed him from his preſence, which ſerved to ingratiate him with the people, by affording him the opportunity of leading them forth to victory over their enemies.

V. 17. Let not mine hand, &c.] Saul appears to have been influenced in this determination by the fear of exciting a revolt among the people, rather than by the fear of God,

18 And

18 And David said unto Saul, Who am I? and what is my life, or my father's family in Israel, that I should be son-in-law to the king?

19 But it came to pass, at the time when Merab, Saul's daughter, should have been given to David, that she was given unto Adriel the Meholathite to wife.

20 And Michal, Saul's daughter, loved David: and they told Saul, and the thing pleased him.

21 And Saul said, I will give him her, that she may be a snare to him, and that the hand of the Philistines may be against him. Wherefore Saul said to David, Thou shalt this day be my son-in-law in the one of the twain.

22 And Saul commanded his servants, saying, Commune with David secretly, and say, Behold the king hath delight in thee, and all his servants love thee: now therefore be the king's son-in-law.

23 And Saul's servants spake those words in the ears of David. And David said, Seemeth it to you a light thing to be a king's son-in-law, seeing that I am a poor man, and lightly esteemed?

24 And the servants of Saul told him, saying, On this manner spake David.

25 And Saul said, Thus shall ye say to David, The king desireth not any dowry, but an hundred foreskins of the Philistines, to be avenged of the king's enemies. But Saul thought to make David fall by the hand of the Philistines.

26 And when his servants told David these words, it pleased David well to be the king's son-in-law: and the days were not expired.

27 Wherefore David arose, and went, he and his men, and slew of the Philistines two hundred men; and David brought their foreskins, and they gave them in full tale to the king, that he might be the king's son-in-law. And Saul gave him Michal his daughter to wife.

28 And Saul saw and knew that the LORD was with David, and that Michal, Saul's daughter, loved him.

29 And Saul was yet the more afraid of David; and Saul became David's enemy continually.

30 Then the princes of the Philistines went forth: and it came to pass, after they went forth, that David behaved himself more wisely than all the servants of Saul; so that his name was much set by.

or any reluctance to so horrible a crime. He was engaged by promise to give his daughter to David; but he had delayed, and David was willing to dispense with the engagement. However malice at length prompted him to propose it to David, that he might excite him to venture his life more freely, in order to be accounted worthy of such an honour: but when his design proved abortive, he affronted him in the grossest manner, by giving his daughter to another man: yet David expressed no resentment!

V. 23—26.] David would doubtless suspect some invidious design in this proposal also; but he cautiously avoided mentioning the slight, which had been put upon him; and waved the matter upon the ground of his own poverty, and inferiority; (though his original was not much inferior to Saul's.) But when, instead of dowry, according to the custom of those times, an hundred foreskins of the Philistines were required, he would not seem backward to any perilous service; and therefore in the short time allowed him, he went forth, and returned with twice as many, as were prescribed.

V. 28—30.] Michal's affection for David, his prudent conduct in another incursion of the Philistines, and his increasing reputation, appeared to Saul's distempered mind to forebode David's advancement to, and his own expulsion from the kingdom.

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.

True religion teacheth us to rejoice in, and to love real excellency, though it rival and eclipse our own reputation: and to delight in the society of those, whom the Lord loves, and honours, who bear his image, and are zealous for his glory, without respect to inferiority of station, or selfish considerations. This is that union of souls resulting from participation of the Spirit of Jesus Christ, which prepares men for filling up their several stations in the church of God, in harmony, sympathy, and love, as the several members do in the natural body: and which being perfected in heaven, will for ever exclude envy, and discontent, and render the felicity of each favoured inhabitant an accession to the joy of all the rest. But how different is the nature of fallen man! When the Lord is provoked to leave us, and satan is permitted to foment our natural evil propensities, we become capable of envying and hating those especially, who are most amiable, and have done the most to serve us, and with malignity proportioned to their meekness and wisdom: the commendation bestowed upon them will be considered as an injury, and reproach to us; and even the peculiar favour of God for them will enhance malice, and incite to revenge; (Gen. c. iv. v. 4—8.) Thus men imitate and gratify satan's malevolence; whilst themselves are tortured with continued terrors

Saul and his messengers, seized with the spirit of prophecy, and prevented from taking David, v. 19—24.

AND Saul spake to Jonathan his son, and to all his servants, that they should kill David.

2 But Jonathan, Saul's son, delighted much in David: and Jonathan told David, saying, Saul my father seeketh to kill thee. Now therefore, I pray thee, take heed to thyself until the morning, and abide in a secret place, and hide thyself:

3 And I will go out and stand beside my father in the field where thou art, and I will commune with my father of thee; and what I see that I will tell thee.

4 And Jonathan spake good of David unto Saul his father, and said unto him, Let not the king sin against his servant, against David; because he hath not sinned against thee, and because his works have been to thee-ward very good.

5 For he did put his life in his hand, and slew the Philistine, and the LORD wrought a great salvation for all Israel: thou sawest it, and didst rejoice; wherefore then wilt thou sin against innocent blood, to slay David without a cause?

6 And Saul hearkened unto the voice of Jonathan: and Saul sware, As the LORD liveth, he shall not be slain.

7 And Jonathan called David, and Jonathan shewed him all those things: and Jonathan brought David to Saul, and he was in his presence as in times past.

8 And there was war again: and David went out and fought with the Philistines, and slew them with a great slaughter: and they fled from him.

9 And the evil spirit from the LORD was upon Saul as he sat in his house with his jaand suspicions, and exposed to temptations to every horrid crime, whereby they bring upon themselves swift destruction. If we would not be given up to such dreadful excesses, let us watch, and pray against the first risings of these dire passions. On the other hand we must be prepared for the effects of them, as they prevail in the minds of others: for every great, and good work a man must expect to be envied of his neighbour: no distinction, or preeminence can be so unexceptionably obtained, or possessed, but it will expose a man to slander, and malice, and perhaps to their most treacherous, and fatal consequences. But such trials are very useful to those, who love God; they serve as a counterpoise to their honour, and commendation, and to check the growth of pride, and attachment to the world: they exercise them to faith, patience, meekness, and communion with God: they give them a fair opportunity of exemplifying the amiable nature, and tendency of true godliness, by acting with wisdom, and propriety in such difficult circumstances: they give them increasing experience of the Lord's faithfulness, in restraining their enemies, raising them up friends, and affording them his gracious protection: and they both prepare them for, and open their way to those stations, in which they are to be employed; for modest merit will shine forth with double lustre in due time. But humility, industry, faithfulness, silence under injuries, and a backwardness to seek great things for ourselves, are requisite to safety, and comfort in public scenes of life; and retired stations are vastly more favourable to our own inward peace. Nay our lavish commendations of those, whom we love and admire, in such a world as this, often proves a real injury: and in all cases every thing should be avoided which can excite envy, or opposition, except the performance of our duty to God and man. But if the Lord be with us, and we have the consolations of his Spirit, we shall be happy in any situation: committing our souls, and bodies, our characters, and interests, our families, and connexions, our way, and our work into his Almighty hand: he will bring all that to pass, which is good for us; and carry us safe through to that blessed world, where treachery, envy, and malice find no admission, but perfect love will prevail for evermore.

NOTES.

CHAP. XIX.] V. 3. Where thou art, &c.] Some spot, where Saul commonly walked, was pitched upon, that David being there concealed, might have the fullest evidence of Jonathan's fidelity and affection; and all the information, which he could procure him.

V. 6. And Saul sware, &c.] Saul was for the present impressed by Jonathan's calm, and forcible arguments; and sware that David should not be slain, probably meaning sincerely: but his convictions wore off, and his malice revived, and he was too much accustomed to swear, duly to reverence an oath.

V. 7—9. And he was, &c.] David did not much confide in Saul's assurances; but he was willing to keep in the way of his duty, and to put his trust in God. Though his valour, and success were the known causes of Saul's enmity; yet he was willing to fight against the Philistines, and to expose himself to their swords, and to Saul's invelin in his hand: and David played with his hand.

10 And Saul ſought to ſmite David even to the wall with the javelin; but he ſlipped away out of Saul's preſence, and he ſmote the javelin into the wall: and David fled, and eſcaped that night.

11 Saul alſo ſent meſſengers unto David's houſe to watch him, and to ſlay him in the morning: and Michal, David's wife, told him, ſaying, If thou ſave not thy life to-night, to-morrow thou ſhalt be ſlain.

12 So Michal let David down through a window: and he went, and fled, and eſcaped.

13 And Michal took an image, and laid it in the bed, and put a pillow of goats hair for his bolſter, and covered it with a cloth.

14 And when Saul ſent meſſengers to take David, ſhe ſaid, He is ſick.

15 And Saul ſent the meſſengers again to ſee David, ſaying, Bring him up to me in the bed, that I may ſlay him.

16 And when the meſſengers were come in, behold, there was an image in the bed, with a pillow of goats hair for his bolſter.

17 And Saul ſaid unto Michal, Why haſt thou deceived me ſo, and ſent away mine enemy, that he is eſcaped? And Michal anſwered Saul, He ſaid unto me, Let me go; why ſhould I kill thee?

18 So David fled, and eſcaped, and came to Samuel to Ramah, and told him all that Saul had done to him: and he and Samuel went and dwelt in Naioth.

19 And it was told Saul, ſaying, Behold, David is at Naioth in Ramah.

20 And Saul ſent meſſengers to take David: and when they ſaw the company of the prophets propheſying, and Samuel ſtanding as appointed over them, the Spirit of God was upon the meſſengers of Saul, and they alſo propheſied.

21 And when it was told Saul, he ſent other meſſengers, and they propheſied likewiſe. And Saul ſent meſſengers again the third time, and they propheſied alſo.

22 Then went he alſo to Ramah, and came to a great well that is in Sechu: and he aſked, and ſaid, Where are Samuel and David? And one ſaid, Behold, they be at Naioth in Ramah.

23 And he went thither to Naioth in Ramah: and the Spirit of God was upon him alſo, and he went on and propheſied, until he came to Naioth in Ramah.

24 And he ſtripped off his clothes alſo, and propheſied before Samuel in like manner, and lay down naked all that day, and all that night. Wherefore they ſay, Is Saul alſo among the the prophets?

creaſed envy on that account: nor did he decline playing upon the harp before him, though he ſaw the javelin in his hand, and had before ſo narrowly eſcaped!

V. 11. In the morning, &c.] Leſt David ſhould eſcape, if they entered in the night, the meſſengers were employed to watch till the morning, that he went not out of his houſe; and were then ordered to go, to apprehend, and bring him to Saul that he might ſlay him. By this means an opportunity was afforded David of eſcaping. On this occaſion he penned the fifty-ninth Pſalm.

V. 11—17.] Michal's fidelity to her huſband was commendable: if the caſe had been more doubtful, it would have been her duty to ſide with him againſt her father, whilſt no harm was intended him; but David only aimed to preſerve his life from the unjuſt, and ungrateful malice of Saul. Her ſtratagem to gain time, till David was got to a diſtance, was allowable: but her direct falſhood had not even the plea of neceſſity to excuſe it; (Note, Joſh. c. ii. v. 4:) and her anſwer was injurious to David's reputation, and manifeſts that notwithſtanding her affection for him, ſhe was not influenced by the ſame Spirit of piety, which had dictated Jonathan's language to Saul. (ver. 4, 5, 6.) The whole account illuſtrates the ſavage cruelty of Saul, and the extreme danger, to which David's life was expoſed.

V. 18. To Samuel, &c.] As the aged prophet had anointed him to be king, he fled to him on this emergency, rather than to his father's houſe; that he might have the ſolace of his counſel, inſtructions, and prayers. Naioth is ſuppoſed to have been the place of the ſeminary of prophets, near Ramah.

V. 23, 24.] Saul being ſeized by the prophetic Spirit before he came to Naioh, ſtripped off his armour, and royal robes, or upper garments; (2 Sam. c. vi. v. 14: 20;) and in an extaſy, during the whole day and night, involuntarily joined in ſpeaking of divine things, or in ſinging hymns of praiſe, without any power of executing tne baſe purpoſe of his journey. After which, finding himſelf baffled, he probably returned home extremely chagrined, without taking any notice of Samuel. This ſecond time of Saul being among the prophets was noted, as more wonderful than the former. (c. x. v. 11.)

AND David fled from Naioth in Ramah, and came and said before Jonathan, What have I done? what is mine iniquity? and what is my sin before thy father, that he seeketh my life?

2 And he said unto him, God forbid; thou shalt not die: behold, my father will do nothing, either great or small, but that he will shew it me; and why should my father hide this thing from me? it is not so.

3 And David sware moreover, and said: Thy father certainly knoweth that I have found grace in thine eyes; and he saith, Let not Jonathan know this, lest he be grieved: but truly, as the LORD liveth, and as thy soul liveth, there is but a step between me and death.

4 Then said Jonathan unto David, Whatsoever thy soul desireth, I will even do it for thee.

5 And David said unto Jonathan, Behold, to-morrow is the new moon, and I should not fail to sit with the king at meat: but let me go, that I may hide myself in the field unto the third day at even.

6 If thy father at all miss me, then say, David earnestly asked leave of me, that he might run to Beth-lehem his city; for there is a yearly sacrifice there for all the family.

tinued respectful, and good behaviour: but envious rage is fomented by excellency of character, and conduct, and is far more dreadful; (Prov. c. xxvii. v. 4.) When rooted malice possesses the heart, murder is speedily conceived; and the prospect of impunity emboldens men to avow the most shameful purposes. Princes are so seldom opposed in their designs; and so few will venture to plead for the objects of their envy, and hatred; that they sometimes conclude all men to be alike selfish, and ready to execute any lucrative schemes of villainy. But that friendship, which is cemented by mutual faith, and piety, will influence those, who feel it's sacred flame, to renounce their highest temporal interests, and venture the displeasure of their superiors, in pleading the cause of injured worth. The evil of causeless malice, of ingratitude, and of persecuting those, whose conduct has been irreproachable, and whose services have been eminent, is so manifest, that a plain statement of truth, and fact, with meek, and serious expostulations, will in such a case often for the time impress their minds, who are most deeply guilty. But resolutions made in consequence of hasty convictions, and without any inward change of disposition, or dependance on the grace of God, seldom produce much good effect: and ungovernable passions easily break through the most solemn oaths, when the fear of God doth not possess the heart. A fresh temptation soon rouses the dormant corruption: and when men indulge malignant passions, they give satan his full advantage, and may be answerable for multiplied murders, without actually perpetating one. The Lord's servants must keep to their place, and duty, though hated for so doing: they must give honour to their earthly superiors, however they behave; and persevere in their endeavours to overcome evil with good. The Lord hath innumerable methods of protecting them in the most imminent dangers: he can preserve them by the kindness of those persons, whose misconduct deserves the most marked disapprobation: he can change the hearts, or tye the hands of their enemies, or shame them for a season out of their malicious purposes. Many a persecutor, by coming amongst God's people, have been seized upon by converting grace, and, like Saul of Tarsus, have professed, and preached the faith, that once they sought to destroy. And many, like King Saul, have for a time been apparently changed, have exercised spiritual gifts, and been numbered among the prophets, whose malice has remained unsubdued, and whose last state hath been worse than the first. Let us then daily seek for renewing grace, which shall be in us a well of water springing up into everlasting life: let us cleave to truth, and holiness with full purpose of heart; and in every danger and trouble seek protection, comfort, and direction, in the ordinances of God, and in the society of his ministers and people: these things will do more to make us happy, than all the splendour, and luxury of a court.

NOTES.

CHAP. V.] XX. 2. It is not so.] Probably whilst Saul was detained at Naioh, David hastily repaired to Jonathan, to confer with him upon the state of his affairs: who was willing to attribute his father's attempts against David to his distemper, or to sudden sallies of passion. After Saul had sworn not to slay David, he had said no more to Jonathan on that subject, though he confided all his other affairs to him; and therefore he could not believe that he had a fixed intention of murdering him.

V. 3. David sware, &c.] He solemnly called God to witness that in criminating Saul, he went not upon doubtful surmises: and that it was as certain in itself, as that the Lord liveth; and to him, as Jonathan could be of his own existence, that a design was formed against his life, which constrained him to renounce Saul's service, and consult his own safety.

V. 5—7.] David suggested this expedient to convince Jonathan of Saul's intentions, and to shew that he was then then be ſure that evil is determined by him.

8 Therefore thou ſhalt deal kindly with thy ſervant; for thou haſt brought thy ſervant into a covenant of the LORD with thee: notwithſtanding, if there be in me iniquity, ſlay me thyſelf; for why ſhouldeſt thou bring me to thy father?

9 And Jonathan ſaid, Far be it from thee: for if I knew certainly that evil were determined by my father to come upon thee, then would not I tell it thee?

10 Then ſaid David to Jonathan, Who ſhall tell me? or what if thy father anſwer thee roughly?

11 And Jonathan ſaid unto David, Come, and let us go out into the field. And they went out both of them into the field.

12 And Jonathan ſaid unto David, O LORD God of Iſrael, when I have ſounded my father about to-morrow any time, or the third day, and, behold, if there be any good toward David, and I then ſend not unto thee, and ſhew it thee;

13 The LORD do ſo, and much more to Jonathan: but if it pleaſe my father to do thee evil, then I will ſhew it thee, and ſend thee away, that thou mayeſt go in peace; and the LORD be with thee, as he hath been with my father.

14 And thou ſhalt not only, while yet I live, ſhew me the kindneſs of the LORD, that I die not;

15 But alſo thou ſhalt not cut off thy kindneſs from my houſe for ever: no, not when the LORD hath cut off the enemies of David every one from the face of the earth.

16 So Jonathan made a covenant with the houſe of David, ſaying, Let the LORD even require it at the hand of David's enemies.

17 And Jonathan cauſed David to ſwear again, becauſe he loved him: for he loved him as he loved his own ſoul.

18 Then Jonathan ſaid to David, To-morrow is the new moon; and thou ſhalt be miſſed, becauſe thy ſeat will be empty.

19 And when thou haſt ſtayed three days, then thou ſhalt go down quickly, and come to the place where thou didſt hide thyſelf when the buſineſs was in hand, and ſhalt remain by the ſtone Ezel.

20 And I will ſhoot three arrows on the ſide thereof, as though I ſhot at a mark.

21 And, behold, I will ſend a lad, ſaying, Go, find out the arrows. If I expreſsly ſay forced into the meaſures, which he afterwards adopted. Saul ſtill regarded the externals of religion, and at the new moons entertained his family, and chief officers at a feaſt upon a ſacrifice. Hitherto David had filled his place there; but on this occaſion he purpoſed to be abſent, to make trial of Saul: for as he was evidently deſtitute of affection for him, if he were very angry, it muſt ariſe from being deprived of an opportunity to do him miſchief. David was probably invited to a family ſacrifice at Bethlehem; the excuſe was ſufficient; and Saul being out of the way, Jonathan was competent to allow his abſence: and he engaged to return on the third day before even, and to lie concealed in an appointed place, to be informed of the reſult.

V. 8. A covenant of the Lord, &c.] That is a covenant ratified in the faith, fear, and love of God, for their mutual encouragement in worſhipping him, and promoting his glory. David ſeems to have conceived ſome jealouſy, leſt Jonathan ſhould warp from his conſtancy: eſpecially leſt the envenomed tongue of ſlander ſhould injure him in his friend's eſteem. "But," ſays he, "if I am guilty of "any great offence, that violates our covenant, ſlay me "thyſelf, but betray me not to thy father." This was finely conceived to touch the tendereſt feelings of the heart of Jonathan.

V. 12, 13.] In ſpeaking to David, Jonathan appealed to the Lord for his ſincerity, and called on him to avenge his perfidy, if he betrayed his friend. It appears that Jonathan knew that Samuel had anointed David, and believed that he would certainly be king: and he had no thoughts of oppoſing the Lord's purpoſe, but rejoiced that ſo pious, and able a perſon was choſen to reign over God's people; and prayed that the Lord might be with him, as he had been with Saul: for, as became a dutiful ſon, he drew a veil over his fathers miſconduct, and only adverted to his former good management and ſucceſs.

V. 14, 15.] It hath been too common in diſputed ſucceſſions for the reigning prince to clear his children's title, by cutting off all competitors: Jonathan therefore prudently propoſed to extend the covenant to their poſterity alſo. He readily renounced all pretenſions to the kingdom, and only deſired that he, and his poſterity might be numbered amongſt David's friends, when all his enemies were deſtroyed. When we conſider David's diſtreſs, Saul's enmity, and Jonathan's proſpects, we can never ſufficiently admire the ſtrength of his faith, and the force of his diſintereſted love! It is obſervable that Jonathan did not deſire that the Lord ſhould require it of David or his poſterity, if any failure took place, "but of the hand of David's "enemies."

unto the lad, Behold the arrows are on this ſide of thee, take them; then come thou: for there is peace to thee, and no hurt, as the LORD liveth.

22 But if I ſay thus unto the young man, Behold, the arrows are beyond thee; go thy way: for the LORD hath ſent thee away.

23 And as touching the matter which thou and I have ſpoken of, behold the LORD be between thee and me for ever.

24 So David hid himſelf in the field: and when the new moon was come, the king ſat him down to eat meat.

25 And the king ſat upon his ſeat, as at other times, even upon a ſeat by the wall: and Jonathan aroſe, and Abner ſat by Saul's ſide, and David's place was empty.

26 Nevertheleſs Saul ſpake not any thing that day: for he thought, Something hath befallen him, he is not clean; ſurely he is not clean.

27 And it came to paſs on the morrow, which was the ſecond day of the month, that David's place was empty; and Saul ſaid unto Jonathan his ſon, Wherefore cometh not the ſon of Jeſſe to meat, neither yeſterday nor to-day?

28 And Jonathan anſwered Saul, David earneſtly aſked leave of me to go to Bethlehem:

29 And he ſaid, Let me go, I pray thee; for our family hath a ſacrifice in the city, and my brother he hath commanded me to be there; and now, if I have found favour in thine eyes, let me get away, I pray thee, and ſee my brethren: therefore he cometh not unto the king's table.

30 Then Saul's anger was kindled againſt Jonathan, and he ſaid unto him, Thou ſon of the perverſe rebellious woman, do not I know that thou haſt choſen the ſon of Jeſſe to thine own confuſion, and unto the confuſion of thy mother's nakedneſs?

31 For as long as the ſon of Jeſſe liveth upon the ground, thou ſhalt not be eſtabliſhed, nor thy kingdom: wherefore now ſend and fetch him unto me, for he ſhall ſurely die.

32 And Jonathan anſwered Saul his father, and ſaid unto him, Wherefore ſhall he be ſlain? what hath he done?

33 And Saul caſt a javelin at him to ſmite him; whereby Jonathan knew that it was determined of his father to ſlay David.

34 So Jonathan aroſe from the table in fierce anger, and did eat no meat the ſecond day of the month: for he was grieved for David, becauſe his father had done him ſhame.

35 And it came to paſs in the morning, that Jonathan went out into the field, at the time appointed with David, and a little lad with him.

36 And he ſaid unto his lad, Run, find out now the arrows which I ſhoot. And as the lad ran, he ſhot an arrow beyond him.

37 And when the lad was come to the place of the arrow which Jonathan had ſhot, Jonathan cried after the lad, and ſaid, is not the arrow beyond thee?

38 And Jonathan cried after the lad, Make ſpeed, haſte, ſtay not. And Jona-

V. 22. The Lord hath ſent, &c.] In caſe Jonathan could not ſpeak with David, this was the ſignal, that his death was determined; and that the Lord required him to provide for his ſafety.

V. 26. He is not clean.] Saul did not aſcribe David's abſence to a criminal cauſe: but he might rather have ſuſpected that fear of his murderous rage had kept him away, than any ceremonial uncleanneſs!

V. 30. Thou ſon, &c.] Or "Thou ſon of perverſe "rebellion." Without entering into any critical diſcuſſion of the words of this verſe, they may be underſtood to contain the moſt ſcurrilous abuſe, which the language afforded, and as coarſe as any made uſe of in modern times: eſpecially implying that Jonathan proved himſelf not to be his ſon, and diſgraced his mother, by taking David's part againſt him. Conſidering Saul's rank, and Jonathan's relation to him, and his eminent ſervices, and excellent character, and the public and ſacred occaſion, we muſt condemn this ſpeech, as a moſt ſhameful indulgence of furious paſſion.

V. 31.] Probably Saul knew that David had been anointed by the ſame authority with himſelf: yet he oppoſed him with all his might, and vainly hoped to exclude him from the kingdom, and to put him to death. His unbelief and enmity formed a ſtriking contraſt to Jonathan's faith and love. (Matt. c. ii. v. 4—16.)

V. 32, 33.] When Jonathan before reaſoned with Saul, he was reduced to a better temper; but now he would not hearken to a word: and though, in order to induce Jonathan's concurrence in killing David, he pretended a great zeal for his eſtabliſhment in the kingdom; yet when his purpoſes were oppoſed, he furiouſly attempted to kill him alſo.

than's lad gathered up the arrows, and came to his master.

39 But the lad knew not any thing: only Jonathan and David knew the matter.

40 And Jonathan gave his artillery unto his lad, and said unto him, Go, carry them to the city.

41 And as soon as the lad was gone, David arose out of a place toward the south, and fell on his face to the ground, and bowed himself three times: and they kissed one another, and wept one with another, until David exceeded.

42 And Jonathan said to David, Go in peace, for as much as we have sworn both of us in the name of the LORD, saying, The LORD be between me and thee, and between my seed and thy seed for ever. And he arose and departed: and Jonathan went into the city.

V. 40—42. His artillery, &c.] His bow, quiver, and arrows, &c. Finding the coast clear Jonathan seized the opportunity of one more interview with his beloved friend; who, in his conduct on this occasion, united all the respect and honour due to his rank, with the most endeared affection, and glowing gratitude, so that his sorrow even exceeded Jonathan's. Nothing can be conceived more pathetic than this their parting; and we find not that they met more than once afterwards in this world.

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.

Next to the consolations of true religion, nothing is more supporting to an afflicted mind, than the converse of a pious friend: and it is most desirable to obviate misconstructions of our conduct, by those, whom we love, and esteem; lest we should lose the comfort of their friendship, and should throw temptations in their way. Though it is painful to suffer for well doing, yet it is far better than to suffer for evil doing; for a clear conscience, an unblemished reputation, and the favour of God are vast advantages in trying circumstances. Friendly, and pious persons are always backward to suspect others of deep malignity, but wish to impute their misconduct, where undeniable, to other causes: and pious children will veil the faults of their parents, as far as consists with other duties; and speak as favourably of them, as truth permits. But it is shameful when parents deliberately devise wickedness, which they conceal from their children, lest they should in them meet with obstacles to their criminal intentions. Evident danger from the malice of men renders it allowable for us to quit those places, where we were employed, and to take proper measures for self-preservation: yet this ought, if possible, to be so conducted, that all impartial persons may perceive the necessity, and "that the Lord hath sent us away." At sometimes it appears to us "that there is but a step between "us and death:" at all times we are sensible that it may be so, and should be expecting, and preparing for that event; "for as sure as the Lord liveth, and our souls now "live" in the body, we shall ere long remove into the eternal world. But let dangers appear ever so eminent, we cannot die, till the purpose of God concerning us be accomplished; and, if we are believers, until "we have "served our generation according to his will." Every expedient should be tried to prevent open quarrels, and every appearance of evil ought to be guarded against: and by little things a certain judgment may be formed of men's dispositions, and intentions. True friendship, grounded upon the covenant of the Lord, will require nothing unreasonable, and refuse nothing equitable: yet it is apt to be jealous, when fidelity is put to severe trials, and there is danger lest slander and prejudice should interrupt its course. But in reality it rests upon an immoveable basis, and possesses inconceivable force: it is stronger than death, and able to silence the voice of emulation, ambition, and undue self-love, and relative affection. Who then can comprehend the love of Jesus, who gave himself a sacrifice unto God for us rebellious, and polluted sinners! and what ought to be the force, and effects of our love to him, and his cause and people! The believer, being acquainted with the purpose of the father respecting him, willingly submits to his authority, rejoices in the prospect of his glory, and cries Hosanna to the Son of David, who cometh in the name of the Lord. Greatly desiring to have the covenant of peace ratified with the Saviour, and to love him as his own soul, he will ask and receive repeated confirmations of it, and will readily perform whatever Jesus his friend commandeth: and for his sake he will have a cordial love for those, who seek his glory, and bear his image. Assured that all his enemies will perish, he will desire the same blessings for his posterity, and his relations: and he will pray for, and weep over such of them, as reject the counsel of God against themselves: but he must separate from them, and join interests with those, whom they despise and hate.—The formal professor will sometimes be more constant at divine ordinances, than the true believer: for discomposure of mind will sometimes prevent his attendance; whilst the purpose, or the practice of the vilest crimes interrupt not those, who trust in the mere external observance. When envious and angry passions are indulged, men are pushed on by satan into the most indecent excesses, without respect even to character, or the most sacred obligations: nor are they aware one moment of the outrages, which they shall commit the next. Let us then fear giving place to the devil in the smallest degree. Under great provocations the meekest cannot always refrain from anger; but when its emotions are felt, our wisdom is to withdraw in silence; and it is generous to be more grieved for our insulted friends than for ourselves. Every comfort on earth is counterpoised with some sorrow; and the dearest friends must experience the most painful separations. But Christians need not sorrow as men without hope; for being one with Christ, they are one with each other; and will meet in his presence ere long to part no more, where all tears shall be wiped from their eyes.

THEN

THEN came David to Nob, to Ahimelech the prieſt: and Ahimelech was afraid at the meeting of David, and ſaid unto him, Why art thou alone, and no man with thee?

2 And David ſaid unto Ahimelech the prieſt, The king hath commanded me a buſineſs, and hath ſaid unto me, Let no man know any thing of the buſineſs whereabout I ſend thee, and what I have commanded thee: and I have appointed my ſervants to ſuch and ſuch a place.

3 Now therefore what is under thine hand? give me five loaves of bread in mine hand, or what there is preſent.

4 And the prieſt anſwered David, and ſaid, There is no common bread under mine hand, but there is hallowed bread; if the young men have kept themſelves at leaſt from women,

5 And David anſwered the prieſt, and ſaid unto him, Of a truth women have been kept from us about theſe three days, ſince I came out, and the veſſels of the young men are holy, and the bread is in a manner common, yea, though it were ſanctified this day in the veſſel.

6 So the prieſt gave him hallowed bread: for there was no bread there but the ſhew-bread, that was taken from before the LORD, to put hot bread in the day when it was taken away.

7 Now a certain man of the ſervants of Saul was there that day, detained before the LORD; and his name was Doeg, an Edomite, the chiefeſt of the herdmen that belonged to Saul.

8 And David ſaid unto Ahimelech, And is there not here under thine hand ſpear or ſword? for I have neither brought my ſword nor my weapons with me, becauſe the king's buſineſs required haſte.

9 And the prieſt ſaid, The ſword of Goliath the Philiſtine, whom thou ſleweſt in the valley of Elah, behold, it is here wrapped in a cloth behind the ephod: if thou wilt take that, take it: for there is no other ſave that here. And David ſaid, There is none like that; give it me.

10 And David aroſe, and fled that day for fear of Saul, and went to Achiſh the king of Gath.

11 And the ſervants of Achiſh ſaid unto him, Is not this David the king of the land? did they not ſing one to another of him in dances, ſaying, Saul hath ſlain his thouſands, and David his ten thouſands?

12 And David laid up theſe words in his heart, and was ſore afraid of Achiſh the king of Gath.

13 And he changed his behaviour before them, and feigned himſelf mad in their hands, and ſcrabbled on the doors of the gate,

NOTES.

CHAP. XXI.] V. 1, 2. To Nob, &c.] The tabernacle on ſome account had been removed from Shiloh to Nob, a city of Benjamin, but the ark ſtill remained at Kirjath-jearim. David went thither to enquire of the Lord by the High Prieſt, as he had been accuſtomed to do; (c. xxii. v. 10—15;) and to take farewel of him, and of the ſanctuary, as he had of Samuel, and of Jonathan. But as he went without a ſuitable retinue, and in apparent diſtreſs, Ahimelech probably ſuſpected a breach betwixt him and Saul, and was afraid to entertain him. This proved a ſnare to David; and leſt he ſhould be betrayed to Saul, or ſent away deſtitute, he framed immediately a groſs falſehood, which cannot be excuſed, and which had fatal conſequences.

V. 3—6. It ſeems wonderful that David ſhould not be able to procure bread for himſelf, and his few attendants: but when Saul's rooted malice was made known, (and ſuch news ſpreads very rapidly,) every one would be afraid, or indiſpoſed to entertain him. However the neceſſity was real, and urgent, and Ahimelech ſuppoſed that they might in this caſe eat of the ſhew-bread, provided they were prepared in the ſame manner, as the Iſraelites had been for receiving the law from mount Sinai; (Exod. c. xix. v. 15. 1 Cor. c. vii. v. 5.) David having therefore ſatisfied him in this reſpect, and aſſured him, that the young men were ceremonially clean, and habitually holy perſons: and having pleaded, that the bread was now in a manner common, as other loaves had been placed upon the table in their ſtead, he gave him thereof, and he did eat. Jeſus Chriſt hath expreſsly vindicated both him, and David in this matter; which proves that the poſitive inſtitutions of religion may be diſpenſed with, when the preſervation of life, or other urgent neceſſity requires it.

V. 7. Detained, &c.] Doeg had been proſelyted to the religion of Iſrael, perhaps to obtain preferment from Saul; and he was at this time performing ſome vow: but as he did not love the ordinances of God, his attendance was conſtrained, and his heart was elſewhere.

V. 8, 9. There is none like that, &c.] It ſeems Goliath's ſword was not ſo large, but David could readily uſe it. And every time he drew it, it would remind him to bleſs and let his ſpittle fall down upon his beard.

14 Then ſaid Achiſh unto his ſervants, Lo, ye ſee the man is mad: wherefore then have ye brought him to me?

15 Have I need of madmen, that ye have brought this fellow to play the madman in my preſence? ſhall this fellow come into my houſe?

2 And every one that was in diſtreſs, and every one that was in debt, and every one that was diſcontented, gathered themſelves unto him; and he became a captain over them: and there were with him about four hundred men.

3 And David went thence to Mizpeh of God for that victory, and to truſt in him to turn the arms of all his enemies againſt themſelves. David muſt have fled with great precipitation, as he came from home without his armour!

V. 10—15.] David expected that Saul would purſue him into every part of the land, and he was not diſpoſed to form a party againſt him. Perhaps Achiſh deemed it politic to draw off ſo able a commander from the ſervice of Saul, and therefore had given him ſome intimations, that he would protect him. But his officers judged otherwiſe: and remembering his victory over Goliath, the praiſes, which he had received, and his relation to Saul; and perhaps having heard, that he had been anointed to be "the king of the land," they deemed it impoſſible to fix him in their intereſt, and expreſſed an intention of putting him to death. This ſo alarmed David, that he feigned himſelf mad, and mimicked the actions of lunatics; which gave Achiſh the opportunity of driving him away, without either employing, or hurting him. This conduct was degrading to David's character, and diſcovered a wavering in his faith, and courage. However he ſoon recovered his confidence, and compoſure, and in theſe circumſtances compoſed both the 34th and 56th Pſalms, which are remarkable for the ſtrength of faith, and fervour of piety contained in them.

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.

When a favourite in earthly courts falls, it is commonly very rapidly: for out of fickleneſs, envy, malice, ambition, or fear, almoſt every one will deſert, or oppoſe him, without regarding the moſt unſullied reputation, eminent public ſervices, or perſonal obligations. It is therefore better to truſt in the Lord, than to put any confidence in princes. "Oppreſſion maketh even a wiſe man mad;" and few conduct themſelves in extreme difficulties, without taking ſome manifeſtly falſe ſtep: we ſhould therefore watch, and pray, that we enter not into temptation; and that the ſtrength of faith in God may overcome the fear of man. Ingenious falſhoods often promiſe preſent ſecurity, but they enſure future diſgrace, and diſquietude: and no impoſitions are more fooliſh, and prejudicial, than thoſe, which ſome men practiſe, in adviſing with, and ſeeking comfort from the miniſters of Chriſt. Neceſſity will juſtify us in neglecting the rituals of religion: but our attendance on holy things, ſhould be in holineſs of body, and ſoul, and with a mind as abſtracted from all earthly objects as poſſible. The true believer is glad to go to the courts of the Lord, loth to quit them, and mourns when confined from them: but the time-ſerving hypocrite is dragged to, and detained in God's ſervice, from ſecular motives, and is often forming ſchemes of wickedneſs, when he ſeems to be worſhipping God! What wonder then that his ſacrifice is an abomination to the Lord? The remembrance of former mercies not only revives gratitude, but inſpires freſh confidence, and courage: and the word of God is that ſword of the Spirit, concerning which in all temptations, and conflicts, we may well ſay, "there is "none like it." In this world we muſt paſs from one danger to another, and meet with terror where we ſeek ſecurity: and thoſe very honours, of which men are ambitious, expoſe them to manifold diſadvantages, and perils: nor can we expect our ſituation to be better, whilſt the beſt of characters are ſo inconſiſtent, and defective. But we may truſt in the Lord at all times; he will ſupply our wants, and not forſake us, notwithſtanding our infirmities: he will not leave the lives of his people in the hands of their enemies, nor their ſouls in diſconſolation: and the more ſimply we depend on, and obey him, the more comfortably and ſurely we ſhall walk through this troubleſome world, to that reſt, which is reſerved for the people of God.

NOTES.

CHAP. XXII.] V. 1—2.] David, unable to ſecure himſelf by flight, and none venturing to harbour him, hid himſelf in a cave, (Pſalm cxlii.) Thither his relations reſorted to him for protection, and to afford him aſſiſtance: along with them alſo came a number of perſons of broken fortunes, and unſettled minds, of whom he formed a ſmall army: but they acted entirely upon the defenſive, and were protectors of the country: and probably David's inſtructions, devotions, and example produced a great change in their temper, and behaviour.

V. 3. The king of Moab, &c.] (Note, Jud. c. xi. v. 11.) This prince, being favourable to David, he there ſecured a quiet retreat for his aged parents.

Moab:

Moab: and he said unto the king of Moab, Let my father and my mother, I pray thee, come forth, and be with you, till I know what God will do for me.

4 And he brought them before the king of Moab: and they dwelt with him all the while that David was in the hold.

5 And the prophet Gad said unto David, Abide not in the hold; depart, and get thee into the land of Judah. Then David departed, and came into the forest of Hareth.

6 When Saul heard that David was discovered, and the men that were with him, (now Saul abode in Gibeah under a tree in Ramah, having his spear in his hand, and all his servants were standing about him;)

7 Then Saul said unto his servants that stood about him, Hear now, ye Benjamites; Will the son of Jesse give every one of you fields and vineyards, and make you all captains of thousands, and captains of hundreds;

8 That all of you have conspired against me, and there is none that sheweth me that my son hath made a league with the son of Jesse, and there is none of you that is sorry for me, or sheweth unto me that my son hath stirred up my servant against me, to lie in wait, as at this day?

9 Then answered Doeg the Edomite, (which was set over the servants of Saul,) and said, I saw the son of Jesse coming to Nob, to Ahimelech the son of Ahitub.

10 And he enquired of the LORD for him, and gave him victuals, and gave him the sword of Goliath the Philistine.

11 Then the king sent to call Ahimelech the priest, the son of Ahitub, and all his father's house, the priests that were in Nob: and they came all of them to the king.

12 And Saul said, Hear now, thou son of Ahitub. And he answered, Here I am, my lord.

13 And Saul said unto him, Why have ye conspired against me, thou and the son of Jesse, in that thou hast given him bread, and a sword, and hast enquired of God for him, that he should rise against me, to lie in wait, as at this day?

14 Then Ahimelech answered the king, and said, and who is so faithful among all thy servants as David, which is the king's son-in-law, and goeth at thy bidding, and is honourable in thine house?

15 Did I then begin to enquire of God for him? be it far from me: let not the king impute any thing unto his servant, nor to all the house of my father: for thy servant knew nothing of all this, less or more.

16 And the king said, Thou shalt surely die, Ahimelech, thou and all thy father's house.

V. 5. The prophet Gad, &c.] Probably he had been under Samuel's tuition. By him God commanded David not to abide in Moab, but to return into the land of Judah, that he might not be alienated from his brethren, nor his men enticed to idolatry; that his faith might be exercised, and increased; and that he still might perform some service to his country.

V. 6. Under a tree, &c.] Saul pitched his tent, or set up his standard upon some eminence, (for so the word Ramah signifies,) near Gibeah: and with a spear in his hand seemed to menace vengeance against all, who did not join him in persecuting David.

V. 7, 8.] This language is very expressive of rage, and jealousy. He took it for granted that David had conspired his death. His pious, amiable, and dutiful son also was accused of being the ringleader in this conspiracy; because he would not assist in, or connive at the murder of an excellent man, whom he greatly loved. Nay the people in general, and his own tribe in particular had conspired against him, and had no compassion on him, and were blind to their own interests: because they were not so furious against David as he was!

V. 9, 10.] There was no reason why Doeg should mention the High Priest's conduct, which he knew did not proceed from malice: and if he must needs mention it, he should have declared how he was imposed upon by David, and that he intended to shew respect to Saul in that very action.

V. 13. Enquired of God, &c.] Saul, almost in direct terms, charged God himself, as counselling a traitor by his High Priest, how to prevail against his sovereign! So rash, and unreasonable is furious anger.

V. 14, 15.] In Ahimelech's ready attendance with all his brethren, and in his answer to Saul, we have the conduct, and language of conscious innocence. David's reputation for fidelity and capacity was established: his near relation, and prompt obedience to Saul, and his honourable services to the public were well known: he had been used to enquire of the Lord for him, as a public person: for his part he meant no harm, knew nothing of what had passed, and abhorred the thought of conspiring against his prince; and therefore trusted he should be honourably acquitted. It is observable that he generously concealed David's imposition, though it tended to exculpate himself.

17 And the king ſaid unto the footmen that ſtood about him, Turn and ſlay the prieſts of the LORD; becauſe their hand alſo is with David, and becauſe they knew when he fled, and did not ſhew it to me. But the ſervants of the king would not put forth their hand to fall upon the prieſts of the LORD.

18 And the king ſaid to Doeg, Turn thou, and fall upon the prieſts. And Doeg the Edomite turned, and he fell upon the prieſts, and ſlew on that day fourſcore and five perſons that did wear a linen ephod.

19 And Nob, the city of the prieſts, ſmote he with the edge of the ſword; both men and women, children and ſucklings, and oxen, and aſſes, and ſheep, with the edge of the ſword.

20 And one of the ſons of Ahimelech the ſon of Ahitub, named Abiathar, eſcaped, and fled after David.

21 And Abiathar ſhewed David that Saul had ſlain the LORD's prieſts.

22 And David ſaid unto Abiathar, I knew it that day, when Doeg the Edomite was there, that he would ſurely tell Saul: I have occaſioned the death of all the perſons of thy father's houſe.

23 Abide thou with me, fear not: for he that ſeeketh my life ſeeketh thy life: but with me thou ſhalt be in ſafeguard.

But Saul was forſaken of God, and given up to ſatan, and his own vile paſſions, and would hearken to nothing, but the ſuggeſtions of revenge, and jealouſy.

V. 17. But the ſervants, &c.] They might expect on this refuſal to feel the weight of the king's reſentment: yet the command was ſo barbarous, and impious, that they would not obey it.

V. 18. That did wear, &c.] That is, officiating prieſts, who probably were now dreſſed in their ſacerdotal veſtments. Theſe, to the number of eighty-five, this Edomite with his own hands ſlew at once, without provocation, or oppoſition! And both Saul and Doeg ſeem to have gloried, in taking this vengeance on the prieſts of the Lord, as they knew that they favoured the cauſe of David; (Pſalm lii.) Yet this horrible maſſacre was an accompliſhment of the ſentence denounced againſt the houſe of Eli. (c. ii. 31—33. c. iii. 12—14.)

V. 19. And Nob, &c.] Nob was not originally allotted to the prieſts, but on ſome account had ſince been given them: and Doeg, doubtleſs by Saul's authority, who was not ſatisfied with the blood of God's prieſts, treated it, and all therein, as the devoted enemies of God.

V. 22. I knew it, &c.] Upon recollection David feared this conſequence from Doeg's known character. His feelings muſt have been exceeding painful, when he conſidered his falſhood as one probable occaſion of this fatal cataſtrophe! By this event, ſo terrible to the prieſts, and lamentable to Iſrael, David obtained the preſence of the High Prieſt, which afterwards proved a comfort to him.

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.

Oppreſſion often forces men into meaſures, to which they were entirely averſe, and deprives the community of the ſervices of it's moſt uſeful members: yet the Lord will preſerve his people for their appointed work, however they may be hated, and expoſed. He can promote their good by the moſt contemptible, and meaneſt inſtruments: and the Son of David receives all, who come to him, however vile, and miſerable; he changes them all into an holy people, and employs them in his ſervice: and they, who would reign with him, muſt be contented firſt to ſuffer with, and for him. True piety increaſes, and purifies natural affection, in its due ſubordination to the love of God; and teaches men, however occupied, or diſtreſſed, to be reſpectful to, and tender of their aged parents; and to be more ready to meet hardſhip, or danger themſelves, than to expoſe them to it. In all our difficulties we ſhould wait till we know what God will do for us; for our enemies can go no further, than he is pleaſed to permit them: we ſhould therefore guard againſt exceſſive fear; venture readily into any place, whither duty call us; and without yielding to reſentment or deſpondency, perſevere in looking out for opportunities of uſefulneſs. The progreſs of human nature, inſtigated by ſatan's temptations, is from bad to worſe, and with increaſing rapidity. Conſcience, fear, and ſhame give leſs, and leſs reſiſtance, and every paſſion grows more and more exorbitant. Envy, malice, and jealouſy torment the ſoul with ideal miſeries: the wretch, who is under their dominion ſuſpects every one of enmity, and treachery; breaks through all the bonds of honour, and conſcience; and is hurried on to the moſt furious, and bloody revenges. Unhappy is it for mankind when ſuch perſons poſſeſs unlimited authority: the moſt ſacred character, unſhaken fidelity, conſcious innocency, unblemiſhed reputation, convincing arguments, reſpectful aſſurances will form no ſecurity to any one, who is become obnoxious to them: the moſt harmleſs, and friendly actions become conſtructive treaſon, and "thou ſhalt ſurely "die," ſilences every plea: nay the death of one, or of a few ſeems a paltry revenge to a proud tyrant: (Eſther c. iii. v. 6;) ſacrifices large as his rage, and power may be expected, for nothing elſe can appeaſe his fury. And if ſome be found willing to venture his indignation, rather than abet his cruelty, and impiety; others will be glad to purchaſe preferment at any price. Let us then bleſs God for a mild, equitable, and limited government, and ſtudy to fill up our places in ſociety ſuitable to our peculiar advantages: may the Lord continue them to our remoteſt poſterity, and extend the ſame to all the nations of the earth! The Lord often employs companions in diſtreſs to comfort and protect each other; and being expoſed to the ſame dangers, and enemies, they ſhould combine for their mutual defence. Thus believers, being hated for Chriſt's ſake, find ſafety under his protection, and ought to lay

THEN they told David, ſaying, Behold, the Philiſtines fight againſt Keilah, and they rob the threſhing-floors.

2 Therefore David enquired of the LORD, ſaying, Shall I go and ſmite theſe Philiſtines? And the LORD ſaid unto David, Go and ſmite the Philiſtines, and ſave Keilah.

3 And David's men ſaid unto him, Behold, we be afraid here in Judah: how much more then if we come to Keilah againſt the armies of the Philiſtines?

4 Then David enquired of the LORD yet again. And the LORD anſwered him and ſaid, Ariſe, go down to Keilah; for I will deliver the Philiſtines into thine hand.

5 So David and his men went to Keilah, and fought with the Philiſtines, and brought away their cattle, and ſmote them with a great ſlaughter. So David ſaved the inhabitants of Keilah.

6 And it came to paſs, when Abiathar the ſon of Ahimelech fled to David to Keilah, that he came down with an ephod.

7 And it was told Saul that David was come to Keilah. And Saul ſaid, God hath delivered him into mine hand; for he is ſhut in, by entering into a town that hath gates and bars.

8 And Saul called all the people together to war, to go down to Keilah, to beſiege David and his men.

9 And David knew that Saul ſecretly practiſed miſchief againſt him; and he ſaid to Abiathar the prieſt, Bring hither the ephod.

10 Then ſaid David, O LORD God of Iſrael, thy ſervant hath certainly heard that Saul ſeeketh to come to Keilah, to deſtroy the city for my ſake.

11 Will the men of Keilah deliver me up into his hand? will Saul come down, as thy ſervant hath heard? O LORD God of Iſrael, I beſeech thee, tell thy ſervant. And the LORD ſaid, He will come down.

12 Then ſaid David, Will the men of Keilah deliver me and my men into the hand of Saul? and the LORD ſaid, They will deliver thee up.

13 Then David and his men, which were about ſix hundred, aroſe and departed out of Keilah, and went whitherſoever they could go. And it was told Saul that David was eſcaped from Keilah; and he forbare to go forth.

14 And David abode in the wilderneſs in ſtrong holds, and remained in a mountain in the wilderneſs of Ziph: and Saul ſought aſide all perſonal animoſities, and uſeleſs controverſies, to unite together againſt their common enemies. We may alſo learn from this narration; that needleſsly to report the truth, to the diſadvantage of others, often ſprings from malice, and produces miſchief: that a partial ſtatement of facts is effectual bearing falſe witneſs: that a generous mind is unwilling to repeat the faults of others, even for his own vindication: that it is very painful to a feeling heart to occaſion evil to others, eſpecially by miſconduct: that unexpected bad conſequences may ariſe from our actions, which ſhould warn us to walk circumſpectly: and that we ſhould always be ready for death, which hurries men into eternity before they are aware; "For the wicked "is driven away in his wickedneſs, but the righteous hath "hope in his death!"

NOTES.

CHAP. XXIII.] V. 2. Enquired of the Lord, &c.] David was at this time inſpired as a penman of the holy ſcriptures; yet the Lord ſpake to him by his prophet, and then by the High Prieſt, for the honour of his own inſtitutions. David ſtill conſidered himſelf the protector of the land, and was ready to employ his men in any ſervice, that the Lord was pleaſed to appoint him to.

V. 7, 8. God hath delivered, &c.] Saul, forgetting all the proofs, which he had that the Lord was with David, conſidered this ſlight circumſtance as an evidence that God had delivered him into his hands: as if every fair appearance enſured ſucceſs; or any ſucceſs could ſanctify wickedneſs. "But God delivered him not into his hand," (v. 14.)

V. 9—13.] David perhaps thought that he could defend this fenced city againſt Saul, if the inhabitants would be firm in his intereſts. But as they would fear the ſame dreadful maſſacre, with which Nob had been deſtroyed, he could not confide in their aſſurances: he therefore enquired of God, and was informed that they would purchaſe peace by delivering him up, though perhaps they were not meditating ſuch ingratitude, and treachery. He therefore left the city, to ſecure himſelf from danger, and them from temptation and ſin.

him

him every day; but God delivered him not into his hand.

15 And David saw that Saul was come out to seek his life: and David was in the wilderness of Ziph in a wood.

16 And Jonathan Saul's son arose, and went to David into the wood, and strengthened his hand in God.

17 And he said unto him, Fear not; for the hand of Saul my father shall not find thee: and thou shalt be king over Israel, and I shall be next unto thee: and that also Saul my father knoweth.

18 And they two made a covenant before the LORD. And David abode in the wood, and Jonathan went to his house.

19 Then came up the Ziphites to Saul to Gibeah, saying, Doth not David hide himself with us in strong holds in the wood, in the hill of Hachilah, which is on the south of Jeshimon?

20 Now therefore, O king, come down, according to all the desire of thy soul to come down; and our part shall be to deliver him into the king's hand.

21 And Saul said, Blessed be ye of the LORD; for ye have compassion on me.

22 Go, I pray you, prepare yet, and know and see his place where his haunt is, and who hath seen him there: for it is told me that he dealeth very subtilly.

23 See therefore, and take knowledge of all the lurking places where he hideth himself, and come ye again to me with the certainty, and I will go with you: and it shall come to pass, if he be in the land, that I will search him out throughout all the thousands of Judah.

24 And they arose, and went to Ziph before Saul: but David and his men were in the wilderness of Maon, in the plain on the south of Jeshimon.

25 Saul also and his men went to seek him; and they told David: wherefore he came down into a rock, and abode in the wilderness of Maon. And when Saul heard that, he pursued after David in the wilderness of Maon.

26 And Saul went on this side of the mountain, and David and his men on that side of the mountain: and David made haste to get away for fear of Saul; for Saul and his men compassed David and his men round about to take them.

27 But there came a messenger unto Saul, saying, Haste thee, and come; for the Philistines have invaded the land.

28 Wherefore Saul returned from pursuing after David, and went against the Philistines: therefore they called that place Sela-hammahlekoth.

29 And David went up from thence, and dwelt in strong holds at En-gedi.

V. 16. Strengthened his hand, &c.] Jonathan would doubtless converse with him of the promise, the power, faithfulness, and love of God, and what he had heard, and experienced of them; which strengthened his wavering faith, encouraged his declining hope, and invigorated his dependance on, and submission to God.

V. 17. I shall be next, &c.] This was Jonathan's conjecture, grounded on David's friendship, not upon the word of God, who had appointed things otherwise: Jonathan's chearful resignation would be a sensible satisfaction to David's mind.

V. 21. Blessed, &c.] The Israelites in general were, it seems, averse to Saul's persecution of David, and backward to give him intelligence, or assistance: he therefore deemed himself an unfortunate man, whom none of them pitied; and these treacherous Ziphites were considered as his only friends (Psalm liv.) In the midst of his wickedness Saul affected the language of piety: but whether he deceived himself, or intended to mislead others, is not certain.

V. 26—28.] When Saul's army had nearly surrounded David's company, tidings were brought that the Philistines had invaded the land: and either their invasion was very formidable, or Saul feared the people's resentment, if the Philistines ravaged the country, whilst he was destroying their defender; However he retired, doubtless full of rage, and indignation, and David escaped as a bird out of the snare of the fowler: the Philistines, without intending it, being the instruments in God's hand of his preservation. On this account the place was called "the rock of divi-"sions," as separating betwixt David, and his bloody persecutor.

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.

The prayers of true believers are a barrier against hostile invasions; but the persecution of them brings down the judgments of God upon guilty nations. However, no ill usage must prompt them to revenge themselves, or prevent them from doing good to their neighbours, as they have opportunity, and ability; even when they are sure to be recompensed by ingratitude, and exposed to further trouble. Thus Jesus lived, and died, and left us an example, that we should follow his steps. The more particularly we seek direction from God in fervent prayer, and Contains, 1ſt. David ſparing Saul's life, and cutting off his ſkirt, 1—7. 2d. His pathetic reaſoning with Saul, and its effects upon him, 8—22.

AND it came to paſs, when Saul was returned from following the Philiſtines, that it was told him, ſaying, Behold, David is in the wilderneſs of En-gedi.

2 Then Saul took three thouſand choſen men out of all Iſrael, and went to ſeek David and his men upon the rocks of the wild goats.

3 And he came to the ſheep-cotes by the way, where was a cave; and Saul went in to cover his feet: and David and his men remained in the ſides of the cave.

4 And the men of David ſaid unto him, Behold the day of which the LORD ſaid unto thee, Behold, I will deliver thine enemy into thine hand, that thou mayeſt do to him as it ſhall ſeem good unto thee. Then David aroſe, and cut off the ſkirt of Saul's robe privily.

5 And it came to paſs afterward, that David's heart ſmote him, becauſe he had cut off Saul's ſkirt.

6 And he ſaid unto his men, The LORD forbid that I ſhould do this thing unto my maſter, the LORD's anointed, to ſtretch forth mine hand againſt him, ſeeing he is the anointed of the LORD.

7 So David ſtayed his ſervants with theſe words, and ſuffered them not to riſe againſt Saul. But Saul roſe up out of the cave, and went on his way.

the more carefully we conſult the ſacred ſcriptures, the ſafer will be our path. In difficult circumſtances we ſhall find the unbelief of our profeſſed helpers, a very diſcouraging hindrance: but referring them to the plain precepts, and promiſes of God's word, is our moſt effectual method of anſwering their objections, and ſecuring their aſſiſtance. No natural ties of honour, gratitude, or affection, can ſecure the heart under powerful temptations: nay, we none of us know how we ſhould act, if aſſailed by the terrors of impending death, and left without the immediate ſupports of divine grace. He, who made the human heart, can alone eſtimate its deceitfulneſs: we ought not to confide abſolutely in our own reſolutions, or in the aſſurances of others: but ſhould depend on the Lord to guide, and keep us; and if we meet with evil treatment, we need not wonder, and ought not to revile, or murmur. The kindneſs of thoſe friends, whom he raiſes up for us, where we could leaſt expect them, may well countervail the malice of our enemies, and the ingratitude, and ficklenes of thoſe, whom we have ſerved. And if the converſe of one friend can, at one interview, occaſion comfort, and ſtrength, to our hearts, what may not be expected from the continual ſupports, and daily viſits, and powerful love of the ſinner's Saviour, the believer's covenanted friend? And what will heaven be, where perfect, univerſal friendſhip reigns, without interruption, ſeparation, or alloy? Let us then continually ſeek the renewed ratification of the covenant of grace, and cultivate the friendſhip of the Lord, and of his people. Our moſt rational, and pleaſing expectations of another kind may be fruſtrated; all other unions muſt be diſſolved: but here diſappointment, and diſunion can have no place for ever. The influence of wickedneſs in thoſe, who fill exalted ſtations, widely, and fatally diffuſes itſelf amongſt their inferiors: many will pay court to them, by aiding their ſinful purpoſes; nay ſome will pride themſelves in reſembling them in their vices: and they only will be treated as friends, who are in fact their moſt deſtructive enemies. Such diſtinguiſhed perſons have therefore many additional reaſons for bridling their paſſions, and exerciſing themſelves unto godlineſs; leſt they ſhould occaſion the ruin of multitudes, and thus aggravate their own condemnation. The language of piety, ſeparate from its ſubſtantial effects, can only amuſe and deceive thoſe, who hear, and thoſe who uſe it. Malice is ever reſtleſs, and tormenting; and though diſappointed, it ſtill hopes for ſucceſs: but numbers, power, rage and ſubtlety can never deſtroy thoſe, whom God protects. His methods of preſerving his people are unnumbered; and he ſometimes leads them into the moſt imminent danger, to endear their deliverance, and to increaſe the torment of their perſecuting foes. And he can employ one enemy to deliver us from another, without their ever intending it; or fill the hands of perſecutors with other work, ſo that they are conſtrained to poſtpone their malicious purpoſes: they then are happy who live in ſimple dependance on, and obedience to him. But we muſt not expect much comfort in this evil world, which ſo ill uſes the beſt of men, and which once crucified the Lord of Glory. We ſhould therefore ſtudy to paſs through it as pilgrims; and to leave it, as they, who are departing to a better, that is an heavenly country.

NOTES.

CHAP. XXIV.] V. 3.] When Saul had repelled the Philiſtines, he reſumed his purſuit of David, who had taken refuge in ſome uncultivated rocky part of the country, inhabited only by the wild goats. But when Saul ſuppoſed David, and his men to be at ſome diſtance, he retired into a cave, either for ſleep, or ſome neceſſary occaſion, whilſt his men were abſent: in this cave David and his men lay concealed, and Saul diſcovered them not; and thus, "God had delivered him into David's "hand," (c. xxiii. v. 7:) he was abſolutely in his power, could have made no reſiſtance; nor would the cauſe of his death have been known, until David had taken proper meaſures to ſecure himſelf, and to ſeize the vacant throne.

V. 4—7.] David's men urged very plauſibly, that God had brought his enemy into his power, in order to fulfil his promiſes to him: yet they were greatly miſtaken. The 8 David alſo aroſe afterward, and went out of the cave, and cried after Saul, ſaying, My lord the king. And when Saul looked behind him, David ſtooped with his face to the earth, and bowed himſelf.

9 And David ſaid to Saul, Wherefore heareſt thou men's words, ſaying, Behold, David ſeeketh thy hurt?

10 Behold, this day thine eyes have ſeen how that the LORD had delivered thee to day into mine hand in the cave: and ſome bade me kill thee: but mine eye ſpared thee; and I ſaid, I will not put forth mine hand againſt my lord; for he is the LORD's anointed.

11 Moreover, my father, ſee, yea, ſee the ſkirt of thy robe in my hand: for in that I cut off the ſkirt of thy robe, and killed thee not, know thou and ſee that there is neither evil nor tranſgreſſion in mine hand, and I have not ſinned againſt thee: yet thou hunteſt my ſoul to take it.

12 The LORD judge between me and thee, and the LORD avenge me of thee; but mine hand ſhall not be upon thee.

13 As ſaith the proverb of the ancients, Wickedneſs proceedeth from the wicked; but mine hand ſhall not be upon thee.

14 After whom is the king of Iſrael come out? after whom doſt thou purſue? after a dead dog, after a flea?

15 The LORD therefore be Judge, and judge between me and thee, and ſee, and plead my cauſe, and deliver me out of thine hand.

16 And it came to paſs, when David had made an end of ſpeaking theſe words unto Saul, that Saul ſaid, Is this thy voice, my ſon David? And Saul lifted up his voice and wept.

17 And he ſaid to David, Thou art more righteous than I: for thou haſt rewarded me good, whereas I have rewarded thee evil.

18 And thou haſt ſhewed this day how that thou haſt dealt well with me: foraſmuch as when the LORD had delivered me into thine hand, thou killedſt me not.

Lord really intended to give David an opportunity of exerciſing faith, patience, and genuine love for his enemy: of ſhewing the tendency of his religion, the tenderneſs of his conſcience, and the ſtedfaſtneſs of his loyalty; for the confutation of his accuſers, a rebuke to Saul, and an example to all, who read of it. He had a promiſe of the kingdom, but no command to ſlay the reigning king: Saul had been anointed by God's command, as well as placed over Iſrael in his providence: his rejection had indeed been denounced; and David had been greatly injured, but he was not appointed his own avenger: ſubjection to the powers, that are, is the believer's general rule of duty: David's peculiar circumſtances conſtrained him to defend himſelf, but not to ſlay Saul; whom he looked upon, and reverenced as his ſovereign, and the Lord's anointed; and not as his rival and perſecutor. He aimed to perform his preſent duty; and left his protection, and future advancement to the Lord; and he deemed it an atrocious offence to "ſtretch forth his hand" to hurt even ſo wicked a prince as Saul, and in defence of his own life. Nay, when he had privily cut off the ſkirt of Saul's robe, as a demonſtration of what he could have done, his heart ſmote him, leſt in this action he had failed of his due reſpect to the Lord's anointed: and he would no more allow his men to injure him, than he would do it himſelf!

V. 8—15.] Nothing can be imagined more reſpectful, pathetic, and forcible, than David's conduct, and addreſs on this occaſion. He ſhewed all reverence to Saul as his prince, bowing himſelf before him to the earth: he called him reſpectfully, "My lord the king," and in token of affection, "My father," (being his ſon-in-law;) he avoided all reproaches, or ſharp expoſtulations; he intimated that Saul's prejudice againſt him aroſe from ſlanderous reports; and reminded him, that he had been counſelled to take away his life, but would not do it. He adduced the moſt deciſive evidence, that he meant not to injure him; whilſt he aſſured him, that his hand ſhould never be upon him: he mildly expoſtulated with him on the injuſtice, and unreaſonableneſs of his conduct; and humbly repreſented himſelf as beneath the notice of ſo great a prince, who degraded himſelf in coming out "after a dead dog, a "ſingle flea," an imagined enemy, equally inſignificant. In illuſtration of the affair he quoted the proverb of the ancients, that "wickedneſs proceedeth from the wicked:" that men's actions manifeſt their diſpoſitions; and if he had been a wicked perſon, his conduct that day would have ſhewn it: or, that nothing but evil can be expected from, or happen to the wicked; wherefore he would have no part with them. At the ſame time he plainly, and repeatedly warned Saul, that the Lord would judge betwixt them, and both deliver him out of his hand, and avenge his cauſe upon him, if he perſiſted in his injurious treatment of him.

V. 16—22.] David's forcible words, and generous behaviour produced a temporary conviction in Saul's mind of his excellency, the righteouſneſs of his cauſe, and the certainty of his advancement; and conſequently that himſelf was culpable, and in a ruinous path. Probably he was in ſome meaſure convinced of theſe things at other times; but they now more deeply affected his mind; nor could he ſuppreſs his emotion, or refuſe to acknowledge his convictions: and inſtead of attempting to deſtroy David, as he intended, his malice was, as it were, arreſted; and he both ſpake well of him, foretold his eſtabliſhment on the throne, and begged of the Lord to reward him for ſparing his life; and allowed, that he ſhould not have behaved thus to him, if he had been in his power. In conſequence of this conviction Saul deſired of David the ſecurity of an oath, that he would not, when king, extirpate his poſterity: but it would have been better, if he had been more concerned about his ſoul, and leſs about his name, and his ſeed: and if he had endeavoured himſelf to reward him, or rather to do him juſtice. And his confeſſion, that David was "more righteous than he," and that he rewarded him evil, without mentioning his ſin againſt the Lord, were not the language of a true penitent. However David was willing to give him the required ſecurity, and to bind himſelf to his duty: but he did not require Saul to ſwear to him, that he would no more ſeek his life; knowing that he regarded not the obligation of an oath, and that it would only ſerve to increaſe his guilt: nor would he truſt himſelf to him, being aware, how little ſuch tranſient appearances can be depended on. When David gave up ſome of Saul's poſterity to be put to death, (2 Sam. c. xxi. v. 1—14:) he acted by divine command, and therefore did not violate his oath to Saul; for it was not David, but the Lord who ordered that execution.

19 For if a man find his enemy, will he let him go well away? wherefore, the LORD reward thee good for that thou haſt done unto me this day.

20 And now, behold, I know well that thou ſhalt ſurely be king, and that the kingdom of Iſrael ſhall be eſtabliſhed in thine hand.

21 Swear now therefore unto me by the LORD, that thou wilt not cut off my ſeed after me, and that thou wilt not deſtroy my name out of my father's houſe.

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.

Wicked men are often interrupted in their evil courſes by afflictions, but return to them, when the reſtraint is removed: as if they were delivered, that they might commit more ſins: but the Lord reſtrains, and diſappoints their malice; and, by bringing them into danger, gives them manifeſt proof of their folly and wickedneſs. We muſt be careful how we interpret God's providences; leſt we miſtake the opportunity, for the permiſſion, to follow our own inclinations: and in doubtful caſes we muſt not judge by appearance, or be determined by mere plauſible arguments. An accurate knowledge of the divine law, an eſtabliſhed judgment, and an holy temper of heart muſt combine in marking out the path of duty, in ſome important caſes. But it is always ſafe to deny the ſuggeſtions of revenge, covetouſneſs, ambition, impatience, or any other ſelfiſh principle: and it ſavours more of piety to interpret a providential diſpenſation as a trial of faith, and patience, and an exerciſe of ſelf-denial; than to conſider it as a licenſe for ſelf-indulgence: and a tender conſcience will fear a plauſible temptation, and avoid all approach to, and appearance of evil. We muſt perform all our relative duties from regard to the authority of God; and when others violate his law in their conduct towards us, we are not allowed to do the ſame towards them: and in waiting the performance of God's promiſes we muſt uſe only lawful means, and not wiſh to anticipate his time. Under the deepeſt injuries, we muſt not avenge ourſelves, but after the example of David, and of David's lord, we muſt commit ourſelves to him, that judgeth righteouſly. Magiſtracy is the ordinance of God, and confers dignity on thoſe, who are advanced to it; who in all ordinary caſes, and lawful things, are to be honoured, and obeyed: and if they abuſe their truſt, the Lord will execute vengeance upon them. If we are perſecuted in one city, we may flee to another, and uſe neceſſary means of ſelf-preſervation: but we muſt not lift our hands, or adopt any offenſive meaſures, againſt thoſe, whom God in his providence hath placed over us; though like Saul, or Nero. That is, in our private capacity as Chriſtian members of ſociety: for the word of God determines nothing concerning the different kinds of government; or againſt the conſtitutional rights of legal collective bodies to defend their liberties againſt ambitious tyrants, and uſurpers. We muſt not only avoid evil ourſelves, but uſe our influence to reſtrain others, or we ſhall be chargeable before God for it. Mild language, and reſpectful behaviour, even to wicked, and injurious ſuperiors, are ornamental to piety: and though we muſt not flatter any man with the hope of impunity in ſin; yet we may put the moſt candid conſtruction upon their actions; and ſatisfy ourſelves with manifeſting our own innocence, modeſtly complaining of hard uſage, and with employing forcible arguments, and pathetic expoſtulations; without venting virulent invective, or exaſperating reproaches. It is alſo more prudent to abate envy, by ſeeking to appear inconſiderable, than to excite it, by boaſting of dignity, or excellence. Whilſt we are thankful for being preſerved from open crimes hitherto, we cannot bind ourſelves too ſtrongly, in dependance on the grace of God, to avoid them for the time to come: for our conduct ſhould form a contraſt to that of the enemies of true religion; that all men may perceive upon what principles we act, and be convinced that our cauſe is worthy of God. A proper conſideration of the dignity of men's characters, in eminent ſtations, or of the excellency of their immortal ſouls, would tend to keep them from debaſing themſelves by ſuch mean purſuits, as they are commonly engaged in. They who act conſcientiouſly, will find opportunities of confuting their revilers, and of being manifeſted in the conſciences of their moſt determined enemies: and at length the Lord will plead and avenge their cauſe. Flattering and ſlanderous favourites are the bane of princes: by hearing their words, they prefer their enemies, and perſecute their friends; becauſe the clamour of their paſſions ſilences the whiſper of their conſciences. But the moſt atrocious ſinners have ſome ſeaſons of remorſe, when they perceive, and are affected with their ſituation: they are almoſt perſuaded to renounce their ſins; they are convinced of the ſuperior excellency of true Chriſtians, as acting from principles ſuperior, and even contrary to thoſe, which influence their own conduct: they cannot withhold from them a good word, and a good wi h, and at once forbode their own miſery, and their felicity. Yet they are not truly humbled, or changed; ſin and the world reign in their hearts; they acknowledge that they are not ſo good, as ſome are, but will not confeſs how very vile they are: they are more careful about their credit, and intereſt in the world, than about the forgiveneſs of their ſins; and whilſt they confeſs their own injuſtice, and their obligations to others; they leave it to the Lord to repay them. They, who are experimentally acquainted with the grace of God, will place little dependance on ſuch appearances, eſpecially in thoſe who have long ſtifled their convictions, and ſinned againſt the light of their own conſciences: for they fear that theſe tranſient affections alſo will ſubſide, and leave the heart ſtill harder than before. Men ſhould therefore be afraid of rebelling againſt the light, and quenching the Spirit of God, when producing convictions in their conſciences; leſt he ſtrive no more with them, but leave them to be hardened by the deceitfulneſs of ſin. The grace of God will teach us to forgive and be kind to our enemies; but not to truſt thoſe, who have repeatedly deceived us: for malice often ſeems dead, when it is only dormant, and will ere long revive with double force. Yet, whether the Lord fill, or bind men's hands; or awe, and affect their hearts, ſo that they loſe for a ſeaſon their inclination to hurt us; the deliverance is from him, an evidence of his love, and an earneſt of our final ſalvation.

NOTES.

CHAP. XXV.] V. 1. Samuel died, &c.] This is ſuppoſed to have been within two years of the death of Saul, who permitted Samuel to cloſe his days in peace: to the end of his life he doubtleſs preſided over the ſeminary of prophets, and, by his prayers, inſtructions and example, was very uſeful in private, though he intermeddled not in public buſineſs. When he died, the people were very ſenſible of their loſs, and of their ſin, and folly in rejecting him, and made general lamentations for him. Upon this event David removed into the wilderneſs of Paran, in part of which Iſrael wandered, before they entered Canaan; perhaps concluding that Saul's malice would be now more unreſtrained than ever.

V. 2. Carmel.] Not mount Carmel in the north of Canaan, (1 Kings c. xviii. v. 19:) but another place of the ſame name towards the ſouth.

V. 6. That liveth, &c.] The words "in proſperity," are not in the original, though evidently implied. David ſeems to have ſpoken unadviſedly, in calling a wicked man living in luxury, one "that liveth," as if his own indigence ſcarce deſerved the name of life. For Nabal "living in pleaſure was dead in ſin;" and David, though deſtitute, was alive to God.

V. 8. Aſk, &c.] David not only reſtrained his men from moleſting Nabal's flocks, but protected them againſt the depredations of their invaders. He might therefore have demanded a reward for his ſervices: but he was rather deſirous of becoming his ſupplicant, for whatever came to hand, in that ſeaſon of feſtivity; as he was in great diſtreſs, and unwilling to ſubſiſt by plunder.

words

words in the name of David, and ceaſed.

10 And Nabal anſwered David's ſervants, and ſaid, Who is David? and who is the ſon of Jeſſe? There be many ſervants now a days that break away every man from his maſter.

11 Shall I then take my bread, and my water, and my fleſh that I have killed for my ſhearers, and give it unto men whom I know not whence they be?

12 So David's young men turned their way, and went again, and came and told him all thoſe ſayings.

13 And David ſaid unto his men, Gird ye on every man his ſword. And they girded on every man his ſword; and David alſo girded on his ſword: and there went up after David about four hundred men; and two hundred abode by the ſtuff.

14 But one of the young men told Abigail, Nabal's wife, ſaying, Behold, David ſent meſſengers out of the wilderneſs to ſalute our maſter; and he railed on them.

15 But the men were very good unto us, and we were not hurt, neither miſſed we any thing, as long as we were converſant with them, when we were in the fields:

16 They were a wall unto us both by night and day, all the while we were with them keeping tbe ſheep.

17 Now therefore know and conſider what thou wilt do; for evil is determined againſt our maſter, and againſt all his houſhold: for he is ſuch a ſon of Belial, that a man cannot ſpeak to him.

18 Then Abigail made haſte, and took two hundred loaves, and two bottles of wine, and five ſheep ready dreſſed, and five meaſures of parched corn, and an hundred cluſters of raiſins, and two hundred cakes of figs, and laid them on aſſes.

19 And ſhe ſaid unto her ſervants, Go on before me; behold, I come after you. But ſhe told not her huſband Nabal:

20 And it was ſo, as ſhe rode on the aſs, that ſhe came down by the covert of the hill, and, behold, David and his men came down againſt her; and ſhe met them.

21 Now David had ſaid, Surely in vain have I kept all that this fellow hath in the wilderneſs, ſo that nothing was miſſed of all that pertained unto him: and he hath requited me evil for good.

22 So and more alſo do God unto the enemies of David, if I leave of all that pertain to him, by the morning light, any that piſſeth againſt the wall.

23 And when Abigail ſaw David, ſhe haſted, and lighted off the aſs, and fell before David

V. 10. Who is David? &c.] Nabal well knew that David had ſlain Goliath, and often ſmitten the Philiſtines: that he was a man of eminent valour, and capacity, and of unblemiſhed reputation: that he was the ſon-in-law of Saul, and unjuſtly perſecuted: and that in his preſent neceſſity, he behaved in an unexceptionable manner. But to vindicate his ſelfiſh refuſal, he abuſed him as one of the many runaway ſlaves, who then deſerted their maſter's ſervice; and thus he fooliſhly rendered his anſwer as exaſperating, as he knew how!

V. 13. And David ſaid, &c.] David had been upon his guard againſt anger, and revenge, when ill uſed by Saul: but he did not expect ſuch language, and treatment from Nabal; and therefore he was off his guard, and in great indignation determined to avenge himſelf. It was alſo more humiliating, to be inſulted by ſuch a man as Nabal, than to be perſecuted by the king.

V. 17. For evil is determined, &c.] Whether this ſervant had got any intelligence of David's determination, or only formed a ſhrewd conjecture from circumſtances, doth not appear. But anxious for his own ſafety, as well as for that of the family, he dared not to mention his apprehenſions to Nabal, who would probably have abuſed him for his impertinence: and therefore he applied to Abigail, complaining that his maſter was ſuch a ſon of Belial, that a man could "not ſpeak unto him:" words not proper to have been uſed by a ſervant concerning his maſter, if the urgency of the caſe had not required them.

V. 19. She told not, &c.] Abigail was about to diſpoſe largely of Nabal's property without his conſent; but it was for the preſervation of him and his family: yet ſhe knew that his obſtinacy would ruin them all, if he were made acquainted with her deſign; the cauſe therefore fully juſtified her conduct.

V. 21, 22.] David, in his ſober judgment, knew better, than to repent of his good deeds, or to think them done in vain, becauſe they were requited with ingratitude: his determination to deſtroy every male of Nabal's family, for his fault, was unjuſt, and cruel in the extreme, and more like Saul, than himſelf: and his confirming this with a kind of oath, (though he turned off the imprecation from himſelf unto his enemies,) was very raſh, and favoured of profaneneſs. Had he been permitted to have executed his purpoſe of revenge, it would have occaſioned him much bitter reflection, greatly tarniſhed his character, and given his enemies a vaſt advantage againſt him.

V. 23—31.] The conduct, and addreſs of Abigail on on her face, and bowed herſelf to the ground,

24 And fell at his feet, and ſaid, Upon me, my lord, upon me let this iniquity be: and let thine handmaid, I pray thee, ſpeak in thine audience, and hear the words of thine handmaid.

25 Let not my lord, I pray thee, regard this man of Belial, even Nabal: for as his name is, ſo is he; Nabal is his name, and folly is with him: but I thine handmaid ſaw not the young men of my lord, whom thou didſt ſend.

26 Now therefore, my lord, as the LORD liveth, and as thy ſoul liveth, ſeeing the LORD hath withholden thee from coming to ſhed blood, and from avenging thyſelf with thine own hand, now let thine enemies, and they that ſeek evil to my lord, be as Nabal.

27 And now this bleſſing, which thine handmaid hath brought unto my lord, let it even be given unto the young men that follow my lord.

28 I pray thee, forgive the treſpaſs of thine handmaid: for the LORD will certainly make my lord a ſure houſe; becauſe my lord fighteth the battles of the LORD, and evil hath not been found in thee all thy days.

29 Yet a man is riſen to purſue thee, and to ſeek thy ſoul: but the ſoul of my lord ſhall be bound in the bundle of life with the LORD thy God; and the ſouls of thine enemies, them ſhall he ſling out, as out of the middle of a ſling.

30 And it ſhall come to paſs, when the LORD ſhall have done to my lord according to all the good that he hath ſpoken concerning thee, and ſhall have appointed thee ruler over Iſrael;

31 That this ſhall be no grief unto thee, nor offence of heart unto my lord, either that thou haſt ſhed blood cauſeleſs, or that my lord hath avenged himſelf: but when the LORD ſhall have dealt well with my lord, then remember thine handmaid.

32 And David ſaid to Abigail, Bleſſed be the LORD God of Iſrael, which ſent thee this day to meet me:

this emergency are worthy of admiration. Nabal had inſulted David, as a run-away ſlave: in order to pacify him, Abigail ſhewed him the reverence due to a ſuperior, and to her ſovereign, in the purpoſe of God: though he was evidently in an unbecoming heat, ſhe took no notice of it; but only intreated him, to allow her, as if ſhe were the criminal, to plead her cauſe, and to give her a candid hearing. She could not palliate her huſband's conduct, and the caſe did not allow her to veil his infirmities: but ſhe attempted to convert his well-known raſhneſs, and imprudence, (which accorded to his name, that ſignifies folly,) into an argument with David, why he ſhould lay aſide his reſentment: for Nabal meant no peculiar affront to him, it was his fooliſh way with every body; and it was beneath a perſon of David's character, and eminence, to take any notice of the rudeneſs of ſuch a man: but had ſhe been preſent his young men ſhould have had better treatment. She was confident that the Lord had ſent her to keep his ſervant David "from avenging himſelf with "his own hand," which ſhe knew he could not calmly think of without horrour: and ſhe ſolemnly deſired, that as ſure, as the Lord lived, and as David's ſoul lived, all that ſought evil to him, might be as weak, and infatuated in their counſels, as Nabal: and then he would have nothing to fear from them; for they would be ſure to ruin themſelves. The liberal preſent, (which ſhe called a bleſſing, being an expreſſion of her good-will to him,) ſhe repreſented as unworthy of his notice; but begged that it might be given to his followers. She profeſſed her firm belief that he, and his family, would be eſtabliſhed in the kingdom: ſhe made honourable mention of his great ſervices to Iſrael, and of his unblameable conduct; and adverted to the injuſtice of Saul's perſecution, whom in honour of his authority, ſhe did not mention. She declared her aſſurance of David's preſervation by a remarkable expreſſion, "that his ſoul ſhould be bound up in the bundle "of life with the Lord his God:" that is, that he was irreverſibly appointed unto the kingdom, and in conſequence was numbered with thoſe, whoſe lives are upheld, and protected againſt all poſſible dangers, by the almighty power of the everlaſting God: and that his ſoul alſo was numbered amongſt thoſe, who were "appointed unto "ſalvation," and would in the ſame manner be preſerved unto eternal life: whilſt his enemies would be driven into deſtruction, as a ſtone is violently thrown from a ſling. In pleading for forgiveneſs ſhe intimated that it would be more honourable to his character, and comfortable to his mind, when the Lord's promiſes were performed, to reflect, that he had maſtered his anger; than that he had avenged himſelf, and ſhed blood without cauſe: and ſhe concluded with begging of him to think of her, and what ſhe had ſaid, when theſe things were come to paſs. Nothing ſeems to have been omitted in this addreſs, which ſuited the occaſion, nothing added unſuitably; all was expreſſed in the moſt perſuaſive manner: and manifeſts Abigail to have been a woman of ſtrong faith, and great piety, as well as poſſeſſed of ſingular prudence and ingenuity, though married to ſo worthleſs a man.

V. 32. And David ſaid, &c.] Abigail's ſpeech brought David to view the matter in it's true light, to bleſs God for ſending her, to pray for her, and to thank her for 33 And bleſſed be thy advice, and bleſſed be thou, which haſt kept me this day from coming to ſhed blood, and from avenging myſelf with mine own hand.

34 For in very deed, as the LORD God of Iſrael liveth, which hath kept me back from hurting thee, except thou hadſt haſted and come to meet me, ſurely there had not been left unto Nabal, by the morning light, any that piſſeth againſt the wall.

35 So David received of her hand that which ſhe had brought him, and ſaid unto her, Go up in peace to thine houſe; ſee, I have hearkened to thy voice, and have accepted thy perſon.

36 And Abigail came to Nabal; and, behold, he held a feaſt in his houſe like the feaſt of a king; and Nabal's heart was merry within him, for he was very drunken: wherefore ſhe told him nothing, leſs or more, until the morning light.

37 But it came to paſs in the morning, when the wine was gone out of Nabal, and his wife had told him theſe things, that his heart died within him, and he became as a ſtone.

38 And it came to paſs about ten days after, that the LORD ſmote Nabal, that he died.

39 And when David heard that Nabal was dead, he ſaid, Bleſſed be the LORD, that hath pleaded the cauſe of my reproach from the hand of Nabal, and hath kept his ſervant from evil: for the LORD hath returned the wickedneſs of Nabal upon his own head. And David ſent and communed with Abigail, to take her to him to wife.

40 And when the ſervants of David were come to Abigail, to Carmel, they ſpake unto her, ſaying, David ſent us unto thee, to take thee to him to wife.

41 And ſhe aroſe, and bowed herſelf on her face to the earth, and ſaid, Behold, let thine handmaid be a ſervant to waſh the feet of the ſervants of my lord.

42 And Abigail haſted, and aroſe, and rode upon an aſs, with five damſels of her's that went after her; and ſhe went after the meſſengers of David, and became his wife.

43 David alſo took Ahinoam of Jezreel; and they were alſo both of them his wives.

44 But Saul had given Michal his daughter, David's wife, to Phalti the ſon of Laiſh, which was of Gallim.

coming ſo ſpeedily with ſuch ſeaſonable advice, whereby much miſchief, and guilt had been prevented.

V. 34. Any that, &c.] This phraſe, though literally tranſlated, being in common uſe amongſt the Iſraelites, had not with them that indelicacy in it that it hath amongſt us, and may in every place, with the utmoſt propriety, be read "every male." Though David only intended the death of the men; yet if Abigail, and the other women eſcaped the maſſacre, they muſt have been greatly injured; therefore the Lord had kept "him back from "hurting her."

V. 37. His heart died, &c.] When Nabal heard of the imminent danger, to which his own folly had expoſed him, at the very time, when he was ſtupified with drunkenneſs, and ſurrounded with thoſe, whom he had tempted to the ſame exceſs, his terror, and vexation were ſo great, that they ſunk his ſpirits; and in ten days, by the juſt judgment of God, he ended his life, and left his wealth to others. It ſeems his proviſions were ſo large, his attendants ſo numerous, and his mind ſo diſſipated, that he did not miſs Abigail, or her preſent to David; or the ſervants, who went with her.

V. 39. Bleſſed be the Lord, &c.] David bleſſed God that he had been kept from avenging himſelf; and he conſidered the death of Nabal, as a proof of God's ſpecial regard to him, in pleading his cauſe againſt his enemies; as an earneſt of further favours of the ſame kind; and as ſuited to awe others from injuring him.

V. 42. Became his wife.] Abigail firmly believed that David would be king over Iſrael, and greatly eſteemed his pious and excellent character: ſhe therefore deemed, the propoſal honourable, and advantageous, notwithſtanding his preſent difficulties; and with great humility, and doubtleſs according to the decorum of thoſe times, acceded thereto; being willing to ſhare his trials, and to ſubmit to any ſervices for his ſake.

V. 43, 44.] Probably David had before this married Ahinoam, and as ſoon as Michal was married to Phalti. In this he was carried away with the cuſtom of the times, and was connived at in having more than one wife.

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.

The moſt honoured ſervants of God have the meaſure, and period of their uſefulneſs appointed them: but they are happy, though rejected of men, who perſevere unto the end, walking with God, and living conſiſtent with their profeſſion, even in a retired ſituation. Their unblemiſhed characters, their good examples, and their teſtimony to the truth, will produce ſalutary effects; and their unceaſing prayers will be anſwered in behalf of numbers, after they are removed by death. And indeed whole nations have cauſe to lament when faithful inſtructors, holy men of God, and public interceſſors are taken away. But Jeſus our prophet, prieſt, interceſſor, and judge, ever liveth to take care of thoſe, who truſt in him. Riches make men look great in their own eyes, and in thoſe of other worldly people. But they are often laviſhed on thoſe, who have neither wiſdom, nor grace; and who ſo abuſe them, as to ruin themſelves, and to render many others wretched, or wicked. May we be great in the ſight of the Lord, and not in the opinion of the world! To be deſcended from honourable anceſtors forms one branch of man's little, and fooliſh vanity: yet it frequently is a moſt ſevere reproach to the character, and conduct of many of thoſe, who value themſelves upon it. Perſons of virtue, good ſenſe, and amiable qualifications are often married, for the ſake of wealth, to ſuch unſuitable perſons, as render their whole lives wretched, and expoſed to manifold temptations, as well as diſtreſſes. Let parents, and young perſons guard againſt this fatal miſtake. But prudent and pious relations are an invaluable treaſure, and often retard the ruin of thoſe, who have not ſenſe to know their worth. They, whom the Lord will moſt honour, are often very deſtitute for a ſeaſon; and, as they will not have recourſe to fraud, or violence, they are ſometimes conſtrained to become ſupplicants to ungodly perſons. On ſuch occaſions it behoves them to ſpeak with modeſty of themſelves, and with decent reſpect to thoſe, whoſe aſſiſtance they requeſt, wiſhing the continuance, increaſe, or acceſſion of every bleſſing: but they muſt be careful, or they will verge towards flattery, and paſs ſuch compliments, as conſiſt not with truth, and tend to confirm evil men in their favourable opinion of themſelves, and their ſtate: this they ought by no means to do, though they be cenſured for rudeneſs by neglecting it. Wordly men deem their riches their own; but God declares they are another's, (Luke c. xvi. v. 12,) and that they muſt ſhortly give an account of their ſtewardſhip. When they are determined not to relieve the neceſſitous, they often excuſe themſelves by railing on them, by charging the vices of ſome poor perſons upon them all; and by repreſenting alms-giving as an encouragement to idleneſs, impertinence, and extravagance: nor are the moſt excellent characters any defence againſt ſuch undiſtinguiſhing invectives, which betray the pride, ignorance, malice, and avarice of the heart, from which they proceed. In imitation of the example of the Lord, we are commanded to do good to the evil, and ungrateful; and wretched ſhould we all be, if he dealt with us by ſuch rules, as we are diſpoſed to adopt, in our behaviour to our poor brethren. Whilſt we enjoy the abundance, which God hath given us, we ſhould be liberal to the indigent: but many will laviſh as much upon one unneceſſary, proud, and luxurious feaſt, or upon the exceſſive indulgence of their own appetites, or vanity; as would be deemed an exorbitant ſum to be expended in acts of charity: (Luke c. xiv. v. 12—14.) Silence is generally our wiſdom, when aſſaulted by provoking language, or we ſhall be betrayed into folly and ſin: and when the meſſengers of the Son of David meet with abuſe for his ſake, they muſt hold their peace, and report it to their Lord, who will ſurely, and juſtly reſent it. How changeable are the beſt of men! how contrary their conduct in one inſtance, from what might have been expected from another! a ſmall temptation frequently prevails over them, after a greater hath been reſiſted: for when they are off their guard, they are driven away as a thing rolling before the whirlwind. Paſſionate reſolutions, formed without time for reflection, or prayer, are the reſult of ſatan's counſel; and we are at thoſe times capable of imitating the worſt actions of the worſt of men, and of diſregarding all conſequences to our own character, and peace, to the church of God, or to thoſe, who rejoice in being thus emboldened in their impiety! Many ſervants have more wiſdom and grace, than their maſters, and could ſuggeſt to them uſeful hints: but they, who are ſuch ſons of Belial, that a man cannot ſpeak to them, will loſe this advantage, and will not permit any one to extricate them from the dangers, to which their own imprudence expoſes them. General rules of ſubmiſſion to ſuperior relations muſt be interpreted according to circumſtances. In great emergencies the form may be diſpenſed with; and the preſervation of a man's life, or fortune will juſtify a failure in exterior indications of reſpect. It is honourable when others commend thoſe ſervices, of which we ſay nothing: and when it appears, that we had a right to demand more, than we petitioned for. In urgent caſes diſpatch is as requiſite, as prudence: leſſer intereſts are always to be ſacrificed to preſerve the greater: our property to preſerve our lives; our very lives, for the ſalvation of our ſouls. Reſpect and liberal kindneſs are proper means of averting wrath: but with wiſe, and godly men, right words are moſt forcible. When, in mild language, matters are fairly ſtated, and proper topics are adduced, their judgments, affections, and conſciences are appealed to; and they cannot but be overcome thereby, if they can be prevailed upon to liſten to it. It is degrading to a wiſe man to reſent the affronts of thoſe, who are notoriouſly fooliſh, and abuſive: they act in character, ſo ſhould we: and bleſs God that our enemies are of ſuch a ſtamp: their unmerited reproaches cannot injure our character; nay their unprovoked enmity does us credit. Every ſervant of God ſhould duly eſtimate his own ſituation; what his obligations, profeſſions, and proſpects are; what his ſtation in the church; what his former conduct, and preſent character: that he may with great circumſpection avoid every inconſiſtent word, and action: for according to theſe things, will men's expectations from, and cenſures of us be. And under every temptation we ſhould conſider how the matter will afterwards appear. Patience and forgiveneſs of injuries will never occaſion uneaſy reflections; but revenge will in every caſe be recollected with grief of heart; and if we could but liſten to our prudent and faith-

2 Then Saul aroſe, and went down to the wilderneſs of Ziph, having three thouſand choſen men of Iſrael with him, to ſeek David in the wilderneſs of Ziph.

3 And Saul pitched in the hill of Hachilah, which is before Jeſhimon, by the way. But David abode in the wilderneſs, and he ſaw that Saul came after him into the wilderneſs.

4 David therefore ſent out ſpies, and underſtood that Saul was come in very deed.

5 And David aroſe, and came to the place where Saul had pitched: and David beheld the place where Saul lay, and Abner the ſon of Ner, the captain of his hoſt: and Saul lay in the trench, and the people pitched round about him.

6 Then anſwered David and ſaid to Ahimelech the Hittite, and to Abiſhai the ſon of Zeruiah, brother to Joab, ſaying, Who will go down with me to Saul to the camp? And Abiſhai ſaid, I will go down with thee.

7 So David and Abiſhai came to the people by night: and, behold, Saul lay ſleeping within the trench, and his ſpear ſtuck in the ground at his bolſter: but Abner and the people lay round about him.

8 Then ſaid Abiſhai to David, God hath delivered thine enemy into thine hand this day: now therefore let me ſmite him, I pray thee, with the ſpear, even to the earth at once, and I will not ſmite him the ſecond time.

ful counſellors at preſent, with the ſame candour, that we ſhall reflect upon their advice in future, we ſhould avoid much ſorrow, and many offences. Happy is the true believer: "his ſoul is bound up in the bundle of life "with the Lord his God! In the midſt of dangers, and enemies, his natural life is perfectly ſafe, till the appointed hour: the life of his ſoul is hid with Chriſt in God; and becauſe the Saviour liveth, he ſhall live alſo; whilſt all his foes ſhall be driven to deſtruction. Our gratitude to God ſhould precede, but not exclude our gratitude to the inſtruments of his goodneſs: and we have peculiar cauſe to be thankful, when we have been kept back from thoſe ſins, which we were ready to commit: and real penitents will not be backward to take ſhame to themſelves, and to retract their raſh expreſſions; and they will tremble to reflect what the conſequences would have been, had they been left to themſelves. God's people need not avenge their own cauſe, for the Lord will ſurely do it for them; and ſometimes more awfully, than they could have wiſhed: yet when his purpoſe is known, they will adore his juſtice, and bleſs him for his kindneſs to them. Whilſt divine vengeance hovers over the heads of ſinners, they are often given up to fooliſh mirth, and brutiſh intoxication. If the proſpect of a violent death be ſo terrifying; how ſhould ſinners tremble at the thoughts of eternal damnation, and flee without delay from the wrath to come! Worldly ſorrow, mortified pride, and an affrighted conſcience ſometimes ſuffice to end the ſenſualiſt's joys, and ſeparate the covetous man from all his wealth: but whatever be the weapon, the Lord ſmites men with death, when it pleaſes him. May we chooſe that good part, which ſhall never be taken from us! Modeſty, prudence, and humility are ordinary preparations to advancement: and a wiſe man will always know the value of a pious and virtuous wife. But ſome deviations from the divine law, and ſome alloy to our comforts, muſt be expected in every character, and every ſituation, on this ſide heaven.

NOTES.

CHAP. XXVI.] V. 1. And the Ziphites, &c.] It ſeems that Saul had dropped the purſuit of David, till excited to it again by the officious information of the Ziphites, who perhaps deſpaired of David's pardon for their former malice and perfidy. Upon which Saul's envy, ambition, and malice revived; like Pharaoh he again hardened his heart and determined to make one more effort to deſtroy his rival.

V. 3. Abode, &c.] David neither fled, nor went forth to meet Saul, but kept his poſt, till he ſaw how matters were. Had a much greater army of uncircumciſed Philiſtines marched againſt him, he would have faced them, with his ſmall company, and truſted the Lord for the event: but he would not fight againſt the Lord's anointed.

V. 6. And Abiſhai ſaid, &c.] Probably David was determined to this meaſure by a divine impulſe, that all Iſrael might be convinced that he was vilely ſlandered by his enemies. Having therefore in the day time made proper obſervations, he propoſed the matter to two of his attendants: but Ahimelech, who was a Hittite, had not that ſtrength of faith in the God of Iſrael, which ſuch a bold adventure required; and Abiſhai only went with David.

V. 10. The Lord ſhall, &c.] As he had ſmitten Nabal. It hath been ſaid that David ſpared Saul, the Lord's anointed, out of policy, that he might not teach the people an evil leſſon againſt himſelf. But it is evident, that he acted from higher motives: the Lord forbad it, and "no "man could ſtretch forth his hand againſt the Lord's "anointed, and be guiltleſs." Satisfied that the Lord would fulfil his promiſe, he determined to wait his time, though he ſeemed awfully convinced that Saul would die impenitent.

ſhall come to die; or he ſhall deſcend into battle, and periſh.

11 The LORD forbid that I ſhould ſtretch forth mine hand againſt the LORD's anointed: but, I pray thee, take thou now the ſpear that is at his bolſter, and the cruſe of water, and let us go.

12 So David took the ſpear and the cruſe of water from Saul's bolſter; and they gat them away, and no man ſaw it, nor knew it, neither awaked: for they were all aſleep; becauſe a deep ſleep from the LORD was fallen upon them.

13 Then David went over to the other ſide, and ſtood on the top of an hill afar off; a great ſpace being betwen them:

14 And David cried to the people, and to Abner the ſon of Ner, ſaying, Anſwereſt thou not, Abner? Then Abner anſwered and ſaid, Who art thou that crieſt to the king?

15 And David ſaid to Abner, Art not thou a valiant man? and who is like to thee in Iſrael? wherefore then haſt thou not kept thy lord the king? for there came one of the people in to deſtroy the king thy lord.

16 This thing is not good that thou haſt done. As the LORD liveth ye are worthy to die, becauſe ye have not kept your maſter, the LORD's anointed. And now ſee where the king's ſpear is, and the cruſe of water that was at his bolſter.

17 And Saul knew David's voice, and ſaid, Is this thy voice, my ſon David? And David ſaid, It is my voice, my lord, O king.

18 And he ſaid, Wherefore doth my lord thus purſue after his ſervant? for what have I done? or what evil is in mine hand?

19 Now therefore, I pray thee, let my lord the king hear the words of his ſervant. If the LORD have ſtirred thee up againſt me, let him accept an offering: but if they be the children of men, curſed be they before the LORD; for they have driven me out this day from abiding in the inheritance of the LORD, ſaying, Go, ſerve other gods.

20 Now therefore, let not my blood fall to the earth before the face of the LORD; for the king of Iſrael is come out to ſeek a flea, as when one doth hunt a partridge in the mountains.

21 Then ſaid Saul, I have ſinned: return, my ſon David: for I will no more do thee harm, becauſe my ſoul was precious in thine eyes this day: behold, I have played the fool, and have erred exceedingly.

22 And David anſwered and ſaid, Behold the king's ſpear; and let one of the young men come over and fetch it.

23 The LORD render to every man his righteouſneſs and his faithfulneſs: for the LORD delivered thee into my hand to day, but I would not ſtretch forth mine hand againſt the LORD's anointed.

24 And, behold, as thy life was much ſet

V. 16. Ye are worthy, &c.] Abner and his ſoldiers, by neglecting to guard Saul, when he ſlept, had expoſed his life, and merited to be treated as his enemies, though he confided in them, as his friends: for though their ſound ſleep was ſupernatural; yet there might be a neglect of placing centinels, ariſing from contempt of David's ſmall company: and yet Saul deemed David his enemy; who had ſpared and protected his life, in the moſt friendly manner. This he would have Saul, and all his men to take notice of; that they might be aſhamed of their enterpriſe.

V. 19. If the Lord, &c.] David had not offended Saul, but he was a ſinner againſt the Lord: and if he ſhould be convinced that his ſufferings aroſe from that cauſe; he would repent, and offer a ſin-offering, that his ſin being pardoned, his trials might ceaſe: but if it appeared that Saul was inſtigated to this perſecution by the evil ſpirit, which in judgment was permitted to trouble him, he adviſed him to the ſame meaſures. But if wicked men influenced him to it, they might expect ſevere vengeance from God, for thus baniſhing him from the worſhip of Jehovah; and tempting him to turn idolater. It is obſervable that David carefully avoids mentioning Saul's own envy, and malice, which were the real cauſes of his conduct: for he meant not to irritate, but to mollify him.

V. 20. Let not my, &c.] Though David was ſo inconſiderable a perſon, according to his modeſt repreſentation of himſelf: yet if his blood were ſhed, the Lord would certainly require it.

V. 21—25.] (Notes, &c. c. 24.) This ſecond inſtance of David's fidelity ſeems to have affected Saul more than the former. He confeſſed his guilt and folly in much ſtronger terms, and even invited him to return to court; and he repeated his good words, and wiſhes, and his perſuaſion that he would prevail, and be very eminent. But there were no evidences of true repentance towards God; and David plainly intimated that he would not truſt his promiſes, and expected no recompence from him: but that he referred his cauſe to the Lord, who would protect, deliver, and do him juſtice. Thus they parted to meet no more.

by this day in mine eyes, ſo let my life be much ſet by in the eyes of the LORD, and let him deliver me out of all tribulation.

25 Then Saul ſaid to David, Bleſſed be thou, my ſon David: thou ſhalt both do great things, and alſo ſhalt ſtill prevail. So David went on his way, and Saul returned to his place.

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.

One crime generally proves a temptation to another; and if ſin be not dethroned by ſanctifying grace, it will recover its ſtrength, when a ſuitable temptation is preſented: and ſatan, and his agents will ſuggeſt ſuch thoughts as may re-kindle the ſmothered flame: thus after deep convictions, and temporary reformations, men return to their ſins, and become worſe than ever. But the ſervants of God ought to perſevere in a blameleſs conduct, however injured; that it may appear that they act from a ſettled purpoſe of doing good for the Lord's ſake: and in ſome caſes, they will need the boldneſs of the lion, the wiſdom of the ſerpent, and the harmleſſneſs of the dove, in order to avoid evil, and the appearance of evil; and yet to uſe proper means of eſcaping the malice of their enemies. Confidence in God fortifies the ſoul againſt temptations to ſeek relief from trouble by ſin: and it requires as much reſolution to reſtrain the exceſſes of mis-judging zealous friends, as to ſtand firm againſt the rage of incenſed enemies. If we would have outward bleſſings with comfort, and reputation, we muſt wait for them in the path of duty: and if wicked men obſtruct the Lord's purpoſes, he can eaſily remove them, without needing our help. We are expoſed to ſo many dangers, whenever we cloſe our eyes, that we ſhould previouſly examine our ſtate, whether we are ready for death; and then commit ourſelves to his keeping, who neither ſlumbereth nor ſleepeth. Otherwiſe our needful ſleep may confine us, as in a priſon, till ſome murderer, or awful calamity comes upon us, with unexpected deſtruction. The ſuppoſed friends of ungodly men are either incapable of ſerving them, or will treacherouſly neglect, and expoſe them. And the pious people whom they hate and revile, are their only friends, as they perſevere in their prayers for, and kindneſs to them. Good works give energy to perſuaſive words: and whether we plead our own cauſe, or the cauſe of God, an evident integrity, and conſiſtency of conduct will go further in producing conviction, than the utmoſt powers of eloquence: for want of this confirmation, much ſound reaſoning, and pathetic exhortation, paſs for unmeaning declamation, and nobody is convinced by them. Man's tranſgreſſions againſt God are the cauſe of their enmities againſt each other; and no reconciliation amongſt men hath an immoveable baſis, which is not founded in, and cemented by peace with God through Jeſus Chriſt. They, who drive us from our duty, or tempt us to ſin, are our worſt enemies: and perſecutors, beſides their murder of men's bodies, muſt give a dreadful account of the murder of their ſouls, whom they have driven to apoſtacy, or to do violence to their own conſciences, by the terrors of impriſonment, or death. In ſinning againſt God men "play the fool exceedingly:" this the believer perceives, repents of, obtains a pardon, and acts more wiſely: many others obtain a tranſient view of theſe mortifying truths, who hate, and cloſe their eyes againſt the light. But eternity will fully diſcover their exceeding fooliſhneſs, and they will never ceaſe to reflect upon their own madneſs, in ſtifling their convictions, and holding faſt their iniquities. No good words, or fair profeſſions entitle thoſe to any confidence, who have long ſinned againſt the light: yet the confeſſions of obſtinate ſinners may be uſeful to us, in ſatisfying us that we are in the right way, and ſhall prevail; and to encourage us to perſevere, expecting our recompence from the Lord alone.

NOTES.

CHAP. XXVII.] V. 1. I ſhall, &c.] Whilſt David reflected upon the inveterate malice of Saul, and the neglect or treachery of his countrymen; he ſeems to have forgot his anointing, the promiſe, and command of God, and the manifold deliverances, which he had experienced; and was ready to deſpair of ſafety in the land of Judah: and from this unbelief aroſe many ſins, and temptations. Having perhaps received ſome intimation from Achiſh, that he would protect him, he went thither without enquiring of the Lord: but this was the way to alienate the affections of the Iſraelites, and to give credit to the ſlanders of his accuſers: he thus run himſelf, and his men into temptations to idolatry; and he laid himſelf under obligations to thoſe, whom he could never favour, without betraying the cauſe of God.

V. 3. Dwelt with, &c.] Achiſh probably hoped that he ſhould be able to fix David in his intereſts, and employ him againſt the Iſraelites: or that he ſhould thus ſecure an advantageous alliance with him, if ever he came to be king of Iſrael.

V. 4. It was told Saul, &c.] Saul does not appear to have been cured of his malice, but the object of it was re-

to

to Gath: and he ſought no more again for him.

5 And David ſaid unto Achiſh, If I have now found grace in thine eyes, let them give me a place in ſome town in the country, that I may dwell there: for why ſhould thy ſervant dwell in the royal city with thee?

6 Then Achiſh gave him Ziklag that day: wherefore Ziklag pertaineth unto the kings of Judah unto this day.

7 And the time that David dwelt in the country of the Philiſtines was a full year and four months.

8 And David and his men went up, and invaded the Geſhurites, and the Gezrites, and the Amalekites: for thoſe nations were of old the inhabitants of the land, as thou goeſt to Shur, even unto the land of Egypt.

9 And David ſmote the land, and left neither man nor woman alive, and took away the ſheep, and the oxen, and the aſſes, and the camels, and the apparel, and returned and came to Achiſh.

10 And Achiſh ſaid, Whither have ye made a road to day? And David ſaid, Againſt the ſouth of Judah, and againſt the ſouth of the Jerahmeelites, and againſt the ſouth of the Kenites.

11 And David ſaved neither man nor woman alive, to bring tidings to Gath, ſaying, Leſt they ſhould tell on us, ſaying, So did David, and ſo will be his manner, all the while he dwelleth in the country of the Philiſtines.

12 And Achiſh believed David, ſaying, He hath made his people Iſrael utterly to abhor him; therefore he ſhall be my ſervant for ever.

moved out of his reach. Thus many ſeem reformed, not becauſe they are cured of their love of ſin, but becauſe they have no longer any opportunity of committing it.

V. 5. In ſome town, &c.] David wanted to avoid oſtentation, and to eſcape the effects of envy; and perhaps to be out of the way of temptation, more at leiſure for the exerciſes of religion, and more unembarraſſed in his whole conduct, than he could be near the court, and amongſt the nobles of King Achiſh. After the diviſion of the land, the Philiſtines had ſeized Ziklag; but in this manner it came again into the poſſeſſion of the Iſraelites.

V. 8—12.] Probably the Geſhurites, &c, were tribes of the Amalekites, or in alliance with them. We may therefore commend David for attempting to complete the work, which Saul had done by halves; and ſhould not cenſure the ſeverity, with which he conducted the war. Theſe nations lived to the ſouth of Judah; and he made Achiſh to believe that he had been fighting againſt his countrymen: and as intelligence was not then conveyed ſo eaſily, as at preſent, no one undeceived him; and he believed, that David had widened the breach betwixt himſelf and his people, ſo that it could not be healed: had he known the truth, he would have concluded, that David could not be detached from Iſrael, or united to their enemies. David's circumſtances naturally tempted him to this deceit, but it can by no means be juſtified.

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.

The ſtrongeſt believers cannot wholly exclude the incurſions of unbelief, under tedious trials, and when ſenſe, and reaſon, bring in no report of deliverance: many, under ſharp temptations, have overlooked former mercies, and experiences; forgotten the power, and promiſe of the Lord, and feared that ſin, and ſatan would finally prevail againſt them. When faith thus ſtaggers, obedience wavers, and ſinful expedients obtain the preference; which involve men more and more in difficulties, and temptations When we lean to our own underſtanding, and aſk not counſel of the Lord, we are ſure to do wrong: and we ought not to quit the path of duty, or to join intereſts with God's enemies, even for ſelf-preſervation, or out of care for our families: nor ſhould we willingly contract obligations, where we cannot conſiſtently make requitals of kindneſs. It is our wiſdom to ſhun notoriety, and to ſhelter ourſelves from envy; for obſcurity is commonly more ſafe and comfortable, and no leſs advantageous. But we muſt in no ſituation be wholly inactive, but muſt attempt ſomewhat in the cauſe of God and his people; even though ungratefully requited by thoſe, whom we would ſerve. The fear of man is ſo enſnaring, that we ſhould, if we can, keep out of thoſe places, where doing our duty will expoſe us to danger, or reproach. An equivocation, which ſerves the purpoſes of a lye, bears the ſame relation to it, that a hypocrite doth to a profane perſon: it is only apparently better, and therefore a more dangerous cheat. But though believers often betray their imperfections, they can never be prevailed upon to renounce the ſervice of God, and to unite intereſts with his enemies, or finally to become the ſervants of ſin and ſatan.

And

And Achiſh ſaid unto David, Know thou aſſuredly, that thou ſhalt go out with me to battle, thou and thy men.

2 And David ſaid to Achiſh, Surely thou ſhalt know what thy ſervant can do. And Achiſh ſaid to David, Therefore will I make thee keeper of mine head for ever.

3 Now Samuel was dead, and all Iſrael had lamented him, and buried him in Ramah, even in his own city. And Saul had put away thoſe that had familiar ſpirits, and the wizards, out of the land.

4 And the Philiſtines gathered themſelves together, and came and pitched in Shunem: and Saul gathered all Iſrael together, and they pitched in Gilboa.

5 And when Saul ſaw the hoſt of the Philiſtines, he was afraid, and his heart greatly trembled.

6 And when Saul enquired of the LORD, the LORD anſwered him not, neither by dreams, nor by Urim, nor by prophets.

7 Then ſaid Saul unto his ſervants, Seek me a woman that hath a familiar ſpirit, that I may go to her, and enquire of her. And his ſervants ſaid to him, Behold, there is a woman that hath a familiar ſpirit at En-dor.

8 And Saul diſguiſed himſelf, and put on other raiment, and he went, and two men with him, and they came to the woman by night: and he ſaid, I pray thee, divine unto me by the familiar ſpirit, and bring me him up, whom I ſhall name unto thee.

9 And the woman ſaid unto him, Behold, thou knoweſt what Saul hath done, how he hath cut off thoſe that have familiar ſpirits, and the wizards, out of the land: wherefore then layeſt thou a ſnare for my life, to cauſe me to die?

10 And Saul ſware to her by the LORD, ſaying, As the LORD liveth, there ſhall no puniſhment happen to thee for this thing.

11 Then ſaid the woman, Whom ſhall I bring up unto thee? And he ſaid, Bring me up Samuel.

NOTES.

CHAP. XXVIII.] V. 1, 2.] Achiſh required and expected David's aſſiſtance in the war againſt Iſrael, and promiſed him a high preferment in his ſervice, for his recompence: David could not refuſe withoutt he utmoſt danger: if he had promiſed it, and then either ſtood neuter, or gone over to the Iſraelites, he muſt have behaved with great ingratitude and treachery; and if he had fought againſt Iſrael, he would have been guilty of a great ſin, and have alienated the affections of his people, and perhaps have expoſed himſelf to the reproach of having murdered Saul. It ſeemed therefore impoſſible that he could extricate himſelf from this difficulty with a good conſcience, and a clear reputation. His evaſive anſwer, which was intended to gain time, but which Achiſh underſtood as a promiſe of effectual aſſiſtance, was ſcarce conſiſtent with the character of an Iſraelite, in whom there ſhould be no guile.

V. 3. Now Samuel, &c.] Perhaps the death of Samuel, and the abſence of David from his people, encouraged the Philiſtines to this war. But Saul had filled up his meaſure of iniquity, and the day was come, when he was to deſcend into battle and periſh. He had put away thoſe, that had familiar ſpirits, &c, from the land; perhaps before the Spirit of the Lord departed from him: perhaps when he was troubled with an evil ſpirit, he charged ſome of them as the cauſe of it: perhaps by his zeal in this reſpect he aimed to atone for his other ſins, that the kingdom might not be taken from him. Whatever was his motive, the thing itſelf was right.

V. 4, 5.] As Shunem, and Gilboa lay far north in the land, either this invaſion was very formidable, or Saul very negligent; or they could not have marched thus far, without being oppoſed. But his terror aroſe chiefly from his guilty conſcience. His contempt of Samuel, his murder of the prieſts, and his malicious perſecution of David, diſmayed his heart upon every recollection, and he foreboded his approaching doom.

V. 6. Saul enquired, &c.] Saul's enquiry was the reſult of his terror, without any humiliation for his ſins, or purpoſes of repentance, and therefore the Lord would not give him any anſwer. He did not enquire till his doom was ſealed, (Prov. c. i. v. 27, 28;) and then only in an hypocritical manner, (Ezek. c. xx. v. 1, 2:) and therefore it was the ſame as not enquiring at all; (1 Chron. c. x. v. 14.) After Abiathar fled to David, Saul probably employed ſome other perſon to officiate as High Prieſt: but neither by him, nor any prophet, nor in any other way, could he obtain an anſwer. The ſilence of the Lord proclaimed his deep indignation; and Saul ought the more deeply to have humbled himſelf, and to have perſevered in his applications to him: (Judges c. x. v. 10—16.) But he was given up to final impenitency; and therefore in impious defiance of God, he determined to conſult a witch!

V. 7, 8.] Saul imagined that a few ſtill ſecretly practiſed their diabolical arts: but nothing could exceed the preſumption of conſulting thoſe, whom he had, according to God's law, endeavoured to extirpate! And he diſguiſed himſelf, not only leſt the woman ſhould fear to uſe her incantations, if ſhe knew him, but leſt the people ſhould be exaſperated againſt him, if they were acquainted with the infamous tranſaction.

V. 9, 19.] Inſtead of being cut to the heart by the woman's ſuſpicion, which implied the moſt ſevere reproof; Saul profanely ſware by the Lord, that the woman ſhould to Gath: and he ſought no more again for him.

5 And David ſaid unto Achiſh, If I have now found grace in thine eyes, let them give me a place in ſome town in the country, that I may dwell there: for why ſhould thy ſervant dwell in the royal city with thee?

6 Then Achiſh gave him Ziklag that day: wherefore Ziklag pertaineth unto the kings of Judah unto this day.

7 And the time that David dwelt in the country of the Philiſtines was a full year and four months.

8 And David and his men went up, and invaded the Geſhurites, and the Gezrites, and the Amalekites: for thoſe nations were of old the inhabitants of the land, as thou goeſt to Shur, even unto the land of Egypt.

9 And David ſmote the land, and left neither man nor woman alive, and took away the ſheep, and the oxen, and the aſſes, and the camels, and the apparel, and returned and came to Achiſh.

10 And Achiſh ſaid, Whither have ye made a road to day? And David ſaid, Againſt the ſouth of Judah, and againſt the ſouth of the Jerahmeelites, and againſt the ſouth of the Kenites.

11 And David ſaved neither man nor woman alive, to bring tidings to Gath, ſaying, Leſt they ſhould tell on us, ſaying, So did David, and ſo will be his manner, all the while he dwelleth in the country of the Philiſtines.

12 And Achiſh believed David, ſaying, He hath made his people Iſrael utterly to abhor him; therefore he ſhall be my ſervant for ever.

moved out of his reach. Thus many ſeem reformed, not becauſe they are cured of their love of ſin, but becauſe they have no longer any opportunity of committing it.

V. 5. In ſome town, &c.] David wanted to avoid oſtentation, and to eſcape the effects of envy; and perhaps to be out of the way of temptation, more at leiſure for the exerciſes of religion, and more unembarraſſed in his whole conduct, than he could be near the court, and amongſt the nobles of King Achiſh. After the diviſion of the land, the Philiſtines had ſeized Ziklag; but in this manner it came again into the poſſeſſion of the Iſraelites.

V. 8—12.] Probably the Geſhurites, &c, were tribes of the Amalekites, or in alliance with them. We may therefore commend David for attempting to complete the work, which Saul had done by halves; and ſhould not cenſure the ſeverity, with which he conducted the war. Theſe nations lived to the ſouth of Judah; and he made Achiſh to believe that he had been fighting againſt his countrymen: and as intelligence was not then conveyed ſo eaſily, as at preſent, no one undeceived him; and he believed, that David had widened the breach betwixt himſelf and his people, ſo that it could not be healed: had he known the truth, he would have concluded, that David could not be detached from Iſrael, or united to their enemies. David's circumſtances naturally tempted him to this deceit, but it can by no means be juſtified.

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.

The ſtrongeſt believers cannot wholly exclude the incurſions of unbelief, under tedious trials, and when ſenſe, and reaſon, bring in no report of deliverance: many, under ſharp temptations, have overlooked former mercies, and experiences; forgotten the power, and promiſe of the Lord, and feared that ſin, and ſatan would finally prevail againſt them. When faith thus ſtaggers, obedience wavers, and ſinful expedients obtain the preference; which involve men more and more in difficulties, and temptations When we lean to our own underſtanding, and aſk not counſel of the Lord, we are ſure to do wrong: and we ought not to quit the path of duty, or to join intereſts with God's enemies, even for ſelf-preſervation, or out of care for our families: nor ſhould we willingly contract obligations, where we cannot conſiſtently make requitals of kindneſs. It is our wiſdom to ſhun notoriety, and to ſhelter ourſelves from envy; for obſcurity is commonly more ſafe and comfortable, and no leſs advantageous. But we muſt in no ſituation be wholly inactive, but muſt attempt ſomewhat in the cauſe of God and his people; even though ungratefully requited by thoſe, whom we would ſerve. The fear of man is ſo enſnaring, that we ſhould, if we can, keep out of thoſe places, where doing our duty will expoſe us to danger, or reproach. An equivocation, which ſerves the purpoſes of a lye, bears the ſame relation to it, that a hypocrite doth to a profane perſon: it is only apparently better, and therefore a more dangerous cheat. But though believers often betray their imperfections, they can never be prevailed upon to renounce the ſervice of God, and to unite intereſts with his enemies, or finally to become the ſervants of ſin and ſatan.

And Achish said unto David, Know thou assuredly, that thou shalt go out with me to battle, thou and thy men.

2 And David said to Achish, Surely thou shalt know what thy servant can do. And Achish said to David, Therefore will I make thee keeper of mine head for ever.

3 Now Samuel was dead, and all Israel had lamented him, and buried him in Ramah, even in his own city. And Saul had put away those that had familiar spirits, and the wizards, out of the land.

4 And the Philistines gathered themselves together, and came and pitched in Shunem: and Saul gathered all Israel together, and they pitched in Gilboa.

5 And when Saul saw the host of the Philistines, he was afraid, and his heart greatly trembled.

6 And when Saul enquired of the LORD, the LORD answered him not, neither by dreams, nor by Urim, nor by prophets.

7 Then said Saul unto his servants, Seek me a woman that hath a familiar spirit, that I may go to her, and enquire of her. And his servants said to him, Behold, there is a woman that hath a familiar spirit at En-dor.

8 And Saul disguised himself, and put on other raiment, and he went, and two men with him, and they came to the woman by night: and he said, I pray thee, divine unto me by the familiar spirit, and bring me him up, whom I shall name unto thee.

9 And the woman said unto him, Behold, thou knowest what Saul hath done, how he hath cut off those that have familiar spirits, and the wizards, out of the land: wherefore then layest thou a snare for my life, to cause me to die?

10 And Saul sware to her by the LORD, saying, As the LORD liveth, there shall no punishment happen to thee for this thing.

CHAP. XXVIII.] V. 1, 2.] Achish required and expected David's assistance in the war against Israel, and promised him a high preferment in his service, for his recompence: David could not refuse without the utmost danger: if he had promised it, and then either stood neuter, or gone over to the Israelites, he must have behaved with great ingratitude and treachery; and if he had fought against Israel, he would have been guilty of a great sin, and have alienated the affections of his people, and perhaps have exposed himself to the reproach of having murdered Saul. It seemed therefore impossible that he could extricate himself from this difficulty with a good conscience, and a clear reputation. His evasive answer, which was intended to gain time, but which Achish understood as a promise of effectual assistance, was scarce consistent with the character of an Israelite, in whom there should be no guile.

V. 3. Now Samuel, &c.] Perhaps the death of Samuel, and the absence of David from his people, encouraged the Philistines to this war. But Saul had filled up his measure of iniquity, and the day was come, when he was to descend into battle and perish. He had put away those, that had familiar spirits, &c, from the land; perhaps before the Spirit of the Lord departed from him: perhaps when he was troubled with an evil spirit, he charged some of them as the cause of it: perhaps by his zeal in this respect he aimed to atone for his other sins, that the kingdom might not be taken from him. Whatever was his motive, the thing itself was right.

V. 4, 5.] As Shunem, and Gilboa lay far north in the land, either this invasion was very formidable, or Saul very negligent; or they could not have marched thus far, without being opposed. But his terror arose chiefly from his guilty conscience. His contempt of Samuel, his murder of the priests, and his malicious persecution of David, dismayed his heart upon every recollection, and he foreboded his approaching doom.

V. 6. Saul enquired, &c.] Saul's enquiry was the result of his terror, without any humiliation for his sins, or purposes of repentance, and therefore the Lord would not give him any answer. He did not enquire till his doom was sealed, (Prov. c. i. v. 27, 28;) and then only in an hypocritical manner, (Ezek. c. xx. v. 1, 2:) and therefore it was the same as not enquiring at all; (1 Chron. c. x. v. 14.) After Abiathar fled to David, Saul probably employed some other person to officiate as High Priest: but neither by him, nor any prophet, nor in any other way, could he obtain an answer. The silence of the Lord proclaimed his deep indignation; and Saul ought the more deeply to have humbled himself, and to have persevered in his applications to him: (Judges c. x. v. 10—16.) But he was given up to final impenitency; and therefore in impious defiance of God, he determined to consult a witch!

V. 7, 8.] Saul imagined that a few still secretly practised their diabolical arts: but nothing could exceed the presumption of consulting those, whom he had, according to God's law, endeavoured to extirpate! And he disguised himself, not only lest the woman should fear to use her incantations, if she knew him, but lest the people should be exasperated against him, if they were acquainted with the infamous transaction.

V. 9, 19.] Instead of being cut to the heart by the woman's suspicion, which implied the most severe reproof; Saul profanely sware by the Lord, that the woman should cried with a loud voice: and the woman ſpake to Saul, ſaying, Why haſt thou deceived me? for thou art Saul.

13 And the king ſaid unto her, Be not afraid: for what ſaweſt thou? And the wowan ſaid unto Saul, I ſaw gods aſcending out of the earth.

14 And he ſaid unto her, what form is he of? And ſhe ſaid, An old man cometh up; and he is covered with a mantle. And Saul perceived that it was Samuel, and he ſtooped with his face to the ground, and bowed himſelf.

15 And Samuel ſaid to Saul, why haſt thou diſquieted me, to bring me up? And Saul anſwered, I am ſore diſtreſſed: for the Philiſtines make war againſt me, and God is departed from me, and anſwereth me no more, neither by prophets, nor by dreams: therefore I have called thee, that thou mayeſt make known unto me what I ſhall do.

16 Then ſaid Samuel, wherefore then doſt thou aſk of me, ſeeing the LORD is departed from thee, and is become thine enemy?

17 And the LORD hath done to him as he ſpake by me: for the LORD hath rent the kingdom out of thine hand, and given it to thy neighbour, even to David:

18 Becauſe thou obeyedſt not the voice of the LORD, nor executedſt his fierce wrath upon Amalek, therefore hath the LORD done this thing unto thee this day.

19 Moreover the LORD will alſo deliver Iſrael with thee into the hand of the Philiſtines: and to morrow ſhalt thou and thy ſons be with me: the LORD alſo ſhall deliver the hoſt of Iſrael into the hand of the Philiſtines.

20 Then Saul fell ſtraightway all along on the earth, and was ſore afraid, becauſe of the words of Samuel: and there was no ſtrength in him; for he had eaten no bread all the day, nor all the night.

21 And the woman came unto Saul, and ſaw that he was ſore troubled, and ſaid unto him, Behold, thine handmaid hath obeyed thy voice, and I have put my life in my hand, and have hearkened unto thy words which thou ſpakeſt unto me:

22 Now therefore, I pray thee, hearken thou alſo unto the voice of thine handmaid, and let me ſet a morſel of bread before thee; and eat, that thou mayeſt have ſtrength, when thou goeſt on thy way.

23 But he refuſed, and ſaid, I will not eat. But his ſervants, together with the woman, compelled him: and he hearkened unto their voice. So he aroſe from the earth, and ſat upon the bed.

24 And the woman had a fat calf in the not be puniſhed for violating God's expreſs commands. She would underſtand this merely as an engagement not to inform againſt her: but Saul thereby ſware not to do his duty: and both of them acted almoſt atheiſtically, when one engaged, and the other was ſatisfied with the engagement, that no puniſhment ſhould happen to her, for ſinning againſt God: yet moſt abſurdly, as well as impiouſly, a ſolemn oath was the ſecurity in ſo vile a buſineſs.

V. 11. Bring me up Samuel, &c.] That is the departed ſoul of Samuel, in the form in which he appeared in, when alive. Samuel had anointed Saul, and often counſelled him for his good: and though during the latter part of his life, he had neglected him: yet he was convinced, that it was better with him, when he had regarded his advice; and therefore nothing could now ſerve him, but a conference with the departed prophet: and he was ſo ignorant as to ſuppoſe, that the woman, by means of her familiar ſpirit, could bring him up for that purpoſe, even without the Lord's permiſſion: and ſhe probably expected to impoſe upon her conſulter, by ſome ſatanical apparition.

V. 12—19. When the woman, &c.] Her incantations are paſſed over in ſilence. It is much diſputed who it was, that appeared on this occaſion. The whole narrative manifeſts, that it was no human impoſture. Many pious men take it for granted, that it was ſatan, perſonating Samuel, though the text gives no intimations to that effect: and it does not appear reconcileable to the ſimplicity of ſcripture language; nor is it adviſeable to give thoſe men any countenance, who, to ſupport a favourite ſyſtem, put a forced conſtruction upon the words of holy writ, very different to their obvious meaning. And ſcarce any of their interpretations can ſound harſher, than the inſertion in every place, where Samuel was mentioned, "that it "was ſatan, perſonating Samuel!" It is argued that the woman's incantations could have no power over a glorified ſaint: but an evil ſpirit could not come at her call without the Lord's permiſſion; and he might ſee good that one ſhould come from the dead at this time; and though the woman was not the cauſe of Samuel's being ſent, Saul's enquiry might be the occaſion of it: and the word "diſ-"quieted," ſeems to be uſed merely in accommodation to the general notions of mankind on that ſubject: And the woman's ſurpriſe and terror proved, that it was an unuſual and unexpected appearance; and not the ordinary effect of her art: (Note Exod. c. vii. v. 12.) It is further urged that the apparition's diſcourſe tended to drive Saul house; and she hasted, and killed it, and took flour, and kneaded it, and did bake unleavened bread thereof:

to despair, which is one of satan's temptation's; and that it contained no exhortations to repentance, which were usual with the prophets. But Elijah's message to Ahaziah (2 Kings, c. i. v. 6;) Daniel's address to Belshazzar, and even Christ's discourse in the presence of Judas, were equally calculated to drive them to despair; and equally void of exhortations to repent, or proposals of mercy. Saul had despised Samuel's solemn warnings in his life-time; yet now he hoped, as it were in defiance of God, to obtain some counsel, and encouragement from him: and why might not God permit the soul of his departed prophet to appear to Saul, and confirm his former sentence, and denounce his irrevocable doom? It was not beyond the power of God, nor, that I can see, any ways unworthy of him; but rather a declaration of his immutable, and irreversible truth and justice. Satan could not have predicted the several events, (which for ought appears came to pass accordingly,) without being inspired of God to do so, and it would seem to give more countenance to consulting witches: if God, on such an occasion, should inspire satan to prophesy by them; than if Samuel were sent with this tremendous message from God, when Saul consulted one of them. Indeed this would operate to discourage such attempts; as the bootless request of the rich man in hell to Abraham is calculated to discourage praying to departed saints. The local situation of departed spirits is so concealed from us, that the circumstance of the spirit apparently arising out of the earth, forms no real objection against its being the soul of Samuel: and the expression, "shalt thou, and thy sons be "with me," means no more, than that they should be in the eternal world; and it was suited to impress the idea of a future state, and determined nothing against the different conditions of the righteous and the wicked therein. Upon the whole, there appears much solemnity in God's for once permitting the soul of a departed prophet to make his appearance, as a witness from heaven; and in sending him to confirm the word, which he spake on earth; thereby evincing, that the words of the prophets would surely take effect; and to sit in judgment upon a proud enemy of God, who foolishly sought encouragement in his impenitency, and by the most atrocious crimes. And this interpretation is certainly more obvious, and suited to the apprehensions of the unlearned reader, and according to the general simplicity of the scriptures: and they should be unanswerable arguments and objections, which should constrain us to suppose, that when the Holy Ghost said Samuel, he meant satan; not speaking by Samuel, as he did by the serpent, and by the demoniacks; but actually counterfeiting his shape, and speaking with his voice, when Samuel himself was in every sense absent from the place. The venerable appearance of Samuel, or somewhat that he uttered, convinced the woman, that it was Saul who consulted her. Saul's bowing down before him, was not an act of religious worship, any more than Abigail's bowing down before David. The answer of Samuel was very suited to his character, and the occasion: in vain was it to consult the servant, when the Lord was become his enemy: the Lord was only doing to Saul, or "for himself," (17,) as he declared he would: and as he knew him to be finally given up, he neither gave him counsel, nor comfort.

V. 25. Then they rose up, &c.] Saul, though terrified even to desperation, was not humbled! a miserable state he was indeed reduced to, when the witch was his only comforter! But he confessed not his sins, offered no sacrifices, and presented no supplications, that we find: nor does he seem to have been concerned about his sons, or his people; or to have attempted any escape; but in sullen despair to have rushed upon his doom.

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.

When we in the least deviate from the plain path of duty, every circumstance will draw us further aside, and increase our perplexity, and temptation: and needless intimacies with, or obligations to the avowed enemies of the true religion, will reduce us, ere we are aware, to the necessity of being unfaithful to our God, or treacherous, and ungrateful to our benefactors. And we shall scarce ever be able, in such a situation, to open our mouths with that candour, and simplicity, which become Christians. When death hath removed, or persecution hath expelled God's ministers, and servants, a land is deprived of its best defence, and its enemies have their best opportunity of preparing war against it. Hypocrites are frequently very zealous against those crimes, to which they are not tempted, or from which they suffer, or apprehend detriment: and apostates commonly fall into those sins, which they were most earnest in opposing. Ungodly persons fear the reproach of man, or the punishments, denounced by human laws, more than the wrath of God: They do not therefore forsake their sins, but dissemble their real characters, and conceal their conduct; and deem all well if they escape detection: but frequently they are employed to rebuke, or correct each other, either for their present conviction, or their future deeper condemnation. When habits of perjury, or profane swearing have been contracted, the sacred name of God, and the most solemn oaths, are often introduced in the midst of the most horrible wickedness, and made the obligations and encouragements to the most enormous crimes! But the malignity of such impiety cannot be expressed in any language. All real, or pretended witchcraft, &c, is a malicious, or ignorant attempt, to gain intelligence, or assistance from some creature, when it cannot be had, or is not sought from the Lord in the path of duty: and is therefore essentially idolatry, and virtually the worship of the devil: but of such works of darkness it is best to be totally ignorant. Many, who despise the Lord's servants whilst they live, are so far convinced of their wisdom, and fidelity, that they vainly wish for their counsel, and instruction, in distressing circumstances, after their death. But in that blessed world, to which they are removed, they have done with fear, favour, and affection, and are become more determined than ever in the service, and cause of God: and were they to appear, they would denounce the doom of impenitent sinners with more dread-

NOW the Philiſtines gathered together all their armies to Aphek: and the Iſraelites pitched by a fountain which is in Jezreel.

2 And the lords of the Philiſtines paſſed on by hundreds, and by thouſands: but David and his men paſſed on in the rere-ward with Achiſh.

3 Then ſaid the princes of the Philiſtines, What do theſe Hebrews here? And Achiſh ſaid unto the princes of the Philiſtines, Is not this David, the ſervant of Saul the king of Iſrael, which hath been with me theſe days, or theſe years, and I have found no fault in him ſince he fell unto me unto this day?

4 And the princes of the Philiſtines were wroth with him; and the princes of the Philiſtines ſaid unto him, Make this fellow return, that he may go again to his place which thou haſt appointed him, and let him not go down with us to battle, leſt in the battle he be an adverſary to us: for wherewith ſhould he reconcile himſelf unto his maſter? ſhould it not be with the heads of theſe men?

5 Is not this David, of whom they ſang one to another in dances, ſaying, Saul ſlew his thouſands, and David his ten thouſands?

6 Then Achiſh called David, and ſaid unto him, Surely, as the LORD liveth, thou haſt been upright, and thy going out and thy coming in with me in the hoſt is good in my ſight; for I have not found evil in thee ſince the day of thy coming unto me unto this day: nevertheleſs the lords favour thee not.

ful deciſion than ever. Wretched indeed are they, who in great outward diſtreſs can obtain no help or comfort from the Lord! What can they expect either from good or evil men, holy, or unholy ſpirits! Neither the ſervants, nor the enemies of God, can do them any ſervice: and every thing combines to drive them to deſperation. This ſatan labours to effect, and God is ſometimes pleaſed to permit him: nay the very teſtimony of his word, and miniſters, concur in convincing the poor wretch, "that there "remains nothing, but a certain fearful looking for of "judgment, and fiery indignation!" And the remembrance of former crimes, convictions, warnings, and relapſes into ſin, help to aſſure him of the certainty, and juſtice of his doom. Yet all theſe things do not humble, or ſoften him; for it is "impoſſible to renew him to re-"pentance:" and not having "believed Moſes and the "prophets, neither will they be perſuaded though one roſe "from the dead:" but either in ſullen, or in furious deſpair he waits; or meets his doom. In every age God ſets up a few ſuch beacons for a tremendous warning to their fellow-ſinners, not to liſten to temptations, to ſtifle convictions, or deſpiſe the word of God: and to beware of hypocriſy, apoſtacy, procraſtination, or other great wickedneſs: for none are given up of God to this deſperation, who have not provoked him to it by their previous crimes. But whilſt one relenting thought remains no ſinner ſhould ever ſuppoſe himſelf in this caſe. God will not indeed hear the prayer of the unhumbled, and impenitent; and many enquire of him in vain, becauſe they are not in earneſt: when therefore they meet not with encouragement, they detect their own hypocriſy, by giving up their religious duties, plunging again into ſin, and ſeeking help from the world, and the god of this world. But let the diſcouraged enquirer perſevere in knocking at mercy's gate, until it be opened: let him humble himſelf more, and more before God, and determine to live, and die ſupplicating his favour; and he will be ſure at length to ſucceed. Let us all learn "to ſeek the Lord, while he may "be found, and to call upon him, whilſt he is near," and without reſerve to obey his voice, and do his will. Finally though ſubjects ſuffer with their wicked governors, and children with their parents; yet it either is for their own ſins, or their ſufferings will work for them a far more exceeding, and eternal weight of glory.

NOTES.

CHAP. XXIX.] V. 2. In the rere-ward, &c.] Probably David was undetermined how to act on this occaſion, and waited with a ſecret hope, that the Lord would help him out of this difficulty. But he ſeems to have been influenced too much by the fear of man, in ſo readily conſenting to attend Achiſh, when he might have framed very plauſible excuſes, for declining that ſervice: however the Lord was pleaſed to bring him off with credit.

V. 6. And Achiſh, &c.] Theſe lords, or princes, poſſeſſed ſo much authority in their own cities, and in the camp, at the head of their troops, and were ſo decided againſt employing David, that Achiſh would not venture their diſpleaſure in retaining him. The high opinion that he had of him, and the confidence which he repoſed in him: and his commendations of him both before his face, and to the lords, would have been honourable, to him; if they had not been in part, the effect of deception. When Achiſh ſware by Jehovah, that he did not ſend David away, for any ſuſpicion that he entertained of him, he ſhewed that he had collected ſome notions at leaſt concerning the true God, and his worſhip.

7 Wherefore now return, and go in peace, that thou diſpleaſe not the lords of the Philiſtines.

8 And David ſaid unto Achiſh, But what have I done? and what haſt thou found in thy ſervant, ſo long as I have been with thee unto this day, that I may not go to fight againſt the enemies of my lord the king?

9 And Achiſh anſwered and ſaid to David, I know that thou art good in my ſight, as an angel of God: notwithſtanding, the princes of the Philiſtines have ſaid, He ſhall not go up with us to the battle.

10 Wherefore now riſe up early in the morning, with thy maſter's ſervants that are come with thee: and as ſoon as ye be up early in the morning, and have light, depart.

11 So David and his men roſe up early to depart in the morning, to return into the land of the Philiſtines. And the Philiſtines went up to Jezreel.

Their grief, and reſentment; David's diſtreſs, enquiry of the Lord, and purſuit of the enemy; v. 4—10. 3d. Their ſurpriſal of them by means of a ſlave, recovering all, and taking much ſpoil; and the manner, in which it was diſpoſed of, v. 11—31.

AND it came to paſs, when David and his men were come to Ziklag on the third day, that the Amalekites had invaded the ſouth, and Ziklag, and ſmitten Ziklag, and burned it with fire;

2 And had taken the women captives, that were therein: they ſlew not any, either great or ſmall, but carried them away, and went on their way.

3 So David and his men came to the city, and, behold, it was burnt with fire; and their wives, and their ſons, and their daughters, were taken captives.

V. 8. What have I done, &c.] David could not but rejoice at this occurrence; and yet he would not have Achiſh think that he did; and therefore he pretended a deſire "to fight with the enemies of my lord the "king:" which words Achiſh would underſtand of the Iſraelites, but which were ambiguous, as ſeveral of his ſpeeches were on this occaſion: ſo hard is it in ſuch circumſtances to avoid all diſingenuity, and flattery, either from fear, or courteſy!

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.

Whilſt the preſumptuous ſinner is given up to the effects of his own counſels, and driven headlong to deſtruction: the ſins of the upright ſhall be pardoned; and the Lord will take care both of their peace, and reputation. He ſees many ways of extricating us out of difficulties, when we can perceive no way of eſcape: and whilſt ungodly men are purſuing their own purpoſes, and following their own judgments, he ſecretly influences them to ſuch determinations, as ſubſerve the good of his people, and preſerve them from ſin, and temptation. Reputation, eſteem, and affection frequently become our ſnares: whilſt reproaches, contempt, and injurious ſuſpicions prove beneficial: and the ill uſage of the wicked, by which we are driven from them, is much better for us, than that friendſhip, which draws us amongſt them. When worldly people have no evil thing to ſay of us, but will bear teſtimony to our uprightneſs, we need deſire no more from them: this we ſhould aim at by prudence, meekneſs, and a blameleſs life. But their flattering commendations are almoſt always purchaſed by improper compliances, or ſome meaſure of deception, and may therefore commonly cover a profeſſor of godlineſs with confuſion. It is ſeldom prudent to place great confidence in one, who hath changed ſides; except as the fear of God influences a true convert to conſcientious fidelity. Obſcurity, or the company of thoſe, who are of one heart with us, are generally more ſafe, comfortable, and honourable, than high ſtations in the palaces of the ungodly. And David in the cave was more worthy of our imitation, than when a favourite in the camp of king Achiſh: and he ſcarce ever had a greater deliverance, than when he was diſmiſſed from that enſnaring ſervice.

NOTES.

CHAP. XXX.] V. 1. On the third day, &c.] Ziklag ſeems to have been ſituated three days march from the camp of the Philiſtines. David did not receive the news of Saul's death till ſeveral days after he left Achiſh: but we cannot argue any thing from thence concerning the battle not being fought on the morrow, after Saul conſulted the witch of Endor: for they form diſtinct narrations, and no date is fixed to the latter. The Lord had extricated David reputably from his enſnaring ſituation: but he ſeverely rebuked him for his miſconduct, by this calamity, that came upon Ziklag in his abſence. He might reaſonably have expected that the Amalekites would watch their opportunity of retaliating upon him: and his fear of offending Achiſh made him very improvident, in leaving the city, with the women and children in it, without any guard. The Amalekites were wonderfully reſtrained from ſlaying them, after the example which had been ſet them; preferring the profit of enſlaving them, to the pleaſure of revenge: for God intended to rebuke David, but not to permit his family and friends to be deſtroyed.

4 Then David and the people that were with him lifted up their voice and wept, until they had no more power to weep.

5 And David's two wives were taken captives, Ahinoam the Jezreeliteſs, and Abigail, the wife of Nabal the Carmelite.

6 And David was greatly diſtreſſed; for the people ſpake of ſtoning him, becauſe the ſoul of all the people was grieved, every man for his ſons and for his daughters: but David encouraged himſelf in the LORD his God.

7 And David ſaid to Abiathar the prieſt, Ahimelech's ſon. I pray thee bring me hither the ephod. And Abiathar brought thither the ephod to David.

8 And David enquired at the LORD, ſaying, Shall I purſue after this troop? ſhall I overtake them? And he anſwered him, Purſue; for thou ſhalt ſurely overtake them, and without fail recover all.

9 So David went, he and the ſix hundred men that were with him, and came to the brook Beſor, where thoſe that were left behind ſtayed.

10 But David purſued, he and four hundred men: for two hundred abode behind, which were ſo faint that they could not go over the brook Beſor.

11 And they found an Egyptian in the field, and brought him to David, and gave him bread, and he did eat; and they made him drink water;

12 And they gave him a piece of a cake of figs, and two cluſters of raiſins: and when he had eaten, his ſpirit came again to him: for he had eaten no bread, nor drunk any water, three days and three nights.

13 And David ſaid unto him, To whom belongeſt thou? and whence art thou? And he ſaid, I am a young man of Egypt, ſervant to an Amalekite; and my maſter left me, becauſe three days agone I fell ſick.

14 We made an invaſion upon the ſouth of the Cherethites, and upon the coaſt which belongeth to Judah, and upon the ſouth of Caleb; and we burned Ziklag with fire.

15 And David ſaid unto him, Canſt thou bring me down to this company? And he ſaid, Swear unto me by God, that thou wilt neither kill me, nor deliver me into the hands of my maſter, and I will bring thee down to this company.

16 And when he had brought him down, behold, they were ſpread abroad upon all the earth, eating and drinking, and dancing, becauſe of all the great ſpoil that they had

V. 6. David encouraged, &c.] David's loſs of his wives and children, the deſolations of the city, the anguiſh of his followers, who, not entirely without reaſon, were enraged againſt him for thus expoſing their families, all tended to enhance his diſtreſs: at the ſame time he muſt conſider all his calamities as reſulting from his unbelief, in leaving the land of Judah, in being ſo much afraid of Achiſh, and in neglecting to conſult the Lord. But in the midſt of all theſe complicated troubles, his ſpirit was ſoon calmed and encouraged: he neither murmured againſt God, nor reſented the rage of his ſoldiers, nor deſpaired of redreſs, nor confided in his own valour, or conduct; "but "he encouraged himſelf in the Lord his God:" he meditated upon the divine perfections; upon his promiſes to him; and his paſt experience of his faithfulneſs: and upon the relations, in which the Lord ſtood to him, as his worſhipper and ſervant, who had been enabled to chooſe him, as his ſalvation and portion. Thus he was encouraged to expect forgiveneſs, protection, and help, and a favourable event, notwithſtanding external appearances.

V. 7. Bring me hither, &c.] No time was now to be loſt; and as his troubles originated from neglecting to enquire of the Lord, he immediately conſulted him by the High Prieſt: and his anſwer quieted the minds of his followers; and they were willing to march in purſuit of the ravagers.

V. 9, 10. Thoſe that were left, &c.] With the fatigue of their former march, continued in this new expedition, and the anguiſh of their ſpirits, they became ſo faint, that they could proceed no further. But though David's ſmall troop was reduced, and he might fear, that the others would be unable to proceed, his faith did not fail "him; for he ſtill encouraged himſelf in the Lord his "God."

V. 11—15.] This ſick ſlave was of ſmall value to his maſter, and was likely to be an incumbrance: the life of a fellow creature was rated at nothing; and therefore he inhumanly left him to periſh: but in the righteous providence of God this cruelty occaſioned the deſtruction of the army: whilſt David's kindneſs to a periſhing ſtranger, and ſlave, was the means of his ſignal ſucceſs, and proved to be the reſult of true policy. This Egyptian, who feared being delivered up to his maſter, as much as death, deemed the oath of an Iſraelite by his God a ſufficient ſecurity for his preſervation.

V. 16. They were ſpread, &c.] The Amalekites probably knew that the Iſraelites, and the Philiſtines were engaged in war at a great diſtance; and therefore deeming themſelves ſecure, they very imprudently began to riot on taken out of the land of the Philiſtines, and out of the land of Judah.

17 And David ſmote them from the twilight even unto the evening of the next day: and there eſcaped not a man of them, ſave four hundred young men which rode upon camels, and fled.

18 And David recovered all that the Amalekites had carried away: and David reſcued his two wives.

19 And there was nothing lacking to them, neither ſmall nor great, neither ſons nor daughters, neither ſpoil, nor any thing that they had taken to them: David recovered all.

20 And David took all the flocks and the herds, which they drave before thoſe other cattle, and ſaid, This is David's ſpoil.

21 And David came to the two hundred men, which were ſo faint that they could not follow David, whom they had made alſo to abide at the brook Beſor: and they went forth to meet David, and to meet the people that were with him: and when David came near to the people, he ſaluted them.

22 Then anſwered all the wicked men and men of Belial, of thoſe that went with David, and ſaid, Becauſe they went not with us, we will not give them ought of the ſpoil that we have recovered, ſave to every man his wife and his children, that they may lead them away, and depart.

23 Then ſaid David, Ye ſhall not do ſo, my brethren, with that which the LORD hath given us, who hath preſerved us, and delivered the company that came againſt us into our hand.

24 For who will hearken unto you in this matter? but as his part is that goeth down to the battle, ſo ſhall his part be that tarrieth by the ſtuff: they ſhall part alike.

25 And it was ſo from that day forward, that he made it a ſtatute and an ordinance for Iſrael unto this day.

26 And when David came to Ziklag, he ſent of the ſpoil unto the elders of Judah, even to his friends, ſaying, Behold a preſent for you of the ſpoil of the enemies of the LORD;

27 To them which were in Beth-el, and to them which were in ſouth Ramoth, and to them which were in Jattir,

28 And to them which were in Aroer, and to them which were in Siphmoth, and to them which were in Eſhtemoa,

29 And to them which were in Rachal, and to them which were in the cities of the Jerahmeelites, and to them which were in the cities of the Kenites,

30 And to them which were in Hormah, and to them which were in Chor-aſhan, and to them which were in Athach, 31 And to them which were in Hebron, and to all the places where David himſelf and his men were wont to haunt.

the abundance, which they had taken, without any guards being placed, to give notice of an enemy's approach.

V. 20.] Beſides the cattle, which had been taken from the ſeveral countries, that the Amalekites had ravaged, perhaps David entered their lands, and fetched away their cattle alſo.

V. 22. The wicked men, &c.] We hope that many of David's men had profited by his example, and inſtructions: but there were wicked men of Belial amongſt them, who wanted to ſeize the property of their fellow-ſoldiers; becauſe they had not been able to go with them. But David's anſwer was full of piety, equity, and meekneſs, and prevailed againſt their unjuſt propoſals.

V. 26. To his friends, &c.] To thoſe who ſecretly favoured and aſſiſted him, when perſecuted by Saul. Theſe preſents not only expreſſed his generoſity; but were the reſult of true policy; and were the firſt fruits of the advantages, they were to expect from his friendſhip. Keilah, and the Ziphites are not mentioned in this liſt. Forgiveneſs, and aſſiſtance in diſtreſs are to be ſhewn to enemies: but gratitude at all times is due to our friends.

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.

When we leave our families, we cannot foreſee what may befal them, or ourſelves, ere we return: we ought therefore to commit ourſelves, and each other to the divine protection, and to render to God unfeigned thanks, when we meet, from time to time, in peace, and ſafety. It is wiſdom at all times to moderate our expectations of earthly comfort, leſt we ſhould, by being too ſanguine, meet with the more diſtreſſing diſappointments. Many of our troubles may be traced from our imprudence; all of them in one way or other, originate from our ſins. Inordinate paſſions blind men's minds: exceſſive fear of one danger, cauſes them to overlook others, ſtill more formidable: and they, who by any means give offence to others, may lay their account with, and ſhould prepare for retaliations. But the Lord reſtrains the rage of the moſt barbarous, and by letting loose one carnal principle to counteract another, wicked men proceed as far, as his purposes require, and no further: and by various instruments he rebukes, and chastens his offending people, but restrains all from doing them essential detriment. Generous minds are most susceptible of rational affections, and the bravest are not disgraced by mourning the loss, or the sufferings of beloved relations: but all our passions are prone to excess; and unless the fear of God possess our hearts, we shall fret against him under our afflictions, and vent our impatience against the guilty, or innocent occasions of them: and thus our helpers may become our terror, or our destroyers. Conscious guilt, and a sense of the divine displeasure form the keenest aggravations of a believer's distress: yet the very reflection, which pains and humbles his heart, silences the tempest of his passions, and induces hope in God, who chastens, that he may not condemn. The Lord is rich in mercy, and ready to forgive: the greatest sinner, when first he approaches the mercy-seat, in the Redeemer's name, with penitent confessions, and fervent prayers, may be encouraged to expect salvation for his soul, and assistance in all his troubles: but the believer, who hath long trusted in his mercy, chosen him for his portion, walked with him in his ordinances, sought his glory, and experienced his faithfulness, power, and love; notwithstanding his failures, and his conscious unworthiness, may with confidence "encourage himself in the Lord his God," in the most extreme danger and distress. Bitter complaints, and mutual recriminations are of no use in the hour of trouble: we are then called to perform the present duty; and to enquire the Lord's will by searching the Scriptures and prayer: and when our sins are forgiven, and we act by the Lord's direction, we shall soon recover all, and be enriched by our very losses, and trials: and even if our companions cannot, or will not help us, the Lord himself will be for us, "the God of Jacob will be our refuge." Some of those, who are cordially attached to the cause of God, are less capable of hard services, than others: but he mercifully accepts them; and so should their brethren. It is good policy, as well as charity, to relieve the meanest in their distresses; for in some great emergency the Lord may enable them to render us the most important services: but he will certainly punish inhumanity to the poor, and the sick; especially that of masters to their sick, and afflicted servants. The success, and abundance of ungodly men, increasing their presumption, and being spent upon their lusts, frequently accelerates their destruction: and sensual indulgence is a common introduction to weeping, wailing, and gnashing of teeth. In the most favoured companies will be found selfish men, who being ungrateful to God for his kindness, will enrich, or pamper themselves, whilst they leave their more deserving, though less prosperous brethren to starve. But they, who consider the Lord as the giver of their abundance, will dispose of it with equity, and in liberality: they will employ their influence to restrain the injustice of others; and take occasion from evil suggestions to establish useful precedents: and instead of spending their wealth upon their lusts, will share it with their friends, and with the poor. Thus subserving their most important future interests, with the very mammon of unrighteousness. In this manner Jesus divides the spoil of his victories with the meanest of his followers. And though the rebellious are now invited to accept of mercy, and participate his favour: yet if they will not have him to reign over them, they shall receive no benefit from his redemption: the blessings of which will be confined to his friends, who trust in, and love him, and keep his commandments.

NOTES.

CHAP. XXXI.] V. 2. Slew Jonathan, &c.] Probably Saul never informed his sons of what he had been told concerning his own, and their approaching death; and therefore they were in the army, and slain before his eyes. By this means David's way to the throne was cleared: for if so many Israelites stood up for the rights of Ishbosheth, who was a very insignificant person; many more would have been strenuous for Jonathan. And though he would have conceded to David, his brethren and the people would probably have made much opposition to his succession. But the Lord removed him to a better world, that his anointed might be more readily established in the kingdom.

V. 4. And abuse me, &c.] Saul, when sore wounded, and unable to resist, or to flee, expressed no concern about his immortal soul; but only desired to be speedily dispatched, that the Philistines might not insult over, and put him to pain. His armour-bearer seems not to have either feared death, or the guilt of murder, or the wrath of God: but he had that reverence for the person of his prince, that he was incapable of lifting up his hand against him: and thus Saul became his own murderer; and his armour-bearer, in a mad, and foolish expression of his respect, and affection, imitated his example. armour-bearer would not; for he was ſore afraid: therefore Saul took a ſword, and fell upon it.

5 And when his armour-bearer ſaw that Saul was dead, he fell likewiſe upon his ſword, and died with him.

6 So Saul died, and his three ſons, and his armour-bearer, and all his men, that ſame day together.

7 And when the men of Iſrael that were on the other ſide of the valley, and they that were on the other ſide Jordan, ſaw that the men of Iſrael fled, and that Saul and his ſons were dead, they forſook the cities and fled; and the Philiſtines came and dwelt in them.

8 And it came to paſs on the morrow, when the Philiſtines came to ſtrip the ſlain, that they found Saul and his three ſons fallen in mount Gilboa.

9 And they cut off his head, and ſtripped off his armour, and ſent into the land of the Philiſtines round about, to publiſh it in the houſe of their idols, and among the people.

10 And they put his armour in the houſe of Aſhtaroth; and they faſtened his body to the wall of Beth-ſhan.

11 And when the inhabitants of Jabeſh-gilead heard of that which the Philiſtines had done to Saul, 12 All the valiant men aroſe, and went all night, and took the body of Saul, and the bodies of his ſons, from the wall of Beth-ſhan, and came to Jabeſh, and burnt them there.

likewiſe murdered themſelves; and I recollect not any other inſtances in ſcripture of this practice. And when the characters of the ſcripture ſuicides are conſidered, it confirms the opinion, which hath been advanced of the enormous guilt, and direful conſequences of this crime; (Note, Exod. c. xx. v. 13.) Men, either madly preſuming upon, or deſpairing of God's mercy, to eſcape temporal ſufferings, or diſgrace, deſpiſe his gift of life, ruſh uncalled unto his tribunal, by an act of direct rebellion againſt his authority, and in proud defiance of his juſtice, with the guilt of all their unrepented crimes upon their heads. Yet ſo exceedingly hath ſatan blinded men's minds, that this worſt of murders, when really intended, has been held honourable in many ages, places, and ſituations, and hath often been committed out of vainglory, in imitation of, or from affection to thoſe, who have obtained renown amongſt their fellow-ſinners: by which means force has been added to his temptation. The Jews ſay, that Doeg was Saul's armour-bearer, having been preferred for ſlaying the prieſts of the Lord: if ſo, his death was worthy of his life. Saul's ſons, and ſervants, died in the performance of their duty to him, and to their country: but he, and his armour-bearer, died in direct violation of God's commandment.

V. 7. On the other ſide, &c.] That is, the cities, which lay between the field of battle, and the river Jordan. This was the effect of their rejecting the Lord, and his prophet, and demanding a king. (Hoſea, c. xiii. v. 10, 11.)

V. 8—10.] The Philiſtines ſent the head of Saul to be faſtened in the temple of Dagon, and his armour in that of Aſhtaroth; (1 Chron. c. x. v. 9;) in memorial of their victory, and in honour of their idols: but his body, and thoſe of his ſons, they faſtened to the wall of Beth-ſhan, a city near the field of battle. Thus Saul eſcaped being tortured by them, but ſcarce ever was a dead body more inhumanly abuſed. As by the death of Saul, way was made for David to aſcend the throne, they had no great cauſe to triumph on that account.

V. 11—13.] This conduct of the men of Jabeſh-gilead was a becoming expreſſion of gratitude to Saul, as their deliverer in the beginning of his reign, and a proper rebuke to the barbarity of the Philiſtines: probably they burned the bodies, leſt the Philiſtines ſhould recover, and further abuſe them. They faſted ſeven days until the evening, as a token of their ſorrow, and humiliation under the divine rebuke, and perhaps joined their ſolemn prayers. But there was no general lamentation made for Saul, as there had been for the prophet Samuel.

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.

The objects of the divine diſpleaſure are not only wretched themſelves, but the cauſe of calamities to all around them: but though the righteous may be involved with them in temporal troubles, and death; they will be ſeparated from them in the other world, and poſſeſs eternal happineſs, whilſt they ſink into everlaſting miſery: and frequently men's behaviour in the cloſing ſcene of life ſtrongly indicates their ſtate beyond the grave. How ſhould we watch and pray, that we may not be given up to preſumption, or deſpair; but may be enabled patiently to bear the evils of life, and quietly to hope for the ſalvation of the Lord, that ſatan may not tempt us to the horrible ſin of ſelf-murder! It is comparatively of little conſequence, in what manner, or with what circumſtances we die, or what is done with our dead bodies: if our ſouls are ſaved, they alſo will be raiſed at laſt incorruptible, and glorious: but to be anxious to avoid pain, or diſgrace from men, and not to fear his wrath, who is able to deſtroy both body, and ſoul in hell, is the extreme of infatuation and impiety: yet even in theſe worthleſs matters ungodly men are often diſappointed of their expectations. Indeed every worldly object, that is inordinately craved, will become our trouble; and the deſire, the poſſeſſion, and the loſs of it will all be ſources of uneaſineſs to us. When inhumanity, and impiety attend proſperity, it will be ſhort-lived: and the

The Second Book of SAMUEL,

OTHERWISE CALLED

The Second Book of the KINGS.

This book derives its name from Samuel, though he was dead before the commencement of its hiſtory, becauſe he anointed that king, whoſe actions are therein recorded. It opens with David's acceſſion to the throne, his gradual prevalence againſt the houſe of Saul, and his eſtabliſhment in the kingdom; it proceeds to relate his victories over his enemies on every ſide, and enlargement of the poſſeſſion, and advancement of the proſperity of Iſrael; and his reformation of the ſtate of religion amongſt them. But with theſe more pleaſing events are recorded the grievous ſins, which he committed, and the domeſtic, and public calamities, with which he was chaſtiſed. Theſe as a dark cloud cover the latter part of the hiſtory of this book, (which brings us almoſt to the cloſe of his reign of forty years,) yet through all, his character ſhines very bright, in many inſtances, and we learn from another place (1 Chron. c. xxviii. xxix.) that he cloſed his life in a very honourable manner. We ſhall here meet with many things worthy of our imitation; and many that are recorded for our warning: the bias of our fallen nature to ſin, and the efficacy of divine grace in renewing the ſoul to repentance and holineſs, are therein illuſtrated: and ſuch a view is given of the methods of God's providence towards his people, as is ſuited to excite our hopes, and our fears, and to teach us to unite holy joy with watchfulneſs and circumſpection.

ſucceſſes of ungodly men are commonly introductions to their misfortunes. It behoves us to ſhew gratitude to our benefactors, even though they be wicked men; and to venture danger, and trouble in doing it: yet how ineffectual is the kindneſs, and reſpect of fellow creatures to thoſe, who are enduring the wrath of God? The deciſive blow, which opened his way to the throne, was given about the time, that he had been ſo exceedingly diſtreſſed.

4 And David said unto him, How went the matter? I pray thee tell me. And he answered, That the people are fled from the battle, and many of the people also are fallen and dead, and Saul and Jonathan his son are dead also.

5 And David said unto the young man that told him, How knowest thou that Saul and Jonathan his son be dead?

6 And the young man that told him said, As I happened by chance upon mount Gilboa, behold, Saul leaned upon his spear; and, lo, the chariots and horsemen followed hard after him.

7 And when he looked behind him, he saw me, and called unto me: and I answered, Here am I.

8 And he said unto me, Who art thou? And I answered him, I am an Amalekite.

9 He said unto me again, Stand, I pray thee, upon me, and slay me; for anguish is come upon me, because my life is yet whole in me.

10 So I stood upon him, and slew him, because I was sure that he could not live after that he was fallen: and I took the crown that was upon his head, and the bracelet that was on his arm, and have brought them hither unto my lord.

11 Then David took hold of his clothes, and rent them, and likewise all the men that were with him.

12 And they mourned and wept, and fasted until even, for Saul, and for Jonathan his son, and for the people of the LORD, and for the house of Israel, because they were fallen by the sword.

13 And David said unto the young man that told him, Whence art thou? And he answered, I am the son of a stranger, an Amalekite.

14 And David said unto him, How wast thou not afraid to stretch forth thine hand to destroy the LORD's anointed?

15 And David called one of the young men, and said, Go near, and fall upon him. And he smote him that he died.

16 And David said unto him, Thy blood be upon thy head: for thy mouth hath testified against thee, saying, I have slain the LORD's anointed.

17 And David lamented with this lamentation over Saul, and over Jonathan his son:

18 (Also he bade them teach the children of Judah the use of the bow; behold, it is written in the book of Jasher.)

dead body, with the insignia of royalty upon him, (adorned with which he had very foolishly gone to battle;) he knew who it was: and by bringing them away he sufficiently proved Saul's death: and therefore he formed his story, and ordered his behaviour in that manner, which he supposed would most ingratiate him with David; of whom he judged according to the selfishness of his own disposition. It is remarkable, that an Amalekite should boast of having slain Saul, who had been rejected for sparing that nation.

V. 13—16.] This man was an Amalekite, and devoted by the Lord to destruction: this sentence David, as the king of Israel after Saul's death, was appointed to put in execution: he had boasted of having killed the king of Israel, and David could not disprove his testimony! and it would have been wrong in David to have shewn any countenance to such a person. By his own confession he deserved to die: and by putting him to death, David solemnly protested that he had no hand in the death of Saul; he warned all others not to expect favour from him by doing violence to any of Saul's family; and he aimed to conciliate their good will, and that of Israel in general.

V. 18.] Also he bade, &c.] Perhaps the bow was in disuse amongst the Israelites, which had given the Philistines an advantage: at the time therefore that this poem was inserted in the book of Jasher; (Note, Joshua, c. x. v. 13:) it was also recorded, that David had given orders to the people to habituate themselves to the use of the bow. Though some understand this expression of some tune, or musical instrument, to which this poem was adapted.

V. 19—27.] This elegy contains little of religion, but is highly poetical; and was intended as a tribute of respect to the memory of Saul, and of affection to that of Jonathan; who perhaps was principally meant by the "Beauty of Israel," being in every respect an ornament to his religion and people. Saul's valour and military renown are celebrated, and his faults are veiled; but nothing is spoken of his piety, or justice. The charge given to every one, not to mention the catastrophe in the cities of the Philistines, lest the enemies of God should rejoice, is very beautiful. The wish that neither rain nor dew might fructify the fields, on which the fatal battle was fought: and that no sacrifices might thence be brought to the altar the Philiſtines rejoice, leſt the daughters of the uncircumciſed triumph.

21 Ye mountains of Gilboa, let there be no dew, neither let there be rain upon you, nor fields of offerings: for there the ſhield of the mighty is vilely caſt away, the ſhield of Saul, as though he had not been anointed with oil.

22 From the blood of the ſlain, from the fat of the mighty, the bow of Jonathan turned not back, and the ſword of Saul returned not empty.

23 Saul and Jonathan were lovely and pleaſant in their lives, and in their death they were not divided: they were ſwifter than eagles, they were ſtronger than lions.

24 Ye daughters of Iſrael weep over Saul, who clothed you in ſcarlet with other delights; who put on ornaments of gold upon your apparel.

25 How are the mighty fallen in the midſt of the battle! O Jonathan, thou waſt ſlain in thine high places.

26 I am diſtreſſed for thee, my brother Jonathan; very pleaſant haſt thou been unto me: thy love to me was wonderful, paſſing the love of women.

27 How are the mighty fallen, and the weapons of war periſhed!

of God; becauſe there the anointed of the Lord had been deprived of his ſhield, and treated as one of the baſeſt of the people, is a ſtrong expreſſion of regret for ſuch an event. The harmony, which generally ſubſiſted betwixt Saul and Jonathan, in warring againſt the enemies of Iſrael; and the impetuoſity, and fury, with which they had together charged, and purſued them, and their falling in the ſame battle, are touched upon, in a very poetical manner. And as Saul had encouraged the manufactures of Iſrael, perhaps had increaſed their wealth, the daughters of Iſrael, as moſt delighted with external embelliſhments, are called upon to lament over their prince. Every thing is mentioned in his commendation, which truth permitted: but Jonathan is named with moſt paſſionate affection; as having fallen upon the high places, where he had often ſucceſsfully diſplayed his valour: and as having ſhewn a ſtrong and faithful affection, in ſuch trying circumſtances, and in ſo diſintereſted a manner, as could not be equalled by any inſtances of conjugal fidelity; or the moſt conſtant love, which hath ſubſiſted betwixt the ſexes. Conſidering therefore how pleaſant his friendſhip had been to him, he could not but be greatly diſtreſſed at his premature death.

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.

The deepeſt diſtreſs often immediately precedes the dawning of deliverance: but they, who have committed their concerns to the Lord, will quietly abide his will, and repreſs that eagerneſs, and anxiety, with which others torment themſelves, when they expect important changes. Many ſecretly wiſh for the death of thoſe, who keep them from their honours or eſtates, without excepting their neareſt relations; and inwardly rejoice at thoſe events, for which they decently appear to mourn. This is very well known to mercenary men, who form their plans accordingly: and they are apt to conclude that all men are actuated by the ſame ſelfiſh principles. But the grace of God ſubdues this baſe diſpoſition, and forms the mind to a more liberal temper: the true believer doth not allow himſelf to deſire, or to rejoice in the calamity, or death of a rival, or an enemy: much leſs for that of a kind, and ſuperior relation, to whom gratitude and honour are juſtly due: and his mourning will on ſuch occaſions be unfeigned, though moderated by ſubmiſſion to the will of God: he cannot exult in the proſpect of wordly advancement; for he conſiders it, as being entruſted with more talents, ſurrounded by greater temptations, and called to increaſing cares, duties, and burdens. They will therefore be deceived, who court his favour, as ſycophants do that of their ungodly ſuperiors: They will meet with a frown, a rebuke, and perhaps with puniſhment, where they expected a large reward. And ſuch treatment of ſuch mercenary men promiſes an uſeful, and honourable poſſeſſion of worldly pre-eminence. The poor diſtinctions, of which ſinners are vain, only expoſe them to diſtinguiſhed danger, and they are frequently ſeized by ſtrangers, and enemies: however they muſt be left, and they cannot tell who ſhall gather them. The faults of others ſhould not be needleſsly expoſed, and all remembrance of injuries ſhould be buried with the deceaſed, except the glory of God and the benefit of men demand the contrary. And the offices, and rank of diſtinguiſhed perſons are entitled to reſpect, though their characters do not demand our eſteem. Uſeful endowments are conferred on thoſe, who are deſtitute of true piety; and it is in ſome caſes allowable, and decent to give them due commendation; but never to praiſe them for thoſe virtues, which they do not poſſeſs. But holineſs demands our peculiar love, and renders the ſociety of others very pleaſant to the true believer: and nothing elſe will avail any man in another world. Next to the love, which ſubſiſts betwixt the Lord, and his people, that endeared affection, which ſprings from it, produces the moſt vigorous, durable, faithful, and diſintereſted friendſhip: yet even this heavenly love occaſions deep diſtreſs in this world, in which it is an exotic; but in its own climate above, it will flouriſh into unalloyed, and eternal pleaſure. The calamities of the Lord's people, and the triumphs of his enemies will always grieve the hearts of true believers, whatever advantages they may incidentally obtain by them: and it would be well, if many things, which continually occur amongſt profeſſors, could be concealed from infidels, and profligates, who are exceedingly hardened, and emboldened by them. But it is not enough to conceal; we muſt watch and pray againſt ſuch offences. Let us then learn to repreſs our ambition, reſentment, and ſelf-love, and to exerciſe patience, meekneſs, gratitude to our benefactors, love to our country, and zeal for the glory of God, and for the intereſts of true religion.

2 So David went up thither, and his two wives also, Ahinoam the Jezreelitess, and Abigail, Nabal's wife, the Carmelite.

3 And his men that were with him did David bring up, every man with his household: and they dwelt in the cities of Hebron.

NOTES.

CHAP. II.] V. 1. After this, &c.] After the death of Saul many of the Israelites resorted to David at Ziklag, till his forces were very considerable; (1 Chron. c. xii. v. 22:) but he did not take any step to obtain possession of the vacant throne, without consulting the Lord: he trusted in God, who had promised him the kingdom, to give him it, in his own time, and manner; that he might possess it with a clear conscience, and avoid all appearance of those evils, with which he knew Saul's adherents would be ready to charge him. Accordingly he was directed to go up to Hebron, a chief city of Judah.

V. 4. They anointed, &c.] By this ceremony, they accepted David, as the Lord's anointed, to be their king; they did not prescribe to the other tribes, but anointed him only over the house of Judah.

V. 5—7.] David took every opportunity of expressing the same regard to Saul, as he had done in his life time. But he, and three of his sons were now dead; and all Israel knew that his family had been rejected by the Lord, who had ordered David to be anointed as his successor: the tribe of Judah had recognized his title, and it was proper that he should act as king: and he could not begin his reign by a more conciliating measure, than by sending a deputation to thank those, who had rescued, and performed the funeral ceremonies, over the bodies of Saul, and his sons: and he not only besought the Lord to reward them for that good work, but promised, that he also would requite them; being determined to shew all kindness to the friends of his predecessor: and he also encouraged them to expect his firm support against the Philistines and other enemies.

V. 8. Abner, &c.] Abner was a near relation of Saul; (1 Sam. c. ix. v. 1. c. xiv. v. 50, 51. 1 Chron. c. viii. v. 33. c. ix. v. 39;) and Ish-bosheth seems to have been an insignificant person: Abner therefore probably intended to give him only the title of king, and hoped to possess the authority himself. Yet he was conscious that, in so doing, he was opposing the purpose of God.

V. 9. Over all Israel.] The nation in general had rejected the judges, whom God had raised up for them, and had demanded a king: in continuation of the same, rebellion, they refused the person, whom the Lord had selected for them, though a man of approved abilities, and character; and preferred the surviving son of their rejected king, though in every respect, an improper person. By these means the Lord trained up his servant for future honour, and usefulness; and he took occasion to manifest the tendency of true godliness, in his behaviour, when passing through these various difficulties. In this David was a type of Christ, whom Israel would not submit to, though anointed of the Father to be a Prince and Saviour to them.

V. 10. Two years, &c.] That is, before any remarkable events took place; for David did not reign over all Israel, till the expiration of seven years. During two years, he attempted nothing hostile against Ish-bosheth, or to reigned two years: but the houſe of Judah followed David.

11 (And the time that David was king in Hebron over the houſe of Judah was ſeven years and ſix months.)

12 And Abner the ſon of Ner, and the ſervants of Iſh-boſheth the ſon of Saul, went out from Mahanaim to Gibeon.

13 And Joab the ſon of Zeruiah, and the ſervants of David went out, and met together by the pool of Gibeon: and they ſat down, the one on the one ſide of the pool, and the other on the other ſide of the pool.

14 And Abner ſaid to Joab, Let the young men now ariſe, and play before us. And Joab ſaid, Let them ariſe.

15 Then there aroſe and went over by number twelve of Benjamin, which pertained to Iſh-boſheth the ſon of Saul, and twelve of the ſervants of David.

16 And they caught every one his fellow by the head, and thruſt his ſword in his fellow's ſide; ſo they fell down together: wherefore that place was called Helkath-hazzurim, which is in Gibeon.

17 And there was a very ſore battle that day: and Abner was beaten, and the men of Iſrael, before the ſervants of David.

18 And there were three ſons of Zeruiah there, Joab, and Abiſhai, and Aſahel: and Aſahel was as light of foot as a wild roe.

19 And Aſahel purſued after Abner; and in going he turned not to the right hand nor to the left, from following Abner.

20 Then Abner looked behind him, and ſaid, Art thou Aſahel? And he anſwered, I am.

21 And Abner ſaid to him, Turn thee aſide to thy right hand or to thy left, and lay thee hold on one of the young men, and take thee his armour. But Aſahel would not turn aſide from following of him.

22 And Abner ſaid again to Aſahel, Turn thee aſide from following me: wherefore ſhould I ſmite thee to the ground? how then ſhould I hold up my face to Joab thy brother?

23 Howbeit, he refuſed to turn aſide: wherefore Abner, with the hinder end of the ſpear, ſmote him under the fifth rib, that the ſpear came out behind him; and he fell down there, and died in the ſame place: and it came to paſs, that as many as came to the place where Aſahel fell down and died, ſtood ſtill.

24 Joab alſo and Abiſhai purſued after Abner: and the ſun went down when they were come to the hill of Ammah, that lieth before Giah, by the way of the wilderneſs of Gibeon.

25 And the children of Benjamin gathered themſelves together after Abner, and became one troop, and ſtood on the top of an hill.

26 Then Abner called to Joab, and ſaid, ſubject Iſrael; and peace might have ſtill ſubſiſted, had not Abner commenced a war. However David was no ſubject to Iſh-boſheth, but the appointed king of Iſrael, and therefore he was not bound to confine himſelf to the ſame meaſures of ſelf-defence, as when he was perſecuted by "the Lord's anointed."

V. 12. From Mahanaim, &c.] This was eaſt of Jordan, where Abner had fixed the ſeat of Iſhboſheth's kingdom, as more ſecure from the Philiſtines, and from David. Thence Abner marched his army over Jordan, unto Gibeon, in the tribe of Benjamin, expecting to be effectually ſupported, in ſubjecting the tribe of Judah alſo. To him David oppoſed an army under the command of Joab his ſiſter's ſon: and to the inſtructions given him we ought to aſcribe the moderation, with which he conducted this war.

V. 14. Let the young men, &c.] It is probable that Joab kept upon the defenſive, and did not give Abner an opportunity of attacking him: and that Abner's impatience to engage induced him to give this challenge. He expreſſed himſelf, as if he only intended to make diverſion for the two armies, according to the horrible cuſtom of gladiators, who gratified the diabolical ſpectators by murdering each other. Joab, though backward to engage, had not reſolution to refuſe the challenge. Helkath Hazzurim ſignifies "the field of ſtrong men."

V. 18—23.] Theſe circumſtances were recorded to ſhew that Abner was not to blame in the death of Aſahel: for he was conſtrained to ſlay him in his own defence: for nothing could ſatisfy Aſahel, but either killing or taking captive the commander of the oppoſite army; for which he was incompetent.

V. 26. Shall the ſword, &c.] Abner uſed very different language, when he was worſted in battle, than when eager to engage: now, he ſpake "of the ſword devouring "for ever," and of the bitterneſs which it would occaſion in the event; before he ſpake of it as a kind of diverſion. But he forgot himſelf, when he threw the blame upon Joab; and he would not have made ſo moderate an uſe of his advantage, had victory inclined to his ſide. But

Shall

Shall the ſword devour for ever? knoweſt thou not that it will be bitterneſs in the latter end? how long ſhall it be then ere thou bid the people return from following their brethren?

27 And Joab ſaid, As God liveth, unleſs thou hadſt ſpoken, ſurely then in the morning the people had gone up every one from following his brother.

28 So Joab blew a trumpet, and all the people ſtood ſtill, and purſued after Iſrael no more, neither fought they any more.

29 And Abner and his men walked all that night through the plain, and paſſed over Jordan, and went through all Bithron, and they came to Mahanaim.

30 And Joab returned from following Abner: and when he had gathered all the people together, there lacked of David's ſervants nineteen men and Aſahel.

31 But the ſervants of David had ſmitten of Benjamin, and of Abner's men, ſo that three hundred and threeſcore men died.

32 And they took up Aſahel, and buried him in the ſepulchre of his father, which was in Beth-lehem. And Joab and his men went all night, and they came to Hebron at break of day.

---

though Joab was exaſperated by the death of his brother, yet in regard to David's inclinations, and Iſrael's advantage, he ſtopped the purſuit, and gave Abner and his troops an opportunity of retiring to a place of ſafety.

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.

If we would poſſeſs temporal things with a bleſſing, we muſt not eagerly ſeize upon them: we muſt not be determined by favourable providences, or carnal counſellors: but we muſt obſerve the rules of God's word, and pray for his direction; uſing thoſe means, and thoſe only, which he hath appointed, or allowed; avoiding all evil, and appearance of evil, in our purſuit of them; and thus receiving them in that meaſure, that the Lord is pleaſed to communicate: whatever elſe we thus miſs of, we ſhall certainly be directed in the way to the kingdom of heaven. They, who have ſhared our afflictions, ſhould be aſſociated in our proſperity; for they, who ſuffer with Chriſt, ſhall alſo reign with him. When we are influenced by faith, fear, and love of God; and act with integrity, kindneſs, forgiveneſs, and a deſire of peace, and purity amongſt men, we ſhall conduct our affairs with the beſt wiſdom. We are bound to pray for, and do good to thoſe, who have acted properly, even to our enemies; and to uſe conciliatory meaſures towards all men; but eſpecially ſuch, who have behaved with gratitude, and fidelity, in dangerous circumſtances, and without proſpect of advantage; for ſuch friends are worthy of attention: and they, who have been grateful to one benefactor, will find others to protect them, when he is removed. But the believer's progreſs muſt be gradual; his faith, and graces muſt be exerciſed, and proved, and his pride ſubdued, before he can properly endure any kind of proſperity: and for theſe purpoſes, the Lord employs the perverſeneſs of our brethren, without their knowledge, or intention. In the profeſſing church few honour thoſe, whom the Lord will honour: before Jeſus came, and in every generation ſince, the very builders have rejected thoſe, whom the Lord intended for eminent ſituations in the ſpiritual building; and Chriſt's ſervants muſt be conformed to him. Ambition, jealouſy, envy, or other evil paſſions, cauſe men to rebel againſt the word of God: but they generally attempt to conceal their real motives under plauſible pretences: however the believer's wiſdom conſiſts in waiting quietly, and ſilently under injuries, and in leaving the Lord to plead his cauſe; except it be evidently his duty to be active. But there is a reſpect due to ſuperior relations, which equals or inferiors in ſimilar circumſtances are not entitled to. Ambitious, and bloody men often conſider the trade of war, and the ſlaughter of their fellow-creatures as a mere diverſion; and the lives of millions have been trifled away, out of a ridiculous point of honour, to the great gratification of ſatan, that firſt great murderer of the bodies, and ſouls of men. From age to age numbers are ambitious of venturing their lives, and ſouls, for the empty hope of being celebrated as valiant men, after they are dead; and from the ſame motive they mingle the blood of their brethren with their own; though they bear them no reſentment, and have received no provocation from them: but what can be more irrational, and infatuated than ſuch a conduct! The ſword of civil war, when once unſheathed, is not eaſily returned into the ſcabbard: and they, who in their eagerneſs to engage, have made the lighteſt of ſuch unnatural conteſts, will perceive in the event, that they are bitterneſs to all parties concerned. Men are greatly diſpoſed to throw the blame of manifeſt evil upon others, that they may exculpate themſelves: and thoſe arguments, which were diſregarded as futile, when they made againſt them, will be deemed very concluſive, when urged on their own behalf. Succeſs, as well as ſelf-love, has great effect in determining men's judgments: of the evil of proſperous attempts they cannot be convinced; yet they can eaſily perceive that to be wrong, which occaſions loſs, or peril to themſelves. But though ſuch partial deciſions ſhould be expoſed, and rebuked; it is always right to exerciſe clemency to the vanquiſhed, and generoſity to the wretched; to ſpare the ſhedding of human blood, and to alleviate the ſum of human miſery: and to ſtrive for peace, eſpecially in thoſe inteſtine contentions in nations or churches, wherein the common cauſe muſt ſuffer, which party ſoever acquires the aſcendancy. Men's different endowments qualify them for varied kinds of ſervice; and ſhould be improved for that purpoſe. But when talents are over-rated, and men confide, and glory in them, they will go out of the line of duty, in order to diſtinguiſh themſelves; they will deſpiſe warnings and counſel, as the effect of envy, or cowardice;

NOW there was long war between the houſe of Saul and the houſe of David: but David waxed ſtronger and ſtronger, and the houſe of Saul waxed weaker and weaker.

2 And unto David were ſons born in Hebron: and his firſt born was Amnon, of Ahinoam the Jezreeliteſs;

3 And his ſecond, Chileab, of Abigail the wife of Nabal the Carmelite; and the third, Abſalom the ſon of Maacah, the daughter of Talmai king of Geſhur;

4 And the fourth Adonijah the ſon of Haggith; and the fifth, Shephatiah the ſon of Abital;

5 And the ſixth, Ithream, by Eglah David's wife. Theſe were born to David in Hebron.

6 And it came to paſs, while there was war between the houſe of Saul and the houſe of David, that Abner made himſelf ſtrong for the houſe of Saul.

7 And Saul had a concubine, whoſe name was Rizpah, the daughter of Aiah: and Iſh-boſheth ſaid to Abner, Wherefore haſt thou gone in unto my father's concubine?

8 Then was Abner very wroth for the words of Iſhboſheth, and ſaid, Am I a dog's head, which againſt Judah do ſhew kindneſs this day unto the houſe of Saul thy father, to his brethren, and to his friends, and have not delivered thee into the hand of David, that thou chargeſt me to-day with a fault concerning this woman?

9 So do God to Abner, and more alſo, except as the LORD hath ſworn to David, even ſo I do to him;

10 To tranſlate the kingdom from the houſe of Saul, and to ſet up the throne of David over Iſrael and over Judah, from Dan even to Beer-ſheba.

11 And he could not anſwer Abner a word again, becauſe he feared him.

and they will always be ſhamed, and frequently ruined, by theſe qualifications, in which they prided themſelves. Often do men fancy themſelves about to ſeize upon ideal happineſs, when death ſtops their career, and lays them in the duſt: and if they will ruſh forwards in the road to deſtruction, though plainly warned of their danger, they need blame none but themſelves. Finally, there are many diſtinctions amongſt men, both during life, and in the diſpoſal of their bodies after death: but in the eternal world no other diſtinction ſubſiſts, except betwixt thoſe, "who "have ſerved the Lord, and thoſe, who have not ſerved him."

NOTES.

CHAP. III. V. 1. Now there was, &c.] The civil war continued about five years, and a half: but it ſeems to have been conducted with great moderation on the part of David. However he gained continually upon the eſteem and affections of the people, and in the extent of his dominions, and the number of his ſubjects; whilſt Iſh-boſheth gradually ſunk into inſignificancy, and contempt. Thus Chriſt waits till his people are made willing to be his ſervants, and to claim his protection.

V. 2—5.] David's motives for multiplying his wives were of a carnal nature, whatever they were; and it proved the occaſion of much ſin, and trouble afterwards. By them all he had but ſix ſons all the time, that he reigned at Hebron; though probably he had ſome daughters, who are not mentioned. Perhaps Maacah, the daughter of Talmai, had been taken priſoner, and proſelyted, before David married her.

V. 6—10.] Perhaps Abner was weary of Iſh-boſheth's unſucceſsful cauſe, and was glad of an occaſion of ſecuring preferment in David's ſervice. He was moſt likely guilty of the crime charged upon him, which was conſidered as a claim to the kingdom of a deceaſed prince (c. xii. v. 8. c. xvi. v. 21—23. 1 Kings, c. ii. v. 22). Yet Iſh-boſheth was very imprudent to mention it, being entirely dependant upon Abner; whoſe pride diſdained to be called to an account, after all his boaſted ſervices to the houſe of Saul, whom he had ſupported not only againſt the houſe of Judah, but againſt the oath of God, and the convictions of his own conſcience. Indeed ambition, and not regard to Iſh-boſheth, had hitherto induced him to ſupport his intereſt: and revenge and policy, not regard to the will of God, prevailed with him at this time to join David's party.

V. 12. Whoſe is the land, &c.] Abner by this expreſſion inſinuated, that he poſſeſſed the authority, and not Iſh-boſheth: if therefore David would grant him advantageous terms, he would put him in poſſeſſion of the whole land.

13 And

13 And he said, Well; I will make a league with thee: but one thing I require of thee, that is, Thou shalt not see my face, except thou first bring Michal Saul's daughter, when thou comest to see my face.

14 And David sent messengers to Ish-bosheth Saul's son, saying, Deliver me my wife Michal, which I espoused to me for an hundred foreskins of the Philistines.

15 And Ish-bosheth sent, and took her from her husband, even from Phaltiel the son of Laish.

16 And her husband went with her along weeping behind her to Bahurim. Then said Abner unto him, Go, return. And he returned.

17 And Abner had communication with the elders of Israel, saying, Ye sought for David in times past to be king over you:

18 Now then do it: for the LORD hath spoken of David, saying, By the hand of my servant David I will save my people Israel out of the hand of the Philistines, and out of the hand of all their enemies.

19 And Abner also spake in the ears of Benjamin: and Abner went also to speak in the ears of David in Hebron, all that seemed good to Israel, and that seemed good to the whole house of Benjamin.

20 So Abner came to David to Hebron, and twenty men with him. And David made Abner, and the men that were with him, a feast.

21 And Abner said unto David, I will arise and go, and will gather all Israel unto my lord the king, that they may make a league with thee, and that thou mayest reign over all that thine heart desireth. And David sent Abner away; and he went in peace.

22 And, behold the servants of David and Joab came from pursuing a troop, and brought in a great spoil with them: but Abner was not with David in Hebron; for he had sent him away, and he was gone in peace.

23 When Joab and all the host that was with him were come, they told Joab, saying, Abner the son of Ner came to the king, and he hath sent him away, and he is gone in peace.

24 Then Joab came to the king, and said, What hast thou done? behold, Abner came unto thee: why is it that thou hast sent him away, and he is quite gone?

25 Thou knowest Abner the son of Ner, that he came to deceive thee, and to know

V. 13. Well; I will, &c.] David knew that the kingdom was his in the purpose of God: and it was desirable to sheath the sword of civil war, and to unite all Israel voluntarily under one king: and he was not the judge of, or accountable for Abner's secret motives; and doubtless he meant to grant Ish-bosheth very favourable terms, if his purposes had not been prevented.

V. 14—16.] Had David divorced Michal, and she had been married to another, he might not have received her again: but the separation was violent on both sides; and probably her marriage to Phaltiel was a force upon her inclinations: Phaltiel was very criminal in taking another man's wife, whatever affection he had for her. David made this demand, perhaps out of affection for Michal; or to strengthen his interests by asserting, and shewing the value, which he put upon his affinity with the house of Saul; or to shew his regard for the law of God, and to rebuke a man, who so openly violated it. As Abner did not deem it politic at that juncture, to take Michal from Phaltiel, he applied to Ishbosheth, who complied with his demand; perhaps being willing to be upon amicable terms with him, as he could not overcome him by arms.

V. 22. From pursuing a troop, &c.] Of Philistines, or other enemies, not of Ish-bosheth's forces.

V. 24, 25.] Joab, and his brother Abishai, had been very faithful, and useful to David, in his afflictions: and in gratitude, natural affection, and the love of peace, he had inadvertently given them almost as great an ascendancy over him, as Abner had over Ish-bosheth: he trusted in, and feared them too much, and allowed them all the importance, that they claimed. But if he could not prevent their obtaining an undue influence before he came to the kingdom; he should afterwards have ventured all consequences, in checking their presumption, and exerting the authority, which God had committed to him: trusting in his help he need neither have feared the revolt of Joab, or cared about his support, and services. Nothing can be more affronting than this address of Joab to his prince, whom he grossly charged with the most egregious folly, and then left his presence without waiting for an answer. But it was the language of envy, and ambition, as well as of resentment: he supposed that he had missed an opportunity of avenging the death of Asahel; and he feared a formidable rival, if Abner made a league with David.

V. 25, 26.] Joab seems to have recalled Abner in David's name, without his knowledge; which was base treatment of him, as well as of Abner, as if he would bring him under suspicion of conniving at the murder: and when Abner, imprudently indeed, but in confidence, stepped aside to confer with him, as the officer of David, he treacherously assassinated him, in violation of every law of hospitality, or public faith: Abishai also was privy to, and thy going out, and thy coming in, and to know all that thou doeſt.

26 And when Joab was come out from David, he ſent meſſengers after Abner, which brought him again from the well of Sirah; but David knew it not.

27 And when Abner was returned to Hebron, Joab took him aſide in the gate to ſpeak with him quietly, and ſmote him there under the fifth rib, that he died, for the blood of Aſahel his brother.

28 And afterward when David heard it, he ſaid, I and my kingdom are guiltleſs before the LORD for ever, from the blood of Abner the ſon of Ner.

29 Let it reſt on the head of Joab, and on all his father's houſe; and let there not fail from the houſe of Joab one that hath an iſſue, or that is a leper, or that leaneth on a ſtaff, or that falleth on the ſword, or that lacketh bread.

30 So Joab and Abiſhai his brother ſlew Abner, becauſe he had ſlain their brother Aſahel at Gibeon in the battle.

31 And David ſaid to Joab, and to all the people that were with him, Rend your clothes, and gird you with ſackcloth, and mourn before Abner. And king David himſelf followed the bier.

32 And they buried Abner in Hebron: and the king lifted up his voice, and wept at the grave of Abner; and all the people wept.

33 And the king lamented over Abner, and ſaid, Died Abner as a fool dieth?

34 Thy hands were not bound, nor thy feet put into fetters: as a man falleth before wicked men, ſo felleſt thou. And all the people wept again over him.

35 And when all the people came to cauſe David to eat meat while it was yet day, David ſware, ſaying, So do God to me and more alſo, if I taſte bread, or ought elſe, till the ſun be down.

36 And all the people took notice of it, and it pleaſed them: as whatſoever the king did pleaſed all the people.

37 For all the people, and all Iſrael, underſtood that day, that it was not of the king to ſlay Abner the ſon of Ner.

38 And the king ſaid unto his ſervants, Know ye not that there is a prince and a great man fallen this day in Iſrael?

39 And I am this day weak, though anointed king, and theſe men the ſons of Zeruiah be too hard for me: the LORD ſhall reward the doer of evil according to his wickedneſs.

concerned in the baſe tranſaction, (v. 30.) But, notwithſtanding Joab's guilt, Abner was juſtly puniſhed for pertinaciouſly oppoſing the known will of God; and he was thrown aſide, as unworthy to raiſe David to the throne, or to give peace to Iſrael: and probably had he lived his ambition, influence, and ungodlineſs would have occaſioned further miſchiefs to all parties.

V. 28, 29.] David meant by theſe proteſtations, and imprecations upon Joab, and his family, to wipe off all ſuſpicion of his own guilt, and to remove it from the land: being afraid of a revolt of the ſoldiers, if he offered to execute vengeance on the murderer. But he ſhould have remembered, that He, who ſtilleth the raging of the ſea, is able to ſtill the madneſs of the people. In ſo juſt a cauſe he might, and ought to have riſqued all conſequences: he was anointed king to adminiſter juſtice without reſpect of perſons; and he might have been aſſured of the Lord's ſupport in doing ſo important a duty; the example would have been very ſalutary; all impartial perſons would have applauded his firmneſs; perhaps Iſh-boſheth's murder would have been prevented, and many other crimes, and calamities, in the latter part of his reign: but his fear of man overcame his faith in God, and Joab continued, and increaſed in authority, and in crimes, to the end of David's life: but he was at length called to account. Thus the Son of David long delays, but never fails to puniſh impenitent ſinners.

V. 31. To Joab, &c.] Joab was conſtrained to do penance, ſo to ſpeak, by appearing as a mourner for Abner: but as his revenge was gratified, his rival removed, and no heavier puniſhment inflicted, he would have little objection to ſuch a ceremonial.

V. 33. Died Abner, &c?] Abner did not die as criminals do, who are bound, fettered, put to ſhame, and executed for their offences; nor as a coward fleeing from, or taken priſoner by the enemy; nor as a raſh man, who had needleſsly run himſelf into danger: but as an honeſt man, who is unexpectedly ſet upon by ruffians, and murdered. It would be very mortifying to Joab, to be thus publicly reproached as an aſſaſſin. The ſatisfaction of the people in the king's behaviour on this occaſion ſhews, that he might ſafely have proceeded to puniſh the criminal.

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.

The power, and policy of ſatan, and of wicked men may ſtruggle againſt the purpoſes of God, and the cauſe of his anointed king, and may ſeem to occaſion delays: but his intereſt is gaining ground, though by imperceptible degrees, and his glory will ere long be diſplayed throughout the earth. When he hath ſet up his kingdom in any heart,

AND when Saul's ſon heard that Abner was dead in Hebron, his hands were feeble, and all the Iſraelites were troubled.

inbred luſts, and outward temptations will powerfully oppoſe: but grace ſhall gather ſtrength, and every corruption be weakened continually in the conflict, till the believer be at length ſanctified wholly in body, ſoul, and ſpirit. Inconſtancy muſt he incident to ſelfiſh men: if their avarice or ambition meet with diſappointment in one courſe, they will turn into another; and ſometimes pretenſions to religion ſeem the readieſt way to the gratification of their worldly luſts. Many are not above committing very baſe crimes, who are too proud to bear reproof, or even the ſuſpicion of being guilty: and whilſt men go on in their ſins apparently without concern, they are often conſcious that they are fighting againſt God. Little confidence can be placed in thoſe who affront their Maker, betray their country, or deceive thoſe, who confide in them, under the pretence of ſerving their friends: moſt certainly they mean to ſerve their own purpoſes; and will betray them alſo, when they can obtain advantageous terms for doing it. Yet even by thoſe who are actuated by revenge, ambition, luſt, or avarice, the Lord ſecretly ſubſerves his own deſigns: but as they intend not to honour him, whatever they profeſs; ſo when his ends are anſwered, he will throw them aſide with contempt. In ſome caſes, and for ſome purpoſes, we too may uſe their help, without enquiring about their motives, but it will require great caution, and wiſdom, or we ſhall not eſcape guilt, or reproach. The re-union of near relatives, who have been involuntarily ſeparated, is right in itſelf, and it is always our duty to expreſs our regard for the divine law, and to bear teſtimony againſt ſin: and no affection is amiable or allowable, which is not regulated according to the word of God. The bulk of mankind in all ages are turned about by thoſe, who rule, or teach them: or by thoſe, who poſſeſs influence over them, or addreſs their paſſions by eloquence, or flattery: but let us ſeek for a ſound judgment, a good conſcience, and an upright heart; that we may know, and adhere to the truth, and will of God amidſt all changes, and notwithſtanding all deluſions; which ſucceed each other in the world, juſt as the faſhions vary. They, who have deceived others, ſhould endeavour to undeceive them: but good words will do but little, ſo long as a man continues the ſlave of his luſts. In cultivating Chriſtian tempers, and performing relative duties, extremes, and counterfeits muſt be guarded againſt: as zeal, and boldneſs may be furious, and contentious; ſo meekneſs, and the love of peace may degenerate into imbecillity, and irreſolution: and through undue aſcendancy of thoſe inferiors, who ought to be kept in ſubjection with all gravity, ſhameful things will often be done, or connived at, to the cenſure of individuals, and the reproach of the common cauſe. Every one therefore ſhould know his own place, and it's duties, and exerciſe the Chriſtian tempers in doing them, not make them an excuſe for neglecting his proper work. Proud men rate their ſervices ſo high, and are ſo regardleſs of relative duties, and of decorum, that it is not deſirable to be under obligations to them: however we ſhould endeavour to receive every thing from God, and conſider every man as a channel, through which the gift is communicated; of whom there is indeed no real neceſſity, on whom we ſhould reſt no dependance, and to whom that gratitude is due, and that alone, which conſiſts with every other duty. They who cannot brook an affront, or a rival; and who deem themſelves too powerful for human juſtice, have little to reſtrain them from the commiſſion of the moſt horrid crimes: and the human heart is capable of making the higheſt profeſſions of friendſhip ſubſervient to the moſt cruel murders; and of violating every ſacred tye. It is not enough for thoſe, who are veſted with authority, to expreſs their abhorrence of ſuch crimes, and criminals, or their compaſſion for thoſe, who ſuffer by them: but all partialities, and intereſted conſiderations ſhould be laid aſide, and condign puniſhment inflicted, that others may hear, and fear, and do no more ſuch wickedneſs: and in every ſtate the executive authority ſhould poſſeſs power ſufficient to puniſh the proudeſt ſubject; leſt blood be imputed to the land. As our lives are ſo expoſed on every ſide, and as he moſt emphatically dieth as a fool, who dieth in his ſins, we ſhould be careful to be always ready: for all the honour, or commendations, that men can beſtow on us, after our deceaſe, will not affect, or amend the ſtate of the departed ſoul in the inviſible world. Alas, what are the imagined advantages of royalty? The king after God's own heart finds as much cauſe for lamentation, and complaint, as when a poor fugitive! He who now reigns upon the throne of David, has a kingdom of a nobler kind: whatever he doeth is noticed by, and pleaſeth all his willing people; and he will bring them all to ſhare his glory, and joy. But many are outwardly ſerviceable to his cauſe, who only ſeek themſelves in all they do, and from time to time diſgrace it with their crimes: theſe may eſcape for a ſeaſon, but at length they ſhall be numbered with his enemies, and periſh for ever.

NOTES.

CHAP. IV.] V. 1. His hands, &c.] Perhaps Iſh-boſheth was not before certainly informed that Abner was deſerted to David: or both he, and the people hoped by his means to have obtained better terms. But by his death their affairs were left in confuſion, and they had no capable perſon either to lead them to battle, or to negotiate a treaty.

V. 3. Fled to, &c.] When Saul's army was routed, and he and his ſons ſlain, they deſerted their city, and went to ſo-

4 And Jonathan, Saul's ſon, had a ſon that was lame of his feet. He was five years old when the tidings came of Saul and Jonathan out of Jezreel, and his nurſe took him up, and fled: and it came to paſs, as ſhe made haſte to flee, that he fell, and became lame. And his name was Mephiboſheth.

5 And the ſons of Rimmon the Beerothite, Rechab and Baanah, went, and came about the heat of the day to the houſe of Iſh-boſheth, who lay on a bed at noon.

6 And they came thither into the midſt of the houſe, as though they would have fetched wheat; and they ſmote him under the fifth rib: and Rechab and Baanah his brother eſcaped.

7 For when they came into the houſe, he lay on his bed in his bedchamber, and they ſmote him, and ſlew him, and beheaded him, and took his head, and gat them away through the plain all night.

8 And they brought the head of Iſh-boſheth unto David to Hebron, and ſaid to the king, Behold the head of Iſh-boſheth the ſon of Saul thine enemy, which ſought thy life; and the LORD hath avenged my lord the king this day of Saul, and of his ſeed.

9 And David anſwered Rechab and Baanah his brother, the ſons of Rimmon the Beerothite, and ſaid unto them, As the LORD liveth, who hath redeemed my ſoul out of all adverſity,

10 When one told me, ſaying, Behold, Saul is dead, (thinking to have brought good tidings,) I took hold of him, and ſlew him in Ziklag, who thought that I would have given him a reward for his tidings:

11 How much more, when wicked men have ſlain a righteous perſon in his own houſe upon his bed? ſhall I not therefore now require his blood of your hand, and take you away from the earth?

12 And David commanded his young men, and they ſlew them, and cut off their hands and their feet, and hanged them up over the pool in Hebron. But they took the head of Iſh-boſheth, and buried it in the ſepulchre of Abner in Hebron.

journ at Gittaim: at the ſame time the calamity, after mentioned, befel Mephiboſheth, which ſeems to have been inſerted on that account.

V. 5. Lay on a bed, &c.] Iſh-boſheth had enough to do in this emergency, without ſleeping on his bed at noon! But he appears to have been an inactive, ſelf-indulgent man.

V. 8. The Lord hath, &c.] Theſe men not only miſtook David's character, as if he ſo thirſted for revenge, that he would reward any villany, by which it could be accompliſhed: but they pretended to have performed the will of God, in this complicated treaſon, and parricide. The Lord had indeed avenged his ſervant of many of his enemies: but neither David, nor David's Lord had commiſſioned them to murder their prince, whom they profeſſed to ſerve.

V. 9. Who hath redeemed, &c.] (Note, Gen. c. xlviii. v. 16.) David, in the uſe of this expreſſion, intended that the hearers ſhould recollect, that the Lord had delivered him out of his troubles; and that he had not uſed any treachery or cruelty to extricate himſelf, nor allowed any of thoſe about him to do it: and therefore he needed not the aſſiſtance of ſuch vile traitors.

V. 11. A righteous man, &c.] Whatever Iſh-boſheth's character was before God, he was righteous as to them; and in ſlaying him, they ſhed innocent blood, from the baſeſt motives, and with the greateſt aggravations: and David, as God's vicegerent, moſt juſtly executed vengeance upon them for it. It had been well, if he had been equally deciſive in the caſe of Joab: that there might have been no appearance of partiality, and no hope of impunity to any criminal.

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.

Innumerable are the perils, to which our tender years are expoſed; and we owe gratitude both to the Lord and to our parents, if we were preſerved during that period, from loſing our limbs, or ſenſes, or contracting harms, which would have rendered our whole future lives uncomfortable to ourſelves, and others. Parents too ſhould take occaſion from this reflection, not only to be very attentive to their offspring, but by prayer to commit them continually to the Lord's keeping. Every thing will concur in forwarding the accompliſhment of God's word, of promiſe, or of wrath, when the appointed time approaches: on one hand there can be no failure, on the other no eſcape. Wretched indeed are they, who are engaged in ſuch undertakings, that none can ſerve them, without oppoſing the known will of God! The more exalted their ſtation, the greater is their danger: for they, in whom they repoſe the greateſt confidence, are deſtitute of principle, only ſerve them for gain, and will betray, or murder them, when their mercenary ſchemes require it. Alas! what numbers ſink from ſelf-indulgence, and carnal ſecurity into unſuſpected, and inevitable deſtruction! Many are ſo conſcious, whatever they pretend, that they ſhould be pleaſed with villainy, which conduced greatly to their profit, that they are led confidently to conclude, that others will be ſo too: and as numbers are rewarded for ſuch vile ſervices, they expect the ſame. Perſons in authority therefore ſhould decidedly manifeſt, that they will not be ſerved by ſuch wretches, but will puniſh their crimes, inſtead of rewarding their ſucceſs in villainy. The ſervants of God are encou-

THEN came all the tribes of Israel to David unto Hebron, and spake, saying, Behold, we are thy bone and thy flesh.

2 Also in time past, when Saul was king over us, thou wast he that leddest out and broughtest in Israel: and the LORD said to thee, Thou shalt feed my people Israel, and thou shalt be a captain over Israel.

3 So all the elders of Israel came to the king to Hebron; and king David made a league with them in Hebron before the LORD: and they anointed David king over Israel.

4 David was thirty years old when he began to reign, and he reigned forty years.

5 In Hebron he reigned over Judah seven years and six months: and in Jerusalem he reigned thirty and three years over all Israel and Judah.

6 And the king and his men went to Jerusalem unto the Jebusites, the inhabitants of the land: which spake unto David, saying, Except thou take away the blind and the lame, thou shalt not come in hither: thinking, David cannot come in hither.

7 Nevertheless David took the strong hold of Zion: the same is the city of David.

8 And David said on that day, Whosoever getteth up to the gutter, and smiteth the Jebusites, and the lame and the blind, that are hated of David's soul, he shall be chief and captain. Wherefore they said, The blind and the lame shall not come into the house.

9 So David dwelt in the fort, and called it raged by the scriptures, and their own experience, to trust him in the path of duty, to redeem them from all adversity, without countenancing, any more than committing, sin for that purpose; and they will pity and pray for, behave kindly to, and speak as favourable of their opposers, as they can, and not become their own avengers: and the Son of David will requite those, who pretend to serve his cause by frauds, treasons, massacres, and persecutions, with more dreadful vengeance, than was inflicted on Ish-bosheth's murderers: he hath given contrary orders, and employs no such helpers.

NOTES.

CHAP. V.] V. 1—2. We are thy bone, &c.] (1 Chron. c. xii. v. 23—40.) When Abner, and Ish-bosheth were dead, the tribes of Israel were left as sheep without a shepherd; and had no inclination to set up another of Saul's family in opposition to David; and having observed the quiet and prosperous state of Judah under his government, they began to entertain higher, and more honourable thoughts of him. Of their own accord therefore they applied to him by their elders; and as a reason why he should forgive their ill-usage, and terminate the civil war, they pleaded their near relation to him, being his brethren, the descendants of Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob: they now recollected, and praised his former services, which before they had overlooked; and mentioned the Lord's appointment of him, which before they had resisted. From all this they meant to infer, that, as they were desirous of submitting to his authority, and putting themselves under his protection, so they hoped that he would rule over them in tenderness, and equity, for their safety, and comfort; as a shepherd feeds his flock: as well as that he would lead them forth to victory over their enemies; this is introduced as a part of the Lord's commission to him, when he appointed him to the kingdom; by which they conveyed this hint in the most unexceptionable, and efficacious manner.

V. 3. Made a league, &c.] He consented, not only to pass an act of indemnity for the past, but to bind himself by a solemn compact, that he would not tyrannize over, or oppress them.

V. 6—8.] The greater part of Jerusalem lay in the lot of Benjamin; and had hitherto been possessed by the Jebusites: but as soon as that part of the land had submitted to David, he marched to dispossess them. The citadel, called the Strong Hold of mount Zion, was fortified by nature and art, and the Jebusites set him at defiance: confiding therein, they told him that blind, and lame men could defend it against his army; and perhaps in derision placed a company of such persons upon it, who insulted his soldiers, uttering also blasphemies against the God of Israel: for the last clause, (v. 8,) may be read, "they had said, even "the blind and the lame, that he shall not come into the "house." But David commanded his men, when "they smote "the Jebusites, to throw down the blind, and the lame, into "the gutter," or ditch; as it might be read; which under the conduct of Joab, they effected accordingly, (1 Chron. c. xi. v. 4—7.) These were said to be "hated of David's "soul;" for they were devoted Canaanites, and idolaters, if not blasphemers of God. But by the blind and the lame, some understand the idols of the Jebusites, which David's soldiers had thus called in contempt, but their worshippers so confided in them, that they defied David to take the citadel, whilst they kept their station, or by any means to remove them; and declared, that if he did, they would no longer admit them into their temples or houses. However David got possession: and on this mount the ark was placed, and the temple was built, and the kingdom of the family of David was established.

V. 9. Millo, &c.] Millo seems to have been some town-hall, or council-chamber, all around which David erected such buildings, as were proper for rendering the city the seat of government.

the city of David. And David built round about Millo and inward.

10 And David went on and grew great; and the LORD God of hoſts was with him.

11 And Hiram king of Tyre ſent meſſengers to David, and cedar trees, and carpenters, and maſons: and they built David an houſe.

12 And David perceived that the LORD had eſtabliſhed him king over Iſrael, and that he had exalted his kingdom for his people Iſrael's ſake.

13 And David took him more concubines and wives out of Jeruſalem, after he was come from Hebron: and there were yet ſons and daughters born to David.

14 And theſe be the names of thoſe that were born unto him in Jeruſalem; Shamuah, and Shobab, and Nathan, and Solomon,

15 Ibhar alſo, and Eliſhua, and Nepheg, and Japhia,

16 And Eliſhamah, and Eliada, and Eliphalet.

17 But when the Philiſtines heard that they had anointed David king over Iſrael, all the Philiſtines came up to ſeek David; and David heard of it, and went down to the hold.

18 The Philiſtines alſo came, and ſpread themſelves in the valley of Rephaim.

19 And David enquired of the LORD, ſaying, Shall I go up to the Philiſtines? wilt thou deliver them into mine hand? And the LORD ſaid unto David, Go up; for I will doubtleſs deliver the Philiſtines into thine hand.

20 And David came to Baal-perazim, and David ſmote them there, and ſaid, The LORD hath broken forth upon mine enemies before me, as the breach of waters. Therefore he called the name of that place Baal-perazim.

21 And there they left their images, and David and his men burned them.

22 And the Philiſtines came up yet again, and ſpread themſelves in the valley of Rephaim.

23 And when David enquired of the LORD, he ſaid, Thou ſhalt not go up; but fetch a compaſs behind them, and come upon them over againſt the mulberry trees.

24 And let it be, when thou heareſt the ſound of a going in the tops of the mulberry trees, that then thou ſhalt beſtir thyſelf: for then ſhall the LORD go out before thee, to ſmite the hoſt of the Philiſtines.

25 And David did ſo, as the LORD had commanded him; and ſmote the Philiſtines from Geba until thou come to Gazer.

V. 11. Hiram ſent, &c.] (1 Chron. c. xiv.) Hiram ſent to congratulate David on his acceſſion to the throne, and to enter into a league with him; and as his ſubjects were better architects than the Iſraelites, they were employed in building him a palace, ſuited to his exalted ſtation. Though Saul affected the ſplendour of royalty, yet he built not a royal palace; but David did; perhaps as a token of his belief, that the kingdom would be continued in his family.

V. 13—16.] It was cuſtomary for kings in thoſe times to multiply wives, and to ſtrengthen their intereſt by many alliances: to this David too much conformed: (Deut. c. xvii. v. 17.)

V. 17. All the, &c.] The Philiſtines, ſatisfied with the advantages, that they had enjoyed, ſince the death of Saul, had been reſtrained from moleſting the Iſraelites during their civil diſſentions; but invaded them as ſoon as they were united again under one king. Thus they delivered David from any embarraſſment about attacking thoſe, who had previouſly protected him. He immediately therefore marched to ſome fortified place, where he might check their incurſions, and conſult what meaſures to take. The valley of Rephaim was not far from Jeruſalem.

V. 20. Baal-perazim, &c.] That is, "the Lord "of Breaches." By ſome evident interpoſition the Lord himſelf fought againſt the Philiſtines, like the breaking forth of impetuous torrents, which bear all down before them. David therefore gave the place this name, by way of aſcribing to the Lord all the honour of the victory. Probably he meant, that the Lord had left him "Maſter of "the Breaches:" and that this was an earneſt of further victories; as the bank being broken makes way for further inundations.

V. 21.] They expected protection from their images, but they could not preſerve them from the conquerors. When the Philiſtines captivated the ark, the Lord by ſore judgments conſtrained them to reſtore it: but the Iſraelites burnt their idols without either fear, or hurt.

V. 24 The ſound of a going, &c.] Like the march of an army in the air; denoting the aſſiſtance of angels, or of God himſelf: yet then David was to beſtir himſelf. Sometimes the Lord commands, and employs, and ſometimes he rejects man's concurrence; that we may neither be ſelf-important, nor negligent.

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.

Mercies long waited for in faith, and patience, will be conferred in the moſt reputable and comfortable manner: nor ſhall they go unrewarded, who perſiſt in refuſing to employ ſinful means for their own deliverance, or advancement. Civil government is fixed on its firmeſt baſis, and is like to produce the moſt permanent bleſſings; when it is voluntarily delegated, and regulated by wholeſome laws; marking out duties, prerogatives, and privileges to prince and people, and reciprocally ratified as in the preſence of the Lord, by the moſt ſolemn aſſurances, with a view to his authority, appointments, and commandments. As we are all brethren; "of one bone, and of one fleſh," none ought to lord it over, to oppreſs, or to be cruel to another: princes ſhould uſe clemency, and watch over, take care of, and be tender towards their people, like ſhepherds over their flocks: and the people ſhould gratefully acknowledge the bleſſings they enjoy under their government, honour the authority of God in them, and yield them willing ſubmiſſion in all things lawful. Thus Jeſus became our brother, aſſumed, and inhabits our nature, that he might be our Prince and Saviour: thus the humbled ſinner takes encouragement from this endearing relation; applies for his ſalvation, and voluntarily ſubmits to his kind authority, and craves his powerful protection. The falſe confidences of ungodly men will aſſuredly deceive them, and their proud boaſtings will haſten their ruin: whilſt they go on, and grow great, with whom is the Lord God of hoſts. In the day of his power ſatan's ſtrong hold, the human heart, is converted into an habitation of God, through the Spirit; and into a throne, on which the Son of David rules, and brings every thought into obedience to himſelf. May he thus come and claim, and cleanſe each of our hearts; and having deſtroyed every idol, may he dwell, and reign therein for ever. It is in mercy to a nation, when wiſe, and righteous perſons are exalted to authority; and every advancement, or endowment, that we receive, ſhould remind us, that the Lord alone hath conferred the diſtinction upon us: and that he did it, that we might be uſeful to his people, by the talents entruſted to us. We have therefore the more cauſe to be thankful, and watchful; and to pray the more earneſtly for grace ſufficient, to enable us duly to improve them; nay we have double cauſe for humility, when we reflect how little we do ſo. But alas! even good men are apt to grow ſecure, and ſelf indulgent in proſperity, and to ſanction by their example thoſe abuſes, which they ſhould oppoſe, or repreſs: and all our returns for the Lord's mercies are deeply tinged with ingratitude. When the church of God begins indeed to proſper, it's enemies will generally beſtir themſelves: and the great exemption from all kinds of perſecution, and the friendlineſs of the world to religion, with which many are pleaſed, ariſe from the policy of the enemy, who determines to let men alone with their empty notions, forms, and profeſſion. In our ſpiritual warfare, we muſt decidedly declare for the Lord, though againſt relatives, or benefactors; and if we conſult him, he will teach us to do it, without the appearance of evil. All thoſe objects, which men idolize, will prove an uſeleſs incumbrance to them, when the Lord ſhall ariſe to execute judgment upon his enemies: and when the wicked ſhall be ſwept into deſtruction, as with an impetuous flood, the earth, and all its contents, the ſum total of the worldling's idols, ſhall be burnt up. But, they who depend upon the Lord, and act according to his directions, who beſtir them as and when he bids them, and are ready to give him all the praiſe, will doubtleſs prevail againſt all enemies, add one victory to another; and at length be admitted into his preſence, to ſee and adore their before inviſible helper.

NOTES.

CHAP. VI.] V. 2. And David, &c.] Probably this was propoſed, and attempted, ſoon after the late victories over the Philiſtines. This great number of Iſraelites was collected to put the greater honour upon the ark, which had been ſo long left in obſcurity.

V. 2. From Baale, &c.] Another name for Kirjath-jearim: Gibeah, (v. 3.) ſignifies the hill, and means that diviſion of the city, where Abinadab's houſe was ſituated. The terms here uſed in ſpeaking of the ark are very expreſſive of reverence: "The ark of God, whoſe name "is called by the name of the Lord of hoſts; that dwelleth "between the cherubims." The name of Jehovah Sabaoth, the Lord of hoſts, was, as it were, affixed to the ark, as it was the moſt honoured external repreſentation of his glory. And when the ark was in its proper place, in the holy of holies, the Lord manifeſted his preſence, by the viſible glory above it, as the protector, worſhip, and glory of Iſrael. But eſpecially it was typical of Chriſt, and his merits, and mediation, wherein the name of Jehovah, and all his glorious excellencies are harmoniouſly diſplayed; whilſt all his hoſts, or armies of angels, repreſented by the cherubims, deſire to look down into thoſe myſteries, or to be employed by him, who is the protector, Saviour, and glory of his redeemed people, and whom ſinners may now approach upon a mercy ſeat.

V. 3. Upon a new cart, &c.] Thus they made the Philiſtines their precedent, inſtead of conſulting the law of God! Abinadab and Eleazar his ſon were probably dead before this time, as the ark had continued there near ſeventy years: but Uzzah, and Ahio, two other ſons, or deſcendants of Abinadab, had ſucceeded in the attendance upon the ark; and they now undertook to drive the cart, upon which it was to be conveyed. They probably were cart,

cart, and brought it out of the house of Abinadab that was in Gibeah: and Uzzah and Ahio, the sons of Abinadab, drave the new cart.

4 And they brought it out of the house of Abinadab, which was at Gibeah, accompanying the ark of God; and Ahio went before the ark.

5 And David, and all the house of Israel, played before the LORD on all manner of instruments made of fir wood, even on harps, and on psalteries, and on timbrels, and on cornets, and on cymbals.

6 And when they came to Nachon's threshing-floor, Uzzah put forth his hand to the ark of God, and took hold of it; for the oxen shook it.

7 And the anger of the LORD was kindled against Uzzah: and God smote him there for his error; and there he died by the ark of God.

8 And David was displeased, because the LORD had made a breach upon Uzzah; and he called the name of the place Perez-uzzah to this day.

9 And David was afraid of the LORD that day, and said, How shall the ark of the LORD come to me?

10 So David would not remove the ark of the LORD unto him into the city of David; but David carried it aside into the house of Obed-edom the Gittite.

11 And the ark of the LORD continued in the house of Obed-edom the Gittite three months: and the LORD blessed Obed-edom, and all his household.

12 And it was told king David, saying, The LORD hath blessed the house of Obed-edom, and all that pertaineth unto him, because of the ark of God. So David went and brought up the ark of God from the house of Obed-edom into the city of David with gladness.

13 And it was so, that when they that bare not of the tribe of Levi; (Note, 1 Sam. c. vii. v. 1.) And if there were any priests, or Levites present, they seem to have been unemployed: it does not appear that any care was taken to cover the ark; (Numb. c. vi. v. 5, 6:) nor were any sacrifices offered upon the occasion.

V. 7. For his error, &c.] It is enquired what Uzzah's error was? When he feared lest the ark should be thrown from the cart, with apparently good intentions, he laid hold of it to uphold it. But probably he had contracted an irreverent familiarity with this sacred symbol, and presumed upon the services, which he, and his family had performed, in so long entertaining, and taking care of it, when others neglected it: and imagined, that he had thereby acquired a sanctity, equal to that of the priests, or Levites. On this occasion, when all orders of men combined in shewing honour to the ark, he ought to have declined any further interference; but he and his brother seem to have taken the whole charge upon themselves, to the exclusion of the priests. Some think that he proposed this method of conveyance, and was in some sense answerable for the consequences: even the Kohathites, who were appointed to carry the ark, were expressly forbidden "to touch it, lest they die;" (Numb. c. iv. v. 15.) And there might be many circumstances, which shewed his touching the ark to be rash, irreverent, ill-timed, and unnecessary; and many things in the temper of his mind displeasing to God, which are not expressly recorded. But though Uzzah was singled out to be made an example of; the rebuke and warning were intended for David, for the priests, and for all Israel.

V. 8, 9.] Though David's heart was upright, his intentions good, and his zeal and love very fervent: yet there was much amiss in the frame of his spirit, as well as irregular in his proceedings, on this occasion. He seems to have been possessed with some measure of self-preference, or self-complacency, on account of the important service, which he was performing, after it had been so long neglected by all others; and to have thought that the goodness of the work would counterbalance every informality in the manner of performing it, and ensure to him comfort and commendation: and he had not taken time, to examine the law of God, how this good work ought to have been performed. When therefore matters turned out contrary to his expectations, he was greatly disconcerted, his lively religious affections were at once extinguished; and hard thoughts of God, and servile fear of his severity, succeeded to his zeal, hope, and joy; and he would not venture to bring the ark any nearer to him, lest he should be destroyed in like manner. Perez-uzzah signifies the breach of Uzzah.

V. 10, 11.] Until David had further considered the matter, and come to some determination, what to do with the ark, it was carried to the house of Obed-edom; who with humble confidence was ready to receive it, notwithstanding the example of Uzzah. There it abode three months, and the whole multitude returned home, and left their business unfinished. Obed-edom was a Levite, (1 Chron. c. xv. v. 18. 21. 24;) and he is called a Gittite, probably from the place of his birth, or of his abode. Every thing relating to his health, family, and circumstances, prospered in so extraordinary a manner, whilst the ark was with him, that every one noticed, and mentioned it to others; so that David heard of it, and was thereby instructed, and encouraged. Doubtless he behaved to the ark with due reverence.

the ark of the LORD had gone six paces, he sacrificed oxen and fatlings.

14 And David danced before the LORD with all his might; and David was girded with a linen ephod.

15 So David and all the house of Israel brought up the ark of the LORD with shouting, and with the sound of the trumpet.

16 And as the ark of the LORD came into the city of David, Michal Saul's daughter looked through a window, and saw king David leaping and dancing before the LORD; and she despised him in her heart.

17 And they brought in the ark of the LORD, and set it in his place, in the midst of the tabernacle that David had pitched for it: and David offered burnt-offerings and peace-offerings before the LORD.

18 And as soon as David had made an end of offering burnt-offerings and peace-offerings, he blessed the people in the name of the LORD of hosts.

19 And he dealt among all the people, even among the whole multitude of Israel, as well to the women as men, to every one a cake of bread, and a good piece of flesh, and a flagon of wine. So all the people departed every one to his house.

20 Then David returned to bless his household. And Michal the daughter of Saul came out to meet David, and said, How glorious was the king of Israel to-day, who uncovered himself to-day in the eyes of the handmaids of his servants, as one of the vain fellows shamelessly uncovereth himself!

21 And David said unto Michal, It was before the LORD, which chose me before thy father, and before all his house, to appoint me ruler over the people of the LORD, over Israel: therefore will I play before the LORD.

discovered his fault, and the reason of the breach upon Uzzah; and had recovered his temper, and experienced the revival of his zeal, love, hope, and joy; and moreover was become better acquainted with the rule of his duty, and more humble-minded in performing it. "His "love abounded in knowledge, and in all judgment," which before it did not. Therefore, conscious of his own unworthiness of being employed in such a service, and sensible of his cause for gratitude, if preserved from grievous miscarriages, he set out with offering sacrifices: and as he thus united humble faith, and holy fear, with his fervent affections, he was accepted, and prospered accordingly.

V. 14. With a linen ephod.] Thus David laid aside the distinctions of royalty, and levelled himself with his subjects in the service of God, except as he took the lead therein; but he did not attempt to encroach upon the priestly office. The methods, which were adopted, in expressing their joy and gratitude, were such as were customary amongst them; and their music, blowing of trumpets, and sacred dances, were doubtless accompanied with psalms of praise, sung to the glory of God, by vast multitudes in concert.

V. 16. Michal, Saul's daughter, &c.] Saul had neglected the ark, and religion; and had educated his children accordingly. It seems that Michal had no deep sense of the importance and excellency of heavenly things: but she was possessed with high thoughts of temporal dignity, and royalty. Perhaps she considered David's zeal for the ark, as a reproach of her father's negligence: at least she considered his transports of religious joy, in the midst of the people, as a degradation of his character, and as exposing him to contempt. David the brave captain, leading forth the people to battle, and returning with them in triumph, she had admired; but David the saint, leading the people in the ordinances of God, and setting them an example of fervency of spirit in his service, she despised in her heart: yet this was the most illustrious part of his character, in the judgment of all, who savoured heavenly things.

V. 17. The tabernacle, &c.] The tabernacle, which had been situated at Shiloh, was not removed to Jerusalem, but was placed about this time at Gibeon, with the altar of burnt-offering, &c; but David prepared another tent for the reception of the ark, where an altar was erected, and sacrifices offered; as they were also upon the former altar. Perhaps the building of a temple was already in contemplation, and this was intended for a temporary accommodation, until that were accomplished.

V. 18, 19. He blessed the people, &c.] He prayed with, and for the people, and as a prophet solemnly blessed them in the name of the Lord; not using the ministry of the priests on this occasion. And afterwards he distributed of the flesh of the peace-offerings, which he sacrificed at his own expence, a sufficiency to every one present for a sacred feast, with bread and wine in proportion.

V. 20. David returned, &c.] That is to worship God with his own family, as probably he was wont, and to join with them in a religious feast.

How glorious, &c.] This was the language of ridicule, and contempt: because David had expressed great zeal, and earnestness, Michal would suggest, that he had behaved in an indecent manner: as he had laid aside his royal robes, she would represent it, as if he had laid aside all his clothes. But we have no reason to suppose that David did any thing improper on the occasion, except as she considered his piety, and activity in religion as unbecoming the dignity of a king. (See 1 Sam. c. xix. vu 23, 24.)

V. 21, 22. It was before the Lord, &c.] David very properly gloried in his zeal for the service, and glory of God: before him he was willing to be abased both in his own eyes, and in those of others: and if his earnestness in religion was considered as "playing the fool," and rendering himself vile, he desired to be still more vile; for he resolved to be still more zealous in that good cause. But he intimated to her, that it was for want of that zeal, that her father was rejected; when he was chosen, in his stead to be ruler of "the people of the Lord;" and he was therefore bound by every tye to be very earnest in promoting his worship: and that that would prove his chief honour, which she despised as disgraceful to him.

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.

Our judgment in religion must be regulated by the word of God, and not by the customs of the world, or even of the church: as therein many human inventions have often, and long prevailed, when divine appointments have grown into disuse, and contempt. Notwithstanding these errors, and abuses, true believers will be accepted, who either discern not, or are unable to rectify them: yet they, who have it in their power, should embrace the first opportunity of replacing matters upon the scriptural foundation, and of bringing to light, and reputation those parts of true religion, which have been most neglected, and obscured. This is best done by shewing the nature, use, and importance of them, that others may willingly concur, and gradually call the attention of more, and more towards them: thus the change will appear to be effected by the authority of God, and of truth, and not by that of man. That the Lord dwelleth upon the mercy seat between the cherubims; that the name and perfections of Jehovah are in Jesus, the true ark of the covenant, forms the foundation of every genuine human hope of felicity, and is the source of every believer's privileges and comforts: whilst with all his hosts and all his authority, the Lord is his reconciled friend, father, and protector. Whatever else may be overlooked, these capital truths should be always placed in the most convincing, and conspicuous light, in every sermon, or religious ordinance; that sinners may be called upon to believe, and believers to rejoice in, and glorify God our Saviour. But not only is utter ignorance fatal to the soul; the irreverent abuse of the gospel may be equally destructive. Men frequently by office, or by habit, are conversant about the most important truths, or observances of religion with a carnal mind, till they contract a contemptuous familiarity with them; till they grow proud of their formal exercises; and till they presumptuously thrust themselves forward in such services, as do not belong to them; and, in their rash zeal for the supposed cause of godliness, use such means, as God hath not commanded, nay such as he hath prohibited. Whatever necessity may be imagined, or whatever good intentions may be pleaded, God will resent, and perhaps in this world, punish such forbidden touches of his ark: we should therefore be careful to keep our proper place, to do our own work, and to proceed in the manner prescribed in his word. Even eminently wise, and good men cannot perform very important services, without feeling, at some times and in some degree, the workings of pride, and self-preference. And though religion consists much in high affections, and great love, and delight in spiritual things; yet even when the affections are genuine, and gracious, except they are accompanied with proportionable knowledge, judgment, and humility, they will betray us into many unwarrantable practices, and expose us to severe rebukes. In the fervency of our zeal we are all very prone to forget God's precepts, and are too eager about the substance of our services, to consult the scriptures about the right method of conducting them. Thus we are unawares drawn into transgression, and meet with severe checks, when we expected great success, and comfort. This is indeed needful, and salutary, but it often exceedingly disconcerts the mind. Then the transition is very sudden from elevated joy, and confidence, to great dejection, and fretfulness; from a hope bordering on irreverence, to slavish fear, which verges to despondency, and disheartens from present duty. Such sudden changes the believer recollects with shame, often, especially in the time of his injudicious, and inexperienced zeal, he too has been "greatly displeased," and discouraged by those things, which were only intended to humble, and instruct him: and whilst he cannot excuse David, he sees more cause to condemn himself, and to pray, "enter "not into judgment with thy servant, O Lord, for in thy "sight shall no man living be justified." But when one is disheartened from active service, through servile fear, others will be animated with humble faith and hope, and not dread the ark, or the ordinance; but the sin, which occasioned the rebuke, or against which the threatning is denounced. And the Lord will abundantly recompense those, who are humbly bold for him, whilst others are either presumptuous, or desponding. When godly men, who have been betrayed into any unwarrantable conduct, have had time for self-examination, searching the scriptures, and prayer, they will discover, and confess their mistakes, and be reduced to a better temper; they will justify God in his corrections; they will be convinced, that safety, and comfort consist, (not in absenting themselves from God's ordinances, or in declining dangerous services, but) in attending to their duty in a proper spirit, and manner; they will profit by their own blunders, and stand the stronger for their falls: and they will not abate in their zeal, and affections, but learn to connect them with humility, and to regulate them according to the precepts of God's word: then they may expect to prosper in their attempts to glorify God, and promote the cause of true religion. We are so unworthy, and our services are so defiled, that all our joy in God must be connected with the exercise of repentance, and faith in the Redeemer's atoning blood: and the more we are preserved from gross sins, and the more we are enabled to do in the work of God, with acceptance and comfort, the greater obligations we are brought under, and the more thankful we ought to be. We ought to serve God with our whole body, and soul, and with every endowment, or capacity we possess; our religious affections cannot be too intense, if properly directed; nor our expressions of them too strong, provided all be done decently, and in order, according to the spirit of that dispensation, which we are under. men are as nothing before the infinite God; their dependance is as entire, and their obligations, and accountableness are greater, than those of their inferiors: the meanest employment in his service is in truth the greatest honour of the mightiest princes: they ought to be as base in their own eyes, when worshipping the Lord, and confessing their sins before him, as their meanest subjects: and they should take the lead, and set the example in every thing good: and though some will despise their piety, as madness, or meanness, they will be had in honour for it by numbers, yea by many, who are not themselves religious. Indeed proud, and carnal persons always have ridiculed fervent piety, and zealous devotion, as folly, or enthusiasm. Satan hath long deluded men into a persuasion, that such holy earnestness is unmanly, or unprincely; nay unbecoming men of genius, learning, wealth, or influence, and only fit for inferior persons, for ignorant poor people, for women, or children. However wise, eminent, or excellent a man may be in other respects, if he be scripturally zealous, and devoted to God, he must expect contempt, and insult, even from his inferiors, his relatives, and those, on whom he hath conferred the greatest obligations: nay he need not wonder, if he be accused of the most shameless practices, without the least ground for such a charge. This is the natural effect of man's enmity to God's holiness, and of satan's subtlety in opposing true religion. But if the Lord hath chosen, and accepted us, and these things come upon us for doing his will, as in his presence, and for his glory, we should deem reproaches honourable, and determine to become still more vile in the eyes of ungodly revilers, by abounding in those services, which they despise: and whilst we meekly rebuke such opposers, the Lord will certainly plead our cause against them: and they who condemn great revivals of religion, because not conducted just to their mind, are often punished by being totally excluded from all share in so honourable a work. Piety should always be attended with liberality, as we have power: public exercises of religion must not exclude secret, and family worship; which should be neglected by none in any rank of life. And finally in this removal of the ark let us contemplate the Redeemer's ascension to glory, and seek to participate his precious gifts, and to serve him with ardent love and joy.

NOTES.

CHAP. VII.] V. 1—3.] This chapter is nearly the same with the seventeenth chapter of the first book of Chronicles, and there will be a continual reference to it, in the notes upon it. David being quietly possessed of the kingdom, and victorious over all his enemies, and at rest in his palace, considered how he might employ his leisure, and prosperity in the service of God; (Dan. c. iv. v. 29, 30:) when it occurred to his mind how stately his own house was, and how meanly the ark was lodged; and he conceived a design of building a magnificent temple for it's reception. This design he intimated to Nathan the prophet, a man of great piety, and wisdom, who was his companion, and counsellor. Nathan, assured that the design arose from zeal for the glory of God, and that the Lord was with David in all his undertakings, encouraged him to proceed; but not by revelation from God, but according to his private judgment as a godly man.

V. 4. That night, &c.] This message was sent without delay, that David might not remain under a mistake, or set his heart upon a work, that was not intended for him: and it was sent by Nathan, that he might not be discouraged, or despised, by having his counsel contradicted by another prophet. Nathan was not faulty in encouraging David, any more than David was in purposing to build a temple: they both did well, but the Lord had wise reasons for determining otherwise: (1 Kings, c. viii. v. 18.

V. 5. Shalt thou, &c.] That is, dost thou entertain such a purpose, which did not enter into the thoughts of any, that were before thee? yet thou shalt not accomplish that design, for the work is assigned to another person. It appears that Nathan spake more to David, than is here recorded; for we shall meet with other reasons hereafter, why David was not permitted to build the temple: and in general we have only abstracts of the messages and discourses recorded in the Bible; (Acts, c. ii. v. 40.)

V. 6, 7.) Though the building of a temple accorded with the spirit of the Mosaic dispensation, it was not commanded by any law, and was not therefore peculiarly any one's duty, without some further intimation from God: In the days of Moses the Lord had, by the ark the symbol of Israel out of Egypt, even to this day, but have walked in a tent and in a tabernacle.

7 In all the places wherein I have walked with all the children of Israel, spake I a word with any of the tribes of Israel, whom I commanded to feed my people Israel, saying, Why build ye not me an house of cedar?

8 Now therefore so shalt thou say unto my servant David, Thus saith the LORD of hosts, I took thee from the sheepcote, from following the sheep, to be ruler over my people, over Israel.

9 And I was with thee whithersoever thou wentest, and have cut off all thine enemies out of thy sight, and have made thee a great name, like unto the name of the great men that are in the earth.

10 Moreover I will appoint a place for my people Israel, and will plant them, that they may dwell in a place of their own, and move no more, neither shall the children of wickedness afflict them any more, as beforetime;

11 And as since the time that I commanded judges to be over my people Israel, and have caused thee to rest from all thine enemies. Also the LORD telleth thee, that he will make thee an house.

12 And when thy days be fulfilled, and thou shalt sleep with thy fathers, I will set up thy seed after thee, which shall proceed out of thy bowels, and I will establish his kingdom.

13 He shall build an house for my name, and I will establish the throne of his kingdom for ever.

14 I will be his father, and he shall be my son: if he commit iniquity, I will chasten him with the rod of men, and with the stripes of the children of men:

15 But my mercy shall not depart away from him, as I took it from Saul, whom I put away before thee.

of his presence, dwelt, and removed with his people, in a tabernacle of his own appointing. Since Israel was settled in Canaan, none of their rulers or judges, who had been raised up out of several of their tribes, were commanded to build a temple. Yet the Lord had accepted their worship, though the ark abode within curtains. It was not necessary either to the glory of God, or the good of Israel to have a temple, or it would have been prepared before: and it might therefore very well be delayed a little longer.

V. 8—11.] Though the Lord did not employ David in this service, yet he did not refuse him in anger: but he was neither to engross all the honour, nor do all the work. He had been advanced from an inferior situation to the throne of Israel, and employed in subduing their enemies, as well as made triumphant over his own; and he was become one of the most honourable, and renowned characters in the world. Moreover the Lord had further work for him to do of another sort, which was proper to be done before the building of the temple. The Canaanites still dwelt amongst them in the land, and greatly harassed them; and the neighbouring nations frequently afflicted them grievously: and this had been the case from their first entrance into Canaan, even in the time of the judges, who only wrought temporary deliverances, from their more grievous oppressors. It was reserved for David to crush the remnant of the Canaanites, to subjugate their other enemies, and to effect their full and quiet possession of the land of promise; and it was only by their revolts, and apostacies, that they afterwards lost the benefit of his victories. This was his peculiar work; and though given as a promise to Israel, was intended to mark out David's line of usefulness, for which the Lord had "caused him to "rest from all his personal enemies." And he moreover greatly reformed the state of religion, and settled the courses of the priests, and Levites, and composed hymns of praise for the use of the church in after ages, and made vast preparations for the temple itself. All this honour, and usefulness might then suffice him; though the building of the temple were reserved for another.

V. 12—16.] The Lord intended to establish David's posterity upon the throne of Israel; which was not granted to Moses, Joshua, or any of his predecessors: and therefore this part of the work, and honour was to be reserved for his son, who was hereafter to be born; (by which expression Absalom, Adonijah, and all the children, which David then had, were excluded from the succession.) He would be of a peaceable disposition, and enabled to live at peace, through the success of David's wars; and would have more leisure and ability to complete the design. To this son of David, and his posterity very precious promises were given: the Lord promised to be a father to him, and treat him as his son, and to establish the throne of his kingdom; and if he sinned, to correct him as men do their children, according to what they are able to endure, and for their good, but not to take the kingdom from him, as he had done from Saul, but to establish it from generation to generation: and though for Solomon's sin the ten tribes were rent from his son, yet the kingdom over Judah remained, to the Babylonish captivity, in the family of David, and Solomon. But these promises were also predictions of Christ, the Son of David, the true Solomon, the prince of peace, who builds the spiritual temple of true believers, to be an habitation of God through the Spirit. Part of that, which is here spoken, is applied to Christ in the New Testament; (Heb. c. i. v. 5.) The stability, and perpetuity of the kingdom in the house of David is in him fully accomplished: and the clause concerning the merciful chastisement of David's son, if he offended, and 16 And thine houſe and thy kingdom ſhall be eſtabliſhed for ever before thee: thy throne ſhall be eſtabliſhed for ever.

17 According to all theſe words, and according to all this viſion, ſo did Nathan ſpeak unto David.

18 Then went king David in, and ſat before the LORD, and he ſaid, Who am I, O Lord GOD? and what is my houſe, that thou haſt brought me hitherto?

19 And this was yet a ſmall thing in thy ſight, O Lord GOD; but thou haſt ſpoken alſo of thy ſervant's houſe for a great while to come. And is this the manner of man, O Lord GOD?

20 And what can David ſay more unto thee? for thou, Lord GOD, knoweſt thy ſervant.

21 For thy word's ſake, and according to thine own heart haſt thou done all theſe great things, to make thy ſervant know them.

22 Wherefore thou art great, O Lord GOD: for there is none like thee, neither is there any god beſide thee, according to all that we have heard with our ears.

23 And what one nation in the earth is like thy people, even like Iſrael, whom God went to redeem for a people to himſelf, and to make him a name, and to do for you great things and terrible, for thy land, before thy people, which thou redeemedſt to thee from Egypt, from the nations and their gods?

24 For thou haſt confirmed to thyſelf thy people Iſrael, to be a people unto thee for ever: and thou, LORD, art become their God.

the engagement not to reject him for his tranſgreſſions, belongs to his people, who are his ſeed, and one with him: and in a parallel paſſage, (Pſalm lxxxix. v. 19—37;) it is put in the plural number, "If his children forſake, &c." In the expreſſion (v. 16,) "before thee," is a gracious intimation, that though theſe things would take place after David's death, yet he would be acquainted with, and rejoice in them. In ſhort David had had, and would have much honourable work of another kind: he had ſhed much blood in war, (1 Chron. c. xxviii. v. 3;) and lived in troubleſome times: the appointed ſeaſon was not yet arrived, nor were ſuitable preparations made; and the typical meaning of the temple required that his ſon Solomon ſhould build it.

V. 17. So did Nathan, &c.] He did not heſitate to contradict his own counſel; nor did he fear the cenſure, or contempt, to which this might expoſe him: and David wiſely thought no worſe of either him, or his meſſage, on that account.

V. 18. Then went, &c.] David both acquieſced in the Lord's will in this matter; and found his love, gratitude, hope, and joy greatly excited, by theſe remembrances of paſt, and promiſes of future mercies to himſelf, and his people, and poſterity; eſpecially as they all centred in the promiſed Saviour, that was to deſcend from him. Without delay therefore he went to the tabernacle of God before the ark, and poured out the fulneſs of his heart in prayer. It is ſaid, that "he ſat before the Lord;" but it is the only place in Scripture, which mentions ſitting, as the poſture of any ſervant of God in religious worſhip. And, though circumſtances may frequently render it neceſſary, it does not ſeem otherwiſe becoming: probably, the expreſſion only means his continuance before the Lord for a conſiderable time, and does not determine the poſture, in which he prayed.

Who am I, &c?] When David conſidered the mean eſtate, from which he had been advanced to the throne; and how he had been brought forward, employed, proſpered, and honoured: and when he recollected, the infinite majeſty, and holineſs of God, and his own ſinfulneſs, and inſignificancy before him; he thought nothing of his own endowments, or performances, but regarded the whole of what had been given to him, and done by him, as the ſubject of admiring gratitude and praiſe; and was ſurpriſed that the Lord had born with, upheld, and bleſſed ſo worthleſs a perſon hitherto, in ſuch a manner.

V. 19. Is this the manner, &c.] David was further led to reflect upon the bleſſings, which had now been entailed upon his family, as well as upon himſelf, and his admiration was thereby ſtill more increaſed; and he adored the riches of the divine mercy, as infinitely ſurpaſſing the largeſt bounty of man. It is not their manner thus to notice the mean, the vile, the unworthy: thus to make one kindneſs an introduction to, and an earneſt of, and reaſon for, further favours: No, this was beyond example, or conception. Or it may mean, "Is this thy manner of "dealing with guilty, polluted rebellious man?" How wonderful the love of a holy God to ſuch ſinful creatures, eſpecially in the promiſe and gift of his only-begotten Son, to be the propitiation for their ſins!

V. 20. What can David, &c?] He could find nothing to aſk for himſelf, kingdom, or poſterity, but what had already been covenanted to him: his prayer therefore conſiſted of thankful repetitions of the promiſes: for the Lord knew his ſervant, and would do every thing in perfect truth, wiſdom, and love, for his good; and he deſired not proſperity, wealth, or honour; except in reference to the will, and glory of God.

V. 21. For thy word's ſake, &c.] David could aſſign no reaſon for the Lord's former kindneſs to him, but his ſovereign will, according to his own heart, dictating his gracious promiſes, and then for his word's ſake fulfilling them: and he had the ſame ground for expecting all the remaining covenanted bleſſings.

25 And now, O Lord GOD, the word that thou haſt ſpoken concerning thy ſervant, and concerning his houſe, eſtabliſh it for ever, and do as thou haſt ſaid.

26 And let thy name be magnified for ever, ſaying, The LORD of hoſts is the God over Iſrael: and let the houſe of thy ſervant David be eſtabliſhed before thee.

27 For thou, O LORD of hoſts, God of Iſrael, haſt revealed to thy ſervant, ſaying, I will build thee an houſe; therefore hath thy ſervant found in his heart to pray this prayer unto thee.

28 And now, O Lord GOD, thou art that God, and thy words be true, and thou haſt promiſed this goodneſs unto thy ſervant.

29 Therefore now let it pleaſe thee to bleſs the houſe of thy ſervant, that it may continue for ever before thee: for thou, O Lord GOD, haſt ſpoken it, and with thy bleſſing let the houſe of thy ſervant be bleſſed for ever.

V. 26. And let thy name, &c.] By his promiſes the Lord had connected the glory of his own truth, with the eſtabliſhment of David's family: David alſo expected, and deſired, that they might be inſtrumental in maintaining true religion for the glory of God. And in Chriſt all the perfections of the Godhead are glorified; and by him the cauſe of truth, and righteouſneſs is, and will be eſtabliſhed upon earth. In all theſe ways David prayed for the magnifying of God's name, in the eſtabliſhment of his poſterity.

V. 27. Therefore hath, &c.] He could not have ventured to make ſuch large requeſts; if the Lord had not promiſed the bleſſings that he craved: but he was humbly bold to aſk all, that he had engaged to give. The promiſes of God are not made perſonally to us by name, as theſe were to David: but they belong to all, who believe in Jeſus Chriſt, and plead them in his name: and as far as we are conſcious that this is our deſire, experience, and practice, we may find in our heart to make our requeſts as large as the largeſt of God's promiſes, and we ſhall not meet with a refuſal.

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.

The due conſideration of the author of our temporal mercies, and of the end, for which they were beſtowed, will beſt preſerve us from abuſing them, in the gratification of pride, avarice, luxury, or ſenſuality. The more leiſure, and ability any man is favoured with; the more ſhould he deviſe, and attempt ſchemes of important uſefulneſs: and they, who are largely repleniſhed with the grace of God, will moſt comfortably enjoy their poſſeſſions, when they can render them ſubſervient to his glory, and the ſalvation of ſouls: they will be grieved to reflect how much is expended upon themſelves, and how little in the ſervice of God; and ſcarce deem any thing done for him, whilſt ſo much remains undone. They ſhould be encouraged by their brethren, and by miniſters, who conceive great deſigns for the advancement of religion, as far as they accord to the word of God: yet many plans, which are conſiſtent with both the law of love, and the goſpel of grace, may prove unſucceſsful: for the Lord, in his infinite wiſdom, may not ſee good, at that time, or in that manner, to work by them: but he will always accept, and recompenſe the willing mind. As far, as the Lord is with us, and we are influenced by his grace, we ſhall aim at nothing, but what is good in itſelf: yet we may miſtake the ſervice allotted to us, and attempt the work, which is intended for another perſon. The wiſeſt and beſt of men (not excepting prophets and apoſtles, unleſs when immediately ſpeaking by inſpiration from God,) have been liable to error; and therefore the claim of infallibility forms the very eſſence of blaſphemous arrogance. But the Lord will rectify the prejudicial miſtakes of his upright ſervants, and prevent every bad conſequence of them: and it is their true honour, as well as their duty, to retract what they have unadviſedly advanced, and to acknowledge themſelves miſtaken: and all wiſe men will reſpect them the more for doing ſo. Yet many, having once erred, fooliſhly account it their point of honour to vindicate their miſtakes, at all adventures: and thus their whole conduct becomes a continuation of blunders, ruinous to themſelves, and to others, who are deceived by them. The Lord doth not need, though he uſes, the ſervices of man: neither doth he regard external ſplendour; we cannot therefore pleaſe him in his inſtituted worſhip, if we have not the warrant of his word for what we do. He hath dwelt amongſt, accepted and bleſſed thoſe, who ſpiritually worſhipped him, in the midſt of external meanneſs; and he never rejected, or found fault with them on that account: but no outward magnificence will render formal ſervices more pleaſing to him. To be employed by the Lord is a great honour, and favour; and the more we do for him, acceptably and uſefully, the greater are our obligations to him: but even theſe gracious deſires muſt be ſubordinated to his holy will, and regulated by his precept. He appoints unto every man his work, and endows him with ſuitable qualifications: and every one of us ſhould thankfully, and faithfully mind our proper buſineſs; and rejoice in the ſuperior talents, and more honourable and important ſervices of our brethren. When our envious, diſcontented hearts are ready to murmur at diſappointments, we ſhould reflect on what the Lord hath already done for us; from what a wretched condition he hath brought us; what favours he hath conferred on us; and what bleſſings he hath prepared for us: and we ſhall readily perceive that it is much better with us, than we have deſerved, or could reaſonably have expected: nay that our deſires are not granted, becauſe our wiſe, and gracious Lord ſees it better for us, that they ſhould be refuſed. Our own plans, though well intended, and formed, are commonly fit for nothing but to be daſhed in pieces, to make way for the Lord's purpoſes reſpecting us, of which perhaps we had no conception. But, in one way or other, God will bleſs, and make uſeful to his church, thoſe perſons, who ſimply devote themſelves, and

AND after this it came to pass, that David smote the Philistines, and subdued them: and David took Metheg-ammah out of the hand of the Philistines.

2 And he smote Moab, and measured them with a line, casting them down to the ground; even with two lines measured he to put to death, and with one full line to keep alive: and so the Moabites became David's servants, and brought gifts.

3 David smote also Hadadezer, the son of Rehob, king of Zobah, as he went to recover his border at the river Euphrates.

all they have, to his glory. If the Lord deny them one imagined blessing, he will counterbalance the refusal with other tokens of his love, and with raising their expectations of other promised mercies: and he teaches them to rejoice in the prosperity of his church, as in their own felicity. And though Israel according to the flesh forfeited by their sins, the rest, to which they were brought; and the cause of God hath hitherto been greatly opposed, and run down: yet the time is coming when it will gain the entire ascendancy, and overspread the earth; and the whole Israel of God shall at last be planted, and dwell in a place of their own, and move no more; neither shall the children of wickedness afflict them any more for ever. The most favoured, and honoured of men will soon fulfil their days in this world, and sleep with their fathers; but they die at peace with God, and depart hence to join the blessed company before the throne. Though we should desire the entail of our blessings upon our posterity, that they may be the children of God also; yet our chief comfort in life, and death must arise from looking unto Jesus, the Son of God, and the everlasting King of Israel, and in participating his covenanted mercies. In his human nature all the fulness of the godhead dwelleth bodily, and by uniting his people to himself through his holy Spirit, he builds the living temple, in which the Lord will dwell for ever. If we thus belong to him, he will not finally reject us; but when we offend, he will by rebukes, and chastenings bring us to repentance, and he will establish us, as kings, and priests before him to all eternity. We should then attend unto the word, which he hath spoken; and when our affections are excited, or our consciences are alarmed thereby, we should without delay retire, to pour out our hearts before the Lord in fervent prayer, grounded upon his gracious promises in Christ Jesus. The more the Lord really honours any man, the lower he will sink in self-abasement; as conscious that he hath nothing of his own, but meanness, sin, and misery, and that he owes all the rest to the free mercy, and goodness of God: but if the blessings, that we have already received, are so vast, and unmerited; if it appear wonderful, as it doth to every humble believer, that the Lord hath brought him hitherto; what shall we say to the future, the eternal felicity, which he hath covenanted to his people? Or of the gift of his Son to be the ransom of our souls? The Lord's thoughts, and ways are not like ours, or he never would have bestowed such blessings on rebellious polluted man! What can we then say more unto the Lord? What can we ask, or desire, but the performance of those promises, which of his own sovereign mercy he had made unto us? Comparing the former displays of the glorious excellencies of our God, with those, which he hath manifested in his dealings with us, we shall at once have our admiring gratitude enlarged, and our expectation of further blessings increased; and shall find in our hearts to plead his precious promises, neither deeming them too large, nor too hard for him to perform to us wretched sinners. Though he have not given us "a great name, like to that "of the great men, that are in the earth;" we shall be contented with a name written in the book of life, and a clear character amongst our brethren: and we can desire no more for our posterity, than that they may be blessed with the blessing of the Lord for ever.

NOTES.

CHAP. VIII.] V. 1. Metheg-ammah, &c.] This signifies the bridle of Ammah: it was probably some place, where the Philistines by a garrison curbed the Israelites. It was perhaps one of the towns belonging to Gath, which David took at this time. The Philistines had long oppressed Israel; Samson had begun to deliver his people from them; but David effectually subjugated them, and left them no power any more to molest them.——N. B. In these chapters, where any thing is mentioned, that is neither in the text, nor referred to in the place, it may be found in the parallel scriptures, referred to, at the close of the contents.

V. 2. He smote Moab, &c.] The Jews say that the Moabites had slain David's parents: but doubtless he had some just cause for this war; and for the severity, with which he treated them: as he seems to have measured out, and desolated two thirds of the country; and to have slaughtered two thirds of the captives. Thus the Moabites became tributaries to Israel, as had been predicted: (Num. c. xxiv. v. 17.)

V. 3. As he went, &c.] Or "to establish his domi-"nion, &c." Some understand this of David, others of Hadadezer. Probably this prince was jealous of David's growing greatness, and came to assist the Moabites, in order to secure his own dominions towards the Euphrates: by which means David had a fair opportunity given him, of extending his conquests to that river, as had been promised: (Gen. c. xv. v. 18. Deut. c. xi. v. 24.)

V. 4. Seven hundred, &c.] Seven thousand are mentioned in Chronicles: perhaps they were divided into seven hundred divisions of ten men each: however David dis-

ed

ed all the chariot horſes, but reſerved of them for an hundred chariots.

5 And when the Syrians of Damaſcus came to ſuccour Hadadezer king of Zobah, David ſlew of the Syrians two and twenty thouſand men.

6 Then David put garriſons in Syria of Damaſcus; and the Syrians became ſervants to David, and brought gifts. And the LORD preſerved David whitherſoever he went.

7 And David took the ſhields of gold that were on the ſervants of Hadadezer, and brought them to Jeruſalem.

8 And from Betah, and from Berothai, cities of Hadadezer, king David took exceeding much braſs.

9 When Toi king of Hamath heard that David had ſmitten all the hoſt of Hadadezer,

10 Then Toi ſent Joram his ſon unto king David, to ſalute him, and to bleſs him, becauſe he had fought againſt Hadadezer, and ſmitten him: (for Hadadezer had wars with Toi:) and Joram brought with him veſſels of ſilver, and veſſels of gold, and veſſels of braſs;

11 Which alſo king David did dedicate unto the LORD, with the ſilver and gold that he had dedicated of all nations which he ſubdued:

12 Of Syria, and of Moab, and of the children of Ammon, and of the Philiſtines, and of Amalek, and of the ſpoil of Hadadezer, ſon of Rehob, king of Zobah.

13 And David gat him a name when he returned from ſmiting of the Syrians in the valley of ſalt, being eighteen thouſand men.

14 And he put garriſons in Edom; throughout all Edom put he garriſons: and all they of Edom became David's ſervants. And the LORD preſerved David whitherſoever he went.

15 And David reigned over all Iſrael; and David executed judgment and juſtice unto all his people.

16 And Joab the ſon of Zeruiah was over the hoſt; and Jehoſhaphat the ſon of Ahilud was recorder;

17 And Zadok the ſon of Ahitub, and Ahimelech the ſon of Abiathar, were the prieſts; and Seraiah was the ſcribe;

18 And Benaiah the ſon of Jehoiada was over both the Cherethites and the Pelethites; and David's ſons were chief rulers.

abled the moſt of them, not deſiring to truſt in chariots, or in horſes, but in the living God.

V. 5. The Syrians of, &c.] Theſe were in alliance with, but not ſubject to Hadadezer. The Syrians of Aram-naharaim, or Meſopotamia, were another diſtinct people, and on this occaſion oppoſed David.

V. 9—11.] Hamath lay north of Canaan, and ſouth of Damaſcus. Thus by arms, or alliances, the heathen nations became tributary to David, and furniſhed thoſe riches, which he dedicated to the Lord for the building of the temple.

V. 12. Of the children of Ammon, &c.] Either ſome of them at this time aſſiſted the Moabites; or this is ſpoken by way of anticipation. (c. x.)

V. 13. Of the Syrians, &c.] They ſeem to have been Edomites fighting in behalf of the Syrians: this laſt victory obtained David great renown, though Joab and Abiſhai commanded in the battle. Thus the predictions concerning the Edomites began to be fulfilled: (Gen. c. xxv. v. 23. c. xxvii. v. 40. Num. c. xxiv. v. 18.)

V. 15—18. David executed, &c.] This marks the aſſiduity, as well as the equity, and impartiality of David's adminiſtration; in which, as well as in his victories, he was a type of Chriſt. Under him Joab was chief commander of the forces. Jehoſhaphat recorded and brought forward every buſineſs in an orderly manner. Under Abiathar the High Prieſt, Ahimelech his ſon, and Zadok deſcended from Eleazar, were the preſiding prieſts, probably the one on Mount Zion, the other at Gibeon, where the tabernacle was. Seraiah was ſcribe, or ſecretary, to inſpect and manage all writings concerning foreign or domeſtic tranſactions. And Benaiah commanded the Cherethites and Pelethites; David's conſtant attendants, or guards, who were choſen out from his other troops, and probably conſiſted mainly of thoſe, who had accompanied him in his diſtreſſes. Whilſt his ſons, who were grown up, were initiated into public buſineſs, as they became capable of it.

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.

In due ſeaſon, and ſucceſſion, every promiſe, and prediction of God's word will receive their full accompliſhment: ſhort is the triumphing, and certain the ruin of all his enemies, however ſtrong, and confederated they are. They, who confide in the Lord's protection, and are doing his work, will be preſerved, and proſpered by him, whitherſoever they go. Theſe will not allow themſelves to glory in their ſucceſs, or to eſtabliſh any other ground of confidence, than the power, and truth of him, who hath hitherto helped them: to him they will dedicate the fruits of their proſperity; and in this they will be diſtinguiſhed from all mighty ones, who have been renowned upon the earth. It is true wiſdom to court their friendſhip, whom the Lord proſpers. A ſafe, and honourable peace ſhould be the object of all wars: and diligent impartial admini-

AND David ſaid, Is there yet any that is left of the houſe of Saul, that I may ſhew him kindneſs for Jonathan's ſake?

2 And there was of the houſe of Saul a ſervant, whoſe name was Ziba: and when they had called him unto David, the king ſaid unto him, Art thou Ziba? And he ſaid, Thy ſervant is he.

3 And the king ſaid, Is there not yet any of the houſe of Saul, that I may ſhew the kindneſs of God unto him? And Ziba ſaid unto the king, Jonathan hath yet a ſon, which is lame on his feet.

4 And the king ſaid unto him, Where is he? And Ziba ſaid unto the king, Behold, he is in the houſe of Machir, the ſon of Ammiel, in Lo-debar.

5 Then king David ſent, and fetched him out of the houſe of Machir, the ſon of Ammiel, from Lo-debar.

6 Now when Mephiboſheth, the ſon of Jonathan, the ſon of Saul, was come unto David, he fell on his face, and did reverence. And David ſaid, Mephiboſheth. And he anſwered, Behold thy ſervant.

7 And David ſaid unto him, Fear not: for I will ſurely ſhew thee kindneſs for Jonathan thy father's ſake, and will reſtore thee all the land of Saul thy father; and thou ſhalt eat bread at my table continually.

8 And he bowed himſelf, and ſaid, What is thy ſervant, that thou ſhouldeſt look upon ſuch a dead dog as I am?

9 Then the king called to Ziba, Saul's ſervant, and ſaid unto him, I have given unto thy maſter's ſon all that pertained to Saul, and to all his houſe.

10 Thou therefore, and thy ſons, and thy ſervants, ſhall till the land for him, and thou ſhalt bring in the fruits, that thy maſter's ſon may have food to eat: but Mephiboſheth thy maſter's ſon ſhall eat bread alway at my table. Now Ziba had fifteen ſons and twenty ſervants.

11 Then ſaid Ziba unto the king, Accord-ſtration of juſtice, the buſineſs of thoſe, who are advanced above others; for their authority was given them, not to look great, but to do good with. Thus the Son of David ſubjects his enemies: his goſpel is a ſavour of life to ſome, and of death to others: he will be glorified upon his obſtinate oppoſers; and by thoſe, who welcome him as their Lord, and Saviour. Many aſſiſt in building his ſpiritual temple, who have no place in it: his government is in judgment, and in juſtice, as well as in mercy: and all, who adhere to him faithfully in a ſtate of humiliation, and ſuffering, ſhall reign with him for ever in glory. To him let us ſubmit, his friendſhip let us ſeek, and his ſervice let us count our honour, and our pleaſure; and diligently attend to the work, which he aſſigns to each of us.

NOTES.

CHAP. IX.] V. 1. And David ſaid, &c.] Mephiboſheth was only five years old at his father's death, (c. iv. v. 4;) but at this time he had a ſon, (v. 12.) So that many years had elapſed before David made this enquiry. For above ſeven years he had been oppoſed by Iſh-boſheth, and had had many engagements afterwards: he had not injured any of Saul's family; but he ſeems to have been too forgetful of his friendſhip with, and engagements to Jonathan. As Mephiboſheth was brought up in obſcurity beyond Jordan, and perhaps purpoſely concealed by the ſuſpicious care of his friends, David probably knew not that Jonathan had any child living. But to ſhew his entire forgiveneſs of Saul's injuries, and his gratitude for Jonathan's kindneſs, he wiſhed to reſtore Saul's eſtate to, and confer other favours, on ſome of his remaining poſterity, for the ſake of his friend.

V. 3. The kindneſs of God, &c.] That is, for the ſake of the oath of God ſworn to Jonathan: or according to the example of the Lord's kindneſs unto himſelf.

V. 4. Of Machir, &c. &c.] This ſame perſon was afterwards a very uſeful friend to David; (c. xvii. v. 27—29:) and perhaps the more willingly on account of David's kindneſs to Mephiboſheth, whom he had generouſly brought up.

V. 6. And David ſaid, &c.] David might have heard of the name of Mephiboſheth, or perhaps had ſeen him in his infancy, and now recollected his features, though he knew not before that he was living.

V. 7. All the land of, &c.] Saul's paternal eſtate, which came into David's hands after the death of Iſh-boſheth, and whith ſeems to have been very large, was reſtored by him to Mephiboſheth, as the right heir; and he was beſides admitted to a place at David's own table.

V. 8. A dead dog, &c.] That is, a perſon, who is very mean, and incapable of being any ways ſerviceable: Mephiboſheth not only adverted to his unworthineſs, but to his bodily infirmities, in this expreſſion of grateful ſurpriſe. He ſeems to have been an unambitious, modeſt, friendly and pious man.

V. 9—12.] Ziba had been greatly enriched under Saul, and was now entruſted with the management of Mephiboſheth's eſtate, becauſe of his profeſſed affection for his family:

ing to all that my lord the king hath commanded his ſervant, ſo ſhall thy ſervant do. As for Mephiboſheth, ſaid the king, he ſhall eat at my table, as one of the king's ſons.

12 And Mephiboſheth had a young ſon, whoſe name was Micha: and all that dwelt in the houſe of Ziba were ſervants unto Mephiboſheth.

13 So Mephiboſheth dwelt in Jeruſalem: for he did eat continually at the king's table; and was lame on both his feet.

2 Then ſaid David, I will ſhew kindneſs unto Hanun the ſon of Nahaſh, as his father ſhewed kindneſs unto me. And David ſent to comfort him, by the hand of his ſervants for his father. And David's ſervants came into the land of the children of Ammon.

3 And the princes of the children of Ammon ſaid unto Hanun their lord, Thinkeſt thou that David doth honour thy father, that he hath ſent comforters unto thee? hath not David rather ſent his ſervants unto thee to ſearch the city, and to ſpy it out, and to overthrow it?

4 Wherefore Hanun took David's ſervants, and ſhaved off the one half of their beards, and cut off their garments in the middle, even to their buttocks, and ſent them away.

5 When they told it unto David, he ſent to meet them, becauſe the men were greatly but David ſeems to have been more generous, than prudent in this appointment. Mephiboſheth's family, and eſpecially his ſon Micha, were to be provided for out of the eſtate, though he himſelf lived at David's table. Some underſtand the laſt clauſe of the 11th verſe, as the words of Ziba, propoſing in a boaſting manner to entertain Mephiboſheth royally at his own table, without troubling David.

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.

Amidſt a multiplicity of affairs, we are prone to forget the gratitude we owe, and the engagements we are under, not only to our friends, but to the Lord himſelf: but perſons of real, and eminent godlineſs, when they recall to mind their obligations, will have no reſt till they have diſcharged them: they will be burthened with thoſe poſſeſſions, which they but ſuppoſe in equity to belong to another: and they will be impatient to expreſs their forgiveneſs of thoſe, who have injured them; and their gratitude to the perſons, or the relations of thoſe, who have been kind to them. They, who have much in their power, ſhould enquire after opportunities of doing good; for frequently the moſt deſerving objects of our compaſſion are concealed by their modeſty, and patience. Kindneſs ſhewn to the moſt helpleſs perſons is ſometimes recompenſed, in a very ſeaſonable manner, by thoſe, from whom we had no expectation of obtaining, or wanting aſſiſtance. To be trained up in privacy, poverty, and hardſhip, and afterwards more proſpered, is vaſtly more comfortable; than to be brought up in pride, and delicacy, with great expectations, and then to be tumbled into poverty, and diſtreſs. But "when riches "increaſe, they are increaſed that eat them;" and though the liberality of friends ſhould be thankfully acknowledged, it can contribute little towards our real happineſs, further than the providing of us with food and raiment, and the other neceſſaries of life. But the love of Jeſus, who ſeeks out, provides for, enriches, and entertains us poor ruined, worthleſs ſinners, confers ſubſtantial, and enduring felicity. May we humbly acknowledge our unworthineſs of his mercies, thankfully accept of them, and return him our chearful praiſes, and willing ſervices.

NOTES.

CHAP. X.] V. 2. His father ſhewed, &c.] Nahaſh probably ſhewed kindneſs to David in the days of Saul, and out of enmity to that prince, (1 Sam. c. xi.). It is queſtioned whether David ought to have ſhewn ſuch reſpect to the memory of ſo cruel an enemy to his people; eſpecially as the law forbad them to ſeek the peace, and proſperity of the Ammonites: (Deut. c. xxiii. v. 3—6.) But they were not of the devoted nations, and perhaps it was not wrong for David to expreſs a ſenſe of gratitude to a benefactor, without deciding upon the motives of his conduct, and to render the cuſtomary civilities to his ſon, upon his deceaſe. However the Lord over-ruled it, contrary to David's intention, for the avenging his people, and for the cruſhing of the force, and diminiſhing the poſſeſſions of their encroaching neighbours.

V. 3, 4.] The conſciouſneſs of the injuries, which they had done to, and ſtill meditated againſt the Iſraelites, ſuggeſted theſe ſuſpicions; and they judged of David by their own diſpoſitions, and deſerts. But if they had ſeen cauſe to have been reſerved, they ſhould not have ill-treated David's ambaſſadors: this was a violation of the moſt ſacred laws of nations; the greateſt affront imaginable to the prince, whom they repreſented; and a direct declaration of war againſt him. According to the ſentiments and cuſtoms of thoſe days, they treated them in the moſt contemptuous manner, which they could deviſe.

V. 5. Tarry at Jericho, &c.] This was ſome village near the ſpot, where Jericho had ſtood; for that city was not yet rebuilt. In this place, as ſoon as they had croſſed over Jordan, they were adviſed to tarry till their beards were grown; (which were conſidered as neceſſary to the

6 And when the children of Ammon ſaw that they ſtank before David, the children of Ammon ſent and hired the Syrians of Beth-rehob, and the Syrians of Zoba, twenty thouſand footmen, and of king Maacah a thouſand men, and of Iſh-tob twelve thouſand men.

7 And when David heard of it, he ſent Joab, and all the hoſt of the mighty men.

8 And the children of Ammon came out, and put the battle in array at the entering in of the gate: and the Syrians of Zoba, and of Rehob, and Iſh-tob, and Maacah, were by themſelves in the field.

9 When Joab ſaw that the front of the battle was againſt him before and behind, he choſe of all the choice men of Iſrael, and put them in array againſt the Syrians.

10 And the reſt of the people he delivered into the hand of Abiſhai his brother, that he might put them in array againſt the children of Ammon.

11 And he ſaid, If the Syrians be too ſtrong for me, then thou ſhalt help me; but if the children of Ammon be too ſtrong for thee, then I will come and help thee.

12 Be of good courage, and let us play the men for our people, and for the cities of our God: and the LORD do that which ſeemeth him good.

13 And Joab drew nigh, and the people that were with him unto the battle againſt the Syrians: and they fled before him.

14 And when the children of Ammon ſaw that the Syrians were fled, then fled they alſo before Abiſhai, and entered into the city. So Joab returned from the children of Ammon, and came to Jeruſalem.

15 And when the Syrians ſaw that they were ſmitten before Iſrael, they gathered themſelves together.

16 And Hadarezer ſent, and brought out the Syrians that were beyond the river; and they came to Helam: and Shobach the captain of the hoſt of Hadarezer went before them.

17 And when it was told David, he gathered all Iſrael together, and paſſed over Jordan, and came to Helam: and the Syrians ſet themſelves in array againſt David, and fought with him.

18 And the Syrians fled before Iſrael; and David ſlew the men of ſeven hundred chariots of the Syrians, and forty thouſand horſemen, and ſmote Shobach the captain of their hoſt, who died there.

19 And when all the kings that were ſervants to Hadarezer ſaw that they were ſmitten before Iſrael, they made peace with Iſrael, and ſerved them. So the Syrians feared to help the children of Ammon any more.

appearing in public of grave, and venerable perſons;) that thus the diſgrace, that they had received, might be obliterated.

V. 6. They ſtank, &c.] (Gen. c. xxxiv. v. 30. 1 Sam. c. xiii. v. 4.) The Ammonites had made themſelves ſo odious to David, that they could expect no other but war; and therefore they determined to form alliances, and act offenſively. The numbers of forces, which they hired, are nearly the ſame as in Chronicles: but they are there ſaid to be thirty-two thouſand chariots, which is very improbable; and either is ſome error, that hath crept into the text, or admits of ſome other conſtruction. But it is of ſmall importance to us.

V. 8—14. The gate, &c.] That is, of Medeba, a city upon the borders of the Ammonites, and in their poſſeſſion. Thus Joab's forces were oppoſed by two armies, before and behind: but his arrangement was judicious, and his addreſs ſpirited. His valour, and regard to his country were real, and eminent: and the language of faith, and piety, which he employed, was honourable to God, and might be uſeful to the ſoldiers.

V. 18. Seven hundred, &c.] Perhaps ſeven thouſand men belonging to ſeven hundred chariots; and forty thouſand men, who fought on foot, or on horſeback, as there was occaſion, or opportunity. (1 Chron. c. xix. v. 18.)

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.

We ought to ſympathize with the afflicted, and ſhew gratitude to our friends: but nothing, except vexation, and diſappointment, can be expected by courting the friendſhip of ungodly perſons. Treacherous minds are always ſuſpicious: they are conſcious, that they mean to deceive, when they can gain by it; and they naturally ſuppoſe that others mean the ſame: and weak, and wicked princes will generally employ ſuch counſellors. It is the height of folly to awaken the reſentment of thoſe by inſult, and contempt, whoſe power of taking vengeance cannot be thus diminiſhed: and the fatal effects of ſuch raſh affronts, though little feared, are often ſeverely felt. We ſhould ſhew reſpect and kindneſs to thoſe, who have been unjuſtly diſgraced: but yet it is needleſs to lay ſuch things to heart. Unmerited reproaches or contempt will ſoon wear away, and a clear conſcience ſhould be ſufficient to counterbalance the preſent uneaſineſs of it. Yet by ſuch means valuable perſons are driven into obſcurity for a ſeaſon, to the loſs of the public, rather than of themſelves. They, who are the moſt ready to commit injuſtice, are commonly the moſt averſe to a reconciliation: and confidence in numbers, ſtrength, or valour frequently buoys up men to their deſtruction; for though hand join in hand the wicked ſhall not be unpuniſhed. But a good cauſe, and a ſingle dependance upon the Lord form the ſureſt indications of ſucceſs: and when valiant men are cordial to the intereſts of their country, and are defending its civil, and religious liberties, their animation, and preſence of mind will often increaſe in proportion to their dangers, and difficulties. It is our duty, in every emergency, to exert all our powers of body, and mind, to do our uttermoſt, to encourage others to do the ſame, and to be helpful to one another, as there may be occaſion; and then to commit the event to the Lord: "Let him do what ſeemeth him "good." But alas many uſe good words, and ſeem in perilous circumſtances, to depend on, and to be ſubmiſſive to the Lord, whoſe hearts are not upright in his ſight: and many are very ſerviceable to his church, who have no part in it's peculiar bleſſings. But let ſinners recollect that the Son of David will aſſuredly reſent their contempt of his ambaſſadors, whom he ſends to them with a meſſage of peace, and love; and that he will conſider their ill-uſage of them, as a declaration of war againſt himſelf. In this warfare numbers and confederacies are utterly unavailing, and deſtruction is inevitable; except to thoſe, who ſubmit, ſue for peace, and become his ſervants. They ought therefore to ſeparate from his enemies, fearing any longer to help them; and to make it their great object to obtain his forgiveneſs, and to be numbered amongſt his ſubjects. All his people ſhould be valiant in his cauſe, and for his truth, and righteouſneſs: and miniſters ſhould neither fear, nor be aſhamed to execute their embaſſy of reconciliation, however they are deſpiſed, inſulted, or perſecuted: for he will plead their cauſe, comfort them under their trials, and reward their faithfulneſs with a crown of glory, which fadeth not away.

NOTES.

CHAP. XI.] V. 1—5.] David committed the management of the war wholly to Joab, and continued at eaſe in his palace, when he ought to have been fighting the battles of the Lord: this ſeems to have been his firſt falſe ſtep in this moſt lamentable tranſaction. Being out of the line of preſent duty, he ſlothfully waſted his time: without doubt his proſperity had gradually rendered him more negligent in his devotional exerciſes, and more indulgent to his ſenſual inclinations; and perhaps occaſioned ſome meaſure of ſelf-confidence, and carnal ſecurity. Thus his natural paſſions gathered force, in proportion as his holy affections were abated: and having been accuſtomed without cenſure to marry any ſingle woman, for whom he conceived an affection, his inclinations had not been habituated to a denial. When therefore, after an unſeaſonable ſleep, he was walking vacantly on the flat roof of his houſe, and by ſome means had a view of a beautiful woman, who was waſhing herſelf from a ceremonial uncleanneſs (v. 4;) he allowed himſelf to gaze upon her, until he luſted after her in his heart; and perhaps not ſuppoſing her to be a married woman, he ſent to enquire after her, in order to add her to the number of his wives: but his ſinful paſſion had got ſuch aſcendancy that he was the more inflamed, by being informed, that ſhe was the wife of one of his braveſt, and moſt faithful officers: and he ſent meſſengers for her, (who could not well be ignorant of his intentions,) and committed adultery with her. And though ſhe was previouſly a perſon of virtue, and reputation, he obtained her compliance, probably by means of thoſe hopes, which his rank in life was capable of inſpiring. This crime was attended with manifold aggravations: It was a violation of the ſeventh commandment, and was puniſhable by the death of both parties by the judicial law. David was chief magiſtrate, to whom it belonged to carry that law into execution: he was at this time about fifty years of age; and

6 And David ſent to Joab, ſaying, Send me Uriah the Hittite. And Joab ſent Uriah to David.

7 And when Uriah was come unto him, David demanded of him how Joab did, and how the people did, and how the war proſpered.

8 And David ſaid to Uriah, Go down to thy houſe, and waſh thy feet. And Uriah departed out of the king's houſe, and there followed him a meſs of meat from the king.

9 But Uriah ſlept at the door of the king's houſe with all the ſervants of his lord, and went not down to his houſe.

10 And when they had told David, ſaying, Uriah went not down unto his houſe, David ſaid unto Uriah, Cameſt not thou from thy journey? why then didſt thou not go down unto thine houſe?

11 And Uriah ſaid unto David, The ark, and Iſrael, and Judah, abide in tents; and my lord Joab, and the ſervants of my lord, are encamped in the open fields: ſhall I then go into mine houſe to eat, and to drink, and to lie with my wife? as-thou liveſt, and as thy ſoul liveth, I will not do this thing.

12 And David ſaid to Uriah, Tarry here to-day alſo, and to-morrow I will let thee depart. So Uriah abode in Jeruſalem that day and the morrow.

13 And when David had called him, he did eat and drink before him; and he made him drunk: and at even he went out to lie on his bed with the ſervants of his lord, but went not down to his houſe.

14 And it came to paſs in the morning, that David wrote a letter to Joab, and ſent it by the hand of Uriah.

15 And he wrote in the letter, ſaying, Set ye Uriah in the forefront of the hotteſt battle, and retire ye from him, that he may be ſmitten, and die.

16 And it came to paſs, when Joab obſerved the city, that he aſſigned Uriah unto a place, where he knew that valiant men were.

17 And the men of the city went out and he had already many wives; and many children, to whom the example would be very prejudicial: his acquaintance with the divine law, his bold profeſſion of true religion, his high reputation for piety, and wiſdom, and the immenſe obligations, which the Lord had conferred on him: the rank, and character of Bath-ſheba, and the ſervice for him and his country, in which Uriah was then engaged, were all aggravating circumſtances: and we can only ſay in his behalf, that it was not his cuſtom, but was one crime, into which he was betrayed. When Bath-ſheba found that ſhe was with child by David, ſhe juſtly dreaded the reſentment of her huſband, who had been abſent from her a conſiderable time; and ſhe ſent to inform David, that by the abuſed interpoſition of his authority, which perhaps he had promiſed, ſhe might be preſerved from being made a public example.

V. 6. Uriah the Hittite, &c.] Uriah was probably a deſcendant from the Hittites; but he was a proſelyte, and had the heart of an Iſraelite. Under the guilt of ſo heinous a ſin, David was more anxious to conceal his ſhame, and prevent the temporal conſequences, than to obtain forgiveneſs from God! Perhaps he feared leſt Uriah, in his deep reſentment, ſhould raiſe rebellion againſt him: certainly he feared the reproaches, which he might expect from every quarter, when it ſhould be publicly known, that he had acted ſo inconſiſtent with his character, and his zeal for the worſhip of God, and the honour of his law. In this confuſed ſtate of mind, he did not perceive the treachery, and injuſtice, of drawing in Uriah to conſider himſelf, as the father of the child, with which Bath-ſheba was pregnant. This was the plan, which he formed, and he ſent for Uriah, as if he could depend more on him, to inform him of the ſtate of the war, than upon any other perſon.

V. 8. Go down, &c.] Uriah's houſe was near to David's palace: and David never queſtioned but he would gladly embrace the opportunity of viſiting his wife, and accordingly provided them an entertainment: but whether any thing had excited his ſuſpicions; or whether through a hardy ſelf-denied diſpoſition, he ſcorned to fare better than his commander, and comrades, he would not go home, but ſlept with the ſoldiers of David's guard: and thus the Lord defeated David's deſign of covering his tranſgreſſion.

V. 11. The ark, &c.] It is not probable, that the ark of the covenant was carried with Joab into the field of battle; and yet the mean accommodation of it at Jeruſalem contains no reaſon, why Uriah ſhould not go home to his houſe; becauſe it was habitually in that ſtate. But in ſuch vehement aſſeverations men do not always attend to exact reaſoning, and argument.

V. 12, 13. Tarry here to-day, &c.] David pretended further buſineſs with Uriah, but meant to practiſe upon him, if poſſible, to break his reſolution. Accordingly he entertained him at his own table, and, in addition to his other injuries, became his tempter to drunkenneſs; hoping that when his paſſions were inflamed, and his guard removed, he might be induced to go home to his wife.

V. 14—17.] Satan having gradually drawn David on in one ſinful attempt after another, had prepared his mind for more atrocious wickedneſs. He now perceived that if Uriah lived, he muſt diſcover his wife's infidelity, and expoſe his ſhame: to prevent this was at preſent his leading object, and all other conſequences were forgotten: and to fought with Joab: and there fell ſome of the people of the ſervants of David; and Uriah the Hittite died alſo.

18 Then Joab ſent and told David all the things concerning the war;

19 And charged the meſſenger, ſaying, When thou haſt made an end of telling the matters of the war unto the king, 29 And if ſo be that the king's wrath ariſe, and he ſay unto thee, Wherefore approached ye ſo nigh unto the city when ye did fight? knew ye not that they would ſhoot from the wall?

21 Who ſmote Abimelech the ſon of Jerubbeſheth? did not a woman caſt a piece of a milſtone upon him from the wall, that he died in Thebez? why went ye nigh the wall? Then ſay thou, Thy ſervant Uriah the Hittite is dead alſo.

22 So the meſſenger went, and came and ſhewed David all that Joab had ſent him for.

23 And the meſſenger ſaid unto David, Surely the men prevailed againſt us, and came out unto us into the field, and we were upon them even unto the entering of the gate.

24 And the ſhooters ſhot from off the wall upon thy ſervants, and ſome of the king's ſervants be dead, and thy ſervant Uriah the Hittite is dead alſo.

25 Then David ſaid unto the meſſenger, Thus ſhalt thou ſay unto Joab, Let not this thing diſpleaſe thee; for the ſword devoureth one as well as another: make thy battle more ſtrong againſt the city, and overthrow it; and encourage thou him.

26 And when the wife of Uriah heard that Uriah her huſband was dead, ſhe mourned for her huſband.

27 And when the mourning was paſt, David ſent and fetched her to his houſe, and ſhe became his wife, and bare him a ſon: but the thing that David had done diſpleaſed the LORD.

attain this Uriah muſt die. But David would not kill him with his own hands, nor order his ſervants to aſſaſſinate him, nor put him to death under colour of law: theſe things were too bare-faced, his reputation would be ruined by ſuch meaſures; nay perhaps the direct injuſtice, and murder would have diſquieted his conſcience, inſenſible as it was become. But a more plauſible, and ſecret method of getting rid of him was ſuggeſted to his mind; which at that moment ſeemed to him leſs atrocious, though in reality it was more complicated, and heinous. The known valour, fidelity, and zeal for his country, of this gallant officer, ſuggeſted the method of diſpatching him: David had ſuch confidence in this much-injured man, that he heſitated not to entruſt him with the letter, which decreed his death; and whatever elſe Uriah ſuſpected, he did not think David capable of ſuch treachery, and betrayed not his truſt. Joab, and thoſe, "who retired from Uriah," were made accomplices in his murder; and his fellow ſoldiers, who were ſlain with him, were no leſs murdered than he was. Whatever caſuiſtry David might uſe with his conſcience, this was deliberate murder, with malice prepenſe, aggravated exceedingly by the circumſtance, that theſe men were ſlain in the very act of fighting for him, and his kingdom. Perhaps Joab imagined that David had ſome political reaſon for taking off Uriah in that manner: but probably he was rejoiced to ſee him involved in the guilt of murder, as well as himſelf. But is this David, who repeatedly ſpared his enemy; and whoſe heart ſmote him, when he had cut off Saul's ſkirt? Alas! how is he changed, and fallen!

V. 21. Then ſay thou, &c.] This was a plain intimation to the meſſenger, that the death of Uriah would be ſo agreeable to David, as to reconcile him to the loſs, that had been ſuſtained. Thus he began already to be deſpiſed even by his accomplices! Amidſt all the painful ſenſations excited by reading this chapter, we are pleaſed to find David's ſoldiers ſo ready at quoting the ſcripture: for probably the book of Judges was then extant as a part of holy writ.

V. 25. Let not this thing, &c.] Provided the brave Uriah were dead, David ſeems not to have regarded who were ſlain with him. He ſpake on this occaſion with an indifference almoſt bordering upon infidelity: except he meant to refer the event merely to the providence of God; as if no one was to blame in the affair. On other occaſions he conſidered ſuch events as a rebuke, which required humiliation, prayer, and ſacrifices; and a more entire dependance upon the Lord in future: and he would have cenſured the imprudence of the commanders, and charged them on pain of his diſpleaſure, to be more careful of the lives of their brethren.

V. 27. She became, &c.] David married Bath-ſheba as ſoon, as it could be done with decency, and the cuſtomary mourning, (which was in this caſe a vile mockery,) was ended. But though there remained no injured huſband to avenge the adultery, the premature birth of the child diſcovered it. All this time David continued impenitent, and comparatively unconcerned. Probably he ſtill maintained his profeſſion, and went on with his attendance upon the ordinances of religion. By ſome ingenious ſelf-flattery he endeavoured to palliate his conduct to himſelf; and no one elſe called him to account, or reproved him for it. Perhaps the general practice of other princes induced him to conclude, that perſons in his high ſtation were bound to the ſame ſtrictneſs with their ſubjects. How though he had no deep remorſe of conſcience, we may be ſure that he loſt all his life, ſpirituality, and comfort in religion, and retained nothing but a barren form: and perhaps wondered how it was, that his attendance on ordinances was so unprofitable to him; as many seem to do, who never seriously enquire into the cause. Small transgressions, like slight wounds, give much pain to the believer's conscience: but enormous crimes, like a violent blow upon the head, leave them for a season in an unaccountable state of insensibility.

But the thing, &c.] Such marriages, as this of David with Bath-sheba, with whom he had previously committed adultery, were not forbidden in the law: (for it was needless, as both parties were condemned to die:) nor was David afterwards ordered to put her away. Yet as he married her in order to cover his iniquity, and as the desire of possessing her may be supposed to have been one inducement to the murder of Uriah, it formed an additional aggravation of the crime: and the whole transaction, from first to last, was displeasing to the Lord. But why was this permitted? or why was it recorded? It is certain that thousands through successive generations have, by this fall of the man after God's own heart, been prejudiced against true religion, hardened in infidelity, or emboldened to blasphemy: whilst others have thence taken occasion to commit habitual wickedness under a religious profession, and with presumptuous confidence, to the still greater discredit of the gospel. But these persons have all been previously, either open enemies of, or hypocritical pretenders to religion: and it is the righteous purpose of God, that stumbling-blocks should be thrown in the way of such men, that they may stumble, and fall, and be snared, and taken, and perish: it is his holy will thus to detect the secret malignity of their hearts, and to make way for the display of his justice, in their condemnation. On the other hand thousands, from age to age, have by this awful example been rendered more suspicious of themselves, more watchful, more afraid of temptation, more dependant on the Lord, and more fervent in prayer: and by means of David's fall have been preserved from falling. Numbers, who have been overcome by temptation, have thereby been preserved from despair: every upright soul will eventually derive benefit from the impartial record of this event; and none will finally be injured by it, except those, who desire an excuse for sin, or an objection to the religion of the Bible. Bees will collect honey, and spiders poison from the same plants, according to their different natures. No excuse can be made for David; he attempted none for himself: and much self-knowledge is requisite to account for his conduct, or to deem it possible, that a godly man, who had so long enjoyed communion with God, in the highest exercises of fervent devotion, could commit such enormous crimes, and continue so long impenitent. But the Lord's design in leaving his servant to himself was doubtless wise, righteous, and merciful; whether we can see it, or not. He hath been pleased to permit some of the most eminent of his people, to fall very grievously: and if we make a proper use of such instances, our own experience will effectually convince us, that he can educe much good from all this evil. The glory of all the good is his due, the blame of all the evil, original, or consequent, belongs to those, who committed it.

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.

Either personal experience, or repeated experiments are necessary, to convince us of the desperate wickedness of the human heart, and of our own hearts: and this conviction is of vast importance, in order to the proper exercise of repentance, faith, and every Christian temper. By the latter method, the Lord hath evinced to all, who duly attend unto his word, that every enormity dwells in every human heart; and that we are all of us capable of committing any crime, which men ever practised, or conceived; if exposed in certain circumstances to suitable temptations, and left to the natural tendency of our depraved affections. Many have thought themselves incapable of some particular sin, they have felt no inclination to it, but a horror, and detestation at the thoughts of it; and yet they have afterwards committed it with greediness, and apparent satisfaction. Neither eminent piety, a long and close walk with God, habits of obedience, and of the government of the passions, the sobriety of advancing age, peculiar obligations from God, great reputation, and usefulness, clear knowledge of the divine law; nor even the spirit of prophecy, have been found capable of extirpating the most hateful propensities of the human heart: though restrained, dethroned, and crucified, they have still lived; and have revived, obtained advantages, and for a season seemed to reign with the most dreadful tyranny. Who then are we, that we should deem ourselves secure? All these evils exist in our hearts, and are capable of being excited again, though at present they seem to be extinct. We are never safe in this world; never out of the reach of temptation; never exempted, in respect of any sin, from the necessity of watchfulness, prayer, and dependance upon the grace of God. Let us not then be high-minded; but may God help us to pass the time of our sojourning in this world, in humble, jealous fear. But the declensions of true believers are commonly gradual: exemption from trials, and worldly prosperity induce habits of slackness in duty, and self-indulgence in lesser instances, and the soul contracts a slothful, careless, and unwatchful frame. Thus a man is drawn to the verge of prohibited gratification, and far beyond the bounds of expediency and moderation in things lawful: and when his passions have been accustomed to indulgence, he is the more easily tempted to evident evil. The eye, the ear, the outward senses are not turned away from forbidden objects; by these inlets the sinful imagination is excited, and concupiscence is produced in the heart. Perhaps it is hoped that the desire may be lawfully gratified, and on that vain pretence, it is allowed to dwell within. But when lust is conceived, every restraint generally increases it's vehemence: the thought of future conſequences, and the conſideration of the preſence, purity, and juſtice of God, are excluded; his fear and love, are out of exerciſe; his law and authority are diſregarded; and the enhanced imagination of the ſatisfaction, to be found in indulgence, poſſeſſes, and engroſſes the ſoul. Thus ſin is brought forth: and notwithſtanding palliations, and the hopes of concealment, and impunity, which had been previouſly framed; the mind ſoon is tortured with that dread of future conſequences, which far outweighs all its pleaſures. But when the bait is ſwallowed, ſatan hath ſo caught the ſinner, that no power, except that of God can deliver him, or prevent his being ſtill more entangled. The fear of contempt, and of diſgracing the cauſe of religion combine in exciting a man to deviſe methods of concealment; and ſuch thoughts for a ſeaſon exclude others of much greater importance, and afford ſatan an opportunity of tempting him to ſtill further iniquities. Double attention is required to conceal ſin, than would have ſufficed to prevent it; and the conſcience once corrupted makes feeble oppoſition, to fraudulent meaſures of preſerving the reputation, or preventing the conſequences of tranſgreſſion. Every conceſſion hardens the heart, and provokes the departure of the Holy Spirit. The end being conſidered neceſſary, means of every kind, which promiſe ſucceſs, ſeem needful alſo: and when a man's obligations to the Lord are forgotten, no marvel if all the tyes of juſtice, gratitude, and friendſhip to men, are diſregarded. To impoſe upon their credulity, and confidence, to injure them in their property, reputation, and connexions, and to tempt them to commit ſin, are obvious, and common meaſures: and when any one hath thus far given place to the devil, what ſhall prevent his being puſhed forward, by the ſame influence, and out of the ſame motives, to treachery, malice, and murder; till crimes are multiplied, and magnified beyond computation; and till every nobler conſideration be extinguiſhed? If the heart, and conſcience be thus ſtupified, it will be eaſy for the ſame artful enemy to amuſe the deluded offender, with ſome form of godlineſs, ſome palliation, or cloke of iniquity, which ſhall quiet every riſing ſcruple: and ſucceſs in ſuch a courſe may even be conſidered as a divine ſanction, and induce the language of indifference, or of infidelity: whilſt the heart is rendered callous, when cruelty is connected with the attainment of the end propoſed. But can a real, and eminent believer ever tread this downward path, and thus fall aſleep in the arms of ſatan? Can ſuch a perſon, who hath committed ſuch atrocious crimes, and ſo long remains impenitent, be indeed a child of God, a member of Chriſt, a temple of the Holy Ghoſt, and an heir of eternal glory? Can one ſpark of divine life exiſt unextinguiſhed in ſuch an ocean? It is plain that theſe things are poſſible: but no man in ſuch a caſe can have warranted evidence to conclude that he is a believer: the higher a man's confidence is, who hath ſunk thus low in wickedneſs, the greater proof will there be of his preſumption, and hypocriſy: though grace be not loſt in ſuch an awful caſe, the aſſurance, and conſolation of it muſt be ſuſpended. Let not then any vile hypocrite, who reſembles David in nothing but his tranſgreſſions, and who adds the habit of allowed ſin to all other aggravations, bolſter up his confidence with this example: let him firſt imitate David's humiliation, repentance, and other eminent graces, before he think himſelf, or require others to conſider him, a backſlider. Let no oppoſer, or deſpiſer of the truth object and ſay, are theſe the fruits of faith, and devotion? We anſwer no: they are the effects of a corrupt nature, whoſe tendency to evil muſt be amazing ſtrong, to overcome the contrary tendency of truth and grace, in the heart of an eminent ſervant of God. Let us all watch, againſt the beginnings of negligence, and ſelf-indulgence, and keep at the utmoſt diſtance from that precipice, whence David fell: let us beg of God to cloſe our ſenſes, imaginations, and affections to all forbidden objects, thoughts, and deſires: let us ſtudy moderation, expediency, and ſuperiority to all animal inclinations, in things lawful: and let us continually attend to our proper work, and pray always, that we may not be led into temptation: then will our lives beſt ſhew the tendency of our principles, and confute thoſe, who accuſe us of encouraging men to ſin by the freeneſs of goſpel ſalvation. But again; is it poſſible that ſuch a backſlider from God can be recovered, and admitted to comfortable communion with him again? Doubtleſs it is: for with the Lord there is mercy, and with him there is plenteous redemption; and he will caſt out no humble, penitent believer, whatever his former crimes have been: nor will he ſuffer ſatan to pluck any of his ſheep out of his hand. Let then thoſe, who are fallen, return to the Lord without delay, and ſeek forgiveneſs through the Redeemer's atoning blood. Yet the Lord will recover his people in ſuch a way, as ſhall effectually mark his abhorrence of their crimes, and deter all who regard his word, from abuſing the encouragements of his mercy. And how poor is every ſucceſs, and gratification, when the Lord is diſpleaſed with us! and in this world, or the next he will ſurely expoſe us to ſhame for our crimes. It is alſo very painful to obſerve how the ſins of believers quiet the conſciences, and rejoices the hearts of wicked men, who are ready to inſult and ſay, art thou alſo become as one of us? But whilſt many will thus abuſe theſe humiliating inſtances: may we be unfeignedly thankful, if we have been reſtrained from ſuch dreadful falls; may we commit our ſouls to him, who is able to keep us from falling! may we take warning by David's ſins, and imitate the generoſity, ſelf-denial, and attachment to the cauſe of Iſrael, of the gallant, and much-injured Uriah.

NOTES.

CHAP. XII.] V. 1—5.] When the Lord was diſpleaſed with his ſervant David, he did not ſend ſore judgments upon him; but a prophet to him, to bring him to repentance. Nathan did not go of his own accord, and in his own name to reprove David for his offences: but when he was ſent by the Lord, he plainly delivered his meſſage; without being induced, by his royal authority, his eminent character as a ſaint, and pſalmiſt, or his own peculiar affection for him, to conceal, or mutilate it. This probably was ſoon after the birth of David's ſon by Bath-ſheba; when theſe ſcandalous tranſactions began to be generally

2 The rich man had exceeding many flocks and herds:

3 But the poor man had nothing, ſave one little ewe lamb, which he had bought, and nouriſhed up; and it grew up together with him, and with his children: it did eat of his own meat, and drank of his own cup, and lay in his boſom, and was unto him as a daughter.

4 And there came a traveller unto the rich man, and he ſpared to take of his own flock, and of his own herd, to dreſs for the wayfaring man that was come unto him; but took the poor man's lamb, and dreſſed it for the man that was come to him.

5 And David's anger was greatly kindled againſt the man; and he ſaid to Nathan, As the LORD liveth, the man that hath done this thing ſhall ſurely die:

6 And he ſhall reſtore the lamb fourfold, becauſe he did this thing, and becauſe he had no pity.

7 And Nathan ſaid to David, Thou art the man. Thus ſaith the LORD God of Iſrael, I anointed thee king over Iſrael, and I delivered thee out of the hand of Saul:

8 And I gave thee thy maſter's houſe, and thy maſter's wives into thy boſom, and gave thee the houſe of Iſrael and of Judah; and, if that had been too little, I would moreover have given unto thee ſuch and ſuch things.

noticed: but whatever others whiſpered, and circulated, David ſeems not to have been in any due meaſure ſenſible of his exceeding wickedneſs, until the Lord alarmed his conſcience by his prophet. In order to inſinuate the truths, which he was to deliver, without exciting the reſiſtance of David's partial ſelf-love, and to induce him to be council againſt himſelf, before he was aware, Nathan introduced his meſſage with a parable: (Note Judg. c. ix. v. 7—15.) Several expreſſions here made uſe of, might have excited a ſuſpicion, that ſomewhat more was intended, than merely pleading the cauſe of an injured poor man, againſt his wealthy oppreſſor: yet David ſuppoſed it to be matter of fact, till Nathan made the application. The rich man, who had many flocks, and herds, repreſented David with his many wives, and concubines: the poor man, with his ewe lamb, which was ſo tenderly brought up by him, was Uriah, with his one well-beloved wife: the traveller may mean the ſenſual luſt, which entered, and was welcomed in David's heart; and which nothing could ſatisfy but the wife of Uriah. But this parable repreſented only a ſmall part of the enormity of David's conduct: Uriah's loyal, and gallant ſervices; and David's treachery to, and murder of him and others, were not ſo much as alluded to in it: his injury to Uriah, and Bath-ſheba in the adultery, were alone ſhadowed forth; for perhaps the prophet meant to bring him by degrees to a view of his exceeding ſinfulneſs. But David, forgetful of his own crimes, was fired with indignation againſt the imaginary offender, and with a ſolemn oath condemned him, not only to make legal reſtitution, but to ſuffer death. The circumſtances of the ſuppoſed offence might deſerve more than ordinary puniſhment: yet the exceſſive ſeverity of this ſentence was the natural effect of the unhumbled ſtate of David's heart.

V. 7. Thou art, &c.] Though Nathan had not brought David to make the application of the parable to himſelf; yet he had gained a great point, in bringing him to pronounce ſo ſevere a ſentence againſt a ſuppoſed offender, for crimes of far inferior malignity to his own. He therefore, with great firmneſs, and courage, addreſſed David's conſcience; and aſſured him, that he was the very perſon, whoſe conduct had been delineated, and whoſe ſentence had been denounced out of his own mouth: and he then proceeded in a very plain, convincing, and even ſevere diſcourſe, to ſhew the extent, aggravations, and effects of his guilt.

V. 8. Thy maſter's wives, &c.] According to the cuſtom of the eaſtern kingdoms, the ſucceſſor to the crown obtained poſſeſſion of the women belonging to the preceding king: David therefore having ſucceeded Saul, his former maſter, had acquired a property in his wives and concubines: but we do not read, that he actually cohabited with any of them; and as Saul was his father-in-law, it ſeems probable that he did not, though he might marry ſome of the women belonging to Saul's court: however the Lord's giving David in his providence, the wives of Saul, was no more a divine approbation of his polygamy, than his giving Iſrael a king, proved that they did well in deſiring, and aſking one. And the Lord is alſo ſaid to give David's concubines to Abſalom, (v. xi.) But the multitude of unmarried women, of whom David had it in his power to make choice, aggravated his guilt in ſeizing upon the wife of another man.

If that had been, &c.] If David thought that any thing conducive to his comfort was yet wanting, he was allowed to aſk for it, and the Lord would not have denied it, if he ſaw it good for him: of this his former love was a convincing proof.

V. 9. Wherefore haſt thou, &c?] The paſſage may be rendered, "wherefore haſt thou deſpiſed the word of the "Lord?" his promiſes, as well as his precepts. David, in this inſtance, had ſhewn, that he thought the general, and ſpecial promiſes of God either too ſcanty, or too precarious, to ſuffice for, and to enſure his felicity; or he need not have ſought ſatisfaction in another way: and this was a dreadful contempt of them: he had alſo treated the commandments of God as rigorous, and needleſs reſtraints upon his inclinations; and as worthy to be neglected, diſpenſed with, and trampled on, when they interfered with the ſword, and haſt taken his wife to be thy wife, and haſt ſlain him with the ſword of the children of Ammon.

10 Now therefore the ſword ſhall never depart from thine houſe; becauſe thou haſt deſpiſed me, and haſt taken the wife of Uriah the Hittite to be thy wife.

11 Thus ſaith the LORD, Behold, I will raiſe up evil againſt thee out of thine own houſe, and I will take thy wives before thine eyes, and give them unto thy neighbour, and he ſhall lie with thy wives in the ſight of this ſun.

12 For thou didſt it ſecretly: but I will do this thing before all Iſrael, and before the ſun.

13 And David ſaid unto Nathan, I have ſinned againſt the LORD. And Nathan ſaid unto David, The LORD alſo hath put away thy ſin; thou ſhalt not die.

14 Howbeit, becauſe by this deed thou haſt given great occaſion to the enemies of the LORD to blaſpheme, the child alſo that is born unto thee ſhall ſurely die.

15 And Nathan departed unto his houſe: and the LORD ſtruck the child that Uriah's wife bare unto David, and it was very ſick.

16 David therefore beſought God for the child; and David faſted, and went in, and lay all night upon the earth.

17 And the elders of his houſe aroſe, and went to him, to raiſe him up from the earth: but he would not, neither did he eat bread with them.

his preſent gratification. Thus he deſpiſed the word of the Lord: but he could not poſſibly give a good reaſon for ſo evil a thing.

V. 10 Deſpiſed me, &c.] When David deſpiſed the word of the Lord, he deſpiſed the Lord himſelf: his power, and authority, his juſtice and purity, his omnipreſence, and omniſcience, his favour, and wrath, and all his glorious perfections: elſe he would not thus have offended God, for the baſe gratification of his luſts, after all his knowledge of, and communion with him. This was an aggravation of his crimes, which is leſs obvious to our natural apprehenſions, but far more full of malignity, than all thoſe, which were enumerated in the former chapter. As the parable had particularly repreſented the evil of David's adultery, the addreſs of Nathan is moſt pointed againſt his murder of Uriah. We ſhall have the beſt commentary upon the threatenings of this paſſage in the ſubſequent hiſtory.

V. 11. Before thine eyes, &c.] David was not preſent at Abſalom's villainy; but it was committed in ſo ſhameleſs a manner, that it was as notorious, as if he had ſeen it with his own eyes. The Lord raiſed up this evil out of his own houſe: yet he did not put the wickedneſs into the hearts of his ſons; but he left them to their own vile paſſions, and over-ruled the effects of them for David's chaſtiſement.

V. 13. I have ſinned, &c.] The dormant ſpark of divine grace in David's heart now began to rekindle: before this plain ſtatement of facts in the name of God, all his evaſions vaniſhed, and his guilt appeared in all its magnitude. He did not therefore reſent the pointed rebuke of the prophet, nor attempt any palliation of his conduct; but in deep humiliation of heart confeſſed; "I have ſinned "againſt the Lord." The words are few; but the event proved them to have been the language of genuine repentance; which regards ſin, as committed againſt the authority, and glory of the Lord, whether or not, it have occaſioned much evil to our neighbour. Immediately Nathan aſſured him, "that the Lord had put away his ſin, "and that he ſhould not die." Murder, and adultery were crimes, to be puniſhed with death: and though no Iſraelite had authority to execute this ſentence upon the Lord's anointed; yet David might juſtly fear that the Lord would cut him off by ſome ſudden judgment: but the prophet without delay informed him, that he ſhould not thus be put to death, and intimated to him, that the eternal puniſhment alſo would be remitted.

V. 14. Great occaſion, &c.] Perhaps the Ammonites, and other idolatrous enemies of God, and Iſrael, had received information of theſe ſins of Jehovah's highly favoured ſervant, and zealous worſhipper, and blaſphemed his name on that account: and the wicked Iſraelites, eſpecially of Saul's party, would reflect upon the divine juſtice, in that Saul had been rejected for apparently leſſer crimes, and David was ſpared notwithſtanding theſe enormities. But the Lord did not puniſh Saul above his deſervings, and therefore did him no injuſtice in forgiving David: and he judges not merely by the outward action, but by the inward diſpoſition of the heart; and there he perceived a very important difference, and even contrariety, in the two characters. This obvious remark ſolves many difficulties of this kind to the humble enquirer. However in the temporal puniſhment of David in his family, the Lord determined to ſilence theſe blaſphemies; and he began by the death of the child, which Bath-ſheba had born to him. This providence, though eventually a mercy to all parties, yet being predicted, and publicly declared to be a rebuke for David's ſin, would be for the time a ſharp and painful chaſtiſement.

V. 15. And Nathan departed, &c.] The prophet having delivered his meſſage returned home probably to pray for the king: and David retired, and poured out his ſoul in godly ſorrow, and ingenuous confeſſions; and perhaps immediately penned, and ſoon after publiſhed the 51ſt Pſalm, which forms a complete example, and ſtandard of true repentance.

V. 16. Beſought God, &c.] David might hope that there was a ſecret condition in the threatening; and that 18 And it came to pass on the seventh day, that the child died. And the servants of David feared to tell him that the child was dead: for they said, Behold, while the child was yet alive we spake unto him, and he would not hearken unto our voice: how will he then vex himself if we tell him that the child is dead?

19 But when David saw that his servants whispered, David perceived that the child was dead: therefore David said unto his servants, Is the child dead? And they said, He is dead.

20 Then David arose from the earth, and washed, and anointed himself, and changed his apparel, and came into the house of the LORD, and worshipped: then he came to his own house; and when he required, they set bread before him, and he did eat.

21 Then said his servants unto him, What thing is this that thou hast done? thou didst fast and weep for the child while it was alive; but when the child was dead thou didst rise and eat bread.

22 And he said, While the child was yet alive I fasted and wept: for I said, Who can tell whether God will be gracious to me, that the child may live?

23 But now he is dead, wherefore should I fast? Can I bring him back again? I shall go to him, but he shall not return to me.

24 And David comforted Bath-sheba, his wife, and went in unto her, and lay with her: and she bare a son, and he called his name Solomon; and the LORD loved him.

25 And he sent by the hand of Nathan the prophet, and he called his name Jedidiah, because of the LORD.

26 And Joab fought against Rabbah of the children of Ammon, and took the royal city.

27 And Joab sent messengers to David, and said, I have fought against Rabbah, and have taken the city of waters.

28 Now therefore gather the rest of the people together, and encamp against the city, and take it; lest I take the city, and it be called after my name.

29 And David gathered all the people together, upon his humiliation, attended by fasting, and prayer, the child might yet be spared: he considered the infant as an innocent sufferer for his crimes; (c. xxiv. v. 17;) he had doubtless a very great affection for it; his spirit was at that time peculiarly tender; and perhaps Bath-sheba likewise was overwhelmed with a load of guilt, and sorrow, (v. 24.) On all these accounts he thus humbled himself before God, and sought the life of the child, though it would have lived a monument of his sin, and shame.

V. 18. On the seventh, &c.] That is, say some, from the child's birth; and this was an additional rebuke to David, as it died uncircumcised. But perhaps the continuance of it's sickness, and of David's sorrow and mortification are meant thereby.

V. 20. And worshipped, &c.] By changing his raiment, and going up to the house of God to worship, he publicly expressed his acceptance of the chastisement, and submission to the will of the Lord; and his gratitude to him for sparing his life.

V. 21—25.] Whilst he had hopes of prevailing, humble fasting, and prayer formed the present duty: but after the event, chearful submission to the divine appointment was required of him. He could not profit the child, and he might injure himself, and neglect his duty, by mourning for him; the child released from sufferings, and gone before him to a better world, was now no loser; the public sustained no detriment, as in the death of useful persons; and there remained no farther reason for sorrow, except he should quarrel with the will of God: this he would not do, but rather prepare to follow, and hope to meet him in the world above.

V. 24, 25.] David's marriage with Bath-sheba was sinful, as it was conducted; nevertheless it was not afterwards to be disannulled: and in the mystery of the divine counsels, it made way for the performance of God's promises, (c. vii. v. 12;) and Bath-sheba has her name inserted in the genealogy of the Redeemer! As a token of the Lord's reconciliation to David and Bath-sheba, this son by her was named Solomon, or the peaceable; and Jedidiah, or beloved of the Lord, because of the Lord's peculiar favour to him: though he was not ordinarily called by that name.

V. 26—31.] Probably this event took place before the birth of the former child. The Lord was very gracious to David, in thus prospering his arms, notwithstanding his manifold offences: and Joab approved himself very faithful to David, and attentive to his reputation. The crown of the king of the Ammonites is said to have weighed a talent; but that being about a hundred weight, seems enormous: probably it means the value of it, with the precious stones. David seems to have been too much pleased with this crown: whereas, his anointing, as the king of the Lord's people, was a far more honourable distinction. It is not certain what the punishments were, which he inflicted upon those Ammonites, whom he took prisoners: whether he put them to death, under saws, axes, harrows, &c. or whether he condemned them to wear out their lives in severe bondage, in various labours. He meant to punish their cruelty to the men of Jabesh Gilead, and their contempt of his ambassadors: but if there was, as seems probable, an undistinguishing severity exercised by him towards them, we must ascribe it to the state of his mind at that time. (1 Chron. c. xx. v. 1—3.)

gether, and went to Rabbah, and fought againſt it, and took it.

30 And he took their king's crown from off his head, (the weight whereof was a talent of gold, with the precious ſtones,) and it was ſet on David's head: and he brought forth the ſpoil of the city in great abundance.

31 And he brought forth the people that were therein, and put them under ſaws, and under harrows of iron, and under axes of iron, and made them paſs through the brick-kiln: and thus did he unto all the cities of the children of Ammon. So David and all the people returned unto Jeruſalem.

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.

Our falls are of ourſelves, but our recoveries are from the Lord: and he ordinarily makes uſe of the miniſtry of the word in bringing ſinners to repentance; and the plain authoritative declaration of the divine law, and of the evil nature, and effects of ſin, is the appointing method of awakening the careleſs conſcience, and of bringing men to condemn themſelves. In ſome caſes great prudence, and addreſs are neceſſary in delivering the Lord's meſſage, eſpecially to thoſe in exalted ſtations: and illuſtration often forms the moſt compendious, and effectual method of producing conviction. It is well when ſuch an indirect addreſs will ſpare the painful neceſſity of more explicit reproofs: but ſelf-flattery renders us quickſighted to the leſſer faults of others, and blind to our own moſt atrocious offences: and in proportion as men are tender to their own ſins, they will be unreaſonably ſevere in animadverting upon thoſe of others. Hence ariſes the neceſſity of great plainneſs of ſpeech in the public miniſtry of the goſpel; that the conduct, and caſes of ſinners, of every deſcription, may be ſo explicitly declared, that every one's conſcience may ſay, "thou art the man." Nor is this perſonal, ſo long as the general caſes of multitudes are deſcribed, and the peculiarities of an individual's character are not ſo deſcanted on, as to draw the general attention of the auditors from themſelves to him. But further, it is often neceſſary, in private, to be ſtill more explicit, and particular, with ſuch profeſſors, as will not underſtand the plaineſt public addreſs; and this without any reſerve, or reſpect of perſons, with all ſerioufneſs, energy, and expoſtulation. And it will never be well with the church of God, until ſecret lamentations over unreproved ſcandals, and abuſes, and private converſations concerning the faults of abſent perſons, be generally changed, by the miniſters of Chriſt, for ſuch faithful plain dealing with men in private: and they, who are of reputation, ought to take the lead, and to ſet the example in this arduous, but ſalutary buſineſs. The true miniſter's meſſage will comfort, or diſtreſs the conſcience of thoſe, who regard it, according as they are walking with, or contrary to God: nay the believer can expect no conſolation from a ſcriptural ſtatement of the truth, whilſt he is under the guilt and power of unrepented ſin; and if he obtain any, it is either through the miniſter's error, or unfaithfulneſs, or his own ill-grounded confidence. The marriage with one wife, who poſſeſſes the affections, is really a prevention of fornication: but variations from the original inſtitution commonly increaſe the force of the Paſſions, and introduce greater licentiouſneſs. Every former mercy increaſes the heinouſneſs of our tranſgreſſions: but the extent of the promiſes, and the Lord's readineſs to hear prayer, and to give every good thing to his people, peculiarly aggravate their guilt, when they hanker after forbidden gratifications. We need not wonder that men in general deſpiſe the Lord's truths, promiſes, and commandments; yea and the Lord himſelf, in his whole character, and in all his relations to them: when even eminent believers, in ſome inſtances, are capable of the ſame folly, and ingratitude. From this ſource all our ſins proceed: man's contempt of the infinite excellency, and invaluable favour of God; his diſregard to his authority, averſion to his ſervice, and enmity to his juſtice, and holineſs, give being, and malignity to every ſpecies of diſobedience; and are in themſelves utterly inexcuſable. But however iniquity may have prevailed, where there is true grace, there is alſo ſenſibility, and ſomewhat for the word of God to take root in: and the humbled ſinner will not be offended by, but thankful to his faithful reprover: and where there is true repentance God will not refuſe forgiveneſs. It is however grievous to think what great occaſion of blaſphemy to the enemies of God, the falls of his profeſſing people afford: yet none except the Lord's enemies will make this uſe of them: and the open confeſſions of ſuch offenders, their future conduct, their ſevere corrections, and their patience under them, will manifeſt the equity, and purity, as well as the mercy of God, in pardoning their offences; and will mark an eſſential difference of habitual character, and diſpoſition betwixt them, and unhumbled ſinners of every deſcription. The Lord often cauſes his offending people to read their ſins in their puniſhment; he openly puts them to ſhame for their ſecret offences; and by the ſufferings of thoſe, whom they moſt tenderly love, fills their hearts with the keeneſt anguiſh: and though others eſcape, they ſhall be ſure to ſmart in this world for their tranſgreſſions. Under ſuch rebukes they will be led to deeper humiliation, to chaſten themſelves with faſting, and to pour out more fervent and inceſſant prayers; and eſpecially for thoſe who are ſuffering on their account, and are unable to pray for themſelves. Yet the ſame principles will teach them to moderate their ſorrows for thoſe beloved objects, whom the Lord has taken from them, and to prepare the more diligently to follow them: and nothing ſhould induce them to neglect their preſent duty. Thus, as long as life laſts let the diſcouraged ſinner ſeek the Lord, humble himſelf before him, and pour out his prayers; if only able to ſay, "who "knoweth if God will be gracious to me." (Jonah, c. iii. v. 9.) They, who are ignorant of the divine life, cannot comprehend the reaſons of a believer's conduct in his varied experiences: they will miſtake deep humility, and fervent prayer, for impatience, and an inordinate love to created objects; and acquieſcence in the Lord's will, and chearful gratitude under ſharp trials will be deemed indifference, and apathy: and in a thouſand different ways they will shew their incapacity to judge of the consistency, and reasons of his behaviour; (1 Cor. c. ii. v. 14, 15.) But God accepts those services, which man censures; and a humble submissive spirit prepares the way for divine consolations, notwithstanding former crimes: and we should encourage the desponding hearts of our fellow sinners, with the comforts, that the Lord hath graciously afforded us: and when the heart is thus prepared, the message of the minister will again be peace and joy. Our prayers for our children are graciously answered, if some of them die in their tender infancy; (for they are well taken care of;) and the others live "beloved of the Lord." Vengeance will in due season be taken of the persecutors and abusers of God's people, and ministers; and in their severest sufferings the Lord will be righteous, though the instruments should be unreasonably severe. In proportion as we lose sight of the honour, that cometh from God, we shall become ambitious, and vain of worldly distinctions: and we shall be most compassionate, kind, and forgiving to our fellow sinners, when we most feel our need, and taste the sweetness of the Lord's forgiving love to our own souls. In whatever service the Lord may please to employ us, may we (as Joab with David,) execute his will faithfully, and then give him the whole glory without any reserve.

NOTES.

CHAP. XIII.] V. 1. After this, &c.] Nathan's word began to take effect not very long after it was delivered, to mark the Lord's abhorrence of David's crimes. He seems to have been too indulgent of his children, and probably their mothers had a great share in their education, and several of them instilled into them bad principles; which is a natural effect of polygamy. But they appear to have been restrained by his example, influence, and occasional instructions, from open excesses, until he had committed those crimes, which have been considered. Notwithstanding his repentance, they would naturally consider his conduct, as a license to their youthful inclinations, and conclude that he could not greatly censure them, after he had set them such an example. Thus David might trace the sins of his children from his own misconduct, which would increase the anguish of the chastisement.

V. 2. For his sister, &c.] His sister by the same father, but of another mother. If Amnon had not secretly been habituated to licentiousness, surely he never could, in the first instance, have given way to so unnatural a passion. By gazing upon her beauty concupiscence was kindled in his heart, and being allowed it gained an entire ascendancy. He was not restrained from his base purpose by the fear of God, by conscience, shame, regard to the peace, or favour of his father, or to the reputation, virtue, or comfort of Tamar, or any foresight of evil consequences: but by reason of her modesty, and the care that was taken of her, he could not find an opportunity of getting her into his power. His passion therefore preyed upon his spirits, and impaired his health.

V. 3—5.] Amnon deemed Jonadab his friend, because he was his flatterer, and the caterer for his lusts. He was "a very subtle man;" a very crafty courtier, who readily discerned the inclinations of men, and was very ingenious in devising means for their gratification, to subserve his own interests. Observing Amnon to look more and more languid one day after another, he suspected the cause, and intimated to him, that a person of his rank might obtain his desires, if he went about it; thus he drew from him the shameful secret. Had he not interposed, probably his passion might for a season have been stifled, and at length supplanted by an affection for some other person. But when Jonadab understood the state of his mind, he speedily put him in a way of obtaining his wishes. Amnon was the heir-apparent of the crown, and David was growing old, and probably shewed Jonadab but little favour, though a near relation: he therefore paid his court to Amnon; and supposed that his rank and authority would bear him out in any crime, which he was disposed to commit.

V. 6—14.] This plot was laid very artfully. Amnon's sickly looks gave plausibility to his pretended illness: David's tenderness, and affection to his children were well ſelf ſick: and when the king was come to ſee him, Amnon ſaid unto the king, I pray thee let Tamar my ſiſter come and make me a couple of cakes in my ſight, that I may eat at her hand.

7 Then David ſent home to Tamar, ſaying, Go now to thy brother Amnon's houſe, and dreſs him meat.

8 So Tamar went to her brother Amnon's houſe; and he was laid down. And ſhe took flour, and kneaded it, and made cakes in his ſight, and did bake the cakes.

9 And ſhe took a pan, and poured them out before him; but he refuſed to eat. And Amnon ſaid, Have out all men from me: and they went out every man from him.

10 And Amnon ſaid unto Tamar, Bring the meat into the chamber, that I may eat of thine hand. And Tamar took the cakes which ſhe had made, and brought them into the chamber to Amnon her brother.

11 And when ſhe had brought them unto him to eat, he took hold of her, and ſaid unto her, Come, lie with me, my ſiſter.

12 And ſhe anſwered him, Nay, my brother, do not force me; for no ſuch thing ought to be done in Iſrael: do not thou this folly.

13 And I, whither ſhall I cauſe my ſhame to go? and as for thee, thou ſhalt be as one of the fools in Iſrael. Now therefore, I pray thee, ſpeak unto the king; for he will not withhold me from thee.

14 Howbeit he would not hearken unto her voice; but, being ſtronger than ſhe, forced her, and lay with her.

15 Then Amnon hated her exceedingly; ſo that the hatred wherewith he hated her was greater than the love wherewith he had loved her: and Amnon ſaid unto her, Ariſe, be gone.

16 And ſhe ſaid unto him, There is no cauſe; this evil in ſending me away is greater than the other that thou didſt unto me: but he would not hearken unto her.

17 Then he called his ſervant that miniſtered unto him, and ſaid, Put now this woman out from me, and bolt the door after her.

18 And ſhe had a garment of divers colours upon her: for with ſuch robes were the king's daughters that were virgins apparelled. Then his ſervant brought her out, and bolted the door after her.

19 And Tamar put aſhes on her head, and rent her garment of divers colours that was on her, and laid her hand on her head, and went on crying.

20 And Abſalom her brother ſaid unto her, Hath Amnon thy brother been with thee? but hold now thy peace, my ſiſter: he is thy brother, known: perſons, who have been accuſtomed to indulgence, are naturally whimſical in their diet when ſick: David would be ſure to viſit him, and be diſpoſed to humour him in every thing; and would not ſuſpect ſuch a baſe deſign concealed under his requeſt: thus he would readily obtain David's conſent to Tamar's coming to him. Nor could ſhe have any ſuſpicion of ſuch horrid villainy from one, who ſeemed very ill, and in danger of death: but when he commanded all to leave the room, whilſt he eat of her cakes, ſhe might very juſtly have apprehended ſome bad deſign. Tamar's ſkill, and readineſs in ſuch ordinary employments, though a king's daughter; her compaſſionate attention to her half-brother; and all her anſwers and behaviour are ſuited to give us a very favourable opinion of her character. As her brother he ought to have protected, inſtead of injuring her: ſuch behaviour was peculiarly vile in an Iſraelite: it would for ever diſgrace and ruin her, and expoſe him to ſcorn and hatred, as one of the moſt abandoned of men. Her propoſal to him, to aſk her of the king, was meant to prevent preſent violence; for ſhe knew that David would afterwards protect her. And it is probable that ſhe accompanied her complaints, and expoſtulations, with unavailing outcries; which Amnon's domeſtics would diſregard: for ſhe ſeems to have been entirely free from blame in the ſcandalous tranſaction.

V. 15—18.] The determined conduct, and language of Tamar ſo irritated Amnon, that his pretended love was changed into the moſt vehement hatred: and without regarding her remonſtrances, he ordered to be turned out of doors, with every circumſtance of averſion, and abhorrence. This was doubtleſs an additional injury, and tended to publiſh her diſgrace, which might otherwiſe have been concealed: but we muſt attribute it to the confuſion, and diſtreſs of her mind, that ſhe ſtated this to be the greater injury: unleſs ſhe ſuppoſed that in ſo ſingular a caſe, he might, and ought to have married her.

V. 19, 20.] Tamar went home in the attire, and geſtures of an inconſolable mourner: doubtleſs her mind was filled with anguiſh; but perhaps ſhe meant thus to proteſt, that though ſhe was unfortunate, ſhe was not criminal. Abſalom diſſembled his reſentment, and perſuaded her to compoſe her mind, and not further to expoſe the ſhame of her family. It ſeems that Tamar lived all her days a ſingle, and a retired life.

brother, regard not this thing. So Tamar remained deſolate in her brother Abſalom's houſe.

21 But when king David heard of all theſe things, he was very wroth.

22 And Abſalom ſpake unto his brother Amnon neither good nor bad: for Abſalom hated Amnon, becauſe he had forced his ſiſter Tamar.

23 And it came to paſs after two full years, that Abſalom had ſheepſhearers in Baal-hazor, which is beſide Ephraim: and Abſalom invited all the king's ſons.

24 And Abſalom came to the king, and ſaid, Behold now, thy ſervant hath ſheepſhearers; let the king, I beſeech thee, and his ſervants, go with thy ſervant.

25 And the king ſaid to Abſalom, Nay, my ſon, let us not all now go, leſt we be chargeable unto thee. And he preſſed him: howbeit he would not go, but bleſſed him.

26 Then ſaid Abſalom, if not, I pray thee, let my brother Amnon go with us. And the king ſaid unto him, Why ſhould he go with thee?

27 But Abſalom preſſed him, that he let Amnon and all the king's ſons go with him.

28 Now Abſalom had commanded his ſervants, ſaying, Mark ye now when Amnon's heart is merry with wine, and when I ſay unto you, Smite Amnon; then kill him, fear not: have not I commanded you? be courageous, and be valiant.

29 And the ſervants of Abſalom did unto Amnon as Abſalom had commanded: then all the king's ſons aroſe, and every man gat him upon his mule and fled.

30 And it came to paſs, while they were in the way, that tidings came to David, ſaying, Abſalom hath ſlain all the king's ſons and there is not one of them left.

31 Then the king aroſe, and tare his garments, and lay on the earth; and all his ſervants ſtood by with their clothes rent.

32 And Jonadab the ſon of Shimeah, David's brother, anſwered and ſaid, Let not my lord ſuppoſe that they have ſlain all the young men the king's ſons; for Amnon only is dead: for by the appointment of Abſalom this hath been determined, from the day that he forced his ſiſter Tamar.

33 Now therefore let not my lord the king take the thing to his heart, to think that all the king's ſons are dead: for Amnon only is dead.

34 But Abſalom fled. And the young man

V. 21. He was very wroth, &c.] Amnon's inceſt was prohibited by the law, (Lev. c. xviii. v. 9. c. xx. v. 17;) and it was added, that the offenders "ſhould be cut off," and "bear their iniquity;" but the magiſtrate was not expreſsly commanded, to put them to death, as in ſome preceding inſtances. Neither was he, who forced a woman, ordered to be put to death, unleſs ſhe was betrothed; becauſe otherwiſe he would be obliged to marry her. Perhaps theſe circumſtances united with David's paternal tenderneſs, and his conſciouſneſs of his own guilt, to ſatisfy his mind in leaving Amnon to the judgment of God, without inflicting puniſhment upon him. But certainly he ought to have manifeſted his diſpleaſure by ſome means or other; and this complication of crimes might have juſtified the ſevereſt puniſhment: but as David neglected his duty, the Lord afterwards took vengeance on him, in a way, which added ſtill more to his domeſtic trials.

V. 22—29.] Abſalom harboured the deepeſt reſentment of the groſs affront put upon himſelf, and the irreparable injury done to his ſiſter: but for two years he concealed his hatred under the appearance of indifference. But at length he deemed matters ripe for the execution of his determined revenge: according to the cuſtom of thoſe times, having flocks of ſheep, and making a feaſt when they were ſhorn, he formed his plot upon that circumſtance. To cover his deſign he invited his father to come to his feaſt, ſenſible that from prudential reaſons he would decline the invitation: but he thus obtained his approbation to Amnon's going with the reſt of his brethren: and David perhaps hoped that the reconciliation betwixt them would have been thereby cemented: and when he entertained no ſuſpicion, Amnon diſcarded all his likewiſe. Probably Abſalom was urged on the more reſolutely to the murder of his brother, becauſe he was the next heir to the crown, if Chileab were dead, as is generally ſuppoſed. His crime was aggravated, by being a breach of hoſpitality, and committed under the maſk of affection, in the preſence of his brethren, and by his father being drawn in unintentionally to be acceſſory to it: he involved his ſervants alſo in the guilt of murder, as if his command could warrant their tranſgreſſion of God's law: and he took the opportunity of killing Amnon, when he was drunk, or nearly ſo, as if he meant to murder body, and ſoul at once. We may ſuppoſe that Abſalom's ſervants fled with him, as they were not called to an account for the murder.

V. 32. This hath been, &c.] Jonadab probably was not in Abſalom's confidence: but being a ſubtle man, he had ſuſpected his malicious intentions. It would have been more profitable ſagacity, to have foreſeen theſe conſequences, and to have forewarned Amnon of them, before he had perpetrated the crime, which provoked this revenge.

that

that kept the watch lifted up his eyes, and looked, and, behold, there came much people by the way of the hill ſide behind him.

35 And Jonadab ſaid unto the king, Behold, the king's ſons come: as thy ſervant ſaid, ſo it is.

36 And it came to paſs, as ſoon as he had made an end of ſpeaking, that, behold, the king's ſons came, and lifted up their voice, and wept; and the king alſo and all his ſervants wept very ſore.

37 But Abſalom fled, and went to Talmai, the ſon of Ammihud, king of Geſhur. And David mourned for his ſon every day.

38 So Abſalom fled, and went to Geſhur, and was there three years.

39 And the ſoul of king David longed to go forth unto Abſalom: for he was comforted concerning Amnon, ſeeing he was dead.

V. 37—39.] Abſalom fled for refuge to the court of his mother's father (c. iii. v. 3:) and there he continued for three years. David did not demand him back, in order to puniſh him; but after a time wiſhed for his return, and to be reconciled to him. In this he too nearly copied Eli's example, and honoured his ſons more than the law of God; and therefore God made them his ſcourges, and then puniſhed them himſelf. However David's ſons were not prieſts, and ſo did not diſgrace the ſanctuary. He could not have proceeded againſt Abſalom, without condemning him to die; as Eli might have done by his ſons: and David's own blood-guiltineſs too much reſembling Abſalom's, (in that he murdered Uriah under the guiſe of friendſhip by the hand of others, after having previouſly tempted him to drunkenneſs,) enervated his reſolution, and diſpoſed him to lenity: but theſe conſiderations do not excuſe his conduct.

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.

The judgments of God upon thoſe, who are finally ſaved, may be ſo terrible, varied, and continued, as effectually to proclaim his abhorrence of their crimes: and no reflecting perſon, with ſuch records before his eyes, would venture to commit iniquity, even if he could be ſure to eſcape eternal miſery: any more than a man would, for a trifling advantage, throw himſelf from a precipice, and break his bones, if he could be aſſured that his life would be preſerved: for he would be ſenſible, that he muſt ſuffer immenſe pain, and probably be a cripple all his days. The Lord over-rules the wickedneſs of men, (whilſt they are hurried on by their own luſts, and ſatan's temptations,) to accompliſh his own holy and righteous purpoſes. External accompliſhments are generally a detriment to the poſſeſſors, and a temptation to others: none ought to be vain of them, or to regret the want of them. So depraved is the human heart, that even natural affection may degenerate into licentiouſneſs: and the intercourſe betwixt near relations ſhould be conducted with caution, and prudence, that no opportunity may be given to thoſe, who are diſpoſed to commit iniquity. What men dignify with the name of love, is often a baſe, ſenſual inclination, entire ſelfiſhneſs, which triumphs over conſcience, and the fear of God, and without pity conſigns its object to irreparable diſgrace and miſery, for the ſake of a momentary animal gratification! How different from, yea contrary to, that love of others, which the law of God commands! Men's domineering luſts, when reſtrained from indulgence by external hindrances, become their tormentors, drink up their ſpirits, and diſorder their bodies: and probably the fury of ſinful propenſities, without any poſſibility of gratifying them, will form one dreadful part of the miſery of the damned: let the thought lead us to ſeek their mortification, that by the grace of God they may be extirpated from our hearts. But what would be the ſtate of this world, if every ſinner's power were equal to his inclination, for the commiſſion of wickedneſs? If indulged melancholy be improper for thoſe, who poſſeſs eminent ſtations, and great affluence in this world: how inconſiſtent is it with the profeſſions, privileges, and proſpects of the children of God: and if they are lean from day to day in their ſouls, it is commonly the effect of their yielding to ſloth, and worldly affections. When iniquity is conceived in the heart, all the powers of the underſtanding will be employed in deviſing how to effect it; and even ſickneſs will not always be ſufficient to take men off from their licentious purſuits. When ſuch debauched perſons, occupy exalted ſtations in ſociety, they will be attended by "very "ſubtle men," reſembling ſatan; ſagacious prompters to, and crafty adviſers in iniquity: theſe will aſſiſt them in overcoming the oppoſition of ſhame, and conſcience; and encourage them to gratify themſelves, without regarding truth, or juſtice, or the intereſts, or happineſs of others. Such are deemed, and treated as their friends, but the event will prove them to have been their moſt deſtructive enemies, merely for the ſake of their own emolument. Many violent but concealed evil deſires would be extinguiſhed, did not ſuch prompters diſcern, and draw forth the confeſſion of them, and contrive the method of their being gratified. Such plauſible villains know how to take advantage of the affection, candour, and modeſty, and unſuſpecting confidence of pious perſons, for the accompliſhment of their own infamous deſigns: and when iniquity is reſolved on, a perfect infatuation takes place, and all probable, or certain conſequences are forgotten. But ſilent abhorrence is the proper cenſure of ſuch abominable deeds of darkneſs; which are eſpecially horrible under the light of revelation: and even ungodly perſons will execrate thoſe, who perpetrate ſuch outrages againſt common decency; and they will appear as fools, and reprobates to their neighbours in general: what then will be the judgment, and ſentence of God reſpecting them! Senſual love ſoon changes into hatred, and concupiſcence into lothing: nor can it reaſonably be expected, that they, who make no ſcruple of debauching the perſons, for whom they pretend affection, will feel any remorſe at deſerting them with cruelty, and diſdain, at expoſing them to ſhame and con-

NOW Joab the ſon of Zeruiah perceived that the king's heart was towards Abſalom.

2 And Joab ſent to Tekoah, and fetched thence a wiſe woman, and ſaid unto her, I pray thee feign thyſelf to be a mourner, and put on now mourning apparel, and anoint not thyſelf with oil, but be as a woman that had a long time mourned for the dead:

3 And come to the king, and ſpeak on this manner unto him. So Joab put the words in her mouth.

4 And when the woman of Tekoah ſpake to the king, ſhe fell on her face to the ground, and did obeiſance, and ſaid, Help, O king.

5 And the king ſaid unto her, What aileth thee? And ſhe anſwered, I am indeed a widow woman, and mine huſband is dead.

6 And thy handmaid had two ſons, and they two ſtrove together in the field, and there was none to part them, but the one ſmote the other, and ſlew him.

7 And, behold, the whole family is riſen againſt thine handmaid, and they ſaid, Deliver him that ſmote his brother, that we may kill him, for the life of his brother whom he ſlew; and we will deſtroy the heir alſo: and ſo they ſhall quench my coal which is left, tempt, or at leaving them to all the horrors of penury, or proſtitution. Let no one ever expect better treatment from thoſe, who are capable of attempting their ſeduction. But whatever anguiſh, and diſtreſs may reſult from injuries received, nothing will eventually harm us, except our own voluntary iniquity: and it is better to ſuffer the greateſt wrong, than to commit the leaſt ſin, though apparently with impunity, and without rebuke. It is every one's duty to comfort, as he hath opportunity, thoſe who are in diſtreſs: but generally it is moſt adviſeable for injured perſons to be quiet, and leave their cauſe with God. When leſſer crimes eſcape puniſhment from man, more and greater will be committed: and the magiſtrate's anger againſt atrocious offences ſhould ſtimulate him to enforce the laws without reſpect to perſons: but others muſt neither attempt preſent, nor meditate future vengeance; for it belongeth not to them: if calm expoſtulations with the offender will do no good, our duty is to forgive, and pray for him; and not to give him another opportunity of injuſtice. But hatred, and revenge poſſeſs the hearts of ungodly men: and ſome are ſo artful, and malicious, that they defer their vengeance, and cover it with the appearance of affection, till they have an opportunity of executing it with more determined malignity. Often have feſtive interviews, and ſeaſons of ſenſual indulgence, been the choſen ſcenes for aſſaſſinations, and maſſacres; and men have been ſent into the eternal world from the midſt of their riot, and exceſs. Such is human nature, left to itſelf, armed with power, and emboldened by proſperity: what need have we then to pray for converting grace! No crime is ſo great, or evident, that men will not be found daring enough to commit, in order to pleaſe their ſuperiors: but alas! their command will not bear them out at the day of judgment, for violating the law of God. Evil tidings are generally enhanced: yet the imaginary calamity proves a real affliction for the time, and may ſerve the purpoſe of an humiliating chaſtiſement. Children are always uncertain comforts: but indulged children will ſurely prove croſſes to godly parents, whoſe fooliſh love for them induces them to neglect their duty to God: yet parental affection can ſcarce be extinguiſhed by any degree of miſconduct. But the caſe of thoſe parents is very deplorable, whoſe children copy their conduct in their crimes; and yet whoſe duty it is to puniſh them with great ſeverity for thoſe very imitations. Let this be a warning to us, to watch and pray againſt temptation, leſt by the miſconduct of one unguarded hour, we ſhould occaſion ſuch fatal conſequences to our offspring, and ſuch miſery to ourſelves, throughout our future lives. And let us not covet that worldly wiſdom, which, with all it's boaſted ſagacity, cannot prevent the deſtruction of thoſe, who are counſelled by it: but let us ſeek that heavenly wiſdom, which ſafely leads the poſſeſſor through all the dangerous paths of this life, to the perfect felicity of the eternal world.

NOTES.

CHAP. XIV.] V. 3. So Joab, &c.] Joab perceived that David deſired to recal Abſalom; but did not know how to do it, without diſgracing his character, and government: he therefore framed a plauſible ſtory, and employed an ingenious woman, in the character of a diſconſolate widow, to relate it to him. He intended to obtain a conceſſion from David, that in ſome poſſible caſes the puniſhment of a murderer might be diſpenſed with: and then to apply it to the caſe of Abſalom. Thus he hoped to ingratiate himſelf with both parties: and doubtleſs he would alſo be glad to increaſe the number of precedents for the impunity of murderers, when he lay under the guilt of that crime himſelf.

V. 6, 7.] This feigned caſe was very different from that, which it was intended to repreſent. It was indeed pretended that one brother had been ſlain by the other, and that the ſurvivor was expoſed to the ſentence of the law. But David had many other ſons, and the death of Abſalom would not have "quenched his coal, that was left:" that is, would not have deprived him of the comfort of children, and ſhall not leave to my huſband neither name nor remainder upon the earth.

8 And the king ſaid unto the woman, Go to thine houſe, and I will give charge concerning thee.

9 And the woman of Tekoah ſaid unto the king, My lord, O king, the iniquity be on me, and on my father's houſe: and the king and his throne be guiltleſs.

10 And the king ſaid, Whoſoever ſaith ought unto thee, bring him to me, and he ſhall not touch thee any more.

11 Then ſaid ſhe, I pray thee, let the king remember the LORD thy God, that thou wouldeſt not ſuffer the revengers of blood to deſtroy any more, leſt they deſtroy my ſon. And he ſaid, As the LORD liveth, there ſhall not one hair of thy ſon fall to the earth.

12 Then the woman ſaid, let thine handmaid, I pray thee, ſpeak one word unto my lord the king. And he ſaid, Say on.

13 And the woman ſaid, Wherefore then haſt thou thought ſuch a thing againſt the people of God? for the king doth ſpeak this thing as one which is faulty, in that the king doth not fetch home again his baniſhed.

14 For we muſt needs die, and are as water ſpilt on the ground, which cannot be gathered up again: neither doth God reſpect any perſon: yet doth he deviſe means, that his baniſhed be not expelled from him.

15 Now therefore that I am come to ſpeak of this thing unto my lord the king, it is becauſe the people have made me afraid: and thy handmaid ſaid, I will now ſpeak unto the king; it may be that the king will perform the requeſt of his handmaid.

16 For the king will hear, to deliver his handmaid out of the hand of the man that would deſtroy me and my ſon together out of the inheritance of God.

17 Then thine handmaid ſaid, The word of my lord the king ſhall now be comfortable: for as an angel of God, ſo is my lord the king to diſcern good and bad: therefore to ſucceed him in his inheritance. Abſalom had not ſlain Amnon, in ſudden anger, and haſty ſtriving, when they were alone; but in deliberate malice, and revenge, in the preſence of his brethren: there was no malicious proſecution carrying on againſt him by thoſe, who coveted his inheritance: but the law of God demanded his death, as a ſatisfaction to juſtice, and for a ſalutary example to all others. Had the caſe been drawn more ſimilar, it would have betrayed the deſign, and defeated Joab's purpoſe: and the ſtate of David's mind rendered it unneceſſary to be very exact; for he did not require a good reaſon, but a plauſible excuſe for following his inclinations, as Joab well knew.

V. 8—11.] It would not have anſwered the intent, had David only engaged to examine into the caſe; a preſent favourable deciſion was the object: this woman having therefore excited his compaſſion, urged her plea with great earneſtneſs; and aſſured him, that ſhe was ſo ſatisfied of the goodneſs of the cauſe, that ſhe was willing that all the guilt, if there were any, ſhould reſt upon her, and her father's houſe, and not upon David, or his kingdom. Thus ſhe engaged for what was out of her power; for the neglect of puniſhing murder would notwithſtanding bring guilt upon both king and people. However ſhe requeſted him to remember the Lord his God; that is, to give her the ſecurity of an oath, that he would ſpare, and protect her ſon; and he was prevailed upon to grant her requeſt. In this David acted more according to his feelings, than his judgment, and was very precipitate. If the party concerned, in the ſuppoſed caſe, were not deſerving to die, the city of refuge would have afforded him a ſafe retreat, and a fair trial; and if he deſerved death, David had no right to diſpenſe with God's law, by protecting him: and moreover he had examined no witneſs, but one intereſted party.

V. 13—17.] The woman, having thus far carried her point, proceeded gradually, and ambiguouſly to apply David's conceſſion, to the caſe of Abſalom; which was artfully deviſed, that ſhe might retract, or be more explicit, as he took it. She intimated that the king's ſeverity to his ſon was injurious to the people of God; and that he was wanting in his duty to the kingdom, in delaying to recal him: as if Abſalom were ſo excellent a young man, that all the hopes of Iſrael centred in him! She repreſented his flight to Geſhur, as a baniſhment, which had already been too ſevere a puniſhment of his offence. She pleaded the certainty of death, and the impoſſibility of recalling the dead to life again: by which ſhe would either inſinuate that Amnon would have died in ſome other way, if Abſalom had not ſlain him; or that the puniſhment of Abſalom would not bring him to life again; or that, as David himſelf muſt at length die, it was proper that Abſalom ſhould be recalled to ſucceed him. But whatever ſhe meant, it was nothing to the purpoſe; for God had commanded the death of the murderer, which exceedingly tends to the preſervation of the life of man, though it cannot raiſe the dead. She alſo pleaded the mercy of God, in ſparing, and re-admitting ſinful men into his preſence and favour, who were juſtly baniſhed from it; and yet he is no reſpecter of perſons: And perhaps ſhe referred to the return of the manſlayer to his inheritance, at the death of the High Prieſt. But God pardons none to the diſhonour of his law and juſtice; nor any who are impenitent, or to the encouragement of crimes, and the injury of others. Perhaps ſhe

the LORD thy God will be with thee.

18 Then the king answered and said unto the woman, Hide not from me, I pray thee, the thing that I shall ask thee. And the woman said, Let my lord the king now speak.

19 And the king said, Is not the hand of Joab with thee in all this? And the woman answered and said, As thy soul liveth, my lord the king, none can turn to the right hand or to the left from ought that my lord the king hath spoken: for thy servant Joab, he bade me, and he put all these words in the mouth of thine handmaid:

20 To fetch about this form of speech hath thy servant Joab done this thing: and my lord is wise, according to the wisdom of an angel of God, to know all things that are in the earth.

21 And the king said unto Joab, Behold now, I have done this thing: go therefore, bring the young man Absalom again.

22 And Joab fell to the ground on his face, and bowed himself, and thanked the king: and Joab said, To-day thy servant knoweth that I have found grace in thy sight, my lord, O king, in that the king hath fulfilled the request of his servant.

23 So Joab arose and went to Geshur, and brought Absalom to Jerusalem.

24 And the king said, Let him turn to his own house, and let him not see my face. So Absalom returned to his own house, and saw not the king's face.

25 But in all Israel there was none to be so much praised as Absalom for his beauty: from the sole of his foot even to the crown of his head, there was no blemish in him.

26 And when he polled his head, (for it was at every year's end that he polled it: because the hair was heavy on him, therefore he polled it:) he weighed the hair of his head at two hundred shekels after the king's weight.

27 And unto Absalom there were born three sons, and one daughter, whose name was Tamar: she was a woman of a fair countenance.

28 So Absalom dwelt two full years in Jerusalem, and saw not the king's face.

29 Therefore Absalom sent for Joab, to have sent him to the king; but he would not come to him: and when he sent again the second time, he would not come.

30 Therefore he said unto his servants, See, Joab's field is near mine, and he hath barley there; go and set it on fire. And Absalom's servants set the field on fire.

31 Then Joab arose, and came to Absalom unto his house, and said unto him, Wherefore have thy servants set my field on fire?

meant to hint, that the people expressed their dissatisfaction with Absalom's banishment so openly, that they made her afraid of an insurrection: but she purposely so confounded the feigned cause of her son, with that of Absalom, that part of her address is very obscure. However whilst she ventured to censure David for not gratifying himself, she took care repeatedly to give him many flattering commendations for his wisdom, and goodness, which in such a cause compensated for the weakness of her arguments.

V. 21. I have done, &c.] David was willing to suppose that his oath to spare the woman's supposed son, obliged him to recal Absalom, who was the person really intended; though he could not but perceive the insufficiency of her arguments, and the disparity of the cases. As a favour therefore he gave Joab permission to fetch home Absalom; and Joab appeared as thankful to the king for allotting him this service, as if David had done him the most expensive kindness: there was much of the courtier in all this.

V. 24. Let him turn, &c.] David perhaps meant to quiet his own conscience, and to silence the censures of others, by laying Absalom under some tokens of disgrace, and by denying himself the pleasure of seeing him. It might also be intended to humble him; but it entirely failed of producing that effect.

V. 25—27.] We hear no praises of Absalom's wisdom, justice, and piety: only of his beauty, and effeminacy; for such doubtless was his attention to his hair: and yet was he the admiration, and the favourite of Israel! His crimes were forgotten, and his accomplishments universally celebrated, which increased his arrogance, and issued in his ruin. His sons seem to have died before him.

V. 29. He would not come.] Either Absalom had not properly requited Joab for former services: or his popularity, and ambition made him regard him as a dangerous person, with whom he would not form any connexions; either out of regard to David's interest, or his own reputation.

V. 30—33.] Absalom's injurious, and hectoring treatment of so considerable a person as Joab; and his arrogant message to David, almost vindicating his conduct, and demanding justice, plainly shewed his character, intentions, and confidence in the favour of the people, and the ill-judged lenity of his father; and aggravated David's sin, and folly in receiving him into favour: for which he soon, and severely smarted.

32 And Abſalom anſwered Joab, Behold, I ſent unto thee, ſaying, Come hither, that I may ſend thee to the king, to ſay, Wherefore am I come from Geſhur? it had been good for me to have been there ſtill: now therefore let me ſee the king's face; and if there be any iniquity in me, let him kill me.

33 So Joab came to the king, and told him: and when he had called for Abſalom, he came to the king, and bowed himſelf on his face to the ground before the king: and the king kiſſed Abſalom.

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.

It behoves princes, and magiſtrates to be acceſſible, and to protect the deſtitute, and oppreſſed: yet the moſt amiable diſpoſitions muſt be under the government of diſcretion; or they will lead to improper conceſſions. Whilſt the wants of the poor are unheeded by many; the ſecret wiſhes of thoſe, who poſſeſs authority, and affluence, are diſcovered, and anticipated by crafty courtiers, and dependants, who ſeek their own intereſt by forwarding their indulgence: conſcientious ſelf-denial is therefore in ſuch a ſituation doubly difficult. If ſcruples, and fears deter great men from complying with their inclinations; ſome feigned precedent, ſome plauſible arguments, or ſome partial illuſtration will be deviſed, and ſpeciouſly ſuggeſted, to remove the hindrance. In ſuch a caſe the diſcerning favourite, perſonally, or by ſome well choſen inſtrument, will venture to find fault with his prince, or his patron; and to ſtate to him, that the public welfare, and the ſafety of the ſtate, or ſome other important intereſt demands thoſe meaſures, which he ſcruples to adopt: and by ſuch addreſſes to the paſſions, as are ſuited to his character, and diſpoſition, mixed with flattering commendations, and expoſtulations, he will cover the fallacy of his reaſonings, and the unlawfulneſs, and impolicy of that conduct, which he recommends. Thus many a one hath impoſed upon his own judgment, and conſcience, and ſuppoſed that he could not reſiſt ſuch urgent importunities, and ſuch cogent arguments; and that his conſent was extorted thereby; that to oblige ſuch kind friends, he had paſſed his word, and could not now in honour retract it: whilſt all the while he was overcome by his own inclinations, and only wanted a ſpecious excuſe for following them. If ſuch conceſſions be evidently contrary to the divine law, to the duty of his ſtation, and the intereſts of ſociety: it will readily be argued, that ſome exceptions, muſt be allowed of; that this was a ſingular caſe; that exactneſs would here be harſh, injurious, and of bad conſequence: and by ſuch ſophiſtical caſuiſtry may even wiſe and good men deceive themſelves, where their affections are previouſly engaged. Let us hence learn what need we have to keep cloſe to our rule of duty, to pray earneſtly for the teaching of the Holy Spirit, to watch againſt the deceitfulneſs of our own hearts, and the bribery of our paſſions, and the agreeable poiſon of adulation. Sin hath ſo filled the world with miſery, that real caſes of diſtreſs may be found, more pitiable, than any, which the imagination can feign; and we ſhould readily endeavour to relieve thoſe, who are in trouble: but even compaſſion, amiable as it is, will not juſtify our violation of the moral precepts of God's word, or neglecting the important duties of our ſtation. With this ſingle exception, alleviating miſery is the nobleſt privilege, and employment of the great; who ſhould therein "remember the Lord their "God;" not only his authority, and their accountableneſs to him; but his compaſſion, and mercy to others, and to themſelves; and his juſtice and holineſs, who in his love to ſinners manifeſts moſt conſpicuouſly his abhorrence of their crimes. As all muſt needs die, and there is no recal from the tomb by human power, we ſhould not ſpend our time in immoderate, unavailing lamentations for the dead; but ſhould be employed in preparing for our own diſſolution, and in ſeizing the fleeting opportunity of ſerving our generation. When we are moſt commended for our diſcernment, we generally act the moſt fooliſhly; for thoſe very praiſes cloud the underſtanding, and pervert the judgment: we deem it not neceſſary that perſons of ſuch acknowledged diſcernment ſhould waſte time in nice diſtinctions, and we can ſcarce refuſe to ſpeak comfortably to thoſe, who ſpeak ſo agreeably to us: and the effect of extravagant commendations on thoſe, who receive, and thoſe who beſtow them, is often mutual deception! In our treatment of children, or others, that have greatly offended, every method ſhould be uſed, that hath a tendency to mortify their pride, and, bring them to repentance; and the feelings of our hearts muſt be repreſſed, in aiming at this important object. But when high rank, early indulgence, impunity in crimes, flattering commendations, perſonal accompliſhments, and popular favour, concur to increaſe pride, and the Lord leaves a man to himſelf, it is inconceivable to what a pitch of arrogance he will arrive. Such an one will vindicate the baſeſt villanies, will treat all ſuperiors with contempt, and all benefactors with ingratitude, and will overbear, and terrify all around him into compliance with his unreaſonable demands. But all this is the forerunner of deſtruction: and when parents, or rulers countenance ſuch imperious characters, they will ſoon experience the moſt fatal effects. The Lord grant unto us the inward beauty of holineſs, and the adorning of a meek, and quiet ſpirit: for favour is deceitful, and beauty is vain; and they only, who fear the Lord, are truly excellent and happy.

2 And Abſalom roſe up early, and ſtood beſide the way of the gate: and it was ſo, that when any man that had a controverſy came to the king for judgment, then Abſalom called unto him, and ſaid, Of what city art thou? And he ſaid, Thy ſervant is of one of the tribes of Iſrael.

3 And Abſalom ſaid unto him, See, thy matters are good and right; but there is no man deputed of the king to hear thee.

4 Abſalom ſaid moreover, Oh that I were made judge in the land, that every man which hath any ſuit or cauſe might come unto me, and I would do him juſtice!

5 And it was ſo, that when any man came nigh to him to do him obeiſance, he put forth his hand, and took him, and kiſſed him.

6 And on this manner did Abſalom to all Iſrael that came to the king for judgment: ſo Abſalom ſtole the hearts of the men of Iſrael.

7 And it came to paſs after forty years, that Abſalom ſaid unto the king, I pray thee, let me go and pay my vow, which I have vowed unto the LORD in Hebron.

8 For thy ſervant vowed a vow while I abode at Geſhur in Syria, ſaying, If the LORD ſhall bring me again indeed to Jeruſalem, then I will ſerve the LORD.

9 And the king ſaid unto him, Go in peace. So he aroſe and went to Hebron.

10 But Abſalom ſent ſpies throughout all the tribes of Iſrael, ſaying, As ſoon as ye hear the ſound of the trumpet, then ye ſhall ſay, Abſalom reigneth in Hebron.

11 And with Abſalom went two hundred men out of Jeruſalem, that were called; and they went in their ſimplicity, and they knew not any thing.

12 And Abſalom ſent for Ahithophel the Gilonite, David's counſeller, from his city, even from Giloh, while he offered ſacrifices. And the conſpiracy was ſtrong; for the people increaſed continually with Abſalom.

13 And there came a meſſenger to David, ſaying, The hearts of the men of Iſrael are after Abſalom.

14 And David ſaid unto all his ſervants that were with him at Jeruſalem, Ariſe, and let

NOTES.

CHAP. XV.] V. 6. So Abſalom ſtole, &c. This expreſſion aptly marks the way, in which Abſalom ingratiated himſelf with the people. He did not gain their affections by eminent ſervices, or by a wiſe, and virtuous conduct. But he affected to look great, and yet be very condeſcending, and affable to his inferiors: he pretended a great regard to the intereſts of the people, and threw out ſubtle inſinuations againſt David's adminiſtration: he flattered all, who had cauſes to be tried, with the aſſurance that they had right on their ſide; that, if it went againſt them, they might be led to accuſe David of injuſtice. Though he knew not how to obey, and deſerved to die for his crimes; yet he expreſſed a vehement deſire to be judge over all the land; and ſuggeſted, that their ſuits ſhould not then be ſo tedious, expenſive, and partially decided, as they now were: This he confirmed by apparent application; though it was to other people's buſineſs, and not his own duty. By ſuch ſiniſter arts, united with his perſonal attractions, and addreſs, he impoſed upon multitudes all over the land, to prefer ſo worthleſs a character to the wiſe, righteous, and pious David.

V. 7. After forty years, &c.] Theſe may be dated from David's firſt anointing, about ten or twelve years before he reigned at Hebron; which would bring us to about the thirtieth year of David's reign. But probably it is a trivial error crept into the text, and ſhould be read four years; that is from his being received into favour with David: who might have foreſeen theſe conſequences, and ſhould have checked and reſtrained the firſt appearance of his oſtentation.

V. 8, 9.] Abſalom knew that his father would be pleaſed to find, that he paid any regard to religion: and therefore he cloked his intended treaſon, and parricide with hypocriſy; pretending a vow made at Geſhur, which he had hitherto delayed to perform. He probably choſe Hebron, becauſe his father firſt reigned there.

V. 11. They went, &c.] As Abſalom went with David's approbation, and under the pretence of religion, theſe perſons, (who doubtleſs were of chief rank at Jeruſalem,) accompanied him, and undeſignedly countenanced his rebellion; and by involving them in the ſuſpicion of treaſon, he intended either to fix them in his intereſts; or to prevent David from placing confidence in them. In the mean time he took care to be proclaimed king all over the land, without mentioning whether his father was dead, or had reſigned, or admitted him to a ſhare of the authority: that whilſt David's friends heſitated in uncertainty, his party might become formidable.

V. 12. Ahithophel, &c.] This man poſſeſſed great abilities, and profeſſed much religion, and had been David's counſellor, and boſom friend: but he was now retired from court, perhaps in ſome concealed diſguſt; and he readily joined Abſalom's conſpiracy, and would have been the chief ſtay of it, had not God turned his counſel into fooliſhneſs. In many things he reſembled, and typified Judas the traitor.

V. 14. Leſt he overtake, &c.] At firſt ſight, in this meaſure, David ſeems to have acted inconſiſtent with his former intrepidity: but it doth not appear from the event to have been impolitic, and his friends did not object to us flee; for we ſhall not elſe eſcape from Abſalom: make ſpeed to depart, leſt he overtake us ſuddenly, and bring evil upon us, and ſmite the city with the edge of the ſword.

15 And the king's ſervants ſaid unto the king, Behold, thy ſervants are ready to do whatſoever my lord the king ſhall appoint.

16 And the king went forth, and all his houſhold after him: and the king left ten women, which were concubines, to keep the houſe.

17 And the king went forth, and all the people after him, and tarried in a place that was far off.

18 And all his ſervants paſſed on beſide him; and all the Cherethites, and all the Pelethites, and all the Gittites, ſix hundred men, which came after him from Gath, paſſed on before the king.

19 Then ſaid the king to Ittai the Gittite, Wherefore goeſt thou alſo with us? return to thy place, and abide with the king: for thou art a ſtranger, and alſo an exile.

20 Whereas thou cameſt but yeſterday, ſhould I this day make thee go up and down with us? ſeeing I go whither I may, return thou, and take back thy brethren: mercy and truth be with thee.

21 And Ittai anſwered the king, and ſaid, As the LORD liveth, and as my lord the king liveth, ſurely in what place my lord the king ſhall be, whether in death or life, even there alſo will thy ſervant be.

22 And David ſaid to Ittai, Go, and paſs over. And Ittai the Gittite paſſed over, and all his men, and all the little ones that were with him.

23 And all the country wept with a loud voice, and all the people paſſed over: the king alſo himſelf paſſed over the brook Kidron, and all the people paſſed over toward the way of the wilderneſs.

24 And lo, Zadok alſo, and all the Levites were with him, bearing the ark of the covenant of God: and they ſet down the ark of God; and Abiathar went up until all the people had done paſſing out of the city.

25 And the king ſaid unto Zadok, Carry back the ark of God into the city: if I ſhall find favour in the eyes of the LORD, he will bring me again, and ſhew me both it and his habitation.

it. The ſmall force, which he had with him, might be inſufficient to defend the city againſt Abſalom; and he might have no confidence in the inhabitants: or he might be unwilling to expoſe that populous, and ſacred city to the effects of a ſiege. He might deem it prudent to give the furious blaze of popular phrenzy time to ſpend itſelf, hoping that numbers would ſoon be ſenſible of their folly, and ingratitude: and perhaps conſcious guilt, the hand of God evidently lifted up againſt him, as had been predicted; the treaſon of his much beloved Abſalom, and the fickleneſs of the people, after all his paſt ſervices, damped his wonted courage, and rendered him leſs prompt for battle, eſpecially in ſo horrid, and unnatural a war.

V. 16. Concubines, &c.] David took his other wives, and his children with him: but ſuppoſing that theſe would be an additional incumbrance, and not apprehending that Abſalom would injure them, he left them to take care of his houſe: by which inadvertency the Lord fulfilled his prophetic denunciation, (c. xii. v. 11.)

V. 18—22.] Theſe ſix hundred men ſeem to have been a diſtinct body from the Cherethites, and Pelethites: they had accompanied or followed him from Gath, and were proſelyted Philiſtines, commanded by Ittai, of the ſame nation. They were numbered amongſt David's moſt faithful attendants, being attached to him by eſteem for his character, and love to his religion: and we may infer, that his ſojourning in the land of the Philiſtines was over-ruled for very important good to numbers of that nation. David was unwilling to expoſe Ittai, and his men, who were ſtrangers, and exiles in Iſrael, (having been driven with their families from Gath, for their affection to David, and his religion and people,) to ſo much hardſhip, and peril, as were now before him, and he would have diſmiſſed them with thanks and prayers for them: but their attachment to his perſon and cauſe was more ſtrong, than that of moſt of the native Iſraelites, and they were determined to cleave to, and ſerve him, at all events.

V. 23. The brook Kidron, &c.] Chriſt paſſed this ſame brook, in his way to the garden, at, or near the mount of Olives, the evening before his crucifixion. Though the multitude favoured Abſalom, yet many ſympathiſed with David: thus whilſt the general cry againſt Jeſus was, "crucify him, crucify him," there were thoſe, that wept for, and bewailed him.

V. 25. Carry back the ark, &c.] Abiathar was the High Prieſt, yet Zadok of the family of Eleazar was more noticed than he; for Eli's family was gradually declining. The prieſts and Levites were generally attached to David, which was honourable to them, and ſhewed that religion was in a flouriſhing ſtate. The preſence of the ark, and the High Prieſt would have been a comfort, and an apparent advantage to David: but the ark had been placed, and the ordinances of God eſtabliſhed, in Zion, and he would not derange that order: he was under the divine rebuke, and would expreſs his humiliation, and ſubmiſſion to it; and not aſſume, by the preſence of the ark, that 26 But if he thus ſay, I have no delight in thee; behold here am I, let him do to me as ſeemeth good unto him.

27 The king ſaid alſo unto Zadok the prieſt, Art not thou a ſeer? return into the city in peace, and your two ſons with you, Ahimaaz thy ſon, and Jonathan the ſon of Abiathar.

28 See, I will tarry in the plain of the wilderneſs, until there come word from you to certify me.

29 Zadok therefore and Abiathar carried the ark of God again to Jeruſalem: and they tarried there.

30 And David went up by the aſcent of mount Olivet, and wept as he went up, and had his head covered; and he went barefoot: and all the people that was with him covered every man his head, and they went up, weeping as they went up.

31 And one told David, ſaying, Ahithophel is among the conſpirators with Abſalom. And David ſaid, O LORD, I pray thee, turn the counſel of Ahithophel into fooliſhneſs.

32 And it came to paſs, that when David was come to the top of the mount, where he worſhipped God, behold Huſhai the Archite came to meet him with his coat rent, and earth upon his head:

33 Unto whom David ſaid, If thou paſſeſt on with me, then thou ſhalt be a burden unto me:

34 But if thou return to the city, and ſay unto Abſalom, I will be thy ſervant, O king; as I have been thy father's ſervant hitherto, ſo will I now alſo be thy ſervant; then mayeſt thou for me defeat the counſel of Ahithophel.

35 And haſt thou not there with thee Zadok and Abiathar the prieſts? therefore it ſhall be, that what thing ſoever thou ſhalt hear out of the king's houſe, thou ſhalt tell it to Zadok and Abiathar the prieſts.

36 Behold they have there with them their two ſons, Ahimaaz Zadok's ſon, and Jonathan Abiathar's ſon; and by them ye ſhall ſend unto me every thing that ye can hear.

37 So Huſhai David's friend came into the city, and Abſalom came into Jeruſalem.

God was on his ſide, whilſt he was ſuffering for his ſins: but he would refer his cauſe to the Lord, either to bring him back to Zion in peace, or to let his unnatural, and ungrateful foes prevail againſt him; being conſcious, that he deſerved the worſt at the hands of God, though not from them. David's frame of ſpirit was excellent on this trying occaſion. It is not certain whether Zadok, who is called a "ſeer," was endued with the ſpirit of prophecy, or ſometimes enquired of the Lord in the place of the High Prieſt: or whether David only meant, that he was a perſon of remarkable ready diſcernment, and penetration, who could furniſh him with important, and authentic information by his obſervance of Abſalom's conduct.

V. 30. Wept, &c.] Theſe were expreſſions of his humiliation, and ſorrow for his ſins, and for the miſeries, which he had thereby brought upon himſelf, his family, and people. He thus humbled himſelf under the mighty hand of God, which he ſaw lifted up againſt him: and the people joined him with the ſame tokens of godly ſorrow and repentance.

V. 31. O Lord, &c.] David apprehended more danger from Ahithophel's capacity, than from the courage and numbers of Abſalom's followers: immediately therefore upon hearing, that he had joined the conſpirators, he oppoſed one ſhort ejaculation to all his wiſe counſels; and it was effectual. He prayed not againſt his perſon, but "that "his counſel might be turned into fooliſhneſs:" and they, who heard this prayer, could not but be much impreſſed with the anſwer, which it ſhortly after received. He afterwards worſhipped God in a more ſolemn manner, with his whole company.

V. 33. A burden to me, &c.] It ſeems, that David entirely confided in the fidelity, and prudence of Huſhai: but as he was not able perhaps to endure the fatigues of war, or was no ſoldier, he informed him, that in his preſent deſtitute condition he would burden him, and his friends, by attending him; and pointed out to him how he might better ſerve his cauſe, by remaining in Jeruſalem. Stratagems of war are lawful; for an enemy may as properly be out-witted, as overpowered: but the inſtructions given to Huſhai contain a falſhood, which perhaps cannot be wholly vindicated.

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.

An oſtentatious emulation of equalling our ſuperiors in external pomp is an evidence of a narrow mind, a weak judgment, and a depraved heart. It is the common folly, and ruin of indulged children, and frequently prepares the way for the moſt atrocious crimes. The very firſt appearance, therefore, of ſuch affectation ſhould be repreſſed by parents with deciſion, and even with ſeverity, if they would prevent the ruin of their families. They are commonly moſt ambitious of authority, who leaſt underſtand it's duties and could leaſt endure it's burdens. But when ambition prompts, the moſt ſelf-indulgent will aſſume the appearance of diligence; and the moſt haughty, of affability, and condeſcenſion: and whilſt men aſpire to the pinnacle of earthly grandeur, they will, for the time, pay the moſt abject court to the meaneſt of the mob. Such fawning ſons of ambition are peculiar to no age or nation: but let every wiſe, and honeſt man ſhun them as a peſtilence. They make their way, by openly, or obliquely traducing the characters, or cenſuring the meaſures of their rulers; and the wiſdom, and perfection of an angel would be no ſecurity againſt their malignant inſinuations. As ſelf-love cannot but murmur at impartiality, and men will continue diſcontented, and fond of change, theſe demagogues will always have proper perſons, on whom to practiſe. By joining in their groundleſs complaints, they feed their diſcontent; by flattering their perſons, and approving their cauſe, they humour their pride; and by laviſh promiſes, (which coſt nothing, and mean nothing,) what they would do, if they were in power, they excite their ſanguine hopes of greater felicity: and by a voluble tongue, an inſinuating addreſs, perſonal accompliſhments, and conſummate impudence, they ſteal the hearts of the people, and prepare the way for popular tumults, inſurrections, and rebellion. For ſuch is human nature, that theſe arts, and attainments go much further in gaining the favour of the multitude, than wiſdom, and juſtice, truth, and piety, or the moſt important, and long continued ſervices. This is the old hackneyed way for men, deſtitute of conſcience, or honour, to work themſelves into important ſtations; and yet it is as much practiſed, and as little ſuſpected, as if it were a new diſcovery. No wiſe, and good man, therefore, ſhould on any account promiſe himſelf the continuance of popular favour; or be caſt down, if he meet with treachery, and ingratitude: yet in general we may perceive the righteouſneſs of God, in the baſeſt treatment, which we can receive from man; and may thence be reminded to humble ourſelves before him, and to expect all our happineſs from him. No villainy can be termed complete, which is not diſguiſed under the maſk of religion; eſpecially at thoſe times, when the profeſſion of godlineſs is treated with general reſpect. Pious perſons are glad to ſee others, and particularly thoſe, whom they moſt love, appear to be religious, and are not apt to ſuſpect them of hypocriſy: and this gives occaſion for the moſt ſcandalous, and pernicious deceptions. The policy of wicked men, and the ſubtlety of ſatan are exerted to the utmoſt in drawing in reſpectable perſons to give an unintended, and unſuſpected countenance to the baſeſt deſigns: by which thoſe ſentiments, and practices acquire regard, to which otherwiſe they were not at all entitled: and none ſo much ſtrengthen the hands of profligates, or infidels, as apoſtate profeſſors. Little dependance can be placed on earthly proſperity; and as little can be judged of cauſes, or characters by their ſucceſs; until the final event of things ſhall arrive. Our ſevereſt trials often come from thoſe, in whom we moſt confided; and our firmeſt friends are raiſed up from amongſt thoſe, from whom we had the leaſt expectations. But a real godly man will never be entirely excluded from uſefulneſs; ſome, wherever he abides, will have to bleſs God for his example, converſe, and prayers. In our moſt critical, and important concerns we ſhould not require ought unreaſonable from our friends; or bind heavy burdens on new converts, leſt they ſhould be diſcouraged: we ſhould be thankful for fidelity, and kindneſs from thoſe, who are not likely to be further ſerviceable to us; and ſhould recompenſe them with our earneſt prayers: and if the mercy and truth of God be with them, or with us, and ours, we ſhall be ſafe and eventually happy, however at preſent afflicted or ſeparated. But that love of the brethren, which is the fruit of the Spirit of Chriſt, when it is vigorous, will not be reſtrained, by the fear of hardſhip, danger, or death, from rendering aſſiſtance to thoſe, who are in affliction. We often in deſpondency think our enemies to be more, and our friends leſs numerous, than they are found upon trial: for our ſevereſt croſſes are lined with comforts, and point out to us cauſes for thankfulneſs. The miniſters of God ſhould always ſet an example of ſubmiſſion in things lawful; and of cordial attachment, and faithful adherence to thoſe princes, who protect, and countenance them in their pious labours; and eſpecially in thoſe ſeaſons, when others oppoſe, and revile them. It behoves us to humble ourſelves before God under the tokens of his diſpleaſure; and godly ſorrow, confeſſion of ſin, repentance, ſelf-denial, and ſelf-abaſement are the proper methods of ſeeking deliverance out of thoſe troubles, which are the chaſtiſements of our ſins. At ſuch a time therefore it is improper to buoy up our confidence, by the externals of religion, which do not always imply the gracious preſence of the Lord. If he pardons our ſins, and then again employs us, his houſe, and ordinances will be our comfort: and he will do us no wrong, though he throw us by, or cut us off by death, as though he had no delight in us. However nothing muſt prevent our worſhipping the Lord, though we have not acceſs to his more ſolemn ordinances; and as afflictions increaſe upon us, the fervency of our prayers ſhould alſo increaſe. Vain is all worldly wiſdom, and power, againſt the effectual fervent prayer of a righteous man; in anſwer thereto, the counſel of the prudent is carried headlong, and the force of the potent is turned into perfect weakneſs. Some are uſeful in one way, and ſome in another, to one common cauſe, when they are cordially united: but alas! where ſhall we find wiſdom, and ſimplicity ſo united in any mere man, that we can perceive nothing that merits cenſure, and needs forgiveneſs? But when the Son of David was treated with all poſſible treachery, indignity, cruelty, and ingratitude, his wiſdom, meekneſs, candour, and patience were unalloyed perfection. His inexpreſſible ſufferings are now over, his humiliation is exchanged for the throne of glory, where unſeen he ſerves our cauſe in the world above. Him let us follow, cleave to, and ſerve in tribulation, in life, and death. We are left behind here amongſt his enemies, that we may promote his cauſe; and his inſtructions are, that we be "wiſe as ſerpents, and "harmleſs as doves."

II. SAMUEL. CH. XVI. VE. IX.

Dodd del. Page Sc.

Published as the Act directs by Bellamy & Roberts, Feb. 26. 1790.

AND when David was a little paſt the top of the hill, behold, Ziba the ſervant of Mephiboſheth met him with a couple of aſſes ſaddled, and upon them two hundred loaves of bread, and an hundred bunches of raiſins, and an hundred of ſummer fruits, and a bottle of wine.

2 And the king ſaid unto Ziba, What meaneſt thou by theſe? And Ziba ſaid, The aſſes be for the king's houſhold to ride on; and the bread and ſummer fruit for the young men to eat; and the wine, that ſuch as be faint in the wilderneſs may drink.

3 And the king ſaid, And where is thy maſter's ſon? And Ziba ſaid unto the king, Behold, he abideth at Jeruſalem: for he ſaid, To-day ſhall the houſe of Iſrael reſtore me the kingdom of my father.

4 Then ſaid the king to Ziba, Behold, thine are all that pertained unto Mephiboſheth. And Ziba ſaid, I humbly beſeech thee that I may find grace in thy ſight, my lord, O king.

5 And when king David came to Bahurim, behold, thence came out a man of the family of the houſe of Saul, whoſe name was Shimei, the ſon of Gera: he came forth, and curſed ſtill as he came.

6 And he caſt ſtones at David, and at all the ſervants of king David: and all the people, and all the mighty men, were on his right hand and on his left.

7 And thus ſaid Shimei when he curſed, Come out, come out, thou bloody man, and thou man of Belial:

8 The LORD hath returned upon thee all the blood of the houſe of Saul, in whoſe ſtead thou haſt reigned; and the LORD hath delivered the kingdom into the hand of Abſalom thy ſon: and, behold, thou art taken in thy miſchief, becauſe thou art a bloody man.

9 Then ſaid Abiſhai the ſon of Zeruiah unto the king, Why ſhould this dead dog curſe my lord the king? let me go over, I pray thee, and take off his head.

10 And the king ſaid, What have I to do with you, ye ſons of Zeruiah? ſo let him curſe, becauſe the LORD hath ſaid unto him, Curſe David. Who ſhall then ſay, Wherefore haſt thou done ſo?

11 And David ſaid to Abiſhai, and to all his ſervants, Behold, my ſon, which came forth of my bowels, ſeeketh my life: how much more now may this Benjamite do it? Let him alone, and let him curſe: for the LORD hath bidden him.

12 It may be that the LORD will look on mine affliction, and that the LORD will requite me good for his curſing this day.

13 And as David and his men went by the way, Shimei went along on the hill's ſide over againſt him, and curſed as he went, and threw ſtones at him, and caſt duſt.

14 And the king, and all the people that were with him, came weary, and refreſhed themſelves there.

NOTES.

CHAP. XVI.] V. 1—4.] Ziba artfully formed, and ſucceeded in a plan for obtaining a grant from David of Mephiboſheth's eſtate. By his ſeaſonable preſent, and inſinuating behaviour, he prepoſſeſſed David's mind in his favour; and then, by his accuſation, he prejudiced him againſt Mephiboſheth. It was indeed improbable that Mephiboſheth ſhould prove ſo ungrateful, or form ſuch deſigns: but what villainy could excite wonder, when Abſalom was in arms againſt his too indulgent father? And Ziba might hope that ſome event would ſecure him from detection, or that David would be aſhamed to retract his grant, when he had once made it. However David acted too precipitately, and did injuſtice to Mephiboſheth, and even forgot his covenant with Jonathan, in thus paſſing ſentence, without hearing both ſides.

V. 5—18.] Bahurim was a city of Benjamin, Shimei was a relation of Saul, and the tranſlation of the kingdom to David marred all his proſpects of preferment. He diſregarded the expreſs appointment of God, and his heart was full of implacable enmity to David, as an uſurper of the throne. Contrary to the fulleſt evidence, he accuſed him of murdering Saul's family, and interpreted his affliction into a proof of his guilt; and took this opportunity to vent all kind of imprecations, and reproaches againſt him; and to expreſs all the rage of impotent malice. But if David had been a bloody man, and diſpoſed to ſlay the family of Saul, Shimei would ſoon have ſuffered the juſt puniſhment of his audacity. He indeed merited condemnation; but David was now under the divine rebuke for his ſins: though free from the guilt charged upon him, he was conſciouſly guilty of murdering Uriah: he therefore ſubmitted to the juſtice of God, in this injurious treatment from Shimei: he could not wonder that his enemies were ſtirred up againſt him; when his own ſon ſought his life. The ſin both of Shimei, and of Abſalom was from themſelves, and ſatan: but David's affliction was from the Lord; and they were but inſtruments, 15 And Abſalom, and all the people the men of Iſrael, came to Jeruſalem, and Ahithophel with him.

16 And it came to paſs, when Huſhai the Archite, David's friend, was come unto Abſalom, that Huſhai ſaid unto Abſalom, God ſave the king, God ſave the king.

17 And Abſalom ſaid to Huſhai, Is this thy kindneſs to thy friend? why wenteſt thou not with thy friend?

18 And Huſhai ſaid unto Abſalom, Nay; but whom the LORD, and this people, and all the men of Iſrael chooſe, his will I be, and with him will I abide.

19 And again, whom ſhould I ſerve? ſhould I not ſerve in the preſence of his ſon? As I have ſerved in thy father's preſence, ſo will I be in thy preſence.

20 Then ſaid Abſalom to Ahithophel, Give counſel among you what we ſhall do.

21 And Ahithophel ſaid unto Abſalom, Go in unto thy father's concubines, which he hath left to keep the houſe; and all Iſrael ſhall hear that thou art abhorred of thy father; then ſhall the hands of all that are with thee be ſtrong.

22 So they ſpread Abſalom a tent upon the top of the houſe: and Abſalom went in unto his father's concubines in the ſight of all Iſrael.

23 And the counſel of Ahithophel, which he counſelled in thoſe days, was as if a man had enquired at the oracle of God: ſo was all the counſel of Ahithophel, both with David and with Abſalom.

which the Lord employed, beſides their purpoſe, of correcting him for his good. The curſe cauſeleſs he knew could only injure him, who vented it: and his humble ſubmiſſion to ſuch baſe uſage from man, would he hoped, prepare the way for the return of peace and comfort from a merciful God: and therefore he would not permit Shimei to be moleſted.

V. 16—19.] Though Abſalom interpreted Huſhai's words into a promiſe of fidelity, and a tender of his ſervices, they did not neceſſarily imply them. He ſaid "Let "the king live," not "Let king Abſalom live." "He "would be his, and abide with him, whom the Lord, "and Iſrael ſhould chooſe:" but this was not Abſalom in the event; however it appeared for a time. "He would "ſerve in the preſence of the ſon, as in the preſence of "the father, &c." But whom would he ſerve? He would ſerve David in Abſalom's preſence, as faithfully, as when he was upon the ſpot. Had not Abſalom been blinded with pride, and popularity, he would have ſuſpected ſuch ambiguous words, when uſed by the known friend of his father, and not have admitted him amongſt his boſom counſellors. It is very hard to conduct ſtratagems without ſuch equivocations, if not direct falſhoods: and therefore it is beſt to keep at a diſtance from them, when we can.

V. 20—23.] Ahithophel was deemed as the oracle of God becauſe of his ſagacity; and at one time his profeſſions of piety ſeem to have been equally depended upon: but he was therein ſhamefully over-rated. He did not ſhew his wiſdom in joining himſelf to ſo vile a faction, headed by a raſh young man, of conſummate villainy, which foreboded nothing but ruin. But his confidence in his own wiſdom made him hope, that he could render it ſucceſsful: and his mind ſeems to have been much embittered againſt David. His hypocriſy now terminated in apoſtacy; and his firſt counſel to Abſalom, after his peaceable entrance into Jeruſalem, was more like an oracle of ſatan, than that of the Lord. For his own ſecurity, and that of the whole party, he intended to preclude all hope of reconciliation with David; that Abſalom might determine to conquer, or to periſh: and he put him upon an act of ſuch ſhameleſs wickedneſs, as was effectually ſuited to the purpoſe. As if he had been actually in poſſeſſion of the throne, in defiance of God's law, and of common decency, he defiled his father's concubines; and thus inflicted upon David the correction, which God had denounced, (ch. xii. v. 11.) So many women left behind, beſides all his wives, were by no means honourable to David: and probably they did not expreſs a proper degree of reluctance to ſo groſs an enormity. Abſalom ſignifies "the peace of my "father, or the father of peace," but never man leſs anſwered his name.

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.

Selfiſh men are often very generous in diſpoſing of other men's property for their own advantage; and are great adepts in addreſs, and inſinuation: and flatterers are generally back-biters; for it is as eaſy to them to forge ſlanders of the abſent, as to pretend affection, and reſpect for the preſent: and thoſe ſervants, who purloin their maſter's ſubſtance, will commonly blacken their reputations. Though both adulation, and calumny are injurious to a great degree, yet the former is the moſt hurtful to the believer; for to be tempted to ſin is more injurious, than to be robbed of our riches, or even of our characters: and ſmooth ſpeeches and well-timed preſents often ſeduce even the wiſe, and righteous into improper conceſſions. When much treachery and ingratitude have been experienced, men are apt to become too ſuſpicious, and to liſten to every plauſible tale of calumny: the mind, when greatly agitated, views every thing through a falſe medium, and we are naturally moſt precipitate, when leaſt capable of judging aright: and thus godly men are unawares betrayed into indefenſible meaſures. But whilſt the diſſimulation of falſe friends occaſions ſin: the rage, malice, and contumely of cruel enemies call forth the exerciſes of the believer's graces, and often proves advantageous to him.

MOREOVER Ahithophel ſaid unto Abſalom, Let me now chooſe out twelve thouſand men, and I will ariſe and purſue after David this night.

2 And I will come upon him while he is weary and weak handed, and will make him afraid: and all the people that are with him ſhall flee, and I will ſmite the king only.

3 And I will bring back all the people unto thee; the man whom thou ſeekeſt is as if all returned: ſo all the people ſhall be in peace.

4 And the ſaying pleaſed Abſalom well, and all the elders of Iſrael.

5 Then ſaid Abſalom, Call now Huſhai the Archite alſo, and let us hear likewiſe what he ſaith.

6 And when Huſhai was come to Abſalom, Abſalom ſpake unto him, ſaying, Ahithophel hath ſpoken after this manner: ſhall we do after his ſaying? if not, ſpeak thou.

7 And Huſhai ſaid unto Abſalom, The counſel that Ahithophel hath given is not good at this time.

8 For, ſaid Huſhai, thou knoweſt thy father and his men, that they be mighty men, and they be chafed in their minds, as a bear robbed of her whelps in the field: and thy father is a man of war, and will not lodge with the people.

Wicked men judge of right or wrong by ſelf-intereſt; and count themſelves robbed of every expected advantage, which goes beſides them: it gratifies malevolence to inſult the afflicted, and to vent imprecations and reproaches: and when men think nothing of the authority, providence, or word of God in other reſpects, they are often very ready to interpret the afflictions of their neighbours, as divine judgments, in oppoſition to the cleareſt evidence. But it is good to ſee the hand of God directing, though not dictating, the injuries of men. Some ſimilar, or equal evil, or ſome appearance of evil, their falſe accuſations may ſuggeſt to memory, which calls for humiliation, watchfulneſs, and prayer: we deſerve worſe from the Lord than their moſt cruel, and contemptuous treatment, and we are authoriſed to conſider that as his correction: and if we bear humbly, patiently, and meekly for his ſake, the injuries of man, he will graciouſly requite us with inward peace and conſolation. Seaſons of peculiar humiliation before God, require peculiar long-ſuffering towards men: private revenge muſt never be indulged; and on ſuch occaſions it behoves us to be very reluctant in ſeeking the execution of public juſtice upon thoſe offenders, who have only injured us. Nay the Judge of the world, in his humiliation for our ſins, bare with, and prayed for thoſe, who reviled, and crucified him. Indeed a deep ſenſe of perſonal guilt, will ſoften the ſpirit towards others, and diſpoſe a man to be indignant, and ſevere againſt himſelf. (Compare 1 Sam. c. xxv. v. 21, 22.) And the moſt zealous friends are to be diſregarded, when they counſel what is evidently wrong. Men, who admire themſelves, will be eaſily deceived by thoſe, who profeſs an attachment to them: yet men readily diſcern thoſe faults in others, of which themſelves are moſt notoriouſly guilty. And if a diſciple of Chriſt commit evident wickedneſs, even profligates will exclaim, "Is this thy kindneſs to thy friend?" But alas! how often might the Saviour himſelf addreſs theſe words to each of us, to our ſhame, and confuſion? And how often ſhould we thus check ourſelves, and remember our ingratitude, to our deeper humiliation? Deſtruction is before thoſe, who hearken to deceitful, and wicked counſellors: yet many young people, eſpecially in high life, will not regard any other! How deſperately wicked is the human heart, that can conceive, execute, and glory in thoſe deeds of darkneſs, which it is ſhocking to think of, and ſhameful to mention! yet all this might be educed from our hearts by ſucceſſive temptations, if ſatan and his agents were permitted to practiſe upon us! When great abilities, and daring wickedneſs unite in one character, they form the expreſs image of ſatan: and like that arch-apoſtate and rebel, ſuch men will ſpare no pains to puſh others forward into ſuch kinds, and degrees of guilt, as may drive them deſperate, and extinguiſh all thoughts of reconciliation unto God. But this wiſdom will ſhortly appear the moſt wretched, and contemptible folly, which perverts the noble powers of an angel, to increaſe and propagate guilt, condemnation, and eternal miſery.

NOTES.

CHAP. XVII.] V. 3. The man, whom, &c.] The conſtruction of this verſe is very difficult; but the obvious meaning is, that by immediately aſſaulting David, before he was prepared for the attack, he might eaſily be ſmitten alone; and that this would effectually anſwer Abſalom's purpoſe, and bring over the people to a quiet ſubmiſſion to his authority. The deſperate wickedneſs of the propoſal excited no oppoſition, either from Abſalom, or from the people; but they were blinded from ſeeing, that it was the moſt politic meaſure, which could have been adopted in ſuch circumſtances.

V. 7—13.] Huſhai's great aim was to gain time for David to remove to a greater diſtance, and to increaſe, and encourage his army: and if he had only put Abſalom off from executing Ahithophel's counſel for one night, it might have proved of eſſential ſervice, eſpecially as he would have been able to give him intelligence of his danger. In purſuing this object, he oppoſed Ahithophel's propoſal with conſummate addreſs, and with ſome ſpecious arguments: From David's character for valour, and military ſkill; from the courage, and indignation of his fol-

9 Behold,

9 Behold, he is hid now in some pit, or in some other place: and it will come to pass, when some of them be overthrown at the first, that whosoever heareth it will say, There is a slaughter among the people that follow Absalom;

10 And he also that is valiant, whose heart is as the heart of a lion, shall utterly melt: for all Israel knoweth that thy father is a mighty man, and they which be with him are valiant men.

11 Therefore I counsel, that all Israel be generally gathered unto thee, from Dan even to Beer-sheba, as the sand that is by the sea for multitude, and that thou go to battle in thine own person.

12 So shall we come upon him in some place where he shall be found, and we will light upon him as the dew falleth on the ground: and of him, and of all the men that are with him, there shall not be left so much as one.

13 Moreover, if he be gotten into a city, then shall all Israel bring ropes to that city, and we will draw it into the river, until there be not one small stone found there.

14 And Absalom and all the men of Israel said, The counsel of Hushai the Archite is better than the counsel of Ahithophel: for the LORD had appointed to defeat the good counsel of Ahithophel, to the intent that the LORD might bring evil upon Absalom.

15 Then said Hushai unto Zadok and to Abiathar the priests, Thus and thus did Ahithophel counsel Absalom and the elders of Israel; and thus and thus have I counselled.

16 Now therefore send quickly, and tell David, saying, Lodge not this night in the plains of the wilderness, but speedily pass over; lest the king be swallowed up, and all the people that are with him.

17 Now Jonathan and Ahimaaz stayed by En-rogel, (for they might not be seen to come into the city,) and a wench went and told them: and they went and told king David.

18 Nevertheless a lad saw them, and told Absalom: but they went both of them away quickly, and came to a man's house in Bahurim, which had a well in his court, whither they went down.

19 And the woman took and spread a covering over the well's mouth, and spread ground corn thereon; and the thing was not known.

20 And when Absalom's servants came to the woman to the house, they said, Where is Ahimaaz and Jonathan? And the woman said unto them, They be gone over the brook of water. And when they had sought, and could not find them, they returned to Jerusalem.

21 And it came to pass after they were departed, that they came up out of the well, and went and told king David, and said unto David, Arise, and pass quickly over the water; for thus hath Ahithophel counselled against you.

22 Then David arose, and all the people lowers; and from the probability that David would, by some stratagem of war, surprise, and overcome his assailants, if they were not very numerous, and so discourage the whole party; he argued that Ahithophel's counsel was not good at that time. But the measures, which he proposed in lieu of it, were addressed to the vain glory, the ambition, and perhaps the revenge of Absalom, and of his followers. To raise a vast army, which being the universal favourite, he might easily accomplish; to command it himself, that the honour might be all his own; to carry matters with a high hand, and to make sure work, and to destroy David, and all his party: this was a more pompous scheme, and more suited to a man of Absalom's capacity and disposition, than the sagacious counsel of Ahithophel: and it pleased God so to infatuate him and all his party, that it met with general approbation. Ahithophel's former counsel was followed; for God intended to correct David: but his latter was not; for he meant not to destroy him, but Absalom. Thus God answered David's prayer, and turned the good, that is the politic counsel of Ahithophel into foolishness.

V. 16. Lodge not, &c.] Hushai feared lest Absalom should change his mind; and he was satisfied that he was determined to murder David, if possible, and without delay; and therefore he sent him intelligence to provide immediately for his safety.

V. 17. Now Jonathan, &c.] It seems that these young men were suspected by Absalom's party, though they were restrained from injuring Zadok, and Abiathar: and therefore they did not enter the city, but abode at a distance; whither their intelligence was sent to them by a young woman, as an unsuspected messenger: which with great danger they were enabled to deliver.

V. 22. There lacked, &c.] This was a remarkable instance of God's providential care over his servant, and his friends; and he was therein a type of Christ, who that were with him, and they paſſed over Jordan: by the morning light there lacked not one of them that was not gone over Jordan.

23 And when Ahithophel ſaw that his counſel was not followed, he ſaddled his aſs, and aroſe, and gat him home to his houſe, to his city, and put his houſhold in order, and hanged himſelf, and died, and was buried in the ſepulchre of his father.

24 Then David came to Mahanaim: and Abſalom paſſed over Jordan, he and all the men of Iſrael with him.

25 And Abſalom made Amaſa captain of the hoſt inſtead of Joab: which Amaſa was a man's ſon whoſe name was Ithra, an Iſraelite, that went in to Abigail, the daughter of Nahaſh, ſiſter to Zeruiah, Joab's mother.

26 So Iſrael and Abſalom pitched in the land of Gilead.

27 And it came to paſs, when David was come to Mahanaim, that Shobi the ſon of Nahaſh of Rabbah of the children of Ammon, and Machir the ſon of Ammiel of Lodebar, and Barzillai the Gileadite of Rogelim,

28 Brought beds, and baſons, and earthen veſſels, and wheat, and barley, and flour, and parched corn, and beans, and lentiles, and parched pulſe,

29 And honey, and butter, and ſheep, and cheeſe of kine, for David, and for the people that were with him, to eat: for they ſaid, The people is hungry, and weary, and thirſty, in the wilderneſs.

loſes none of his true followers. About this time David penned the third pſalm.

V. 23. And when, &c.] This crafty politician had ſeen enough of Abſalom to conſider his cauſe already loſt: his vexation, when he ſaw ſo wild a ſcheme preferred to his ſound policy, was intolerable; he expected nothing but extreme diſgrace, and a public execution for his treaſon; but it is doubtful whether he deſpaired of God's mercy, or was hardened in preſumption and infidelity: however he moſt deliberately murdered himſelf. It is obſervable that three, at leaſt, out of the four inſtances of ſelf-murder, recorded in ſcripture, were apoſtate profeſſors of godlineſs, viz. Saul, Ahithophel, and Judas. Now David's prayer was anſwered more terribly than he expected or deſired.

V. 27.] Perhaps this Shobi, the ſon of Nahaſh, had been advanced to the kingdom by David, inſtead of Hanun his brother; and thus expreſſed his gratitude: or perhaps he was proſelyted, and lived amongſt the Iſraelites. The proviſions, which were brought to David, not only expreſſed the liberality of his friends, but the extreme diſtreſs, to which his followers were reduced.

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.

When ſatan hath ſeduced men into a wicked courſe of life, every crime makes more, and greater enormities almoſt neceſſary, and they muſt go forward, or loſe the fruit, and ſuffer the puniſhment of their former villanies. His ſervants are more ſagacious, and vigorous in their miſchievous devices, than the ſervants of God are in doing good: and they have a vaſt apparent advantage, being freed from the reſtraints of conſcience, gratitude, natural affection, and the fear of God. That ſome few individuals ſhould be monſters of iniquity would not excite much ſurpriſe: but from age to age vaſt multitudes are found, who with one conſent break through every tie of duty to God or man; eſpecially when engaged in oppoſing the cauſe of true religion, and its cordial friends: and this demonſtrates, that man by nature is an enemy to the ſervice and holineſs of God.—When the heart is hardened in iniquity, it is righteous for God to infatuate the underſtanding: and when the rage of his enemies hath accompliſhed his ſecret purpoſes, and they are about to proceed, their machinations prove unſucceſsful, and forward their own deſtruction. The Lord can perform the greateſt deliverances by the feebleſt inſtruments: he can protect his ſervants in their extremeſt dangers; or provide for them in their moſt preſſing neceſſities: he can reſtrain the malice of their moſt cruel enemies, and enlarge the heart of unexpected friends: and whatever wiſdom, addreſs, diſpatch, or aſſiſtance, any man employs or affords, the ſucceſs is from God alone, who will not ſuffer one of his people to periſh. When ſatan hath tempted to ſucceſſive crimes, till men are ripe for deſtruction; and when God's providence hath diſappointed their ambitious and vain-glorious projects, and their lives are rendered miſerable; the laſt device of that ſubtle enemy is to urge them to murder themſelves: and in this way he ſometimes deludes thoſe, who have been moſt renowned for their wiſdom, but who are at length ſo fooliſh as to plunge themſelves into everlaſting miſery, for fear of temporal diſgrace and ſuffering. Let us then beware of hypocriſy and apoſtacy, which frequently have this event: let us fear ſinning againſt knowledge and conſcience, which is often the forerunner of judicial hardneſs: let us ſeek the wiſdom which comes from, and leads to God, and heaven: let us watch againſt the riſing emotions of pride, malice, envy, or ambition: let us learn to pity, and relieve thoſe who are in diſtreſs, with liberality proportioned to our ability. Our King indeed needs not our help: but he hath aſſured us, that what we do for the leaſt of his brethren, who are ſick, poor, or deſtitute, ſhall be accepted and recompenſed, as if it were done to himſelf.

AND David numbered the people that were with him, and ſet captains of thouſands and captains of hundreds over them.

2 And David ſent forth a third part of the people under the hand of Joab, and a third part under the hand of Abiſhai the ſon of Zeruiah, Joab's brother, and a third part under the hand of Ittai the Gittite. And the king ſaid unto the people, I will ſurely go forth with you myſelf alſo.

3 But the people anſwered, Thou ſhalt not go forth: for, if we flee away, they will not care for us; neither if half of us die will they care for us: but now thou art worth ten thouſand of us; therefore now it is better that thou ſuccour us out of the city.

4 And the king ſaid unto them, What ſeemeth you beſt I will do. And the king ſtood by the gate ſide, and all the people came out by hundreds and by thouſands.

5 And the king commanded Joab and Abiſhai and Ittai, ſaying, Deal gently for my ſake with the young man, even with Abſalom. And all the people heard when the king gave all the captains charge concerning Abſalom.

6 So the people went out into the field againſt Iſrael: and the battle was in the wood of Ephraim;

7 Where the people of Iſrael were ſlain before the ſervants of David; and there was there a great ſlaughter that day of twenty thouſand men.

8 For the battle was there ſcattered over the face of all the country: and the wood devoured more people that day than the ſword devoured.

9 And Abſalom met the ſervants of David. And Abſalom rode upon a mule, and the mule went under the thick boughs of a great oak, and his head caught hold of the oak, and he was taken up between the heaven and the earth; and the mule that was under him went away.

10 And a certain man ſaw it, and told Joab, and ſaid, Behold, I ſaw Abſalom hanged in an oak.

11 And Joab ſaid unto the man that told him, And, behold, thou ſaweſt him; and why didſt thou not ſmite him there to the ground, and I would have given thee ten ſhekels of ſilver, and a girdle?

12 And the man ſaid unto Joab, Though I ſhould receive a thouſand ſhekels of ſilver in mine hand, yet would I not put forth mine hand againſt the king's ſon: for in our hearing the king charged thee, and Abiſhai, and Ittai, ſaying, Beware that none touch the young man Abſalom.

13 Otherwiſe I ſhould have wrought falſehood againſt mine own life: for there is no matter hid from the king, and thou thyſelf wouldeſt have ſet thyſelf againſt me.

NOTES.

V. 3. Worth ten thouſand, &c.] This was ſpoken, not only out of affection to David; but from a proper eſtimate of the importance of his life to the civil and religious intereſts of the whole nation; which was like to ſink into the moſt abject miſery, and the greateſt ungodlineſs, if Abſalom was ſucceſsful in his wicked uſurpation. As Ahithophel had foreſeen, Abſalom's delay afforded David's friends an opportunity of ſtrengthening his army, which was now become capable of meeting their opponents in the field of battle.

V. 5. Deal gently, &c.] Abſalom aimed only at the life of his indulgent father; David deſired nothing ſo much as the preſervation of his rebellious ſon. But Abſalom's crimes were too enormous to have been pardoned, conſiſtent with David's duty; and the peace of Iſrael could not be eſtabliſhed whilſt he lived. Perhaps he only hoped, that if he were not ſlain in battle, he would live to repent of his wickedneſs, and ſo eſcape the future vengeance of God. But if he had been ſpared, he would probably have occaſioned David further trouble, and ſin; and it pleaſed God to preſerve his ſervant from the guilt of pardoning, and from the anguiſh of puniſhing him. David ſeems not to have doubted of the victory, after his prayer againſt Ahithophel had been ſo remarkably anſwered. The wood of Ephraim was beyond Jordan, and, as is ſuppoſed, the place where the Ephraimites had been ſlain in the days of Jephthah. (Jud. c. xii. v. 4—6.)

V. 9. His head, &c.] Either his hair, which he had effeminately tended, was ſo entangled in the boughs of the oak, that he could not extricate himſelf; or his head was confined betwixt two arms of the tree, through the rapidity and inattention, with which he rode. In this dreadful ſituation he remained a conſiderable time, doubtleſs with unſpeakable horror, expecting his doom, without being able in the leaſt to help himſelf. His fate was as extraordinary as his crimes; and by being providentially hanged on a tree, he was, as it were, pronounced accurſed of God himſelf.

V. 13. Wrought falſhood, &c.] He meant, that he 14 Then ſaid Joab, I may not tarry thus with thee. And he took three darts in his hand, and thruſt them through the heart of Abſalom, while he was yet alive in the midſt of the oak.

15 And ten young men that bare Joab's armour compaſſed about, and ſmote Abſalom, and ſlew him.

16 And Joab blew the trumpet, and the people returned from purſuing after Iſrael: for Joab held back the people.

17 And they took Abſalom, and caſt him into a great pit in the wood, and laid a very great heap of ſtones upon him: and all Iſrael fled every one to his tent.

18 Now Abſalom in his life-time had taken and reared up for himſelf a pillar, which is in the king's dale: for he ſaid, I have no ſon to keep my name in remembrance; and he called the pillar after his own name: and it is called unto this day Abſalom's place.

19 Then ſaid Ahimaaz the ſon of Zadok, Let me now run and bear the king tidings, how that the LORD hath avenged him of his enemies.

20 And Joab ſaid unto him, Thou ſhalt not bear tidings this day, but thou ſhalt bear tidings another day; but this day thou ſhalt bear no tidings, becauſe the king's ſon is dead.

21 Then ſaid Joab to Cuſhi, Go tell the king what thou haſt ſeen. And Cuſhi bowed himſelf unto Joab, and ran.

22 Then ſaid Ahimaaz the ſon of Zadok yet again to Joab, But howſoever, let me, I pray thee, alſo run after Cuſhi. And Joab ſaid, Wherefore wilt thou run, my ſon, ſeeing that thou haſt no tidings ready?

23 But howſoever, ſaid he, let me run. And he ſaid unto him, Run. Then Ahimaaz ran by the way of the plain, and over-ran Cuſhi.

24 And David ſat between the two gates: and the watchman went up to the roof over the gate unto the wall, and lifted up his eyes, and looked, and, behold, a man running alone.

25 And the watchman cried, and told the king. And the king ſaid, If he be alone, there is tidings in his mouth. And he came apace, and drew near.

26 And the watchman ſaw another man running, and the watchman called unto the porter, and ſaid, Behold, another man running alone. And the king ſaid, He alſo bringeth tidings.

27 And the watchman ſaid, Me thinketh the running of the foremoſt is like the running of Ahimaaz the ſon of Zadok. And the king ſaid, He is a good man, and cometh with good tidings.

28 And Ahimaaz called, and ſaid unto the king, All is well. And he fell down to the earth upon his face before the king, and ſaid, Bleſſed be the LORD thy God, which hath delivered up the men, that lifted up their hand againſt my lord the king.

29 And the king ſaid, is the young man Abſalom ſafe? And Ahimaaz anſwered, When Joab ſent the king's ſervant, and me thy ſervant, ſhould have cheated himſelf; and by ſeeking a reward, have forfeited his life. This man's anſwer was replete with truth, good ſenſe, and ſound argument: and Joab was conſcious that it did not admit of an anſwer.

V. 14. Thruſt them through, &c.] Joab doubtleſs intended the intereſt of both David and his kingdom in diſpatching Abſalom; and his death was of ſalutary tendency, and even neceſſary: yet he cannot be excuſed in acting againſt the expreſs deſire and command of his Sovereign; for he had no warrant from God or man to execute deſerved vengeance upon him; and having deſerved death himſelf, he was the laſt perſon, who ſhould have complained of the obſtruction of public juſtice. But he was a man of an overbearing ſpirit, who preſumed ſo much upon his ſervices and conſequence to David, that he domineered over him continually.

V. 17, 18.] It ſeems that Abſalom's ſons died young, (as a juſt judgment upon him for ſeeking the life of his father,) and that, after their death, he erected ſome magnificent building, within, or near to which, he meant to be interred; and by which he hoped to perpetuate his memory with honour to future generations. But, on the contrary, he was buried with ignominy as a criminal; (See Deut. c. xxi. v. 20—23;) and his pillar proved a monument of his folly and wicked ambition.

V. 22. No tidings ready.] That is, no convenient tidings. Joab was ſenſible that David would bitterly lament the death of Abſalom; and was not willing to ſend ſo reſpectable a perſon as Ahimaaz with unwelcome tidings; but appointed for that ſervice an inferior perſon, whoſe name ſeems to intimate that he was an Ethiopian, and perhaps a ſlave: however, he was cordially attached to the intereſts of David.

V. 29. I ſaw a great tumult, &c.] Perhaps one motive vant,

vant, I saw a great tumult, but I knew not what it was.

30 And the king said unto him, Turn aside, and stand here. And he turned aside, and stood still.

31 And, behold, Cushi came; and Cushi said, Tidings, my lord the king: for the LORD hath avenged thee this day of all them that rose up against thee.

32 And the king said unto Cushi, is the young man Absalom safe? And Cushi answered, The enemies of my lord the king, and all that rise against thee to do thee hurt, be as that young man is.

33 And the king was much moved, and went up to the chamber over the gate, and wept: and as he went, thus he said, O my son Absalom! my son, my son Absalom! would God I had died for thee, O Absalom, my son, my son!

that induced Ahimaaz to desire to carry David the first news of the victory, was, that he might gradually prepare his mind for the intelligence of Absalom's death: for though he rejoiced in his deliverance, he sympathized with him in his grief; and for this purpose he evaded the king's question; which Cushi soon after indirectly, but more plainly replied to. The piety of the language of Ahimaaz and Cushi on this occasion are worthy notice and imitation.

V. 33.] David's grief was doubtless extravagant, and very faulty. He ought to have been thankful for his own deliverance and that of Israel, and to have submitted with silent patience to the righteous judgment of God upon his son. But he was a man of very warm passions: he had inordinately loved a very unworthy object, who was cut off in the midst of his crimes: he could not but think of the state of his immortal soul: he was conscious that, when his own forfeited life was spared, after his adultery and murder, this burden had been laid upon his family; and he considered himself, by his transgression, example, and the chastisement of God, as accessory to the dire catastrophe; and in the vehemency of his grief he wished, that he had died himself rather than his son, as being better prepared for the eternal world: whilst the agitation of his mind prevented him from adverting to the fatal effects of such an event to his kingdom, and to that cause, which, in his calmer hours, was nearest to his heart.

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.

The peculiar exercises of religion ought to precede, but not to exclude the use of every prudent means of securing success in lawful undertakings: and they who would engage others in arduous and perilous attempts, must be willing to take a full share in the hardship and danger. But in some cases the life of an individual is of such importance to the public welfare, that thousands are authorised to demand it of him, as a duty, to take the utmost care of himself. It is well when such affection and fidelity subsists betwixt princes and their subjects: and when they are mutually willing to venture, or to suffer for each other's benefit. Thus Jesus loved his people, and laid down his life for them: thus they consider his cause as dearer to them than every personal interest, and are prepared to lay down their lives for his sake. True courage and firmness of mind are very different from rashness and obstinacy; and wise men are always most ready to listen to prudent counsel, even from their inferiors. The extremes of our most amiable propensities are often of fatal consequence: and it is merciful for God to deny us those things, which we greatly desire, when he sees they would prove our temptation or affliction. Multitudes suffer through the wickedness of one; but for their own crimes: and rebellion against good and lawful governors is generally, and justly punished with the ruin of those concerned in it. Yet the seducers into the ways of sin must be answerable to God for the consequences; and who can number the murders, for which many ambitious usurpers will stand indicted before his righteous tribunal! At all times "evil pursueth sinners." And when in the appointed hour it overtaketh them, they cannot possibly escape; but those things on which they have most depended, and of which they have been most proud, often prove the occasion, or instruments of their destruction. Let young people look upon Absalom suspended upon the tree, accursed and forsaken of Heaven and earth; and there let them read the Lord's abhorrence of rebellion against parents: let them consider the agony of his death, and the ignominy of his burial; and learn how empty all external embellishments are; how vain the flattery of man; and all that care, which is employed in rendering themselves admired and renowned. After all, the memory "of the wicked shall rot;" and nothing can preserve us from misery and contempt, but heavenly wisdom and the grace of God. They, who are greedy of gain, often work falshood against their own lives or souls; and many persons will rejoice in the effects of wickedness, who will be the first to inform against those; who have committed it, in order to exculpate themselves: but our safety lies in obeying the Lord, and the lawful commands of our rulers. The removal of one ringleader in daring crimes proves a public benefit, and makes way for the exercise of clemency to numbers: but that will not authorise every individual to take away the life of the most notorious offender: for it is not enough that the thing ought to be done; but we are to consider whether it be a service allotted to us by our great Master. Every deliverance should be received with praise and thanksgiving to God: and good men delight in bearing glad tidings to those, whom they love. May all, who proclaim the glad tidings of salvation to sinners, be men of such unblemished reputation! and may numbers more be sent forth with this joyful message!—All other good tidings have so much alloy in them, that our joy on account of them must be mingled with weeping, or with trembling: and alas! we are more disposed to complain of the trouble, which alloys our mercies, than to be thankful for the mercies themselves. But whilst we learn from the example before us, to watch and pray against partial and excessive attachments; and against the indulgence or neglect of our children; and the unadvised language and passionate wishes of indulged grief: whilst we learn to bow down to the

AND it was told Joab, Behold the king weepeth and mourneth for Abſalom.

2 And the victory that day was turned into mourning unto all the people: for the people heard ſay that day, how the king was grieved for his ſon.

3 And the people gat them by ſtealth that day into the city, as people being aſhamed ſteal away when they flee in battle.

4 But the king covered his face, and the king cried with a loud voice, O my ſon, Abſalom! O Abſalom, my ſon, my ſon!

5 And Joab came into the houſe to the king, and ſaid, Thou haſt ſhamed this day the faces of all thy ſervants, which this day have ſaved thy life, and the lives of thy ſons, and of thy daughters, and the lives of thy wives, and the lives of thy concubines;

6 In that thou loveſt thine enemies, and hateſt thy friends: for thou haſt declared this day, that thou regardeſt neither princes nor ſervants: for this day I perceive, that if Abſalom had lived, and all we had died this day, then it had pleaſed thee well.

7 Now therefore ariſe, go forth, and ſpeak comfortably unto thy ſervants: for I ſwear by the LORD, if thou go not forth, there will not tarry one with thee this night; and that will be worſe unto thee than all the evil that befel thee from thy youth until now.

8 Then the king aroſe, and ſat in the gate. And they told unto all the people, ſaying, Behold the king doth ſit in the gate. And all the people came before the king; for Iſrael had fled every man to his tent.

9 And all the people were at ſtrife throughout all the tribes of Iſrael, ſaying, The king ſaved us out of the hand of our enemies, and he delivered us out of the hand of the Philiſtines, and now he is fled out of the land for Abſalom.

righteous appointments of God in our ſharpeſt trials; to adore his unmerited mercy in our comfort sand deliverances; and to prefer the public welfare to any perſonal, or private affections: may we not in David perceive a ſhadow of the Saviour's love, who wept over, prayed for, and ſuffered death in all its bitterneſs, for us vile rebels and enemies, without even excepting thoſe, who perſecuted and crucified him; and from him may we learn "not to be overcome "of evil, but to overcome evil with good."

NOTES.

CHAP. XIX.] V. 1—8.] David's conduct was very impolitic, and tended to weaken the attachment, and damp the zeal of his adherents; who would interpret his exceſſive grief into an indifference about their intereſts, and diſſatisfaction with their ſervices: and inſtead of exultation and joy, and the commendations of their prince, they were ſent away grieved, and aſhamed. Joab had therefore good reaſon to interpoſe, and would have been juſtifiable in a very plain remonſtrance with David, upon the impropriety of his conduct: but the aſperity, the reproaches, and implied threat of a general defection, that he employed, are to be aſcribed to his pride, and inſolence, who gloried in diſobeying, and being rude to his prince. However David, being conſcious that Joab had truth, and reaſon on his ſide, ſmothered his reſentment, and very prudently obviated the diſguſt of the people.

V. 9—15.] David would not appear to reign by force of arms; and therefore he waited, till he was publicly invited to reſume the reins of government. From the time, that he began to reign in Hebron over the tribe of Judah only, the diſtinction betwixt Judah and Iſrael began to be more obſerved. The men of Iſrael were firſt diſpoſed to return to their allegiance, and they ſpake honourably of David's former ſervices: but either fear, or ſhame, or ſome ſuch hindrance, retarded them from publicly inviting his return to Jeruſalem. The report of this having reached the king, he probably thought it would be diſhonourable to his own tribe, if they were the laſt in this ſervice; or perhaps they were ſo deeply involved in Abſalom's rebellion, that they feared his reſentment, if he were reinſtated in his authority: and therefore he employed Zadok, and Abiathar, to aſſure them of his affection, and to excite them to appear in this buſineſs: by which means to bring the king back to his houſe? ſeeing the ſpeech of all Iſrael is come to the king, even to his houſe.

12 Ye are my brethren, ye are my bones and my fleſh; wherefore then are ye the laſt to bring back the king?

13 And ſay ye to Amaſa, Art thou not of my bone, and of my fleſh? God do ſo to me, and more alſo, if thou be not captain of the hoſt before me continually in the room of Joab.

14 And he bowed the heart of all the men of Judah, even as the heart of one man; ſo that they ſent this word unto the king, Return thou, and all thy ſervants.

15 So the king returned, and came to Jordan. And Judah came to Gilgal to go to meet the king, to conduct the king over Jordan.

16 And Shimei the ſon of Gera, a Benjamite, which was of Bahurim, haſted and came down with the men of Judah to meet king David.

17 And there were a thouſand men of Benjamin with him, and Ziba the ſervant of the houſe of Saul, and his fifteen ſons and his twenty ſervants with him; and they went over Jordan before the king.

18 And there went over a ferry boat to carry over the king's houſhold, and to do what he thought good. And Shimei the ſon of Gera fell down before the king, as he was come over Jordan;

19 And ſaid unto the king, Let not my lord impute iniquity unto me, neither do thou remember that which thy ſervant did perverſely the day that my lord the king went out of Jeruſalem, that the king ſhould take it to his heart.

20 For thy ſervant doth know that I have ſinned; therefore, behold, I am come the firſt this day of all the houſe of Joſeph, to go down to meet my lord the king.

21 But Abiſhai the ſon of Zeruiah anſwered and ſaid, Shall not Shimei be put to death for this, becauſe he curſed the LORD's anointed?

22 And David ſaid, What have I to do with you, ye ſons of Zeruiah, that ye ſhould this day be adverſaries unto me? Shall there any man be put to death this day in Iſrael? for do not I know that I am this day king over Iſrael.

23 Therefore the king ſaid unto Shimei, Thou ſhalt not die: and the king ſware unto him.

24 And Mephiboſheth the ſon of Saul came down to meet the king, and had neither dreſſed his feet, nor trimmed his beard, nor waſhed his clothes from the day the king departed, until the day he came again in peace.

they took the lead in ſuch manner, as led the men of Iſrael to conclude, that they meant to engroſs the credit of recalling David, and excluſively to ſecure his favour. It would have been much better, if they had conſulted with their brethren, and acted in concert in this matter, which would have precluded many bad conſequences. David alſo was very uneaſy under Joab's haughtineſs, and was diſpleaſed with him for ſlaying Abſalom, and for his conſequent rudeneſs: and he wiſhed to lay him aſide. And he ſuppoſed, that if Amaſa were aſſured of pardon, and preferment, he would draw over all his party into his intereſts. But he was not a proper perſon to ſupplant Joab, having headed ſo daring a rebellion: and Joab's influence with the army, and with David's beſt friends, was too great to be thus ſhaken; and he was ſure not to ſubmit quietly to ſuch a diſgrace. David therefore did not act with prudence upon this emergency.

V. 20—23. The houſe of Joſeph, &c.] That is, of Iſrael, (in contradiction from Judah,) of which Ephraim the ſon of Joſeph was accounted the chief: for Shimei was of the tribe of Benjamin. Shimei appeared penitent, and David granted him a pardon, and ſware to him, that he ſhould not die at that time, by his authority, and for that crime. Abiſhai would have had him made an example of, as indeed he well deſerved to be: but David intimated, that he, and Joab were always inſtigating him to acts of ſeverity, and to act improperly: and it would be injurious to his interſts, as well as contrary to his inclinations, to ſully his reſtoration, with the execution of a ſingle criminal: and there was no occaſion; for all were diſpoſed peaceably to ſubmit unto him.

V. 24—30.] Mephiboſheth probably did not come to David, until his return to Jeruſalem: from the time of the king's departure, he had utterly neglected the care of his perſon, and ſhewn every token of exceſſive ſorrow. To the enquiry, wherefore he had not accompanied him? he anſwered by a ſimple narration of facts, united with the moſt reſpectful, affectionate, thankful, and ſubmiſſive language. He owed all he poſſeſſed to David's clemency, and bounty; he complained not of the grant that had been made to Ziba; and he was confident that the king would do nothing, but what was conſiſtent with wiſdom, and 25 And it came to paſs, when he was come to Jeruſalem to meet the king, that the king ſaid unto him, Wherefore wenteſt not thou with me, Mephibosheth?

26 And he anſwered, My lord, O king, my ſervant deceived me: for thy ſervant ſaid, I will ſaddle me an aſs, that I may ride thereon, and go to the king; becauſe thy ſervant is lame.

27 And he hath ſlandered thy ſervant unto my lord the king; but my lord the king is as an angel of God: do therefore what is good in thine eyes.

28 For all of my father's houſe were but dead men before my lord the king; yet didſt thou ſet thy ſervant among them that did eat at thine own table: what right therefore have I yet to cry any more unto the king?

29 And the king ſaid unto him, Why ſpeakeſt thou any more of thy matters? I have ſaid, Thou and Ziba divide the land.

30 And Mephibosheth ſaid unto the king, Yea, let him take all, foraſmuch as my lord the king is come again in peace unto his own houſe.

31 And Barzillai the Gileadite came down from Rogelim, and went over Jordan with the king, to conduct him over Jordan.

32 Now Barzillai was a very aged man, even fourſcore years old: and he had provided the king of ſuſtenance while he lay at Mahanaim; for he was a very great man.

33 And the king ſaid unto Barzillai, Come thou over with me, and I will feed thee with me in Jeruſalem.

34 And Barzillai ſaid unto the king, How long have I to live, that I ſhould go up with the king unto Jeruſalem?

35 I am this day fourſcore years old: and can I diſcern between good and evil? can thy ſervant taſte what I eat or what I drink? can I hear any more the voice of ſinging men and ſinging women? wherefore then ſhould thy ſervant be yet a burden unto my lord the king?

36 Thy ſervant will go a little way over Jordan with the king: and why ſhould the king recompenſe it me with ſuch a reward?

37 Let thy ſervant, I pray thee, turn back again, that I may die in my own city, and be buried by the grave of my father and of my mother. But, behold, thy ſervant Chimham; let him go over with my lord the king; and do to him what ſhall ſeem good unto thee.

38 And the king anſwered, Chimham ſhall go over with me, and I will do to him that which ſhall ſeem good unto thee: and whatſoever thou ſhalt require of me, that will I do for thee.

39 And all the people went over Jordan. And when the king was come over, the king kiſſed Barzillai, and bleſſed him; and he returned unto his own place.

40 Then the king went on to Gilgal, and Chimham went on with him: and all the people of Judah conducted the king, and alſo half the people of Iſrael.

41 And, behold, all the men of Iſrael came to the king, and ſaid unto the king, Why have our brethren the men of Judah ſtolen thee away, and have brought the king, and his houſhold, and all David's men with him, over Jordan?

42 And all the men of Judah anſwered the men of Iſrael, Becauſe the king is near of kin to us? wherefore then be ye angry for this matter?

juſtice. But whether David did not fully credit him, or whether he was aſhamed of his credulity, and wiſhed not to have it further noticed, he ſuffered Ziba to eſcape merited puniſhment, and to enjoy part of the fruits of his ſlander: or at leaſt contented himſelf with reſtoring matters to their former ſettlement. But Mephibosheth ſo rejoiced in David's ſafety, and ſucceſs, that he treated the whole affair concerning his own eſtate, as a matter of indifference.

V. 40—43.] By ſuch time as David had paſſed over Jordan, part of the elders of Iſrael came to bring him back, and were diſguſted at finding that they came too late, and that the buſineſs was ſettled without conſulting them. This might have been expected from the natural ambition, and jealouſy of the human heart: for they thought themſelves deſpiſed, and that the men of Judah took too much upon them: whilſt their plea of relationſhip to David tended only to increaſe their ſuſpicions, and envy; and the fiercer words, which the men of Judah returned to their angry remonſtrance, produced very bad effects. Whatever value, or reſpect they at this time profeſſed for their king; they would not have quarrelled ſo furiouſly about their own credit and intereſt in recalling him, if they had been truly ſorry for their former rebellion. David freely forgave them all their groſs injuries againſt him; but they could not endure the leaſt affront from each other.

matter? have we eaten at all of the king's coſt? or hath he given us any gift?

43 And the men of Iſrael anſwered the men of Judah, and ſaid, We have ten parts in the king, and we have alſo more right in David than ye: why then did ye deſpiſe us, that our advice ſhould not be firſt had in bringing back our king? And the words of the men of Judah were fiercer than the words of the men of Iſrael.

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.

Exceſſive indulgence of any paſſion not only offends God, but betrays men into great imprudences in their temporal concerns. They, who have faithfully ſerved our intereſts, expect that we ſhould appear pleaſed with them, and thankful for their ſervices. And many will do more for a ſmile, and a kind word from their ſuperiors, than for a more ſubſtantial recompenſe: and will be much grieved, and diſheartened, if they think themſelves frowned upon: and it is great imprudence to diſpleaſe ſuch adherents. Upon important emergencies plain truths may properly be ſpoken to the greateſt, and beſt of men; and they may be cloſely reaſoned and expoſtulated with: but indecent roughneſs, and an aſſuming demeanour in an inferior will render the moſt prudent, ſeaſonable, and honeſt counſel unacceptable; and perhaps ineffectual. However a wiſe man will endeavour to diſregard the impropriety, and benefit by the ſound reaſon of well-intended remonſtrances: and timely conceſſions will commonly prevent the ill effects of miſtaken meaſures. Men are often betrayed, by their diſcontents, and fickleneſs, into ſuch actions, as their ſober judgment diſapproves, and of which experience will conſtrain them to be weary: but they do not ſo readily condemn themſelves for the moſt evident treachery or ingratitude. Many allow that ſuch and ſuch things ſhould be done, and wonder that others do not ſet about them: and yet they are equally tardy, through their own indolence, pride, or covetouſneſs. Miniſters ſhould at all times be examples of fidelity to magiſtrates, and rulers: and may very properly exhort others to do their plain, and evident duty in that, as well as in other reſpects. Otherwiſe it is beſt for them to intermeddle very little in public tranſactions. Convincing arguments, urged in mildneſs, and love, are very forcible, and produce great effects upon the minds of men in all temporal concerns. But only the grace of God can bow our hearts into ſubmiſſion to his humbling truth, and holy will. In acts of clemency to thoſe, who have been open offenders, care ſhould be taken not to diſguſt ſuch, as have deſerved better of us; though in ſome reſpects they have failed of their duty: and whatever expoſes a man to envy, or rivalſhip, however ſplendid, and valuable, will probably prove injurious to him. Self-preference, and contempt of others ſhould always be guarded againſt; and every thing ſhould be avoided, which can bear ſuch a conſtruction: equality, mutual reſpect, and harmony ſhould be ſtudied, and many intereſts and punctilios receded from, that ſtrife, and contention may be excluded. Many ſeem to be ſorry for thoſe crimes, which expoſe them to preſent puniſhment; and the language, and ſemblance of repentance are eaſily imitated: but it is ſafeſt for us to judge favourably of others, and if we do err, to err on the ſide of candour, and clemency; and to leave it to the heart-ſearching God, to determine between the upright, and the hypocritical. Peculiar mercies from God ſhould diſpoſe us to be the more merciful to others: and our beſt friends muſt be conſidered as adverſaries, when they would perſuade us to act contrary to our conſcience, and our duty. Perſeverance in well doing will at length refute ſlanderous accuſations: true affection for our friends, and ſympathy with them in their afflictions, will create an indifferency to the pleaſures of ſenſe, and external decorations: and when they are beloved for the Lord's ſake, as well as for perſonal obligations; the effect will be much greater, and continued. But this ſorrow ſhall be turned into joy, on account of their preſent, or in the proſpect of their future proſperity, and our own in fellowſhip with them; which ſhould ſtill more increaſe our weanedneſs from the trifling intereſts of this world. Credulity in believing ſlanders often leads godly people into difficulties, and covers them with ſhame: yet no offenders are ſo ſeldom treated with proper ſeverity, as back-biters. When God gives largeneſs of heart, as well as great wealth, he qualifies a man to be a public bleſſing: and doing good liberally is the proper pleaſure, and advantage of wealth. For the little pleaſure of outward enjoyments quickly grows inſipid: old age deſtroys the reliſh for them: death muſt ſoon ſeparate a man from his riches, and then he muſt give an account to God of his ſtewardſhip. It becomes us therefore, as we advance in life, to relinquiſh worldly purſuits, before we be torn from them; and leaving to our juniors thoſe ſcenes of buſineſs, or of pleaſure, where reflection is too often diſſipated, and the voice of conſcience ſtunned, to prefer retirement, and privacy, where we may beſt prepare for the cloſing hour. Even the cities, where the truths of God are moſt profeſſed, and his ordinances are beſt adminiſtered; and thoſe courts, where the prince encourages, and ſets an example of true piety, are enſnaring places, through the multitudes of another character, which frequent them. And though allowances are to be made to youth, in matters inexpedient to old age; yet the ſooner, and the more entirely young people devote themſelves to God, the ſafer, and happier they will be. However it is our duty to recompenſe to the children, the kindneſs ſhewn us by their parents, and to pray for them, that they may have grace properly to uſe their temporal good things. Envy, and anger often interrupt the moſt promiſing appearances; and in moſt quarrels both parties are culpable. A ſuppoſed neglect excites diſpleaſure; an angry expreſſion provokes a retort: words grow warmer, and fiercer: and thus the beſt deſigns are diſconcerted, and much evil is committed: which might be otherwiſe, if men would watch againſt their own pride, and be careful not to affront that of others; and would remember, that a ſoft anſwer turneth away wrath. But here again, methinks, ſome glimpſes may be diſcerned of the glorious character, and kingdom of David's ſon, and David's Lord. Though anointed of the Father, to be his King upon his holy hill of Zion, he reigns over a willing people, who deem it their privilege to be his ſubjects. Once indeed they were rebels,

AND there happened to be there a man of Belial, whoſe name was Sheba, the ſon of Bichri, a Benjamite: and he blew a trumpet, and ſaid, We have no part in David, neither have we inheritance in the ſon of Jeſſe: every man to his tents, O Iſrael.

2 So every man of Iſrael went up from after David, and followed Sheba the ſon of Bichri: but the men of Judah clave unto their king, from Jordan even to Jeruſalem.

3 And David came to his houſe at Jeruſalem; and the king took the ten women his concubines, whom he had left to keep the houſe, and put them in ward, and fed them, but went not in unto them. So they were ſhut up unto the day of their death, living in widowhood.

4 Then ſaid the king to Amaſa, Aſſemble me the men of Judah within three days, and be thou here preſent.

5 So Amaſa went to aſſemble the men of Judah: but he tarried longer than the ſet time which he had appointed him.

6 And David ſaid to Abiſhai, Now ſhall Sheba the ſon of Bichri do us more harm than did Abſalom: take thou thy lord's ſervants and purſue after him, leſt he get him fenced cities and eſcape us.

7 And there went out after him Joab's men, and the Cherethites, and the Pelethites, and all the mighty men: and they went out of Jeruſalem to purſue after Sheba the ſon of Bichri.

and numbers periſh in that rebellion: but when they became ſenſible of their danger, they were fearful, or reluctant to ſubmit unto him, till his miniſters, by repreſenting his tender love, and brotherly relation to them, and by his promiſes of pardon, and preferment, through the concurring influences of his Spirit, bowed their hearts to an humble willingneſs that he ſhould reign over them: then he readily pardoned, and accepted them; and upon no accuſation will he caſt out, or cut off the worſt offender, who cries for his mercy. His friends ſincerely mourn when his cauſe is run down, and rejoice when it proſpers; however it fares with them, in reſpect of their worldly circumſtances. He will recompenſe thoſe, who from love to him feed his ſervants, with a place in his holy city, the new Jeruſalem; he will feaſt them upon the proviſions of his houſe; and will bleſs their children after them. Alas, that it muſt be added, that whilſt the king himſelf is ſo plenteous in mercy, many of his profeſſed ſubjects are envious of, and contentious with each other, upon the moſt unimportant concerns: which prevents much good, does immenſe miſchief, and occaſions lamentable ſcandals. May he at length teach all, who are called by his name, to follow the example of his humility, and meekneſs; and to rejoice in ſeeing the common cauſe promoted, let who will engroſs the credit of being the inſtrument: and may they all endeavour to keep the unity of the Spirit in the bond of peace!

NOTES.

CHAP. XX.] V. 1, 2.] The diſputants vied with each other in loyal affection for their prince, but were really actuated by ambition of pre-eminence: one party confiding in nearneſs of relation to David, the other in their numbers. But at length the men of Iſrael, who had boaſted that they had ten parts in David, were ſo irritated, that they would have no part in him, but preferred a man of Belial before him. Thus are men hurried by their paſſions from one extreme to another.

V. 3.] The confinement and retired maintenance of theſe women was the only meaſure, that could be adopted, in juſtice, or prudence: unleſs they had been found deſerving of ſeverer puniſhment. The leſs they were ſeen or heard of, after what had paſt, the better; and perhaps their ſecluſion might be of real benefit to their ſouls.

V. 5.] He tarried, &c.] Amaſa's appointment to be commander of the army in the place of Joab, muſt needs be very unpopular with all thoſe, who had fought, and conquered under that commander: and as Amaſa had not been ſucceſsful for Abſalom, perhaps his own party did not greatly favour him. This might occaſion the unexpected delay in raiſing an army: but the men of Judah were more eager to diſpute about their king, than to engage in battle for him.

V. 6. Thy lord's, &c.] That is, Joab's ſoldiers; David would not employ Joab on this occaſion, becauſe he intended to remove him from his ſervice.

V. 8—10. Amaſa went, &c.] Amaſa arriving with the troops, which he had collected, took upon him the command of the army: and Joab ſeemed very chearfully to ſubmit; and followed the army as a private perſon; profeſſing zeal for the cauſe of David, whilſt he was medi-girdle with a ſword faſtened upon his loins in the ſheath thereof: and as he went forth it fell out.

9 And Joab ſaid to Amaſa, Art thou in health my brother? and Joab took Amaſa by the beard with the right hand to kiſs him.

10 But Amaſa took no heed to the ſword that was in Joab's hand: ſo he ſmote him therewith in the fifth rib, and ſhed out his bowels to the ground, and ſtruck him not again; and he died. So Joab and Abiſhai his brother purſued after Sheba the ſon of Bichri.

11 And one of Joab's men ſtood by him, and ſaid, He that favoureth Joab, and he that is for David, let him go after Joab.

12 And Amaſa wallowed in blood in the midſt of the highway. And when the man ſaw that all the people ſtood ſtill he removed Amaſa out of the highway into the field, and caſt a cloth upon him, when he ſaw that every one that came by him ſtood ſtill.

13 When he was removed out of the highway, all the people went on after Joab, to purſue after Sheba the ſon of Bichri.

14 And he went through all the tribes of Iſrael unto Abel, and to Beth-maachah, and all the Berites: and they were gathered together, and went alſo after him.

15 And they came and beſieged him in Abel of Beth-maachah, and they caſt up a bank againſt the city, and it ſtood in the trench: and all the people that were with Joab battered the wall to throw it down.

16 Then cried a wiſe woman out of the city, Hear, hear; ſay, I pray you unto Joab, Come near hither, that I may ſpeak with thee.

17 And when he was come near unto her, the woman ſaid, Art thou Joab? and he anſwered, I am he. Then ſhe ſaid unto him, Hear the words of thine handmaid. And he anſwered, I do hear.

18 Then ſhe ſpake, ſaying, They were wont to ſpeak in old time, ſaying, They ſhall ſurely aſk counſel at Abel: and ſo they ended the matter.

19 I am one of them that are peaceable and faithful in Iſrael: thou ſeekeſt to deſtroy a city and a mother in Iſrael: why wilt thou ſwallow up the inheritance of the LORD?

20 And Joab anſwered and ſaid, Far be it, tating revenge, and murder. And he had ſo contrived, that his ſword fell from its ſcabbard, as if by chance, when he approached Amaſa, that without ſuſpicion he might have it drawn in his hand, when he ſaluted him: and thus pretending brotherly love, (for he was a near relation,) and in the very expreſſion of endeared friendſhip, he baſely murdered him, at one blow. Amaſa could not but know Joab's daring, and revengeful character, and the vexation, that he would feel, at being ſuperſeded by the commander of that rebellion, which he had cruſhed; and yet he did not ſuſpect, or attempt to avoid the fatal blow! But it was the Lord's righteous will, that he ſhould thus ſuffer the puniſhment due to his former treaſon. Joab confiding in the favour of the army, by this conduct, ſet both the king and public juſtice at defiance, and declared his reſolution to keep his place in contempt of all oppoſition. Having given Amaſa a mortal wound, he left him in the agonies of death, reſumed the command of the troops, and marched againſt the common enemy without concern, or delay.

V. 11—13. By the artifice of repreſenting the cauſe of Joab, as united with that of David, the people in general were left in ſuſpenſe, whether he acted by, or againſt the king's orders: and when Amaſa was removed, and covered, they followed their old commander without further heſitation.

V. 16—19.] The Iſraelites after they had had time for recollection, generally deſerted the cauſe of Sheba, having little inclination for another civil war: ſo that he was without bloodſhed, driven to take ſhelter in a fortified city in the tribe of Naphthali: againſt which Joab laid ſiege, ſuppoſing that the citizens were firmly attached to Sheba: and they prepared for reſiſtance, ſuppoſing he meant their deſtruction. But the effects of this miſunderſtanding were prevented, by the interpoſition of a prudent woman, who firſt expoſtulated with Joab, and then went to the citizens, and perſuaded them to the proper method of effecting an accommodation. Perhaps Abel of Beth-maachah had long been noted, as the reſidence of wiſe men, who had ſettled differences by prudent and equitable accommodation; ſo that it was become proverbial, "that "the way to terminate matters in litigation, was to aſk "counſel at Abel:" and therefore that city ought not raſhly to be deſtroyed. Or perhaps this wiſe woman referred to the law of God, which required that peace ſhould be proclaimed even to foreign cities, before ſiege was laid to them: which if Joab had obſerved, they would have ended the matter, by ſatisfying his demands. However ſhe pleaded that Abel had always been peaceable, and faithful, and a mother in Iſrael, a protector, and ſupport of the contiguous villages; and that in deſtroying it, he would do a public injury to the nation, by "ſwallowing up the "inheritance of the Lord."

V. 20—22. Far be it, &c.] Joab, though guilty of private revenge, was attentive to the public intereſt, and was very willing to ſettle the diſpute: if they would deliver far far be it from me, that I ſhould ſwallow up or deſtroy.

21 The matter is not ſo: but a man of mount Ephraim, Sheba the ſon of Bichri by name, hath lifted up his hand againſt the king, even againſt David. Deliver him only, and I will depart from the city. And the woman ſaid unto Joab, Behold, his head ſhall be thrown to thee over the wall.

22 Then the woman went unto all the people in her wiſdom. And they cut off the head of Sheba the ſon of Bichri, and caſt it out to Joab. And he blew a trumpet, and they retired from the city, every man to his tent. And Joab returned to Jeruſalem unto the king.

23 Now Joab was over all the hoſt of Iſrael: and Benaiah the ſon of Jehoiada was over the Cherethites, and over the Pelethites:

24 And Adoram was over the tribute: and Jehoſhaphat the ſon of Ahilud was recorder:

25 And Sheva was ſcribe: and Zadok and Abiathar were the prieſts:

26 And Ira alſo the Jairite was a chief ruler about David.

up the traitor, he would not injure them: and thus his head purchaſed the ſafety of the city, and terminated the rebellion. And Joab without fear, or ſhame, as if he gloried in revenging himſelf, as well as in ſerving the public, returned to David, as though nothing had happened. When he murdered Abner, he might have been dealt with, but he was now grown too powerful to be diſplaced.

V. 24. Adoram was, &c.] After a ſeaſon the voluntary contributions of the people had been converted into a regular ſubſidy; and the tribute from the conquered kingdoms rendered this new office neceſſary. (Ch. viii. v. 16—18.)

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.

We muſt expect one trial after another for our ſalutary chaſtiſement, till we reach the place where ſin and ſorrow are for ever excluded. Angry diſputants commonly miſunderſtand, or miſconſtrue one another's words: and proud men will either manage every thing their own way, or they will have nothing to do with any thing. When we are greatly enraged, we are apt to avenge ourſelves upon the innocent, and thoſe, whom we profeſs to love, inſtead of thoſe, who have affronted us. The favour of the many is no more to be depended on, than that of the great: and what indeed have others a right to expect, when "Hoſanna to the Son of David" was ſo ſoon changed into "Crucify him, crucify him?" However all appearance of partiality betwixt thoſe, who are equally related to us, or have an equal claim upon us, ought to be avoided: for it often excites diſcord in families, churches, and kingdoms. Many a vehement quarrel would ſpend it's fury in angry words, and then die away; if ſome man of Belial were not preſent, to ſound the trumpet of public and laſting contention. Satan, if permitted, will be ſure to excite ſuch ringleaders of diſſention: and God, in wiſe and holy ſovereignty, is pleaſed often to permit them, that he may execute vengeance, or inflict correction, according to his righteous purpoſes: hence nations are viſited with war and bloodſhed, and the church with peſtilent diviſions, and virulent controverſies. When immoderate and inexpedient proviſion is made for ſenſual gratification, it will ſurely iſſue in grief and ſhame: and obſcure retirement beſt ſuits thoſe, who are become infamous by ſin. The moſt powerful men cannot effect all they wiſh, or all, that they ſee to be right; nay they cannot attempt it without danger: for at laſt they can only do, what the many can be prevailed with to concur in. Conſequences ſhould be well weighed before important meaſures are adopted; for reſentment, and diſguſt are dangerous counſellors. Our inbred luſts, like able wicked men, are hardly dealt with, when they have acquired an habit of domineering: the beginning of evil is therefore in every thing to be deciſively reſiſted. By degrees men grow more, and more bold, and unfeeling in the commiſſion of crimes, until they vindicate, and glory in their villanies: and when ſuch daring offenders are actuated by ambition, or revenge, they will not be reſtrained by the ties of relation, or friendſhip; nay, they will employ the guiſe, and the language of love, to obtain the opportunity of perpetrating the moſt horrid crimes: but the more of contrivance, or of diſſimulation there is connected with malice, the deeper is its malignity. The murderer may conceal, or proſper in his ways for a ſeaſon, and may elude or outbrave the juſtice of man: but let him not expect to eſcape the vengeance of God. Vain are earthly diſtinctions and preferments, which excite ſo much greater envy, and enmity, without affording any additional ſecurity to man's uncertain life: may we be ambitious of that honour, which cometh from God only! Great abilities, ſtrong attachment to the intereſts of the public, and eminent ſervices performed with firmneſs, prudence, and clemency, conſtitute a great, but not always a good man: ſuch a perſon, being the ſlave of one imperious luſt, may violate every moral obligation, in order to it's indulgence; though ſuch treachery, cruelty and injuſtice "be far from "him," in other parts of his conduct. Wiſdom is not reſtricted to rank, or ſex; and it conſiſts not in extenſive knowledge, or ingenious ſpeculations; but in underſtanding how to act, as circumſtances ariſe, in order that calamities may be averted, and benefits may be ſecured, perſonal, relative, and public. Contending parties would often be reconciled, if they properly underſtood one another; hence the benefit of a prudent, and impartial mediation: and the juſt puniſhment of one atrocious criminal is often mercy to great numbers. Thus the ſinner perſiſts in his rebellion, till, through the Saviour's mediation, he perceives that his offended Lord ſeeks not his deſtruction, but that of his ſins: then he becomes willing that they

NOTES.

CHAP. XXI.] V. 1—2. There was, &c.] This famine ſeems not to have been very grievous, and the ſcarcity of the firſt, and ſecond year was not greatly regarded: but when it continued the third year alſo, David underſtood that it was a national judgment for ſome particular iniquity, and enquired of God wherefore he thus contended with them. We do not read in the hiſtory of Saul concerning the tranſaction, which was declared to be the cauſe of this calamity: but it ſeems that Saul, in order to increaſe the poſſeſſions of the people, attempted to extirpate the Gibeonites, as being of the ancient inhabitants of Canaan; though they had ſubmitted to, and quietly ſerved the Iſraelites, and were protected by the public faith, and a ſolemn oath ratifying a covenant of peace with them on thoſe terms; (Joſ. c. ix.) Yet he did not attempt to extirpate the Amalekites, Philiſtines, and other hoſtile nations, whom God commanded him to deſtroy. But theſe were able and determined to reſiſt, and could not be ſubdued without apparent danger, and difficulty; and the inoffenſive Gibeonites might be oppreſſed with eaſe, and apparent ſafety: and perhaps he diſliked them the more, for being peculiarly devoted to the ſervice of the prieſts, and the ſanctuary. (1 Sam. c. xxii. v. 17—19.) It ſeems that Saul's relations were diſpoſed to cruelty, as well as he; and concurred in this bloodſhed; and many Iſraelites had willingly aſſiſted in the perſecution. The violation of the oath of God, and the treachery to and murder of the Gibeonites, formed therefore an enormous load of national guilt, which had never been expiated by the puniſhment of the guilty: and it pleaſed God in this manner, and ſo long after, to proceed againſt the nation for it; to ſhew them his abhorrence of ſuch crimes; to teach their rulers to keep at a diſtance from ſimilar offences themſelves, and to puniſh them in others; and to intimate that the chief puniſhment of ſin is after the death of the offender. And he informed David of the cauſe of the viſitation; that he might take proper meaſures for expiating the national guilt.

V. 3—6.] As the Lord accepted of the expiation here required, we may ſuppoſe, that both the enquiry of David, and the anſwer of the Gibeonites, were directed by ſome open, or ſecret intimation from him. They demanded not their own liberty, or any acceſſion of wealth, or the death of any other Iſraelite: but that in the character of the avengers of the blood of their brethren, they might be permitted to put to death ſeven of Saul's deſcendants; whom they would "hang up unto the Lord," as a ſacrifice to his juſtice, and an example to others not to injure or oppreſs them. They were willing to undertake the trouble, and to bear the odium of the execution: and would do it in Saul's own city, as a warning to thoſe, who had witneſſed, or aſſiſted in the oppreſſion.

V. 7—8. Michal, &c.] Theſe ſeem to have been the ſons of Merab, whom Michal adopted, and brought up as her own, (1 Sam. c. xviii. v. 19.) David conſented to this meaſure in obedience to God, and for the public welfare, and not out of private reſentment; and therefore did not violate his oath to Saul: but as he could ſpare one at leaſt of Saul's deſcendants, his covenant, and oath of ſacred friendſhip with Jonathan, required the preſervation of his ſon, in preference to all the reſt.

the five ſons of Michal the daughter of Saul, whom ſhe brought up for Adriel the ſon of Barzillai the Meholathite:

9 And he delivered them into the hands of the Gibeonites, and they hanged them in the hill before the LORD: and they fell all ſeven together, and were put to death in the days of harveſt, in the firſt days, in the beginning of barley harveſt.

10 And Rizpah the daughter of Aiah took ſackcloth, and ſpread it for her upon the rock, from the beginning of harveſt until water dropped upon them out of heaven, and ſuffered neither the birds of the air to reſt on them by day, nor the beaſts of the field by night.

11 And it was told David what Rizpah the daughter of Aiah, the concubine of Saul, had done.

12 And David went and took the bones of Saul and the bones of Jonathan his ſon from the men of Jabeſh-gilead, which had ſtolen them from the ſtreet of Beth-ſhan, where the Philiſtines had hanged them, when the Philiſtines had ſlain Saul in Gilboa:

13 And he brought up from thence the bones of Saul and the bones of Jonathan his ſon; and they gathered the bones of them that were hanged.

14 And the bones of Saul and Jonathan his ſon buried they in the country of Benjamin in Zelah, in the ſepulchre of Kiſh his father: and they performed all that the king commanded. And after that God was entreated for the land.

15 Moreover the Philiſtines had yet war again with Iſrael; and David went down, and his ſervants with him, and fought againſt the Philiſtines: and David waxed faint.

16 And Iſhbi-benob, which was of the ſons of the giant, (the weight of whoſe ſpear weighed three hundred ſhekels of braſs in weight,) he being girded with a new ſword, thought to have ſlain David.

17 But Abiſhai the ſon of Zeruiah ſuccoured him, and ſmote the Philiſtine, and killed him. Then the men of David ſware unto him, ſaying, Thou ſhalt go no more out with us to battle, that thou quench not the light of Iſrael.

18 And it came to paſs after this, that there was again a battle with the Philiſtines at Gob: then Sibbechai the Huſhathite ſlew Saph, which was of the ſons of the giant.

19 And there was again a battle in Gob with the Philiſtines, where Elhanan the ſon of Jaare-oregim, a Beth-lehemite, ſlew the brother of Goliath the Gittite, the ſtaff of whoſe ſpear was like a weaver's beam.

20 And there was yet a battle in Gath, where was a man of great ſtature, that had

V. 9. They hanged, &c.] As they were hung up for an anathema, an accurſed thing, a national atonement to divine juſtice, they were to hang until ſome tokens of the Lord's reconciliation were afforded: and they were not within the meaning of the law againſt the bodies of malefactors, being left ſuſpended upon a tree all night: (Deut. c. xxi. v. 22, 23:) for that ſtatute meant, that they, who were put to death for breaking human laws, were not to be treated as "accurſed of God." And moreover the Lord may command that, in a particular caſe, which he prohibits in general: provided it be not intrinſically unjuſt. He might order the children to be put to death, for the parents crimes, though magiſtrates in general were forbidden to do it: becauſe all have deſerved worſe than temporal death at his hands, and there is an eternal ſtate of recompence for the manifeſtation of his juſtice. In like manner he might require, or allow of this treatment of theſe dead bodies, though in ſome reſpects contrary to the general rule.

V. 12—14. And David went, &c.] Though Rizpah improperly fed, and indulged her grief by this uſeleſs attention to the dead bodies; yet her caſe was truly pitiable: and David doubtleſs ſympathized with the bereaved and aged parent; and gladly embraced the opportunity, as ſoon as it was proper, of relieving her from her melancholy charge, by decently interring them, together with the bones of Saul and his other ſons: by this he avowed that he had not acted out of diſreſpect to Saul, or his family. The firſt rain, (ver. 10.) was a token of reconciliation; but after the expiation was finiſhed, the ſcarcity was removed in anſwer to prayer; and doubtleſs the Gibeonites joined, in ſeeking "this bleſſing for the inheritance of the "Lord," (v. 3.)

V. 15—23.] All theſe events ſeem to have occurred in the order here related, and towards the latter end of David's reign. The Philiſtines, though frequently vanquiſhed, were not totally ſubjugated: and the remains of the Anakims, of enormous ſize, and ſtrength, gave David, and his ſervants, not only an opportunity of ſignalizing their courage, but repeated proofs of the Lord's truth, and goodneſs. However David having been once in imminent danger, his life was deemed too valuable to Iſrael on every hand six fingers, and on every foot six toes, four-and-twenty in number; and he also was born to the giant.

21 And when he defied Israel, Jonathan the son of Shimeah the brother of David slew him.

22 These four were born to the giant in Gath, and fell by the hand of David, and by the hand of his servants.

CHAP. XXII.

Is nearly the same with the Eighteenth Psalm; and contains, 1st. The introduction, v. 1. 2d. David's professions of faith, and joy in God, v. 2, 3. 3d. His acknowledgment of the Lord's wonderful interpositions in his favour, v. 4—20. 4th. His avowal of his own integrity; and his declaration of the Lord's method of dealing with him, and with others, 21—28. 5th. Further celebrations of the praises of God for former mercies, and believing expectations of still, greater and more complete deliverances, &c. v. 29—51.

AND David spake unto the LORD the words of this song, in the day that the LORD had delivered him out of the hand to be any more exposed, now that his strength and activity began to fail him. For, as king, prophet, and psalmist, he was the "light of Israel," and a type of the light of the world.

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.

Every affliction arises from sin, and should excite us to repentance and humiliation before God: but some troubles loudly proclaim that they were sent to bring sin to remembrance. In this case, we prolong our sufferings, by neglecting self-examination and prayer to the Lord, to shew us wherein we have offended him, if the cause be not plain to our own consciences: and however reluctant we may be, we must come to this work before we can expect relief in mercy. Whilst the grand outlines of the Lord's government are evidently righteous, some of his judgments are too deep for us: but faith believes those divine appointments to be just, which assume a different appearance, and waits a brighter day for the display of the glory of God in them. By the punishment of children for the sins of their parents, and of subjects for those of their princes, even after their death, he marks his abhorrence of destructive crimes, gives enormous wickedness a check, and teaches us to pray for our rulers, and to refuse to be instruments of their vices, and to deny our passions out of love to our offspring: and he will take care that no individual shall in the event have cause to complain of injustice. That our guilty land should experience successive years of plenty, calls for our admiring gratitude: and we need not wonder, if our misused abundance should be punished with as great a scarcity: yet how few are disposed to enquire of the Lord in such cases concerning the sinful cause; whilst the ingenuity of numbers is employed in discovering the second causes, by which he is pleased to work! The Lord will plead the cause of those, who cannot or will not avenge themselves: and the prayers of the poor, either for or against us, are of vast efficacy. The blood of nobles is an atonement scanty enough to expiate the guilt of the murder of the meanest person, that the wrath of God may be averted from the land: and violated oaths, and covenants will be severely punished, either in this world or the next, let the criminal be ever so highly exalted amongst his fellow creatures. Our zeal, either for the public good, or the supposed cause of religion, is naturally exercised in a perverse manner, and as if in contempt of God's commandments: but an apparently easy and safe exertion, which consists with our self-indulgence, and flatters our pride and lusts, is the temptation that prevails against us: unless the grace of God teach us a better way. Little do we know what may befal our children, or what anguish they may occasion us: but if we educate them in the fear of God, and commit them to his keeping, he will either exempt us from heavy trials about them, or support us under them. In every case resignation to the will of God is our duty and interest; and whatever cherishes inordinate grief, is sinful and tormenting, however specious it's aspect may be. All personal respects must yield to the commandment of God: yet in subordination to it a tribute of gratitude is due to the memory of our friends, and of respect to our civil governors. Whilst we are able, we ought to venture and labour for the public welfare: but we cannot exceed our appointed measure of service; and when bodily vigour fails, some are so useful by their counsels, prayers, and examples, that their lives should be taken care of, as a public blessing. Strength, and courage often increase men's pride; but more frequently hasten, than retard the stroke of death; whose unexpected approach, miserably causes all their vain thoughts to perish. The valour, and affection of friends should be acknowledged, and the strongest need the assistance of the more feeble: but the glory in every thing belongs to God. Through the atonement of Jesus, who performed all that was commanded, and through his intercession, the Lord is willingly entreated for sinners: and the believer, having peace with God, need not fear the stoutest foe, who defies his Israel; for though sometimes he be in apparent danger, he will at length be more than conqueror.

NOTES.

CHAP. XXII. V 1. In the day, &c.] This song of praise was probably composed early in the reign of David, and soon after he was finally delivered from the persecuting rage of Saul. And perhaps we have it in this place, as it was found amongst those compositions, which he used in his private devotions: and in the book of Psalms, it stands as it was corrected and delivered to the chief singer, to be sung in the public service of the sanctuary; from time to time, upon occasion of recent deliverances, as well as in remembrance of former mercies. The variations are immaterial, and but few of them need be noted in the exposition of it. That, which is the first verse of this chapter, forms the title of the eighteenth psalm, with some alteration; the most reof all his enemies, and out of the hand of Saul.

2 And he ſaid, The LORD is my rock, and my fortreſs, and my deliverer;

3 The God of my rock, in him will I truſt: he is my ſhield, and the horn of my ſalvation, my high tower, and my refuge, my Saviour; thou ſaveſt me from violence.

4 I will call on the LORD, who is worthy to be praiſed: ſo ſhall I be ſaved from mine enemies.

5 When the waves of death compaſſed me, the floods of ungodly men made me afraid;

6 The ſorrows of hell compaſſed me about; the ſnares of death prevented me;

7 In my diſtreſs I called upon the LORD, and cried to my God: and he did hear my voice out of his temple, and my cry did enter into his ears.

8 Then the earth ſhook and trembled; the foundations of heaven moved and ſhook, becauſe he was wroth.

9 There went up a ſmoke out of his noſtrils, and fire out of his mouth devoured: coals were kindled by it.

10 He bowed the heavens alſo, and came down; and darkneſs was under his feet.

11 And he rode upon a cherub, and did fly: and he was ſeen upon the wings of the wind.

12 And he made darkneſs pavilions round about him, dark waters, and thick clouds of the ſkies.

13 Through the brightneſs before him were coals of fire kindled.

14 The LORD thundered from heaven, and the moſt High uttered his voice.

15 And he ſent out arrows, and ſcattered them; lightning, and diſcomfited them.

16 And the channels of the ſea appeared, the foundations of the world were diſcovered, markable of which is, the inſertion of the words, "Th "ſervant of the Lord," in which the pſalmiſt deemed himſelf more honoured, than in being a renowned conqueror, and a very proſperous king. He had had many enemies, both amongſt his own people; and the ſurrounding nations; but Saul eſpecially is mentioned, being the moſt formidable, malicious, and unwearied of them. In the whole of this ſacred hymn, David ſeems principally to celebrate providential deliverances: yet he uſed language, which may well be accommodated to ſpiritual bleſſings. He appears alſo primarily to ſpeak of the Lord's dealings with himſelf; yet he was led by the prophetic ſpirit to ſpeak thoſe things, which may, with great propriety, be applied to the Redeemer; of whom he was an evident and remarkable type.

V. 2, 3. The Lord is, &c.] The eighteenth pſalm abruptly begins, "I will love thee, O Lord my ſtrength:" which words ſeem to have been added, when it was made public, as an expreſſion of David's exulting gratitude, in order to kindle the devotions of the people. The accumulation of metaphors, that is here uſed, as deſcriptive of David's expectations from God, which had been fully anſwered, denotes, that thoſe energetic figures of ſpeech, which commonly exceed the bounds of ſober truth, are all too feeble to expreſs what God is to, and doeth for his believing people. He is a rock, on which ſecurely to build their confidence; a refuge, in which to ſhelter themſelves from every foe, and in every trouble: a fortreſs, and a ſtrong tower, which are formed by human art and labour, to ſupply the want of, or give greater ſecurity to the natural fortifications of rocks and mountains: a ſhield to ward off every hoſtile aſſault; a horn wherewith to puſh, and proſtrate every aſſailant: for the Lord is a Deliverer, and a Saviour, and Salvation itſelf, from every evil and danger, to which the true believer is expoſed, who cannot but be ſafe and comfortable, when exerciſing faith in, and dependance on him. Several expreſſions, as "The God "of my rock," and "the horn of my ſalvation," ſeem to refer to the perſon of the Redeemer, God manifeſted in the fleſh, become the ſalvation of his people, and in human nature diſplaying divine power and authority in the redemption of ſinners, and the deſtruction of their enemies.

V. 5, 6.] Theſe verſes contain a figurative and poetical deſcription of the violence of David's enemies, and the imminent danger, to which he was expoſed. The fear and "ſorrows" of death ſeemed ready to ſwallow him up, as the waves of the ſea overwhelm thoſe, who are caſt into them: Multitudes of wicked men preſſed upon him with incumbent force, like the riſing floods, from which there appears no deliverance: nay, the temptations of ſatan, and the conſciouſneſs of his ſins, filled him with fears of wrath, and dreadful apprehenſions of future conſequences: and he felt like a malefactor bound for execution, whoſe fetters prevent him from attempting an eſcape, for whoſe body the grave hath certainly opened her mouth, and who is horribly alarmed, leſt the pit of hell ſhould ſwallow up his ſoul. In ſhort, he was like the helpleſs bird caught in the fowler's ſnare, and doomed to inevitable death. All this ſeems to be implied in the expreſſions here employed, ſome of which may hereafter be more particularly conſidered.

V. 7—16. In my diſtreſs, &c.] When every other hope failed him, the Pſalmiſt ſimply and earneſtly ſought help from God, whoſe manifeſted preſence, in the ſanctuary above the mercy-ſeat, repreſented his tabernacling in human nature as God our Saviour, as well as his exalted diſplay of his glorious preſence in his holy temple in heaven. Thither his prayers aſcended, and thence were they anſwered in a moſt effectual manner. As we are not informed, that the Lord delivered David by ſuch external diſplays as are here mentioned; it is ſuppoſed that he

at the rebuking of the LORD, at the blaſt of the breath of his noſtrils.

17 He ſent from above, he took me; he drew me out of many waters;

18 He delivered me from my ſtrong enemy, and from them that hated me: for they were too ſtrong for me.

19 They prevented me in the day of my calamity; but the LORD was my ſtay.

20 He brought me forth alſo into a large place: he delivered me, becauſe he delighted in me.

21 The LORD rewarded me according to my righteouſneſs: according to the cleanneſs of my hands hath he recompenſed me.

22 For I have kept the ways of the LORD, and have not wickedly departed from my God.

23 For all his judgments were before me: and as for his ſtatutes, I did not depart from them.

24 I was alſo upright before him, and have kept myſelf from mine iniquity.

25 Therefore the LORD hath recompenſed me according to my righteouſneſs; according to my cleanneſs in his eye ſight.

26 With the merciful thou wilt ſhew thyſelf merciful, and with the upright man thou wilt ſhew thyſelf upright.

27 With the pure thou wilt ſhew thyſelf pure; and with the froward thou wilt ſhew thyſelf unſavoury.

28 And the afflicted people thou wilt ſave: but thine eyes are upon the haughty, that thou mayeſt bring them down.

adorned his ſacred poem with ſublime images, taken from the hiſtory of Iſrael in Egypt, at the Red ſea, at Mount Sinai, in the wilderneſs, and in the conqueſt of Canaan: and thereby intimated, that his deliverances were as honourable to God, as thoſe of old vouchſafed to his people, though effected in a different manner. The earthquake, the ſhaking as it were of the foundations of the heavens, the ſmoke, the fire, and the darkneſs, into which the Lord came down, and in which he majeſtically dwelt, with ſeveral other expreſſions, lead our thoughts to Mount Sinai. His riding upon a cherub, &c, denote the miniſtration of angels, that he employed, and the ſpeed with which he effected the deliverance of his ſervant: the coals of fire being kindled at his preſence, may indicate that the wrath of God arms all creatures againſt his enemies; or that it will conſume them, as fuel is conſumed by the fire; other circumſtances recal to our remembrance the dividing of the Red ſea, and of the river Jordan; the deſtruction of the Canaanites, when the hailſtones deſtroyed more than the ſword of Iſrael; and that of the Philiſtines, when the Lord thundered upon, and diſcomfited them, &c. And the whole declared that the indignation of the Lord againſt the enemies of his ſervant equalled his diſpleaſure againſt thoſe adverſaries of his people; and that their conſternation and deſtruction were no leſs, than theirs had been.

V. 17, 18.] David's deliverance from his ſtrongeſt enemy, when he was ready to devour him, by the providential interpoſition of God, was like ſending from heaven on purpoſe to take him out of great waters, into which he muſt otherwiſe have ſunk and periſhed: for his enemies were too ſtrong for him, and therefore his deliverance was evidently the work of God.

V. 19. They prevented, &c.] When David had framed any plan for ſecreting, or ſecuring himſelf in the day of his calamity, his enemies employed every method of treachery and malice to prevent his ſucceſs: thus the men of Keilah were ready to deliver him to Saul, and the Ziphites repeatedly informed of him: and therefore, notwithſtanding his own prudence and activity, he muſt have been cut off, if the Lord himſelf had not in a very remarkable manner protected him.

V. 20. A large place, &c.] He had been ſtraitened in dens and caves, as in a priſon, and was afraid to walk abroad in the open air: but now, through the Lord's goodneſs, he might walk at liberty, whitherſoever he would: or this may refer to the extent of his dominions, and the greatneſs of his proſperity, compared with his former difficulties. All this the Lord had done for him, "becauſe he "delighted in him" as the object of his ſpecial love, and a partaker of his ſanctifying grace; and in the general tenor of his conduct, a man "after his own heart."

V. 21—28.] In the ſeveral events of David's life, his character had been grievouſly aſperſed, and many heinous things laid to his charge: but his conduct had been upright and conſcientious in an uncommon degree. In all his perſecutions by Saul, he would not injure him or his party; and he embraced every occaſion to ſerve the cauſe of Iſrael, though rewarded by envy, treachery, and ingratitude: and in the other calamities, which he endured, he was hated without a cauſe, and was always ready to overcome evil with good. He perſevered under every diſcouragement to adhere to the worſhip of God, and out of the fear and love of his name, to act with equity, candour, and kindneſs to man: not renouncing his religion, or allowing himſelf in ſin; but making the commandments of God his rule, and the glory of God his aim, in the habitual courſe of his conduct, in an unreſerved and upright manner. This the heart-ſearching God could witneſs; and this his conſcience teſtified: and every providential deliverance was both a gracious recompence of, and a divine atteſtation to his innocence, from thoſe crimes of which his enemies accuſed him; and that his cauſe was more righteous than theirs. He mentioned particularly, "That he had kept "himſelf from his own iniquity;" from that ſin, or thoſe ſins, to which he was moſt ſtrongly and conſtantly tempted: and his care and watchfulneſs in this reſpect was a good evidence of his ſincerity. He had indeed committed many ſins, and ſome of them very grievous, and he was con-

29 For

29 For thou art my lamp, O LORD: and the LORD will lighten my darkneſs.

30 For by thee I have run through a troop: by my God have I leaped over a wall.

31 As for God, his way is perfect; the word of the LORD is tried: he is a buckler to all them that truſt in him.

32 For who is God, ſave the LORD? and who is a rock, ſave our God?

33 God is my ſtrength and power: and he maketh my way perfect.

34 He maketh my feet like hinds feet; and ſetteth me upon my high places.

35 He teacheth my hands to war; ſo that a bow of ſteel is broken by mine arms.

36 Thou haſt alſo given me the ſhield of thy ſalvation: and thy gentleneſs hath made me great.

37 Thou haſt enlarged my ſteps under me; ſo that my feet did not ſlip.

38 I have purſued mine enemies, and deſtroyed them; and turned not again until I had conſumed them.

39 And I have conſumed them, and wounded them, that they could not ariſe: yea, they are fallen under my feet.

40 For thou haſt girded me with ſtrength to battle: them that roſe up againſt me haſt thou ſubdued under me.

41 Thou haſt alſo given me the necks of mine enemies, that I might deſtroy them that hate me.

42 They looked, but there was none to ſave; even unto the LORD, but he anſwered them not.

43 Then did I beat them as ſmall as the ſcious of manifold imperfections, (which the review of the book of pſalms will ſufficiently demonſtrate:) but he neither denied, excuſed, or perſiſted in them: on the contrary, he had been deeply humbled for, and repented of them; and was in that reſpect alſo conſcious of his uprightneſs in the ſight of God. This profeſſion therefore hath nothing to do with the manner, in which David was juſtified in the ſight of God, nor was it intended as a vindication of every part of his conduct; or a ſelf-confident boaſt, as if he needed not forgiveneſs: but it was the ſame conſciouſneſs of general integrity that every true believer poſſeſſes, and may on ſome occaſions avow, as an evidence of God's favour, and an anſwer to unmerited reproach, conſiſtent with the deepeſt humility, and the moſt entire dependance on the mercy and grace of God, through Jeſus Chriſt. And the gracious recompence, which David ſpake of, may be generally expected by thoſe, who act conſcientiouſly in the ſight of God, from right motives; for it is the Lord's method of dealing with the profeſſors of his truth: if he ſees them humble, ſincere, teachable, watchful, loving, pure, and obedient in their diſpoſition, aim, and general conduct; he will be merciful, and kind to them, and will fulfil his gracious promiſes, and communicate his holy conſolations to them: but if he ſees them diſſembling or perverſe, "he will wreſtle with them," as it may be tranſlated: eſpecially he will ſave thoſe who are poor in ſpirit, and ſuffer perſecution for his ſake; but with his wrath he will frown upon proud oppreſſors to bring them down.

V. 29, 30.] David's way was intricate, dangerous, and gloomy; but the preſence and favour of the Lord was a lamp unto him, marking out his path, and chearing him, whilſt he walked therein. By his help alſo he had ſingly broken through whole armies of his enemies; and leaped over every wall, that ſeemed to render his eſcape or his ſucceſs impracticable.

V. 31—33.] From experience he could teſtify that the Lord's word was a ſufficient ſecurity for every needed or expected deliverance: all the methods of his providence and grace had been in perfect wiſdom, juſtice, truth, and goodneſs: none other could be in any degree depended on; for Jehovah is God alone: they who truſt in, and ſerve him, are perfectly ſafe: and whatever ſtedfaſtneſs and integrity he had before ſpoken of, as marked in his own conduct, the glory of them belonged unto God, by whoſe ſtrength he had been upheld, and preſerved from falling.

V. 34, 35. Like hinds feet, &c.] As theſe animals climb the craggy rocks, and ſtand firm upon the ſlippery ſummit of the precipice: ſo David had been upheld in the moſt dangerous and ſlippery paths by the Lord's providence and grace; and advanced to his preſent exalted ſtation: and his extraordinary ſkill, and ſtrength were to be aſcribed to the ſame cauſe.

V. 36.] Thy gentleneſs, &c.] The rebukes, corrections, and inſtructions, which the Lord intermixed with his merciful forgiveneſſes, encouragements, and deliverances, like the gentle tuition of a kind parent, tended to prepare David for, and to advance him to his eſtate of proſperity and authority.

V. 42. Even unto the Lord, &c.] In their extreme diſtreſs, David's enemies are repreſented as crying to the Lord for ſucceſs in their unrighteous cauſe, or deliverance from impending ruin; but not in repentance, faith, and integrity, and therefore in vain. Thus Saul enquired of the Lord, and he anſwered him not.

V. 43—46.] Theſe verſes may refer to David's victories over his rebellious countrymen, and the ſurrounding nations; and to the deſolations, that he made amongſt them: this he might conſider as the earneſt of ſtill more deciſive advantages; until the ſpirits of all his adverſaries ſhould fail, and their ſtrength decay; and the ſtrongeſt of them ſhould tremble even in their faſtneſſes and fortified cities, and ſurrender themſelves to him to be his ſervants upon the firſt ſummons. But here the Spirit of inſpiration ſeems eſpecially to have carried his mind forward to the glorious kingdom of the Redeemer, the deſtruction of all his ene-duſt of the earth, I did ſtamp them as the mire of the ſtreet, and did ſpread them abroad.

44 Thou alſo haſt delivered me from the ſtrivings of my people, thou haſt kept me to be head of the heathen: a people which I knew not ſhall ſerve me.

45 Strangers ſhall ſubmit themſelves unto me: as ſoon as they hear, they ſhall be obedient unto me.

46 Strangers ſhall fade away, and they ſhall be afraid out of their cloſe places.

47 The LORD liveth; and bleſſed be my rock; and exalted be the God of the rock of my ſalvation.

48 It is God that avengeth me, and that bringeth down the people under me, 49 And that bringeth me forth from mine enemies: thou alſo haſt lifted me up on high above them that roſe up againſt me: thou haſt delivered me from the violent man.

50 Therefore I will give thanks unto thee, O LORD, among the heathen, and I will ſing praiſes unto thy name.

51 He is the tower of ſalvation for his king: and ſheweth mercy to his anointed, unto David, and to his ſeed for evermore.

mies, and the prevalency of his cauſe on earth. And whilſt he concluded with the high praiſes of God, and exulting joy in him; he looked forward to his poſterity, and rejoiced in the proſpect of the bleſſings reſerved for them, not only as kings of Judah for many ſucceſſive generations; but alſo in Chriſt, the anointed King of the church and of the world, for evermore; yea, even for ever and ever.

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.

When we have received mercies from God, we ſhould, without delay, render him our tribute of praiſe and gratitude; and every recent favour ſhould be acknowledged with thankful remembrance of former deliverances: and ſignal interpoſitions of the Lord in our behalf ought to be publicly celebrated, with the beſt endowments that we poſſeſs. They, who know the Lord in his glorious perfections, and the various relations, in which he ſtands to his rational creatures; and eſpecially as a God of ſalvation; and who thereby learn to fear, truſt in, love, and ſerve him, chooſing his favour for their portion, and waiting for his mercy unto eternal life, through Jeſus Chriſt, according to the covenant which he mediated, may expect from him every conceivable bleſſing. Nay, words can never expreſs, or creation afford objects ſufficient to repreſent all, that the Lord is, and will be to them, through time, and to eternity. The more they expect and aſk from him in humble faith, the more they ſhall receive, and every paſt experience ſhall encourage and dictate further ſupplications: and all this felicity is propoſed to every ſinner who deſires, and will apply for ſuch important bleſſings in the name of the exalted Redeemer. But though this ſecurity and felicity belong to all true believers; yet frequently both the events of Providence, and their inward experience ſeem to indicate the contrary. They are aſſailed by powerful enemies, and expoſed to manifold troubles and dangers from without: they are diſquieted by diſtreſſing fears, and terrors of conſcience from within: whilſt ſatan pours in his horrible ſuggeſtions to aggravate their diſtreſs, and to urge them to deſpair: thus they feel, as it were, the very pains of hell, and are ſo bound in the ſnares of death, that they are ready to give up their lives and ſouls for loſt. But in their extreme diſtreſs they will cry unto the Lord with the greater earneſtneſs, and he will ſupport them, and appear for their relief: and all their ſorrows and fears ſhall iſſue in the diſplay of the glory of God's perfections, and in the evidence of his ſpecial love to them: they ſhall all exerciſe and increaſe their grace, and prepare the way for their future comforts: and they ſhall all become the ſubject of triumphant praiſe and thankſgiving; and however painful now, they ſhall hereafter be delightful in the retroſpect. Therefore when temptations and tribulations abound, and our prayers are mingled with groans and fears, with diſmay, and anguiſh of ſpirit; let us not deſpond, but be of good courage; for we ſhall certainly bleſs God for them ere long, as many before us have done for ſimilar or ſeverer trials. Without renewing the miraculous diſplays, with which Iſrael of old was favoured, the true believer, comparing his dangers, fears, prayers, and deliverances, may be as ſenſibly aſſured, that the Lord hath wrought for him, as ever they were: and that he hath not only made his angels and other creatures the miniſters of good to him; but that his own hand hath effected the ſurpriſing change, which he hath experienced, in his condition, his character, his hopes, and his proſpects. Nor are the judgments of God leſs terrible now upon the enemies of his people, than they were, when the earth ſwallowed them up, the depths of the ſea overwhelmed them, or the fire of the Lord conſumed them: though they are leſs noticed, becauſe more ſpiritual, and chiefly executed in the eternal world. Still the whole creation fights againſt them, yea, his own almighty arm is lifted up to deſtroy them, as well as to deliver thoſe who truſt in him. Under reproaches, and perſecutions, the teſtimony of our conſcience to our integrity and ſincerity, in our religious profeſſion, will prove a ſingular ſupport: and it perfectly conſiſts with the deepeſt humility and the moſt ſimple dependance upon the Saviour, (2 Cor. c. i. v. 12:) Nor can we without it expect the witneſs of the comforting Spirit of God. We ſhould therefore exerciſe ourſelves to have a conſcience void of offence towards God and man: and, earneſtly ſeeking the ſupporting and ſanctifying grace of God, we ſhould ſteadily perſevere in his ways, notwithſtanding diſcouragements and temptations to ſeek relief by turning aſide. We muſt keep all God's ſtatutes and judgments before our eyes, (without excepting or deſpiſing one of them,) that we may regulate our conduct and converſation by them: and we muſt watch and pray, eſpecially againſt thoſe ſins which, by conſtitution, cuſtom, or circumſtances, may be called "our own iniquity." When we are betrayed into sin, we must, without delay, humble ourselves before God, and seek his pardoning mercy and recovering grace: and then even our falls, or our manifold infirmities, whilst we allow ourselves in no known sin, and neglect no known duty, shall not durably break our peace, nor interrupt this testimony of our conscience: and the Lord will plead our cause, and clear up our characters in due season: for he will deal with us according as we walk before him in humility and sincerity, or the contrary; both with respect to the dispensations of his providence, and the consolations of his Spirit. In the darkest seasons the Lord will guide and comfort those, who trust in and follow him: of the millions, who have tried his word, none ever complained that he was unfaithful: but all have been so assisted, that they have at length wondered at what the Lord had enabled them to do, as well as what he had done for them. Without him all other helpers are vain; with him they are needless, except he pleases to work by them, who could as readily work without them. All our talents and abilities are from him; and all our improvement of them. Whatever services we have performed, or however consistent our walk hath been, the will and the power were from God: he is our strength, who maketh our way perfect. Our ability and success in our spiritual warfare, our liberty from sin and satan, and enlargement of heart in God's service, and our preservation in the slippery paths of this ensnaring world, are causes of thankfulness to him, and not of glorying in ourselves. His gentle rebukes and corrections tend to real advancement, as much as our comforts and prosperity. Armed with the shield of salvation, and the sword of the Spirit, the Christian soldier, being strong in the Lord, will pursue his victories, till he hath trodden upon the necks of all his enemies, and received the conqueror's crown. For the Lord liveth, as the God of strength and salvation, and will never leave us nor forsake us, till he hath brought us forth from all our enemies, and lifted us up on high, and above all, that rose up against us. In the prospect of that complete salvation, let us praise and rejoice in him upon the field of battle, surrounded with our enemies, and in the midst of our conflicts: and ere long we shall adore him, and sing praises to his name in more exalted strains, and surrounded with the millions of the redeemed, and innumerable multitudes of holy angels, who will triumph in our victories, and rejoice in our felicity. But we may here likewise discern the Redeemer's sufferings, and the glory which was to follow: for our sins he was encompassed with the waves of death, the floods of ungodly men, and the very sorrows of hell, in the garden, and on the cross. In his distress he called upon the Lord, and was heard, and was raised from the dead, and exalted to the throne of glory in heaven: whilst his death was attended by the most stupendous displays of the divine abhorrence of their guilt, who crucified the Lord of glory. In him the Father delighted, his righteousness was perfect, yea, divine; he was justified from the blasphemies of his enemies by his resurrection and ascension. All power in heaven and earth are in his hands: all enemies shall be put under his feet, and he will destroy all those, that hate him. He hath been delivered from the strivings of the people, and made the Head of the heathen: he continually receives the submissions of those who hear of him, and willingly obey him: and many pretend submission, who have no love for him, out of fear of his power: but all opposition shall at length melt away before him, and all nations shall do him service. For he is the anointed King, whom the Father hath placed upon the throne of glory, and his kingdom is an everlasting kingdom, and all dominions shall serve and obey him: (Dan. c. vii. v. 27.) May we then accept of his salvation, and submit to his authority; may we now follow him, bearing our cross; that, when he shall appear for judgment, we also may receive a crown of glory, that fadeth not away!

NOTES.

CHAP. XXIII.] V. 1, 2. The last words, &c.] As many things are after this recorded concerning David, it is not agreed in what sense these were his last words. Some suppose them to have been the last words, that he spake by inspiration, and, as it were, an appendix to the Psalms, which he composed. But perhaps he repeated them in his dying moments, as the expression of his faith and hope, and the source of his consolations. The last words of eminent persons have often been much attended to, and long remembered: these words of David were peculiarly worthy of regard, for the excellency of them; and shew, that when dying, this venerable servant of God was more than ever assured of the reality, and excellency of true religion; decided in his judgment concerning, and his choice of it's blessings; and animated with humble gratitude, and joyful expectation of his approaching felicity. In the introduction he mentioned his humble birth, and unexpected exaltation with thankfulness. God had raised him to a throne, and made him very successful and prosperous: but the most valued circumstance of his advancement was, that he was the anointed of God, to rule over his own people Jacob, and to be the type of the Messiah. Nor was he less thankful for being made "the sweet Psalmist "of Israel;" for being employed, and enabled to compose hymns of praise, and sacred poems, for the use of his people, and of the church of God in all future ages; and moreover to set them to music, and provide for the public performance of this delightful part of God's worship. And no wonder that the work was well done to the glory of God, and the edification, and comfort of his people, "for "the Spirit of the Lord spake by him, and his word was "in his tongue." This he declared with his dying lips, that Iſrael, and that we, through ſucceſſive generations, might learn how to eſtimate that part of holy Scripture.

V. 3—5.] Some obſerve that there is in this paſſage a plain intimation of a Trinity of perſons in the Godhead. "The Spirit of the Lord;" "the God of Iſrael," and "the Rock of Iſrael," or the Son of God, the gracious Redeemer, the Rock of Salvation. Not only did the Spirit of the Lord ſpeak by the mouth of his ſervant David; but the Lord "ſpake to him;" and he hath here recorded his words, with his own meditations upon them. The former part may either be interpreted of David, or of Chriſt: ſhewing what he ought to be and do, and how to inſtruct his ſon Solomon, &c. and what the promiſed Saviour would be, and do. "He that ruleth over men" ſhould treat them as reaſonable creatures, and as his equals by nature; and therefore "muſt be juſt," oppreſſing, and injuring none, and by an equal adminiſtration of juſtice, reſtraining them from defrauding, or doing wrong to one another; and by his example and influence promoting general equity among the people: "ruling in "the fear of God," as his ſubject, and accountable to him for the authority deputed to him, and the uſe that he makes of it; obſerving his commandments, aiming at his acceptance, fearing his diſpleaſure, and ſubſerving the intereſts of true religion. Such rulers may reaſonably expect, that the Lord will proſper them, and afford them bleſſings, and comforts, like the exhilerating light of the unclouded morning ſun: whilſt their ſalutary regulations, diſcountenancing every ſpecies of evil, and protecting, and advancing every good thing, would diffuſe the moſt important advantages, temporal, and ſpiritual all around; as the riſing ſun diſpels the fogs, and damps, and brightens, and chears the face of nature: or as his clear ſhining after refreſhing ſhowers, rapidly promotes vegetation, and renders the earth luxuriantly fruitful. Upon the conſideration of theſe words of God to him, David turned his reflections home upon himſelf, and his family: and he could not but regret, that "his houſe was not ſo with God," as was therein deſcribed, and required. Not without much blame of his own neglect, and miſconduct, his family had been, and was much leſs religious, and proſperous, than might have been expected; and both he, and Iſrael had ſuffered many things in conſequence. Many grievous, and ſcandalous things bad occurred: matters were not yet as he could wiſh; and he had his fears concerning his deſcendants, who would ſucceed him in the kingdom. Perhaps by prophetic monition, he foreſaw, that they would not be happy themſelves, bleſſings to Iſrael, nor inſtruments of God's glory, in that meaſure, that he deſired. However he comforted himſelf, that "the Lord "had made with him an everlaſting covenant." God had covenanted to David that his family ſhould ſucceed him in the kingdom, (c. vii. Pſalm lxxxix:) but this was not "all his ſalvation, and all his deſire;" and could give him but an inferior conſolation in his dying moments, except as it referred to the promiſed ſeed, who was to deſcend from him. By the "everlaſting covenant made "with him" David doubtleſs principally intended the Covenant of Mercy, and Peace, which the Lord had made with him as a ſinner, who believed in the promiſed Saviour, who had embraced the proffered bleſſings, who had yielded up himſelf to the Lord, to be his redeemed ſervant, and had been made partaker of his ſanctifying grace, as the ſeal and pledge of it. This covenant was from everlaſting in the purpoſes of God, and ſhall be to everlaſting in the bleſſed effects of it. From age to age ſinners are admitted to ſhare it's benefits in the ſame free, and gracious manner: believers ſhall for ever enjoy it's bleſſings; and God the Father, Son, and Holy Ghoſt ſhall for ever be glorified through it, in their ſalvation. This covenant is made with the ſurety, in behalf of thoſe, for whom he engaged, and all the bleſſings of it were purchaſed with his atoning blood, and freely beſtowed upon all, who believe in his name; and through him it is made with every one, who applies for it's bleſſings in the appointed way; and ſecures to him pardon, righteouſneſs, grace, and eternal life, as the gift of God through Jeſus Chriſt. It is "ordered in all things, and ſure:" For in the perſon, undertaking, and mediation of the Saviour, effectual proviſion is made for the manifeſtation of the divine holineſs, the ſatisfaction of the divine juſtice, the honour of the divine law, and the diſcovery of the evil and deſert of ſin. Whilſt the mercy of God abounds in the forgiveneſs, and ſalvation of the chief of ſinners; there is an infinite fulneſs of grace, and all the bleſſings, that a ſinner can want, treaſured up in Chriſt, for the ſupply of thoſe, who ſeek for this ſalvation: a way opened to the mercy ſeat of God, in which they may come in humble confidence; ordinances appointed, through which theſe bleſſings are communicated, invitations to draw near, and exceeding great and precious promiſes to plead with God. All thoſe things, which in one reſpect are commanded, in another are alſo promiſed; and whilſt we pray for the performance of the promiſe, we are enabled to obey the command, to repent, to forſake ſin, to turn to God, and to walk in newneſs of life. Proviſion is in this covenant made for the forgiveneſs of ſin, and the recovery of thoſe, who have walked inconſiſtent with it, in the moſt diſgraceful manner: and yet no encouragement is given to commit ſin, but the moſt effectual methods are uſed to deter men from it, and conſtrain them to all holy obedience; (1 John c. ii. v. 1—3.) whilſt the believer perſeveres in love, and humble obedience, his evidence will be bright, and his comforts ſtrong; ſlackneſs will induce darkneſs, and diſcouragement: more direct offences will cauſe fear to poſſeſs the heart, and by inward terrors, and outward rebukes, and ſevere repeated corrections, the Lord will bring the back-ſlider home again with weeping, and ſupplication. In proportion as love declines, fear increaſes; "for God will put his fear into "his people's hearts, that they ſhall not depart from him;" (Jer. c. xxxii. v. 40.) As for that confidence of their good eſtate, and final ſalvation, which many poſſeſs upon evangelical principles, whilſt they take encouragement from them to continue in ſin; it is no better than a horrible deluſion of ſatan, and a deteſtable abuſe of the ſacred truths of God's word. But this covenant is "ordered in all "things, and ſure," in ſuch a manner, that no true believer can want wiſdom, grace, or ſtrength ſufficient for him, whatever his conflicts, temptations, or difficulties may be: and he ſhall either perſevere in an uniform courſe of holy obedience, or be brought to deep, and evident repentance of his miſconduct; and ſhall infallibly at length inherit eternal life. This covenant was "all David's "ſalvation;" for he was ſo well acquainted with the holy character, and law of God, and of the evil of ſin, and his own ſinfulneſs in every thing, that he knew he could not eſcape condemnation, according to the covenant of works: he perceived what was ſuitable to, and ſufficient for his caſe, in this ſalvation; and that it was framed to honour God; to humble and encourage the ſinner; to inſpire love, and gratitude; and to bring him to a holy, and happy diſpoſition of mind, and to prepare him for, and admit him to that ſtate of complete felicity, in which all the powers of the human ſoul ſhall be eternally ſatisfied. This covenant was therefore "all his deſire:" in compariſon with it, all earthly objects loſt their attractions; he was willing to renounce them, whilſt he lived, as far as required, for the ſake of the bleſſings of the covenant; his comfort, whilſt he poſſeſſed them, was derived from it, not from them; and he was willing to die and leave all elſe, that he might enjoy it's full felicity. (Pſalm lxxiii. v. 24—28.) This he was conſcious of: and yet he complained, that matters were not with his ſoul, any more than with his houſe, as he could wiſh, which ſeems the meaning of the words "although he make it not to grow." The grace of the covenant he had received, but it had not been made to increaſe, and flouriſh, in that meaſure, that he deſired. Still the prevalence of ſinful propenſities, and the weakneſs of his faith, hope, and love were his grief and burden: the Lord had not "made them to grow;" in which David never meant to impeach God's wiſdom, juſtice, and goodneſs; he had good reaſons for what he withheld, as well as for what he gave; and doubtleſs David would have allowed that his own inattention, and ſlackneſs in the uſe of appointed means were the criminal cauſe, that his grace had not more been made to grow. But the hope that it would ere long be perfected in glory animated, and encouraged him in his dying moments. However ſome interpret the paſſage of Jeſus Chriſt, almoſt excluſively, and it will in many things apply to him, the anointed king over Iſrael, and the ruler over all men, of whom David was a type. He is not only righteous, and requires righteouſneſs of his ſubjects; but he is the righteouſneſs, and ſanctification of all true believers: the promotion of the fear of God amongſt men is the grand deſign of his kingdom: his truth, and mercy, his favour, and grace, are the light, comfort, and cauſe of fruitfulneſs to all, who partake of them; and the bleſſings of his government are inexpreſſible, and ſhall be eternal. The kingdom of David's family was not ſo with God in any other period, as under this his covenanted ſeed: foreſeen by faith, he, as the ſurety of the everlaſting covenant, was all David's ſalvation, and deſire; though his coming was diſtant, and his cauſe of truth and righteouſneſs did not proſper in Iſrael, nor even in the prophet's own heart, as he moſt earneſtly deſired that they might.

V. 6, 7. But the ſons, &c.] They, who oppoſed David's authority, and that of his deſcendants, were worthleſs and troubleſome; and would be certainly rejected, and deſtroyed, as uſeleſs thorns are caſt into the fire. And thoſe ſons of Belial, who will not bear Chriſt's yoke, nor have him to reign over them, will be very injurious, and uneaſy to his people; but will bring upon themſelves certain deſtruction. They cannot indeed be taken with hands, or dealt with by thoſe, who are unarmed, and unprotected: But as in every government, there muſt be perſons, who poſſeſs power to apprehend, confine, and puniſh diſobedient, and rebellious people; in the ſame manner, as a man fenced with iron, and the ſtaff of a ſpear, can thruſt the thorns into the fire: ſo Chriſt is able to deſtroy out of his kingdom all his enemies, and will make them, as a "fiery oven in the day of his wrath:" for he can deal with thoſe, that to all others are utterly unmanageable. As the willing ſubjects of David proſpered, but his oppoſers were cruſhed, ſo ſhall it be with thoſe who ſubmit to, and thoſe, who reject the authority of the Redeemer.

V. 8. Theſe are, &c.] Under Joab the chief captain, theſe perſons were the chief officers in David's army: and as only thirty-ſix are named, Joab muſt be added to complete the thirty-ſeven mentioned in the laſt verſe. There were two triumvirates, and under them thirty ſubordinate officers, who commanded ſubdiviſions of the troops. Of ſeveral of them, and of their exploits we read nothing elſewhere: ſo that David's reign and actions were outwardly more ſplendid, than they appear in the hiſtory; which was intended for our edification, and not to gratify our curioſity. Adino the Tachmonite, called elſewhere (1 Chron. c. xi. v. 11;) Jaſhobeam the Hachmonite, is ſuppoſed to have had his title from his wiſdom, and he ordinarily preſided in councils of war. It is here ſaid that he ſlew 800 men, in Chronicles only 300 are mentioned: perhaps 300 were left dead on the ſpot, and the reſt died afterwards. There are ſeveral other variations in names, &c, in the parallel paſſage in Chronicles, and ſome others 9 And after him was Eleazar the ſon of Dodo the Ahohite, one of the three mighty men with David, when they defied the Philiſtines that were there gathered together to battle, and the men of Iſrael were gone away.

10 He aroſe, and ſmote the Philiſtines until his hand was weary, and his hand clave unto the ſword: and the LORD wrought a great victory that day; and the people returned after him only to ſpoil.

11 And after him was Shammah the ſon of Agee the Hararite. And the Philiſtines were gathered together into a troop, where was a piece of ground full of lentiles: and the people fled from the Philiſtines.

12 But he ſtood in the midſt of the ground, and defended it, and ſlew the Philiſtines: and the LORD wrought a great victory.

13 And three of the thirty chief went down, and came to David in the harveſt time, unto the cave of Adullam: and the troop of the Philiſtines pitched in the valley of Rephaim.

14 And David was then in an hold, and the garriſon of the Philiſtines was then in Beth-lehem.

15 And David longed, and ſaid, Oh that one would give me drink of the water of the well of Beth-lehem, which is by the gate!

16 And the three mighty men brake through the hoſt of the Philiſtines, and drew water out of the well of Beth-lehem, that was by the gate, and took it, and brought it to David: nevertheleſs he would not drink thereof, but poured it out unto the LORD.

17 And he ſaid, Be it far from me, O LORD, that I ſhould do this: is not this the blood of the men that went in jeopardy of their lives? therefore he would not drink it. Theſe things did theſe three mighty men.

18 And Abiſhai, the brother of Joab, the ſon of Zeruiah, was chief among three. And he lifted up his ſpear againſt three hundred, and ſlew them, and had the name among three.

19 Was he not moſt honourable of three? therefore he was their captain: howbeit he attained not unto the firſt three.

20 And Benaiah the ſon of Jehoiada, the ſon of a valiant man of Kabzeel, who had done many acts, he ſlew two lion-like men of Moab: he went down alſo and ſlew a lion in the midſt of a pit in time of ſnow:

mentioned after theſe here named: but having no uſeful remarks to make on theſe variations, I ſhall take no further notice of them: and this may account for ſilence in ſeveral other places. The titles annexed ſeem to have generally been derived from the place of their birth, or abode.

V. 9, 10. When they, &c.] In the courage of faith, David, and theſe three officers defied the Philiſtines, when the reſt of his army had fled: and Eleazar greatly diſtinguiſhed himſelf in the victory that the Lord wrought that day, having fought, till his hand, was ſo cramped with holding his ſword, that he could not readily leave go of it.

V. 13—17. And three of, &c.] Or the three chief over the thirty; that is over the captains above-mentioned. Theſe came to David, when he was perſecuted by Saul, and took ſhelter in the cave of Adullam. At that time a garriſon of Philiſtines occupied the entrance of Beth-lehem, the city of David. Some think that David by wiſhing for the water of the well of Beth-lehem, meant to ſtir up his whole band to attempt the diſpoſſeſſing of the garriſon; but not that his officers ſhould attack them alone. It is more probable, that being thirſty in hot weather, he eagerly deſired, and inconſiderately wiſhed to quench his thirſt at that well, the water being remarkably good: and that theſe brave men, to expreſs their peculiar attachment to him, broke ſword in hand through the Philiſtines, and returned to him with ſome of the water. But David was, upon recollection, aſhamed of his inordinate deſire, and raſh wiſh; and being unwilling to encourage ſuch deſperate attempts, he refuſed to drink of it, but poured it out as a drink-offering unto the Lord. For as it had been procured at the hazard of the lives of theſe brave officers; he would no more drink of it, than he would drink their blood; "far be it from me," ſaid he, or "my God forbid it me." This ſhewed David's tenderneſs of his ſoldiers, and his command over his own appetite, upon recollection, and when he ſaw occaſion. The word Beth-lehem ſignifies the houſe of bread; and the place was noted for excellent water: and there Chriſt the bread, and water of life was born; and we may ſafely long for, and venture all conſequences, in breaking through hoſts of enemies, to obtain this water of life and ſalvation.

V. 18—23.] We are not told on what occaſions, theſe exploits were performed, but they were done in faith, by the Lord's extraordinary aſſiſtance, and for the public good. Aſahel ſeems to have been the third, in this ſecond triumvirate, though mentioned as one of the thirty, over whom perhaps he preſided as captain; for there are thirty names beſides his. In the cloſe of the liſt we read the name of Uriah, and grieve to recollect the return, that he met with for his faithful ſervices.

man; and the Egyptian had a spear in his hand; but he went down to him with a staff, and plucked the spear out of the Egyptian's hand, and slew him with his own spear.

22 These things did Benaiah the son of Jehoiada, and had the name among three mighty men.

23 He was more honourable than the thirty, but he attained not to the first three. And David set him over his guard.

24 Asahel the brother of Joab was one of the thirty; Elhanan the son of Dodo of Beth-lehem, 25 Shammah the Harodite, Elika the Harodite,

26 Helez the Paltite, Ira the son of Ikkesh the Tekoite,

27 Abiezer the Anethothite, Mebunnai the Hushathite,

28 Zalmon the Ahohite, Maharai the Netophathite,

29 Heleb the son of Baanah, a Netophathite, Ittai the son of Ribai out of Gibeah of the children of Benjamin,

30 Benaiah the Pirathonite, Hiddai of the brooks of Gaash,

31 Abi-albon the Arbathite, Azmaveth the Barhumite,

32 Eliahba the Shaalbonite, of the sons of Jashen, Jonathan,

33 Shammah the Hararite, Ahiam the son of Sharar the Hararite,

34 Eliphelet the son of Ahasbai, the son of the Maachathite, Eliam the son of Ahithophel the Gilonite,

35 Hezrai the Carmelite, Paarai the Arbite,

36 Igal the son of Nathan of Zobah, Bani the Gadite,

37 Zelek the Ammonite, Naharai the Beerothite, armourbearer to Joab the son of Zeruiah,

38 Ira an Ithrite, Gareb an Ithrite,

39 Uriah the Hittite: thirty and seven in all.

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.

It hath been observed by those, who intimately converse with religious people, that they are uniformly most sensible of the reality, and importance of heavenly things, when they apprehend themselves to approach the eternal world: when their hearts are discouraged respecting their interest in these invisible blessings, their assured belief excites the most earnest, and distressing anxiety, lest they should come short of them. But when their hope abounds, they can exult, and triumph, though parting with all below, oppressed with pain, and sickness, and in the very agonies of death. And many have gone from the dying beds of godly persons, more convinced of the truth, and excellency of the gospel, by their last words, and behaviour, than by all the arguments, which have conclusively been adduced in proof thereof. When we approach this closing scene, it will be useful, and pleasant to consider what we originally were, and to enquire what the Lord hath done for us, in his providence, and by his grace. The more we have been conformed to the Saviour; the more we have lived in, and been treated by the world, as he was; the plainer it will be, that we belong to him. When our endowments have been employed in the service of the church of God; and our words, and works have been such, as evince, that we were led by, and brought forth the fruits of the Spirit, the review will be comfortable to us, and we shall give the glory to God. They are peculiarly useful to the cause of godliness, who stir up, and assist their brethren in the exercises of devotion; and the sweet work of praise, and thanksgiving, when it is conducted with solemnity, and springs from lively affections, is an anticipation of heavenly joy, a solace of earthly sorrows, a preparation for every service, most honourable to God, and calculated to give religion an attractive aspect. When by us the Lord excites others to their duty, he speaks to us likewise concerning our own; that we may exemplify by our conduct, in our proper station of life, the rules, that we propose to others. They who rule over men, must remember, that they are the subjects of God; and must therefore imitate his equity, maintain his cause, and seek his glory in the exercise of their delegated authority. Then will they be happy themselves, and blessings unto multitudes, who will bless God for them. The sons of Belial indeed will be the more enraged against their equitable administration; and will create disturbance, and vexation to them, and their subjects: but they should endeavour, and will in some measure be able to crush, and keep them under, though they cannot quite extirpate them. The best of men, reviewing their past conduct, and comparing it impartially with the rule of duty, will see great cause to be humbled for, and to mourn over their sins. Neither their hearts, or houses will be found what they ought to be. Their desire, aim, and prayer will be, that their families may be the accepted servants of God; and without this no outward prosperity will satisfy their minds: and if through their own negligence, or bad examples, they are otherwise, they will be the more earnest in prayer for them, that they may not perish with the sons of Belial, who reject the authority of the Lord. Yet in all their troubles, true believers, being conscious that they have fled for refuge to the hope, set before them in the gospel, and having experienced the power of renewing grace, may rejoice that the Lord hath made with them an everlasting covenant; and may meditate with comfort upon the rich provisions and firm security of it: and seeing all their salvation there treasured up, and finding all their desires centre, there they may chearfully bear up under all, that they feel, or fear, and look forward with joyful hope of complete deliverance. Yet, they who have received true grace from God, will long for more holiness: and they want evidence of their conversion, to whom remaining sin is no grief, and burden, and the slowness of their own growth in grace is not the chief complaint: though they still feel for the evils, which prevail in society, and in the church of God. The Lord dispenseth all his gifts, as he pleaseth, and there are various degrees of eminence, and usefulness amongst able, and serviceable men. Whether our talents therefore be more, or fewer, the honour of them belongeth to the Lord, and we ought to improve them for benefit to the church, and to the world, without envying, or despising others. In a good cause we should willingly venture, and endure hardship; even when deserted by those, who ought to help us; for the Lord will be our helper: and we should allow others sometimes to share the advantages, who would not expose themselves with us for the public good. The habit of hankering, and wishing for those things, which providence withholds, though natural to us, and often given way to by godly men, in an unguarded hour, is indeed rebellion against the Lord, shews the remaining sensuality, and selfishness of the heart, and leads to many snares, and evils: upon recollection, and experience, a wise man will be ashamed of this folly; and will abstain, not only from unlawful indulgences, but from those also, which are inexpedient, and might expose his brethren to temptation and danger. Were we but as attached to the person, and cause of the Captain of our salvation, and as much pleased to shew our love, and gratitude to him, and to do his will, and promote his honour; as some soldiers have been, to a beloved prince, or commander: how self-denying, and ready for every service, and suffering should we be, and how glad to spend, or to lay down our lives for his glory! And surely this is highly reasonable. Never ruler, or captain was of so excellent a character as ours: his commands are all righteous, and beneficial, his authority is an inexpressible blessing. The obligations, that he hath conferred upon, the love he bears to, and the honours that he hath prepared for, his meanest soldiers, and subjects, are beyond all computation, or conception. The blessings, which he freely bestows on us, were dearly purchased by him: and for us, when rebels and enemies! Precious in his sight is the death of his saints; and he will expose them to no danger, or loss, but for their good, and he will comfort them under, and finally deliver them from every suffering: and he will present them, and all their services, as an oblation to the glory of God, and in order to their eternal recompence. Under his command, and refreshed by the waters of life, that he bestows, we may venture to engage, yea defy every adversary, at the greatest disadvantage, and shall be able to turn their own arms upon them. Though not numbered with apostles, and prophets, our names, and services will be recorded in the book of life: and not a cup of cold water, given for his sake, shall be unrewarded: yea the willing mind to suffer for him, shall be accepted, as if we had actually shed our blood in his cause. But, as he hath shed his blood for sinners, let all beware of neglecting so great salvation: for the sons of Belial; especially the abusers of his truth, and the persecutors of his people, will be thrust away as thorns into the everlasting fire of hell.

NOTES.

CHAP. XXIV.] V. 1. The anger, &c.] This chapter is nearly the same with the twenty-first of the First Book of Chronicles, and the subject will be best understood by comparing the two narrations together: whatever therefore is requisite by way of annotation will be introduced in this place; but the practical observations will be confined to the chapter before us. A continual reference to the above-mentioned chapter will be made, without further notice being taken of it. The Israelites had offended the Lord by their ungrateful, and repeated rebellions against David; by their not duly profiting by the means, that were employed, for the revival of religion; and probably by that increase of pride, luxury, and ungodliness, which generally spring from great prosperity. They had just before in a three years famine experienced the effects of the Lord's displeasure, and it is likely had not profited by the correction: and therefore "again the "anger of the Lord was kindled against them:" and satan obtained permission, to provoke, or excite David to number Israel, and thus to execute his malice against them. From his suggestions, and David's remaining sinfulness this purpose immediately took its rise; and as it was "of the Lord" that David should be moved thereto; (in the same manner, that it was of him that the Canaanites should be hardened, or that Ahab should be deceived;) he withdrew every internal, or external restraint, and left him to follow his own counsels, and unintentionally to coincide with satan's machinations against Israel. Thus, by a manner of expression common in Scripture, the Lord is said to have moved David against them: though other scriptures prove, that the sinful disposition, and resolution could not be from God; though he both permitted them, and over-ruled them to accomplish his own wise, and righteous purposes. For the people's sin David was left to act very wrong, and in chastising him, their crimes received due punishment: which example throws much light upon the doctrine of God's providential government of the world, and will furnish us, in the proper place, with many practical instructions. But wherein consisted David's sin in numbering the people? It hath been alledged that it was a contempt of the promise, that they should be

David againſt them to ſay, Go number Iſrael and Judah.

2 For the king ſaid to Joab the captain of the hoſt, which was with him, Go now through all the tribes of Iſrael, from Dan even to Beer-ſheba, and number ye the people, that I may know the number of the people.

3 And Joab ſaid unto the king, Now the LORD thy God add unto the people, how many ſoever they be, an hundred fold, and that the eyes of my lord the king may ſee it: but why doth my lord the king delight in this thing?

4 Notwithſtanding, the king's word prevailed againſt Joab, and againſt the captains of the hoſt. And Joab and the captains of the hoſt went out from the preſence of the king to number the people of Iſrael.

5 And they paſſed over Jordan, and pitched in Aroer, on the right ſide of the city that lieth in the midſt of the river of Gad, and toward Jazer:

6 Then they came to Gilead, and to the land of Tahtim-hodſhi; and they came to Dan-jaan and about to Zidon,

7 And came to the ſtrong hold of Tyre, and to all the cities of the Hivites, and of the Canaanites: and they went out to the ſouth of Judah, even to Beer-ſheba.

8 So when they had gone through all the land they came to Jeruſalem at the end of nine months and twenty days.

9 And Joab gave up the ſum of the number of the people unto the king: and there were in Iſrael eight hundred thouſand valiant men that drew the ſword; and the men of Judah were five hundred thouſand men.

10 And David's heart ſmote him after that he had numbered the people. And David ſaid unto the LORD, I have ſinned greatly in that I have done: and now I beſeech thee, O LORD, take away the iniquity of thy ſervant; for I have done very fooliſhly.

innumerable: and that they ought not to have been numbered without expreſs command, as in the days of Moſes: or that David neglected to collect the half ſhekel a piece, for the uſe of the ſanctuary, which ſhould have attended the numbering of them; and that he attempted to number thoſe, who were under twenty years of age; (1 Chron. c. xxvii. v. 23, 24.) But it ſeems evident that the pride of David's heart both induced him to this meaſure, and rendered it ſo very diſpleaſing to the Lord. Elated with the proſperity, and extent of his dominions, he wiſhed to know, and that others might know, the number of his ſubjects, who were capable of bearing arms: and this originated from an ambitious curioſity, and an oſtentatious vanity: and probably it was accompanied with a ſecret complacency in his own good conduct, under whoſe government Iſrael had attained this proſperity; and a too great dependance upon the number, and valour of his forces. As he was far advanced in life, he probably indulged the idea of having it ſaid, how populous, and flouriſhing a kingdom he had left to his poſterity. And it is evident that the chaſtiſement was eſpecially levelled againſt this pride, (2 Chron. c. xxxii. v. 25, 26. 31.) It had before wrought in his heart, but the Lord would have reſtrained it's effects, had he not ſeen it beſt to permit it to break forth, both for the people's puniſhment, and David's deeper humiliation: as a phyſician permits ſome diſorders to come forward to a criſis, that the cure may be radical; which is more deſirable, than only for a time to ſuſpend their effects.

V. 3. And Joab ſaid, &c.] Even this haughty wicked man readily perceived, that David's purpoſe aroſe from ambition, and was inconſiſtent with his character, and intereſt; and that if he perſevered to "delight in," or require ſuch a thing, "it would be a cauſe of treſpaſs," i. e. of guilt and puniſhment "to Iſrael." We muſt allow, that on this occaſion he ſpake with great reaſon, and temper, and expreſſed much affection both for his prince, and his country, and even aſſumed an appearance of piety: and David would have ſhewn his wiſdom, in yielding to his remonſtrances. Yet the king's word prevailed, but "it "was abominable to Joab;" and as he ſet about it reluctantly, we may conclude, that he did not perform it very exactly: much time was ſpent, and much trouble was occaſioned by this meaſure, without any proſpect of other advantage, than the gratification of a proud curioſity!

V. 9. The ſum of, &c.] Various methods have been taken to explain the difference in the numbers betwixt the two accounts, but nothing certain can be adduced upon the ſubject. To thoſe, concerned, it might be very intelligible; and to us it is no ways intereſting. As different perſons were employed, their accounts might vary: as Benjamin and Levi were not numbered, we may ſuppoſe, that in other reſpects, the accounts were inaccurate: and it might pleaſe God thus to order it, that David at laſt "might not "know the number of the people." It is remarkable that the Iſraelites had not multiplied in the poſſeſſion of Canaan, in any proportion to what they had done in their bondage in Egypt.

V. 10. And David's heart, &c.] David was not convinced of the evil of his conduct, until he received account of the numbers, that had been cenſed: and then "his "heart ſmote him," and he was ſenſible that he had diſpleaſed the Lord.

11 For when David was up in the morning, the word of the LORD came unto the prophet Gad, David's ſeer, ſaying, 12 Go and ſay unto David, Thus ſaith the LORD, I offer thee three things; chooſe thee one of them, that I may do it unto thee.

13 So Gad came to David, and told him, and ſaid unto him, Shall ſeven years of famine come unto thee in thy land? or wilt thou flee three months before thine enemies, while they purſue thee? or that there be three days peſtilence in thy land? now adviſe, and ſee what anſwer I ſhall return to him that ſent me.

14 And David ſaid unto Gad, I am in a great ſtrait: let us fall now into the hand of the LORD; for his mercies are great: and let me not fall into the hand of man.

15 So the LORD ſent a peſtilence upon Iſrael from the morning even to the time appointed: and there died of the people from Dan even to Beer-ſheba ſeventy thouſand men.

16 And when the angel ſtretched out his hand upon Jeruſalem to deſtroy it, the LORD repented him of the evil, and ſaid to the angel that deſtroyed the people, It is enough: ſtay now thine hand. And the angel of the LORD was by the threſhing place of Araunah the Jebuſite.

17 And David ſpake unto the LORD when he ſaw the angel that ſmote the people, and ſaid, Lo, I have ſinned, and I have done wickedly: but theſe ſheep, what have they done? let thine hand, I pray thee, be againſt me, and againſt my father's houſe.

18 And Gad came that day to David, and ſaid unto him, Go up, rear an altar unto the LORD, in the threſhing floor of Araunah the Jebuſite.

19 And David, according to the ſaying of Gad, went up as the LORD commanded.

V. 11. For when, &c.] Probably David had become ſenſible of his ſin, and had offered his humble confeſſion, and ſupplication before God over night, or in the night; previous to the meſſage, which Gad delivered to him in the morning; and then this ſhould be rendered, "and when David," &c. Gad was called David's ſeer, for he had long been employed as God's meſſenger to him, and David had paid great regard to his admonitions.

V. 12—14.] Though the Lord would pardon his ſervant's ſin, of which he deeply repented: yet, as it was a public offence, he would correct it in a public manner; by deſtroying David's ſubjects before his eyes. This would be diſtreſſing to him, both becauſe of his affection for them, and becauſe they ſuffered in conſequence of his pride, and ambition. Only three years of famine are propoſed in Chronicles: but ſuch variations frequently occur, and are probably owing to ſome trivial errors of the tranſcribers, in ſo long a courſe of years; eſpecially as their numbers were diſtinguiſhed by marks, which might eaſily be miſtaken. In this diſtreſſing difficulty, David preferred a judgment, which came immediately from God, whoſe mercies he knew to be very great; to thoſe wherein men were concerned, who would have triumphed in the miſeries of Iſrael, and been thereby hardened in their idolatry: and he choſe the peſtilence in preference to the famine; not only becauſe the land had already been viſited with one famine of three year's continuance, from which perhaps it was ſcarce recovered; and becauſe he, and his family would be as much expoſed to the peſtilence, as the pooreſt Iſraelite: but eſpecially that he might continue for a ſhorter time under the divine rebuke, however ſevere it was.

V. 15. To the time appointed, &c.] Either to the cloſe of the third day: or, as is moſt probable, only to the appointed hour of the evening ſacrifice on the firſt day; for "the Lord repented him of the evil," &c, which implies, that he did not proceed to the extent of the judgment denounced. Yet ſeventy thouſand died in the different parts of the land, in as few hours, as Joab had employed months in numbering the people; and this by the miniſtration of a ſingle angel!

V. 17. When he ſaw, &c.] Probably the angel had before been inviſible: but at length David, and the "elders of Iſrael, who were with him clothed in ſackcloth, "ſaw him ſtand between the earth, and the heaven, having "a drawn ſword in his hand," &c; an emblem of the divine juſtice about to be executed upon the city. David had before been humbled in the ſight of God, and had earneſtly interceded for the people; but this ſight affected him more than ever: and whilſt he and the elders proſtrated themſelves upon the ground, he poured out his ſoul before God in fervent prayer for the people, and eſpecially for Jeruſalem. He pleaded, that "he had com-"manded the people to be numbered," that "he had "ſinned, and done evil indeed:" and intreated that, as the whole blame belonged to him, ſo the indignation might ceaſe in the puniſhment of him, and his family. Indeed his guilt occaſioned the judgment; but the people were far from that innocency, which David ſuppoſed; for their wickedneſs was in reality the cauſe of the calamity. However his interceſſion prevailed: and it was doubtleſs in anſwer to his prayer, that the Lord ſaid to the deſtroying angel: "It is enough, ſtay now thine hand."

V. 18—25. Of Araunah, &c.] Araunah, or Ornan, though a Jebuſite by birth, ſeems to have been cordially attached to the intereſts of David, and of Iſrael: and was permitted to poſſeſs a threſhing floor, and ſome contiguous eſtate upon mount Zion. On that very ſpot the 20 And Araunah looked, and ſaw the king and his ſervants coming on toward him. And Araunah went out and bowed himſelf before the king on his face upon the ground.

21 And Araunah ſaid, Wherefore is my lord the king come to his ſervant? and David ſaid, To buy the threſhing floor of thee, to build an altar unto the LORD, that the plague may be ſtayed from the people.

22 And Araunah ſaid unto David, Let my lord the king take and offer up what ſeemeth good unto him: behold, here be oxen for burnt-ſacrifice, and threſhing inſtruments and other inſtruments of the oxen for wood.

23 All theſe things did Araunah, as a king, give unto the king. And Araunah ſaid unto the king, The LORD thy God accept thee.

24 And the king ſaid unto Araunah, Nay; but I will ſurely buy it of thee at a price: neither will I offer burnt-offerings unto the LORD my God of that which doth coſt me nothing. So David bought the threſhing floor and the oxen for fifty ſhekels of ſilver.

---

angel of the Lord appeared, and thence ſpake to Gad, that he ſhould order David to build an altar there: whoſe ready obedience afforded Araunah an opportunity of ſhewing his veneration for the king, his affection for Iſrael, and his liberality in the ſervice of God, and for the public advantage. With a generoſity like that of a king, he was ready to give David the oxen, threſhing-floor, and all that appertained to it, that he might offer the appointed ſacrifices: but David did not deem it right to accept of them; and therefore gave him fifty ſhekels of ſilver, for the oxen, and the wood, &c: and ſix hundred ſhekels of gold for the ground. There the ſacrifices were offered, and the Lord "anſwered "by fire from heaven;" and the plague was ſtayed: and upon this ſpot, bought of a gentile, the temple was ſoon after built.

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.

In the righteous government of God, rulers, and their ſubjects have a reciprocal influence on each other: like the members in the human body, they are intereſted in each other's conduct, and welfare: and cannot ſin or ſuffer without mutually affecting one another. When the wickedneſs of nations provokes God, he leaves their princes to adopt pernicious meaſures, or to commit atrocious crimes, which bring calamities upon the people: and when the ruler commits iniquity, he is puniſhed, by the diminution of his power, and by witneſſing the diſtreſſes of his ſubjects. Inſtead therefore of mutually criminating each other under public calamities, however occaſioned, all parties ſhould be reminded to repent of their own ſins; and to practice their own duties. Princes ſhould hence be inſtructed, even for their own ſakes, to repreſs wickedneſs, and to promote righteouſneſs in their dominions, as well as to ſet a good example: and the people, for their own ſakes, ſhould concur in ſalutary meaſures, and pray continually for their rulers. The remains of ſin live, and will often revive in the beſt of men, as long, as they continue in this world: and the wiſeſt are ſoon induced to do very fooliſhly, when God leaves them to themſelves, and permits ſatan to tempt them: againſt this there is no ſecurity, except humble watchfulneſs and unceaſing prayer. Pride, in all its varied exerciſes, is the ſin of fallen man, as well as of fallen angels: it is the ſubſtance of ſpiritual wickedneſs, the rival, and enemy of the glory, and authority of God, and equally averſe to the ſubmiſſive obedience of the law, and the ſovereign grace of the goſpel. Yet this hateful evil mixes with, and defiles the beſt of our ſervices: thereby even the believer often ſacrilegiouſly aſſumes to himſelf the glory, which belongs to God; idolatrouſly confides in himſelf, or in ſome creature; oſtentatiouſly courts that admiration, and applauſe, of which the Lord alone is worthy; and becomes vain of thoſe endowments, or poſſeſſions, which he had no ſhare in procuring, and cannot ſecure for one hour. Thoſe, who are altogether proud, God will reſiſt, and fight againſt to their deſtruction: and he will detect and chaſtiſe the indulged pride of thoſe, who upon the whole are humbled before him as mean ſinful creatures, and yet inconſiſtently value, and prefer themſelves upon ſome incidental advantages. Through this hateful principle it comes to paſs, that we ſo readily can ſpy a mote in our brother's eye, and yet remain unconſcious of a beam in our own. And even ungodly men can diſcern thoſe evil tempers, and that unbecoming conduct in eminent believers, of which themſelves remain unconſcious. This ſhould warn Chriſtians to walk circumſpectly, leſt their miſtakes ſhould encourage others in unbelief, and ungodlineſs: and it is ſometimes a part of our chaſtiſement to be ſhamed, and rebuked by thoſe of very bad characters. Yet men, who have no real piety, may, on perſonal, and relative accounts, be ſincerely attached to the intereſts of true Chriſtians; and in a certain way, may have the cauſe of religion much at heart; as it happens to be connected with that of their party, or their friends: but they cannot love the diſciple ſimply becauſe he belongs to, loves, and bears the image of his maſter. However they may give good advice, ſupported by ſolid arguments: and they can ſometimes foreſee conſequences, which the believer ſuſpects not; and ſincerely endeavour to prevent them: and they can mingle their expoſtulations with affectionate good wiſhes, and a kind of prayers for their welfare, and ſucceſs. Theſe things do not prove a man to be a partaker of the grace of God; but they entitle him ſo far to the attention of godly perſons: and it is a ſhame for them to require, and delight in thoſe things, that ſuch men perceive to be wrong: and it is our own fault, if we do not in many ways profit by their advices, and cautions. But when authority prevails againſt reaſon, and truth, bad effects muſt follow: yet this is ſo common, that they do not often acquit themſelves honourably as profeſſors of godlineſs, who poſſeſs too much power, or influence. Men ſeldom accompliſh to good purpoſe thoſe ſervices, in 25 And David built there an altar unto the LORD, and offered burnt-offerings and peace-offerings. So the LORD was entreated for the land, and the plague was ſtayed from Iſrael.

which they reluctantly engage: and God ſeldom allows thoſe, whom he loves, the ſatisfactions, which they ſinfully covet. Where the grace of God poſſeſſes the heart, a man's conſcience, upon reflection, will reproach him with his tranſgreſſions: and he will not only be frighted, and diſtreſſed, as the hypocrite may often be; but he will be humbled before God, and with ingenuous confeſſions, and fervent prayers, will ſeek forgiveneſs from him, ſincerely purpoſing by his grace, no more to return to folly: and thus a man's pride will prove an occaſion of increaſing his humility. But when God corrects the tranſgreſſions of his people, by the anguiſh of their ſouls, in the great ſtraits, into which he brings them, he will make them taſte the bitterneſs of their ſins, and perceive his abhorrence of them. Whatever we idolize, or grow proud of, will generally be taken from us, or converted into a croſs: and no aggravation of affliction to generous minds, is more painful, than the reflection, that others, whom they love are ſmarting on their account. This is a common caſe in kingdoms, and in families: and perhaps, whilſt miniſters mourn over the ſtate of their congregations; they may ſometimes profitably enquire, whether their own ſupineneſs, pride, want of zeal, and ſimplicity; or their ſelf-indulgence, or conformity to the world, do not bring a ſecret blaſt upon their labours? (though more open evils do not bring a blot upon their profeſſion;) and whether the people's ſouls are not ſuffering for their correction; and to bring them to deeper humiliation, great fervency in prayer, and a more ſpiritual frame of mind, and devotedneſs to God? And ſurely we ſhould chooſe to be chaſtened in our own perſons, rather than that the bleſſing ſhould be withheld from our congregations: for though the Lord be righteous in theſe diſpenſations; yet the people have not deſerved at our hands, that we ſhould occaſion this evil to them. The grace of God teaches men to condemn themſelves, rather than others, and to ſeek their intereſts in many reſpects before their own: and earneſt prayers offered in this temper of mind, by thoſe who unreſervedly caſt themſelves upon the mercies of the Lord, are very prevalent. For he is ſlow to anger, and ready to forgive: he never fails of his promiſes, but readily recedes from his threatenings, in behalf of the humbled ſinner. If the power of an angel be ſo terrible, what is that of the Almighty Creator? and as they are ſo obedient to their Maker's word, and ſo prompt in executing his will; we ought carefully to imitate them, eſpecially in the delightful ſervice of miniſtring to the heirs of ſalvation. Death is continually, and in ſo many forms, and ſo ſuddenly deſtroying all around, that it is madneſs not to be expecting, and preparing for the cloſing ſcene: and through the great ſacrifice, and interceſſion of the Saviour, the vileſt ſinner may approach a reconciled God: and, being juſtified by faith in his blood, may become his ſervant, and child, and be made meet for his eternal kingdom. This meſſage, the miniſters of God propoſe to men, that they may adviſe, and conſider what anſwer, they will return to him, that ſent them; and their deſire is, that it may be, that they thankfully accept of this great ſalvation. And though, they are required to forſake ſin, to renounce the world, and its friendſhip, and to deny themſelves, if they would be Chriſt's diſciples: yet ſurely this doth not reduce them to a great ſtrait; for he will ſupply every want, make up every loſs, and give them an hundred fold more in this preſent time, for all that they part with for his ſake! Grace will teach men liberality, when the honour of God, and the good of his people require it: and extraordinary occaſions require extraordinary diſintereſtedneſs. But we ſhould not encroach upon thoſe, who are willing to give; or deſire a cheap religion. All we poſſeſs, and are, belongs to God, and we are to employ in his immediate ſervice, that meaſure of our time, and ſubſtance, which he requires: and whilſt we ſimply follow his directions, we ſhall ſpeedily obtain the comfort of his pardoning love, and be inſtrumental in averting his wrath from others alſo.
